A statute will be upheld despite ambiguities if it has a "core" of proscribed conduct. (See Bailey v. National City (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1319, 1329, 277 C.R. 427; People v. Antoine (1996) 48 C.A.4th 489, 495, 56 C.R.2d 530, citing the text [overbreadth concept deals with statutes that punish both constitutionally protected conduct and acts that validly may be prohibited; carjacking statute (P.C. 215; see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Property, §§101, 102) is not overbroad].) And a statute will be upheld if its terms can be made reasonably certain by reference to other definable sources (Costa Mesa v. Soffer (1992) 11 C.A.4th 378, 387, 13 C.R.2d 735), or if its terms have a long-standing, judicially recognized meaning (People v. Barrera (1993) 14 C.A.4th 1555, 163, 18 C.R.2d 395 [P.C. 206, defining crime of torture, is constitutional]).

Other cases, sometimes by construction, find the statute valid. (See Grayned v. Rockford (1972) 408 U.S. 104, 92 S.Ct. 2294, 33 L.Ed.2d 222, infra, §492 [anti-noise ordinance prohibiting disruption of school activity; sufficiently clear]; United States Civil Service Com. v. National Assn. of Letter Carriers, AFL-CIO (1973) 413 U.S. 548, 93 S.Ct. 2880, 37 L.Ed.2d 796, supra, §253 [reversing finding of overbreadth where administrative practice, incorporated by statute, provided adequate notice]; Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates (1982) 455 U.S. 489, 102 S.Ct. 1186, 1193, 71 L.Ed.2d 362, 372 [applying Grayned standards to ordinance prohibiting sale of drug paraphernalia, and holding it valid]; In re Kay (1970) 1 C.3d 930, 83 C.R. 686, 464 P.2d 142 [construing statute narrowly to avoid unconstitutional overbreadth]; Welton v. Los Angeles (1976) 18 C.3d 497, 505, 134 C.R. 668, 556 P.2d 1119, supra, §119 [construction]; People v. Gudger (1994) 29 C.A.4th 310, 320, 34 C.R.2d 510 [P.C. 76, prohibiting threat against life of state official, requires specific intent to make threat and apparent ability to carry it out; because statute punishes true threats, rather than mere hyperbole, it is not overbroad]; on constitutionality of ordinances targeting gang activity, see supra, §408.)

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

C. Limitations on the Rights.

2. Interference With Judicial Process.

a. Publications as Contempt.

[§ 412] Publications as Contempt.

The inherent power of courts to punish for indirect contempt (committed outside the court) is a familiar example of permitted limitations on free speech and press. (See 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §182.) However, the exercise of this power was greatly limited by Bridges v. California (1941) 314 U.S. 252, 62 S.Ct. 190, 197, 86 L.Ed. 192, 207, which applied the "clear and present danger" test, and held that the publication cannot be punished unless it has a substantial, and not merely a reasonable, tendency to interfere with judicial functions or obstruct justice.

Later decisions were even more explicit. In Pennekamp v. Florida (1946) 328 U.S. 331, 66 S.Ct. 1029, 90 L.Ed. 1295, petitioners published newspaper editorials to the general effect that county judges were favoring criminals and hindering their prosecution by legal technicalities. Some of the illustrative cases mentioned were still pending in the legal sense (proceedings after verdict). Held, contempt judgment reversed. (a) Although public comment on a pending legal proceeding may not be as free as public comment after complete disposal of the litigation, the discussion after termination of the case "may be inadequate to emphasize the danger to public welfare of supposedly wrongful judicial conduct." (66 S.Ct. 1037, 90 L.Ed. 1303.) (b) The publication here dealt with the attitude of judges toward those accused of crime; it did not comment on evidence of rulings during a jury trial. The effect on the administration of justice is not so grave and substantial as to justify the limitation of free discussion. (66 S.Ct. 1038, 90 L.Ed. 1304.)

In Craig v. Harney (1947) 331 U.S. 367, 67 S.Ct. 1249, 91 L.Ed. 1546, a newspaper editorial severely castigated a judge's directed verdict in a civil case, calling it a travesty of justice. Again the contempt judgment was reversed: "[T]he law of contempt is not made for the protection of judges who may be sensitive to the winds of public opinion. Judges are supposed to be men of fortitude, able to thrive in a hardy climate." (67 S.Ct. 1255, 91 L.Ed. 1552.) (See In re Sawyer (1959) 360 U.S. 622, 79 S.Ct. 1376, 3 L.Ed.2d 1473, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §561 [attorney's criticism of judge's rulings in pending case; disciplinary order reversed]; on media publications generally, see 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §§221, 222.)

Another aspect of this topic was examined in People v. American Auto. Ins. Co. (1955) 132 C.A.2d 317, 282 P.2d 559, on unique facts. Defendant insurance companies placed advertisements in national magazines, stating in substance that excessive damage awards in negligence cases were resulting in higher insurance premiums to the injury of all policyholders, and urging that policyholders bear this in mind when serving as jurors. This proceeding in quo warranto sought to restrain the future publication of the material as an interference with the judicial process. Held, the contempt cases were controlling and relief should be denied. "[H]owever intemperate the language, false the charges, or unfair the criticism, they do not admit of judicial restraint or punishment unless there is an immediate, clear and present danger imperiling the administration of justice." (132 C.A.2d 322.)

The restrictive influence of the Bridges, Pennekamp, and Craig cases was manifested again in Wood v. Georgia (1962) 370 U.S. 375, 82 S.Ct. 1364, 8 L.Ed.2d 569. A county judge, in the middle of a political campaign, directed the grand jury to investigate what appeared to be corrupt black "bloc voting" and vote selling in the county. The charge was made in open court with the press present on request. Petitioner, the county sheriff, was campaigning for an elective office. He issued a press release criticizing the judge's action as political intimidation in the guise of law enforcement, and delivered an open letter to the grand jury, implying that the charge was false, and asserting that the local Democratic Executive Committee was the corrupting agent. Held, contempt adjudication reversed. Although the state court held that petitioner's conduct did present a clear and present danger to proceedings of the grand jury, the record contained no evidence or findings to show any kind of disturbance of its functioning--only the conclusion of the court below based on allegations in the contempt citation. Thus, the test was not met. (82 S.Ct. 1371, 1372, 8 L.Ed.2d 578, 579.) (See 76 Harv. L. Rev. 130.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

C. Limitations on the Rights.

2. Interference With Judicial Process.

b. Court's Control Over Publicity.

1. Right of Media To Report Proceedings.

[§ 413] Right of Media To Report Proceedings.

(1) In General. The problem of balancing First Amendment rights with the requirements of orderly judicial process arises also in connection with publicity of court proceedings. Newspapers and radio and television broadcasters are free to attend and to report the proceedings of a public trial. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §39; 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §§351, 357; on exceptions to public trial requirement for marital, custody, adoption, and Juvenile Court proceedings, see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §38.)

In Smith v. Daily Mail Publishing Co. (1979) 443 U.S. 97, 99 S.Ct. 2667, 61 L.Ed.2d 399, a West Virginia statute made it a misdemeanor for a newspaper to publish the name of a minor charged as a juvenile offender without written approval of the juvenile court. Defendant obtained the name of a juvenile offender from witnesses, police, and an assistant prosecuting attorney, and the name was broadcast over three radio stations. Defendant then included the minor's name in an article and was indicted. Held, the statute was unconstitutional.

(b) The interest advanced by the state is protection of the anonymity of the juvenile offender. But the state's policy may have to be subordinated to a constitutional right (such as the right of confrontation). (99 S.Ct. 2671, 61 L.Ed.2d 405, 406.) And, even assuming a state interest of the highest order, the statute involved here does not accomplish its purpose, for any other kind of publication, e.g., radio broadcasting, is allowed. (99 S.Ct. 2672, 61 L.Ed.2d 406.) (See San Bernardino County Dept. of Public Social Services v. Superior Court (1991) 232 C.A.3d 188, 206, 283 C.R. 332, infra, §422 [juvenile court may not restrict press's right to publish lawfully obtained information]; KGTV Channel 10 v. Superior Court (1994) 26 C.A.4th 1673, 1675, 1682, 32 C.R.2d 181, infra, §414 [same]; 7 Hastings Const. L. Q. 352 [

Smith].)

(2) Scope of Right. The media's right to attend and report on trial proceedings includes the following:

(a) A right of access to former jurors. (See Contra Costa Newspapers v. Superior Court (1998) 61 C.A.4th 862, 868, 72 C.R.2d 69 [trial court's blanket order forbidding press contact with former jurors was without jurisdiction and was impermissibly overbroad]; 17 Pepperdine L. Rev. 357 [right of access to juror's identity].)

(b) In some cases, the right to learn the amount of a settlement. (Copley Press v. Superior Court (1998) 63 C.A.4th 367, 376, 74 C.R.2d 69 [student's interest in sealing amount of settlement in action against school district, which arose out of brutal assault by other students, did not outweigh public right of access to court records and to know what transpires in public schools].)

(c) The right to report information about unlawful detainer actions. (See U.D. Registry v. California (1995) 34 C.A.4th 107, 110, 114, 40 C.R.2d 228, 4 Summary (10th), Sales, §299 [C.C. 1785.13(a)(3), making it unlawful for consumer credit reporting agency to report any unlawful detainer action unless lessor is prevailing party, is unconstitutional prohibition on truthful reporting of publicly available information]; 69 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1105 [reexamination of access doctrine]; 44 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1567 [propriety of restricting truthful reporting of public record information].)

(3) Valid Limitations on Interviews With Prisoners. Reporting the proceedings of a public trial must be distinguished from personal interviews with prisoners. The news media have no special right of access to a jail or prison to interview prisoners or make sound recordings or films for publication or broadcasting, and state and federal prison regulations prohibiting these interviews have been upheld against constitutional challenge. (See Pell v. Procunier (1974) 417 U.S. 817, 94 S.Ct. 2800, 41 L.Ed.2d 495; Saxbe v. Washington Post Co. (1974) 417 U.S. 843, 94 S.Ct. 2811, 41 L.Ed.2d 514; Houchins v. KQED (1978) 438 U.S. 1, 98 S.Ct. 2588, 57 L.Ed.2d 553; 92 Harv. L. Rev. 174; 30 McGeorge L. Rev. 125 [need for First Amendment right of access to inmates].)

(4) Disclosure of Grand Jury Testimony. In Butterworth v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 624, 110 S.Ct. 1376, 108 L.Ed.2d 572, a Florida criminal statute prohibited a grand jury witness from ever disclosing testimony that he gave before that body. S, a newspaper reporter, obtained information about improprieties in the Charlotte County State Attorney's Office and Sheriff's Department, and was called to testify before a special grand jury. After termination of the investigation, S decided to publish an article or book that would include his testimony, and sought an injunction against a threatened prosecution. Held, the statute was unconstitutional.

(a) The proper functioning of a grand jury system depends on the secrecy of grand jury proceedings; and the Court must balance the asserted First Amendment rights against the state's interest in preserving confidentiality. (110 S.Ct. 1380, 1381, 108 L.Ed.2d 580, 581.)

(b) "When an investigation ends, there is no longer a need to keep information from the targeted individual in order to prevent his escape--that individual presumably will have been exonerated, on the one hand, or arrested or otherwise informed of the charges against him, on the other. There is also no longer a need to prevent the importuning of grand jurors since their deliberations will be over. Similarly, the concern that some witnesses will be deterred from presenting testimony due to fears of retribution is, we think, not advanced by this prohibition; any witness is free not to divulge his own testimony, and that part of the Florida statute which prohibits the witness from disclosing the testimony of another witness remains enforceable under the ruling of the Court of Appeals." (110 S.Ct. 1381, 108 L.Ed.2d 582.)

(c) "Against the state interests ... must be placed the impact of Florida's prohibition on respondent's ability to make a truthful public statement. The effect is dramatic: before he is called to testify in front of the grand jury, respondent is possessed of information on matters of admitted public concern about which he was free to speak at will. After giving his testimony, respondent believes he is no longer free to communicate this information since it relates to the 'content, gist, or import' of his testimony. The ban extends not merely to the life of the grand jury but into the indefinite future.

The potential for abuse of the Florida prohibition, through its employment as a device to silence those who know of unlawful conduct or irregularities on the part of public officials, is apparent." (110 S.Ct. 1383, 108 L.Ed.2d 583, 584.)

[§ 414] Juvenile Delinquency Proceedings.

In Oklahoma Publishing Co. v. District Court, Oklahoma County (1977) 430 U.S. 308, 97 S.Ct. 1045, 51 L.Ed.2d 355, B, a juvenile, was charged with delinquency as a result of the murder of a railroad switchman. At the juvenile detention hearing, reporters and photographers were present, and the juvenile's name and picture were published in petitioner's newspapers and broadcast by radio and television stations. At a subsequent closed arraignment hearing, the judge entered a pretrial order enjoining the news media from publishing B's name or picture in connection with the proceeding. Held, the order was void. (a) Under Cox Broadcasting Corp. v. Cohn (1975) 420 U.S. 469, 95 S.Ct. 1029, 43 L.Ed.2d 328, infra, §430, and Nebraska Press Assn. v. Stuart (1976) 427 U.S. 539, 96 S.Ct. 2791, 49 L.Ed.2d 683, infra, §415, a state court cannot prohibit the publication of information obtained in court proceedings that were in fact open to the public. (b) These cases are controlling despite the fact that the state statute provides for closed juvenile hearings; members of the press were in fact present, with the full knowledge of the judge, prosecutor, and defense counsel, and no objection was made to their presence or to photographing the juvenile as he left the courthouse. Thus, his name and picture were "publicly revealed in connection with the prosecution of the crime," as was that of the rape victim in Cox Broadcasting. (97 S.Ct. 1047, 51 L.Ed.2d 358.)

The same approach was used, and the same result reached, in KGTV Channel 10 v. Superior Court (1994) 26 C.A.4th 1673, 32 C.R.2d 181, where the media published the full name of a 17-year-old minor charged with murder and showed footage of her being escorted into a building after her arrest. The juvenile court allowed the press to attend the subsequent detention hearing, but it issued a minute order prohibiting the media from disclosing the minor's name or publishing her likeness in connection with reports of the hearing. Held, the order was an unconstitutional prior restraint.

(a) The United States Supreme Court has consistently held that the press cannot be prohibited from publishing information lawfully obtained inside and outside the courtroom. (26 C.A.4th 1679, 1680, 1681), discussing Smith v. Daily Mail Publishing Co. (1979) 443 U.S. 97, 99 S.Ct. 2667, 61 L.Ed.2d 399, supra, §413, and Nebraska Press Assn. v. Stuart, Oklahoma Publishing, and Cox Broadcasting, supra. California cases have reached similar conclusions. (26 C.A.4th 1681, discussing San Bernardino County Dept. of Public Social Services v. Superior Court (1991) 232 C.A.3d 188, 283 C.R. 332, infra, §422.) "Under Smith and San Bernardino County Dept. of Public Social Services then, the media has a right to investigate, gather information about the minor outside the courtroom and disseminate it without interference by the court. The juvenile court in our case apparently recognized this principle." (26 C.A.4th 1682.)

(b) The juvenile court failed to appreciate that under Welf.C. 676 (10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §811), which requires public admission to juvenile hearings where the charge is murder, the media also had a right to attend the detention hearing and to report activities that occurred inside the courtroom. (26 C.A.4th 1682.)

(c) "Under Nebraska Press, Cox Broadcasting and Oklahoma Publishing, the court may not enjoin the press from reporting true information disclosed at a public hearing or in records without running afoul of the First and Fourteenth Amendments. In exactly the same way here, if reporters attend Niki's detention hearing, learn her name at the hearing and see she is the same juvenile arrested and pictured a few days earlier, the court cannot order their silence." (26 C.A.4th 1682.) (See 16 J. Juvenile Law 281.)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

C. Limitations on the Rights.

2. Interference With Judicial Process.

b. Court's Control Over Publicity.

3. Control To Insure Fair Trial.

[§ 415] Control To Insure Fair Trial.

(1) In General. If the exercise by the media of the right to attend and publicize a criminal trial is so abused as to prejudice the defendant's right to a fair trial, the court can and should impose appropriate restraints; and in the absence of these restraints, improper publicity may be a denial of due process and ground for reversal of a conviction. (See Estes v. Texas (1965) 381 U.S. 532, 85 S.Ct. 1628, 14 L.Ed.2d 543, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §362 [televised trial]; Sheppard v. Maxwell (1966) 384 U.S. 333, 86 S.Ct. 1507, 16 L.Ed.2d 600, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §362 [massive publicity]; on criminal defendant's right to discover relevant evidence consisting of broadcaster's tapes and films, see CBS v. Superior Court (1978) 85 C.A.3d 241, 251, 252, 149 C.R. 421; on public broadcast of criminal trial, see infra, §417.)

(2) Improper Prior Restraint. Current studies and judicial pronouncements in this field were carefully reviewed in Sun Co. of San Bernardino v. Superior Court (1973) 29 C.A.3d 815, 105 C.R. 873, applying the clear and present danger test (supra, §407) to nullify a "gag order." Two convicts were charged with the murder of another convict, and the district attorney planned to call nine other inmates as witnesses. He asked for an order prohibiting newspaper publication of the true names or photographs of these witnesses, asserting and offering evidence to show that this publicity might subject them to reprisals from other prisoners, that in consequence they might refuse to testify, and that in view of their long sentences, contempt would be a useless sanction. The judge made the order, effective for a 6-month period or until further order, and petitioners, newspapers of general circulation, sought mandamus to compel its vacation. Held, writ granted.

(a) The Warren Commission and the Kaufman and Reardon Committees recommended restraints on pretrial publicity to protect the right of fair trial; but their proposals were for regulation of courtroom hearings and restriction on participants in the trial, i.e., prohibitions against lawyers and court personnel furnishing information to the press. No direct restraints on publication by the press were favored. (29 C.A.3d 823.)

(b) In reliance on the dictum in Sheppard, supra, gag orders have been imposed by some trial courts without judicial disapproval, but other courts, sometimes invoking the clear and present danger test, have held the orders void as unwarranted prior restraints. (29 C.A.3d 828.)

(c) In the instant case, the showing did not meet the test. (1) The possibility of refusal of the witnesses to testify was pure speculation, for none had declined to do so. (2) The publicity would not involve additional danger to their lives for their identities had already been disclosed in pretrial discovery proceedings, and their appearance as witnesses would again result in disclosure. Moreover, they were in protective custody. (29 C.A.3d 830.)

(d) A prior restraint on publication to insure a fair trial should rarely be employed. "(1) The historical background of the current fair trial-free press issue reflects that it arose in a relatively few 'sensational' jury cases which generated great public interest. On the other hand, the vast majority of criminal actions (such as the one under review) excite little, if any, public interest and receive minimum coverage. Ordinarily, it is only the most unusual criminal matter--the outrageous offense or one involving a prominent victim or an infamous defendant--that generates public attention; and (2) even in the infrequent notorious case, a prior restraint on publication should be considered only upon presentation of strong proof that the publication sought to be restrained meets the clear-and-present danger standard. In balancing the constitutional right to a fair trial against the rights of a free press, it should be emphasized that sufficient legal safeguards presently exist to assure the defendant of a fair trial--e.g., change of venue, voir dire examination and challenge of prospective jurors, jury sequestration, mistrial, new trial, appeal and habeas corpus. On the other hand, in only an insignificant number of cases does the publicity factor affect the prosecution's right to due process. In those instances, the vast financial resources and manpower available to the government for investigating and litigating criminal actions, as well as for counteracting any unfavorable publicity, should likewise be kept firmly in mind before the issuance of any order amounting to a direct prior restraint on publication." (29 C.A.3d 830.)

In Nebraska Press Assn. v. Stuart (1976) 427 U.S. 539, 96 S.Ct. 2791, 49 L.Ed.2d 683, S was bound over for trial on a charge of murder. The Nebraska district court issued an order, to apply only until the jury was impaneled, prohibiting petitioners--press and broadcast associations, publishers, and reporters--from reporting such matters as confessions or admissions of the defendant and other implicating facts. The Nebraska Supreme Court upheld the order as modified. Held, reversed.

(a) Decisions on the Sixth Amendment guarantee of trial by an impartial jury (see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial §§361, 362) are instructive. (96 S.Ct. 2799, 49 L.Ed.2d 693.) They demonstrate that even pervasive, adverse pretrial publicity does not inevitably lead to an unfair trial. The measures a judge takes or fails to take to mitigate the effects of this publicity may well determine whether the defendant receives a trial consistent with due process. (96 S.Ct. 2800, 49 L.Ed.2d 695.)

(b) The First Amendment cases on prior restraints (see supra, §§359, 363) are also relevant. (96 S.Ct. 2801, 49 L.Ed.2d 695.) The thread running through all of them is that "prior restraints on speech and publication are the most serious and the least tolerable infringement on First Amendment rights." (96 S.Ct. 2802, 49 L.Ed.2d 697.) The extraordinary protections afforded by the First Amendment "carry with them something in the nature of a fiduciary duty to exercise the protected rights responsibly," to protect the rights of an accused to a fair trial by unbiased jurors. (96 S.Ct. 2803, 49 L.Ed.2d 698.)

(c) The authors of the Bill of Rights did not assign priorities between the First and Sixth Amendments, and it is unnecessary to do so. (96 S.Ct. 2803, 49 L.Ed.2d 699.)

(d) The instant case must be decided by examining the evidence before the trial judge to determine "(a) the nature and extent of pretrial news coverage; (b) whether other measures would be likely to mitigate the effects of unrestrained pretrial publicity; (c) how effectively a restraining order would operate to prevent the threatened danger." (96 S.Ct. 2804, 49 L.Ed.2d 699.) The record is insufficient to show that other measures would not have been effective (96 S.Ct. 2805, 49 L.Ed.2d 701), and it is not clear that the restraint on publication would have protected the defendant's rights (96 S.Ct. 2806, 49 L.Ed.2d 702). Moreover, the order improperly prohibited the reporting of evidence adduced at an open preliminary hearing; "once a public hearing had been held, what transpired there could not be subject to prior restraint." (96 S.Ct. 2807, 49 L.Ed.2d 703.)

(d) "We reaffirm that the guarantees of freedom of expression are not an absolute prohibition under all circumstances, but the barriers to prior restraint remain high and the presumption against its use continues intact. We hold that, with respect to the order entered in this case prohibiting reporting or commentary on judicial proceedings held in public, the barriers have not been overcome; to the extent that this order restrained publication of such material, it is clearly invalid. To the extent that it prohibited publication based on information gained from other sources, we conclude that the heavy burden imposed as a condition to securing a prior restraint was not met." (96 S.Ct. 2908, 49 L.Ed.2d 704.)

A concurring opinion of three justices takes the strong position that prior restraints are constitutionally impermissible, and that the judges must use other devices for insuring a fair trial. (96 S.Ct. 2809, 2828, 49 L.Ed.2d 705, 724.) (See KCST-TV Channel 39 v. Municipal Court (1988) 201 C.A.3d 143, 145, 147, 246 C.R. 869 [under Nebraska Press and Oklahoma Publishing Co. v. District Court, Oklahoma County (1977) 430 U.S. 308, 97 S.Ct. 1045, 51 L.Ed.2d 355, supra, §414, court could not make order temporarily prohibiting television station from exhibiting lawfully obtained drawing of criminal defendant]; South Coast Newspapers v. Superior Court (2000) 85 C.A.4th 866, 872, 102 C.R.2d 487 [following Nebraska Press; order prohibiting publication of legally obtained, "nontilted" pictures of defendants (pictures in which defendants' faces were not obscured) was illegal prior restraint where there was no evidence that publication would taint victims' in-court identification and adequate procedures were available to safeguard defendants' interests in avoiding tainted in-court identification]; on publication of confidential matters presented in judicial disciplinary proceeding, see Landmark Communications v. Virginia (1978) 435 U.S. 829, 98 S.Ct. 1535, 56 L.Ed.2d 1, 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §66 [criminal penalties cannot be imposed on third parties--nonparticipants in the proceeding]; on prior restraints generally, see supra, §359 et seq.)

(3) No Prior Restraint. In Broadman v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1998) 18 C.4th 1079, 77 C.R.2d 408, 959 P.2d 715, the court held that a judicial canon prohibiting a judge's public comment on a pending case was not an impermissible restriction on public speech. The burden the canon imposed on the general interest of judges in making public comments on court proceedings was outweighed by the benefits it achieved in furthering the state's interest in the soundness of judicial system. (18 C.4th 1103.) (See San Jose Mercury News v. Criminal Grand Jury Santa Clara County (2004) 122 C.A.4th 410, 417, 18 C.R.3d 645 [grand jury proceedings are typically secret and admonition to witnesses not to reveal information about investigation, questions asked, or responses given, to extent it prevented plaintiff newspaper from obtaining information from witnesses, was not prior restraint].)

[§ 416] Unauthorized Photographs of Courtroom Proceedings.

In Marin Independent Journal v. Municipal Court (1993) 12 C.A.4th 1712, 16 C.R.2d 550, the court upheld the application of C.R.C., Rule 980, prohibiting photography or electronic media coverage of courtroom proceedings unless authorized by written order. Petitioner's photographer, aware that she had no authorization to take photographs, entered a courtroom in which a suspect was being arraigned and snapped three still pictures of him. The judge ordered the bailiff to seize the film, and petitioner sought mandamus, challenging the confiscation as an unconstitutional prior restraint of speech. Held, writ denied.

(a) The media are entitled to attend and report on open judicial proceedings, but under C.R.C., Rule 980, electronic recording of the proceedings is subject to the court's discretion. (12 C.A.4th 1728.) Seizure of the film simply enforced the Rule by precluding publication of photographs that should never have been taken; the seizure is little different from a refusal of permission to photograph in the first instance. "[W]e seriously question whether confiscation of photographs which should never have been taken and which could have been, as they were in this case, totally disallowed, is a prior restraint of protected speech." (12 C.A.4th 1719.)

(b) Assuming, however, that the seizure was a prior restraint, it was justified because the photographs were obtained unlawfully in a deliberate violation of a rule of court. A review of decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court, including Cox Broadcasting Corp. v. Cohn (1975) 420 U.S. 469, 95 S.Ct. 1029, 43 L.Ed.2d 328, infra, §430, Nebraska Press Assn. v. B.J.F. (1989) 491 U.S. 524, 109 S.Ct. 2603, 105 L.Ed.2d 443, infra, §430, makes it clear that news reporters may not violate the law and then hide behind the protective cloak of the First Amendment. (12 C.A.4th 1719 et seq.)

(c) "It cannot be seriously maintained that a reporter could break into a sealed court file and remove a confidential document, or surreptitiously open a sealed search warrant affidavit including the name of a confidential informant cooperating with police at risk of life and limb, and remove it from the courthouse without permission. Nor could a reporter break into the courthouse and remove a sealed document and then rely on First Amendment absolution. We think the law clearly permits the court to confiscate such stolen items and prevent their removal." (12 C.A.4th 1721.)

5. Public Broadcast of Trial.

[§ 417] Public Broadcast of Trial.

In Chandler v. Florida (1981) 449 U.S. 560, 101 S.Ct. 802, 66 L.Ed.2d 740, the Court held that a state may provide for radio, television, and still photographic coverage of a criminal trial for public broadcast, notwithstanding the objection of the accused. The case involved a trial conducted under Florida's experimental program permitting electronic media coverage of judicial proceedings, subject to strict controls and the judge's discretionary power to forbid coverage where it might have a deleterious effect on the defendant's right to a fair trial. The Court first analyzed the six opinions in Estes v. Texas (1965) 381 U.S. 532, 85 S.Ct. 1628, 14 L.Ed.2d 543, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §362, concluding that Estes did not announce a constitutional rule barring all media coverage; it then rejected the suggestion that it promulgate a per se rule.

(a) The risk of juror prejudice in some cases does not justify an absolute ban on news coverage of trials; "so also the risk of such prejudice does not warrant an absolute constitutional ban on all broadcast coverage. ... [T]he appropriate safeguard against such prejudice is the defendant's right to demonstrate that the media's coverage of his case--be it printed or broadcast--compromised the ability of the particular jury that heard the case to adjudicate fairly." (101 S.Ct. 810, 66 L.Ed.2d 752.) The contention that displaying the accused on television is itself a denial of due process cannot be accepted in the absence of empirical data. (101 S.Ct. 812, 66 L.Ed.2d 754.)

(b) Defendants have failed to show that their trial was compromised by the television coverage (as was the case in Estes). (101 S.Ct. 813, 66 L.Ed.2d 755.)

(c) Despite the dangers involved, the states must be free to experiment. "Absent a showing of prejudice of constitutional dimensions to these defendants, there is no reason for this Court either to endorse or to invalidate Florida's experiment." (101 S.Ct. 813, 66 L.Ed.2d 757.)

A concurring justice thought Estes was not successfully distinguished and should be overruled. (101 S.Ct. 814, 66 L.Ed.2d 759.) (On televising trials, see 37 Santa Clara L. Rev. 879; 69 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1519; 28 West L.A. L. Rev. 293.)

A protective order preventing dissemination of information gained through discovery does not violate the First Amendment where that order (1) is entered on a showing of good cause; (2) is limited to the context of pretrial civil discovery; and (3) does not restrict the dissemination of the information if that information is gained from other sources. (Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart (1984) 467 U.S. 20, 104 S.Ct. 2199, 2209, 81 L.Ed.2d 17, 29, 2 Cal. Hoefflin* (2000) 84 C.A.4th 1232, 1244, 101 C.R.2d 558 [following Candiotti; nonparty patients' right to privacy does not justify prior restraint, especially when information is already public]; *Maggi v. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

C. Limitations on the Rights.

2. Interference With Judicial Process.

c. Public Access to Court Proceedings.

1. Criminal Pretrial Hearing.

[§ 419] Criminal Pretrial Hearing.

(1) Preliminary Hearing. The California Constitution's provisions on right to public trial (Cal. Const., Art. I, §15) and freedom of speech and the press (Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a)) do not guarantee public access to preliminary hearings; hence, P.C. 868, allowing a defendant to obtain a closed hearing, is constitutional. (San Jose Mercury-News v. Municipal Court (1982) 30 C.3d 498, 507, 179 C.R. 772, 638 P.2d 655.)

However, when a defendant requests closure under P.C. 868 to protect his or her right to a fair trial, the hearing may be closed only if specific findings are made demonstrating that (a) "there is a substantial probability that the defendant's right to a fair trial will be prejudiced by publicity that closure would prevent," and (b) "reasonable alternatives to closure cannot adequately protect the defendant's fair trial rights." (Press-Enterprise Co. v. Superior Court (1986) 478 U.S. 1, 106 S.Ct. 2735, 2743, 92 L.Ed.2d 1, 16; see Eversole v. Superior Court (1983) 148 C.A.3d 188, 195, 195 C.R. 816, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §137 [magistrate erred under P.C. 868.7 in failing to consider alternatives to closure of hearing during examination of minor victim]; on exclusion of public and attendance at preliminary hearings generally, see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §135 et seq.)

(2) Suppression Hearing When Defendant Requests Closure. In Gannett Co. v. DePasquale (1979) 443 U.S. 368, 99 S.Ct. 2898, 61 L.Ed.2d 608, counsel for the defendants in a New York murder trial moved to suppress evidence illegally obtained. At the pretrial hearing of the motion, they argued that continuous adverse publicity in petitioners' newspapers was making it difficult for the defendants to receive a fair trial, and accordingly requested that the public and press be excluded from the hearing. The motion was unopposed by the prosecution; and the judge, on a finding that an open hearing would be prejudicial, granted the motion. The New York Court of Appeals upheld the ruling. Held, affirmed.

(a) Dangers of publicity concerning pretrial hearing. Under Sheppard v. Maxwell (1966) 384 U.S. 333, 86 S.Ct. 1507, 16 L.Ed.2d 600, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §362, the trial judge has an affirmative duty to minimize the effects of pretrial publicity, and closure of pretrial proceedings is often one of the most effective methods of insuring against dissemination of inadmissible prejudicial information about a defendant. (99 S.Ct. 2904, 61 L.Ed.2d 620.)

(b) Sixth Amendment does not give public right to attend. The public trial guarantee of the Sixth Amendment, binding on the states under the Fourteenth, is for the benefit of the defendant. (99 S.Ct. 2907, 61 L.Ed.2d 622.) And the common law rule of open civil and criminal proceedings has not been elevated to the status of a constitutional right. (99 S.Ct. 2908, 61 L.Ed.2d 625.) However, if it could be assumed that the Sixth Amendment does embody the common-law right of the public to attend criminal trials, no such right was recognized as to pretrial proceedings, which involve the dangers mentioned above. Hence, "we hold that members of the public have no constitutional right under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to attend criminal trials." (99 S.Ct. 2911, 61 L.Ed.2d 628.)

(c) First Amendment does not give public right to attend. Assuming that the First Amendment, binding on the states under the Fourteenth, may guarantee access to criminal trials in some situations (a question not decided), the trial judge's action gave appropriate deference to the right. (1) There was no objection from any member of the public when the motion was made. (2) The judge balanced the rights of the public against the defendants' right to a fair trial. (3) The denial of access was only temporary; when the danger of prejudice had dissipated, a transcript of the hearing was made available to press and public. Under these circumstances, "any First and Fourteenth Amendment right of the petitioner to attend criminal trial was not violated." (99 S.Ct. 2912, 61 L.Ed.2d 630.)

Three justices concurred separately and four dissented. (See 93 Harv. L. Rev. 62; 7 Hastings Const. L. Q. 339, 625; 7 Pepperdine L. Rev. 283; 59 So. Cal. L. Rev. 603.)

(3) Suppression Hearing When Prosecution Requests Closure. To close a suppression hearing over the defendant's objections, the prosecution must "advance an overriding interest that is likely to be prejudiced, the closure must be no broader than necessary to protect that interest, the trial court must consider reasonable alternatives to closing the proceeding, and it must make findings adequate to support the closure." (Waller v. Georgia (1984) 467 U.S. 39, 104 S.Ct. 2210, 2216, 81 L.Ed.2d 31, 39 [closure of entire suppression hearing was unjustified].)

C. Limitations on the Rights.

2. Interference With Judicial Process.

c. Public Access to Court Proceedings.

2. Criminal Trial.

[§ 420] Criminal Trial.

(1) In General. In Richmond Newspapers v. Virginia (1980) 448 U.S. 555, 100 S.Ct. 2814, 65 L.Ed.2d 973, the Court held that in the absence of some overriding interest, the trial of a criminal case must be open to the public. Although only one justice dissented, there were six opinions expressing differing reasons for the decision. (See 94 Harv. L. Rev. 20, 149 [Richmond Newspapers]; 59 So. Cal. L. Rev. 603 [same]; 12 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 431 [same]; 14 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1081 [same]; 36 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 609 [same]; on right to broadcast executions, see 43 Hastings L. J. 1489.)

In Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Court (1982) 457 U.S. 596, 102 S.Ct. 2613, 73 L.Ed.2d 248, a Massachusetts statute required exclusion of the press and public from the courtroom at trials for specified sexual offenses involving victims under 18, during the testimony of a victim. Held, the mandatory statute was unconstitutional.

(a) Richmond Newspapers v. Virginia, supra, "firmly established for the first time that the press and general public have a constitutional right of access to criminal trials." (102 S.Ct. 2618, 73 L.Ed.2d 255.) Two features of the criminal justice system explain why this right of access is afforded protection by the First Amendment: (1) The criminal trial historically has been open to the press and general public. (2) The right of access plays a particularly significant role in the functioning of the judicial process and the government as a whole. It enhances the quality and safeguards the integrity of the factfinding process, fosters an appearance of fairness, and permits the public to participate in and serve as a check on the judicial process. (102 S.Ct. 2619, 2620, 73 L.Ed.2d 256, 257.) "In sum, the institutional value of the open criminal trial is recognized in both logic and experience." (102 S.Ct. 2620, 73 L.Ed.2d 257.)

(b) The right is not absolute; but where, as here, the state attempts to deny it, it must be shown that the denial is necessitated by a compelling governmental interest and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest. (102 S.Ct. 2620, 73 L.Ed.2d 257.)

(c) The interest in safeguarding the physical and psychological well-being of a minor is a compelling one, but it does not justify a mandatory closure rule. A trial court can determine on a case-by-case basis whether closure is necessary. Thus, in the instant case, the names of the minor victims were already in the public record, and they may have been willing to testify despite the presence of the press. (102 S.Ct. 2621, 73 L.Ed.2d 258.)

(d) The interest in encouragement of minor victims of sex crimes to come forward and provide accurate testimony likewise does not support the statute. The claim that automatic closure will lead to an increase in the number of these witnesses is speculative and questionable. Thus, though barred from the courtroom, the press is not denied access to the transcript, court personnel, or any other possible source that could provide an account of the minor victim's testimony. Also, the same interest could be relied on to support an array of mandatory closure rules, for minor victims of sex crimes are not the only crime victims who, because of publicity, are reluctant to testify. "The State's argument based on this interest therefore proves too much, and runs contrary to the very foundation of the right of access recognized in Richmond Newspapers." (102 S.Ct. 2622, 73 L.Ed.2d 259.)

Two dissenting justices deplored the "disturbing paradox" of valid closure rules to protect minors charged with crime and invalid closure rules protecting minor victims of sex crimes; they also contended that Richmond Newspapers did not support the result reached by the majority, and that the interests asserted by Massachusetts were sufficient to overcome the constitutional challenge. (102 S.Ct. 2623 et seq., 73 L.Ed.2d 260 et seq.) (See 11 Hastings Const. L. Q. 637; 23 Santa Clara L. Rev. 947.)

(2) Public Access to Presented Evidence. "[A]bsent a showing that providing access would create a significant risk of impairment of the integrity of the evidence, the court must make evidence previously presented to a jury in open court reasonably available to the public." (KNSD Channels 7/39 v. Superior Court (1998) 63 C.A.4th 1200, 1205, 74 C.R.2d 595 [access to audiotape played for jury in open court].) And even when the public is excluded from a preliminary hearing during the examination of a witness under P.C. 868.7 (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §137), a transcript of the testimony of the witness must be made available to the public. (P.C. 868.7(b).)

(3) Public Access to Probation Reports. Probation reports are open to the public without restriction for 60 days after judgment. After that time, the general public, including reporters, can gain access only "by order of the court." (P.C. 1203.05.) In considering a petition for access, the court must do more than simply weigh the defendant's constitutional right of privacy against the public's common law right of access. First, the defendant must receive notice of the petition and be given an opportunity to be heard. Then, if the defendant requests a hearing, the court must balance the defendant's interest in keeping the information confidential against the potential benefit to be gained from disclosure. - c. Public Access to Court Proceedings.
3. Jury Voir Dire.

[§ 421] Jury Voir Dire.

(2) Voir Dire Questionnaires. In Copley Press v. Superior Court (1991) 228 C.A.3d 77, 278 C.R. 443, a trial for murder with special circumstances, the trial court, pursuant to C.C.P. 205 and local court rules, distributed a detailed questionnaire to 300 prospective jurors. Petitioner, publisher of the San Diego Union, was denied access to the questionnaires and petitioned for mandamus. The Court of Appeal, relying on Press-Enterprise, supra, granted the writ. Thereafter the Supreme Court directed that the opinion be vacated and the matter considered anew in light of Lesher Communications v. Superior Court (1990) 224 C.A.3d 774, 274 C.R. 154. The Court of Appeal, pursuant to the direction, issued its opinion as modified.

(a) Lesher held that the public or press does not have the right of access to jury questionnaires filled out by venirepersons who are not called to the jury box for oral voir dire; and that holding is accepted in modifying the earlier opinion. Petitioner and the superior court also contend that Lesher raises another distinction between the two cases as to whether questions dealing with juror qualification are confidential. "We disagree. It is apparent that the questionnaires involved in the two cases are different, with the questionnaire here containing 219 questions while the one in Lesher contained 120. Nothing in Lesher indicates the questions contained in that questionnaire included the type of confidential information that is essential for the determination of juror qualification and management of the jury system as was the case here. ... Accordingly, we stand by our original view ... , that certain information ... that is essential for the determination of juror qualification and management of the jury system, but is not properly part of the voir dire, should be kept confidential." (228 C.A.3d 80.)

(b) Press-Enterprise states that the right of access may be overcome by an overriding interest based on findings that closure is essential to preserve higher values and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest. (228 C.A.3d 84.) Here, respondent superior court asserts three overriding interests:

(1) Administering an expeditious trial. But "we cannot give much weight to such a goal when compared to a constitutional interest." (228 C.A.3d 84.)

(2) Preserving the defendant's right to a fair and impartial jury trial. This is the sort of compelling interest that can override the First Amendment right of access. However, none of the matters stressed by the trial court were essential to a fair trial; and the trial court failed to consider alternatives to closure. (228 C.A.3d 85.)

(3) Protecting the juror's right to privacy. This also is an interest of constitutional dimension, and it has the potential to be in conflict with the First Amendment right of access. (228 C.A.3d 86.)

(c) Nevertheless, Press-Enterprise teaches that an individualized rather than a blanket approach is appropriate. "When limited closure is ordered, the constitutional values sought to be protected by holding open proceedings may be satisfied later by making a transcript of the closed proceedings available within a reasonable time, if the judge determines that disclosure can be accomplished while safeguarding the juror's valid privacy interests. Even then a valid privacy right may rise to a level that part of the transcript should be sealed, or the name of the juror withheld, to protect the person from embarrassment." (228 C.A.3d 86.)

(d) "[P]ursuant to the guidance of the United States Supreme Court, we believe that the proper approach is to have the superior court advise the venirepersons that they have the right to request in camera hearings on sensitive questions rather than writing their answers in the questionnaire. Counsel should be present and the session should be reported, with the trial court determining afterward on the record whether a legitimate privacy interest warrants protection. If it does, the trial court should then seal the transcript of the hearing. Henceforth, the superior court shall inform the venirepersons of their right to request in camera hearings to answer specific sensitive questions rather than filling out those answers on the questionnaire form. No explicit or implicit promise of confidentiality should be attached to the information contained in the questionnaires; rather the venirepersons shall be expressly informed the questionnaires are public records. Second, the superior court shall provide access to the questionnaires of individual jurors when the individual juror is called to the jury box for oral voir dire. Public access shall not be provided to questionnaires filled out by venirepersons who are not called to the jury box." (228 C.A.3d 87.)

(e) In this case the 300 prospective jurors were asked questions designed to determine juror qualification as well as to assist in the voir dire. "Thus, because of the hybrid nature of the questionnaire, certain information (e.g., telephone number, Social Security number, driver's license number) is included that is essential for the determination of juror qualification and management of the jury system but is not properly part of voir dire, and public access to it is not warranted. Information of this type should be segregated from the other questions and not released to the public." (228 C.A.3d 88.)

Copley Press and Lesher Communications were followed in Bellas v. Superior Court (2000) 85 C.A.4th 636, 102 C.R.2d 380. Here, the Public Defender was held in contempt for refusing to return defense copies of juror questionnaires to the clerk for sealing. Held, judgment of contempt annulled.

(a) The First Amendment right of "public access to judicial proceedings overwhelms any countervailing privacy interests of prospective jurors as to the content of questionnaires they complete. Where trial courts wish to protect their content from public observation, the constitutionally permitted procedure mandates that the judge advise members of the venire at the time the questionnaires are distributed that, upon completion, they will become public records accessible to anyone, and as an alternative to writing in sensitive personal data, jurors can answer those questions on the record in chambers with counsel present." (85 C.A.4th 638, 639.)

(b) "As to personal identifying information of trial jurors, the law provides limited privacy protection from the defendant, defense counsel, and the public by requiring the redaction of their personal juror identifying information (names, addresses, and telephone numbers) from the court's record, including questionnaires, unless good cause for access is shown on noticed motion. Members of the venire who were not sworn as trial jurors are entitled to have their names kept confidential only upon a finding of a compelling interest against disclosure. Because defense counsel agreed to redact personal juror identifying information from defense copies of questionnaires, we likewise conclude the trial court erred in requiring the questionnaires returned in order to protect the disclosure of this data." (85 C.A.4th 639.)

2. Interference With Judicial Process.
- c. Public Access to Court Proceedings.
4. Juvenile Dependency Proceedings.

[§ 422] Juvenile Dependency Proceedings.

San Bernardino County Dept. of Public Social Services v. Superior Court (1991) 232 C.A.3d 188, 283 C.R. 332, was a juvenile dependency proceeding involving seven children and allegations that the children's parents had kept one child locked in a closet for almost 10 years. The juvenile court granted the Sun Newspaper permission to attend court proceedings on the condition that the Sun not publish the minors' names, likenesses, or photographs, and that it interview participants only under specified circumstances. The Department of Public Social Services petitioned for mandamus or prohibition. Held, mandamus issued directing the juvenile court to vacate its order.

(a) Prior decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court, as summarized in Press-Enterprise Co. v. Superior Court (1986) 478 U.S. 1, 106 S.Ct. 2735, 92 L.Ed.2d 1 (Press-Enterprise II), have emphasized two considerations in determining the extent of the right of public access: (1) whether the particular proceeding has traditionally been open--the historical experience factor, and (2) whether public access plays a positive role in the proceeding--the logic factor. (232 C.A.3d 197.)

(b) Juvenile court hearings have historically been private, not public, and privacy may aid the rehabilitative process in dependency proceedings. (232 C.A.3d 198, 200.) However, the juvenile justice system has had many problems, and public access might play a positive role in improving juvenile court practice, checking judicial abuse, and educating the public. (232 C.A.3d 202, 203.) Thus, the two prongs of the Supreme Court's test point to different conclusions. (232 C.A.3d 203.)

(c) In criticizing the admitted failings of the juvenile court system, the Supreme Court has never indicated that lack of open proceedings is one of the reasons. Finding a constitutional right of public access would mean that a proceeding could not be closed unless the test for closure of Press-Enterprise Co. v. Superior Court (1984) 464 U.S. 501, 104 S.Ct. 819, 78 L.Ed.2d 629 (Press-Enterprise I), supra, §421, was met. "With the welfare of minors at stake, we are reluctant to impose the strict standard for closure required for a First Amendment right unless compelled to do so by the United States Supreme Court." (232 C.A.3d 204.)

(d) Here, the juvenile court granted access primarily because it thought it could control publicity by doing so.

However, the court's restrictions on the press's right to investigate and publish information that it has lawfully obtained were invalid. (232 C.A.3d 206.)

(e) Because the conditions cannot stand, the juvenile court must be allowed to re-exercise its discretion in deciding whether to grant access. In doing so, the court must first determine what is in the best interests of the minors, while at the same time considering the important social values that are fostered by public access. The court may decide to allow access to some portions of the proceedings but not others. (232 C.A.3d 207, 208.) After considering the various circumstances, "the court should allow press access unless there is a reasonable likelihood that such access will be harmful to the child's or children's best interest in this case." (232 C.A.3d 208.)

C. Limitations on the Rights.

2. Interference With Judicial Process.

c. Public Access to Court Proceedings.

5. Civil Trial.

[§ 423] Civil Trial.

In NBC Subsidiary (KNBC-TV) v. Superior Court (1999) 20 C.4th 1178, 1190, 86 C.R.2d 778, 980 P.2d 337, a civil action involving celebrities, the trial judge closed all proceedings held outside the jury's presence. To further ensure that the press and public would only see what the jury could see, the judge sealed, until the case was closed, that part of the transcript that was not before the jury. Petitioner, a television station, claimed that the closure order violated the First Amendment. The Court of Appeal issued a writ of mandamus directing the trial court to vacate its closure order and make transcripts available to the public and press. The Supreme Court granted review to address "whether there is a constitutional right of public access to civil trials" and whether the trial court's exclusion order violated C.C.P. 124. Held, judgment of Court of Appeal issuing writ of mandamus affirmed.

(a) C.C.P. 124 states: "Except as provided in Section 214 of the Family Code or any other provision of law, the sittings of every court shall be public." (20 C.4th 1191.) It is not clear from the statute's language or the few cases interpreting it whether it should be construed to preclude public access to portions of a civil trial "when, as here, the court reasonably believes there is a strong likelihood that such proceedings will be widely publicized and might come to the attention of the jurors and jeopardize the litigant's right to a fair trial." (20 C.4th 1196.) However, statutory provisions should be interpreted to avoid serious constitutional questions. (20 C.4th 1197.)

(b) The First Amendment right of access applies to civil as well as to criminal proceedings. (20 C.4th 1211.) Accordingly, C.C.P. 124 must be interpreted in a manner compatible with constitutional standards. (20 C.4th 1212.) Substantive proceedings held in chambers are part of the trial and are subject to the First Amendment right of access. (20 C.4th 1216.)

(c) Prior to the 1980's, closure and sealing "may have been permissible under circumstances that would fail to meet the minimum constitutional standards set out in more recent United States Supreme Court decisions." However, today substantive courtroom proceedings in ordinary civil cases are "presumptively open" and C.C.P. 124 "must be interpreted to preclude closure of proceedings that satisfy the high court's historical tradition/utility considerations--unless two things occur." (20 C.4th 1216, 1217.)

(1) "First, a trial court must provide notice to the public of the contemplated closure. ... [W]hen a motion to close a proceeding is made in open court (or, for example, at a closed bench conference held during open court proceedings), adequate notice of the contemplated closure is provided if the trial judge thereafter announces in open court that he or she plans to hold (or to consider holding) that proceeding in closed session. When a motion seeking closure is made in a written finding, adequate notice is provided by publicly docketing the motion reasonably in advance of a determination thereon. In either circumstance, the notice requirement should not impose an onerous or undue burden on trial courts." (20 C.4th 1217.)

(2) "Second, before substantive courtroom proceedings are closed or transcripts are ordered sealed, a trial court must hold a hearing and expressly find that (i) there exists an overriding interest supporting closure and/or sealing; (ii) there is a substantial probability that the interest will be prejudiced absent closure and/or sealing; (iii) the proposed closure and/or sealing is narrowly tailored to serve the overriding interest; and (iv) there is no less restrictive means of achieving the overriding interest." (20 C.4th 1217, 1218.)

(d) Here, the trial court's closure and sealing order failed to meet the minimum requirements imposed by C.C.P. 124 as interpreted in light of First Amendment requirements. (20 C.4th 1225.) For example, "the trial court's stated justification--protection of the underlying civil litigant's right to a fair trial--is, in the abstract, an overriding interest, and ... the First Amendment (and hence section 124) do, in an appropriate case, permit closure to protect that interest. The trial court, however, made no finding supporting the proposition that prejudice to that interest was substantially probable absent closure and temporary sealing." (20 C.4th 1222.) Also, "there were less restrictive means, short of closure, of achieving the overriding interest in a fair trial." (20 C.4th 1223.) "The trial court did not make, nor would the record support, a finding that the traditional means of countering inadmissible, prejudicial information--regular and specific cautionary jury admonitions and instructions--did not constitute an adequate and less intrusive means of accomplishing the goal of ensuring a fair trial." (20 C.4th 1225.) (See 39 A.L.R.5th 103 [propriety of excluding press or other media from civil trial].)

See In re Marriage of Burkle (2006) 135 C.A.4th 1045, 1052, 37 C.R.3d 805, 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, Supp., §82 [applying NBC Subsidiary (KNBC-TV) v. Superior Court (1999) 20 C.4th 1178, 86 C.R.2d 778, 980 P.2d 337, text, p. 702; statute permitting sealing of financial documents in divorce cases was overly broad; same First Amendment right of access applicable in ordinary civil cases applies in divorce proceedings].

In NBC Subsidiary (KNBC-TV), the court stated that there is a First Amendment right of access to documents in civil litigation that are "filed in court as a basis for litigation," but that there is no similar right of access "to discovery materials that are neither used at trial nor submitted as a basis for adjudication." (20 C.4th 1208, footnote 25.) To effectuate these principles, the Judicial Council adopted the sealed records rules, C.R.C., Rules 2.550 and 2.551. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (5th), Courts, §42.) In Mercury Interactive Corp. v. Klein (2007) 158 C.A.4th 60, 70 C.R.3d 88, 2 Cal. Proc. (5th), Courts, Supp., §42, the court interpreted the phrase "as a basis for adjudication" in the context of attempting to obtain public access to discovery documents designated confidential pursuant to a protective order and later attached as sealed exhibits to the complaint filed with the court, which was not used at trial or submitted as a basis for adjudication. Held, order unsealing the exhibits reversed. There is no presumptive First Amendment right of access to discovery documents. (158 C.A.4th 105.) Discovery is not automatically submitted "as a basis for adjudication," and hence does not perforce become accessible to the public, simply by becoming part of the court file. (158 C.A.4th 90.) Although the subject matter here was newsworthy, that was "not a substitute for a showing of specific utility of public access to the information." (158 C.A.4th 105.)

a. In General.

[§ 425] In General.

Defamatory publications have been recognized as outside the protection of the free speech and press guarantee, and are generally made actionable torts and crimes. (See Beauharnais v. Illinois (1952) 343 U.S. 250, 72 S.Ct. 725, 729, 96 L.Ed. 919, 927; 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §529 et seq.; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Property, §107; 4 Rotunda, §20.32 et seq.; 112 Harv. L. Rev. 1575 [defamation in cyberspace].)

Beauharnais extends the criminal libel theory to libel against a group. An Illinois statute made it unlawful to publish or exhibit matter that portrayed depravity, criminality, unchastity, or lack of virtue of "a class of citizens, of any race, color, creed or religion," that exposed these citizens "to contempt, derision, or obloquy," or that was productive of a breach of the peace. Petitioner published a leaflet containing a petition to city officials to "halt the further encroachment, harassment and invasion of white people" by Blacks and attacking black "rapes, robberies, knives, guns and marijuana." Held, the statute was valid and a conviction thereunder was proper. "[I]f an utterance directed at an individual may be the object of criminal sanctions, we cannot deny to a State power to punish the same utterance directed at a defined group, unless we can say that this is a wilful and purposeless restriction unrelated to the peace and well-being of the State." (72 S.Ct. 731, 96 L.Ed. 928.) And, in view of the history of race riots in Illinois, due process does not prevent the state from experimenting with this debatable means of control. The Legislature "may warrantably believe that a man's job and his educational opportunities and the dignity accorded him may depend as much on the reputation of the racial and religious group to which he willy-nilly belongs, as it does on his own merits." (72 S.Ct. 734, 96 L.Ed. 930.)

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

C. Limitations on the Rights.

4. Libel.

b. New York Times Rule.

1. Public Officials.

[§ 426] Public Officials.

In New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686, the Court established the defense of qualified privilege in defamation as an element of constitutional due process.

The "Committee to Defend Martin Luther King and the Struggle for Freedom in the South" sent, through an advertising agency, a full-page advertisement that was published in the New York Times. It set forth a number of charges of terrorism and suppression of black rights in the South, including reference to intimidation, violence, and other illegal activity by the "police" of Montgomery, Alabama. Some of the statements of alleged fact were inaccurate in their descriptions of details of the events. The Times followed its established practice of accepting the advertisement from a responsible source with no knowledge of any false statements. Sullivan, one of three elected Commissioners of Montgomery, in charge of police and several other departments, brought a civil libel action in the Montgomery court against some individuals whose names appeared in the advertisement, and against the New York Times, a New York corporation. His theory was that the reference to "police" would be read as accusing the Montgomery police, and himself as Commissioner, of illegal acts set forth; and he and some Montgomery witnesses testified that they read some of the statements as so referring to him in that capacity. The trial judge instructed the jury that the statements were libelous per se, that general damages were presumed, and that punitive damages could be awarded without finding the amount of actual damages. He refused to instruct that actual malice was required. Sullivan offered no proof of actual pecuniary loss. The jury awarded the full amount demanded, $ 500,000, against all defendants, and the Alabama Supreme Court affirmed. Held, reversed; the rule of law applied by the Alabama court violated the First and Fourteenth Amendments, and the evidence was constitutionally insufficient to support the judgment.

(a) The contention that there was no constitutional protection to this "commercial" advertisement was rejected. The advertisement communicated information, expressed opinion, and sought support for a movement on objectives of high public interest and concern. The fact that the Times was paid for it was no more material than the fact that newspapers and books are sold. Any other conclusion would discourage newspapers from carrying "editorial advertisements," shutting off an important outlet for information and ideas by persons who do not have access to publishing facilities to exercise their freedom of the press. So, if otherwise constitutionally protected, the statements "do not forfeit that protection because they were published in the form of a paid advertisement." (84 S.Ct. 718, 719, 11 L.Ed.2d 698.)

(b) The general statements of the Court in prior free speech cases, that the Constitution does not protect libelous publications, did not refer to libel laws imposing sanctions on criticism of official conduct; and no precedent or policy requires giving more weight to the epithet "libel" than to other "mere labels" of state law. "Like insurrection, contempt, advocacy of unlawful acts, breach of the peace, obscenity, solicitation of legal business, and the various other formulae for the repression of expression that have been challenged in this Court, libel can claim no talismanic immunity from constitutional limitations. It must be measured by standards that satisfy the First Amendment." (84 S.Ct. 720, 11 L.Ed.2d 700.)

(c) Alabama law, which restricts the privilege of fair comment to truthful statements, must be considered against a background of "profound national commitment to the principle that debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wide-open, and that it may well include vehement, caustic, and sometimes unpleasantly sharp attacks on government and public officials." (84 S.Ct. 721, 11 L.Ed.2d 701.) Because error is inevitable in free debate, the protection is not forfeited by falsity of some of the statements. (84 S.Ct. 721, 11 L.Ed.2d 701.) Nor does the injury to official reputation forfeit the protection any more than in criminal contempt charges for criticism of a judge or his or her decision. (84 S.Ct. 722, 11 L.Ed.2d 702.) What a state could not constitutionally do by a criminal statute restricting free speech it cannot do by allowing a civil action for libel. Here, e.g., without proof of actual pecuniary loss, the judgment was 1,000 times greater than the maximum fine provided by the state criminal libel statute. And there is no double jeopardy limitation in civil suits; e.g., the Times has been subjected to other suits based on this advertisement, by the Alabama Governor and others, with another $ 500,000 verdict already rendered and a total of $ 2,000,000 sought. (84 S.Ct. 724, 725, 11 L.Ed.2d 705.)

(d) A defense for erroneous statements honestly made is as essential as the requirement of proof of guilty knowledge in obscenity cases; a rule compelling a critic of official conduct to guarantee the truth of his or her factual assertions on pain of libel judgments virtually unlimited in amounts leads to "self-censorship," because of doubts as to ability to find the truth or prove it. (84 S.Ct. 725, 11 L.Ed.2d 706.) Hence: "The constitutional guarantees require, we think, a federal rule that prohibits a public official from recovering damages for a defamatory falsehood relating to his official conduct unless he proves that the statement was made with 'actual malice'--that is, with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not." (84 S.Ct. 726, 11 L.Ed.2d 706.)

(e) This privilege "is appropriately analogous to the protection accorded a public official" sued for libel by a private citizen. He or she is protected under all the state immunity rules unless actual malice is proved, because otherwise fearless administration of governmental policy would be inhibited. "Analogous considerations support the privilege for the citizen-critic of government. It is as much his duty to criticize as it is the official's duty to administer. ... It would give public servants an unjustified preference over the public they serve, if critics of official conduct did not have a fair equivalent of the immunity granted to the officials themselves." (84 S.Ct. 727, 11 L.Ed.2d 707.)

(f) Because on reversal the plaintiff may seek a new trial, "we deem that conditions of effective judicial administration require us to review the evidence in the present record to determine whether it could constitutionally support a judgment for respondent. This Court's duty is not limited to the elaboration of constitutional principles; we must also in proper cases review the evidence to make certain that those principles have been constitutionally applied." This is such a case because it involves the regulation of constitutional free speech. (84 S.Ct. 728, 11 L.Ed.2d 709.)

(g) Applying these standards, the proof to show actual malice lacks the clarity that constitutional standards demand. There was no evidence of defendant's knowledge of falsity or recklessness; at most there was negligence in failing to discover misstatements from its own news files; but reliance on the good reputation of the sponsors was reasonable. (84 S.Ct. 729, 730, 11 L.Ed.2d 710.)

(h) The evidence was also constitutionally insufficient to support the jury's finding that the statements were made "of and concerning" plaintiff. There was no direct reference to him by name or official position. As to the theory of the Alabama Supreme Court that it is "common knowledge" that the average person would take praise or criticism of "police" or others as attached to the official in control, the Court said:

"This proposition has disquieting implications for criticism of governmental conduct. For good reason, 'no court of last resort in this country has ever held, or even suggested, that prosecutions for libel on government have any place in the American system of jurisprudence.' The present proposition would sidestep this obstacle by transmuting criticism of government, however impersonal it may seem on its face, into personal criticism, and hence potential libel, of the officials of whom the government is composed. There is no legal alchemy by which a State may thus create the cause of action that would otherwise be denied for a publication which, as respondent himself said of the advertisement, 'reflects not only on me but on the other commissioners and the community.' Raising as it does the possibility that a good-faith critic of government will be penalized for his criticism, the proposition relied on by the Alabama courts strikes at the very center of the constitutionally protected area of free expression. We hold that such a proposition may not constitutionally be utilized to establish that an otherwise impersonal attack on governmental operations was a libel of an official responsible for those operations." (84 S.Ct. 732, 11 L.Ed.2d 713.)

The New York Times case inspired a considerable amount of law review comment, and its holding has been applied in a number of subsequent decisions. (See Garrison v. Louisiana (1964) 379 U.S. 64, 85 S.Ct. 209, 212, 13 L.Ed.2d 125, 129 [applying the New York Times doctrine to criminal libel]; *Eberle v. b. New York Times Rule.

2. Public Figures.

[§ 427] Public Figures.

The question whether the Times rule (supra, §426) applies to public figures who are not public officials was raised in two cases decided together: Curtis Publishing Co. v. Butts and Associated Press v. Walker (1967) 388 U.S. 130, 87 S.Ct. 1975, 18 L.Ed.2d 1094. Although the main opinion had only four signatures, a majority favored a slightly modified Times rule.

In the Butts case, the Saturday Evening Post published an article accusing Butts, Athletic Director of the University of Georgia, of conspiring to fix a football game with Alabama. The article was based on an allegedly overheard phone conversation of Butts with the Alabama coach, and the reaction of Georgia players to Alabama's victory. A federal district court jury returned a verdict for $ 60,000 general and $ 3,000,000 punitive damages, reduced to a $ 460,000 total by the judge. Held, affirmed.

In the Walker case, a news dispatch accused retired General Walker of encouraging rioters at the scene of enrollment of James Meredith, a Black, at the University of Mississippi. In an action in Texas, a verdict of $ 500,000 general and $ 300,000 punitive damages was revised by the trial judge to strike the punitive damages. Held, reversed.

(a) Although the plaintiffs were not public officials, they were public figures, and libel actions by these persons cannot be left entirely to state law. "We consider and would hold that a 'public figure' who is not a public official may also recover damages for a defamatory falsehood whose substance makes substantial danger to reputation apparent, on a showing of highly unreasonable conduct constituting an extreme departure from the standards of investigation and reporting ordinarily adhered to by responsible publishers." (87 S.Ct. 1991, 18 L.Ed.2d 1111.)

(b) Applying this rule to the Butts action, it appeared that the Post, changing to a policy of "sophisticated muckraking," disregarded elementary precautions in accepting the affidavit of the phone call by a criminal on probation, with no checking of the story, no expert handling of it, and no urgency in writing it. Thus, the evidence was ample to support a finding of this highly unreasonable conduct. (87 S.Ct. 1993, 18 L.Ed.2d 1113.)

(c) Applying this rule to the Walker action, it appeared that there was news requiring immediate dissemination; the report was from a correspondent on the scene who was apparently trustworthy; and the dispatches contained nothing unreasonable in light of the circumstances. Hence, there was no severe departure from accepted publishing standards. (87 S.Ct. 1993, 18 L.Ed.2d 1113.)

(d) The additional contention of Curtis Publishing Co. that imposition of punitive damages called for a showing of a higher degree of misconduct was rejected. If a publisher's departure is severe enough to strip it of constitutional protection, the state law can give both compensatory and punitive damages. (87 S.Ct. 1994, 18 L.Ed.2d 1114.) (See 81 Harv. L. Rev. 160; Belli v. Curtis Publishing Co. (1972) 25 C.A.3d 384, 388, 102 C.R. 122 [article about attorney for Jack Ruby, killer of Oswald; plaintiff acknowledged that he was public figure and that trial was matter of public interest].)

In Greenbelt Cooperative Publishing Assn. v. Bresler (1970) 398 U.S. 6, 90 S.Ct. 1537, 26 L.Ed.2d 6, B was a real estate developer and builder in Greenbelt, Maryland, and a member of the Maryland Legislature from another district. He was engaged in negotiations with the city council to obtain zoning variances, and in a controversy with the city over the value of a tract owned by him which the city was attempting to condemn. Feelings were high at city council meetings, and some people characterized B's negotiating position as "blackmail." The local paper reported the meetings fully and accurately, mentioning this word. B sued for libel, and a jury verdict and judgment for compensatory and punitive damages were sustained by the Maryland Court of Appeals. Held, reversed. (a) B was a "public figure," and it was unnecessary to determine whether, as a state legislator from another county, he was also a "public officer." (90 S.Ct. 1540, 26 L.Ed.2d 12.) (b) The paper was performing a legitimate function in publishing reports, and it did not charge B with the crime of blackmail. "On the contrary, even the most careless reader must have perceived that the word was no more than rhetorical hyperbole, a vigorous epithet used by those who considered Bresler's negotiating position extremely unreasonable." (90 S.Ct. 1542, 26 L.Ed.2d 15.)

In Monitor Patriot Co. v. Roy (1971) 401 U.S. 265, 91 S.Ct. 621, 28 L.Ed.2d 35, R was running for the U.S. Senate in the 1960 New Hampshire Democratic primary. The Concord Monitor, a daily newspaper, published a syndicated column that spoke of the political maneuvering and criminal records of several candidates, characterizing R as a "former small-time bootlegger." R was not elected, and he sued the Monitor and American Newspaper Alliance for libel, recovering a judgment that was affirmed by the New Hampshire Supreme Court. Held, reversed; the jury was improperly permitted to determine that the charge of criminal activity was not relevant. (a) The "public official" rule and the "public figure" rule apply to publications concerning a candidate for public office. (91 S.Ct. 625, 28 L.Ed.2d 41.) (b) The candidate "who vaunts his spotless record and sterling integrity cannot convincingly cry 'Foul!' when an opponent or an industrious reporter attempts to demonstrate the contrary." (91 S.Ct. 626, 28 L.Ed.2d 42.) (c) The test is not a standard of care, but a standard of relevance--relevance of the past incident to the candidate's fitness for office. (91 S.Ct. 627, 28 L.Ed.2d 43.) A "charge of criminal conduct, no matter how remote in time or place, can never be irrelevant to an official's or a candidate's fitness for office for purposes of application of the 'knowing falsehood or reckless disregard' rule of New York Times Co. v. Sullivan." (91 S.Ct. 628, 28 L.Ed.2d 44.) (See Noonan v. Rousselot (1966) 239 C.A.2d 447, 452, 48 C.R. 817 [charges against candidate for Congress made by incumbent Congressman opponent].)

In Ocala Star-Banner Co. v. Damron (1971) 401 U.S. 295, 91 S.Ct. 628, 28 L.Ed.2d 57, Leonard Damron was mayor of a small Florida town and a candidate for county tax assessor. The Star Banner, a local newspaper, published a story that Leonard Damron, identified only as a "local garage owner," had been charged with perjury in a federal civil rights suit, and that his case had been held over until the following term of court. The story was false, as a result of inadvertent substitution of Leonard's name for that of his brother James. Held, judgment for plaintiff reversed. The attempted distinction of Times, that nothing in the article referred to his official conduct and was therefore a purely "private" libel, was unsound. As pointed out in Monitor Patriot Co. v. Roy, a charge of criminal conduct against an official or candidate is always relevant for purposes of the Times rule. (91 S.Ct. 632, 28 L.Ed.2d 62.)

In Time v. Pape (1971) 401 U.S. 279, 91 S.Ct. 633, 28 L.Ed.2d 45, the United States Commission on Civil Rights issued a report entitled "Justice" that was concerned with police brutality. It gave a detailed account of a raid by Chicago police, headed by Deputy Chief of Detectives Pape, on the home of Mr. and Mrs. Monroe, who were Blacks. Vicious attacks on the couple and their children, destruction of their personal property, and holding of Mr. Monroe for illegal interrogation without charges, were set forth. Time magazine, reporting the publication, also gave a detailed description of the incident. Pape sued for libel, and he and the other policemen testified that no such events occurred. The Time writers testified that the article had been based largely on the Commission Report, and the researcher asserted belief in its truth. The case for the plaintiff, however, was based on the fact that the report and Time article gave the impression that the events were findings of the Commission as to what occurred, whereas they were founded on allegations in the civil rights complaint by the Monroes in a suit against Pape, and the Time writer admitted that the word "alleged" had been deliberately omitted. Held, judgment against Time reversed.

The Court, recognizing the difficulties of reporting events in the press on the basis of what others have said, nevertheless strongly condemned the Commission Report as "anything but straightforward," and as "extravagantly ambiguous," and concluded: "[W]e cannot agree that, when Time failed to state that the Commission in reporting the Monroe incident had technically confined itself to the allegations of a complaint, Time engaged in a 'falsification' sufficient in itself to sustain a jury finding of 'actual malice.' " (91 S.Ct. 639, 28 L.Ed.2d 53.) (See 52 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1783 [arguing that summary judgment should be liberally granted to media defendants to avoid intimidation into self-censorship by high litigation costs]; for discussion of types of public figures, see 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §§604, 605.)

In Rosenbloom v. Metromedia (1971) 403 U.S. 29, 91 S.Ct. 1811, 29 L.Ed.2d 296, the Times rule was extended to libel actions by a private individual involved in an event of public interest. Plaintiff, a magazine distributor, was arrested and tried for possession of obscene books, but was acquitted at the trial. He then sued defendant radio station for libel in reporting the event on its newscasts, and recovered a substantial judgment. Held, reversed. The Court was divided in its reasons, but the main opinion took a strong position on the issue:

"If a matter is a subject of public or general interest, it cannot suddenly become less so merely because a private individual is involved, or because in some sense the individual did not 'voluntarily' choose to become involved. The public's primary interest is in the event; the public focus is on the conduct of the participant and the content, effect, and significance of the conduct, not the participant's prior anonymity or notoriety." (91 S.Ct. 1819, 29 L.Ed.2d 311.) (See 85 Harv. L. Rev. 222; 47 So. Cal. L. Rev. 917; 18 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 371.)

C. Limitations on the Rights.
5. Invasion of Privacy.
a. New York Times Rule Applies.

[§ 429] New York Times Rule Applies.

In Time v. Hill (1967) 385 U.S. 374, 87 S.Ct. 534, 17 L.Ed.2d 456, the Times rule (supra, §426) was applied to actions for invasion of privacy. In September, 1952, Hill, his wife and five children were held hostage by three escaped convicts for 19 hours, and released unharmed. In newspaper interviews, Hill stressed the fact of their courteous treatment. Shortly afterwards, Hill moved his family to another state and discouraged any publicity. In the spring of 1953, Hayes published a novel, "The Desperate Hours," which was made into a play of the same name and produced on Broadway. In the Hayes works, the convicts are violent and the family is abused. In February, 1955, Life magazine published an article entitled "True Crime Inspires Tense Play," which included pictures of violent scenes from the play, "inspired by the family's experience." Hill sued under New York's privacy statute, was awarded $ 30,000 compensatory damages, and the judgment was affirmed in New York. Held, reversed.

(a) Requirement of knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard of truth. "We hold that the constitutional protections for speech and press preclude the application of the New York statute to redress false reports of matters of public interest in the absence of proof that the defendant published the report with knowledge of its falsity or in reckless disregard of the truth." (87 S.Ct. 542, 17 L.Ed.2d 467.) A negligence test would place an intolerable burden on the press of guessing how a jury might assess reasonableness of steps taken to verify accuracy of every reference to a name, picture, or portrait. (87 S.Ct. 543, 17 L.Ed.2d 467.)

(b) Application of the test. From the evidence, the jury might have concluded that Life's editor (1) negligently believed that the play accurately portrayed the incident, or (2) knew that the play was to some extent fiction, so that the statement in the article about "the story reenacted" was made with knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard of the truth. (87 S.Ct. 544, 545, 17 L.Ed.2d 469.) The trial judge failed to instruct that liability could be based only on a finding of knowing or reckless falsity; hence judgment was reversed for this error. (87 S.Ct. 545, 546, 547, 17 L.Ed.2d 470, 471, 472.) (See Cantrell v. Forest City Publishing Co. (1974) 419 U.S. 245, 95 S.Ct. 465, 469, 42 L.Ed.2d 419, 427, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §674 [applying Time v. Hill standard, and holding evidence of knowledge or recklessness sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff]; Nicholson v. McClatchy Newspapers (1986) 177 C.A.3d 509, 517, 223 C.R. 58 [publication of State Bar's evaluation of plaintiff who was being considered for appointment to judicial office was privileged; plaintiff was public figure, evaluation was matter of substantial public interest]; 83 *Harv. VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

C. Limitations on the Rights.

5. Invasion of Privacy.

b. Publication of Name of Rape Victim.

[§ 430] Publication of Name of Rape Victim.

(1) Information Obtained From Public Record of Criminal Proceeding. Cox Broadcasting Corp. v. Cohn (1975) 420 U.S. 469, 95 S.Ct. 1029, 43 L.Ed.2d 328, involved the constitutionality of a Georgia statute making it a misdemeanor to publish or broadcast the name or identity of a rape victim. C was raped and died. Six youths were indicted for the crime. Defendant W, a reporter for defendant Broadcasting Corp., discovered C's name in an examination of the indictments, which were public records, and broadcast the name in a news report. Plaintiff, father of the victim, sued for damages for invasion of privacy, and prevailed in the Georgia courts. Held, judgment reversed; the statute was unconstitutional.

(b) Constitutional right to publish matters of public record. The law of tort has recognized the privilege of the press to report the events of judicial proceedings. (95 S.Ct. 1045, 43 L.Ed.2d 348.) And the same conclusion as to any matters of public record is compelled by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. "We are reluctant to embark on a course that would make public records generally available to the media but forbid their publication if offensive to the sensibilities of the supposed reasonable man. Such a rule would make it very difficult for the press to inform their readers about the public business and yet stay within the law. The rule would invite timidity and self-censorship and very likely lead to the suppression of many items that would otherwise be put into print and that should be made available to the public. At the very least, the First and Fourteenth Amendments will not allow exposing the press to liability for truthfully publishing information released to the public in official court records. If there are privacy interests to be protected in judicial proceedings, the States must respond by means which avoid public documentation or other exposure of private information. Their political institutions must weigh the interests in privacy with the interests of the public to know and of the press to publish. Once true information is disclosed in public court documents open to public inspection, the press cannot be sanctioned for publishing it. In this instance as in others reliance must rest upon the judgment of those who decide what to publish or broadcast." (95 S.Ct. 1046, 43 L.Ed.2d 350.)

(2) Information Obtained From Police Report. In The Florida Star v. B.J.F. (1989) 491 U.S. 524, 109 S.Ct. 2603, 105 L.Ed.2d 443, the Court held unconstitutional a Florida statute making it unlawful to publish the name of the victim of a sexual assault. The county sheriff's department prepared a report of the incident, which identified the victim, B.J.F., by her full name, and placed the report in the department's press room, available to the public. A Florida Star's reporter-trainee copied the police report, including the victim's name, and the newspaper published a one-paragraph article derived from the report, in a "Police Reports" section, one of 54 police blotter stories in that day's edition. B.J.F. filed a civil suit and received a substantial award of compensatory and punitive damages, which was upheld in the Florida Court of Appeal. Held, reversed.

(a) "The tension between the right which the First Amendment accords to a free press, on the one hand, and the protections which various statutes and common-law doctrines accord to personal privacy against the publication of truthful information, on the other, is a subject we have addressed several times in recent years. Our decisions in cases involving government attempts to sanction the accurate dissemination of information as invasive of privacy, have not, however, exhaustively considered this conflict. On the contrary, although our decisions have without exception upheld the press' right to publish, we have emphasized each time that we were resolving this conflict only as it arose in a discrete factual context." (109 S.Ct. 2607, 105 L.Ed.2d 453.) "The somewhat uncharted state of the law in this area thus contrasts markedly with the well-mapped area of defamatory falsehoods, where a long line of decisions has produced relatively detailed legal standards governing the multifarious situations in which the individuals aggrieved by the dissemination of damaging untruths seek redress." (109 S.Ct. 2607, 105 L.Ed.2d 453, footnote 5.)

(b) Cox Broadcasting, supra, is not controlling. There the name of the rape victim was obtained from courthouse records open to public inspection, and the opinion stressed the important role of the press in subjecting trials to public scrutiny. "That role is not directly compromised where, as here, the information in question comes from a police report prepared and disseminated at a time at which not only had no adversarial criminal proceedings begun, but no suspect had been identified." (109 S.Ct. 2608, 105 L.Ed.2d 454.)

(c) The issue is governed by a limited principle articulated in Smith v. Daily Mail Publishing Co. (1979) 443 U.S. 97, 99 S.Ct. 2667, 61 L.Ed.2d 399, supra, §413. "[I]f a newspaper lawfully obtains truthful information about a matter of public significance then state officials may not constitutionally punish publication of the information, absent a need to further a state interest of the highest order." (109 S.Ct. 2609, 105 L.Ed.2d 455.) Applied to the present case, the Daily Mail principle requires reversal. The article was accurate, the newspaper lawfully obtained the name, and the state's interest could have been protected by more limited means than punishing truthful speech. (109 S.Ct. 2610, 105 L.Ed.2d 457, 458.)

(d) "We do not hold that truthful publication is automatically constitutionally protected, or that there is no zone of personal privacy within which the State may protect the individual from intrusion by the press, or even that a State may never punish publication of the name of a victim of a sexual offense. We hold only that where a newspaper publishes truthful information which it has lawfully obtained, punishment may lawfully be imposed, if at all, only when narrowly tailored to a state interest of the highest order." (109 S.Ct. 2613, 105 L.Ed.2d 460.)

In Bartnicki v. Vopper (2001) 532 U.S. 514, 121 S.Ct. 1753, 149 L.Ed.2d 787, a tape of an illegally intercepted cellular telephone conversation concerning a matter of public interest was played on defendant's radio show, rebroadcast by another station, and its contents published in local newspapers. Defendant radio commentator obtained the tape legally from another defendant, although they both had reason to know that the tape was initially obtained illegally. Plaintiffs sought damages under the Electronic Communications Privacy Act, 18 U.S.C., §2510 et seq., and similar Pennsylvania wiretapping statutes. The Court of Appeals concluded that the statutes were invalid because they deterred significantly more speech than necessary to protect the privacy interests at stake. Held, affirmed.

(a) The question here is whether the government may punish the publisher of information that was obtained in a lawful manner but from a source who obtained it unlawfully. One of the principal governmental interests the statutes serve is in removing an incentive for persons to intercept private conversations. (121 S.Ct. 1762, 149 L.Ed.2d 802.) Imposing an appropriate punishment is the normal method of deterring unlawful conduct by the person who engages in it. "But it would be quite remarkable to hold that speech by a law-abiding possessor of information can be suppressed in order to deter conduct by a non-law-abiding third party." (121 S.Ct. 1762, 149 L.Ed.2d 803.)

(b) The wiretapping statutes also seek to minimize harm to persons whose conversations have been illegally intercepted. (121 S.Ct. 1762, 149 L.Ed.2d 802.) Privacy of communication is an important governmental interest, and "the fear of public disclosure of private conversations might well have a chilling effect on private speech." (121 S.Ct. 1764, 149 L.Ed.2d 804.) However, "privacy concerns give way when balanced against the interest in publishing matters of public importance. ... One of the costs associated with participation in public affairs is an attendant loss of privacy." (121 S.Ct. 1765, 149 L.Ed.2d 805.)

Two justices joined in the majority opinion and filed a separate concurrence (121 S.Ct. 1766, 149 L.Ed.2d 806), and three justices dissented (121 S.Ct. 1769, 149 L.Ed.2d 810). The dissent stressed the need for personal conversations to be frank and uninhibited without fear of "clandestine surveillance and purposeful disclosure." (121 S.Ct. 1769, 149 L.Ed.2d 811.) Being content neutral, the laws here should have been upheld "if they further a substantial governmental interest unrelated to the suppression of free speech, and they do." (121 S.Ct. 1772, 149 L.Ed.2d 815.) (See 115 Harv. L. Rev. 406 [Bartnicki]; 30 Pepperdine L. Rev. 367 [same].)

d. Infliction of Emotional Distress.

[§ 432] Infliction of Emotional Distress.

Hustler Magazine v. Falwell (1988) 485 U.S. 46, 108 S.Ct. 876, 99 L.Ed.2d 41, presented a novel question involving First Amendment limitations on "a State's authority to protect its citizens from the intentional infliction of emotional distress." The question was "whether a public figure may recover damages for emotional harm caused by the publication of an ad parody offensive to him, and doubtless gross and repugnant in the eyes of most. Respondent would have us find that a State's interest in protecting public figures from emotional distress is sufficient to deny First Amendment protection to speech that is patently offensive and is intended to inflict emotional injury, even when that speech could not reasonably have been interpreted as stating actual facts about the public figure involved. This we decline to do." (108 S.Ct. 879, 99 L.Ed.2d 48.)

Plaintiff Falwell, a nationally known minister and commentator on politics and public affairs, was the subject of a "parody" advertisement in defendant's magazine. The parody contained an alleged interview with plaintiff in which he described "a drunken incestuous rendezvous with his mother in an outhouse," but in small print set forth a disclaimer: "ad parody--not to be taken seriously." Plaintiff sued defendant in the federal court on theories of libel, invasion of privacy, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial judge directed a verdict against plaintiff on the invasion of privacy claim, and the jury found against him on the libel claim; but the jury found for him on the emotional distress claim and judgment was entered in his favor. The Court of Appeals affirmed, holding that the New York Times standard was satisfied by the state-law requirement and the jury's finding, that defendants had acted intentionally or recklessly. Held, reversed.

(a) "The sort of robust political debate encouraged by the First Amendment is bound to produce speech that is critical of those who hold public office or those public figures who are 'intimately involved in the resolution of important public questions or, by reason of their fame, shape events in areas of concern to society at large.' " (108 S.Ct. 879, 99 L.Ed.2d 49.) This criticism will not always be reasoned or moderate, and these persons will be subject to vehement, caustic, and sometimes unpleasantly sharp attacks. (108 S.Ct. 880, 99 L.Ed.2d 49.)

(b) Plaintiff's argument that a different standard should be applied to an action based on intentional infliction of emotional distress is unacceptable. A bad motive may be deemed controlling for purposes of tort liability, but "we think the First Amendment prohibits such a result in the area of public debate about public figures." (108 S.Ct. 881, 99

L.Ed.2d 50.) To hold otherwise would subject political cartoonists and satirists to damage awards without any showing that their work falsely defamed its subject. (108 S.Ct. 881, 99 L.Ed.2d 51, listing a number of "famous examples of this type of intentionally injurious speech by Thomas Nast.")

(c) Plaintiff contended that the caricature of him was so "outrageous" as to distinguish it from more traditional political cartoons. But "outrageousness" in the area of political and social discourse is inherently subjective, and an "outrageousness" standard "runs afoul of our longstanding refusal to allow damages to be awarded because the speech in question may have an adverse emotional impact on the audience." (108 S.Ct. 882, 99 L.Ed.2d 52.)

(d) "We conclude that public figures and public officials may not recover for the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress by reason of publications such as the one here at issue without showing in addition that the publication contains a false statement of fact which was made with 'actual malice,' i.e., with knowledge that the statement was false or with reckless disregard as to whether or not it was true. This is not merely a 'blind application' of the New York Times standard ... ; it reflects our considered judgment that such a standard is necessary to give adequate 'breathing space' to the freedoms protected by the First Amendment." [§ 433] Distinction: Right of Publicity.

In Zacchini v. Scripps-Howard Broadcasting Co. (1977) 433 U.S. 562, 97 S.Ct. 2849, 53 L.Ed.2d 965, petitioner Z was an entertainer who performed a "human cannonball" act in which he was shot from a cannon into a net some 200 feet away. He gave a performance at an Ohio county fair. Respondent's reporter, without Z's consent, filmed the act, and it was shown in full on respondent's news program that night, with favorable commentary. Petitioner sought damages for infringement of his "right of publicity," i.e., for unlawful appropriation of his professional property. The Ohio court upheld the defense of First Amendment privilege to report matters of legitimate public interest. Held, reversed.

(a) Time v. Hill (1967) 385 U.S. 374, 87 S.Ct. 534, 17 L.Ed.2d 456, supra, §429, deals with the distinguishable tort of invasion of privacy; the present action seeks only to protect petitioner's proprietary interest in his act. And respondent was not merely engaged in the reporting of an event, as in Time v. Hill and similar cases. (97 S.Ct. 2856, 53 L.Ed.2d 975.)

(b) The state may by its own law create a privilege to do what respondent did here (97 S.Ct. 2859, 53 L.Ed.2d 978), but the First Amendment does not require it to do so. "Wherever the line in particular situations is to be drawn between media reports that are protected and those that are not, we are quite sure that the First and Fourteenth Amendments do not immunize the media when they broadcast a performer's entire act without his consent. The Constitution no more prevents a State from requiring respondent to compensate petitioner for broadcasting his act on television than it would privilege respondent to film and broadcast a copyrighted dramatic work without liability to the copyright owner ... ; or to film and broadcast a prize fight ... ; or a baseball game ... , where the promoters or the participants had other plans for publicizing the event." (97 S.Ct. 2857, 53 L.Ed.2d 975.)

Four justices dissented, three on the theory that the film clip was treated as news, without any attempt at commercial exploitation, and the broadcast was therefore privileged. (97 S.Ct. 2860, 53 L.Ed.2d 978.) (See 91 Harv. L. Rev. 208; 96 Harv. L. Rev. 1703 [commercial exploitation requirement]; 30 Stanf. L. Rev. 1185.)

C. Limitations on the Rights.

6. Obscenity.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 434

[§ 434] In General.

(1) Constitutionality of Prohibition. Statutes punishing the publication or circulation of obscene matter have long been considered safe from constitutional attack. In Roth v. United States (1957) 354 U.S. 476, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498, the numerous prior dicta were approved, and state and federal statutes making publication or distribution of obscene matter criminal were upheld. The Court said: "[I]mplicit in the history of the First Amendment is the rejection of obscenity as utterly without redeeming social importance. This rejection for that reason is mirrored in the universal judgment that obscenity should be restrained, reflected in the international agreement of over 50 nations, in the obscenity laws of all of the 48 States, and in the 20 obscenity laws enacted by the Congress from 1842 to 1956." (77 S.Ct. 1309, 1 L.Ed.2d 1507.) (See Miller v. California (1973) 413 U.S. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 2614, 37 L.Ed.2d 419, 430, infra, §437 ["This much has been categorically settled by the Court, that obscene material is unprotected by the First Amendment"]; Fort Wayne Books v. Indiana (1989) 489 U.S. 46, 109 S.Ct. 916, 924, 925, 103 L.Ed.2d 34, 48, 49 [misdemeanor obscenity violations may be used as predicate offenses for felony violation of state Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) statute; if obscenity law is not vague, then neither is RICO statute, and fact that greater punishment is imposed for RICO violation is not constitutionally significant]; National Endowment for the Arts v. Finley (1998) 524 U.S. 569, 118 S.Ct. 2168, 2173, 2180, 141 L.Ed.2d 500, 509, 518 [statute mandating that NEA consider "general standards of decency and respect for diverse beliefs and value" in awarding grants "merely adds some imprecise considerations to an already subjective selection process," and does not, on its face, violate First or Fifth Amendment rights]; 27 *Pepperdine L. (2) Effect of Words Alone. Although most obscenity cases involve pictorial pornography (e.g., films, pictures, or illustrations in books), words alone can be legally obscene. "A book seems to have a different and preferred place in our hierarchy of values, and so it should be. But this generalization, like so many, is qualified by the book's content. As with pictures, films, paintings, drawings, and engravings, both oral utterance and the printed word have First Amendment protection until they collide with the long-settled position of this Court that obscenity is not protected by the Constitution." (Kaplan v. California (1973) 413 U.S. 115, 93 S.Ct. 2680, 2684, 37 L.Ed.2d 492, 497, infra, §451; 107 Harv. L. Rev. 2111 [book review of MacKinnon, Dirty Words]; 21 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 155 [Dirty Words, Dirty Thoughts and Censorship: Obscenity Law and Non-Pictorial Works].)

(3) Texts and Law Reviews. The constitutionality of obscenity laws has been the subject of extensive commentary. (See 4 Rotunda, §20.56 et seq.; 98 *Harv. L. Witkin Summary of California Law

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

C. Limitations on the Rights.

6. Obscenity.

b. Requirement of Knowledge.

[§ 435] Requirement of Knowledge.

(1) In General. In Smith v. California (1959) 361 U.S. 147, 80 S.Ct. 215, 4 L.Ed.2d 205, the Court held that an ordinance imposing liability on a bookseller for sale of an obscene book with no requirement of proving knowledge was unconstitutional. "There is no specific constitutional inhibition against making the distributors of food the strictest censors of their merchandise, but the constitutional guarantees of the freedom of speech and of the press stand in the way of imposing a similar requirement on the bookseller. By dispensing with any requirement of knowledge of the contents of the book on the part of the seller, the ordinance tends to impose a severe limitation on the public's access to constitutionally-protected matter. For if the bookseller is criminally liable without knowledge of the contents, and the ordinance fulfills its purpose, he will tend to restrict the books he sells to those he has inspected; and thus the State will have imposed a restriction upon the distribution of constitutionally protected as well as obscene literature." (80 S.Ct. 218, 4 L.Ed.2d 211.)

(2) Effect of Circumstances of Publication. In Ginzburg v. United States (1966) 383 U.S. 463, 86 S.Ct. 942, 16 L.Ed.2d 31, defendant was convicted in the federal district court of violation of the federal obscenity statute (18 U.S.C., §1461) by mailing obscene publications and advertising material telling how to get them. Held, affirmed.

(a) In cases since Roth v. United States (1957) 354 U.S. 476, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498, supra, §434, the materials themselves were examined. Here, the prosecution charged the offense in the context of the circumstances of production, sale, and publicity. The Court proceeded on the tacit assumption that, standing alone, the publications might not be obscene, and agreed that "the setting in which the publications were presented" could be considered as an aid to determining the question of obscenity. (86 S.Ct. 944, 945, 16 L.Ed.2d 35.)

(b) The publications were the magazine "Eros," the newsletter "Liaison," and the "Housewife's Handbook on Selective Promiscuity." The evidence showed that these were part of the business of pandering, i.e., purveying matter openly advertised to appeal to the erotic interest of customers. Thus, the postal service of "Middlesex" in New Jersey was chosen after those of the Pennsylvania hamlets of "Blue Ball" and "Intercourse" had been denied. The "leer of the sensualist" permeated the advertising. (86 S.Ct. 945, 946, 16 L.Ed.2d 36, 37.)

(c) This evidence was relevant in determining the issue. "Where the purveyor's sole emphasis is on the sexually provocative aspects of his publications, that fact may be decisive." (86 S.Ct. 947, 16 L.Ed.2d 38.) Nor is there any threat to First Amendment guarantees in holding that in close cases evidence of pandering may be probative and satisfy the Roth test. A conviction for mailing obscene matter does not necessarily suppress the materials or inhibit the enterprise of others seeking to advance human knowledge. "All that will have been determined is that questionable publications are obscene in a context which brands them as obscene." (86 S.Ct. 949, 950, 16 L.Ed.2d 40.)

Four dissenting justices found this reasoning wholly unsupportable. (a) Defendant was sentenced to 5 years in prison for distributing matter that neither he nor anyone else could have known to be criminal. (86 S.Ct. 950, 16 L.Ed.2d 41.) (b) The material was not hard core pornography, and the objective test of Roth is now supplemented by another that goes to the mailer's aim and motives, allowing punishment just because the judge or jury does not find his or her business agreeable. (86 S.Ct. 953, 16 L.Ed.2d 51.) (c) Defendant was not charged with pandering or commercial exploitation, nor are these criminal offenses. (86 S.Ct. 956, 16 L.Ed.2d 55.) (d) The First Amendment protects the discussion of any subject, including sex. (86 S.Ct. 969, 16 L.Ed.2d 55.)

In Mishkin v. New York (1966) 383 U.S. 502, 86 S.Ct. 958, 16 L.Ed.2d 56, the conviction was under a New York statute. Defendant, using paid authors, produced many paper-covered books, mostly on sexual deviations and illustrated with erotic pictures. The chief defense was that treatment of homosexuality and other deviations disgusted rather than stimulated the "average" person. The Court held, however, that where material is designed for a deviant sexual group, the Roth test is satisfied if the dominant theme as a whole appeals to the prurient interest in sex of the members of that group. (86 S.Ct. 963, 16 L.Ed.2d 62.) And scienter was shown by the nature of the materials and testimony about defendant's instructions to his artists and writers. (86 S.Ct. 965, 16 L.Ed.2d 63.) Three justices dissented, in much the same vein as in their Ginzburg dissents.

1. Roth Test.

[§ 436] Roth Test.

The principal problem in sustaining and applying obscenity laws has been the uncertain meaning of the words "obscene," "lewd," "lascivious," and "indecent," as used in the statutes; and the principal practical difficulty has been to avoid prohibition of permissible treatment of sex in art, literature, and scientific works. (See 21 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 181.)

In Roth v. United States (1957) 354 U.S. 476, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498, the Court dealt with these issues as follows: (a) As to uncertainty, the Constitution requires no impossible standards, and this language, properly applied, does not fail to give adequate notice of what is prohibited. (77 S.Ct. 1312, 1 L.Ed.2d 1511.) (b) As to the standard, the early rule allowing material to be judged by the effect of isolated excerpts on particularly susceptible persons (e.g., children) is rejected. The proper test is "whether to the average person, applying contemporary community standards, the dominant theme of the material taken as a whole appeals to prurient interest." (77 S.Ct. 1311, 1 L.Ed.2d 1509.)

In Jacobellis v. Ohio (1964) 378 U.S. 184, 84 S.Ct. 1676, 12 L.Ed.2d 793, appellant was convicted for showing a movie with an "explicit love scene." The Court, after viewing the film and noting its high praise by critics, concluded that it was not obscene. The Court declared that it must make an independent determination of the fact question whether the material is constitutionally protected; that the proper standard is that laid down in Roth; that the "contemporary community standards" of Roth do not mean varying local standards but those of "society at large," i.e., the determination must be on the basis of a national standard. (84 S.Ct. 1680, 12 L.Ed.2d 800.) The dissenters argued that there is no provable national standard, that local community standards should govern, and that the state court's finding of obscenity was not unreasonable and should not be disturbed. (84 S.Ct. 1685, 1686, 12 L.Ed.2d 805, 806.) (See A Book Named "John Cleland's Memoirs of a Woman of Pleasure" v. Attorney General of Commonwealth of Massachusetts (1966) 383 U.S. 413, 86 S.Ct. 975, 16 L.Ed.2d 1 [judgment declaring book obscene reversed for failure to apply modified Roth test]; infra, §437.)

c. Determination of Obscenity.

2. Miller Test.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 437

[§ 437] Miller Test.

In Miller v. California (1973) 413 U.S. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 37 L.Ed.2d 419, defendant conducted a mass mailing campaign in California advertising the sale of illustrated "adult" books. The brochures contained pictures and drawings explicitly depicting a variety of sexual activities, with genitals prominently displayed. He was convicted of violating P.C. 311.2(a), and after affirmance of the conviction by the Appellate Department of the Superior Court, the U.S. Supreme Court took the case over for a reexamination of the obscenity standards laid down in the earlier cases (see supra, §436).

(a) Memoirs formulation rejected. The original Roth test (supra, §436) was modified by the plurality opinion in A Book Named "John Cleland's Memoirs of a Woman of Pleasure" v. Attorney General of Commonwealth of Massachusetts (1966) 383 U.S. 413, 86 S.Ct. 975, 16 L.Ed.2d 1:

"While Roth presumed 'obscenity' to be 'utterly without redeeming social value,' Memoirs required that to prove obscenity it must be affirmatively established that the material is 'utterly without redeeming social value.' Thus, even as they repeated the words of Roth, the Memoirs plurality produced a drastically altered test that called on the prosecution to prove a negative ... a burden virtually impossible to discharge under our criminal standards of proof." (93 S.Ct. 2613, 37 L.Ed.2d 429.)

"Apart from the initial formulation in the Roth case, no majority of the Court has at any given time been able to agree on a standard to determine what constitutes obscene, pornographic material subject to regulation under the States' police power." (93 S.Ct. 2614, 37 L.Ed.2d 429.) And, although this case was tried below on the theory that P.C. 311 approximately incorporated the three-stage Memoirs test, no member of the Supreme Court today supports its formulation. (93 S.Ct. 2614, 37 L.Ed.2d 430.)

(b) The new test. Because of the dangers of regulating any form of expression, statutes must be carefully limited. "[W]e now confine the permissible scope of such regulation to works which depict or describe sexual conduct. That conduct must be specifically defined by the applicable state law, as written or authoritatively construed. A state offense must also be limited to works which, taken as a whole, appeal to the prurient interest in sex, which portray sexual conduct in a patently offensive way, and which, taken as a whole, do not have serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value." (93 S.Ct. 2614, 37 L.Ed.2d 430.)

(c) Content of a valid statute. Permissible regulations could cover: "(a) Patently offensive representations or descriptions of ultimate sexual acts, normal or perverted, actual or simulated. (b) Patently offensive representation or descriptions of masturbation, excretory functions, and lewd exhibition of the genitals." (93 S.Ct. 2615, 37 L.Ed.2d 431.) "At a minimum, prurient, patently offensive depiction or description of sexual conduct must have serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value to merit First Amendment protection." (93 S.Ct. 2616, 37 L.Ed.2d 431.)

(d) National standards rejected. There are no fixed, uniform national standards to determine what appeals to the "prurient interest" or is "patently offensive." "These are essentially questions of fact, and our nation is simply too big and too diverse for this Court to reasonably expect that such standards could be articulated for all 50 States in a single formulation, even assuming the prerequisite consensus exists." (93 S.Ct. 2618, 37 L.Ed.2d 434.) Thus there was no error in the state's failure to offer evidence of national standards or the trial judge's instruction that the jury consider state community standards. "It is neither realistic nor constitutionally sound to read the First Amendment as requiring that the people of Maine or Mississippi accept public depiction of conduct found tolerable in Las Vegas, or New York City." (93 S.Ct. 2619, 37 L.Ed.2d 435.)

(e) No repression or regimentation will result. The alarm of the four dissenters is unjustified. "These doleful anticipations assume that courts cannot distinguish commerce in ideas, protected by the First Amendment, from commercial exploitation of obscene material. ... One can concede that the 'sexual revolution' of recent years may have had useful byproducts in striking layers of prudery from a subject long irrationally kept from needed ventilation. But it does not follow that no regulation of patently offensive 'hard core' materials is needed or permissible; civilized people do not allow unregulated access to heroin because it is a derivative of medicinal morphine." (93 S.Ct. 2621, 37 L.Ed.2d 438.) (See 87 Harv. L. Rev. 160; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 1838 [Community Standards, Class Actions, and Obscenity under Miller v. California]; 26 Golden Gate L. [§ 438] Subsequent Decisions.

In Jenkins v. Georgia (1974) 418 U.S. 153, 94 S.Ct. 2750, 2753, 41 L.Ed.2d 642, 648, the Court declared that under Miller v. California (1973) 413 U.S. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 37 L.Ed.2d 419, supra, §437, juries may be instructed to apply the standards of "a hypothetical statewide community," but this approval "did not mandate their use." Miller simply makes clear that juries need not be instructed to apply "national standards," and that they may "rely on the understanding of the community from which they came as to contemporary community standards."

"The result of the Miller cases, therefore, as a matter of constitutional law and federal statutory construction, is to permit a juror sitting in obscenity cases to draw on knowledge of the community or vicinage from which he comes in deciding what conclusion 'the average person, applying contemporary community standards' would reach in a given case." (Hamling v. United States (1974) 418 U.S. 87, 94 S.Ct. 2887, 2901, 41 L.Ed.2d 590, 613.)

As held in Hamling, contemporary community standards must be applied by juries in accordance with their own understanding; a state law regulating distribution of obscene materials cannot define these standards. (Smith v. United States (1977) 431 U.S. 291, 97 S.Ct. 1756, 1764, 52 L.Ed.2d 324, 337.) (See 66 Cal. L. Rev. 1277 [community standards]; 5 Hastings Const. L. Q. 216 [Smith]; 55 So. Cal. L. Rev. 693 [Community Standards and Federal Obscenity Prosecutions].)

The California statutes meet the Miller test. (People v. Enskat (1973) 33 C.A.3d 900, 109 C.R. 433, infra, §450; Bloom v. Municipal Court (1976) 16 C.3d 71, 79, 81, 127 C.R. 317, 545 P.2d 229, infra, §450; see Ward v. Illinois (1977) 431 U.S. 767, 97 S.Ct. 2085, 52 L.Ed.2d 738 [Illinois statute upheld under Miller test, and conviction for selling sadomasochistic materials affirmed]; Pinkus v. United States (1978) 436 U.S. 293, 98 S.Ct. 1808, 56 L.Ed.2d 293 [prosecution for mailing obscene materials; children are not to be included in "community" by whose standards obscenity is to be judged]; 5 Hastings Const. L. Q. 262 [Ward].)

In Pope v. Illinois (1987) 481 U.S. 497, 107 S.Ct. 1918, 95 L.Ed.2d 439, the issue involved the third prong of the Miller test: "whether the work, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value." The trial judge rejected defendants' contention that the value question must be determined solely on an objective basis, and instructed the jury to judge how the material would be viewed by "ordinary adults in the whole State of Illinois." Held, the instruction was unconstitutional. "Just as the ideas a work represents need not obtain majority approval to merit protection, neither, insofar as the First Amendment is concerned, does the value of the work vary from community to community, based on the degree of local acceptance it has won. The proper inquiry is not whether an ordinary member of any given community would find serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value in allegedly obscene material, but whether a reasonable person would find such value in the material, taken as a whole." (107 S.Ct. 1921, 95 L.Ed.2d 445.) (See 59 A.L.R.5th 749 [Admissibility of Evidence of Public-Opinion Polls or Surveys in Obscenity Prosecutions on Issue Whether Materials in Question Are Obscene].)

In Ginsberg v. New York (1968) 390 U.S. 629, 88 S.Ct. 1274, 20 L.Ed.2d 195, a statute prohibited the sale of obscene matter to minors under 17. Defendant was convicted of selling "girlie" magazines to a 16-year-old boy. Under controlling decisions, the magazines were not obscene for adults, and defendant contended that it was an unconstitutional deprivation of the protected liberty of the minor to make this classification. Held, giving these minors a more restricted right to judge what sex material they may read or see does not invade their constitutional rights.

(a) Two state interests are involved: (1) The parental authority to direct the rearing of children, with support of laws, and (2) the interest of the state in the well-being of youth. (88 S.Ct. 1280, 20 L.Ed.2d 203.)

(b) The "clear and present danger" test does not apply, for obscenity is not a protected expression. To sustain state power requires only the conclusion that it "was not irrational" for the Legislature to find that exposure of the material condemned is harmful to minors. (88 S.Ct. 1281, 20 L.Ed.2d 205.) (See *Berry v. C. Limitations on the Rights.

6. Obscenity.

d. Protection of Minors.

2. Internet Transmissions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 440

[§ 440] Internet Transmissions.

In Reno v. American Civil Liberties Union (1997) 521 U.S. 844, 117 S.Ct. 2329, 138 L.Ed.2d 874, numerous corporations and public interest groups filed two suits against the Attorney General of the United States and the Department of Justice challenging the constitutionality of two provisions of the Communications Decency Act of 1996 (CDA), which make it unlawful to transmit certain types of speech to minors on the Internet. The first provision, 47 U.S.C., §223(a), prohibits the knowing transmission of obscene or indecent messages to a recipient under the age of 18; the second, 47 U.S.C., §223(d), prohibits the knowing transmission of patently offensive messages to a specific person under 18 or display of patently offensive messages in a manner available to a person under 18. The two cases were consolidated before a three-judge federal district court, which entered a preliminary injunction against enforcement of 47 U.S.C., §223(a), insofar as it relates to "indecent" communications, and against enforcement of all the provisions of 47 U.S.C., §223(d). The court, however, expressly preserved the Government's right to prosecute the obscenity or child pornography activities prohibited by 47 U.S.C., §223(a). The Government appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court under the Act's special review provisions. Held, affirmed.

(a) The constitutionality of CDA is not supported by prior decisions.

(1) Ginsberg v. New York (1968) 390 U.S. 629, 88 S.Ct. 1274, 20 L.Ed.2d 195, supra, §439, upheld a New York statute prohibiting the sale of material to minors under the age of 17 if obscene as to them, even if not obscene to adults. Although there a distinction could be made between adults and minors as to their constitutional freedom to see sexual material, in four important respects the New York statute was narrower than the CDA: (a) the prohibition against sales to minors did not bar parents from purchasing relevant material for their children, whereas, under the CDA, parental consent is of no consequence; (b) unlike the CDA, the statute applied only to commercial transactions; (c) the statute required that the prohibited material be "utterly without redeeming social importance for minors," whereas the CDA fails to define "indecent" and omits any requirement that "patently offensive" material lack serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value; and (d) the statute applied only to those under the age of 17 rather than 18. (117 S.Ct. 2341, 138 L.Ed.2d 893.)

(2) In Federal Communications Com. v. Pacifica Foundation (1978) 438 U.S. 726, 98 S.Ct. 3026, 57 L.Ed.2d 1073,

the Court upheld an order of the Federal Communications Commission providing that the radio broadcast of recorded material deemed indecent, during a time when children were in the audience, could be subject to administrative sanctions. (117 S.Ct. 2341, 138 L.Ed.2d 893.) However, there are significant differences between that order and the CDA: (a) the order targeted a specific broadcast, which was not in character with traditional program content, in order to designate when--not whether--it could be played on the radio, whereas the CDA's broad categorical prohibitions are not limited to particular times; (b) unlike the CDA, the order was not punitive; and (c) the order applied to a medium that had, as a matter of history, "received the most limited First Amendment protection," while the Internet has no comparable history. (117 S.Ct. 2342, 138 L.Ed.2d 894.)

(3) In Renton v. Playtime Theatres (1986) 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29, the Court upheld a zoning ordinance that kept adult movie theatres out of residential neighborhoods. However, the ordinance was not aimed at the content of the films shown but rather at the "secondary effects" that the theatres fostered. By contrast, the CDA is a content-based blanket restriction on speech that cannot be properly analyzed as a form of time, place, and manner regulation. (117 S.Ct. 2342, 138 L.Ed.2d 895.)

(b) The factors justifying regulation of broadcast media are not relevant to the Internet. The history of extensive government regulation of the broadcast media and the invasive nature of radio and television have justified special regulation of those media. However, the Internet has not been subject to the type of government supervision and regulation that has attended the broadcast industry, and Internet communications do not invade an individual's home or appear on a computer screen unbidden. Users seldom encounter content on the Internet by accident. Further, whereas Congress first authorized regulation of the broadcast spectrum because it was deemed a scarce expressive commodity, the same cannot be said for the Internet. It provides a vast array of communications services and its content is "as diverse as human thought." (117 S.Ct. 2343, 138 L.Ed.2d 895.)

(c) The CDA is unconstitutionally vague.

(1) The two parts of the CDA use different linguistic forms. 47 U.S.C., §223(a) uses the word "indecent," while 47 U.S.C., §223(d) speaks of material that "in context, depicts or describes, in terms patently offensive as measured by contemporary community standards, sexual or excretory activities or organs." Because neither term is defined, the difference in language will provoke uncertainty among speakers as to how the two standards relate to each other and just what they mean. The CDA's vagueness is of special concern because it is a content-based regulation, the vagueness of which has an obvious chilling effect on free speech, and it is a criminal statute. (117 S.Ct. 2344, 138 L.Ed.2d 897.)

(2) The CDA does not meet the three-pronged obscenity test established by Miller v. California (1973) 413 U.S. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 37 L.Ed.2d 419, supra, §437: (a) whether the average person, applying contemporary community standards, would find that the work, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient interest; (b) whether the work depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct specifically defined by the applicable state law; and (c) whether the work, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value. (117 S.Ct. 2345, 138 L.Ed.2d 898.)

(3) Even if the CDA's "patently offensive" and "indecent" standards are considered analogous to the second Miller prong, the CDA does not contain the critical requirement that the proscribed material be "specifically defined by the applicable state law." Further, the Miller definition is limited to "sexual conduct," whereas the CDA includes "excretory activities" and "organs" of both a sexual and excretory nature. Finally, the CDA addresses only one of the three prongs of the Miller test. Just because a definition including three limitations is not vague, it does not follow that one of those limitations, standing by itself, is not vague. The two additional prongs critically limit the uncertain sweep of the obscenity definition. (117 S.Ct. 2345, 138 L.Ed.2d 898.) "In contrast to Miller and our previous cases, the CDA thus presents a greater threat of censoring speech that, in fact, falls outside the statute's scope." (117 S.Ct. 2345, 138 L.Ed.2d 899.)

(1) To deny minors access to potentially harmful speech, the CDA effectively suppresses a large amount of speech that adults have a constitutional right to receive and communicate to one another. The governmental interest in protecting children from harmful materials does not justify unnecessarily broad suppression of speech addressed to adults. The Government's premise that prohibiting a transmission, whenever it is known that one of its recipients is a minor, would not interfere with adult-to-adult communications is untenable. (117 S.Ct. 2346, 138 L.Ed.2d 899.)

(2) The district court found that, at the time of trial, existing technology did not include an effective method for a sender to prevent minors from obtaining access to its Internet communications without also denying access to adults. By contrast, the court found that currently available user-based software suggests that technology to allow parents to prevent children from accessing undesirable material may soon be widely available. (117 S.Ct. 2346, 138 L.Ed.2d 900.)

(3) The breadth of the CDA's coverage is wholly unprecedented. Unlike the regulations upheld in other cases, the CDA's scope is not limited to commercial speech or commercial entities. Its open-ended prohibitions apply to all nonprofit entities and individuals posting indecent messages or displaying them on their own computers in the presence of minors. The strength of the Government's interest in protecting minors is not equally strong throughout the coverage of the broad statute. The government has not met its especially heavy burden to explain why a less restrictive provision would not be as effective as the CDA. (117 S.Ct. 2347, 138 L.Ed.2d 901.)

(4) The constitutionality of the CDA, which effectively censors discourse on many of the Internet's modalities, such as chat groups, newsgroups, and mail exploders, is not saved by the fact that persons might still engage in the restricted speech on the World Wide Web. The feasibility of using the Web for that purpose is immaterial, because the CDA regulates speech on the basis of its content and, thus, a "time, place, and manner" analysis is inapplicable. The Government's position to the contrary "is equivalent to arguing that a statute could ban leaflets on certain subjects as long as individuals are free to publish books." (117 S.Ct. 2347, 138 L.Ed.2d 902.)

(5) The "knowledge" requirement in both of the challenged statutory provisions, even when coupled with the "specific child" element in 47 U.S.C., §223(d), does not save the CDA from overbreadth. Persons cannot avoid violating the law by merely refraining from disseminating prohibited materials to persons they know to be under 18, because most Internet services—including chat groups, newsgroups, and mail exploders, and the Web—are open to all comers. (117 S.Ct. 2347, 138 L.Ed.2d 903.)

(e) The CDA's defenses are inadequate. It is a defense to prosecution under the CDA if a person has "taken good faith, reasonable, effective, and appropriate actions" to restrict or prevent minors' access to prohibited materials. (47 U.S.C., §223(e)(5)(A).) The Government suggests that this defense can be met by "tagging" materials to indicate their content and allow them to be blocked with appropriate software. It is also a defense if a person requires the use of a verified credit card, debit account, or adult identification to restrict access. (47 U.S.C., §223(e)(5)(B).) However, both defenses are either technologically or economically infeasible. (117 S.Ct. 2349, 138 L.Ed.2d 903.)

(f) Restriction of "obscene" material is constitutional. To the extent that 47 U.S.C., §223(a) applies to obscene, as opposed to indecent, messages, it is constitutional, since obscene speech enjoys no First Amendment protection. Thus, the term "or indecent" will be severed from that provision, leaving the rest standing. However, no more of the CDA can be similarly saved, nor is the statute subject to being narrowly construed so as to permit its application to other persons or circumstances that might be constitutionally permissible. (117 S.Ct. 2350, 138 L.Ed.2d 904.)

Two justices concurred in part and dissented in part. (117 S.Ct. 2351, 138 L.Ed.2d 906.) (See Hatch v. Superior Court (2000) 80 C.A.4th 170, 200, 202, 94 C.R.2d 453 [distinguishing Reno; P.C. 288.2(b), prohibiting sending defined harmful matters to minors for purposes of seducing them, is directed more at conduct than communication and is not overbroad]; People v. Hsu (2000) 82 C.A.4th 976, 988, 994, 99 C.R.2d 184 [distinguishing Reno and disagreeing with Hatch court's reasoning that P.C. 288.2(b) is content neutral because it was designed to prevent specific conduct; statute regulates speech and is subject to strict scrutiny, but is not overly broad or vague]; 26 Golden Gate L. Rev. 1 [Conflicting Images of Children in First Amendment Jurisprudence]; 98 A.L.R.5th 167 [validity of state statutes and regulations regulating internet communications under First Amendment].)

The Child Online Protection Act (COPA), 47 U.S.C., §231, added in 1998, prohibits the use of the World Wide Web to "knowingly and with knowledge of the character of the material, in interstate or foreign commerce," make any communication for commercial purposes that is available to minors and that includes any material that is harmful to them. The Act relies on community standards to identify "material that is harmful to minors." This reliance "does not by itself render the statute substantially overbroad for purposes of the First Amendment." (Ashcroft v. American Civil Liberties Union (2002) 535 U.S. 564, 122 S.Ct. 1700, 1713, 152 L.Ed.2d 771, 788 [declining to express views on whether Act is overly broad for other reasons, or whether it is unconstitutionally vague]; see 40 Santa Clara L. Rev. 221 [COPA: Congress's latest attempt to regulate speech on Internet].) However, on appeal after remand, the Court held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a preliminary injunction against the enforcement of COPA because the government failed to show that the less restrictive alternatives proposed by plaintiffs, like blocking and filtering software, should be disregarded. (Ashcroft v. American Civil Liberties Union (2004) 542 U.S. 656, 124 S.Ct. 2783, 2791, 159 L.Ed.2d 690, 701.) (See Am.Jur.2d, New Topic Service, Computers and the Internet §§6, 7, 86.)

In United States v. American Library Assn. (2003) 539 U.S. 194, 123 S.Ct. 2297, 156 L.Ed.2d 221, the Court upheld the validity of the Children's Internet Protection Act (CIPA) (20 U.S.C., §9154(f), 47 U.S.C., §254(h)), which bans the payment of federal funds to public libraries to provide Internet access unless they install pornography blocking software.

(a) "Internet access in public libraries is neither a 'traditional' nor a 'designated' public forum." (123 S.Ct. 2304, 156 L.Ed.2d 232.) A library does not provide Internet access "to create a public forum for Web publishers to express themselves, any more than it collects books in order to provide a public forum for the authors of books to speak." It provides Internet access "to facilitate research, learning, and recreational pursuits by furnishing materials of requisite and appropriate quality." (123 S.Ct. 2305, 156 L.Ed.2d 233.)

(b) Public libraries must identify suitable and worthwhile material in making collection decisions. They are no less entitled to play that role when collecting material from the Internet. (123 S.Ct. 2306, 156 L.Ed.2d 234.)

(c) Although filtering software has a tendency to "overblock," when encountering a blocked site, a library patron may ask to have the site unblocked. Further, libraries can permanently unblock an erroneously blocked site. (123 S.Ct. 2306, 156 L.Ed.2d 234.)

(d) "CIPA does not 'penalize' libraries that choose not to install such software, or deny them the right to provide their patrons with unfiltered Internet access. Rather, CIPA simply reflects Congress' decision to not subsidize their doing so." (123 S.Ct. 2308, 156 L.Ed.2d 236.)

Two justices concurred in separate opinions (123 S.Ct. 2309, 2310, 156 L.Ed.2d 238), and three justices dissented in two opinions (123 S.Ct. 2312, 2318, 156 L.Ed.2d 242, 248). (See Am.Jur.2d, New Topic Service, Computers and the Internet §3.)

3. Child Pornography.

[§ 441] Child Pornography.

In New York v. Ferber (1982) 458 U.S. 747, 102 S.Ct. 3348, 73 L.Ed.2d 1113, the Court held that a state can prohibit the dissemination of child pornography--material showing children engaged in sexual conduct--regardless of whether the material is obscene.

(a) "Like obscenity statutes, laws directed at the dissemination of child pornography run the risk of suppressing protected expression by allowing the hand of the censor to become unduly heavy." But the states "are entitled to greater leeway" in the regulation of pornographic depictions of children (102 S.Ct. 3354, 73 L.Ed.2d 1122), for the following reasons:

(1) The state's interest in safeguarding the physical and psychological well-being of a minor is compelling. The legislative judgment of nearly all the states and the federal Government, that the use of children as subjects of pornographic materials is harmful to the child, must be accepted. (102 S.Ct. 3355, 73 L.Ed.2d 1122.)

(2) The distribution of photographs and films depicting sexual activity by juveniles is intrinsically related to the sexual abuse of children. (102 S.Ct. 3355, 73 L.Ed.2d 1124.) And the test for obscenity in Miller v. California (1973) 413 U.S. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 37 L.Ed.2d 419, supra, §437--whether the work taken as a whole appeals to the prurient interest of the average person--bears no connection to the issue of whether a child has been harmed in the production of the work. It is likewise irrelevant that the work contains serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value. (102 S.Ct. 3356, 73 L.Ed.2d 1125.)

(3) Advertising and selling of child pornography provides an economic motive for the illegal production of these materials. (102 S.Ct. 3357, 73 L.Ed.2d 1125.)

(4) The value of permitting live performances and photographic reproduction of children engaged in lewd sexual conduct is minimal. (102 S.Ct. 3357, 73 L.Ed.2d 1126.)

(5) "Recognizing and classifying child pornography as a category of material outside the protection of the First Amendment is not incompatible with our earlier decisions. ... When a definable class of material ... bears so heavily and pervasively on the welfare of children engaged in its production, we think the balance of competing interests is clearly struck and that it is permissible to consider these materials as without the protection of the First Amendment." (102 S.Ct. 3358, 73 L.Ed.2d 1126.)

(b) "The Miller formulation is adjusted in the following respects: A trier of fact need not find that the material appeals to the prurient interest of the average person; it is not required that sexual conduct portrayed be done so in a patently offensive manner; and the material at issue need not be considered as a whole. We note that the distribution of descriptions or other depictions of sexual conduct, not otherwise obscene, which do not involve live performance or photographic or other visual reproduction of live performances, retains First Amendment protection. As with obscenity laws, criminal responsibility may not be imposed without some element of scienter on the part of the defendant." (102 S.Ct. 3358, 73 L.Ed.2d 1127.)

Four justices, in three concurring opinions, agreed with the result but not with all of the reasoning. (102 S.Ct. 3364, 3365, 73 L.Ed.2d 1134, 1135, 1136.) (See 96 Harv. L. Rev. 141; 23 Santa Clara L. Rev. 675; 5 Pepperdine L. Rev. 809 [Exploitation of Children in Pornography and Prostitution].)

New York v. Ferber was followed in Osborne v. Ohio (1990) 495 U.S. 103, 110 S.Ct. 1691, 109 L.Ed.2d 98. The Court upheld a statute prohibiting possession of nude photographs of minors, with exceptions for artistic or other proper uses. The Court distinguished Stanley v. Georgia (1969) 394 U.S. 557, 89 S.Ct. 1243, 22 L.Ed.2d 542, infra, §§445, 446: "The difference here is obvious: the State does not rely on a paternalistic interest in regulating Osborne's mind." The statute was enacted "to protect the victims of child pornography; it hopes to destroy a market for the exploitative use of children." (110 S.Ct. 1696, 109 L.Ed.2d 109.) (See 104 Harv. L. Rev. 237 [Osborne]; on P.C. 311.1, 311.2, prohibiting distribution of obscene matter depicting minors, see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §89 et seq.)

In Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition (2002) 535 U.S. 234, 122 S.Ct. 1389, 152 L.Ed.2d 403, the Court considered whether the Child Pornography Prevention Act (CPPA), 18 U.S.C., §2251 et seq., abridges freedom of speech. The CPPA "extends the federal prohibition against child pornography to sexually explicit images that appear to depict minors but were produced without using real children." (122 S.Ct. 1396, 152 L.Ed.2d 414.) It covers both depictions of adults who look like children and computer-generated images. Held, the statute is overbroad and unconstitutional.

(a) Because the CPPA's penalties are severe, "few legitimate movie producers or book publishers, or few other speakers in any capacity, would risk distributing images in or near the uncertain reach of this law." (122 S.Ct. 1398, 152 L.Ed.2d 417.) The statute extends to images that appear to depict children engaging in sexual activity without regard to the obscenity test set forth in Miller. (122 S.Ct. 1399, 152 L.Ed.2d 418.) Any depiction of sexually explicit activity is proscribed, no matter how it is presented. The depiction need not appeal to prurient interest. And the statute prohibits speech "despite its serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value." (122 S.Ct. 1400, 152 L.Ed. 2d 418.) Miller requires that redeeming value be considered by judging a work as a whole, but the CPPA condemns a single graphic depiction. (122 S.Ct. 1400, 1401, 152 L.Ed.2d 420.)

(b) Ferber "upheld a prohibition on the distribution and sale of child pornography, as well as its production, because these acts were 'intrinsically related' to the sexual abuse of children." (122 S.Ct. 1401, 152 L.Ed.2d 420.) Osborne held that protecting the victims of child pornography "justified a ban on the possession of pornography produced by using children." (122 S.Ct. 1401, 152 L.Ed.2d 421.) But the CPPA prohibits speech that "records no crime and creates no victims." (122 S.Ct. 1402, 152 L.Ed.2d 421.) The causal link between the prohibited depictions and actual harm to minors is contingent and indirect, depending on "some unqualified potential for subsequent criminal acts" by pedophiles, rather than following from the speech. (122 S.Ct. 1402, 152 L.Ed.2d 421.)

(c) The fact that computer imaging might make it very difficult to prosecute child pornographers because of the difficulty in distinguishing real from "fake" children does not permit the Government to prohibit both kinds of images. "The overbreadth doctrine prohibits the Government from banning unprotected speech if a substantial amount of protected speech is prohibited or chilled in the process." (122 S.Ct.1404, 152 L.Ed.2d 424.)

(d) The CPPA provision banning the advertising, promotion, presentation, or distribution of sexually explicit material in a manner that conveys the impression that it includes a visual depiction of minors engaging in prohibited conduct, is also overly broad and unconstitutional. A violation of this provision "turns on how the speech is presented, not on what is depicted." (122 S.Ct. 1405, 152 L.Ed.2d 425.)

Three justices concurred and dissented in part (22 S.Ct. 1407, 152 L.Ed.2d 427), and one justice wrote a separate dissent, with another justice joining in part, stating that the CPPA could be saved by a limiting instruction (22 S.Ct. 1411, 152 L.Ed.2d 432). (See 116 Harv. L. Rev. 262 [Free Speech Coalition]; 40 Cal. Western L. Rev. 231 [child-modeling websites as quasi-child pornography]; 31 Pepperdine L. Rev. 825 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In United States v. Williams (2008) 553 U.S. ___, 128 S.Ct. 1830, 170 L.Ed.2d 650, the Court considered whether the new pandering and solicitation provision of the Prosecutorial Remedies and Other Tools to end the Exploitation of Children Today Act, 18 U.S.C., §2552A(a)(3), was overbroad under the First Amendment or impermissibly vague under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. Defendant was arrested for pandering under the statute based on messages posted in a public Internet chat room. He pleaded guilty, reserving the right to challenge the constitutionality of the statute. The District Court rejected the challenge, but the Court of Appeals reversed the conviction, holding that the pandering statute was overbroad and impermissibly vague. Held, reversed.

(a) Statutory Provision. 18 U.S.C., §2552A(a)(3) makes it a crime to knowingly advertise, promote, distribute, or solicit through the mail or in interstate or foreign commerce, including by computer, "material or purported material in a manner that reflects the belief, or that is intended to cause another to believe, that the material or purported material is, or contains ... an obscene visual depiction of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct," or "a visual depiction of an actual minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct." (128 S.Ct. 1836, 1837, 170 L.Ed.2d 660.)

(b) Statutory Interpretation. The statute prohibits offers to provide and requests to obtain child pornography; it does not require the actual existence of child pornography. "Rather than targeting the underlying material, this statute bans the collateral speech that introduces such material into the child-pornography distribution network. Thus, an Internet user who solicits child pornography from an undercover agent violates the statute even if the officer possesses no child pornography. Likewise, a person who advertises virtual child pornography as depicting actual children also falls within the reach of the statute." (128 S.Ct. 1838, 170 L.Ed.2d 662.)

(c) Consistency With Precedent. The definition in the statute of the material or purported material that may not be pandered or solicited precisely tracks that held constitutionally proscribable in New York v. Ferber (1982) 458 U.S. 747, 102 S.Ct. 3348, 73 L.Ed.2d 1113, text, p. 734, and Miller v. California (1973) 413 U.S. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 37 L.Ed.2d 419, text, p. 735: "obscene material depicting (actual or virtual) children engaged in sexually explicit conduct, and any other material depicting actual children engaged in sexually explicit conduct." (128 S.Ct. 1839, 170 L.Ed.2d 663.)

(d) No Strict Scrutiny. The Court of Appeals erred in applying strict scrutiny in this case because offers to engage in illegal transactions are categorically excluded from the protections of the First Amendment. This "is based not on the less privileged First Amendment status of commercial speech, ... but on the principle that offers to give or receive what is unlawful to possess have no social value and thus, like obscenity, enjoy no First Amendment protection." (128 S.Ct. 1841, 170 L.Ed.2d 665.) Further, there is a distinction between proposing to engage in illegal activity and the abstract advocacy of illegality. The statute does not prohibit the advocacy of child pornography. (128 S.Ct. 1842, 170 L.Ed.2d 666.)

(e) Mistaken Belief in Nature of Material. In performing its strict scrutiny review, the Court of Appeals particularly objected to the fact that the "reflects the belief" prong of the statute could ensnare someone for mistakenly believing that the material offered or requested is child pornography. (128 S.Ct. 1842, 170 L.Ed.2d 667.) But offers to engage in illegal activity are not protected by the First Amendment when the offeror is mistaken about the factual predicate of the offer. For example, the impossibility of completing a crime because the facts were not as the defendant believed is not a defense to conspiracy or attempted crimes. Further, besides a defendant's belief that a picture contains proscribed material, the material in fact must meet the statutory definition. (128 S.Ct. 1843, 170 L.Ed.2d 667.)

(f) Virtual and Simulated Child Pornography. An offer to provide or a request to receive virtual child pornography is not prohibited by the statute. "A crime is committed only when the speaker believes or intends the listener to believe that the subject of the proposed transaction depicts real children." Simulated child pornography is still available as long as it is offered and sought as such. (128 S.Ct. 1844, 170 L.Ed.2d 669.)

(g) Statute Is Not Impermissibly Vague. A statute is rendered vague not by the possibility that it will sometimes be difficult to determine whether the incriminating fact it establishes has been proved, but by the indeterminacy of precisely what that fact is. For instance, statutes have been struck down where criminal culpability is based on "annoying" or "indecent" conduct, which calls for "wholly subjective judgments without statutory definitions, narrowing context, or settled legal meanings." (128 S.Ct. 1846, 170 L.Ed.2d 670.) That is not the case here. This statute requires defendant to hold, and to "make a statement that reflects, the belief that the material is child pornography; or that he communicate in a manner intended to cause another so to believe. Those are clear questions of fact." (128 S.Ct. 1846, 170 L.Ed.2d 671.)

Two justices joined in a concurring opinion (128 S.Ct. 1846, 170 L.Ed.2d 671), and two justices joined in a dissent (128 S.Ct. 1847, 170 L.Ed.2d 673).

[§ 442] In General.

Many First Amendment challenges to motion picture censorship have involved claims that state and local regulations requiring presubmission to permit or censorship boards constitute unconstitutional prior restraints. (See supra, §371.) To withstand a constitutional challenge, these laws must provide adequate procedural safeguards, and the burden of proving that the film is objectionable must be on the censor. (See Freedman v. Maryland (1965) 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649, supra, §371.)

In Erznoznik v. Jacksonville (1975) 422 U.S. 205, 95 S.Ct. 2268, 45 L.Ed.2d 125, an ordinance of the city of Jacksonville, Florida, made it a misdemeanor to exhibit films in a drive-in movie theater with a screen visible from a public street or place if the film exhibited male or female bare buttocks, breasts, or pubic areas. Held, it was unconstitutional. (a) The limited privacy interest of persons on the public streets could not justify this censorship of otherwise protected speech on the basis of content. (95 S.Ct. 2274, 45 L.Ed.2d 132.) (b) The power to protect children could not support this overbroad proscription, which might prohibit newsreel shots of an art exhibit, or other legitimate displays of nudity. (95 S.Ct. 2275, 45 L.Ed.2d 133.) (c) It was not a valid traffic regulation; it was not intended as such, and there is no basis for distinguishing movies containing nudity from others in a regulation designed to protect traffic. (95 S.Ct. 2275, 2276, 45 L.Ed.2d 134.) (See 89 Harv. L. Rev. 123; 10 U.S.F. L. Rev. 232 [restricting public display of offensive materials].)

2. Zoning of Adult Theaters.

[§ 443] Zoning of Adult Theaters.

(1) In General. In Young v. American Mini Theatres (1976) 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310, the city of Detroit adopted ordinances regulating "adult" theaters, i.e., those presenting "material distinguished or characterized by an emphasis on matter depicting, describing or relating to 'Specified Sexual Activities' or 'Specified Anatomical Areas.'" Under the ordinances, an adult theater cannot be located within 1,000 feet of two other regulated uses or within 500 feet of a residential area. Held, the ordinances were valid.

(a) The city's interest in planning and regulating commercial property uses supports the restrictions and disposes of the First Amendment challenge; i.e., the exhibitors were not denied access to the market and the viewing public was not denied the right to see the product. (96 S.Ct. 2448, 49 L.Ed.2d 321.)

(b) The Equal Protection challenge is equally unavailing, despite the broad language of Police Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley (1972) 408 U.S. 92, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 33 L.Ed.2d 212, supra, §396. (96 S.Ct. 2450, 49 L.Ed.2d 323.) "Even though the First Amendment protects communication in this area from total suppression, we hold that the State may legitimately use the content of these materials as the basis for placing them in a different classification from other motion pictures." (96 S.Ct. 2452, 49 L.Ed.2d 326.) (See 90 Harv. L. Rev. 196; 4 Hastings Const. L. Q. 321.)

Young has been discussed and applied in several subsequent cases. (See Schad v. Borough of Mount Ephraim (1981) 452 U.S. 61, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 [invalid total prohibition]; Castner v. Oakland (1982) 129 C.A.3d 94, 97, 180 C.R. 682 [applying Young to uphold ordinance banning adult entertainment activity within 1,000 feet of residential zone, against challenge by owner of adult bookstore with motion picture machines]; Strand Property Corp. v. Municipal Court (1983) 148 C.A.3d 882, 886, 200 C.R. 47 [following Young]; Whittier v. Walnut Properties (1983) 149 C.A.3d 633, 641, 197 C.R. 127 [same]; Vallejo v. Adult Books (1985) 167 C.A.3d 1169, 1178, 1180, 213 C.R. 143 [upholding ordinance confining adult bookstores and theaters to three zoning districts, and prohibiting those establishments from locating within 500 feet of residential zone, park, playground, library, or school, or within 1,000 feet of another such establishment]; 28 Hastings L. J. 1293 [potential impact of Young]; 95 Harv. L. Rev. 231 [Schad]; 15 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 321 [same].)

Renton v. Playtime Theatres (1986) 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29, follows Young. (106 S.Ct. 928, 929, 89 L.Ed.2d 37.) The Court declared that "the Renton ordinance is completely consistent with our definition of 'content-neutral' speech regulations as those that 'are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech.'" (106 S.Ct. 929, 89 L.Ed.2d 38.) (See 79 Cal. L. Rev. 119 [reassessment of Renton]; 100 Harv. L. Rev. 190 [Renton]; 102 Harv. L. Rev. 1904 [same]; 22 U.S.F. L. Rev. 161 [Young and Renton]; 8 A.L.R.4th 130 [requirement of operating license for sex-oriented business]; 10 A.L.R.5th 538 [zoning sex-oriented business].)

In Los Angeles v. Alameda Books (2002) 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670, a four to four opinion in which one justice concurred only in the judgment, the plurality opinion applied Renton to reverse a summary judgment against defendant city. Plaintiffs challenged a zoning ordinance prohibiting more than one adult entertainment business in the same building. "Adult entertainment business" is defined as an adult arcade, bookstore, cabaret, motel, theater, massage parlor, or place for sexual encounters. Each of these enterprises constitutes "a separate adult entertainment business even if operated in conjunction with another adult entertainment business at the same establishment." (122 S.Ct. 1732, 152 L.Ed. 2d 678.) Defendant's use of a 1977 study showing a correlation between a concentration of adult businesses and increased crime in the surrounding neighborhoods was sufficient to satisfy the Renton requirement that "a municipality may rely on evidence that is 'reasonably believed to be relevant' for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest." (122 S.Ct. 1736, 152 L.Ed2d 683.)

(2) Regular and Substantial Course of Conduct Standard. In People v. Superior Court (Lucero) (1989) 49 C.3d 14, 259 C.R. 740, 774 P.2d 769, the court, dealing with an adult entertainment zoning ordinance, rejected both the single use standard and the requirement of a use of over 50%. "[W]e adopt a constitutional standard similar to that recently approved by the United States Supreme Court and several state courts: cities may zone the location of theaters that show, on a regular basis, films characterized by an emphasis on the 'specified sexual activities' or 'specified anatomical areas' identified in the ordinance, where such films constitute a substantial portion of the films shown or account for a substantial part of the revenues derived from the exhibition of films." (49 C.3d 19, citing Renton and Young.)

(3) Need for Alternative Avenues of Communication. In National City v. Wiener (1992) 3 C.4th 832, 12 C.R.2d 701, 838 P.2d 223, the issue was "whether a zoning ordinance that combines both distance regulations and an exception for location of adult businesses in certain shopping malls conforms with First Amendment principles" under Renton. (3 C.4th 835.) The trial court found that the ordinance was a reasonable time, place, and manner regulation designed to serve a substantial government interest, and that it provided reasonable alternative avenues of communication. (3 C.4th 838.) The Court of Appeal reversed, on the ground that the ordinance as applied failed to provide reasonable alternative avenues of communication. (3 C.4th 839.) The Supreme Court, on a review of the leading cases (Young, Renton, and Ward v. Rock Against Racism (1989) 491 U.S. 781, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661, infra, §464) reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeal (3 C.4th 839), and remanded with instructions to reinstate the trial court's judgment (3 C.4th 839, 849).

The court concluded that a substantial government interest was shown (3 C.4th 845), and that reasonable alternative avenues of communication were provided in the ordinance (3 C.4th 847). On the latter issue, the court answered an argument made by defendants as follows: "It is also inaccurate to characterize the ordinance as forcing respondents to build their own shopping mall at prohibitive cost. The city has demonstrated that there are three shopping centers, and a partially developed 4.5-acre area, where an adult business may seek to rent an existing location. Moreover, certain malls may be modified in conformance with the ordinance to accommodate adult business. It is respondents, not the city, who define construction of a new shopping center as their only alternative under the ordinance." (3 C.4th 849.) (See 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 299 [Wiener].)

(4) No Retroactive Application of Ordinance. Gammoh v. Anaheim (1999) 73 C.A.4th 186, 86 C.R.2d 194, held that "a city cannot use redevelopment as a rationale to retroactively exclude adult businesses from areas which are otherwise suitable for them. Otherwise, cities could engage in shellgames to make it virtually impossible for an adult business to operate." (73 C.A.4th 199.) Further, under Renton, no "secondary effects" would be caused by locating the business within 400 feet of an odd, practically undevelopable parcel of vacant land that had been zoned residential in an industrial zone. (73 C.A.4th 191, 197.) And a prohibition against locating an adult business within 100 feet of a freeway was unconstitutional because there were less intrusive means of controlling visual blight, e.g., by regulating signage. (73 C.A.4th 191, 199.)

Slaton* (1973) 413 U.S. 49, 93 S.Ct. 2628, 2633, 37 L.Ed.2d 446, 455, the Court said: "We categorically disapprove the theory ... , that obscene, pornographic films acquire constitutional immunity from state regulation simply because they are exhibited for consenting adults only." (93 S.Ct. 2635, 37 L.Ed.2d 456.) The case involved the exhibition in a Georgia "Adult Theatre" of two films depicting sexual conduct characterized by the Georgia Supreme Court as "hard core pornography." Held, the exhibition could be enjoined.

(a) The states may regulate the use of obscene material in local commerce and in all places of public accommodation. The legitimate state interests "include the interest of the public in the quality of life and the total community environment, the tone of commerce in the great city centers, and, possibly, the public safety itself." (93 S.Ct. 2635, 37 L.Ed.2d 457.) (93 S.Ct. 2638, 37 L.Ed.2d 460.)

[§ 445] Private Possession Protected.

In Stanley v. Georgia (1969) 394 U.S. 557, 89 S.Ct. 1243, 22 L.Ed.2d 542, officers entered defendant's home with a search warrant to look for evidence of bookmaking. In his bedroom, they found three reels of film which they viewed and thought obscene. Appellant was found guilty of possession of obscene matter under the Georgia statute. Held, reversed; mere knowing private possession cannot constitutionally be made a crime.

(a) Prior dicta explained. Many cases contain unqualified declarations that obscenity is not protected by the First Amendment. (See supra, §434.) But these all dealt with mailing or possession for sale or something more than mere private possession. This question has never been fully considered. (89 S.Ct. 1245, 22 L.Ed.2d 546.)

(b) The rights involved. The Constitution protects the right to receive information and ideas, and the right to be free from unwanted intrusions into privacy. These are the rights asserted here by defendant: to read or observe what he pleases, to satisfy his intellectual and emotional needs in the privacy of his own home, to be free from state inquiry into the contents of his library. The state's assertion of the right to protect his mind--to control the moral content of his thoughts--is inconsistent with the First Amendment. (89 S.Ct. 1248, 22 L.Ed.2d 549.)

(c) Other contentions. The Court briefly disposed of two contentions advanced by the state:

First, that exposure to obscenity may lead to deviant sexual behavior or sex crime. The proper remedy is education and punishment for violations of law. "Given the present state of knowledge, the State may no more prohibit mere possession of obscenity on the ground that it may lead to antisocial conduct than it may prohibit possession of chemistry books on the ground that they may lead to the manufacture of homemade spirits." (89 S.Ct. 1249, 22 L.Ed.2d 551.)

Second, that prohibition of possession is a necessary incident of statutory schemes prohibiting distribution. Even if difficulties in these schemes exist, they would not justify infringement of an individual's right to read or observe what he or she pleases; i.e., the right is so fundamental that the restriction cannot be justified by the need to ease administration of the criminal laws. (89 S.Ct. 1249, 22 L.Ed.2d 551.) (See 57 Cal. L. Rev. 1257; 83 Harv. L. Rev. 147; 7 San Diego L. Rev. 111; 10 Santa Clara Lawyer 288; 11 Santa Clara Lawyer 1 [discussing possible extension of holding to private distribution]; on limitation of case to its facts, see infra, §446.)

[§ 446] Private Distribution Not Protected.

Stanley v. Georgia (1969) 394 U.S. 557, 89 S.Ct. 1243, 22 L.Ed.2d 542, supra, §445, has been limited to its precise facts: private possession and the use of obscene matter in the home. Mailing, importation, and transportation of obscene matter, whether for commercial or private use, may be prohibited.

(1) Mailing Obscene Matter. In United States v. Reidel (1971) 402 U.S. 351, 91 S.Ct. 1410, 28 L.Ed.2d 813, defendant mailed an obscene booklet ("The True Facts About Imported Pornography") to a postal inspector who had ordered it. Held, the federal statute prohibiting the mailing (18 U.S.C., §1461) was constitutional. Stanley held that a person may read or observe what he or she pleases in the privacy of his or her home; it did not "recognize a constitutional right ... to distribute or sell obscene materials." (91 S.Ct. 1412, 28 L.Ed.2d 817.) (See 85 Harv. L. Rev. 229; 6 U.S.F. L. Rev. 399.)

(2) Importation for Commercial Use. In United States v. Thirty-Seven Photographs (1971) 402 U.S. 363, 91 S.Ct. 1400, 28 L.Ed.2d 822, L, returning from Europe, brought 37 obscene photographs with him for incorporation into a book to be published. The material was seized by customs officials under the authority of 19 U.S.C., §1305(a). Distinguishing Stanley, and following Reidel, the court declared that "a port of entry is not a traveler's home," and that the right of the private possessor "does not extend to one who is seeking ... to distribute obscene materials to the public, nor does it extend to one seeking to import obscene materials from abroad, whether for private use or public distribution." (91 S.Ct. 1408, 28 L.Ed.2d 834.) (See 82 Harv. L. Rev. 229; 6 U.S.F. L. Rev. 399.)

(3) Importation for Private Use. In United States v. 12 200-Foot Reels of Super 8mm. Film (1973) 413 U.S. 123, 93 S.Ct. 2665, 37 L.Ed.2d 500, P brought in from Mexico obscene films, color slides, photographs, and other printed and graphic material. They were seized by customs officials. Held, this was not a violation of P's constitutional rights. Stanley does not permit importation of obscene materials simply because they are intended for private use. (93 S.Ct. 2669, 37 L.Ed.2d 505.)

(4) Interstate Transportation. In United States v. Orito (1973) 413 U.S. 139, 93 S.Ct. 2674, 37 L.Ed.2d 513, defendant was charged with violation of 18 U.S.C., §1462, by knowingly transporting a large quantity of obscene films in interstate commerce by common carrier. Held, the statute was constitutionally applied to his act. "[W]e cannot say that the Constitution forbids comprehensive regulation of interstate transportation of obscene material merely because such transport may be by private carriage, or because material is intended for the private use of the transporter. ... Congress may regulate on the basis of the natural tendency of material in the home being kept private and the contrary tendency once material leaves that area, regardless of a transporter's professed intent." (93 S.Ct. 2678, 37 L.Ed.2d 518.)

[§ 447] Commercial Telephone Communications.

In Sable Communications of Calif. v. Federal Communications Com. (1989) 492 U.S. 115, 109 S.Ct. 2829, 106 L.Ed.2d 93, the Court considered challenges to the provisions of the federal Communications Act (47 U.S.C., §223(b)) that imposed a ban on indecent as well as obscene state commercial telephone messages. Sable furnished sexually oriented prerecorded messages ("dial-a-porn") through special telephone lines for special fees. Held:

(a) The prohibition of obscene telephone messages is constitutional. Under United States v. Reidel (1971) 402 U.S. 351, 91 S.Ct. 1410, 28 L.Ed.2d 813, supra, §446, Congress can prohibit use of the mails for commercial distribution of obscene materials, and it has the same power to prohibit interstate transmission of obscene telephone recordings. (109 S.Ct. 2835, 106 L.Ed.2d 104.)

(b) The prohibition of matter indecent but not obscene is unconstitutional. Although the Government has a legitimate interest in protecting children from exposure to the indecent messages, the statute was not narrowly drawn to serve that purpose. "Because the statute's denial of adult access to telephone messages which are indecent but not obscene far exceeds that which is necessary to limit the access of minors to such messages, we hold that the ban does not survive constitutional scrutiny." (109 S.Ct. 2839, 106 L.Ed.2d 108.) (See 30 Cal. Western L. Rev. 297 [discussing constitutionality of bond requirement for dial-a-porn providers].)

h. Nudity: Public Indecency Statutes.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 448

[§ 448] Nudity: Public Indecency Statutes.

In Barnes v. Glen Theatre (1991) 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504, the Court upheld an Indiana statute prohibiting public nudity, rejecting a challenge by nightclub owners who wished to present "totally nude dancing" in an adult bookstore. The lead opinion of three justices applied the four-part test set forth in United States v. O'Brien (1968) 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672, infra, §473, as follows:

(a) "Indiana's public indecency statute is justified despite its incidental limitations on some expressive activity." (111 S.Ct. 2461, 115 L.Ed.2d 512.) The public indecency statutes were designed to protect morals and public order, and the traditional police power of the states is defined as the authority to provide for "the public health, safety, and morals." (111 S.Ct. 2462, 115 L.Ed.2d 513.)

(b) The club owners contended that prohibiting the performance of nude dancing is related to expression because the state seeks to prevent its erotic message. But "[t]he perceived evil that Indiana seeks to address is not erotic dancing, but public nudity. The appearance of people of all shapes, sizes and ages in the nude at a beach, for example, would convey little if any erotic message, yet the state still seeks to prevent it." (111 S.Ct. 2463, 115 L.Ed.2d 514.)

(c) The O'Brien test requires that the incidental restriction on First Amendment freedom be no greater than is essential to further the governmental interest. Here the statute is "narrowly tailored." "Indiana's requirement that the dancers wear at least pasties and a G-string is modest, and the bare minimum necessary to achieve the state's purpose." (111 S.Ct. 2463, 115 L.Ed.2d 515.) (See Tily B. v. Newport Beach (1998) 69 C.A.4th 1, 18, 25, 81 C.R.2d 6 [nude dancing ordinance directed at owners and managers of adult-oriented businesses satisfied Barnes; fact that city manager "may" revoke permit for specified reasons did not make ordinance unconstitutional by granting city manager too much discretion, because lax enforcement would result in more freedom of expression]; 105 *Harv. [§ 449] Statutory Development.

The Penal Code provisions on obscenity were modernized in 1961 by the repeal of former provisions and the enactment of P.C. 311 et seq. The new definition of obscenity followed the approach of Roth v. United States (1957) 354 U.S. 476, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498, supra, §436, and the requirement of knowledge in Smith v. California (1959) 361 U.S. 147, 80 S.Ct. 215, 4 L.Ed.2d 205, supra, §435, was incorporated. (See 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §83.)

In 1969, further revisions were made to incorporate the standards of scienter set forth in Ginzburg v. United States (1966) 383 U.S. 463, 86 S.Ct. 942, 16 L.Ed.2d 31, supra, §435, and Mishkin v. New York (1966) 383 U.S. 502, 86 S.Ct. 958, 16 L.Ed.2d 56, supra, §435. (See 24 Hastings L. J. 1303; 1 Pacific L. J. 364, 373.) And in 1970, P.C. 311 was amended to cover live conduct. (See 2 Pacific L. J. 365.) (See 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §114.)

P.C. 311 was amended in 1986 to eliminate from the definition of "obscene matter" the phrase "is utterly without redeeming social importance." The statute now defines "obscene matter" as "matter, taken as a whole, that to the average person, applying contemporary statewide standards, appeals to the prurient interest, that, taken as a whole, depicts or describes sexual conduct in a patently offensive way, and that, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value." (P.C. 311(a); on similar definition of "obscene live conduct," see P.C. 311(g); on similar Miller test, see supra, §437.)

For purposes of determining whether matter or live conduct "as a whole lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value in description or representation," the defendant's knowledge that the matter or live conduct "depicts persons under the age of 16 years engaged in sexual conduct" is a factor to be considered. (P.C. 311(a)(3), (g)(3).)

[§ 450] Validity of Statute.

In People v. Enskat (1973) 33 C.A.3d 900, 109 C.R. 433, an appeal from a conviction for exhibition of an allegedly obscene motion picture, it was argued that California's former statute was based on pre-Miller decisions (supra, §436) and that Miller (supra, §437) had invalidated it. The court, in a careful analysis of the statutory language in light of Miller and other decisions, rejected the contention. "[W]e hold (1) that section 311 as heretofore construed, defines obscene matter as required by Miller, except as to Miller's tolerance of an obscenity finding as to matter which is not utterly without redeeming social importance; (2) that while the work in question here meets the Miller test of lacking serious literary, artistic and other values, we cannot apply that yardstick to it, but instead must measure it against the concept of being 'utterly without redeeming social importance'; (3) that such measurement is still permissible; and (4) that so measured, the film which appellant was convicted of exhibiting is obscene." (33 C.A.3d 912.) (For the holding on expert testimony, see infra, §452.) (On 1986 amendment of P.C. 311 eliminating phrase "utterly without redeeming social importance," see supra, §449.)

Bloom v. Municipal Court (1976) 16 C.3d 71, 81, 127 C.R. 317, 545 P.2d 229, approved Enskat, and held that P.C. 311, as limited to patently offensive representations or descriptions of specific "hard core" sexual conduct, is not unconstitutionally vague. Two justices joined in a lengthy dissent, arguing that the statute is not only unconstitutionally vague but also an intrusion on the individual's right to receive information and ideas. (16 C.3d 86.) (See Splawn v. California (1977) 431 U.S. 595, 97 S.Ct. 1987, 1990, 52 L.Ed.2d 606, 613 [P.C. 311(a), authorizing jury consideration of circumstances of commercial exploitation of material, is valid]; *Gould v. 3. Books.

[§ 451] Books.

Zeitlin v. Arnebergh (1963) 59 C.2d 901, 31 C.R. 800, 373 P.2d 152, makes it clear that only "hard-core pornography" is prohibited by P.C. 311. Plaintiffs, a bookseller and a prospective purchaser of Henry Miller's "Tropic of Cancer," brought an action against the City Attorney of Los Angeles for a declaratory judgment that the book was not illegally "obscene." The complaint attached a copy of the book and some reviews. Held, judgment of dismissal reversed.

(a) The remedy was appropriate. (1) The bookseller faced threatened criminal action, and without declaratory relief would be forced to the alternatives of risking criminal prosecution or discontinuing the book, thus making the city attorney an indirect censor. (59 C.2d 906.) (2) The purchaser, unless able to find a bookseller to handle the book, would be deprived of his or her constitutional right to read. (59 C.2d 907.) (3) Diverse misdemeanor prosecutions would probably lead to conflicting decisions. (59 C.2d 907.)

(b) The question of obscenity is for the court, not the jury--a mixed question of law and fact. This is the view of the Model Penal Code, and California patterned its new obscenity law on that Code and its standards as approved in Roth v. United States (1957) 354 U.S. 476, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498, supra, §436. (59 C.2d 910, 911.)

(c) The California statute, adding the phrase "utterly without redeeming social importance" in the definition of obscenity, made it an element of the offense. (59 C.2d 919.) And "by employing the term 'utterly' the Legislature indicated its intention to give legal sanction to all material relating to sex except that which was totally devoid of social importance. The only material that falls into the latter category is hard-core pornography." (59 C.2d 920.)

(d) The book in question is not hard-core pornography. It is "a semi-autobiographical novel written in the style of a surrealistic stream of consciousness"; although sexual experiences are presented, "there is absent from the book the sadism, masochism and treatment of sex in a morbid or shameful manner which frequently mark pornography." (59 C.2d 921.) "In sum, the book in narrating Miller's stream of consciousness necessarily expresses the writer's thoughts in their most primitive aspect, often violent and repulsive, and constantly in four-letter words. The book embraces the emotional, the sexual, the intellectual, and every other kind of stimulus that intrudes upon the writer's consciousness. Thus the book is a kind of grotesque, unorthodox art-form. But indeed, such art-forms are not confined to literature; they appear and reappear in all phases of artistic expression." (59 C.2d 922.) (On amendment of P.C. 311 to eliminate phrase "utterly without redeeming social importance" from definition of "obscene matter," see supra, §449.)

Under the Miller test, however (see supra, §437), a book may be obscene by reason of its words alone, without any pictorial content. (Kaplan v. California (1973) 413 U.S. 115, 93 S.Ct. 2680, 2684, 37 L.Ed.2d 492, 496 ["Suite 69" in plain cover with no pictures, but describing almost every kind of sexual contact in explicit terms, and with "only the most tenuous 'plot' ".])

In re Klor (1966) 64 C.2d 816, 51 C.R. 903, 415 P.2d 791, involved an attack on a conviction for producing and distributing "girlie" films in violation of P.C. 311.2. The trial judge instructed that defendant could be found guilty if he either (a) possessed obscene material with intent to distribute, or (b) prepared the material. Held, this was improper. The court, construing the statute to avoid unconstitutionality, declared that its purpose was to punish dissemination, not mere preparation. "[N]o constitutionally punishable conduct appears in the case of an individual who prepares material for his own use or for such personal satisfaction as its creation affords him." (64 C.2d 821; see supra, §445.)

Landau v. Fording (1966) 245 C.A.2d 820, 54 C.R. 177, affirmed a conviction for showing a celebrated picture, "Un Chant D'Amour," to selected audiences. The setting of the half-hour film is a prison cell, the characters are a guard and prisoners, and the film is a vivid and intensified portrayal of masturbation, oral copulation, sodomy, voyeurism, sadism, and masochism. In this action for declaratory relief against defendant Chief of Police of Berkeley, the trial judge viewed the film and found it obscene. Held, affirmed, after viewing by appellate justices.

(a) Applying the national community standard (then approved in Jacobellis v. Ohio (1964) 378 U.S. 184, 84 S.Ct. 1676, 12 L.Ed.2d 793, supra, §436), the trial judge properly allowed experts (literary critic, film program director, psychiatrist, etc.) to testify to contemporary community standards, and as to the artistic merit and social importance of the film. (245 C.A.2d 824.)

(b) A film on homosexuality and sadism in prisons could be produced without obscene matter, or a film obscene under community standards would not be improper for an audience of specialists. But the detailed descriptions of unorthodox sexual practices made this film obscene for "its intended and probable recipient group"; i.e., "the predominant appeal of the film taken as a whole is to the prurient interest." (245 C.A.2d 826.)

(c) The absence of text or dialogue left it without a distinct theme or artistic quality; and unlike a documentary of prison life or a scientific study of prison psychology, it had no redeeming social importance. (245 C.A.2d 828.)

(d) Although the audience was more limited than is usual in movie houses, the film was commercially exploited and is subject to Ginzburg v. United States (1966) 383 U.S. 463, 86 S.Ct. 942, 16 L.Ed.2d 31, supra, §435. (245 C.A.2d 830.)

In People v. Enskat (1973) 33 C.A.3d 900, 109 C.R. 433, supra, §450, the trial judge instructed the jury, in effect, that it could disregard expert testimony of community standards if it found that the conduct was so patently offensive as to violate any conceivable community standard. Held, the instruction was proper. The requirement of expert testimony on this issue, introduced by In re Giannini (1968) 69 C.2d 563, 72 C.R. 655, 446 P.2d 535, infra, §453, was nullified by the enactment of P.C. 312.1 in 1969 (infra, §453). Hence, the defendant may introduce expert testimony, but the jurors may disregard it if they find it unreasonable. (33 C.A.3d 915.) (See People v. Freeman (1988) 46 C.3d 419, 425, 426, 250 C.R. 598, 758 P.2d 1128, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §75 [application of pandering statute (P.C. 266i) to payment of actors and actresses to perform in nonobscene "adult" film in which they engaged in sexually explicit acts would impinge unconstitutionally on First Amendment values; hence, statute was construed as inapplicable].)

Petitioners, a "topless" nightclub dancer and the club manager, were found guilty of violating P.C. 314(1), wilful and lewd exposure (2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §109 et seq.), and P.C. 647(a), lewd or dissolute conduct (2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §§46, 47). The prosecution evidence consisted solely of photographs of the dancer and testimony describing the performance with her breasts exposed. The defense introduced evidence that topless nightclubs, and this kind of dancing, were common in many areas of the state. Held, the convictions were void.

(a) The test of obscenity is that of contemporary community standards, and this applies both to the element of predominant appeal to prurient interest and the element of substantially beyond customary limits of candor. (69 C.2d 573; see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §§80, 83.)

(b) The prosecution has the burden of proving these standards. (69 C.2d 574; see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §86.)

(c) The relevant community is the State of California, not the local city or county. (69 C.2d 580.)

The court also, with two justices dissenting, declared that the standard must be established by expert testimony. (69 C.2d 574.) The 1969 Legislature nullified this requirement. (P.C. 312.1; see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §87.)

(2) State Liquor Regulations. California v. LaRue (1972) 409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342, upheld the validity of regulations of the California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control prohibiting sexual live entertainment and films in bars. The court pointed out that the Twenty-First Amendment gives a state something more than the normal police power in the area of liquor control (see infra, §1311), and declared that the Department could rationally conclude that "the sale of liquor by the drink and lewd or naked dancing and entertainment should not take place simultaneously in bars and cocktail lounges for which it has licensing responsibility." (93 S.Ct. 395, 34 L.Ed.2d 350.) (See New York State Liquor Authority v. Bellanca (1981) 452 U.S. 714, 101 S.Ct. 2599, 69 L.Ed.2d 357 [applying LaRue to topless dancing]; Locker v. Kirby (1973) 31 C.A.3d 520, 522, 107 C.R. 446 [following LaRue]; Department of Alcoholic Bev. Control v. Alcoholic Bev. Control App. Bd. (Vicary) (2002) 99 C.A.4th 880, 887, 121 C.R.2d 729 [following LaRue in upholding restrictions on erotic entertainment in establishments that sell alcoholic beverages as minimal infringement on expressive conduct]; 1 Pepperdine L. Rev. 129 [LaRue]; 21 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 31 [verbal and nonverbal expression].)

The Supreme Court disavowed LaRue's reliance on the Twenty-First Amendment in a case dealing with state power to prohibit the advertisement of liquor prices. "Entirely apart from the Twenty-First Amendment, the State has ample power to prohibit the sale of alcoholic beverages in inappropriate places." (44 Liquormart v. Rhode Island (1996) 517 U.S. 484, 116 S.Ct. 1495, 1514, 134 L.Ed.2d 711, 736.)

6. Validity of Local Ordinances.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 454

[§ 454] Validity of Local Ordinances.

(1) Crownover Case. Following the decision in In re Giannini (1968) 69 C.2d 563, 72 C.R. 655, 466 P.2d 535, supra, §453, P.C. 318.5 and 318.6 were adopted, authorizing the regulation of topless waitresses and entertainers, and live nude exhibitions, by local ordinance. With state preemption of the field overcome, several cities and counties adopted prohibitory ordinances, which were upheld in Crownover v. Musick (1973) 9 C.3d 405, 107 C.R. 681, 509 P.2d 497. The court applied the balancing test of United States v. O'Brien (1968) 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672, infra, §473, for the power to regulate activity involving symbolic conduct, after making clear at the outset that the service of food and beverages is a commercial activity that does not become communicative merely because the waitress is unclothed (9 C.3d 423); and that entertainment was not prohibited but merely subjected to a regulation requiring clothing (9 C.3d 425).

The governmental interest in promoting public morals is aimed at separately identifiable conduct, not speech; and any incidental restriction that may be imposed on free speech and expression is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the substantial governmental interest; i.e., the regulations do not prohibit speech or expression or entertainment, but merely direct that the entertainer cannot appear with genitals or breasts exposed. (9 C.3d 427.) In re Giannini, to the extent inconsistent, is overruled. (9 C.3d 431.)

Two justices dissented, arguing that O'Brien is completely distinguishable on its facts, and that its principles were improperly applied. (9 C.3d 431.)

(2) Crownover Overruled. In Morris v. Municipal Court (1982) 32 C.3d 553, 186 C.R. 494, 652 P.2d 51, the County of Santa Clara, pursuant to the authority of P.C. 318.5, adopted an ordinance prohibiting nude entertainment in any public place other than a concert hall, theater, or similar establishment primarily devoted to theatrical performances. Petitioner, employed as a dancer in a bar, was arrested for exposing her buttocks during a performance, and sought prohibition to bar her prosecution for violation of the ordinance. Held, writ granted; the ordinance was overbroad and infringed on First Amendment freedom.

(a) Crownover no longer controlling. Significant decisions in the years following Crownover show that the majority in that case failed to anticipate future development in the law. Crownover's discussion of California v. LaRue (1972) 409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342, supra, §453, "and its failure to recognize the constitutional significance of LaRue's distinction between places that serve alcohol and those that do not, have proven to be plainly erroneous. Both Crownover's alternative holdings that nudity in dance is conduct and, as such, beyond the scope of First Amendment protection, or that public opposition to nude entertainment generates a substantial state interest in its suppression, also crumble under the force of later decisions." (32 C.3d 560; see 32 C.3d 561 et seq., discussing New York State Liquor Authority v. Bellanca (1981) 452 U.S. 714, 101 S.Ct. 2599, 69 L.Ed.2d 357, and other state and federal decisions.)

(b) Nonobscene nude dancing constitutionally protected. "(1) A ban on nude dancing cannot be sustained on the theory that it regulates only conduct and does not impinge upon protected speech. Nonobscene nude dancing cannot be barred without, in some cases, infringing upon constitutionally protected expression. (2) An enactment prohibiting nonobscene nude dancing which extends beyond establishments serving alcohol is presumptively overbroad." (32 C.3d 564, adding that Crownover is overruled.)

(c) Nature of permissible infringement. The county's interest in the promotion of public morals does not support a direct infringement on protected activities. (32 C.3d 566.) It is immaterial that an activity that enjoys First Amendment protection is carried on for profit. (32 C.3d 568.) However, under Young v. American Mini Theatres (1976) 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310, supra, §443, the control of "near-obscenity" by zoning was given "a constitutional green light"; and "if local authorities wish to regulate otherwise protectible entertainment through the medium of Young type zoning, they should not feel discouraged by anything they read in this opinion." (32 C.3d 568.)

One justice, concurring, would have rested the conclusion solely on Cal. Const., Art. I, §2(a) (see supra, §312). (32 C.3d 569.) Two justices joined in a strong dissent, arguing that the Crownover analysis was sound, that the majority improperly relied on decisions of lower federal courts and inconclusive dicta of the Supreme Court, and that the social harm resulting from sexual exploitation and degradation of women for profit was a compelling societal interest supporting the regulation. (32 C.3d 570.) (See 22 Santa Clara L. Rev. 211 [discussing conflict of federal/state law after Crownover but before Morris].)

(3) Picture Arcades With Closed Booths. In DeMott v. Board of Police Commrs. (1981) 122 C.A.3d 296, 175 C.R. 879, an ordinance requiring unenclosed booths in public picture arcades was held applicable to a private association that any member of the public could join by identifying himself or herself, signing a statement of general philosophy, and paying $ 1. The court termed the association "a thinly veiled device to escape regulation of an otherwise valid ordinance." (122 C.A.3d 306.) (See Sacramento v. Superior Court (1982) 137 C.A.3d 448, 454, 187 C.R. 154 [prohibition of enclosed booths is constitutional]; Deluxe Theater & Bookstore v. San Diego (1985) 175 C.A.3d 980, 983, 985, 221 C.R. 100 [same].)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

C. Limitations on the Rights.

6. Obscenity.

j. Civil Proceedings Against Obscene Matter.

[§ 455] Civil Proceedings Against Obscene Matter.

"The Alabama Law on Obscenity takes a form that is gaining increasing favor among the States. It permits a test of the issue of obscenity in a civil action prior to any exposure to a criminal penalty. This Court has acknowledged the value of this approach to the solution of the vexing problem of reconciling state efforts to suppress sexually oriented expression with the prohibitions of the First Amendment, as applied to the States through the Fourteenth Amendment." (McKinney v. Alabama (1976) 424 U.S. 669, 96 S.Ct. 1189, 1195, 47 L.Ed.2d 387, 395, concurring opinion.)

(1) Action To Adjudicate Obscenity of Particular Matter. In McKinney v. Alabama, supra, the statute authorized an "in rem" action in equity by the district attorney to adjudicate the obscenity of mailable matter. The action was brought with four magazines as respondents, and resulted in a decree that they were obscene. Petitioner, operator of a bookstore, received written notice of the decree, and was thereafter charged with violation of a statute prohibiting the sale of "mailable matter known ... to have been judicially found to be obscene." At the trial, the jury was instructed that the only issue before them was whether he had sold the material; i.e., he was not permitted to have his defense--that the material was not obscene--submitted to the jury. The verdict was guilty. Held, judgment reversed.

(a) Petitioner received no notice of the equity proceeding; hence, he had no opportunity to be heard or any other means for initiating a challenge to the decree. Thus, it had the same effect as an ex parte determination of a state censorship authority which unilaterally found material obscene. (96 S.Ct. 1193, 47 L.Ed.2d 393.)

(b) The state's contention that the "in rem" action was an "adversary judicial proceeding" that safeguarded First Amendment rights is unsound. Although an individual and corporate respondent were named along with the magazines, there was no indication that they were in privity with petitioner. Exhibitors and distributors may, for various reasons, be unwilling to oppose a state claim of obscenity; and those who are afforded an opportunity to be heard are properly bound by the outcome. But nonparties must be given the chance to litigate the issues if they choose to do so. (96 S.Ct. 1193, 1194, 47 L.Ed.2d 393, 394.)

(c) The state contended that the use of civil proceedings to determine obscenity is preferable to case-by-case criminal prosecutions. However, this is not an answer where a person is convicted in a criminal proceeding, with the issue of obscenity concluded against him or her by a decree in a civil proceeding to which the person was not a party and of which he or she had no notice. (96 S.Ct. 1194, 47 L.Ed.2d 394.)

(2) Action To Enjoin Exhibition or Abate Public Nuisance. In People v. Projection Room Theater (1976) 17 C.3d 42, 130 C.R. 328, 550 P.2d 600, plaintiffs, law enforcement officers of both the City and County of Los Angeles, brought actions to enjoin the exhibition of obscene books and films as public nuisances. Defendants were operators of stores and motion picture theaters. The complaint contained allegations and exhibits, good against a general demurrer, supporting the charge of obscenity under the law. The relief was sought under the general public nuisance statutes (C.C. 3479, 3480; P.C. 370, 371) and the Red Light Abatement Law (P.C. 11225 et seq.). Held, the complaint stated a cause of action under the public nuisance statutes (see 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §144), but not under the Red Light Abatement Law (see 13 Summary (10th), Equity, §146 et seq.).

(a) The Penal Code and Civil Code definitions of public nuisance are substantially identical, and they refute the argument that only those activities offensive to the five senses are covered. The statutes also apply to anything that is "indecent." (17 C.3d 49.)

(b) Prior decisions in California and elsewhere have held indecent exposure and other obscene exhibitions to come within the definition. (17 C.3d 49 et seq.) The argument that obscene exhibitions are free from regulation because they take place behind closed doors and are viewed only by those who choose to view them was rejected in People v. Luros (1971) 4 C.3d 84, 92 C.R. 833, 480 P.2d 633, Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton (1973) 413 U.S. 49, 93 S.Ct. 2628, 37 L.Ed.2d 446, 430, and Harmer v. Tonylyn Productions (1972) 23 C.A.3d 941, 100 C.R. 576. (17 C.3d 51, 55.)

(c) The statutory language ("indecent, or offensive to the senses") is not impermissibly vague; similar language in obscenity statutes has been construed and held not subject to constitutional challenge. (17 C.3d 56.)

(d) Although the exhibition and sale of specific obscene materials may be enjoined after a fair and full adversary hearing, a judgment closing down the premises is an unconstitutional prior restraint. (17 C.3d 58.) "We are aware of no reported cases authorizing the closing of a bookstore or theatre, even after it has been repeatedly determined judicially in a full adversary hearing that all or substantially all of the magazines or films exhibited or sold therein are obscene." (17 C.3d 59.)

(e) The Red Light Abatement Law, which authorizes injunctions and closing the premises, does not apply. Its reference to "lewdness" has been held to cover live lewd entertainment (People v. Sarong Gals (1972) 27 C.A.3d 46, 103 C.R. 414), but not the exhibition of obscene magazines or films (Harmer v. Tonylyn Productions, supra). (17 C.3d 61.)

Two justices joined in a strong dissent, attacking the opinion's approval of the discretion of a city attorney, challenging the asserted similarity of the Penal Code and Civil Code definitions, and concluding that the public nuisance statutes were not intended to embrace the private indecency involved here; also that the statutes as interpreted contravene the First Amendment. (17 C.3d 63.) (See 65 Cal. L. Rev. 330; 4 Hastings Const. L. Q. 385; 28 Hastings L. J. 1329.)

(3) Preliminary Injunction. In re Ward (1978) 82 C.A.3d 981, 147 C.R. 476, held that a preliminary injunction may be issued and enforced by contempt proceedings pending a prompt judicial decision at a full hearing. (82 C.A.3d 989.) The court found no constitutional defect in the judge's issuance of the preliminary injunction on a police officer's affidavit without viewing the film or taking expert testimony. (82 C.A.3d 989.) (See People v. Mitchell Bros. Santa Ana Theater (1980) 101 C.A.3d 296, 304, 161 C.R. 562 [following Ward].)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY C. Limitations on the Rights. 7. Street Meetings and Parades.

[§ 456] Street Meetings and Parades.

The legislative authority, under the police power, may regulate traffic on streets and highways by measures that incidentally limit free speech and assembly. In Cox v. New Hampshire (1941) 312 U.S. 569, 61 S.Ct. 762, 85 L.Ed. 1049, a statute prohibited a parade or procession on a public street without a license. The conviction of a group of members of Jehovah's Witnesses for parading without a license was upheld. The Court pointed out that public parades call for an investigation to determine the amount and extent of policing and traffic control, and that the license fee was neither large nor arbitrary, but graduated according to the expense of the supervision. (See 80 A.L.R.5th 255 [state or local enactments regulating parades].)

But where the purpose or operation of the licensing requirement is not regulation of traffic, the attempted suppression of free speech and assembly will not be upheld. (See supra, §360.) In People v. Duffy (1947) 79 C.A.2d Supp. 875, 179 P.2d 876, an ordinance prohibited any procession or parade without a permit from the Board of Police Commissioners. The court reversed a conviction for conducting a parade without the required permit. Conceding the legislative power to impose valid regulations, the opinion nevertheless states that "the holding of parades is a public right, subject to proper regulation and not suppression," and that the ordinances "must allow parades, when and where traffic conditions permit." The vice of the provision was in vesting arbitrary control in the police. "To be valid the ordinance may not leave it within the power of any administrative board to issue or withhold a permit, dependent upon the board's approval or disapproval of the purpose of those who seek it." (79 C.A.2d Supp. 890.) (See Cox v. Louisiana (1965) 379 U.S. 536, 85 S.Ct. 453, 13 L.Ed.2d 471, supra, §393; Cox v. Louisiana (1965) 379 U.S. 559, 85 S.Ct. 476, 13 L.Ed.2d 487, infra, §462; 80 Harv. L. Rev. 1772 [regulation of demonstrations].)

In re Bodkin (1948) 86 C.A.2d 208, 194 P.2d 588, though decided on a narrow issue of fact, appears to follow the approach of the older cases. A city ordinance made it a misdemeanor for persons to refuse to move on, at the direction of a police officer, "whenever the free passage of any street or sidewalk ... shall be obstructed by a crowd." Petitioner stood in a small, lightly-traveled street in the industrial part of the city addressing between 100 and 150 workers on the subject of the Taft-Hartley Act (legislation then pending before Congress). He refused to move on when ordered and was arrested and convicted. Held, the conviction was proper because the court below found that there had been an "obstruction." "It was established in this case that the passage of some members of the public along the street was in fact obstructed. If nobody had desired to use this street at the time another question would be presented. Whether the obstruction merely impaired the progress of one member of the general public, or a thousand, does not alter the case."

(86 C.A.2d 211.) (See People v. Amdur (1954) 123 C.A.2d Supp. 951, 962, 267 P.2d 445 [ordinance against sidewalk obstruction valid but applied in unconstitutionally discriminatory manner]; Poulos v. New Hampshire (1953) 345 U.S. 395, 73 S.Ct. 760, 768, 97 L.Ed. 1105, 1116 [same; failure to pursue state remedy].)

Dillon v. Municipal Court (1971) 4 C.3d 860, 94 C.R. 777, 484 P.2d 945, invalidating a parade-permit ordinance wholly lacking in standards, followed the modern approach of Cox v. Louisiana, supra, and approved the holding in People v. Duffy, supra. "In determining whether a statute regulating speech violates the First Amendment, we must weigh the state's interest in maintaining peace and order in the streets and other public places against the individual's right to freedom of speech and assembly. When this balance is struck, statutes requiring licenses for parades and demonstrations will not offend the Constitution if they regulate only the time, place, manner and duration of the marches and if they are fairly administered by officials within the range of narrowly limited discretion. On the other hand, any procedure which allows licensing officials wide or unbounded discretion in granting or denying permits is constitutionally infirm because it permits them to base their determination on the content of the ideas sought to be expressed." (4 C.3d 869.)

In People v. Dury (1983) 152 C.A.3d Supp. 23, 199 C.R. 577, after police officers had been injured at demonstrations by persons using two-inch wooden sign poles to resist arrest, an ordinance was adopted prohibiting demonstrators from carrying lengths of wood thicker than specified limits. Held, applying the test in United States v. O'Brien (1968) 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672, infra, §473, the ordinance was a valid regulation of the time, place, and manner of use of the streets. (152 C.A.3d Supp. 27.)

In Forsyth, Georgia v. Nationalist Movement (1992) 505 U.S. 123, 112 S.Ct. 2395, 120 L.Ed.2d 101, the issue was whether the free speech guarantee was violated by "an assembly and parade ordinance that permits a government administrator to vary the fee for assembling or parading to reflect the estimated cost of maintaining public order." (112 S.Ct. 2398, 120 L.Ed.2d 107.) Held, the ordinance was facially invalid.

(a) In regulating competing uses of public forums, the government "may impose a permit requirement on those wishing to hold a march, parade, or rally. ... Such a scheme, however, must meet certain constitutional requirements." (112 S.Ct. 2401, 120 L.Ed.2d 111.) Here, there are no narrowly drawn standards. "The decision how much to charge for police protection or administrative time--or even whether to charge at all--is left to the whim of the administrator" whose decision is not reviewable. "Nothing in the law or its application prevents the official from encouraging some views and discouraging others through the arbitrary application of fees." (112 S.Ct. 2403, 120 L.Ed.2d 113.)

(b) The ordinance as construed by the county often requires that the fee be based on the content of the speech. In assessing a fee to cover the cost of necessary protection of participants and observers, the administrator must estimate the response of others to that content, and judge the number of police necessary to meet that response. "The fee assessed will depend on the administrator's measure of the amount of hostility likely to be created by the speech based on its content." (112 S.Ct. 2403, 120 L.Ed.2d 113.)

(c) The ordinance provided a $ 1,000 cap on the allowable fee, and the lower courts expressed the view that a "nominal" fee would be constitutional; but no limit on the fee can cure the constitutional violations. "Neither the $ 1,000 cap on the fee charged, nor even some lower nominal cap, could save the ordinance because in this context, the level of the fee is irrelevant. A tax based on the content of speech does not become more constitutional because it is a small tax." (112 S.Ct. 2405, 120 L.Ed.2d 115.)

Four justices joined in a dissent. (112 S.Ct. 2405, 120 L.Ed.2d 116.) (See Long Beach Lesbian & Gay Pride v. Long Beach (1993) 14 C.A.4th 312, 325, 17 C.R.2d 861 [discussing and following Forsyth]; Sanctity of Human Life Network v. California Highway Patrol (2003) 105 C.A.4th 858, 868, 129 C.R.2d 708 [statute authorizing CHP to "direct traffic as conditions may require" was sufficient authorization for CHP to terminate political protests occurring on freeway overpasses when those activities caused freeway congestion; CHP's actions were not based on content of speech, and many other forums were available to plaintiffs to communicate their message]; on application of state public accommodations law to privately sponsored parade as violation of sponsors' First Amendment rights, see Hurley v. Irish-American Gay, Lesbian & Bisexual Group of Boston (1995) 515 U.S. 557, 115 S.Ct. 2338, 132 L.Ed.2d 487, supra, §390.)

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

C. Limitations on the Rights.

8. Violence and Incitement to Violence.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 457

[§ 457] In General.

(1) Statutes Directed Against Riots and Unlawful Assemblies. Statutes directed against riots or other unlawful assemblies, such as P.C. 407 et seq., 416, 726, are obviously valid. (People v. Sklar (1930) 111 C.A. Supp. 776, 779, 292 P. 1068; People v. Anderson (1931) 117 C.A. Supp. 763, 767, 1 P.2d 64; Chambers v. Municipal Court (1977) 65 C.A.3d 904, 909, 135 C.R. 695 [P.C. 416, making it misdemeanor for persons disturbing public peace or committing unlawful act to fail to disperse on command by public officer, is constitutional when construed to prevent overbreadth]; see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §10 et seq.)

(2) Statutes Directed at Words. Difficulty is encountered in determining the validity of regulations directed against words that are an incitement to violence. In Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire (1942) 315 U.S. 568, 62 S.Ct. 766, 86 L.Ed. 1031, the statute prohibited the use of an "offensive, derisive or annoying word" in a public place. Defendant was convicted of calling the city marshal a "God damned racketeer" and "Fascist." Upholding the conviction, the Court said that certain classes of speech have always been deemed punishable: "the lewd and obscene, the profane, the libelous, and the insulting or 'fighting' words--those which by their very utterance inflicted injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace." (62 S.Ct. 769, 86 L.Ed. 1035.)

In Feiner v. New York (1951) 340 U.S. 315, 71 S.Ct. 303, 95 L.Ed. 295, petitioner addressed a street audience from a box on the sidewalk, condemning various political figures. The audience showed signs of disorder and obstructed the sidewalk, and after he had ignored several requests by police to desist, petitioner was arrested. His conviction for breach of the peace was upheld. The Court thought the facts, as found below, showed no attempted suppression of unpopular speech. And the exercise of authority to preserve order, when the speech constituted an incitement to riot and produced a dangerous reaction, justified the conviction. (See 65 Harv. L. Rev. 135; 2 Hastings L. J. 64.)

In People v. Rubin (1979) 96 C.A.3d 968, 158 C.R. 488, defendant, a national director of the Jewish Defense League, held a press conference in California to protest a planned demonstration by the American Nazi Party to take place in Illinois in 5 weeks. In the course of his remarks, he said: "We are offering five hundred dollars ... to any member of the community ... who kills, maims, or seriously injures a member of the American Nazi Party. ... This is not said in jest, we are deadly serious." Held, an information charging solicitation of murder under P.C. 653f was properly filed. The court, on an extended examination of the case law dealing with the distinction between abstract advocacy and concrete solicitation of specific acts, followed the analysis in Brandenburg v. Ohio (1969) 395 U.S. 444, 89 S.Ct. 1827, 23 L.Ed.2d 430, infra, §470:

(a) Proximity: incitement to imminent lawless action. The event--a demonstration that had attracted national attention, was proximate and imminent. (96 C.A.3d 978.)

(b) Degree: likelihood of producing action. The solicitation was not made in jest nor was it the outcome of an improvised piece of braggadocio; its words and circumstances suggested the possibility that it might produce the violence sought. (96 C.A.3d 979.)

"[W]e conclude there was sufficient likelihood of his solicitation being interpreted as a call to arms, ... as a systematic promotion of future bloodshed in the streets, rather than as a communication of ideas through reasoned public discussion, to remove it from the category of protected speech and require Rubin to answer the charges against him." (96 C.A.3d 980.) (See Long v. Valentino (1989) 216 C.A.3d 1287, 1295, 265 C.R. 96, infra, §905 ["mere incitement of another to commit a nonviolent civil rights violation may not be punished"]; People v. Gudger (1994) 29 C.A.4th 310, 320, 34 C.R.2d 510 [P.C. 76, prohibiting threat against life of state official, requires specific intent to make threat and apparent ability to carry it out; because statute punishes true threats, rather than mere hyperbole, it is not overbroad].)

(3) Statutes Providing Civil and Criminal Remedy. On a finding that advocacy of unlawful acts likely to cause imminent serious bodily injury or death is not constitutionally protected (see P.C. 11410), the 1982 Legislature enacted C.C.P. 527.7, making it unlawful for two or more persons to advocate these acts and to take substantial action in furtherance thereof. (C.C.P. 527.7(a).) If it appears likely that an assemblage has engaged in this kind of advocacy in the past and will continue to do so in the future, an aggrieved individual may bring a civil action in superior court to enjoin the advocacy at any future meeting. (C.C.P. 527.7(b).) (See 14 Pacific L. J. 491.)

The California Freedom of Access to Clinic and Church Entrances Act, P.C. 423 et seq., criminalizes certain acts, including violence or threat of force, that interfere with a person's access to reproductive health facilities or places of worship. (See 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, Supp., §409.) The statute also provides a civil action for injunctive relief and compensatory and punitive damages, and includes a right to recover costs and reasonable attorney and expert witness fees. In lieu of actual damages, the plaintiff may elect to recover statutory damages. (P.C. 423.4(a).) In addition, the Attorney General or a district or city attorney may bring an action to enjoin violation of P.C. 423.2, for compensatory damages, and for the assessment of a civil penalty. (P.C. 423.4(b).) However, if a person has been found liable under the federal Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act (18 U.S.C., §248), the person may not be found liable under the California Act based on identical conduct on the same occasion. (P.C. 423.4(c).)

b. Statements Not "Fighting Words."

[§ 458] Statements Not "Fighting Words."

In Terminiello v. Chicago (1949) 337 U.S. 1, 69 S.Ct. 894, 93 L.Ed. 1131, an ordinance made it a misdemeanor to assist "in making any improper noise, riot, disturbance, breach of the peace, or diversion tending to a breach of the peace." Petitioner addressed a meeting of over 800 persons. About 1,000 opponents of his views were gathered outside in protest, with police unable to maintain order. Petitioner, who condemned the outside crowd and attacked various political and racial groups, was convicted of violation of the ordinance. Held, reversed. (a) The issue argued before the Court was whether the use of "fighting words" tending to incite an immediate breach of the peace was constitutionally punishable under Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire (1942) 315 U.S. 568, 62 S.Ct. 766, 86 L.Ed. 1031, supra, §457. The majority did not decide this issue. Instead, the court held that a trial judge's instruction was a binding judicial construction of the ordinance, and that constitutionality must be determined in light of that instruction. (b) The instruction defined "breach of the peace" to include speech that "stirs the public to anger, invites dispute, brings about a condition of unrest, or creates a disturbance." This speech, the court held, cannot be constitutionally prohibited, for a function of free speech under our governmental system is to invite dispute. "It may indeed best serve its high purpose when it induces a condition of unrest, creates dissatisfaction with conditions as they are, or even stirs people to anger." (69 S.Ct. 896, 93 L.Ed. 1134.) Dissenting opinions argued that the instruction was immaterial to the main issue presented and left undecided by the majority. (69 S.Ct. 897 et seq., 93 L.Ed. 1136 et seq.) (See 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 356.)

In Ashton v. Kentucky (1966) 384 U.S. 195, 86 S.Ct. 1407, 16 L.Ed.2d 469, defendant went to a Kentucky town during a labor dispute, and circulated pamphlets attacking the local police chief, sheriff, and editor of the paper for anti-union activities and various kinds of corruption. He was convicted of "criminal libel," the crime being defined by the trial judge as a writing "calculated to create disturbances of the peace," etc. Held, reversed. Terminiello and similar decisions "recognize that to make an offense of conduct which is 'calculated to create disturbances of the peace' leaves wide open the standard of responsibility. It involves calculations as to the boiling point of a particular person or a particular group, not an appraisal of the nature of the comments per se. This kind of criminal libel 'makes a man a criminal simply because his neighbors have no self control and cannot refrain from violence.'" (86 S.Ct. 1410, 16 L.Ed.2d 472.) (See People v. Huss (1966) 241 C.A.2d 361, 366, 51 C.R. 56 [American Nazi Party members convicted of conspiracy to disturb public peace; reversed for error in instruction contrary to Terminiello rule].)

In Gooding v. Wilson (1972) 405 U.S. 518, 92 S.Ct. 1103, 31 L.Ed.2d 408, a Georgia statute made it a misdemeanor for a person without provocation to use "opprobrious words or abusive language, tending to cause a breach of the peace." Held, the statute was invalid. The proscribed act "must be carefully drawn or be authoritatively construed to punish only unprotected speech and not susceptible of application to protected expression" (92 S.Ct. 1106, 31 L.Ed.2d 414), and this one was not. (92 S.Ct. 1109, 31 L.Ed.2d 417.) (See Hess v. Indiana (1973) 414 U.S. 105, 94 S.Ct. 326, 38 L.Ed.2d 303 [defendant, in antiwar demonstration, loudly declared, "We'll take the fucking street later"; held, at worst, advocacy of future illegal action, not incitement to imminent disorder]; *Lewis v. C. Limitations on the Rights.

8. Violence and Incitement to Violence.

c. Cross Burning.

1. General Prohibition.

[§ 459] General Prohibition.

R.A.V. v. St. Paul, Minnesota (1992) 505 U.S. 377, 112 S.Ct. 2538, 120 L.Ed.2d 305, held unconstitutional the following ordinance of the city of St. Paul: "Whoever places on public or private property a symbol, object, appellation, characterization or graffiti, including, but not limited to, a burning cross or Nazi swastika, which one knows or has reasonable grounds to know arouses anger, alarm or resentment in others on the basis of race, color, creed, religion or gender commits disorderly conduct and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

Petitioner and several other teenagers allegedly assembled a cross and burned it inside the fenced yard of a black family that lived across the street from the house where petitioner was staying. Although this conduct could have been punished under a number of other laws, one of the two provisions under which respondent city chose to charge petitioner was the ordinance. Petitioner moved to dismiss this count; the trial court granted the motion; but the Minnesota Supreme Court construed the ordinance as reaching only those expressions that constitute "fighting words" within the meaning of Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire (1942) 315 U.S. 568, 62 S.Ct. 766, 86 L.Ed. 1031, supra, §457, and reversed the order of dismissal. Held, judgment of Minnesota Supreme Court reversed.

(a) Content-based regulations are presumptively invalid, but have been permitted in a few limited areas, such as defamation and obscenity. (112 S.Ct. 2542, 2543, 120 L.Ed.2d 316, 317.) It has sometimes been said that these categories of expression are "not within the area of constitutionally protected speech," but these statements must be taken in context. "What they mean is that these areas of speech can, consistently with the First Amendment, be regulated because of their constitutionally proscribable content (obscenity, defamation, etc.)--not that they are categories of speech entirely invisible to the Constitution, so that they may be made the vehicles for content discrimination unrelated to their distinctively proscribable content. Thus, the government may proscribe libel; but it may not make the further content discrimination of proscribing only libel critical of the government." (112 S.Ct. 2543, 120 L.Ed.2d 318.)

(b) "The proposition that a particular instance of speech can be proscribable on the basis of one feature (e.g., obscenity) but not on the basis of another (e.g., opposition to the city government) is commonplace, and has found application in many contexts. We have long held, for example, that nonverbal expressive activity can be banned because of the action it entails, but not because of the ideas it expresses--so that burning a flag in violation of an ordinance against outdoor fires could be punishable, whereas burning a flag in violation of an ordinance against dishonoring the flag is not. ... Similarly, we have upheld reasonable 'time, place or manner' restrictions, but only if they are 'justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech.' ... And just as the power to proscribe particular speech on the basis of a noncontent element (e.g., noise) does not entail the power to proscribe the same speech on the basis of a content element, so also, the power to proscribe it on the basis of one content element (e.g., obscenity) does not entail the power to proscribe it on the basis of other content elements." (112 S.Ct. 2544, 120 L.Ed.2d 319.)

(c) "In other words, the exclusion of 'fighting words' from the scope of the First Amendment simply means that, for purposes of that Amendment, the unprotected features of the words are, despite their verbal character, essentially a 'nonspeech' element of communication. Fighting words are thus analogous to a noisy sound truck: Each is ... a 'mode of speech,' ... ; both can be used to convey an idea; but neither has, in and of itself, a claim upon the First Amendment. As with the sound truck, however, so also with fighting words: The government may not regulate use based on hostility--or favoritism--towards the underlying message expressed." (112 S.Ct. 2545, 120 L.Ed.2d 319.)

(d) "When the basis for the content discrimination consists entirely of the very reason the entire class of speech at issue is proscribable, no significant danger of idea or viewpoint discrimination exists. Such a reason, having been adjudged neutral enough to support exclusion of the entire class of speech from First Amendment protection, is also neutral enough to form the basis of distinction within the class. To illustrate: A State might choose to prohibit only that obscenity which is the most patently offensive in its prurience--i.e., that which involves the most lascivious displays of sexual activity. But it may not prohibit, for example, only that obscenity which includes offensive political messages." (112 S.Ct. 2545, 120 L.Ed.2d 320.)

(e) "Another valid basis for according differential treatment to even a content-based subclass of proscribable speech is that the subclass happens to be associated with particular 'secondary effects' of the speech, so that the regulation is 'justified without reference to the content of the ... speech.' ... A State could, for example, permit all obscene live performances except those involving minors. Moreover, since words can in some circumstances violate laws directed not against speech but against conduct (a law against treason, for example, is violated by telling the enemy the nation's defense secrets), a particular content-based subcategory of a proscribable class of speech can be swept up incidentally within the reach of a statute directed at conduct rather than speech. ... Where the government does not target conduct on the basis of its expressive content, acts are not shielded from regulation merely because they express a discriminatory idea or philosophy." (112 S.Ct. 2546, 120 L.Ed.2d 321.)

(f) Applying these principles to the ordinance, even as narrowly construed by the Minnesota Supreme Court, the ordinance is facially unconstitutional.

(1) "[T]he ordinance applies only to 'fighting words' that insult, or provoke violence, 'on the basis of race, color, creed, religion or gender.' Displays containing abusive invective, no matter how vicious or severe, are permissible unless they are addressed to one of the specified disfavored topics." (112 S.Ct. 2547, 120 L.Ed.2d 323.)

(2) "In its practical operation, moreover, the ordinance goes even beyond mere content discrimination, to actual viewpoint discrimination. Displays containing some words--odious racial epithets, for example--would be prohibited to proponents of all views. But 'fighting words' that do not themselves invoke race, color, creed, religion, or gender--aspersions upon a person's mother, for example--would seemingly be usable ad libitum in the placards on those arguing in favor of racial, color, etc. tolerance and equality, but could not be used by that speaker's opponents. One could hold up a sign saying, for example, that all 'anti-Catholic bigots' are misbegotten; but not that all 'papists' are, for that would insult and provoke violence 'on the basis of religion.' St. Paul has no such authority to license one side of a debate to fight freestyle, while requiring the other to follow Marquis of Queensbury Rules." (112 S.Ct. 2547, 120 L.Ed.2d 323.)

(3) "The content-based discrimination reflected in the St. Paul ordinance comes within neither any of the specific exceptions to the First Amendment prohibition we discussed earlier, nor within a more general exception for content discrimination that does not threaten censorship of ideas. It assuredly does not fall within the exception for content discrimination based on the very reasons why the particular class of speech at issue (here, fighting words) is proscribable. ... St. Paul has not singled out an especially offensive mode of expression--it has not, for example, selected for prohibition only those fighting words that communicate ideas in a threatening (as opposed to a merely obnoxious) manner. Rather, it has proscribed fighting words of whatever manner that communicate messages of racial, gender, or religious intolerance. Selectivity of this sort creates the possibility that the city is seeking to handicap the expression of particular ideas. That possibility would alone be enough to render the ordinance presumptively invalid, but St. Paul's comments and concessions in this case elevate the possibility to a certainty." (112 S.Ct. 2548, 120 L.Ed.2d 324, 325.)

(4) St. Paul and its amici finally contend that the discrimination is justified because it is narrowly tailored to serve compelling state interests. They assert that it helps to ensure the basic human rights of members of groups that have historically been subjected to discrimination. The dispositive question, however, is whether content discrimination is reasonably necessary to achieve these compelling interests, and "it plainly is not." An ordinance not limited to the favored topics would have precisely the same beneficial effect; and the only interest distinctively served is that of displaying the city council's special hostility toward the particular biases thus singled out. "The politicians of St. Paul are entitled to express that hostility--but not through the means of imposing unique limitations upon speakers who (however benightedly) disagree." (112 S.Ct. 2550, 120 L.Ed.2d 326.)

Three separate opinions were filed. (See 112 S.Ct. 2550, 120 L.Ed.2d 327 [four justices concurring in the judgment]; 112 S.Ct. 2560, 120 L.Ed.2d 339 [one justice concurring in the judgment]; 112 S.Ct. 2561, 120 L.Ed.2d 339 [three justices concurring in the judgment].) (See 106 Harv. L. Rev. 124; 107 Harv. L. Rev. 1729; 108 Harv. L. Rev. 757; 106 Harv. L. Rev. 1139 [demise of Chaplinsky fighting words doctrine]; 21 Hastings Const. L. Q. 1117; 65 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1887 [Bigotry, Pornography, and the First Amendment: A Theory of Unprotected Speech].)

In Virginia v. Black (2003) 538 U.S. 343, 123 S.Ct. 1536, 155 L.Ed.2d 535, the justices agreed in several opinions that a state may, without infringing the First Amendment, ban cross burning with intent to intimidate a person or group. However, the Virginia statute involved here was held unconstitutional. In the plurality opinion, four justices agreed that the part of the statute that treats any cross burning as prima facie evidence of intent to intimidate renders the statute unconstitutional on its face. (123 S.Ct 1550, 155 L.Ed.2d 554.) Three other justices concluded that severance of the prima facie evidence provision would "not eliminate the unconstitutionality of the whole statute at the time of the respondents' conduct." (123 S.Ct 1562, 155 L.Ed.2d 569.) (See 117 Harv. L. Rev. 339 [Virginia v. Black].)

2. Specific Prohibition on Property of Another.

[§ 460] Specific Prohibition on Property of Another.

In re Steven S. (1994) 25 C.A.4th 598, 31 C.R.2d 644, involved a juvenile who, with several other people, burned a cross in the yard of a neighboring interracial couple. The juvenile court found that the minor had violated P.C. 11411(c), which prohibits burning or desecrating a cross or other religious symbol on the private property of another, if done for the purpose, or in reckless disregard, of terrorizing another. (See 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §§17, 18.) Held, the statute "is neither overbroad nor vague, is not an impermissible content-based prohibition on speech, and does not violate equal protection." (25 C.A.4th 604.)

(a) Cross burning conveys a message, and hence it implicates free speech guarantees. (25 C.A.4th 606.) However, an unauthorized cross burning on another person's property (malicious cross burning), as distinguished from a ritual cross burning at a Klan gathering, also inflicts immediate injury by subjecting the victim to fear and intimidation, and it conveys a threat of future physical harm. Hence, a malicious cross burning implicates the "true threat" and "fighting words" doctrines, under which certain speech and expressive conduct may be punished. (25 C.A.4th 607.)

(b) The true threat doctrine does not require an intent to terrorize. Rather, an objective standard applies. It is enough that a reasonable person would foresee that a victim would construe a malicious cross burning as a serious expression of intent to do harm; the only required intent is that the offender intentionally or knowingly burned the cross. (25 C.A.4th 608.)

(c) Malicious cross burning also falls within the scope of the fighting words doctrine. A cross burning at a Klan rally is constitutionally protected because it is not directed at any individual. A malicious cross burning on another's property is directed at individuals and causes terror in specific victims, thus bringing it within the scope of the fighting words doctrine. (25 C.A.4th 609.)

(d) Because the statute is restricted to true threats and fighting words, it is not overbroad. (25 C.A.4th 609.)

(e) In R.A.V. v. St. Paul, Minnesota (1992) 505 U.S. 377, 112 S.Ct. 2538, 120 L.Ed.2d 305, supra, §459, the Court stated that, while certain categories of speech and expressive conduct may be regulated, regulation may not discriminate within a category on the basis of content. (25 C.A.4th 610.) However, R.A.V. also prescribed three exceptions to this rule. Content-based discrimination is valid if (1) the basis of the discrimination consists entirely of the very reason the entire class of speech is proscribable; (2) the subclass involved is associated with particular secondary effects of the speech that are not content-related; or (3) the nature of the discrimination is such that there is no realistic possibility that official suppression of ideas is afoot. (25 C.A.4th 611.)

(f) The ordinance in R.A.V. applied to any cross burning, while the statute here applies only to an unauthorized cross burning on another person's private property. That distinction invokes all three of the R.A.V. exceptions. (1) The basis of the statute's content discrimination--protection of specific victims from fear, intimidation, and the threat of physical harm--is the very reason that fighting words and true threats are proscribable. (25 C.A.4th 611.) (2) The statute targets secondary effects of malicious cross burning--infliction of fear, intimidation, and threat of harm--not the racist message conveyed. (25 C.A.4th 612.) (3) There is no realistic possibility that official suppression of ideas is afoot. At its core, an unauthorized cross burning on another person's property is an act of terrorism that inflicts pain on its victim, and its expressive element is incidental at best. (25 C.A.4th 612.)

(g) Thus, although the statute discriminates against malicious cross burning on the basis of content, R.A.V. permits the discrimination. This conclusion also applies to the statute's prohibition against unauthorized desecration of other religious symbols on the property of another, since that desecration can have the same effects. (25 C.A.4th 613.)

(h) The statute's punishment of those who desecrate religious symbols but not those who desecrate nonreligious symbols does not deny equal protection. Malicious cross burning and desecration of other religious symbols is uniquely threatening, fearsome, and provocative, while desecration of nonreligious symbols is not. (25 C.A.4th 615.)

(i) P.C. 11411(c) "is not unconstitutional as to either its specific prohibition against cross burning or its general prohibition against desecration of religious symbols. The statute targets only acts of terrorism on the private property of another person, not the expression of ideas. It is neither overbroad nor vague, is not an impermissible content-based prohibition on speech, and does not deny equal protection." (25 C.A.4th 615, 616.)

The Supreme Court noted that there was a conflict of authority in state high courts on the constitutionality of such statutes (113 S.Ct. 2198, 124 L.Ed.2d 443), but rejected the constitutional challenges, holding that the statute did not violate defendant's free speech rights by punishing his biased beliefs (113 S.Ct. 2200, 124 L.Ed.2d 446). e. Picketing Court or Legislature.

[§ 462] Picketing Court or Legislature.

(1) Picketing Courthouse. The second Cox case, Cox v. Louisiana (1965) 379 U.S. 559, 85 S.Ct. 476, 13 L.Ed.2d 487, raised a far more troublesome issue than the first (see supra, §456), and left the Court in sharp disagreement. A 1950 Louisiana criminal statute applies to a person who, with the intent of interfering with the administration of justice or of influencing a judge, juror, witness, or court officer, "pickets or parades in or near a building housing a court." The statute, like those of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, was modeled after a 1949 federal act. Defendant was charged with its violation when the student mass meeting with which he was associated demonstrated at the courthouse in protest against the arrest of black college students who were jailed there. Held, the statute was valid but the conviction was not.

(a) Validity of the statute. (1) The state's interest in the object--protecting the judicial system--is unquestioned; a statutory safeguard against either hostile or friendly mobs is necessary and appropriate. (85 S.Ct. 480, 13 L.Ed.2d 491.) (2) The statute was narrowly drawn, and regulated conduct, not speech, even though speech was intermingled with the conduct. (85 S.Ct. 480, 13 L.Ed.2d 491.) (3) The clear and present danger test was inapplicable; the state may prohibit demonstrations before a courthouse "based on experience that such conduct inherently threatens the judicial process." (85 S.Ct. 481, 13 L.Ed.2d 493.) (4) The fact that defendant and the other demonstrators were seeking justice (good motives) did not make their conviction a violation of due process. The purpose of the demonstration was to condemn the arrest and trial, and even without that admitted purpose, intent could be inferred from the circumstantial evidence. A demonstration before a courthouse where a criminal charge is pending may be presumed to be intended to influence the judges, jurors, witnesses, or court officials. (85 S.Ct. 482, 13 L.Ed.2d 494.)

(b) Reliance on police directions. The thin ground of reversal was that the statute does not define the term "near," and that the police actually gave permission for the demonstration to take place where it did--across the street, about 125 feet away from the courthouse. Thus, in effect, defendant was advised that the place chosen would not be "near" the courthouse, and a conviction obtained after reliance on this assurance would deny due process. (85 S.Ct. 484, 13 L.Ed.2d 496.)

The dissenting opinions (four justices) found no substance in the theory that the chief of police either did or could by an "administrative determination" authorize a clear violation of the law, and challenged the assumption of fact that defendant relied on this consent by pointing out that the demonstration had already occurred when the alleged consent was given. (85 S.Ct. 470, 472, 13 L.Ed.2d 503, 505.)

In Cohen v. California (1971) 403 U.S. 15, 91 S.Ct. 1780, 29 L.Ed.2d 284, a conviction for violation of P.C. 415 (disturbing the peace) was based on defendant's peaceful picketing in a courthouse corridor, wearing a jacket containing the words "Fuck the Draft." Held, reversed. The Court said: "[A]bsent a more particularized and compelling reason for its actions, the State may not, ... make the simple public display here involved of this single four-letter expletive a criminal offense." (91 S.Ct. 1789, 29 L.Ed.2d 294.) (See 9 Cal. Western L. Rev. 171; 34 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1595; for further discussion of Cohen, see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §3.)

(2) Picketing Legislature. Former P.C. 171f(3) made it a misdemeanor to "Picket within the State Capitol," the latter term being defined as the building intended primarily for use by the legislative department. (See P.C. 171f(2), proscribing "any conduct" within the State Capitol that "disrupts the orderly conduct of official business.") In Simpson v. Municipal Court (1971) 14 C.A.3d 591, 92 C.R. 417, the statute was held constitutional, and peaceful nonobstructive picketing inside the building was therefore properly banned. The prohibition was narrowly directed at a single communicative technique at a single location, leaving the picket free to operate on the rest of the capitol grounds. And the legislative assumptions were reasonable: that picketing in the corridors (a) "creates an oppressive atmosphere which discourages and repels citizen-visitors" and (b) "debases the quality" of the Legislature's deliberative processes. (14 C.A.3d 597.)

[§ 463] Sit-in or Stand-in.

In Brown v. Louisiana (1966) 383 U.S. 131, 86 S.Ct. 719, 15 L.Ed.2d 637, five Blacks staged a peaceful sit-in at the branch library in a Louisiana town. They had been served without discrimination at the library, but were protesting the use of segregated library cards and bookmobiles. Held, there was no evidence to support a conviction for breach of the peace. Thus, the opinion suggests that the defendants had a right to engage in a peaceful demonstration in the library. Four justices denounced this as "a completely new constitutional doctrine" with destructive implications: If one group can take over libraries for one cause, others can do it for other causes, and the next step will be to paralyze the schools. (86 S.Ct. 735, 736, 15 L.Ed.2d 658.)

In Adderley v. Florida (1966) 385 U.S. 39, 87 S.Ct. 242, 17 L.Ed.2d 149, the majority took a different view of a stand-in at a jail. University students went to the county jail to demonstrate their protest of arrests of other students who had attempted to integrate public theaters, and also to protest generally against racial segregation. They were ordered by the sheriff to leave the jail grounds, were warned that they would be arrested if they did not, and were then arrested, charged, and convicted of the statutory crime of "trespass with a malicious and mischievous intent" on the jail premises. Held, convictions affirmed. Edwards v. South Carolina (1963) 372 U.S. 229, 83 S.Ct. 680, 9 L.Ed.2d 697, supra, §393, is distinguishable. The trespass there was on capitol grounds open to the public; here, it was on jail premises built for security purposes and not open to the public. South Carolina's breach of the peace statute was too indefinite and all-embracing; here, a narrow statute was aimed at one limited kind of conduct. (87 S.Ct. 244, 17 L.Ed.2d 152.)

The argument that petitioners had a right to make a peaceful demonstration on this public property was rejected as based on "the assumption that people who want to propagandize protests or views have a constitutional right to do so whenever and however and wherever they please." (87 S.Ct. 247, 17 L.Ed.2d 156.)

Four justices dissented, contending that a jailhouse is one of the seats of government and an obvious center for protest; that the obstruction of traffic was nominal and correctable by ordering petitioners to move out of the way; and that this was a legitimate petition for redress of grievances, which could not be turned into a trespass by fiat of the sheriff. (87 S.Ct. 248, 17 L.Ed.2d 157.) (For restaurant sit-in cases, see infra, §760.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY C. Limitations on the Rights. 9. Antinoise Regulations.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 464

[§ 464] Antinoise Regulations.

Municipal ordinances regulating the use of sound amplifying devices on vehicles and elsewhere call for careful drafting to meet constitutional limitations. (See 122 A.L.R.5th 593 [Validity of State or Local Enactment Regulating Sound Amplification in Public Area].)

(1) Loudspeakers. In Saia v. New York (1948) 334 U.S. 558, 68 S.Ct. 1148, 92 L.Ed. 1574, an ordinance prohibited the use of a sound truck except by permission of the chief of police. Held, the ordinance was unconstitutional on its face because it placed in the hands of the chief of police an uncontrolled discretion, and thereby established a previous restraint on the right of free speech. Loudspeakers are "indispensable instruments of effective public speech." The sound truck "has become an accepted method of political campaigning." And the ordinance "would be a dangerous weapon if it were allowed to get a hold of our public life." Abuses that loudspeakers "create can be controlled by narrowly drawn statutes." (68 S.Ct. 1150, 92 L.Ed. 1578.)

In Kovacs v. Cooper (1949) 336 U.S. 77, 69 S.Ct. 448, 93 L.Ed. 513, an ordinance made it unlawful to use a sound truck or similar instrument that "emits therefrom loud and raucous noises." This was held valid. Three justices took the position that the city had acted reasonably in attempting to control the nuisance of "disturbing noises." "Opportunity to gain the public's ears by objectionably amplified sound on the streets is no more assured by the right of free speech than is the unlimited opportunity to address gatherings on the streets. ... We think that the need for reasonable protection in the homes or business houses from the distracting noises of vehicles equipped with such sound amplifying devices justifies the ordinance." (69 S.Ct. 454, 93 L.Ed. 522.) Two concurring justices saw no merit in this attempted distinction of the Saia case; they felt that a municipality could constitutionally prohibit the use of sound trucks. (69 S.Ct. 454, 459, 93 L.Ed. 523, 528.)

Saia and Kovacs indicate that sound trucks may not be absolutely prohibited, nor subjected to arbitrary regulation in the uncontrolled discretion of local officers, but that reasonable regulations of their use may be made. As a practical matter, however, it is difficult to see how the operator of a loudspeaker can avoid "loud and raucous" noises, and accordingly it would seem that much of the substance of the Saia opinion has been repudiated.

California took the Kovacs approach in Haggerty v. Associated Farmers of Calif. (1955) 44 C.2d 60, 279 P.2d 734. A Fresno County Anti-Noise Ordinance made it unlawful to emit "any loud and raucous noise" on the public highway, including the human voice amplified to the extent that it carries onto private property or is heard by others using the highway. Petitioner, suing on behalf of a labor union, sought an injunction to prevent enforcement against union members using automobile horns and loud speakers to induce farm workers to quit work in a strike for union wage demands. Held, the ordinance was valid. It did not prevent use of all loudspeaking devices (e.g., broadcasting music or unamplified human voice), nor did it prohibit them in all places (it was still possible to use devices on private property, public parks, etc., normal places of public assembly), and the regulation of this noise on the highway was a legitimate police measure to preserve safety and tranquility. (44 C.2d 69.) (See 2 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 561.)

In Wollam v. Palm Springs (1963) 59 C.2d 276, 29 C.R. 1, 379 P.2d 481, defendant city adopted a lengthy sound truck ordinance totally forbidding their use on Sundays and holidays, restricting their hours to 4 per day, limiting volume to a point of inaudibility at more than 200 feet away, and requiring movement at 10 miles or more per hour. Plaintiff sought relief on behalf of himself and members of his union, who were in a dispute with their employers over working conditions. Held, the ordinance was unconstitutional. Reviewing and reconciling Saia and Kovacs, and distinguishing Haggerty, the court held that the constitutional guarantee applies to the means as well as the content of the communication; that in some instances a sound truck may be the only practical means for communication of an opinion; and that in the instant case, the prohibition against the use of parked trucks deprived the union members of the right to communicate their grievances at the jobsite. (59 C.2d 284.)

"In summary, the vice of the present ordinance lies in its practical prohibition of the conveyance of a message to the public. The ordinance prevents any continuous statement, argument, or sustained presentation of a point of view that cannot be transmitted during the truck's fleeting, momentary passage. Yet the purposes of the ordinance could have been achieved without such an incursion into the field of free speech. An ordinance narrowly drawn may properly reach to the evils which it seeks to avoid. Instead, here, the ordinance sweeps within its broad ambit the constitutional right to tell a whole story by means of this method of communication." (59 C.2d 288.) (See United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, AFL-CIO v. Superior Court (1967) 254 C.A.2d 768, 772, 62 C.R. 567 [injunction prohibiting strikers from using mechanical device to amplify human voice in their picketing was unconstitutional attempt to prevent use of bullhorns in communications to workers]; Chavez v. Municipal Court of Visalia Judicial Dist. (1967) 256 C.A.2d 149, 156, 64 C.R. 76 [county ordinance prohibiting use of loudspeaker mounted on vehicle without permit was unconstitutional]; 10 Southwestern L. Rev. 267 [Authority of Municipal Corporations To Abate Unwanted Sounds].)

(2) Other Regulations. In Ward v. Rock Against Racism (1989) 491 U.S. 781, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661, New York City adopted a regulation and a use guideline requiring Bandshell performers in Central Park to use sound-amplification equipment and a sound technician provided by the city. The purpose of the regulation was to decrease the volume of amplified music, which had brought complaints from park users and residents of adjacent areas. Held, the regulation was valid.

"The city's sound amplification guideline is narrowly tailored to serve the substantial and content-neutral governmental interests of avoiding excessive sound volume and providing sufficient amplification within the Bandshell concert ground, and the guideline leaves open ample channels of communication. Accordingly, it is valid under the First Amendment as a reasonable regulation of the place and manner of expression." (109 S.Ct. 2760, 105 L.Ed.2d 683.) (See 25 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 453 [Ward]; 25 U.S.F. L. Rev. 627 [same]; Veh.C. 27007 [driver of vehicle on highway is prohibited from operating "sound amplification system" intended to make sound audible from 50 feet or more away, unless to request assistance or warn of hazardous situation; excepting vehicles operated in parades, etc.].)

C. Limitations on the Rights.

10. Registration and Identification.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 465

[§ 465] In General.

Statutes and ordinances requiring specified classes of persons or organizations to register and provide information to public authorities are common. Their effect, however, may be to expose these persons or organizations to unwarranted adverse publicity and to violate First Amendment freedoms or the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. Hence, they are tested by considering the legislative motive, the public interest asserted, and the impact on those affected.

(1) Valid Regulations. In People v. Zimmerman (1928) 278 U.S. 63, 49 S.Ct. 61, 65, 73 L.Ed. 184, a statute required registration and filing of membership rosters of organizations that condition membership on execution of an oath. It was held valid as applied to the Ku Klux Klan, which had a history of unlawful activities.

Applicants for a business or professional license may be required to give fingerprints. (See People v. Stuller (1970) 10 C.A.3d 582, 595, 89 C.R. 158 [listing statutes on collection agents, private detectives, insurance agents, and others, and upholding ordinance requiring registration and fingerprinting of bartenders]; 41 A.L.R.3d 732.) And other legitimate public interests may support registration or identification statutes or ordinances. (On aliens, see infra, §475; on subversive political organizations, see infra, §477; on election campaign contributions, see supra, §257; on election campaign literature, see infra, §468; on gamblers, see 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §107; on convicted narcotic and sex offenders, see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §§180, 183.)

(2) Invalid Regulations. In Thomas v. Collins (1945) 323 U.S. 516, 65 S.Ct. 315, 89 L.Ed. 430, a Texas statute required any paid labor union organizer to register with and give information to the Secretary of State, and to obtain an organizer's card, before soliciting members. The issue of validity of this identification and registration statute as applied to solicitation and collection of funds was raised but not decided. The Court held that the organizer had not solicited members, and that the statute could not validly be applied to a public address by an organizer. (See In re Porterfield (1946) 28 C.2d 91, 100, 105, 168 P.2d 706 [critical analysis of Thomas and power to regulate, but license ordinance held void for uncertainty].)

In Lambert v. California (1957) 355 U.S. 225, 78 S.Ct. 240, 2 L.Ed.2d 228, a Los Angeles municipal ordinance required a formerly convicted felon to register and furnish information to the chief of police if he remained in the city for more than 5 days. The Court held it unconstitutional on the ground that it applied even though the defendant had no knowledge of the requirement (due process denied). (See Albertson v. Subversive Activities Control Bd. (1965) 382 U.S. 70, 86 S.Ct. 194, 198, 15 L.Ed.2d 165, 171, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §375 [violation of self-incrimination privilege]; N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama (1958) 357 U.S. 449, 78 S.Ct. 1163, 1172, 2 L.Ed.2d 1488, 1499, supra, §379 [exposure of persons acting lawfully to adverse public political pressure].)

b. Handbill Distributor.

[§ 466] Handbill Distributor.

In Talley v. California (1960) 362 U.S. 60, 80 S.Ct. 536, 4 L.Ed.2d 559, a Los Angeles municipal ordinance provided that no person should distribute any handbill unless the name and address of the author and of the person causing distribution to be made were given. Talley passed out handbills headed "National Consumers Mobilization," urging a boycott against those denying equal employment opportunities to Blacks, Mexicans, and Asians. The California Appellate Department of the Superior Court (with a strong dissent) upheld the ordinance and affirmed a conviction. Held, reversed; the ordinance was void on its face.

The main opinion relied on Lovell v. Griffin (1938) 303 U.S. 444, 58 S.Ct. 666, 82 L.Ed. 949, supra, §360, and Schneider v. New Jersey (1939) 308 U.S. 147, 60 S.Ct. 146, 84 L.Ed. 155, supra, §350, which preclude any censorship of handbills, and distinguished valid identification regulations on the ground that this ordinance did not seek to reach those responsible for fraud or libel, but required identification in all circumstances. Thus it violated the "freedom of anonymity" that has played an important role in the history of social criticism, and that was protected in Bates v. Little Rock (1960) 361 U.S. 516, 80 S.Ct. 412, 4 L.Ed.2d 480, supra, §379, and N.A.A.C.P. v. Alabama (1958) 357 U.S. 449, 78 S.Ct. 1163, 1172, 2 L.Ed.2d 1488, 1499, supra, §379. "The reason for those holdings was that identification and fear of reprisal might deter perfectly peaceful discussions of public matters of importance. This broad Los Angeles ordinance is subject to the same infirmity." (80 S.Ct. 539, 4 L.Ed.2d 563.)

The dissenters pointed to the lack of any claim that defendant will suffer injury by identifying the bill with his name; denied the asserted constitutional guarantee of "freedom of anonymous speech"; listed a number of statutory requirements of identification that have been sustained (e.g., newspapers using second-class mail, regulations of lobbying and corrupt political practices); and concluded that the ordinance merely requires that "one who exercises his right of free speech through writing or distributing handbills identify himself just as does one who speaks from the platform. The ordinance makes for the responsibility in writing that is present in public utterance." (80 S.Ct. 542, 4 L.Ed.2d 566.)

C. Limitations on the Rights.

10. Registration and Identification.

c. Anonymous Recorded Phone Messages.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 467

[§ 467] Anonymous Recorded Phone Messages.

Talley v. California (1960) 362 U.S. 60, 80 S.Ct. 536, 4 L.Ed.2d 559, supra, §466, protects anonymity in any form of expression. In Huntley v. Public Util. Com. (1968) 69 C.2d 67, 69 C.R. 605, 442 P.2d 685, the Federal Communications Commission, in response to complaints about anonymous recorded telephone messages, requested A. T. & T. to make the sponsor's name and address available, and P. T. & T. and other state companies adopted regulations to that effect in 46 states. California's regulation, approved by the Public Utilities Commission, required subscribers to include their names and addresses in the recorded announcement, on penalty of termination of the service. Held, the regulation was void.

(a) Anonymity may be an indispensable prerequisite to speech, where its content may lead to harassment or reprisal, fear or apprehension. The Talley case makes it clear that First Amendment freedom of speech includes the right to remain anonymous; and this right encompasses all forms of expression, whether they be writings or, as here, a recorded message published over the telephone. (69 C.2d 74.)

(b) The right may be constitutionally impaired only where there is a compelling state interest. Thus, in Canon v. Justice Court for Lake Valley Judicial Dist. of El Dorado (1964) 61 C.2d 446, 39 C.R. 228, 393 P.2d 428, infra, §468, infringement was minimal and justified by a sufficient state interest. (69 C.2d 75.)

(c) No compelling interest justified this regulation. There was no showing of fear of defamation, and a person defamed can easily ascertain the identity of the defamer from P. T. & T. records. Also, the identification of "irresponsible messages" involves a test of degree of popular acceptance, which is not a criterion for determining the boundaries of speech. (69 C.2d 76.)

(d) The theory that Talley deals only with "primary actors," and not an "intervening neutral" like the telephone company, is unsound. P. T. & T. is a public utility whose regulations are made effective only by state action. (69 C.2d 76.)

(e) The F.C.C. identification requirement for broadcasters is distinguishable. A broadcast, under federal licensing laws and in an area greatly affecting the public interest, is quite different from a recorded telephone message actively sought by the caller. (69 C.2d 78.)

d. Author of Attack on Candidate.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 468

[§ 468] Author of Attack on Candidate.

Former Elec.C. 12047, as it read prior to 1965, made it a misdemeanor to distribute a writing attacking a candidate for public office unless it contained the name and address of the printer, and either two officers of the issuing organization or "some voter of this State, who is responsible for it." In Canon v. Justice Court for Lake Valley Judicial Dist. of El Dorado (1964) 61 C.2d 446, 39 C.R. 228, 393 P.2d 428, the statute, except for one defect, was held constitutional.

(a) The purpose--identification to allow the electorate to evaluate campaign material and candidates to refute charges--is legitimate. The Legislature found that scurrilous smear attacks are common and contrary to the public interest; 36 other state legislatures and Congress found similar legislation necessary. (61 C.2d 452, 453.)

(b) Since the decision in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686, supra, §426, protecting the critic of public officers or candidates from defamation suits, the need for anonymity is less and the need for protection from scurrilous attacks is greater. This justifies the limited impairment of freedom of expression involved. Identification permits confrontation and makes refutation easier. (61 C.2d 458.)

(c) "We concluded, therefore, that the public interest in more complete information and clean, free elections, along with the incidental benefit of maintaining an environment more hospitable to candidates for public office, exceeds the interest in the marginal decrease in freedom of expression resulting from loss of anonymity in the instances in which the statute is applicable." (61 C.2d 459.)

(d) The statute, however, calls for disclosure by "some voter ... responsible for it," meaning that a person issuing campaign literature can comply only if he or she is a California voter or by obtaining the consent of some voter to place his or her name on it. Not only does this defeat the purpose of identification of the real issuer, it discriminates against individuals who are not California voters, and is therefore an invalid restraint on freedom of expression. Elec.C. 12049 (later repealed), requiring disclosure in writings dealing with ballot issues, merely calls for identification of "any individual responsible." (61 C.2d 460.) Elec.C. 12047 was amended to conform to the decision, and subsequently repealed. (See 4 A.L.R.4th 741 [validity and construction of state statutes prohibiting anonymous political advertising].)

e. Author of Campaign Materials.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 469

[§ 469] Author of Campaign Materials.

Elec.C. 29410 required disclosure of the name and address of the person or campaign committee responsible for any campaign materials, thus prohibiting all anonymous literature that sets forth arguments, information, or ideas in support of or in opposition to candidates or ballot measures. In Schuster v. Municipal Court (1980) 109 C.A.3d 887, 167 C.R. 447, the statute was held to be an unconstitutionally overbroad restraint of freedom of speech, violative of the First Amendment and Cal. Const., Art. I, §2. The opinion relies on Talley v. California (1960) 362 U.S. 60, 80 S.Ct. 536, 4 L.Ed.2d 559, supra, §466, and Huntley v. Public Util. Com. (1968) 69 C.2d 67, 69 C.R. 605, 442 P.2d 685, supra, §467 (109 C.A.3d 894, 895), rejects as insufficient the legislative findings of compelling state interest in the integrity of the electoral process (109 C.A.3d 896, 897), and notes that other jurisdictions have reached the same conclusion as to similar legislation (109 C.A.3d 899). The court adds:

"Concerning the governmental interests in assisting the electorate in distinguishing between truth and falsity, facilitating redress for libel, and discouraging through criminal punishment campaign falsity, former section 12047 and the Talley and Canon decisions have taught us that such state interests can be furthered through more narrowly constructed statutes without the criminalization of anonymously uttering the truth. The failure of section 29410 to distinguish between protected and unprotected speech constitutes its crowning blow of unconstitutionality." (109 C.A.3d 897.)

The constitutionally objectionable provisions were deleted in 1983. The statute was subsequently repealed and has been replaced by Elec.C. 16, which requires that a copy of the statute on mass mailings, Govt.C. 84305 (supra, §277), be provided to each candidate and to proponents of local initiatives or referenda. (See Griset v. Fair Political Practices Com. (1994) 8 C.4th 851, 864, 865, 35 C.R.2d 659, 884 P.2d 116, supra, §277 [upholding constitutionality of Govt.C. 84305, requiring candidates and their committees to identify themselves on mass mailings to voters, and rejecting claim, based on Schuster, that failure to distinguish between protected and unprotected speech renders statute unconstitutional]; on campaign disclosures generally, see supra, §275 et seq.)

In McIntyre v. Ohio Elections Com. (1995) 514 U.S. 334, 115 S.Ct. 1511, 131 L.Ed.2d 426, the Court struck down an Ohio statute that prohibited the distribution of anonymous campaign literature. The state's asserted interest in providing the electorate with relevant information was "plainly insufficient," because "the identity of the speaker is no different from other components of the document's content that the author is free to include or exclude." (115 S.Ct. 1519, 1520, 131 L.Ed.2d 440, 441.) The state's interest in preventing fraudulent and libelous statements during election campaigns, while important, is vindicated by means of other, more direct prohibitions, and does not justify the extremely broad reach of the statute, which encompasses all documents without regard to whether they are arguably false or misleading. (115 S.Ct. 1520, 1521, 131 L.Ed.2d 441, 442.) (See 109 Harv. L. Rev. 180.)

[§ 470] Earlier Statutes.

The cases dealing with the World War I federal Espionage Act and peacetime Criminal Syndicalism Laws took a broad view of the legislative power to prohibit speech that is dangerous to the public welfare in its advocacy of sabotage or violence in accomplishing political or economic changes. (On the federal statute, see Abrams v. United States (1919) 250 U.S. 616, 40 S.Ct. 17, 63 L.Ed. 1173; Hartzel v. United States (1944) 322 U.S. 680, 64 S.Ct. 1233, 88 L.Ed. 1534 [conviction of pro-German author of pamphlets sent to prominent persons including military personnel was reversed for insufficiency of proof of criminal intent]; on state criminal syndicalism laws, see Gitlow v. New York (1925) 268 U.S. 652, 45 S.Ct. 625, 69 L.Ed. 1138; People v. Steelik (1921) 187 C. 361, 374, 375, 203 P. 78; People v. Chambers (1937) 22 C.A.2d 687, 699, 72 P.2d 746; and see 56 Cal. L. Statutes and ordinances prohibiting the display of a flag or other device as a symbol of opposition to the government or as an aid to seditious propaganda received varied treatment. (See In re Hartman (1920) 182 C. 447, 449, 188 P. 548 [ordinance was unconstitutional as covering advocacy of peaceful changes]; Stromberg v. California (1931) 283 U.S. 359, 51 S.Ct. 532, 75 L.Ed. 1117 [statute was void in part for uncertainty].)

Whitney v. California (1927) 274 U.S. 357, 47 S.Ct. 641, 71 L.Ed. 1095, was overruled, and the Ohio Criminal Syndicalism Act was held unconstitutional, in Brandenburg v. Ohio (1969) 395 U.S. 444, 89 S.Ct. 1827, 23 L.Ed.2d 430. The court declared that decisions subsequent to Whitney have fashioned "the principle that the constitutional guarantees of free speech and free press do not permit a State to forbid or proscribe advocacy of the use of force or of law violation except where such advocacy is directed to inciting or producing imminent lawless action and is likely to incite or produce such action." (89 S.Ct. 1829, 23 L.Ed.2d 434.) (See In re Harris (1971) 20 C.A.3d 632, 634, 97 C.R. 844 [habeas corpus granted to release defendant charged with violation of California Criminal Syndicalism Act; Brandenburg applied, and Act held unconstitutional]; 22 Stanf. L. Rev. 1163 [Whitney and Brandenburg].)

C. Limitations on the Rights.

11. Loyalty Regulations.

a. Antisubversive Criminal Legislation.

2. Smith Act.

[§ 471] Smith Act.

The Smith Act (18 U.S.C., §2385) makes it unlawful to (1) knowingly or willingly advocate or teach, etc., the overthrow of our government by force or violence; (2) publish or distribute this matter with the intent to cause the overthrow of the government; (3) organize or knowingly become a member of a group with these purposes; or (4) conspire to commit any of these acts. In Dennis v. United States (1951) 341 U.S. 494, 71 S.Ct. 857, 95 L.Ed. 1137, petitioners, Communist Party organizers and leaders, were convicted of violation of the conspiracy section. On certiorari, the binding facts found below were that petitioners, controlling the political apparatus of the party, established the party policy and objective of overthrow of the government by a violent revolution whenever the propitious occasion appeared. Held, the statute was constitutional and the convictions were properly affirmed.

(a) There is no "right" to rebel by violence against a government that provides the means of peaceful change, and the government has the power to protect itself. "We reject any principle of governmental helplessness in the face of preparation for revolution, which principle, carried to its logical conclusion, must lead to anarchy." (71 S.Ct. 863, 95 L.Ed. 1148.)

(b) The statute does not punish peaceful study and discussion of the philosophical theories of Communism; it is directed at advocacy, not discussion. (71 S.Ct. 863, 95 L.Ed. 1148.)

(c) Where the statute, as here, punishes speech (teaching and advocacy), the clear and present danger test governs (see supra, §407), but it is not a rigid rule and its application depends on the circumstances of each case. Where, e.g., the interest to be protected is deemed too insubstantial to warrant restriction of speech, the regulation will fail; but "overthrow of the government by force and violence is certainly a substantial enough interest for the Government to limit speech." (71 S.Ct. 867, 95 L.Ed. 1152.) That the rebellion is not imminent or likely to succeed is immaterial; an attempt to overthrow the government, by a highly organized conspiracy, is, in present world conditions, a sufficient danger. (See 70 Am.Jur.2d (1987 ed.), Sedition, Subversive Activities, and Treason §63 et seq.)

The implication that Dennis obliterated the dividing line between legal advocacy of abstract doctrine and illegal advocacy of action was dispelled in Yates v. United States (1957) 354 U.S. 298, 77 S.Ct. 1064, 1 L.Ed.2d 1356, reversing a conviction of Communist Party officials for improper instructions. "We are thus faced with the question whether the Smith Act prohibits advocacy and teaching of forcible overthrow as an abstract principle, divorced from any effect to instigate action to that end, so long as such advocacy or teaching is engaged in with evil intent. We hold that it does not." (77 S.Ct. 1076, 1 L.Ed.2d 1374.)

A conviction for membership in the Communist Party with knowledge of its purposes was affirmed in Scales v. United States (1961) 367 U.S. 203, 81 S.Ct. 1469, 6 L.Ed.2d 782. "Dennis and Yates have definitely laid at rest any doubt but that present advocacy of future action for violent overthrow satisfies statutory and constitutional requirements equally with advocacy of immediate action to that end." (81 S.Ct. 1497, 6 L.Ed.2d 814.) (See 28 San Diego L. Rev. 1 [Communists and the First Amendment: The Shaping of Freedom of Advocacy in the Cold War Era].)

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 472

[§ 472] Federal Preemption.

A state may enact sedition and anti-sabotage laws (see supra, §470), but only where the federal government has not occupied the field. In Pennsylvania v. Nelson (1956) 350 U.S. 497, 76 S.Ct. 477, 100 L.Ed. 640, a conviction of a Communist Party member for violation of the Pennsylvania Sedition Act was reversed on the ground of supersession.

(a) The aggregate of federal statutes, including the Smith Act (18 U.S.C., §2385), the Internal Security Act of 1950 (former 50 U.S.C., §781 et seq.), and the Communist Control Act of 1954 (50 U.S.C., §841), makes clear the congressional intention to occupy the field of sedition, and a state statute is superseded though it purports only to supplement the federal law ("coincidence is as ineffective as opposition"). (76 S.Ct. 481, 100 L.Ed. 653.)

(b) The subject is one in which the federal interest is so dominant as to preclude enforcement of state laws on the same subject; it is a matter of vital national concern and in no sense a local enforcement problem. (76 S.Ct. 481, 482, 100 L.Ed. 653.)

(c) Enforcement of state acts presents a serious danger of conflict with the administration of the federal program, which has been emphasized by requests of federal officials to state officers to turn over information on subversive activities and allow the Department of Justice to take charge of the matter. (76 S.Ct. 482, 483, 100 L.Ed. 654.)

4. Burning Draft Card.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 473

[§ 473] Burning Draft Card.

The Military Selective Service Act (50 U.S.C. Appx., §462(b)) makes it a crime to knowingly destroy or mutilate a Selective Service Registration Certificate (draft card). In United States v. O'Brien (1968) 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672, defendant publicly burned his certificate for the avowed purpose of influencing others to adopt his anti-war beliefs. Held, conviction affirmed; the statute is constitutional.

(a) The statute, prohibiting an act, does not abridge free speech on its face, any more than a law prohibiting destruction of a driver's license or tax records. (88 S.Ct. 1678, 20 L.Ed.2d 679.)

(b) The contention that the act was "symbolic speech," and that the Constitution protects all modes of communication by conduct, is unsound. When speech and nonspeech elements are combined in conduct, a sufficiently important governmental interest can justify incidental limitations. (88 S.Ct. 1678, 20 L.Ed.2d 679.)

(c) The statute meets this test. (1) The power of Congress to raise and support armies is broad and sweeping, and supports compulsory military service. (2) The draft certificate aids in the administration of the system. (3) Destruction of the certificate was a wilful frustration of this governmental interest. (88 S.Ct. 1679, 20 L.Ed.2d 680.) (See 81 Harv. L. Rev. 1347 [criticizing Court of Appeals decision]; 6 San Diego L. Rev. 81.)

11. Loyalty Regulations.

5. Desecrating Flag.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 474

[§ 474] Desecrating Flag.

In Smith v. Goguen (1974) 415 U.S. 566, 94 S.Ct. 1242, 39 L.Ed.2d 605, defendant appeared on a public street in a Massachusetts town with a four- by six-inch American flag sewed to the left rear of his blue jeans. He was not charged with physical desecration, but with violation of the portion of the Massachusetts flag misuse statute punishing a person who "treats contemptuously the flag of the United States." Held, the statute was void for vagueness, and it was unnecessary to consider the challenge of overbreadth or other First Amendment grounds.

(a) Casual treatment of the flag "has become a wide-spread contemporary phenomenon," and the legislative intent could not have been to make criminal every informal use of it. Due process requires reasonably clear notice of what the statute forbids, and the notice standards were not satisfied here. (94 S.Ct. 1247, 2148, 39 L.Ed.2d 612.)

(b) The additional and most meaningful aspect of the vagueness doctrine is the requirement that a Legislature establish minimal guidelines to govern law enforcement. Where, as here, inherently vague statutory language permits selective enforcement, due process is denied. (94 S.Ct. 1248, 39 L.Ed.2d 613.)

(c) There are areas of human conduct where the Legislatures cannot establish precise standards; e.g., disorderly conduct, requiring an on-the-spot assessment of the need to keep order. But there is no reason to commit such broad discretion to law enforcement officers in the area of flag contempt. Display of the flag is so common, and takes so many forms, that the legislature should define "with substantial specificity" what constitutes forbidden treatment. (94 S.Ct. 1251, 39 L.Ed.2d 616.)

Three justices dissented. (94 S.Ct. 1255, 1256, 39 L.Ed.2d 621, 622.) (See Street v. New York (1969) 394 U.S. 576, 89 S.Ct. 1354, 22 L.Ed.2d 572 [conviction based on mere words under statute making it criminal to publicly deface the flag "either by words or act" would be unconstitutional]; 41 A.L.R.3d 502 [what constitutes violation of flag desecration statutes]; on crime of defacing, trampling, etc., U.S. or California flag, see Mil. & Vet.C. 614, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Property, §261.)

In Spence v. Washington (1974) 418 U.S. 405, 94 S.Ct. 2727, 41 L.Ed.2d 842, defendant, a college student, hung a three- by five-foot flag out of the window of his apartment in Seattle, Washington. It was upside down, and had attached to it by removable tape the peace symbol (circle enclosing a trident). He was convicted under a statute that prohibited various kinds of improper use of the flag. Held, conviction reversed.

(a) The flag was privately owned, displayed on private property, and involved no breach of the peace. (94 S.Ct. 2729, 41 L.Ed.2d 846.)

(b) A flag may be used, as other symbols have been used, as a means of communication of protected expression. Here, defendant sought to protest the recent invasion of Cambodia and the Kent State University killings, and to stress the objective of peace. "An intent to convey a particularized message was present, and in the surrounding circumstances the likelihood was great that the message would be understood by those who viewed it." (94 S.Ct. 2730, 41 L.Ed.2d 847.)

(c) The state asserted the interest in preserving the national flag as an unalloyed symbol of our country. Assuming the validity of this interest, the statute was unconstitutionally applied to defendant's activity. "[H]is message was direct, likely to be understood, and within the contours of the First Amendment." (94 S.Ct. 2732, 41 L.Ed.2d 849.)

Three justices dissented. (94 S.Ct. 2733, 41 L.Ed.2d 850.) (See 88 Harv. L. Rev. 1482 [roles of categorization and balancing in flag desecration cases]; 8 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 689 [Spence and other flag cases]; 22 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 974 [same].)

In Texas v. Johnson (1989) 491 U.S. 397, 109 S.Ct. 2533, 105 L.Ed.2d 342, defendant was convicted of desecrating a flag in violation of Texas law after publicly burning an American flag as a means of political protest. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals reversed defendant's conviction, and the Supreme Court, on certiorari, affirmed the decision.

(a) The act of burning the flag was expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment. (109 S.Ct. 2538, 2539, 105 L.Ed.2d 352, 353, citing Spence and other cases.) "The expressive, overtly political nature of this conduct was both intentional and overwhelmingly apparent." (109 S.Ct. 2540, 105 L.Ed.2d 354.)

(b) Where speech and nonspeech elements are combined in the same course of conduct, the test of United States v. O'Brien (1968) 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672, supra, §473, is applied: whether a sufficiently important governmental interest in regulating the nonspeech element can justify incidental limitations on First Amendment freedoms. (109 S.Ct. 2540, 105 L.Ed.2d 355.)

(c) The asserted state interest in preventing breaches of the peace cannot be sustained. It amounts to a claim that an audience that takes serious offense at particular expression is necessarily likely to disturb the peace. (109 S.Ct. 2541, 105 L.Ed.2d 356.) And the conduct does not fall within the small class of "fighting words." No reasonable onlooker would have regarded defendant's generalized expression of dissatisfaction with the government's policies as a direct personal insult. (109 S.Ct. 2542, 105 L.Ed.2d 357.)

(d) The state's interest in preserving the flag as a symbol of nationhood and national unity does not justify the conviction. Under the principles announced in Boos v. Barry (1988) 485 U.S. 312, 108 S.Ct. 1157, 99 L.Ed.2d 333, supra, §342, defendant's political expression was restricted because of the content of the message he conveyed, and the state's interest must be subjected to "the most exacting scrutiny." (109 S.Ct. 2543, 105 L.Ed.2d 359.) The Government may not prohibit the expression of an idea simply because society finds the idea itself offensive or disagreeable; and no exception to this principle has been recognized even where the state's flag was involved. (109 S.Ct. 2544, 2546, 105 L.Ed.2d 360, 362, citing Spence and Street v. New York, supra.) "We can imagine no more appropriate response to burning a flag than waving one's own, no better way to counter a flag-burner's message than by saluting the flag that burns, no surer means of preserving the dignity even of the flag that burned than by--as one witness here did--according it remains a respectful burial. We do not consecrate the flag by punishing its desecration, for in doing so we dilute the freedom that this cherished emblem represents." (109 S.Ct. 2547, 105 L.Ed.2d 364.)

After the decision in Johnson, Congress passed the Flag Protection Act of 1989. (See 17 Hastings Const. L. Q. 353.) In United States v. Eichman (1990) 496 U.S. 310, 110 S.Ct. 2404, 110 L.Ed.2d 287, the Court, with four justices dissenting, held the statute unconstitutional.

(a) The Government argued that, unlike the statute involved in Johnson, the present Act did not target expressive conduct on the basis of the content of its message; it proscribed conduct that damages or mistreats a flag, without regard to the actor's motive, his or her intended message, or the likely effects of his or her conduct on onlookers. (110 S.Ct. 2408, 110 L.Ed.2d 294.) "But the mere destruction or disfigurement of a particular physical manifestation of the symbol, without more, does not diminish or otherwise affect the symbol itself in any way. ... Rather, the Government's desire to preserve the flag as a symbol for certain national ideals is implicated 'only when a person's treatment of the flag communicates [a] message' to others that is inconsistent with those ideals." (110 S.Ct. 2408, 110 L.Ed.2d 294, 295.)

(b) "We are aware that desecration of the flag is deeply offensive to many. But the same might be said, for example, of virulent ethnic and religious epithets, ... vulgar repudiations of the draft, ... and scurrilous caricatures. ... Punishing desecration of the flag dilutes the very freedom that makes this emblem so revered, and worth revering." (110 S.Ct. 2410, 110 L.Ed.2d 296.) (See 42 Stanf. L. Rev. 1337 [Saving Old Glory: On Constitutional Iconography].)

(2) Principal Statutory Grounds. The Immigration and Nationality Act authorizes the deportation of aliens who advocate the violent overthrow of the U.S. Government or who have been convicted of violating certain acts or offenses relating to national security, including selective service, espionage, sabotage, treason, terrorism, and trading-with-the-enemy. (8 U.S.C., §1227(a)(2), (4); see 3B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §1868 et seq.) It also provides for the deportation of those convicted of specified crimes involving moral turpitude after entry. (8 U.S.C., §1227(a)(2); see Reid v. Immigration & Naturalization Service (1975) 420 U.S. 619, 95 S.Ct. 1164, 1168, 43 L.Ed.2d 501, 507 [false assertion of citizenship held equivalent to excludable ground of entry without inspection]; 22 Hastings Const. L. Q. 491 [deportation of alien parents of citizen child as unconstitutional de facto deportation of child]; 2 Pepperdine L. Rev. 52 [criminal convictions]; 13 San Diego L. Rev. 454 [deportation for marijuana conviction]; 23 U.S.F. L. Rev. 415 [standards for denaturalization and deportation of persons accused of crimes prior to entry]; 3B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §1824 et seq.)

A former version of the moral turpitude provision was given a highly technical construction in favor of the alien in Costello v. Immigration & Naturalization Service (1964) 376 U.S. 120, 84 S.Ct. 580, 11 L.Ed.2d 559. C, born in Italy, became a naturalized citizen in 1925. He was convicted of two income tax offenses in 1954, and his citizenship was revoked for fraud in 1959. Hence, under the section making revocation relate back to the date of naturalization, he was an alien in 1954 when convicted of the two crimes. Held, however, he was not subject to deportation. The provision establishing the ground applies only to a person who was an alien at the time of the convictions; the relation back section, based on a fiction and involving a forfeiture, should not be applied without a clear congressional intent. (84 S.Ct. 586, 11 L.Ed.2d 565.)

The dissenting justices offered a caustic comment: "Today's holding has an anomalous result. The alien who has not become a citizen is deportable for the commission of two crimes. But not so the alien who has committed two crimes and has also been denaturalized for fraud practiced in procuring his citizenship. His fraud becomes his ready and effective shield, a result which I cannot believe Congress intended to enact into law." (84 S.Ct. 589, 11 L.Ed.2d 568.)

(3) Procedure. Although an alien entrant may be excluded or expelled by administrative order, deportation of a resident alien without a hearing is beyond the legislative and executive authority. "It is well established that if an alien is a lawful permanent resident of the United States and remains physically present there, he is a person within the protection of the Fifth Amendment. He may not be deprived of his life, liberty or property without due process of law. Although it later may be established, as respondents contend, that petitioner can be expelled and deported, yet before his expulsion, he is entitled to notice of the nature of the charge and a hearing at least before an executive or administrative tribunal. Although Congress may prescribe conditions for his expulsion and deportation, not even Congress may expel him without allowing him a fair opportunity to be heard. For example, he is entitled to a fair chance to prove mistaken identity." (Kwong Hai Chew v. Colding (1953) 344 U.S. 590, 73 S.Ct. 472, 477, 97 L.Ed. 576, 583.)

The statute contains a detailed procedure involving investigation, arrest, hearing, and administrative appeal. (See Marcello v. Bonds (1955) 349 U.S. 302, 75 S.Ct. 757, 761, 99 L.Ed. 1107, 1115; Jay v. Boyd (1956) 351 U.S. 345, 76 S.Ct. 919, 100 L.Ed. 1242; 8 Hastings Const. L. United States (1960) 362 U.S. 217, 80 S.Ct. 683, 694, 4 L.Ed.2d 668, 681.)

(4) Judicial Review. Judicial review of a deportation order is generally available under the provisions governing review of orders of federal agencies (see 28 U.S.C., §2341 et seq.). (8 U.S.C., §1252(a); see 8 U.S.C., §1225(b)(1) [habeas corpus review of order regarding inspection of aliens for admission]; Stone v. Immigration & Naturalization Service (1995) 514 U.S. 386, 115 S.Ct. 1537, 1543, 1544, 131 L.Ed.2d 465, 474 [motion for reconsideration of final deportation order does not toll statutory period for filing petition for judicial review of order]; 3B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Aliens and Citizens §2025 et seq.) (On standard of proof in deportation cases, see Woodby v. Immigration & Naturalization Service (1966) 385 U.S. 276, 87 S.Ct. 483, 488, 17 L.Ed.2d 362, 369 [same standard as in denaturalization and expatriation cases: clear and convincing evidence required to support deportation order]; on de novo judicial determination of claim to United States citizenship, see Agosto v. Immigration & Naturalization Service (1978) 436 U.S. 748, 98 S.Ct. 2081, 2085, 56 L.Ed.2d 677, 684.)

(5) Suspension of Deportation. The statute authorizes the Attorney General to suspend deportation in cases of extreme hardship. (8 U.S.C., §1229b(b)(1); see 8 U.S.C., §§1182(a)(6), 1229b(b)(2) [alien subjected to extreme cruelty or battering by U.S. citizen spouse, parent, or family member]; *Jay v. c. Registration of Subversive Organizations.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 477

[§ 477] Registration of Subversive Organizations.

(1) In General. Registration requirements for subversive organizations have been upheld, but they cannot be applied in a manner infringing on constitutional rights. Thus, in Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee v. McGrath (1951) 341 U.S. 123, 71 S.Ct. 624, 95 L.Ed. 817, a suit for declaratory and injunctive relief was brought to review the Attorney General's inclusion of plaintiff organizations in a list of subversive organizations furnished by him to the federal Loyalty Review Board and Civil Service Commission, pursuant to the President's Executive Order. The several opinions of the Court generally hold that due process requires notice and hearing before such a listing can be made.

The former Internal Security Act of 1950 (also known as the Subversive Activities Control Act), regulating "Communist-action" organizations, required that they register as such with the Attorney General. If the Attorney General had reason to believe that an unregistered organization came within the Act, a proceeding before the Subversive Activities Control Board to determine the fact would be initiated. (Former 50 U.S.C., §781 et seq.; see 70 Am.Jur.2d (1987 ed.), Sedition, Subversive Activities, and Treason §74 et seq.) In upholding the former Act, the Court in Communist Party of the United States v. Subversive Activities Control Bd. (1961) 367 U.S. 1, 81 S.Ct. 1357, 6 L.Ed.2d 625, answered the familiar argument that if the Communist Party may be required to register and give identifying information, so may any group with unpopular political objectives or ideology: The Act applies only to foreign-dominated organizations that "work primarily to advance the objectives of a world movement controlled by the government of a foreign country. ... This is the full purported reach of the statute and its fullest effect. There is no attempt here to impose stifling obligations upon the proponents of a particular political creed as such, or even to check the importation of particular political ideas from abroad for propagation here." (81 S.Ct. 1414, 6 L.Ed.2d 694.)

The Communist Control Act of 1954 outlaws the Communist Party. (50 U.S.C., §841.) As a subversive organization rather than a political party, it is not entitled to the rights, privileges, or immunities of other legal bodies. (50 U.S.C., §842.)

(2) Distinction: Individual Members. In a subsequent decision, the Court held that the requirement of registration of individual members of these organizations violated the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. (Albertson v. Subversive Activities Control Bd. (1965) 382 U.S. 70, 86 S.Ct. 194, 198, 15 L.Ed.2d 165, 171, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §375; see *People v. ordinance requiring members to register was violative of privilege]; 34 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 467 [self-reporting schemes and Fifth Amendment since Albertson].)

d. Investigation of Subversive Activities.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 478

[§ 478] Investigation of Subversive Activities.

The power of congressional committees to investigate subversive activities is established. (See supra, §164.) However, because admission of this conduct involves the possibility of criminal prosecution, a witness questioned on Communist membership or affiliations may make a timely and proper claim of the privilege against self-incrimination (Fifth Amendment). (See Blau v. United States (1950) 340 U.S. 159, 71 S.Ct. 223, 95 L.Ed. 170; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §502.)

Where no claim is made of the Fifth Amendment privilege, and the witness simply claims the right, under the First Amendment, to privacy of personal political beliefs and associations (see supra, §378 et seq.); the governmental interest has been upheld. In Barenblatt v. United States (1959) 360 U.S. 109, 79 S.Ct. 1081, 1094, 3 L.Ed.2d 1115, 1130, petitioner, a teacher, was questioned by the Subcommittee of the House Committee on Un-American Activities as to present and past membership in the Communist Party, and was convicted of contempt for failure to answer. In affirming the conviction, the court pointed out that the situation called for a balancing of the competing private and public interests in the particular circumstances; that the Communist Party was not an ordinary political party and the power to investigate Communist activity is well established; and that the fact that the field of education was involved was not a reason for denial of inquiry into revolutionary Communist activities. (See supra, §164.)

11. Loyalty Regulations.

e. Loyalty Tests for Employees.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 479

[§ 479] In General.

The federal security program, by statute and executive orders, has resulted in widespread investigation of subversive activity and the imposition of loyalty tests in determining eligibility for federal employment or "security clearance." The decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court have been mainly concerned with statutory interpretation and procedure rather than with constitutionality. (See Peters v. Hobby (1955) 349 U.S. 331, 75 S.Ct. 790, 99 L.Ed. 1129; Cole v. Young (1956) 351 U.S. 536, 76 S.Ct. 861, 100 L.Ed. 1396; Greene v. McElroy (1959) 360 U.S. 474, 79 S.Ct. 1400, 3 L.Ed.2d 1377, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §84 [right of confrontation and cross-examination].)

United States v. Robel (1967) 389 U.S. 258, 88 S.Ct. 419, 19 L.Ed.2d 508, emphasizes the constitutional protection of innocent or passive membership in a subversive organization. The Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950 (former 50 U.S.C., §781 et seq.) provides that, when a Communist-action organization is under a final order to register, it is unlawful for a member of it to engage in employment in any defense facility. The Communist Party is under this order. Defendant, a member, was employed as a machinist in a Seattle shipyard designated by the Secretary of Defense as a "defense facility." He was indicted for engaging in this employment with knowledge of these facts. The district court read into the statute a requirement of active membership in the Party and specific intent to further its aims; the Government opposed this limited construction. Held, the statute was an unconstitutional abridgment of the First Amendment right of association; the district court's attempt to save it was not permissible in view of Aptheker v. Secretary of State (1964) 378 U.S. 500, 84 S.Ct. 1659, 12 L.Ed.2d 992, supra, §404, holding a similar provision void for overbreadth and lack of certainty. "It is precisely because that statute [i.e., the one here involved] sweeps indiscriminately across all types of associations with Communist-action groups, without regard to the quality and degree of membership, that it runs afoul of the First Amendment." (88 S.Ct. 423, 19 L.Ed.2d 513.)

The war power "cannot be invoked as a talismanic incantation to support any exercise of congressional power which can be brought within its ambit." (88 S.Ct. 423, 19 L.Ed.2d 514.) Thus, Congress can prescribe criminal penalties for espionage and sabotage, deny access to secrets, declare sensitive positions off limits, etc.; but it must realize its objectives by means less drastic than this invasion of First Amendment freedoms. (88 S.Ct. 425, 19 L.Ed.2d 515.) (See 82 Harv. L. Rev. 143 [Robel]; 85 Harv. L. Rev. 1160 et seq. [extended review of problem].)

[§ 480] Disclosure of Communist Membership.

(1) Past Membership in Subversive Organization. In Garner v. Board of Public Works of Los Angeles (1951) 341 U.S. 716, 71 S.Ct. 909, 95 L.Ed. 1317, infra, §482, a Los Angeles municipal ordinance required a city employee to file an affidavit stating whether he is or ever was a member of the Communist Party. Held, this was a valid inquiry into matters that might be relevant to fitness for public service. "Past conduct may well relate to present fitness; past loyalty may have a reasonable relationship to present and future trust. Both are commonly inquired into in determining fitness for both high and low positions in private industry and are not less relevant in public employment." (71 S.Ct. 912, 95 L.Ed. 1322.)

(2) Present Membership. In Adler v. Board of Education of New York (1952) 342 U.S. 485, 72 S.Ct. 380, 96 L.Ed. 517, a New York statute provided that membership in certain listed subversive organizations (the list compiled after hearings) was prima facie evidence of unfitness for school employment. Held, the statute was valid; the rebuttable presumption was reasonably related to the fact of membership in a subversive organization. And the power of the state to impose reasonable conditions on public employment was restated: "In the employment of officials and teachers of the school system, the state may very properly inquire into the company they keep, and we know of no rule, constitutional or otherwise, that prevents the state, when determining the fitness and loyalty of such persons, from considering the organizations and persons with whom they associate." (72 S.Ct. 385, 96 L.Ed. 524.) (See Steinmetz v. California State Bd. of Education (1955) 44 C.2d 816, 285 P.2d 617, infra, §481 [following Garner and Adler]; 85 Harv. L. Rev. 1160 et seq. 3. Cooperation With Investigating Agencies.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 481

[§ 481] Cooperation With Investigating Agencies.

Many states have enacted statutes that require public employees to appear before investigating committees or other bodies and to answer questions concerning subversive activities. (See, e.g., Govt.C. 1028.1.) Early cases, mainly dealing with police officers involved in criminal investigations by a grand jury, had established the right to discharge an employee for claiming the privilege against self-incrimination. (See Christal v. Police Com. of San Francisco (1939) 33 C.A.2d 564, 567, 92 P.2d 416; 44 A.L.R.2d 789 [Assertion of Immunity as Ground for Removing or Discharging Public Officer or Employee]; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses §362.) Other cases made similar holdings with respect to teachers claiming the privilege before legislative committees or governing boards of schools. (See Pockman v. Leonard (1952) 39 C.2d 676, 687, 249 P.2d 267, infra, §482.) But later decisions indicate that not every refusal to answer questions is a ground for discharge.

In Steinmetz v. California State Bd. of Education (1955) 44 C.2d 816, 285 P.2d 617, the court construed and upheld Govt.C. 1028.1. Petitioner, an associate professor at a state college, was questioned by the president of the state Board of Education. He refused to answer such questions as "Are you knowingly a member of the Communist Party?" and "Have you at any time since September 10, 1948, knowingly been a member of the Communist Party?" Held, the questions were relative to his fitness for public employment, and he was properly dismissed for failure to answer. (44 C.2d 823.) (See Board of Education of Los Angeles v. Wilkinson (1954) 125 C.A.2d 100, 105, 270 P.2d 82 [local Board of Education rule requiring employee to answer such questions, upheld]; Board of Education of Los Angeles v. Eisenberg (1954) 129 C.A.2d 732, 736, 277 P.2d 943 [similar, following Wilkinson]; Laguna Beach Unified School Dist. of Orange County v. Lewis (1956) 146 C.A.2d 463, 470, 304 P.2d 59 [Education Code requirement]; 8 Hastings L. J. 203.)

On the other hand, in Slochower v. Board of Higher Education of New York (1956) 350 U.S. 551, 76 S.Ct. 637, 100 L.Ed. 692, appellant invoked the Fifth Amendment privilege before a Senate investigating committee. He was thereupon summarily dismissed from his position as a New York City schoolteacher, pursuant to a charter provision authorizing dismissal for claim of the privilege. Held, the provision violated the Due Process Clause by authorizing an arbitrary discharge on a conclusive presumption of guilt for any invocation of the constitutional privilege, regardless of the circumstances. "It matters not whether the plea resulted from mistake, inadvertence or legal advice conscientiously

The charter provision involved in Slochower was distinguished in Board of Education of San Francisco v. Mass (1956) 47 C.2d 494, 498, 304 P.2d 1015, upholding former Educ.C. 7004 (repealed in 1981). The court construed the dismissal language to mean that "before an employee may be found guilty of insubordination or dismissed for refusing to answer under the claim of privilege against self-incrimination, there must be a full hearing and a determination that his reasons for invoking the privilege are not sufficient." (47 C.2d 499.)

C. Limitations on the Rights.

11. Loyalty Regulations.

f. Loyalty Oaths of Employees.

1. Earlier Cases.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 482

[§ 482] Earlier Cases.

(1) General Principles. In Garner v. Board of Public Works of Los Angeles (1950) 98 C.A.2d 493, 498, 220 P.2d 958, a Los Angeles city ordinance, pursuant to its charter, provided that every city employee must take an oath that he or she had not been for the preceding 5 years and was not now a member of an organization advocating forcible overthrow of the government, and did not advocate these beliefs. Petitioner refused, was discharged, and his discharge was upheld.

This judgment was affirmed in Garner v. Board of Public Works (1951) 341 U.S. 716, 71 S.Ct. 909, 95 L.Ed. 1317. The court declared that the provisions were "a reasonable regulation to protect the municipal service by establishing an employment qualification of loyalty to the State and the United States. ... While the amendment deprived no one of employment with or without trial, yet from its effective date it terminated any privilege to work for the city in the case of persons who thereafter engaged in the activity proscribed." (71 S.Ct. 913, 95 L.Ed. 1323.) (See 18 A.L.R.2d 268 [Validity of Governmental Requirement of Oath of Allegiance or Loyalty].)

The court in the Garner case emphasized its interpretation of the ordinance as requiring knowledge by the employee of the character of the organization. (71 S.Ct. 914, 95 L.Ed. 1324.) In Wieman v. Updegraff (1952) 344 U.S. 183, 73 S.Ct. 215, 97 L.Ed. 216, an Oklahoma statute was held unconstitutional for lack of this requirement. The question was "whether the due process clause permits a state in attempting to bar disloyal individuals from its employ to exclude persons solely on the basis of organizational membership, regardless of their knowledge concerning the organizations to which they had belonged." (73 S.Ct. 218, 97 L.Ed. 221.) The answer was that "[i]ndiscriminate classification of innocent with knowing activity must fall as an assertion of arbitrary power." (73 S.Ct. 219, 97 L.Ed. 222.)

(2) California: State-Imposed Oath. A local ordinance, requiring an oath from civil service employees, and construed to require knowledge of the character of the organizations involved, was sustained in Hirschman v. Los Angeles (1952) 39 C.2d 698, 702, 249 P.2d 287. Subsequently, however, the state Levering Act (Govt.C. 3100 et seq.) was held to have fully occupied the field, and locally imposed oaths are no longer permissible. (39 C.2d 702, footnote; see Tolman v. Underhill (1952) 39 C.2d 708, 711, 249 P.2d 280, footnote.)

The principal controversy in California arose over the Cal. Const., Art. XX, §3, specifying an oath for public officers and stating that no other oath or test shall be required as a qualification for any office or public trust. In Pockman v. Leonard (1952) 39 C.2d 676, 686, 249 P.2d 267, petitioner was dismissed from his position as a state college teacher for refusal to execute the Levering Act oath. Held, the statute was valid. The constitutional provision was intended to prohibit the "test" oath regarding matters of religious or political beliefs. There is nothing in the Levering oath that calls for such a declaration, and its requirements of declaration of present and future loyalty, and disclosure of information as to past loyalty, are consistent with the Constitution and with the controlling decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court (Garner, supra, and Adler v. Board of Education of New York (1952) 342 U.S. 485, 72 S.Ct. 380, 96 L.Ed. 517, supra, §480). (See Orange Coast Junior College Dist. of Orange County v. St. John (1956) 146 C.A.2d 455, 458, 303 P.2d 1056 [upholding Education Code oath, following Pockman, supra, and Steinmetz v. California State Bd. of Education (1955) 44 C.2d 816, 285 P.2d 617, supra, §481]; on overruling of Pockman, see infra, §483.)

In Wilson v. Los Angeles Bd. of Civil Service Commrs. (1960) 54 C.2d 61, 4 C.R. 489, 351 P.2d 761, petitioner W was employed in 1948 by the County of Los Angeles. She objected to the county loyalty oath which then required disavowing membership in particular organizations, was discharged, and her discharge was upheld in Hirschman, supra. In 1958 and 1959, she again sought employment, and after written and oral examinations appeared qualified. But she was refused county employment under a local Civil Service Commission rule disqualifying a person previously discharged from any position in public or private employment. Held, mandamus granted to require the Commission to redetermine her qualifications.

(a) Under Wieman, "the right to public employment providing that such employment is available and that she meets all reasonable requirements--is entitled to protection, at least against deprivation thereof by arbitrary means." (54 C.2d 63.) Petitioner was willing to take the oath, disavowed membership in the Communist Party, and the record contained no competent evidence on present loyalty. Hence, prior disqualification had no more bearing on present qualification than would her failure to meet abandoned educational requirements. "We cannot assume, without arbitrarily doing so, that one who might have been disqualified for reasons of prior associations reflecting on loyalty, will forever after remain disqualified for that reason." (54 C.2d 65.)

(b) "From the foregoing it is manifest that the relevancy of the petitioner's refusal to subscribe, for reasons of conscience, to a different oath eleven years earlier, and her discharge from public office at that time, is too remote to deprive her of consideration at this time in view of her present willingness to take the required oath and her denial of, at any time, being a member of the Communist party. Under the cases, both federal and state, herein cited, to disqualify the petitioner upon the ground relied on by the commission must be regarded as arbitrary and therefore unwarranted." (54 C.2d 66.) (See Wirin v. Ostly (1961) 191 C.A.2d 710, 713, 13 C.R. 31 [constitutional oath validly applied to notary public; following Pockman]; Cramp v. Board of Public Instruction of Orange County, Florida (1961) 368 U.S. 278, 82 S.Ct. 275, 279, 7 L.Ed.2d 285, 291, supra, §409; Baggett v. Bullitt (1964) 377 U.S. 360, 84 S.Ct. 1316, 12 L.Ed.2d 377, supra, §409.)

[§ 483] Later Cases.

Elfbrandt v. Russell (1966) 384 U.S. 11, 86 S.Ct. 1238, 16 L.Ed.2d 321, involved an Arizona loyalty oath for state employees. The statute provided for prosecution for perjury and discharge from office of one who took the oath and thereafter knowingly became a member of the Communist Party or its subordinate organizations or any other having for "one of its purposes" overthrow of the government. Held, the statute was invalid. A group may have both legal and illegal aims, and proscription of mere knowing membership, without a showing of specific intent to further the unlawful aims, is unconstitutional. That was the defect in this statute. It applied to a knowing member of an organization that had illegal purposes even though he or she did not subscribe to them; in effect the statute created a conclusive presumption that the member shared the unlawful aims.

Four justices dissented, pointing to the long line of cases upholding the state's power to condition public employment on employees abstaining from knowing membership in the Communist Party and other organizations advocating violent overthrow of the government. They contended that if the state may condition employment on absence of knowing membership, it may make it a crime for an employee to falsify his or her qualifications, or to join this kind of an organization, knowingly, while a public employee. (86 S.Ct. 1242, 16 L.Ed.2d 326.)

In Keyishian v. Board of Regents of University of State of New York (1967) 385 U.S. 589, 87 S.Ct. 675, 17 L.Ed.2d 629, the court reexamined the New York Feinberg Law requiring a non-Communist oath from teachers. The Act had previously been upheld, but the challenge made here, on vagueness, "overbreadth," and defective administrative implementation, resulted in a declaration of unconstitutionality. (87 S.Ct. 684, 687, 17 L.Ed.2d 638, 641.)

Four justices dissented with stinging criticism of the main opinion. (87 S.Ct. 693, 17 L.Ed.2d 651.) The court has repeatedly, for 15 years, "approved procedures either identical or at the least similar to the ones the Court condemns today." (87 S.Ct. 694, 17 L.Ed.2d 652.)

In Whitehill v. Elkins (1967) 389 U.S. 54, 88 S.Ct. 184, 19 L.Ed.2d 228, the Maryland oath statute was held not precise enough to meet the requirements of Gerende v. Board of Supervisors of Elections of Baltimore City (1951) 341 U.S. 56, 71 S.Ct. 565, 95 L.Ed. 745, infra, §484. The three dissenters observed: "The only thing that does shine through the opinion of the majority is that its members do not like loyalty oaths." (88 S.Ct. 189, 19 L.Ed.2d 235.)

The California Supreme Court followed this trend in Vogel v. Los Angeles (1968) 68 C.2d 18, 64 C.R. 409, 434 P.2d 961, overruling Pockman v. Leonard (1952) 39 C.2d 676, 686, 249 P.2d 267, supra, §482, and holding the second paragraph of the California constitutional oath (Cal. Const., Art. XX, §3) invalid. The court pointed out that quasi-political parties or other groups may embrace both legal and illegal aims; that one may join an association in sympathy with only the legal ones; that this person poses no threat as a citizen or public employee; and that a law that applies to membership, without the specific intent to further the illegal aims, rests on guilt by association and infringes protected freedoms. (68 C.2d 22.) (See Chilton v. Contra Costa Community College Dist. (1976) 55 C.A.3d 544, 551, 552, 127 C.R. 659 [suggesting that in light of Vogel, Govt.C. 3109 might well be repealed]; 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §278 et seq.; cf. Cole v. Richardson (1972) 405 U.S. 676, 92 S.Ct. 1332, 1337, 31 L.Ed.2d 593, 599 [Massachusetts oath to "uphold and defend" constitutions and also to "oppose the overthrow" of either government "by force, violence or by any illegal or unconstitutional method," upheld, 5-4].)

In San Francisco Police Officers Assn. v. San Francisco (1977) 69 C.A.3d 1019, 1023, 138 C.R. 755, citing the text, defendant city's charter (a) prohibited any strike or picketing by uniformed members of the police and fire departments, with a penalty of dismissal for violation; and (b) required a declaration under oath from these members that they will comply with the charter provision. Held, the oath requirement was invalid; Cal. Const., Art. XX, §3, prescribing the form of oath and prohibiting any other oath or test (see supra, §482), applies:

"To secure the faithful performance of duties of office or employment, the constitution authorizes an oath in that language. The city's argument that it is a dereliction of duty for an employee of the police or fire department to withdraw his services by way of a strike defeats itself, because it demonstrates that the required oath goes to the performance of duties of employment which is covered by the second aspect of the constitutional oath. As to this aspect, the import of the constitutional prohibition of additional oaths is unambiguous; no other oath may be required by sovereignty." (69 C.A.3d 1025.) (For authorization of oaths of government officers and employees generally, see Govt.C. 1369 [officers], Govt.C. 3103 [disaster service workers], Govt.C. 18150 [employees].)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY
C. Limitations on the Rights.
11. Loyalty Regulations.
g. Loyalty Tests for Others.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 484

[§ 484] Loyalty Tests for Others.

(1) Union Officers. In American Communications Assn., C.I.O. v. Douds (1950) 339 U.S. 382, 70 S.Ct. 674, 678, 94 L.Ed. 925, 938, the court sustained the constitutionality of a federal statute providing that the N.L.R.B. should not entertain a complaint by a union unless its officers filed affidavits negating membership or affiliation with subversive organizations. The measure was viewed as a reasonable regulation of interstate commerce (federal "police power," infra, §1317) to protect against political strikes. (See N.L.R.B. v. Highland Park Mfg. Co. (1951) 341 U.S. 322, 71 S.Ct. 758, 95 L.Ed. 969; Killian v. United States (1961) 368 U.S. 231, 82 S.Ct. 302, 310, 7 L.Ed.2d 256, 266.)

The theory of Douds was repudiated in United States v. Brown (1965) 381 U.S. 437, 85 S.Ct. 1707, 1710, 1715, 14 L.Ed.2d 484, 487, 492, involving the successor statute, §504 of the Labor Management Relations Act, making it a crime for a member of the Communist Party to serve as an officer of a union. The court held the statute unconstitutional on the novel ground that it was a bill of attainder. (See supra, §206.)

(2) Candidates for Elective Office. In Gerende v. Board of Supervisors of Elections of Electronics of Baltimore City (1951) 341 U.S. 56, 71 S.Ct. 565, 95 L.Ed. 745, a Maryland statute requiring a candidate for local election to swear that he or she was not engaged in an attempt to overthrow the Government by force and violence and was not knowingly a member of an organization so engaged was upheld. (See 18 A.L.R.2d 268 [Validity of Governmental Requirement of Oath of Allegiance or Loyalty].)

(3) Political Parties. In Communist Party of Indiana v. Whitcomb (1974) 414 U.S. 441, 94 S.Ct. 656, 38 L.Ed.2d 635, the court held unconstitutional an Indiana statute requiring an affidavit from officers of every political party that it does not advocate overthrow of the Government by force or violence. The statutory oath embraced advocacy of abstract doctrine as well as action, and fell within the principles declared in Brandenburg v. Ohio (1969) 395 U.S. 444, 89 S.Ct. 1827, 23 L.Ed.2d 430, supra, §470, and other decisions. The court declared that "burdening access to the ballot, rights of association in the political party of one's choice, interests in casting an effective vote and in running for office," not because the Party urges others to do something, now or in the future, but merely to believe in something, "is to infringe interests certainly as substantial as those in public employment, tax exemption, or the practice of law." (94 S.Ct. 662, 38 L.Ed.2d 643.) (See Coe v. Davidson (1974) 43 C.A.3d 170, 181, 117 C.R. 630 [following Whitcomb; holding invalid similar oath required of candidate for county central committee of Peace and Freedom Party].)

(4) Legislators. In Bond v. Floyd (1966) 385 U.S. 116, 87 S.Ct. 339, 17 L.Ed.2d 235, Bond, a black man, was elected to the Georgia House of Representatives. He fulfilled all constitutional qualifications and asserted his loyalty and willingness to take the oath. However, he was denied his seat on charges of support of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, and attacks on American policy in Viet Nam, wars in general, and the draft. The federal district court concluded that his pronouncements were a call to Blacks to oppose the draft law, and sustained the legislative action. Held, exclusion violated Bond's First Amendment right of free expression. He never advocated illegal acts, and could not have been subjected to criminal prosecution. The state's position, that it could exact a higher standard of loyalty from legislators than from others, was unsound; it cannot limit a legislator's capacity to discuss local or national policy. (87 S.Ct. 349, 17 L.Ed.2d 247.)

(5) Applicants for Admission to Bar. Loyalty oaths and tests for attorneys are valid so long as they respect constitutional freedoms. (See Law Students Civil Rights Research Council v. Wadmond (1971) 401 U.S. 154, 91 S.Ct. 720, 728, 27 L.Ed.2d 749, 760; 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §§391, 392.)

(6) Tenants of Housing Project. Several state courts have held that a loyalty oath requirement for tenants of federally aided housing projects is an unwarranted restriction of freedom of speech. It was thought that possible membership in an organization on the Attorney General's list bore no relation to the purposes of the housing act, namely, slum clearance and housing for persons of low income. (See Housing Authority of Los Angeles v. Cordova (1955) 130 C.A.2d Supp. 883, 887, 279 P.2d 215 [decided partly on statutory interpretation and partly on constitutional grounds; following Illinois case].)

(7) Applicants for Tax Exemption. The most significant test of the extent of governmental power in this field occurred in the tax exemption cases: First Unitarian Church of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles (1957) 48 C.2d 419, 311 P.2d 508, Prince v. San Francisco (1957) 48 C.2d 472, 311 P.2d 544, and Speiser v. Randall (1958) 357 U.S. 513, 78 S.Ct. 1332, 2 L.Ed.2d 1460. A 1952 amendment of former Cal. Const., Art. XX, §19 (now Cal. Const., Art. VII, §9), provided that no person or organization advocating overthrow of the Government by force or violence or other unlawful means, or advocating support of a foreign government against the United States in the event of hostilities, should receive any tax exemption from the state or any subdivision or agency. This self-executing provision also authorized legislation to enforce it, and Rev.C. 32, enacted in 1953, required a loyalty declaration in the constitutional language as a condition for a claim of exemption.

In First Unitarian Church, supra, the constitutional provision and statute were challenged by a claimant of the church property exemption (9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §186), and in Prince by a claimant of the veterans' exemption (9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §198 et seq.). The California court, pointing out that a tax exemption is a bounty that may be granted with or without conditions, and that the constitutional provision limited action (advocacy) rather than mere belief, found no merit in the free speech and due process arguments.

However, in Speiser v. Randall, supra, the U.S. Supreme Court reversed both decisions. The court assumed, without deciding, that the state could deny tax exemptions to persons who engaged in criminally punishable speech within the standards of Dennis v. United States (1951) 341 U.S. 494, 71 S.Ct. 857, 95 L.Ed. 1137, supra, §471. (78 S.Ct. 1339, 2 L.Ed.2d 1469.) Thus, the validity of former Cal. Const., Art. XX, §19 was "conceded arguendo." (78 S.Ct. 1344, 2 L.Ed.2d 1474.) But Rev.C. 32, under the interpretation given by the California court, was held to have established an unfair method of determining whether the taxpayer claimant was a member of the proscribed class: He had the affirmative burden of proof, in court as well as before the assessor, to show that he was not a member of the class. This, the court thought, was a denial of due process, for what might be a reasonable shifting of the burden in ordinary tax assessment procedures cannot be justified when the effect is to penalize speech. (78 S.Ct. 1341, 2 L.Ed.2d 1471.) The court distinguished Garner v. Board of Public Works (1951) 341 U.S. 716, 71 S.Ct. 909, 95 L.Ed. 1317, supra, §§480, 482, Gerende, and Douds:

"Each case concerned a limited class of persons in or aspiring to public positions by virtue of which they could, if evilly motivated, create serious danger to the public safety. The principal aim of those statutes was not to penalize political beliefs but to deny positions to persons supposed to be dangerous because the position might be misused to the detriment of the public." (78 S.Ct. 1343, 2 L.Ed.2d 1473.) The instant case is different: "[W]hen the constitutional right to speak is sought to be deterred by a State's general taxing program due process demands that the speech be unencumbered until the State comes forward with sufficient proof to justify its inhibition. The State clearly has no such compelling interest at stake as to justify a short-cut procedure which must inevitably result in suppressing protected speech." (78 S.Ct. 1343, 2 L.Ed.2d 1474.)

D. Regulation of Educational Institutions.

1. Professors and Schoolteachers.

a. Protected Rights.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 485

[§ 485] Protected Rights.

(1) Freedom To Communicate and Circulate. In Los Angeles Teachers Union, Local 1021, Amer. Federation of Teachers v. Los Angeles City Bd. of Education (1969) 71 C.2d 551, 78 C.R. 723, 455 P.2d 827, the teachers union local prepared a brief unobjectionable petition to the Governor, the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, and the Los Angeles City Board of Education opposing cutbacks in funds for higher education and urging increased funds for public education at all levels. Defendant Board ruled that it could not be circulated on school premises even during duty-free periods. The union sought mandamus which the trial court denied. Held, reversed.

(a) The interest of plaintiffs in communicating their views to fellow teachers could only be effectively asserted during the hours teachers are gathered together and free to converse. (71 C.2d 560.)

(b) The interest of defendant--in harmony and avoidance of distraction of teachers engaged in planning work during duty-free periods--is insufficient to justify the ruling. Disturbances would be minimal, and disharmony resulting from expression of controversial ideas is not a proper reason for restriction of communication. Moreover, the views of students and teachers on school policies are of peculiar concern in the present turmoil over education. "When controversies arising from or contributing to this turbulence are brought before the courts, it is imperative that the courts carefully differentiate in treatment those who are violent and heedless of the rights of others as they assert their cause and those whose concerns are no less burning but who seek to express themselves through peaceful, orderly means. In order to discourage persons from engaging in the former type of activity, the courts must take pains to assure that the channels of peaceful communication remain open and that peaceful activity is fully protected." (71 C.2d 565.) (See Adcock v. Board of Education (1973) 10 C.3d 60, 65, 109 C.R. 676, 513 P.2d 900, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §278 [criticism of school policies]; 81 Harv. L. Rev. 1065 [extended treatment of "Academic Freedom"]; 86 Harv. L. Rev. 1341 [right to mild "political" expression in classroom]; 102 Harv. L. Rev. 831 [Symposium on Academic Freedom]; 50 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 959 [courts' imprudent treatment of controversial teaching in public schools].)

The First Amendment protection is not limited to public expression of views; it extends to a public employee who arranges to communicate privately with his or her employer rather than to spread his or her views before the public. Hence, discharge of a junior high school teacher after a series of private encounters with her principal was wrongful. (Givhan v. Western Line Consol. School Dist. (1979) 439 U.S. 410, 99 S.Ct. 693, 696, 58 L.Ed.2d 619, 624.)

(2) Protection Against Unwarranted Discharge. The right of teachers to prevent wrongful discharge for exercising constitutional freedoms has been fully considered in another Chapter. (See 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §278 et seq.; Board of Regents of State Colleges v. Roth (1972) 408 U.S. 564, 92 S.Ct. 2701, 33 L.Ed.2d 548; *Bekiaris v. D. Regulation of Educational Institutions.

1. Professors and Schoolteachers.

b. Valid Regulations.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 486

[§ 486] Valid Regulations.

(1) Exclusion of Faculty From Personnel Review. In Garnel v. Bunzel (1977) 68 C.A.3d 999, 137 C.R. 627, the president of San Jose State University determined after an investigation and a hearing that the economics department was unable to conduct its self-governance functions. The president then placed the department "in receivership," indefinitely suspending its participation in personnel and policy activities, and turning these over to an executive committee of other senior faculty members. Plaintiffs, members of the economics faculty, brought this action for mandamus, and injunctive and declaratory relief, contending that they had been deprived of "liberty" and "property" without due process of law. Held, judgment for defendants on demurrer affirmed.

(a) There was no evidence to show that the disenfranchisement of the department had caused any loss of reputation or interference with the teaching and writing activities of individual faculty members. (68 C.A.3d 1004.)

(b) The interest of a tenured professor in consultation on appointment and promotion of faculty members is recognized by regulations, policies, and practices of the university, and is entitled to due process protection. But the proceedings leading to the suspension of the department involved full notice and hearing, and therefore met the requirements of procedural due process. (68 C.A.3d 1008.)

(2) Unlawful Activities of Professor. In Franklin v. Leland Stanford Junior University (1985) 172 C.A.3d 322, 218 C.R. 228, plaintiff, a tenured professor at defendant university, was charged by its president with violations of university standards by activities that constituted a "substantial and manifest neglect of duty and a substantial impairment of his performance of his appropriate functions." A faculty advisory board, after extensive hearings, recommended plaintiff's dismissal, and the president and board of trustees accepted the recommendation. In plaintiff's action, the trial judge found no abuse of discretion, and the Court of Appeal, on an independent review of the record, affirmed the judgment for defendants.

The activities consisted of antiwar demonstrations on the campus in 1971, and the opinion reviews the record and case law, applying the analysis in Pickering v. Board of Education of Township High School Dist. 205, Will County, Illinois (1968) 391 U.S. 563, 88 S.Ct. 1731, 20 L.Ed.2d 811, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §283, and a number of U.S. Court of Appeals decisions on teacher protests. The court points out that constitutional freedom of speech does not license a teacher to substantially disrupt the normal operations of the school. (172 C.A.3d 341.) Particular incidents of plaintiff's conduct were described as follows:

(a) Occupation of university building by demonstrators: "Plaintiff perceived a potential for violence in the ensuing face-off between the police and the protestors. His loud, emotional disagreement with the police dispersal order, particularly in light of his acknowledged leadership role in protest activities, could only serve to prolong the existing state of campus disorder." (172 C.A.3d 342.)

(b) Speech at plaza: "Plaintiff, a leader in the antiwar protest movement, called for a strike to shut down some of the University's activities, specifically the Computation Center." (172 C.A.3d 343.)

A concurring justice suggested that this was a time to look at first principles in determining what is constitutionally protected speech. "A university is a marketplace of ideas or it is nothing. It is a home for sober reflection, for critical inquiry and analysis, for vigorous advocacy, for dialogue, all in pursuit of the truth. The imposition of one's cause or point of view by coercion upon those of different persuasion is totally inconsistent with a university's process and function." (172 C.A.3d 349.) (See 66 So. Cal. L. Rev. 2533 [Pickering].)

[§ 487] In General.

(1) Right to Protection. The early view that attendance in a state university is a privilege (see Hamilton v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1934) 293 U.S. 245, 55 S.Ct. 197, 79 L.Ed. 343) has been abandoned. Federal and state court decisions have developed the modern theory that it is a benefit analogous to public employment, and therefore entitled to constitutional protection. (See Healy v. James (1972) 408 U.S. 169, 92 S.Ct. 2338, 2345, 33 L.Ed.2d 266, 279, infra, §488 ["state colleges and universities are not enclaves immune from the sweep of the First Amendment"].)

Regulations unduly restricting freedom of expression are consequently invalid, but reasonable rules of student conduct that are appropriate and necessary to the maintenance of order and furtherance of the educational goals are valid. (Goldberg v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1967) 248 C.A.2d 867, 875, 879, 57 C.R. 463, infra, §488.) Goldberg recognized that the uniqueness of the academic community, together with its historical freedom from outside interference, call for a distinct approach to disciplinary problems: "To compel such a community to recognize and enforce precisely the same standards and penalties that prevail in the broader social community would serve neither the special needs and interests of the educational institutions, nor the ultimate advantages that society derives therefrom. Thus, in an academic community, greater freedoms and greater restrictions may prevail than in society at large, and the subtle fixing of these limits should, in a large measure, be left to the educational institution itself." (248 C.A.2d 880.) (See 28 A.L.R.4th 463 [misconduct of student off campus as grounds for disciplinary action]; on statutory declaration of speech and other communication rights of postsecondary students, see infra, §§501, 502.)

In Shuffer v. Board of Trustees (1977) 67 C.A.3d 208, 136 C.R. 527, plaintiff, a graduate student at California State University, alleged that he was subjected to discriminatory and arbitrary treatment in connection with completion of necessary requirements for his degree. Held, a cause of action was stated. The court took note of the "so-called rule of judicial non-intervention in scholastic affairs" (67 C.A.3d 219), and acknowledged that schools may properly fashion special requirements for an applicant for an advanced degree. However, unreasonable or punitive action toward a student may amount to a denial of constitutional rights. (67 C.A.3d 219, 220.) (See 11 A.L.R.4th 1182 [student's right to compel school officials to issue degree or diploma].)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

D. Regulation of Educational Institutions.

2. College and University Students.

b. Freedom of Speech and Association.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 488

[§ 488] Freedom of Speech and Association.

(1) Freedom of Association. In Healy v. James (1972) 408 U.S. 169, 92 S.Ct. 2338, 33 L.Ed.2d 266, petitioners, students at Central Connecticut State College, organized a local chapter of Students for a Democratic Society (SDS), and sought campus recognition. The Student Affairs Committee gave a favorable recommendation; the president rejected it, relying on independently acquired information about the national organization and its philosophy. The federal district court held that petitioners had not sustained the burden of proving their independence from SDS. Held, reversed.

(a) Freedom of association is a constitutionally protected right (see supra, §378), and it is substantially impaired by denial of the use of campus facilities for meetings, and denial of the use of the campus bulletin boards, the school newspaper, and other means of communicating with faculty and students. (92 S.Ct. 2346, 33 L.Ed.2d 279.)

(b) The burden of proof was improperly placed on petitioners. The effect of denial of recognition was a prior restraint on the exercise of their constitutional rights, and the burden was on the administration to justify its decision. (92 S.Ct. 2347, 33 L.Ed.2d 281.)

(c) The president's reliance on his knowledge of the national organization as a ground for denial was an improper finding of guilt by association. Recognition could only be denied if a showing were made that petitioners intended to refuse to abide by reasonable campus rules of conduct. (92 S.Ct. 2352, 33 L.Ed.2d 286.)

(2) Freedom of Speech and Press. In Papish v. Board of Curators of University of Missouri (1973) 410 U.S. 667, 93 S.Ct. 1197, 35 L.Ed.2d 618, petitioner, a graduate student in the University of Missouri School of Journalism, distributed an issue of the Free Press Underground. The paper had a front cover cartoon showing policemen raping the Statue of Liberty and the Goddess of Justice, and an article entitled "M____ f____ Acquitted," discussing an assault trial. Petitioner was expelled, and the federal district court denied relief. Held, reversed. "We think Healy makes it clear that the mere dissemination of ideas--no matter how offensive to good taste--on a state university campus may not be shut off in the name alone of 'conventions of decency.' Other precedents of this Court make it equally clear that neither the political cartoon nor the headline story involved in this case can be labelled as constitutionally obscene or otherwise unprotected." (93 S.Ct. 1199, 35 L.Ed.2d 622.)

In Dunbar v. Governing Bd. of Grossmont Junior College Dist. (1969) 275 C.A.2d 14, 79 C.R. 662, defendant junior college board created an open forum to promote discussion of issues, and the forum scheduled a debate on the Vietnam War between a John Birch Society member and a Communist Party member. The Board refused to permit the Communist to speak. Held, denial of the right because of membership in an organization was a violation of the First Amendment. (275 C.A.2d 19.)

In DiBona v. Matthews (1990) 220 C.A.3d 1329, 269 C.R. 882, plaintiff community college teacher selected "Split Second," a play with a racial theme that contains profanity and racial slurs, for production by students in his drama class. Church leaders complained to defendant college administrators about the play, and defendants decided that it was unacceptable because of the community opposition. Plaintiff declined to choose another play, and defendants cancelled the class. Plaintiff teacher and one of his students then brought this action seeking the declaratory and injunctive relief. Held, summary judgment for defendants reversed.

(a) The Government may not regulate the content of speech merely because of undifferentiated fear or concern that it may provoke dissension or disturbance. (220 C.A.3d 1342, 1343.) This case presents a "classic illustration" of restriction based on undifferentiated fear. The class was cancelled because of "community" opposition and with no showing of "a 'clear and present danger' of any evil, let alone a 'serious substantive' one." (220 C.A.3d 1343.) Neither the desire to avoid antagonizing the religious community nor the politically sensitive nature of the play's subject matter was a proper basis for censorship. (220 C.A.3d 1344.)

(b) Nor can cancellation of the class be upheld on the ground that the language was inappropriate for a school play. School administrators have broad discretion in making curriculum decisions, and the appropriateness of language is traditionally one of the factors that they may consider. However, nearly all the prior cases involve minors rather than adult college students. (220 C.A.3d 1345.) First Amendment protections apply on college campuses with the same force as in the community at large, and dissemination of ideas on a university campus may not be curtailed in the name of decency. (220 C.A.3d 1346, citing Healy and Papish.)

(c) The government interest in regulating school-sponsored activities does not justify the decision to cancel the drama class and play. It is questionable whether the rationale underlying this interest applies to educational settings involving adults. Assuming that it does, it is not reasonably arguable that the use of profanity and racial slurs in "Split Second" would be construed as advocacy or sponsorship of that language. (220 C.A.3d 1346, 1347.)

(d) "Our conclusions do not leave college administrators powerless to control college curriculum. Although the 'legitimate pedagogical concerns' at the college and university level may be more limited than in elementary and secondary schools, they are not nonexistent. Certainly college officials may limit the drama curriculum to works of an acceptable literary quality and they undoubtedly are entitled to broad deference where such determinations are made in advance rather than, as here, sometime after the class had already begun to meet." However, at least where adults are concerned, "literary quality cannot be measured simply by counting the number of 'indecent' words in a book or play." (220 C.A.3d 1347, 1348.)

One justice dissented, arguing that the majority opinion removed decisions on curriculum content from administrators and placed them in the hands of faculty and students. (220 C.A.3d 1348.) (See 22 Pacific L. J. 973; on statutory declaration of speech and other communication rights of postsecondary students, see infra, §§501, 502.)

(3) Demonstrations. In Goldberg v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1967) 248 C.A.2d 867, 57 C.R. 463, petitioners, students at U.C. Berkeley, participated in various demonstrations on the campus. They were arrested on charges of violation of the obscenity statutes and disturbing the peace. While the criminal charges were pending, the duly constituted university authorities held a hearing at which petitioners were invited to be present with counsel. Counsel appeared at various times, and after extended hearings disciplinary measures were imposed, consisting of dismissal of G and suspension of the others. Petitioners sought administrative mandamus in the superior court, and judgment went for defendants on demurrer. Held, affirmed. The university has an administrative responsibility to regulate student behavior that tends to obstruct its educational goals. Petitioners' conduct, in loudly and publicly using indecent language, violated the minimum standard of propriety of both the academic and the social community; hence the disciplinary action was a proper exercise of the university's inherent powers. (248 C.A.2d 880.) (See In re Bacon (1966) 240 C.A.2d 34, 55, 49 C.R. 322 [unlawful assembly and trespass]; People v. Uptgraft (1970) 8 C.A.3d Supp. 1, 8, 87 C.R. 459 [unlawful assembly]; 32 A.L.R.3d 864 [expulsion for student demonstrations].)

c. Mandatory Fees To Fund Student Activities.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 489

[§ 489] Mandatory Fees To Fund Student Activities.

In Smith v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1993) 4 C.4th 843, 16 C.R.2d 181, 844 P.2d 500, the issue was whether plaintiff students at U.C. Berkeley, were required to pay an activities fee used in part by the Associated Students (ASUC) organization "to support student groups that pursue political and ideological causes." (4 C.4th 847.) Plaintiffs "object both to the imposition of the fee and to the manner in which it is used." (4 C.4th 847.)

The court held that the authority to levy the fee was within the broad powers of the University Regents under the California Constitution, but added that the Regents' freedom to govern the University was not the only freedom at stake here. "It goes without saying that all students are free to organize, to promote their ideas, and to seek by all legal means to persuade others that their views are correct. Moreover, the Regents may continue to fund student political activities through the fees of students who do not object. However, the constitutional guaranties of free speech and association do not permit the state to make speech a matter of compulsion and coercion. As the present system of funding student activities has that effect, it cannot be continued without affording dissenting students an appropriate remedy." (4 C.4th 848.)

(a) Collection of mandatory fee. Plaintiffs contend that the Regents lack authority to collect a mandatory student activities fee; but the constitutional and statutory provisions invoked only declare, in essence, that the university must be kept free of political and sectarian influence. While these authorities might support an argument against some of the uses to which the fee has been put, they do not affect the Regents' power to collect a fee, assuming its use is proper. (4 C.4th 851.)

(b) ASUC support of political and ideological groups.

(1) This case involves two important principles: The first is that the government may not compel a person to contribute money to support political or ideological causes. (4 C.4th 852.) The second is that the Regents must have considerable discretion to determine how best to carry out the university's educational mission. (4 C.4th 852.) These principles conflict in the case before us. "Plaintiffs, invoking their constitutional right not to be compelled to speak, argue that the use of mandatory fees to subsidize student political groups impermissibly burdens that right. The Regents, relying on their authority to define the University's educational mission, acknowledge the burden on plaintiffs' rights but argue that student political activity offers educational benefits that justify the burdens." (4 C.4th 853.)

(2) In the cases dealing with agency-shop agreements, the high court held that a state may compel employees who obtain the benefits of a union's collective bargaining efforts to pay service fees to the union, even though the employees may choose not to join. However, when the state does compel nonmembers to support a union financially, the nonmembers may prevent the union from using their contributions to fund the expression of political and ideological view unrelated to collective bargaining. (4 C.4th 853, citing Abood v. Detroit Bd. of Education (1977) 431 U.S. 209, 97 S.Ct. 1782, 52 L.Ed.2d 261 and Chicago Teachers Union, Local No. 1, AFT, AFL-CIO v. Hudson (1986) 475 U.S. 292, 106 S.Ct. 1066, 89 L.Ed.2d 232, supra, §385.)

(3) The principle underlying the agency-shop decisions took sharper focus in Keller v. State Bar (1990) 496 U.S. 1, 110 S.Ct. 2228, 110 L.Ed.2d 1, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §373. The U.S. Supreme Court made it clear that the use of mandatory contributions must be "germane," not simply to any purpose the organization chooses to declare for itself, but to the purpose for which compelled association was justified as a matter of constitutional law. (4 C.4th 854.) Keller and Abood "teach that the state may compel a person to support an organization if there is a sufficiently compelling reason to do so, and that the organization's use of mandatory contributions must be germane to the purposes that justified the requirement of support." (4 C.4th 854.) But it does not follow, as the Regents argue, that everything "germane" is automatically permissible without the need for further inquiry. The burdens on speech and associational rights in Keller and Abood were much lighter than those at issue here. The university's educational function is extremely broad, potentially encompassing all of life; and by recognizing that student political activity can be germane to education, "we run the risk of sanctioning a much greater burden on speech and associational rights than the high court necessarily contemplated when it used that term." (4 C.4th 855.)

(4) "The solution to this problem is to set a rational limit on the use of mandatory fees. We can do this by recognizing what is obviously true, namely, that a group's dedication to achieving its political or ideological goals, at some point, begins to outweigh any legitimate claim it may have to be educating students on the University's behalf. To fund such a group through mandatory fees will usually constitute more of a burden on dissenting students' speech and associational rights than is necessary to achieve any significant educational goal. The University can teach civics in other ways that involve a lesser burden on those rights, or no burden at all." (4 C.4th 855.)

(5) This approach was followed in two later federal Court of Appeals cases: Carroll v. Blinken, 2d Circuit, and Galda v. Rutgers, 3d Circuit. (4 C.4th 855, discussing both cases.) "The principles that we derive from Carroll and Galda, as well as Keller and Abood, are these: A university may, in general, support student groups through mandatory contributions because that use of funds can be germane to the university's educational mission. ... At some point, however, the educational benefits that a group offers become incidental to the group's primary function of advancing its own political and ideological interests. ... To fund such a group may still provide some educational benefits, but the incidental benefit to education will not usually justify the burden on the dissenting students' constitutional rights. Phrased in terms of the tests that courts have applied, a regulation that permits the mandatory funding of such groups is not 'narrowly drawn to avoid unnecessary intrusion on freedom of expression.' " (4 C.4th 860.)

(6) "We find no reason to doubt that the burden on dissenting students' speech and associational rights in this case is real and substantial. For example, students who favor abortion rights must pay to support the political activities of Berkeley Right to Life, a group opposed to abortion, and students opposed to abortion must subsidize groups such as Campus N.O.W. and Campus Abortion Rights Action League, which favor abortion rights." (4 C.4th 860.)

(7) "So long as the present system of funding student activity groups continues, the only practical way to protect the rights of dissenting students is to implement the procedures outlined in Hudson ... and Keller. ... These procedures will require the Regents to identify any groups that are ineligible for mandatory funding under the constitutional standards set out above, and offer students the option of deducting a corresponding amount from the mandatory fee. The State Bar of California adopted a similar procedure to comply with the high court's decision in Keller. ... Students who disagree with the Regents' calculation of the deduction will be entitled to the procedural safeguards articulated in Keller: 'an adequate explanation of the basis for the fee, a reasonably prompt opportunity to challenge the amount of the fee before an impartial decision-maker, and an escrow for the amounts reasonably in dispute while such challenges are pending.' " (4 C.4th 863.) Also, the Regents are free to adopt a voluntary system that avoids the constitutional defects identified in this opinion. (4 C.4th 863.)

(c) ASUC-funded lobbying.

(1) Lehnert v. Ferris Faculty Assn. (1991) 500 U.S. 507, 111 S.Ct. 1950, 114 L.Ed.2d 572, supra, §385, held that a public employees' union may not use mandatory contributions to support lobbying on all union-related matters. Thus, while the Lehnert plaintiffs, who were state college professors, could be compelled to subsidize a union's collective bargaining efforts, they could not be compelled to subsidize lobbying on matters other than collective bargaining, "even matters as closely related to the union's interests as taxes for the support of public education." (4 C.4th 865.)

(2) Under Lehnert, even if the state has a sufficiently compelling interest to require persons to support an organization financially, the state may not compel support for lobbying efforts except on those matters that are strictly necessary to further the interest that justified the requirement of support. "Applying this principle to the case before us compels us to reverse the judgment. Even if the Regents had appointed the ASUC to negotiate with governmental bodies on students' behalf, and even if the state had a compelling reason to do so, under Lehnert the state still could not force unwilling students to subsidize lobbying beyond the narrow subject matter that justified the requirement of support." (4 C.4th 866.)

(1) The Senate has debated, adopted, and publicized resolutions on many current political issues; and it also supports voter registration, draft counselling, and renters' assistance programs that occasionally became channels for political activity. (4 C.4th 866.) The Court of Appeal reasoned that these activities contribute to the educational mission of the university, and that if plaintiffs did not approve of positions taken they could seek Senate office and make their own voices heard. This resolution of the issue cannot withstand scrutiny. (4 C.4th 867.)

(2) "If further evidentiary proceedings show that mandatory fees have been spent on political activities by the ASUC Senate, then the Regents shall have the burden of demonstrating that the resulting burden on dissenting students' speech and associational rights is germane to, and justified by, such activities' educational value in accordance with the principles discussed above. If the Regents do not satisfy that burden, then plaintiffs will be entitled to relief under the procedures set out in Keller ... and Hudson. ... We shall remand these issues for further proceedings in accordance with the views expressed herein." (4 C.4th 868.)

Two justices joined in an elaborate dissent. (4 C.4th 869.) "Contrary to the majority, I would hold that the funding of student groups engaged in on-campus speech--regardless of political or ideological content--is germane to the University's educational mission and serves compelling national interests. As long as the funds are distributed in a neutral fashion and are not used to promote partisan political purposes, to finance off-campus activities or to interfere with the free speech rights of others, such funding is well encompassed within the constitutional mandate of the University." (4 C.4th 869.) (See 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 287; 29 U.S.F. L. Rev. 541; infra, §497; on decision of Court of Appeal after remand, see Smith v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1997) 56 C.A.4th 979, 987, 65 C.R.2d 813 [burden on dissenting students' rights is justified].)

In Board of Regents of University of Wisconsin System v. Southworth (2000) 529 U.S. 217, 120 S.Ct. 1346, 146 L.Ed.2d 193, university students challenged a mandatory student activity fee used in part to support student organizations engaging in political or ideological speech. Both the District Court and the Court of Appeals invalidated the student fee program based on Supreme Court precedents protecting union and bar association members from being required to pay fees used for speech the members find objectionable. Held, reversed and remanded.

(a) Viewpoint neutrality. The student activity fee is exacted for the sole purpose of facilitating the free and open exchange of ideas among students. While objecting students may insist on certain safeguards with respect to the expressive ideas they are required to support, the university's viewpoint neutrality requirement for allocating funds to student groups is sufficient to protect the rights of objecting students. (120 S.Ct. 1354, 146 L.Ed.2d 206.)

(b) Germane speech standard is inapplicable. Abood and Keller, supra, are distinguishable. The "germane speech" standard applied in those cases is unworkable as applied to speech at a university. It gives "insufficient protection both to the objecting students and to the University program itself." (120 S.Ct. 1355, 146 L.Ed.2d 207.) "It is not for the Court to say what is or is not germane to the ideas to be pursued in an institution of higher learning." (120 S.Ct. 1355, 146 L.Ed.2d 207.)

(c) Remand on referendum issue. However, the referendum aspect of the University's program, under which a student organization may be funded or defunded by a student body vote, does not appear to have viewpoint neutrality protection, and remand is necessary to resolve this point. (120 S.Ct. 1357, 146 L.Ed.2d 209.) (See 114 Harv. L. Rev. 279 [Southworth]; 20 Cal. Western L. Rev. 279 [constitutionality of university's use of mandatory student fees to finance political or ideological activities].)

[§ 490] Registration and Identification.

In Eisen v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1969) 269 C.A.2d 696, 75 C.R. 45, plaintiff, a student at U.C. Berkeley, was an officer of a student organization advocating dissident ideas. The organization was "registered," and consequently entitled to such privileges as use of university facilities for meetings, fund raising, and campus meetings addressed by nonuniversity speakers. A condition of registration was submission of a statement of purpose and names of officers, and plaintiff's name was submitted. A, an outsider, sued the university to compel disclosure of names and purposes of all student organizations. The university agreed to permit examination by members of the public. Plaintiff then sued to enjoin this public disclosure. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

Plaintiff argued for a "right of anonymity," incidental to the rights of free speech and association (see supra, §379). But the people have a right to know who are the responsible officers of student organizations using publicly financed and owned campus facilities. Disclosure will not unduly deter freedom of expression; rather the policy appears well designed to promote it by insuring orderly enjoyment of facilities. (269 C.A.2d 704.) Thus, a compelling state interest outweighed any minimal infringement of plaintiff's First Amendment rights. (269 C.A.2d 706.) (See 37 A.L.R.3d 1311 [student organization registration statement as open to public].)

e. (New) Military Recruiters on Campus.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 490A

[§ 490A] (New) Military Recruiters on Campus.

In Rumsfeld v. Forum for Academic & Institutional Rights (2006) 547 U.S. 47, 126 S.Ct. 1297, 164 L.Ed.2d 156, the Court interpreted the Solomon Amendment (10 U.S.C., §983), which denies certain federal funds to institutions of higher learning if any school in that institution denies military recruiters access to students equal to that of other recruiters. Plaintiff association of law schools and law faculties objected to military recruitment on their campuses because of the policy of Congress to bar homosexuals from serving in the military. The trial court rejected plaintiff's constitutional claims under a former version of the statute. The Court of Appeals reversed on the ground that, even after amendment, the statute violates the unconstitutional conditions doctrine because it forces a law school to choose between surrendering its First Amendment rights and losing federal funding for its university. Held, reversed.

(a) For a law school and its university to receive federal funding under the statute, plaintiff and the government agree that "the law school must offer military recruiters the same access to its campus and students that it provides to the nonmilitary recruiter receiving the most favorable access." (126 S.Ct. 1304, 164 L.Ed.2d 169.) A school may not satisfy the statute, as certain amici argue, by denying access to the military and to other employers that violate its nondiscrimination policy. The statute requires the Secretary of Defense to compare the military's access to that provided to any other employer. (126 S.Ct. 1305, 164 L.Ed.2d 169.)

(c) The statute puts no restrictions on the expression of speech or views on the military's employment policies. (126 S.Ct. 1307, 164 L.Ed.2d 172.) Any recruiting assistance provided by the law schools in sending e-mails or posting notices on behalf of the military also would be provided to other recruiters, and is plainly incidental to the regulation of conduct under the statute. (126 S.Ct. 1308, 164 L.Ed.2d 173.) Further, "accommodating the military's message does not affect the law schools' speech, because the schools are not speaking when they host interviews and recruiting receptions." (126 S.Ct. 1309, 164 L.Ed.2d 174.) Nothing in the military's recruiting "suggests that the law schools agree with any speech by recruiters, and nothing in the Solomon Amendment restricts what the law schools may say about the military's policies." (126 S.Ct. 1310, 164 L.Ed.2d 175.)

(d) "As a general matter, the Solomon Amendment regulates conduct, not speech. It affects what law schools must do--afford equal access to military recruiters--not what they may or may not say." (126 S.Ct. 1307, 164 L.Ed.2d 172.) The First Amendment only protects conduct that is inherently expressive, like flag burning. (126 S.Ct. 1310, 164 L.Ed.2d 175.) The expressive conduct of the law schools in barring military recruiters from their campuses is not created by the conduct itself, but by the speech that accompanies it. The fact that this "explanatory speech is necessary is strong evidence that the conduct at issue here is not so inherently expressive that it warrants protection" under United States v. O'Brien (1968) 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672, text, §473. (126 S.Ct. 1311, 164 L.Ed.2d 176.)

(e) The Solomon Amendment does not violate a law school's freedom of expressive association. Under the statute, a law school must associate "with military recruiters in the sense that they interact with them. But recruiters are not part of the law school." They are "outsiders who come onto campus for the limited purpose of trying to hire students--not to become members of the school's expressive association. This distinction is critical." Unlike the public accommodations law in Boy Scouts of America v. Dale (2000) 530 U.S. 640, 120 S.Ct. 2446, 147 L.Ed.2d 554, text, §391, the statute here does not force a school to accept members it does not desire. (126 S.Ct. 1312, 164 L.Ed.2d 177.) (See 54 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1767 [Rumsfeld].)

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY D. Regulation of Educational Institutions. 3. Elementary and Secondary School Students. a. First Amendment Rights. 1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 491

[§ 491] In General.

(1) Students' Rights. "[S]tate-operated schools may not be enclaves of totalitarianism. School officials do not possess absolute authority over their students. Students in school as well as out of school are 'persons' under our Constitution. They are possessed of fundamental rights which the State must respect, just as they themselves must respect their obligations to the State. ... In the absence of a specific showing of constitutionally valid reasons to regulate their speech, students are entitled to freedom of expression of their views." (Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School Dist. (1969) 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733, 739, 21 L.Ed.2d 731, 740, infra, §492.)

This right, Tinker points out, is not confined to the classroom. "The principal use to which the schools are dedicated is to accommodate students during prescribed hours for the purpose of certain types of activities. Among those activities is personal intercommunication among the students. This is not only an inevitable part of the process of attending school. It is also an important part of the educational process. A student's rights, therefore, do not embrace merely the classroom hours. When he is in the cafeteria, or on the playing field, or on the campus during the authorized hours, he may express his opinions, even on controversial subjects like the conflict in Vietnam, if he does so '[without] materially and substantially interfering with ... appropriate discipline in the operation of the school' and without colliding with the rights of others." (89 S.Ct. 740, 21 L.Ed.2d 741.) (See Lopez v. Tulare Joint Union High School Dist. (1995) 34 C.A.4th 1302, 1309, 40 C.R.2d 762 [reviewing historical development of student free speech rights]; 24 Hastings L. J. 1263 [Tinker]; on procedural due process, see infra, §688; on right to hear and receive ideas from persons other than teachers and fellow students, see Mandel v. Municipal Court (1969) 276 C.A.2d 649, 81 C.R. 173, 2 *Cal. Crim. (2) Restrictions on Students' Rights. Restrictions necessary for the control of children in an educational institution are valid. "[A] student may be subject to far more stringent regulations than an adult outside a school environment due to his immaturity and status as a student in a school environment where disciplinary and health problems and considerations relating to safety of minors take on special significance. ... The courts have universally recognized this difference, including those situations where First Amendment rights admittedly are involved." (Montalvo v. Madera

Board of Education of Riverside Unified School Dist.* (1968) 262 C.A.2d 161, 166, 68 C.R. 557, infra, §493.)

(3) Military Recruitment. High school districts that provide on-campus access to employers may not prohibit access to military recruiters. (See Educ.C. 49603.) The enacting legislation (Stat. 1991, Chap. 666, §1) states that "this access is in furtherance of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, which guarantees not only the right to speak freely, but also the right to receive information." (See 24 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1333 [arguing that allowing military to participate in career placement programs violates Unruh Act because military bars gays and lesbians from service].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

D. Regulation of Educational Institutions.

3. Elementary and Secondary School Students.

a. First Amendment Rights.

2. Demonstrations and Symbolic Acts.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 492

[§ 492] Demonstrations and Symbolic Acts.

(1) Invalid Regulations. In Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School Dist. (1969) 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733, 21 L.Ed.2d 731, supra, §491, petitioners, high school students, decided to demonstrate their objections to the war in Vietnam by wearing black armbands during the Christmas holiday season. School officials, aware of the plan, adopted a policy of suspension of any student who wore the band after being asked to remove it. Petitioners were suspended, and brought this action against the school authorities to enjoin the discipline. The district court upheld the regulation as reasonable. Held, reversed.

(a) Symbolic acts as speech. Wearing armbands, without actual or potentially disruptive conduct, is closely akin to "pure speech," and entitled to comprehensive protection. (89 S.Ct. 736, 21 L.Ed.2d 737.)

(b) Limits of control of conduct by school authorities. The problem here is not regulation of clothing, hair style, or deportment, and it is not control of disruptive action or group demonstrations. This was a silent, passive expression of opinion, by only a few of the many students. The district court's theory that the regulation was reasonable because of the fear of disturbance was unsound. To limit expression something more must be shown than the mere desire to avoid unpleasantness that accompanies an unpopular viewpoint. (89 S.Ct. 737, 21 L.Ed.2d 739.) The record showed no facts to reasonably lead school authorities to forecast material interferences with school activities, and none occurred. The prohibition therefore was a denial of the right of free expression. (89 S.Ct. 740, 21 L.Ed.2d 742.)

Two justices dissented; one disagreed with the "uncritical assumption" that First Amendment rights of children "are co-extensive" with those of adults. (89 S.Ct. 741 et seq., 21 L.Ed.2d 742 et seq.) (See 24 Hastings L. J. 1263; 1 West L.A. L. Rev. 107; 32 A.L.R.3d 864 [participation of student in demonstration on or near campus as warranting expulsion or suspension].)

(2) Valid Regulations. Tinker was distinguished in Grayned v. Rockford (1972) 408 U.S. 104, 92 S.Ct. 2294, 33 L.Ed.2d 222, 223: "[W]e nowhere suggested that students, teachers, or anyone else has an absolute constitutional right to use all parts of a school building or its immediate environs for his unlimited expressive purposes." Peaceful picketing and handbilling on public grounds near a school to publicize significant grievances to pedestrians, school visitors, deliverymen, teachers, administrators and students do not disturb the normal functioning of the school. But "schools could hardly tolerate boisterous demonstrators who drown out classroom conversation, make studying impossible, block entrances, or incite children to leave the schoolhouse." (92 S.Ct. 2305, 33 L.Ed.2d 234.)

In Grayned, an ordinance prohibited the wilful "making of any noise or diversion which disturbs or tends to disturb the peace or good order" of "school sessions or classes." A group of demonstrators (about 200) picketed a school protesting alleged exclusion of black students from school activities, and made sufficient noise to disrupt classes and distract hundreds of students who went to the windows to watch. Appellant, one of the demonstrators, was convicted of violation of the ordinance. Held, affirmed; the ordinance was not vague or overbroad.

(a) No vagueness. The ordinance was designed for the protection of schools, and forbids deliberately noisy or diversionary activity that disrupts or is about to disrupt normal school activities; and it forbids this wilful activity at fixed times--when the school is in session, and at a fixed place--adjacent to the school. (92 S.Ct. 2300, 33 L.Ed.2d 229.)

(b) No overbreadth. The ordinance "is narrowly tailored to further Rockford's compelling interest in having an undisrupted school session conducive to the students' learning." (98 S.Ct. 2305, 33 L.Ed.2d 234.) "Rockford's modest restriction on some peaceful picketing represents a considered and specific legislative judgment that some kinds of expressive activity should be restricted at a particular time and place, here in order to protect the schools." (92 S.Ct. 2306, 33 L.Ed.2d 235.) (See 24 Hastings L. J. 1263.)

In Lipkis v. Caveney (1971) 19 C.A.3d 383, 96 C.R. 779, plaintiff high school student petitioned for mandamus to compel defendant principal and the Board of Education to permit noon rallies in the "quad." Defendant principal, on the basis of his knowledge of prior activity of plaintiff's group (the "Radical Student Union," not a recognized campus organization), and particularly of their use of a battery-powered bull horn in the area where students eat lunch, had denied their request, and offered instead the opportunity to express their views at regular campus meetings (Noon Forum, Discussion Group, Forum Club). Held, judgment denying writ affirmed.

"[A]ppellant had adequate and concededly readily available fora in which to exercise his right of free speech and to ventilate views he entertained relative to any problems of his school, his country or the world. Puerile, abrasive and contemptuous behavior cannot be whitewashed by constitutional incantations, which, if we understand them, give appellate the right to espouse in nonobscene language even the most unpopular views but which do not require Van Nuys High School or the school system to guarantee to him on the school grounds a captive audience at the specific times he elects to address them." (19 C.A.3d 387.)

VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

D. Regulation of Educational Institutions.

3. Elementary and Secondary School Students.

a. First Amendment Rights.

3. Clothes and Personal Appearance.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 493

[§ 493] Clothes and Personal Appearance.

(1) Personal Appearance. In Akin v. Board of Education of Riverside Unified School Dist. (1968) 262 C.A.2d 161, 68 C.R. 557, petitioner, a 16-year-old minor, was suspended from defendant's high school because he wore a beard in violation of defendant board's "Good Grooming Policy." He offered evidence that in a private school he attended for a year, his beard caused no problems. The board offered evidence of serious disruption of the educational process by students with mustaches, which led to the adoption of the requirement that boys be clean-shaven. Held, judgment denying mandamus to compel admission affirmed.

An adult teacher with a well-trimmed and well-kept beard cannot be disciplined; this is an unconstitutional interference with his personal liberty. (262 C.A.2d 165, citing Finot v. Pasadena City Bd. of Education (1967) 250 C.A.2d 189, 58 C.R. 520, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §281.) Although a student may have a similar constitutional right, the extent of reasonable restrictions is greater than in the case of adults. (262 C.A.2d 166; see supra, §491.) The evidence showed that a bearded student would disrupt the educational process. Thus, the benefit from the regulation was great, and there was no other way to preserve the proper climate of order and decorum. Hence, there was no unreasonable infringement of constitutional rights. (262 C.A.2d 169.) Petitioner advanced the additional contention that because a beard (unlike clothes) cannot be doffed and donned, the regulation extended to the home and invaded the right of privacy. The court declared that privacy must give way to a regulation reasonably calculated to maintain school discipline. (262 C.A.2d 169.)

In Montalvo v. Madera Unified School Dist. Bd. of Education (1971) 21 C.A.3d 323, 98 C.R. 593, the regulation required a boy's hair to be "neat and trimmed above eyes, ears, and collars," and "tapered up from the neck." Held, it was valid. Hair style is not per se an expression of protected speech, and the burden was therefore on plaintiff to demonstrate unreasonableness of the regulation. This he failed to do; the school proved that long male hair was a safety hazard in the science laboratory and in shop classes; that it would be extremely difficult to require boys to wear hair nets and caps; that long hair is a health factor; and that it would result in friction between long and short haired students. (21 C.A.3d 336.) The contention that boys were denied equal protection because girls may wear long hair is without substance. (21 C.A.3d 337.) (See Meyers v. Arcata Union High School Dist. (1969) 269 C.A.2d 549, 559, 75 C.R. 68 [mandamus was properly granted to compel reinstatement of student suspended for wearing long hair; regulation against "extremes of hair styles" lacked specificity and was unconstitutionally vague]; 84 Harv. L. Rev. 1702 [prohibition of long hair]; 8 Santa Clara Lawyer 146 [due process in school administration]; 58 A.L.R.5th 1 [regulation of pupils' personal appearance by public school authorities].)

(2) Clothes. School districts may adopt school dress code policies and prohibit wearing "gang-related apparel." (See Educ.C. 35183; 26 Pacific L. J. 513.) The statute includes legislative findings that "gang-related apparel" is hazardous to the health and safety of the school environment, that students often conceal weapons by wearing particular clothing, that adoption of a schoolwide uniform policy is a reasonable way to protect students from being associated with gangs, that public schools need the authorization to implement uniform clothing requirements to maintain an effective learning environment, and that schools with school uniforms experience better behavior in and out of the classroom. (Educ.C. 35183(a).)

The governing board of a school district "may adopt or rescind a reasonable dress code policy that requires pupils to wear a schoolwide uniform or prohibits pupils from wearing 'gang-related apparel' " if the board approves a plan "initiated by an individual school's principal, staff, and parents and determines that the policy is necessary for the health and safety of the school environment." An individual school may include the dress code policy as part of its school safety plan pursuant to Educ.C. 32281. (Educ.C. 35183(b); see Educ.C. 35294.2(a)(2)(F) [safety plan may include schoolwide dress code that prohibits "gang-related apparel," if definition of term is limited to apparel that "reasonably could be determined to threaten the health and safety of the school environment"].) Adoption and enforcement of a reasonable dress code policy does not violate Educ.C. 48950 (infra, §502). (Educ.C. 35183(c).) (See Educ.C. 35183(d) [notice to parents of uniform plan; financial assistance to economically disadvantaged students]; Educ.C. 35183(e) [opportunity to option-out of plan]; 16 *J. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

D. Regulation of Educational Institutions.

3. Elementary and Secondary School Students.

a. First Amendment Rights.

4. Removal of Library Books.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 494

[§ 494] Removal of Library Books.

In Board of Education, Island Trees Union Free School Dist. No. 26 v. Pico (1982) 457 U.S. 853, 102 S.Ct. 2799, 73 L.Ed.2d 435, a local school board ordered nine books removed from high school and junior high school libraries, characterizing them as "anti-American, anti-Christian, anti-Semitic, and just plain filthy." (See 102 S.Ct. 2803, 73 L.Ed.2d 440, footnote 3, listing the books, and 102 S.Ct. 2823, 73 L.Ed.2d 466, Appendix containing excerpts.) In a plurality opinion of three justices, the court held that students could challenge the action as a violation of their First Amendment rights.

(a) The issue involved was not prescribed textbooks but only library books for optional reading; and the students were not seeking to compel acquisition of books but only to prevent removal of books previously acquired. (102 S.Ct. 2805, 73 L.Ed.2d 444.)

(b) School boards have broad discretion in the management of school affairs, but it must be exercised in a manner that comports with the imperatives of the First Amendment. (102 S.Ct. 2806, 2807, 73 L.Ed.2d 444, 445, discussing Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School Dist. (1969) 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733, 21 L.Ed.2d 731, supra, §§491, 492.)

(c) The right to receive ideas is a necessary predicate to the recipient's meaningful exercise of his or her own rights of speech, press, and political freedom. Just as access to ideas makes it possible for citizens generally to exercise their rights of free speech and press in a meaningful manner, this "access prepares students for active and effective participation in the pluralistic, often contentious society in which they will soon be adult members." (102 S.Ct. 2809, 73 L.Ed.2d 447.) And "the special characteristics of the school library makes that environment especially appropriate for the recognition of First Amendment rights of students." (102 S.Ct. 2809, 73 L.Ed.2d 447.) "Petitioners might well defend their claim of absolute discretion in matters of curriculum by reliance upon their duty to inculcate community values. But we think that petitioners' reliance upon that duty is misplaced where, as here, they attempt to extend their claim of absolute discretion beyond the compulsory environment of the classroom, into the school library and the regime of voluntary inquiry that there holds sway." (102 S.Ct. 2809, 73 L.Ed.2d 448.)

(d) Motivation is the determinative factor in testing the discretion to determine the content of school libraries. "If petitioners intended by their removal decision to deny respondents access to ideas with which petitioners disagreed, and if this intent was the decisive factor in petitioners' decision, then petitioners have exercised their discretion in violation of the Constitution." (102 S.Ct. 2810, 73 L.Ed.2d 449.)

Two justices concurred in the judgment; four dissented in lengthy opinions attacking the decision and reasoning; e.g., "a lavish expansion going beyond any prior holding" (102 S.Ct. 2817, 73 L.Ed.2d 458); "[i]f the school board can set the curriculum, select teachers, and determine initially what books to purchase for the school library, it surely can decide which books to discontinue or remove from the school library so long as it does not also interfere with the right of students to read the material and to discuss it" (102 S.Ct. 2835, 73 L.Ed.2d 481). (See 96 Harv. L. Rev. 151; 17 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1057; 35 Stanf. L. Rev. 497.)

In McCarthy v. Fletcher (1989) 207 C.A.3d 130, 254 C.R. 714, defendant superintendent/principal of a high school district, acting on behalf of the school board, deleted two books from the curriculum without a statement of reasons. Plaintiffs, a teacher, a student, and a parent, sought an injunction against the restrictions on use of the books, and the trial judge granted summary judgment for defendants. Held, reversed.

(a) Pico and other federal cases, while recognizing the power of local boards to make educational decisions, also hold that First Amendment rights must be respected. "[T]here exists an inherent tension between two essential functions of a school board, exposing young minds to the clash of ideas in the free marketplace and the need to provide our youth with a solid foundation of basic, moral values. ... Thus, to insure that the school board's discretion is being exercised in a constitutionally permissible manner, it is necessary to examine the intent of the board members." (207 C.A.3d 140.)

(b) "Two rational but conflicting interpretations as to motivation may be drawn from the opinions that Grendel and One Hundred Years of Solitude were anti-God, antireligious and anti-Catholic in the light of all of the circumstances in the record: (1) the administrators were merely trying to maintain a neutral classroom environment concerning religious orthodoxy by deleting books which criticize the religious views of the community--an arguably legitimate educational purpose, or (2) the administrators were acting to protect and advance the Christian ideology on behalf of the Wasco religious community--a patently illegitimate educational purpose." (207 C.A.3d 141.)

(c) "What is critical to the present state is that a school board does not have the power to advance or inhibit a particular religious orthodoxy as a 'community value' no matter how prevalent or unpopular the orthodox view might be in the community." (207 C.A.3d 144.)

(d) In Hazelwood School Dist. v. Kuhlmeier (1988) 484 U.S. 260, 108 S.Ct. 562, 98 L.Ed.2d 592, infra, §496, the Court referred to a wide variety of "curriculum decisions," and the standard applied in that case should also be applied here. "[R]espondents' decision ... will survive a First Amendment challenge so long as that decision is reasonably related to legitimate educational concerns. However, even under this broad standard, the school authorities' discretion is not unfettered. ... [S]uch a decision cannot be motivated by an intent to 'prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion. ...' In other words, school authorities cannot substitute rigid and exclusive indoctrination for the mere exercise of their prerogative to make educational choices." (207 C.A.3d 146.) (See 17 J. [§ 495] Obscene Speech.

In Bethel School Dist. v. Fraser (1986) 478 U.S. 675, 106 S.Ct. 3159, 92 L.Ed.2d 549, F, a high school pupil, delivered a speech nominating a fellow student for a student government office. The speech "referred to his candidate in terms of an elaborate, graphic, and explicit sexual metaphor." After a hearing, F was disciplined by 3 days' suspension and removal of his name from the list of candidates for graduation speaker. Held, the sanctions did not violate F's First Amendment rights.

(a) The court in Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School Dist. (1969) 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733, 21 L.Ed.2d 731, supra, §§491, 492, was careful to note that the case did not concern speech or action "that intrudes upon the work of the schools or the rights of other students." (106 S.Ct. 3163, 92 L.Ed.2d 557.) Thus, the freedom to advocate unpopular and controversial views must be balanced against "society's countervailing interest in teaching students the boundaries of socially appropriate behavior." (106 S.Ct. 3164, 92 L.Ed.2d 557.) The process of educating youth for citizenship "is not confined to books, the curriculum, and the civics class; schools must teach by example the shared values of a civilized social order." (106 S.Ct. 3165, 92 L.Ed.2d 558.)

(b) The "pervasive sexual innuendo" in F's speech "was plainly offensive to both teachers and students--indeed to any mature person." (106 S.Ct. 3165, 92 L.Ed.2d 558.) Hence, the school district "acted entirely within its permissible authority in imposing sanctions" on F "in response to his offensively lewd and indecent speech. Unlike the sanctions imposed on the students wearing armbands in Tinker, the penalties imposed in this case were unrelated to any political viewpoint. The First Amendment does not prevent the school officials from determining that to permit a vulgar and lewd speech such as respondent's would undermine the school's basic educational mission. A high school assembly or classroom is no place for a sexually explicit monologue directed towards an unsuspecting audience of teenage students." (106 S.Ct. 3166, 92 L.Ed.2d 560.)

6. Newspaper Produced by Journalism Class.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 496

[§ 496] Newspaper Produced by Journalism Class.

In Hazelwood School Dist. v. Kuhlmeier (1988) 484 U.S. 260, 108 S.Ct. 562, 98 L.Ed.2d 592, Spectrum, a newspaper, was written and edited by the journalism class at Hazelwood High School in St. Louis, Missouri. The major funding was supplied by the school district, and the practice of the journalism teacher was to submit page proofs to the principal for review prior to publication. On this occasion the principal objected to one story describing students' experiences with pregnancy, and to another discussing the impact of divorce on students. Because of the time limitations on publication, he concluded that corrections could not be made, and ordered deletion of the two pages on which the stories appeared. Three student staff members of the paper brought an action against the school authorities; the district court concluded that the principal's action was justified, the Court of Appeals came to the opposite conclusion, and the Supreme Court reversed the decision of the Court of Appeals.

(a) The newspaper was not a public forum. School facilities may be deemed public forums only if school authorities have by policy or practice opened those facilities for indiscriminate use by the general public or some segment of it. (108 S.Ct. 568, 98 L.Ed.2d 602.) Here, the authorities reserved the forum for its intended purpose as a supervised learning experience for journalism students; hence, they were entitled to regulate the contents of the newspaper in any reasonable manner. (108 S.Ct. 569, 98 L.Ed.2d 605.)

(b) "The question whether the First Amendment requires a school to tolerate particular student speech--the question that we addressed in Tinker--is different from the question whether the First Amendment requires a school affirmatively to promote particular student speech. The former question addresses educators' ability to silence a student's personal expression that happens to occur on the school premises. The latter question concerns educators' authority over school-sponsored publications, theatrical productions, and other expressive activities that students, parents, and members of the public might reasonably perceive to bear the imprimatur of the school. These activities may fairly be characterized as part of the school curriculum, whether or not they occur in a traditional classroom setting, so long as they are supervised by faculty members and designed to impart particular knowledge or skills to student participants and audiences." (108 S.Ct. 570, 98 L.Ed.2d 604, referring to Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School Dist. (1969) 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733, 21 L.Ed.2d 731, supra, §§491, 492.)

(c) "Educators are entitled to exercise greater control over this second form of student expression to assure that participants learn whatever lessons the activity is designed to teach, that readers or listeners are not exposed to material that may be inappropriate for their level of maturity, and that the views of the individual speaker are not erroneously attributed to the school." (108 S.Ct. 570, 98 L.Ed.2d 605.) Accordingly, the Tinker standard does not apply. "[E]ducators do not offend the First Amendment by exercising editorial control over the style and content of student speech in school-sponsored expressive activities so long as their actions are reasonably related to legitimate pedagogical concerns." (108 S.Ct. 571, 98 L.Ed.2d 606.) "This standard is consistent with our oft-expressed view that the education of the Nation's youth is primarily the responsibility of parents, teachers, and state and local school officials, and not of federal judges." (108 S.Ct. 571, 98 L.Ed.2d 606.)

The majority opinion concluded that the principal acted reasonably under the circumstances, and that no violation of First Amendment rights occurred. (108 S.Ct. 572, 98 L.Ed.2d 607.) Three justices dissented, arguing that Tinker was controlling. (108 S.Ct. 573, 98 L.Ed.2d 609.) (See 102 Harv. L. Rev. 271 [Hazelwood]; 105 Harv. L. Rev. 597 [Ninth Circuit case on school district's exclusion of advertisement from school newspapers].)

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY D. Regulation of Educational Institutions. 3. Elementary and Secondary School Students. b. California Constitution and Statutes. 1. Fees for Extracurricular Activity.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 497

[§ 497] Fees for Extracurricular Activity.

(1) Invalid Fees. The Legislature must "provide for a system of common schools by which a free school shall be kept up and supported in each district." (Cal. Const., Art. IX, §5.)

In Hartzell v. Connell (1984) 35 C.3d 899, 201 C.R. 601, 679 P.2d 35, the court held that extracurricular activities come within the guarantee, and therefore that fees imposed for participation in extracurricular music and sports activities are unconstitutional. (35 C.3d 911.) One justice dissented, contending that a school district may properly charge a fee for optional participation by students in extracurricular activities that bear no credit, where participation is not barred by any student's inability to pay. (35 C.3d 928, 937.) (See California Assn. for Safety Education v. Brown (1994) 30 C.A.4th 1264, 1276, 36 C.R.2d 404 [school district's driver training fee violated free school guarantee; citing Hartzell].)

(2) Valid Fees. In Arcadia Unified School Dist. v. State Dept. of Education (1992) 2 C.4th 251, 5 C.R.2d 545, 825 P.2d 438, the issue was whether Educ.C. 39807.5 (former version), which authorizes school districts to charge fees for pupil transportation, violates either the free school guaranty (Cal. Const., Art. IX, §5) or the Equal Protection Clause (Cal. Const., Art. I, §7) of the California Constitution. (2 C.4th 255.) Held, neither is violated.

(a) In Hartzell, the court determined that extracurricular activities constitute an integral component of public education, and are a fundamental ingredient of the educational process. (2 C.4th 262.) This is not true of school bus transportation. "Students are not required to use the same means of transportation as their classmates in order to get to school to receive an education; individual students may choose different modes of transportation to suit their own circumstances. Unlike textbooks or teachers' salaries, transportation is not an expense peculiar to education. Without doubt, school-provided transportation may enhance or be useful to school activity, but it is not a necessary element which each student must utilize or be denied the opportunity to receive an education." (2 C.4th 263.)

(b) The contention that the transportation fees discriminate against the poor might have merit if the children were prevented from attending school because they could not afford to pay the fees. However, Educ.C. 39807.5 specifically provides that indigent children must be exempted from paying fees; and if the statute is properly administered, no child will be denied transportation to school because of poverty. (2 C.4th 266.) (See Salazar v. Eastin (1995) 9 C.4th 836, 849, 39 C.R.2d 21, 890 P.2d 43 [injunction finding that Educ.C. 39807.5 was unconstitutional was properly vacated on basis of Arcadia, and refusal to modify injunction to have local districts address statute's application was correct, where no district was ever found to be misapplying statute]; 20 Pepperdine L. Rev. 806 [Arcadia].)

b. California Constitution and Statutes.

2. Censorship of Unofficial Newspaper.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 498

[§ 498] Censorship of Unofficial Newspaper.

(1) In General. In Bright v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (1976) 18 C.3d 450, 134 C.R. 639, 556 P.2d 1090, defendant school district's regulations on the circulation of student underground newspapers included two that were challenged by plaintiff: (1) approval of the proposed publication by the principal before its distribution on school premises; and (2) prohibition against sale as distinguished from distribution without charge. Held, the regulations were violative of the rights established by former Educ.C. 10611 (now Educ.C. 48907), and were consequently invalid.

(a) Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School Dist. (1969) 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733, 21 L.Ed.2d 731, supra, §§491, 492, "introduced a significant change in the control of students by school authorities and in a real sense gave voice to a different theory of education." (18 C.3d 456.) The decision recognized the right of personal intercommunication among students, and the right to express unpopular views. Student criticism of government, society, and the school system finds expression in a variety of ways, including the "underground newspaper," produced without the authorization of school officials, and often couched in strident or earthy language. (18 C.3d 456, 457.)

(b) Federal decisions have not been consistent on the extent of permissible regulation of these publications, but none has actually upheld a system of prior restraint. (18 C.3d 463.)

(c) In light of these decisions and the legislative history, the statute was intended to establish a system for prohibition against specific categories of objectionable material, and for discipline of those responsible for distributing it. But it does not authorize prevention of distribution through prior administrative censorship. (18 C.3d 464.)

(d) The federal cases have uniformly invalidated regulations flatly banning the sale of underground newspapers as overbroad restrictions on freedom of speech. (18 C.3d 466, 467.) In light of these decisions, the statute must be construed as not authorizing the ban on sale of printed materials that are otherwise entitled to be distributed. (18 C.3d 466.) (See 22 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 141 [Regulation of Underground Newspapers on Public School Campuses].)

(2) Statutory Provision. Educ.C. 48907 provides as follows:

(a) Students of public schools have the right to exercise freedom of speech and of the press, including "the right of expression in official publications, whether or not such publications or other means of expression are supported financially by the school or by use of school facilities." Excepted are (1) obscene, libelous or slanderous matter; (2) matter which so incites students as to create a clear and present danger of unlawful acts on school premises, violation of lawful school regulations, or substantial disruption of its orderly operation.

(b) The governing board of a school district and the county board of education must adopt a written publications code.

(c) Student editors of official school publications are responsible for the content of publications, but a journalism adviser within each school must "supervise the production of the student staff, to maintain professional standards of English and journalism, and to maintain the provisions of this section." "Official school publications" are materials produced by students in the journalism, newspaper, yearbook, or writing classes, and distributed to the student body either free or for a fee.

(d) "There shall be no prior restraint of material prepared for official school publications except insofar as it violates this section. School officials shall have the burden of showing justification without undue delay prior to any limitation of student expression under this section."

(e) "Nothing in this section shall prohibit or prevent any governing board of a school district from adopting otherwise valid rules and regulations relating to oral communication by students upon the premises of each school." (See Lopez v. Tulare Joint Union High School Dist. (1995) 34 C.A.4th 1302, 1317, 1322, 1327, 40 C.R.2d 762 [under Educ.C. 48907, school board, in interest of maintaining professional standards of English and journalism, could require that profanity be deleted from film produced by students in film arts class; rejecting claims of improper prior restraint under First Amendment and California Constitution]; 20 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1055 [constitutionality of Educ.C. 48907]; on interpretation and scope of statute, see infra, §499.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Statutory Provision. Educ.C. 48907 "mandates that a school may not prohibit student speech simply because it presents controversial ideas and opponents of the speech are likely to cause disruption. Schools may only prohibit speech that incites disruption, either because it specifically calls for a disturbance or because the manner of expression (as opposed to the content of the ideas) is so inflammatory that the speech itself provokes the disturbance." (Smith v. Novato Unified School Dist. (2007) 150 C.A.4th 1439, 1457, 1460, 59 C.R.3d 508 [although student editorial on immigration was disrespectful to immigrants, it did not incite disruption; defendant school did not infringe plaintiff's free speech rights by providing forum to parents and students objecting to plaintiff's editorial, but it did violate Educ.C. 48907 by announcing that editorial was not protected speech and retracting remaining copies of paper].)

Educ.C. 48907 was amended in 2008 to substitute "pupil" for "student" throughout the statute, and to substitute "the" for "such" in the quoted material in paragraph (a). Paragraph (e) now reads: "This section does not prohibit or prevent the governing board of a school district from adopting otherwise valid rules and regulations relating to oral communication by pupils upon the premises of each school."

D. Regulation of Educational Institutions.

3. Elementary and Secondary School Students.

b. California Constitution and Statutes.

3. Censorship of Official Newspaper.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 499

[§ 499] Censorship of Official Newspaper.

In Leeb v. DeLong (1988) 198 C.A.3d 47, 243 C.R. 494, plaintiff, student editor of a newspaper of Rancho High School, prepared its traditional April Fool's Day spoof. One article was headlined "Nude Photos; Girls of Rancho," and stated that Playboy magazine would carry nude photographs of Rancho girl students. It was accompanied by a photograph of five clothed girls standing in line to apply for the posing session. A disclaimer on a different page stated that all stories and announcements "are fabrications of the mind." The edition was submitted to defendant principal too late for deletion of the offending article, and he prohibited distribution of the newspaper. Plaintiff sued for an injunction, contending that Educ.C. 48907 (see supra, §498) violates the free press provision of the California Constitution (Cal. Const., Art. I, §2, supra, §312). Held, summary judgment for defendants affirmed.

(a) "Is a statute which accords broad free press rights to public high school students nonetheless repugnant to the Constitution of California because it also allows school officials a very limited right to censor official high school publications?" (198 C.A.3d 53.) If Hazelwood School Dist. v. Kuhlmeier (1988) 484 U.S. 260, 108 S.Ct. 562, 98 L.Ed.2d 592, supra, §496, were applicable in California, the answer would be clear, but it is not. Educ.C. 48907 "and California decisional authority confer editorial control of official student publications on the student editors alone, with very limited exceptions. The broad power to censor expression in school sponsored publications for pedagogical purposes recognized in Kuhlmeier is not available to this state's educators." (198 C.A.3d 54.)

(b) Bailey v. Loggins (1982) 32 C.3d 907, 187 C.R. 575, 654 P.2d. 758, supra, §365, is apparently based on both the federal and state Constitutions. The Court rejected the contention that the state as publisher enjoys the same total control over the content of a newspaper as a private publisher; and the holding was that the state, having established an activity that has the elements of free expression, must take into account First Amendment considerations in restricting that expression. The dissent in Bailey took essentially the same position as the U.S. Supreme Court in Kuhlmeier. (198 C.A.3d 55.) "Nonetheless, we are compelled to follow the views of the majority in Bailey." (198 C.A.3d 56.)

(c) "At least by statute a school newspaper is a limited forum in this state, but to what extent may the government publisher exercise its restricted right to control the content of the publication? In terms of the present case, was it constitutionally permissible to impose the limited prior restraint the Legislature authorized in Education Code section

48907 or was discipline after the fact the only lawful response?" (198 C.A.3d 57.) Bright v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (1976) 18 C.3d 450, 134 C.R. 639, 556 P.2d 1090, supra, §498, concluded that, while prior restraints might be possible, the statute did not authorize them; Educ.C. 48907, the Legislature's response to Bright, does expressly provide for a limited form of censorship in school sponsored publications. (198 C.A.3d 57.)

(d) Sound precedent and practical considerations support the school administration's right to censor actionable defamatory material from official student publications.

(1) Student editors have little incentive to suppress defamatory material; few would be able to respond in damages, and suspension or expulsion of offenders would not do much to restore the reputations of defamed parties. "Where, as here, the prospective victims of the defamation are themselves students, it is nonsensical to contend the Constitution of California requires the school district to publish a libelous treatment of one pupil by another. Surely a school district owes as great a duty to the prospective student victim of a defamation as it does to the student editor-tortfeasor." (198 C.A.3d 58.)

(2) A school district shorn of the power to ban defamation would be vulnerable to a defamation action, and a severe diminution of opportunities for student expression would be the trade-off. (198 C.A.3d 58.)

(3) The practicalities consequently suggest the need for and reasonableness of Educ.C. 48907, "specifically the power to censor defamatory material from official student publications." (198 C.A.3d 58.) Thus, construed in light of Bailey, the statute does not offend the California Constitution. It is understood in terms of the potential tort liability test: "A school district in this state may censor expression from official school publications which it reasonably believes to contain an actionable defamation, but not as a matter of taste or pedagogy. ... Grading or postpublication discipline, if warranted, is adequate to achieve the latter ends." (198 C.A.3d 60.)

(e) The tort liability test also assists in resolving plaintiff's charges of vagueness and overbreadth. Read literally, the statute provides a power to censor material that, by reason of privilege, would not support an action for damages against a private newspaper. (198 C.A.3d 60.) And neither the statute nor the district's implementing regulation defines the words "libelous" and "slanderous," and neither describes a method for evaluating questioned material. But by confining the scope of the section's defamation exception to matters involving a clear risk of a recovery in tort, the parties are placed in the same situation with respect to allegedly defamatory material as private litigants in a court of law. (198 C.A.3d 62.)

(f) The court summarizes its conclusion as follows:

(1) A "decision to impose a prior restraint in the case of a possible defamation must, at a minimum, be based on a good faith and objectively rational determination of the probable effect of the challenged speech, i.e., that it contains a false statement (or one that cannot be proved to be true) likely to harm the reputation of another or hold that person up to shame, ridicule, or humiliation. It is not enough that a lawsuit is threatened. Freedom of speech may not be allowed to hinge on the subjective pique of an offended prospective plaintiff in a frivolous or doubtful lawsuit. Prior restraint, although not other disciplinary action necessarily, must yield unless it also appears that an offended plaintiff would have a clear chance of prevailing in a tort action against the school district." (198 C.A.3d 62.)

(2) "Defamatory material that is not actionable because it is privileged or deals with a public figure without malice may not be censored." (198 C.A.3d 62.)

(3) The district's regulation "should also require that any decision to delete an item thought to be defamatory should, insofar as it is possible, be limited to the offending material itself." (198 C.A.3d 62.)

(4) The regulation "should also provide that no prior restraint may be imposed without affording a speedy opportunity to be heard and a swift procedure for administrative review." (198 C.A.3d 63.)

[§ 500] School Placement.

In Helena F. v. West Contra Costa Unified School Dist. (1996) 49 C.A.4th 1793, 57 C.R.2d 605, plaintiffs were students who had enrolled late. Due to lack of space, they were denied immediate entry into their schools of residence but were offered placement in alternate schools and placed on waiting lists for their schools of residence. Plaintiffs, claiming that their placement violated their right under Cal. Const., Art. IX, §5 (see supra, §497), to a free public education, sought mandamus, which was denied. Held, affirmed.

(a) Plaintiffs were not denied access to district schools; rather, they were late enrollees who were denied immediate entry into the school of their choice. The obligation to provide free education does not include a duty to provide schools that are geographically convenient. (49 C.A.4th 1799, 1800.)

(b) There are benefits to attending a school close to home. However, "[t]he convenience of late-registering students must be balanced against the education of an established number of students deemed the maximum appropriate size for its age group. To accommodate these competing interests, the district must be permitted some flexibility in configuring attendance zones and maintaining the schools therein to accommodate the demands upon its educational resources." VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY

D. Regulation of Educational Institutions.

4. Statutory Declaration of Rights.

a. Legislative Findings and Intent.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 501

[§ 501] Legislative Findings and Intent.

(1) In General. The rights of secondary and postsecondary students to engage in constitutionally protected speech or other communication have been codified. (See Educ.C. 48950 [secondary schools]; Educ.C. 66301 [public colleges and universities]; Educ.C. 94367 [private postsecondary institutions]; 24 Pacific L. J. 839.) The legislative intent of these enactments was "that a student shall have the same right to exercise his or her right to free speech on campus as he or she enjoys when off campus." (Stats. 1992, Chap. 1363, §4(b).)

(2) Rights of Free Speech. On a student's free speech rights, the legislative findings include a quotation from Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School Dist. (1969) 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733, 21 L.Ed.2d 731, supra, §§491, 492, that a student may exercise these rights so long as the student's conduct does not materially disrupt school operations. (Stats. 1992, Chap. 1363, §4(a)(2).) However, the Legislature also found that "[f]ree speech rights, both on and off campus, are subject to reasonable time, place, and manner regulations." (Stats. 1992, Chap. 1363, §4(a)(1).)

(3) Fighting Words Are Not Protected. "Fighting words" or epithets are not constitutionally protected "where (A) the speech, considered objectively, is abusive and insulting rather than a communication of ideas and (B) it is actually used in an abusive manner in a situation that presents an actual danger that it will cause a breach of the peace." (Stats. 1992, Chap. 1363, §4(a)(3).)

(4) Hate Violence Is Not Protected. Several findings were made on equal educational opportunity and the effect of hate violence on this opportunity: (a) "All students have the right to participate fully in the educational process free from discrimination and hate violence." (Stats. 1992, Chap. 1363, §4(a)(4).) (b) "Institutions of higher education have an obligation to combat racism, sexism, and other forms of bias, and a responsibility to provide equal educational opportunity as guaranteed by the state and federal Constitutions." (Stats. 1992, Chap. 1363, §4(a)(5).) (c) "Hate violence on campus creates a hostile environment and jeopardizes" this constitutionally guaranteed equal educational opportunity. (Stats. 1992, Chap. 1363, §4(a)(6).)

The findings define hate violence as any act or threat "of physical intimidation or physical harassment, physical force or physical violence ... directed against any person or group of persons, or the property" of that person or group, "because of the ethnicity, race, national origin, religion, sex, sexual orientation, disability, or political or religious beliefs of that person or group." (Stats. 1992, Chap. 1363, §4(a)(7).) Acts may not be considered hate violence "based on speech alone, except upon a showing that the speech itself threatens violence against a specific person or group of persons," that the threatened person or group "reasonably fears that the violence will be committed because of the speech, and that the person threatening violence had the apparent ability to carry out the threat." (Stats. 1992, Chap. 1363, §4(a)(8).)

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 502

[§ 502] Protected Speech Is Not Subject to Discipline.

(1) Secondary Schools. School districts operating one or more high schools, as well as private secondary schools, are prohibited from making or enforcing "any rule subjecting any high school pupil to disciplinary sanctions solely on the basis of conduct that is speech or other communication" that, if engaged in off campus, is protected from governmental restriction by the First Amendment or by Cal. Const., Art. I, §2. (Educ.C. 48950(a).) However, nothing in the statute prohibits "imposition of discipline for harassment, threats, or intimidation, unless constitutionally protected." (Educ.C. 48950(d).) And "free speech rights are subject to reasonable time, place, and manner regulations." (Educ.C. 48950(f)); see Educ.C. 35294.2 [wearing "gang-related apparel" in violation of schoolwide dress code is not protected form of speech under Educ.C. 48950]; supra, §493.) Nothing in Educ.C. 48950 may be construed to supersede, limit, or modify the provisions of Educ.C. 48907 (supra, §498). (Educ.C. 48950(e).)

(2) Postsecondary Schools. Postsecondary schools are prohibited from making or enforcing "any rule subjecting any student to disciplinary sanctions solely on the basis of conduct that is speech or other communication" that, if engaged in off campus, is protected from governmental restriction by the First Amendment or by Cal. Const., Art. I, §2. (Educ.C. 66301(a)) [University of California, California State University, and community college districts]; Educ.C. 94367(a) [private postsecondary institutions].)

However, nothing in the statutes prohibits "imposition of discipline for harassment, threats, or intimidation, unless constitutionally protected." (Educ.C. 66301(d), 94367(e).) And nothing in the statutes prohibits an institution from adopting rules and regulations "designed to prevent violence ... from being directed at students in a manner that denies them their full participation in the educational process," provided these rules and regulations conform to constitutional standards for citizens generally. (Educ.C. 66301(e), 94367(f).) The statutes may not be construed to authorize any prior restraint of student speech. (Educ.C. 66301(c), 94367(d).)

(3) Exception for Religious Institutions. Neither Educ.C. 48950 nor Educ.C. 94367 applies to a private secondary or postsecondary school "that is controlled by a religious organization, to the extent" that application of the statute "would not be consistent with the religious tenets of the organization." (Educ.C. 48950(c), 94367(c).)

(4) Remedy. The remedy is the same regardless of whether a secondary or postsecondary school is involved. A student enrolled in a covered institution that has made or enforced any rule in violation of the statute may bring a civil action for "appropriate injunctive and declaratory relief as determined by the court." On motion, attorneys' fees may be awarded to a prevailing plaintiff. (Educ.C. 48950(b), 66301(b), 94367(b).)

(1) Secondary Schools. The portion of Educ.C. 48950(a) quoted in the text was amended in 2008 to substitute "a" for "any" both times it appears. (2) Postsecondary Schools. The portions of Educ.C. 66301(a) and 94367(a) quoted in the text were amended in 2008 to substitute "a" for "any" both times it appears. Educ.C. 66301(e) and 94367(f) both allow institutions to adopt rules and regulations designed to prevent "hate" violence (see text, §501).

(4) Remedy. See Antebi v. Occidental College (2006) 141 C.A.4th 1542, 1547, 47 C.R.3d 277 [plaintiff who was no longer student at college lacked standing to pursue remedy under Educ.C. 94367(b)].

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY E. Regulation of Government Employees. 1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 503

[§ 503] In General.

(1) No Issue of Public Concern. In Connick v. Myers (1983) 461 U.S. 138, 103 S.Ct. 1684, 75 L.Ed.2d 708, plaintiff, an assistant district attorney in New Orleans competently performing her duties, was notified by defendant district attorney that she was being transferred to a different section of the criminal court. She objected, but was unable to change defendant's decision. Plaintiff then prepared a questionnaire which she distributed to fellow staff members, asking questions dealing with office transfer policy, morale, the need for a grievance committee, the level of confidence in superiors, and whether employees felt pressured to work in political campaigns. Defendant then told her that she was being terminated because of refusal to accept the transfer, and also that distribution of the questionnaire was considered an act of insubordination. She filed a civil rights action under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (see infra, §816), and the district court ordered her reinstated with back pay, damages, and attorneys' fees. Held, reversed.

(a) Early decisions followed the unchallenged dogma that a public employee had no right to object to conditions placed on the terms of employment, including those that restricted the exercise of constitutional rights. But later cases, culminating in Pickering v. Board of Education of Township High School Dist. 205, Will, Illinois (1968) 391 U.S. 563, 88 S.Ct. 1731, 20 L.Ed.2d 811, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §283, invalidated statutes and actions that sought to suppress the rights of public employees to participate in public affairs. (103 S.Ct. 1688, 1689, 75 L.Ed.2d 718, 719.) Other cases following Pickering make it clear that the test is whether the speech deals with a matter of public concern. (103 S.Ct. 1689, 75 L.Ed.2d 719.)

(b) Government officials should have wide latitude in managing their offices. A dismissal may not be fair, but ordinary dismissals from government service that violate no fixed tenure or applicable statute or regulation are not subject to judicial review. (103 S.Ct. 1690, 75 L.Ed.2d 719.) "Our responsibility is to ensure that citizens are not deprived of fundamental rights by virtue of working for the government; this does not require a grant of immunity for employee grievances not afforded by the First Amendment to those who do not work for the state." (103 S.Ct. 1690, 75 L.Ed.2d 720.)

(c) Whether an employee's speech addresses a matter of public concern must be determined by the content, form, and context of the statement. With one exception, the questions posed by Myers did not meet the test: They were mere extensions of her dispute over the transfer; they were designed to gather ammunition for another round of controversy with her superiors, and were "an attempt to turn that displeasure into a cause celebre." (103 S.Ct. 1691, 75 L.Ed.2d 720.)

While public officials should be receptive to constructive criticism offered by their employees, "the First Amendment does not require a public office to be run as a roundtable for employee complaints over internal office affairs." (103 S.Ct. 1691, 75 L.Ed.2d 721.) The exception was the question regarding pressure to work in political campaigns. (103 S.Ct. 1691, 75 L.Ed.2d 721.)

(d) Plaintiff's questionnaire therefore touched on matters of public concern in only a most limited sense; and the limited First Amendment interest involved here does not require defendant to tolerate action that "he reasonably believed would disrupt the office, undermine his authority, and destroy close working relationships." (103 S.Ct. 1694, 75 L.Ed.2d 724.)

Four justices dissented. (See 97 Harv. L. Rev. 164; 72 Cal. L. Rev. 962 [prepublication review of government employees' speech]; 76 Cal. L. Rev. 1109 [public concern requirement]; 25 Hastings Const. L. Q. 529 [permissible content discrimination]; 25 Pepperdine L. Rev. 723 [employees' free speech rights vs. duty of loyalty to employer].)

(2) Protected Issue of Public Concern. In Chico Public Officers' Assn. v. Chico (1991) 232 C.A.3d 635, 283 C.R. 610, defendant city's police department took disciplinary action against police officer M, for writing an article in the employees' association newsletter (The Centurion). The article castigated the management, and stated that The Centurion was "the only watch dog available to monitor the chief and his lackeys." The trial judge granted the petition of M and the association for mandamus, and ordered the disciplinary action vacated. Held, affirmed; the statement was protected speech involving a matter of public concern.

(a) The speech did not become unprotected simply because it included a complaint that was personal to M. M's "use of the term 'lackeys' was substantially intertwined with both comments on employer-employee relations and allegations of mismanagement." Thus, taken in context, M's speech "addressed issues of public concern." (232 C.A.3d 648.)

(b) The city's interests in efficiency as an employer did not outweigh M's speech interest. "[A]ppellants offered no evidence of any disruptive effect occasioned by Moore's speech, other than the chief's conclusionary opinion that he perceived it as interfering with close working relationships within the department as a direct attempt to undermine his authority and that of the officers to whom Moore referred. ... [I]t is equally probable that any disruption to efficiency and discipline in the department was the result of a widely held perception of mismanagement which was merely reflected in 'The Centurion' edition rather than precipitated by Moore's speech." (232 C.A.3d 651.)

(3) Reasonableness Requirement. In Waters v. Churchill (1994) 511 U.S. 661, 114 S.Ct. 1878, 128 L.Ed.2d 686, C, a public hospital nurse, was fired because of disruptive statements she allegedly made during a conversation with another nurse. C denied the statements and claimed that her comments were limited to criticisms of a policy that threatened patient care. She filed an action under 42 U.S.C., §1983, but the district court granted summary judgment to petitioners. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that the test set forth in Connick should be applied to C's actual speech, as determined by a jury, not to what the employer thought she said. Held, judgment vacated.

The plurality opinion of four justices concluded that the Connick test should be applied to what the government employer reasonably thought the employee said, not to what the trier of fact ultimately determines the employee actually said. (114 S.Ct. 1884, 128 L.Ed.2d 694.) The decisionmaker must reach its decision in good faith, rather than as a pretext. But good faith alone is not sufficient; the conclusion as to what was said must also be reasonable. (114 S.Ct. 1889, 128 L.Ed.2d 700.)

Three justices, concurring in the judgment, disagreed with imposition of a reasonableness requirement and concluded that a public employer's discipline of an employee violates the First Amendment only if it is in retaliation for the employee's speech on a matter of public concern. (114 S.Ct. 1893, 128 L.Ed.2d 706.)

Two justices dissented, arguing that the proper inquiry is not what the government employer reasonably thought was said, but rather what the trier of fact ultimately determines actually was said. (114 S.Ct. 1899, 128 L.Ed.2d 713.) (See 108 Harv. L. Rev. 280.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law VI. FREEDOM OF SPEECH, PRESS, AND ASSEMBLY E. Regulation of Government Employees. 2. Balancing of Interests.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 504

[§ 504] Balancing of Interests.

(1) In General. In Gray v. Tulare (1995) 32 C.A.4th 1079, 38 C.R.2d 317, plaintiff, a captain in the sheriff's department, was fired for suggesting in newspaper articles that defendant sheriff was abusing his power by punishing his political enemies. The statements were the result of a disruptive situation. Plaintiff was one of four captains (there were five altogether) who had supported the losing candidate in an election. When defendant took over, he investigated plaintiff about his predecessor's spying on him and transferred plaintiff from investigations to administration, after removing the administrative captain's most important job, that of budgeting. Defendant relied on the newly appointed undersheriff and often excluded the captains when setting policy. Plaintiff's statements included negative comments about the choice of the new undersheriff, the transfer of a sergeant from narcotics to road patrol, and several internal investigations that defendant had launched. After exhausting his administrative remedies, which resulted in the upholding of his dismissal, plaintiff filed a petition for mandamus. The trial judge found that plaintiff's First Amendment's rights had been violated and issued the writ. Held, reversed; the trial judge failed to consider the issue of political retaliation.

(a) General principles. It is well established that the First Amendment protects speech by public employees about matters of public concern. (32 C.A.4th 1089, citing Waters v. Churchill (1994) 511 U.S. 661, 114 S.Ct. 1878, 128 L.Ed.2d 686, supra, §503.) However, the government, as employer, has far broader powers to regulate the speech of its employees than the government, as sovereign, has to regulate the speech of its citizens in general. Hence, the standard is to inquire whether the speech involves a matter of public interest and, if so, to then ask whether the interests of the employee, as a citizen, outweigh the interests of the state, as an employer, in promoting efficiency of public service.

(b) Matters of public concern. Two of plaintiff's statements were not limited purely to grievances, but related generally to claims that defendant was misusing the resources and prerogatives of his job. This is a matter of public concern, as is the ethical operation of the department in accordance with applicable rules and regulations. (32 C.A.4th 1090.) Plaintiff's assertions that defendant was paranoid and possibly psychotic were closely tied to his allegations of political retaliation and did not cause his remarks to lose their First Amendment protection. (32 C.A.4th 1091.)

(c) State's interests outweighed plaintiff's interests.

(1) On paper, the captains occupy the positions directly beneath the undersheriff. They are major executives responsible for keeping the sheriff informed and carrying out his policy. As such, they must have the sheriff's trust and confidence and vice versa. In other words, law enforcement agencies are essentially paramilitary organizations in which discipline and loyalty are of paramount importance. (32 C.A.4th 1092.)

(2) Plaintiff argued that, in reality, his relationship with defendant had already deteriorated to the point that the newspaper articles did not make it worse. The cases are in disagreement over whether the speech must cause the problem, or merely reflect the existing situation. However, it is not necessary to resolve this issue, because, irrespective of any ill will between the two men, their positions required that they continue to be able to work closely together. Moreover, the evidence shows that plaintiff's statements contributed significantly to a public debate that created dissension within the department and impaired defendant's ability to manage. (32 C.A.4th 1093.)

(3) Plaintiff's comments were made at a time when one captain had been dismissed and a sergeant was suing over a transfer. Given the nature of plaintiff's remarks and the manner in which they were made (prepared remarks to a reporter, instead of off-the-cuff statements), it was understandable that they would get the widest possible distribution. (32 C.A.4th 1094.)

(4) When an employee's speech about an office policy arises from an employment dispute concerning the application of that policy to the speaker, the view that the employee had threatened the authority of the employer to run the office is entitled to additional weight. Here, the policy of firing those who speak out against the department was the same policy that was applied against plaintiff, who was allegedly a victim of a witch hunt against political enemies. This factor did not diminish his right to speak out, but it was relevant in determining whether his statements were protected. (32 C.A.4th 1095.)

(5) Plaintiff's remarks suggested that he had access to inside information that, given the nature of the internal investigations, defendant was unable to refute. In fact, defendant was quoted in related articles as refusing to respond to plaintiff's comments because of possible breach of confidence. (32 C.A.4th 1095.)

(6) Finally, plaintiff's statements violated written provisions of both the county's and the department's policy manual. Plaintiff argued that defendant had abrogated these policies by promising an open administration during the election campaign, by saying that critics of his appointment of the undersheriff had a constitutional right to voice their opinion, and by refusing to discipline or warn plaintiff when he publicly attacked that appointment. This contention is without merit. Defendant's campaign promises and silence can hardly be equated with his inviting public attacks on his administration. Nor can they be treated as repealing established departmental policy, much less county policy, over which defendant had no control. And defendant's statement that employees have a right to voice their criticism of his appointments does not suggest that employees also have a right to make statements that go beyond the First Amendment. (32 C.A.4th 1096.)

(7) "Thus, in view of the entire record before us, we reject Gray's contentions Coley invited his critical statements and failed to give him adequate notice the statements would subject him to disciplinary action. We conclude Gray's statements to the Visalia Times-Delta, although related to matters of public concern, substantially disrupted the efficient operation of the Department. For all the reasons we have set out above, his interest in making the statements was outweighed by the sheriff's interest in maintaining order and discipline. Accordingly, Gray's statements were not protected by the First Amendment and Coley was justified in dismissing him for having made them." (32 C.A.4th 1096.) (See Southern Calif. Rapid Transit Dist. v. Superior Court (1994) 30 C.A.4th 713, 726, 36 C.R.2d 665 [First Amendment rights of transportation district's at-will employee were violated by retaliatory firing for conducting investigation that revealed forged signature and misclassification of company as "Disadvantaged Business Enterprise"]; Kirchmann v. Lake Elsinore Unified School Dist. (1997) 57 C.A.4th 595, 613, 67 C.R.2d 268 [degree of sanction levied against employee is not relevant to question whether free speech rights were violated]; on discharge of public employees as violation of their constitutional or statutory rights generally, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §278 et seq.)

(2) Independent Contractors. The First Amendment protects independent contractors, as well as employees, from termination of an employment contract in retaliation for the exercise of free speech. The balancing test under Pickering v. Board of Education of Township High School Dist. 205, Will, Illinois (1968) 391 U.S. 563, 88 S.Ct. 1731, 20 L.Ed.2d 811, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §283, determines the extent of protection. Witkin Summary of California Law

VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

A. In General.

1. Nature of Constitutional Provisions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 505

[§ 505] Nature of Constitutional Provisions.

Both the federal and California Constitutions guarantee religious freedom. The First Amendment to the federal Constitution declares that Congress "shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." (On Free Exercise Clause, see infra, §514 et seq.; on Establishment Clause, see infra, §507 et seq.) (See 5 Rotunda, §21.1 et seq.; 2 Tribe, §14-1 et seq.)

The California provision is broader: "Free exercise and enjoyment of religion without discrimination or preference are guaranteed. This liberty of conscience does not excuse acts that are licentious or inconsistent with the peace or safety of the state. The Legislature shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion." The section adds: "A person is not incompetent to be a witness or juror because of his or her opinions on religious beliefs." (Cal. Const., Art. I, §4.)

The California Constitution further provides that the state and its subdivisions may not appropriate funds or pay for anything in aid of a religious sect, church, creed, or institution (Cal. Const., Art. XVI, §5), and that no public money may be appropriated "for the support of any sectarian or denominational school" (Cal. Const., Art. IX, §8).

In Everson v. Board of Education of Ewing Township (1947) 330 U.S. 1, 67 S.Ct. 504, 511, 91 L.Ed. 711, 723, infra, §539, the Court stated that the First Amendment "establishment of religion" clause "means at least this: Neither a state nor the Federal Government can set up a church. Neither can pass laws which aid one religion, aid all religions, or prefer one religion over another. Neither can force nor influence a person to go to or remain away from church against his will or force him to profess a belief or disbelief in any religion. No person can be punished for entertaining or professing religious beliefs or disbeliefs, for church attendance or non-attendance. No tax in any amount, large or small, can be levied to support any religious activities or institutions, whatever they may be called, or whatever form they may adopt to teach or practice religion. Neither a state nor the Federal Government can, openly or secretly, participate in the affairs of any religious organizations or groups and vice versa. In the words of Jefferson, the clause against establishment of religion by law was intended to erect 'a wall of separation between Church and State.' "

In McCullum v. Board of Education of School Dist. No. 71 Champaign County, Illinois (1948) 333 U.S. 203, 68 S.Ct. 461, 465, 92 L.Ed. 649, 659, infra, §529, the Court added that the First Amendment rests on "the premise that both religion and government can best work to achieve their lofty aims if each is left free from the other within its respective

In Torcaso v. Watkins (1961) 367 U.S. 488, 81 S.Ct. 1680, 1683, 6 L.Ed.2d 982, infra, §514, the Court repeated and reaffirmed "that neither a State nor the Federal Government can constitutionally force a person 'to profess a belief or disbelief in any religion.' Neither can constitutionally pass laws nor impose requirements which aid all religions as against non-believers, and neither can aid those religions based on a belief in the existence of God as against those religions founded on different beliefs." (See Committee for Public Education & Religious Liberty v. Nyquist (1973) 413 U.S. 756, 93 S.Ct. 2955, 2964, 37 L.Ed.2d 948, 962, infra, §544 [grants to parochial schools].)

VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

B. Establishment Clause.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 507

[§ 507] In General.

(1) Scope of Protection. "Just as the right to speak and the right to refrain from speaking are complementary components of a broader concept of individual freedom of mind, so also the individual's freedom to choose his own creed is the counterpart of his right to refrain from accepting the creed established by the majority. At one time it was thought that this right merely proscribed the preference of one Christian sect over another, but would not require equal respect for the conscience of the infidel, the atheist, or the adherent of a non-Christian faith such as Mohammedism or Judaism. But when the underlying principle has been examined in the crucible of litigation, the Court has unambiguously concluded that the individual freedom of conscience protected by the First Amendment embraces the right to select any religious faith or none at all. This conclusion derives support not only from the interest in respecting the individual's freedom of conscience, but also from the conviction that religious beliefs worthy of respect are the product of free and voluntary choice by the faithful, and from recognition of the fact that the political interest in forestalling intolerance extends beyond intolerance among Christian sects--or even intolerance among 'religions'--to encompass intolerance of the disbeliever and the uncertain." (Wallace v. Jaffree (1985) 472 U.S. 38, 105 S.Ct. 2479, 2488, 86 L.Ed.2d 29, 40, infra, §532; see 5 Rotunda, §21.3 et seq.; 105 Harv. L. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745, infra, §543, the Court established a 3-prong test to be applied in determining whether a statute satisfies the Establishment Clause. "First, the statute must have a secular purpose; second, its principal or primary effect must be one that neither advances nor inhibits religion, ... finally, the statute must not foster 'an excessive government entanglement with religion.'" (91 S.Ct. 2111, 29 L.Ed.2d 755.) To determine whether there is excessive entanglement, the court "must examine the character and purposes of the institutions that are benefited, the nature of the aid that the State provides, and the resulting relationship between the government and the religious authority." (91 S.Ct. 2112, 29 L.Ed.2d 757.) (See *Lucas Valley Homeowners Assn. v. (1) Valid Prayer in Legislative Session. In Marsh v. Chambers (1983) 463 U.S. 783, 103 S.Ct. 3330, 77 L.Ed.2d 1019, the Court held that the Nebraska practice of opening each legislative day with a prayer did not violate the Establishment Clause. "In light of the unambiguous and unbroken history of more than 200 years, there can be no doubt that the practice of opening legislative sessions with prayer has become part of the fabric of our society. To invoke Divine guidance on a public body entrusted with making the laws is not, in these circumstances, an 'establishment' of religion or a step toward establishment; it is simply a tolerable acknowledgment of beliefs widely held among the people of this country." (103 S.Ct. 3336, 77 L.Ed.2d 1028.)

The Court briefly discussed three features of the Nebraska practice that did not call for a different conclusion: (a) Only a Presbyterian clergyman had been selected for 16 years; (b) he is paid at public expense; and (c) the prayers are in "the Judeo-Christian tradition." (103 S.Ct. 3336, 77 L.Ed.2d 1028.)

Three justices dissented. (103 S.Ct. 3338, 3352, 77 L.Ed.2d 1030, 1047.) (See 97 Harv. L. Rev. 143.)

(2) Sectarian Prayer Invalid. Invoking the name of Jesus Christ in a prayer in a city council meeting violates the Establishment Clause. (Rubin v. Burbank (2002) 101 C.A.4th 1194, 1203, 124 C.R.2d 867 [applying rule of Marsh that permits only nonsectarian prayer].)

VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

B. Establishment Clause.

1. Under Federal Constitution.

c. Religious Speech.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 509

[§ 509] Religious Speech.

In Widmar v. Vincent (1981) 454 U.S. 263, 102 S.Ct. 269, 70 L.Ed.2d 440, the University of Missouri allowed over 100 student groups to use its facilities for meetings, but denied the right to a religious group on the ground that this access would violate the Establishment Clause. Held, the regulation was invalid; a religious organization's enjoyment of merely incidental benefits does not violate the prohibition against the "primary advancement" of religion. (102 S.Ct. 276, 70 L.Ed.2d 451.) The opinion emphasizes the narrow basis for the decision: "Having created a forum generally open to student groups, the University seeks to enforce a content-based exclusion of religious speech. Its exclusionary policy violates the fundamental principle that a state regulation of speech should be content-neutral, and the University is unable to justify this violation under applicable constitutional standards." (102 S.Ct. 278, 70 L.Ed.2d 452.) (See 5 Rotunda, §21.5(e); 15 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 103, 149 [student religious meetings on campus]; 16 Pepperdine L. Rev. 229 [Avoiding Religious Apartheid: Affording Equal Treatment for Student-Initiated Religious Expression in Public Schools]; on religious meetings in public secondary schools, see infra, §531.)

In Capitol Square Review & Advisory Bd. v. Pinette (1995) 515 U.S. 753, 115 S.Ct. 2440, 132 L.Ed.2d 650, the Ku Klux Klan's application to place an unattended cross on Capitol Square during the Christmas season was denied on Establishment Clause grounds by the Capitol Square Review and Advisory Board, the agency responsible for regulating access to the square. Under Ohio law, the square was a public forum, with access granted on the basis of speech-neutral criteria. The district court entered an injunction requiring issuance of the requested permit, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. Certiorari was granted to determine "whether a State violates the Establishment Clause when, pursuant to a religiously neutral state policy, it permits a private party to display an unattended religious symbol in a traditional public forum located next to its seat of government." (115 S.Ct. 2444, 132 L.Ed.2d 658.) Held, purely private religious expression that occurs in a public forum does not violate the Establishment Clause. (115 S.Ct. 2450, 132 L.Ed.2d 666.)

(a) Private religious speech, including the Klan's display, is as fully protected under the Free Speech Clause as secular private expression. Because Capitol Square is a traditional public forum, the state may impose reasonable, content neutral time, place, and manner restrictions, but it may regulate expressive content only if the restriction is necessary, and narrowly drawn, to serve a compelling state interest. (115 S.Ct. 2446, 132 L.Ed.2d 660.)

(b) The board concedes--indeed it is the essence of its case--that it rejected the display precisely because its content was religious, and advances the state's interest in avoiding official endorsement of Christianity as justification. (115 S.Ct. 2446, 132 L.Ed.2d 660.) Compliance with the Establishment Clause is a state interest sufficiently compelling to justify content-based restrictions on speech. (115 S.Ct. 2446, 132 L.Ed.2d 661.)

(c) However, two previous cases--Lamb's Chapel v. Center Moriches Union Free School Dist. (1993) 508 U.S. 384, 113 S.Ct. 2141, 124 L.Ed.2d 352, supra, §341, and Widmar v. Vincent, supra--have involved the combination of private religious expression, a public forum, content-based regulation, and a state's interest in complying with the Establishment Clause, and in both cases the restriction on religious content was struck down. (115 S.Ct. 2446, 132 L.Ed.2d 661.) The factors that were determinative in those cases exist here as well. "The State did not sponsor respondents' expression, the expression was made on government property that had been opened to the public for speech, and permission was requested through the same application process and on the same terms required of other private groups." (115 S.Ct. 2447, 132 L.Ed.2d 661.) (See Rosenberger v. Rector & Visitors of the University of Virginia (1995) 515 U.S. 819, 115 S.Ct. 2510, 132 L.Ed.2d 700, supra, §341 [reimbursement for printing costs of religious newspaper]; DiLoreto v. Board of Education of Downey Unified School Dist. (1999) 74 C.A.4th 267, 276, 87 C.R.2d 791 [applying test of Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745, supra, §507; posting Ten Commandments on baseball field fence in sight of students and public as part of paid advertisement solicited by school booster club would violate Establishment Clause because it would advance religious rather than secular interest]; 109 Harv. L. Rev. 170 [Capitol Square].)

In *Texas Monthly v. The Court said: "The question presented is whether this exemption violates the Establishment Clause or the Free Press Clause of the First Amendment when the State denies a like exemption for other publications. We hold that, when confined exclusively to publications advancing the tenets of a religious faith, the exemption runs afoul of the Establishment Clause; accordingly, we need not reach the question whether it contravenes the Free Press Clause as well." Witkin Summary of California Law

B. Establishment Clause.

1. Under Federal Constitution.

e. Exemption from Landmark Preservation Laws.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 511

[§ 511] Exemption from Landmark Preservation Laws.

In East Bay Asian Local Dev. Corp. v. California (2000) 24 C.4th 693, 102 C.R.2d 280, 13 P.3d 1122, a city, a secular community economic development organization, and several nonprofit organizations interested in the preservation of historic landmarks challenged the constitutionality of Govt.C. 25373 and 37361 under both the U.S. and California Constitutions. These statutes prohibit the application of local landmark preservation laws to noncommercial property owned by religious entities. To use the exemption, the owner must determine in a public forum that it will suffer substantial hardship likely to deprive it of (1) economic return on the property, (2) the reasonable use of the property, or (3) the appropriate use of the property in the furtherance of its religious mission. Held, the statutes are constitutional.

(a) Applicable test. The analytical framework for examining a statute challenged under the Establishment Clause of the U.S. Constitution was enumerated in Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745, supra, §507. (24 C.4th 705.) To be constitutional (1) the statute must have a secular purpose, (2) its principal or primary effect must neither advance nor inhibit religion, and (3) it must not foster excessive government entanglement with religion. Although this test "is ill-suited to evaluating an establishment clause challenge to a law that creates an exemption for religious bodies from a neutral law of general application, the high court has not yet modified the test to accommodate such exemptions." (24 C.4th 706.) Hence, "we will apply it here." (24 C.4th 708.)

(b) Application of Lemon test.

(1) Secular purpose. It is sufficient that the exemption "seeks only to relieve religious entities of a potential burden on free exercise." (24 C.4th 710.) An actual burden on an entity's free exercise of religion is not necessary. (24 C.4th 711.) Because "the Legislature could reasonably believe that landmark designation may result in denying the owner the economic benefit and appropriate use of the property necessary to fulfill the owner's religious mission, the exemption ... meets the secular purpose test." (24 C.4th 713.)

(2) Law must not advance or inhibit religion. "[P]ermitting a religious organization to continue using its property in the manner it would have done but for landmark designation is not an impermissible endorsement of religion and the use of the property cannot be attributed to the state. ... No burden is shifted from the religious entity that owns the property to owners of other landmark properties. The second prong of the Lemon test is satisfied." (24 C.4th 715.)

(3) Excessive government entanglement with religion. Although religious institutions benefit from this exemption, "the state provides no aid other than leaving noncommercial properties owned by religious entities alone if the owner seeks exemption. The exemption process does not create any relationship between those entities and the state." (24 C.4th 716.) "The third prong of the Lemon test is also satisfied." (24 C.4th 717.)

(c) California Constitution.

(1) Establishment and No-Preference Clauses. Although the California Constitution "is a document of independent force," its protection against the establishment of religion does not create broader protections than those of the First Amendment. (24 C.4th 718.) Thus, decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court are the guide for construction of Cal. Const., Art. I, §4. In the absence of a violation of the First Amendment, the statutes do not violate California's Establishment Clause, and, having satisfied the Lemon test, the exemption does not violate the no-preference provision of the California Constitution. (24 C.4th 719.)

(2) No aid to religion. The exemption does not violate the ban on aid to religion in Cal. Const., Art. XVI, §5. "[P]ermitting a religious entity to exempt its noncommercial property from landmark designation status simply leaves the property in the status it otherwise occupied. While there may be a benefit as compared to properties that are subjected to landmark designation, neither the state nor the local governmental entity expends funds, or provides any monetary support, for the exempted property or its owner." (24 C.4th 721.)

Three justices filed two strong dissents. (24 C.4th 722, 727.) One justice wrote that the exemption "cannot be reconciled with the strict neutrality required" by the California Constitution, and that he strongly disagrees "that the federal Constitution dictates either the analysis or the result in this case." (24 C.4th 722.) The other two justices agreed that the exemption "cannot be justified as an impartial grant of nonreligious assistance" because "no comparable relief is provided to nonprofit secular organizations whose noncommercial activities may be similarly affected by the same regulations." (24 C.4th 728.) (See 37 Santa Clara L. Rev. 213 [Holy War: In the Name of Religious Freedom, California Exempts Churches from Historic Preservation].)

f. Other Applications.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 512

[§ 512] Other Applications.

(1) Invalid Delegation of Governmental Power to Church. In Larkin v. Grendel's Den (1982) 459 U.S. 116, 103 S.Ct. 505, 74 L.Ed.2d 297, a Massachusetts statute gave churches and schools the power to veto applications for liquor licenses within a 500-foot radius of the church or school. Held, this was not valid zoning (see infra, §1005 et seq.), but a delegation of governmental power to religious institutions and therefore clearly a violation of the Establishment Clause. (103 S.Ct. 511, 512, 74 L.Ed.2d 306, 307.) (See 97 Harv. L. Rev. 143; 36 Hastings L. J. 917 [city of Rajneeshpuram and Establishment Clause]; 38 Stanf. L. Rev. 1363 [church-controlled municipalities].)

(2) Invalid Discrimination Against Religious Organizations. In Larson v. Valente (1982) 456 U.S. 228, 102 S.Ct. 1673, 72 L.Ed.2d 33, 49, a state statute imposing registration and reporting requirements on only those religious organizations that solicit more than 50% of their funds from nonmembers was held violative of the Establishment Clause. (See 5 Rotunda, §21.16.)

(3) Valid Exemption of Religious Organization From Ban on Employment Discrimination. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C., §2000e-1) exempts religious organizations from Title VII's prohibition against discrimination in employment on the basis of religion (see infra, §876). In Corporation of Presiding Bishop of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. Amos (1987) 483 U.S. 327, 107 S.Ct. 2862, 97 L.Ed.2d 273, the court held that this statutory exemption did not violate the Establishment Clause.

(a) The government may accommodate religious practices, and there is ample room under the Establishment Clause for "benevolent neutrality which will permit religious exercise to exist without sponsorship and without interference." (107 S.Ct. 2867, 97 L.Ed.2d 282, quoting Hobbie v. Unemployment App. Com. of Florida (1987) 480 U.S. 136, 107 S.Ct. 1046, 1048, 94 L.Ed.2d 190, 197.)

(b) The fact that the exemption was not limited to religious activities of church employers does not invalidate it. "[I]t is a significant burden on a religious organization to require it, on pain of substantial liability, to predict which of its activities a secular court will consider religious. The line is hardly a bright one, and an organization might understandably be concerned that a judge would not understand its religious tenets and sense of mission. Fear of potential liability might affect the way an organization carried out what it understood to be its religious mission." (107

S.Ct. 2868, 97 L.Ed.2d 283.) (See Schmoll v. Chapman University (1999) 70 C.A.4th 1434, 1440, 83 C.R.2d 426, infra, §918 [FEHA].)

(4) Federal Grant Program in Which Religious Institutions Participate. In Bowen v. Kendrick (1988) 487 U.S. 589, 108 S.Ct. 2562, 101 L.Ed.2d 520, the Adolescent Family Life Act (42 U.S.C., §300z et seq.), providing funding for services related to adolescent sexuality and pregnancy, was upheld against a facial challenge, despite the fact that it allows religious institutions to participate as recipients of funds. The Court, after lengthy discussion of various grounds on which the district court found the Act invalid, "concluded that the statute has a valid secular purpose, does not have the primary effect of advancing religion, and does not create an excessive entanglement of church and state." (108 S.Ct. 2578, 101 L.Ed.2d 546.) However, the district court was directed on remand to consider whether particular grants have had the primary effect of advancing religion; and, if it should conclude that current practices of the Secretary of Health and Human Services does allow these grants, it should devise a remedy to insure that grants comply with the Constitution and the statute. (108 S.Ct. 2850, 101 L.Ed.2d 549.) (See Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills School Dist. (1993) 509 U.S. 1, 113 S.Ct. 2462, 125 L.Ed.2d 1, infra, §549; 102 Harv. L. Rev. 211 [Bowen]; 16 Hastings Const. L. Q. 513 [same].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Invalid Discrimination Against Religious Organizations. See 6 Rotunda 4th, §21.16.(5) (New Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act). The Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA) provides that the government may not "impose a substantial burden on the religious exercise of a person residing in or confined to an institution," unless it shows that the burden furthers "a compelling governmental interest" and does so by the "least restrictive means." (42 U.S.C., §2000cc-1(a).) In Cutter v. Wilkinson (2005) 544 U.S. 709, 125 S.Ct. 2113, 161 L.Ed.2d 1020, the Court held that this provision, on its face, does not violate the Establishment Clause. It does not "exceed the limits of permissible government accommodation of religious practices." (125 S.Ct. 2117, 161 L.Ed.2d 1029.) RLUIPA "protects institutionalized persons who are unable freely to attend to their religious needs and are therefore dependent on the government's permission and accommodation for exercise of their religion." (125 S.Ct. 2122, 161 L.Ed.2d 1034.) Further, it does not "elevate accommodation of religious observances over an institution's need to maintain order and safety." (125 S.Ct. 2122, 161 L.Ed.2d 1035.) (See 119 Harv. L. Rev. 238 [Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act]; 53 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 485 [same].)

RLUIPA also prohibits government imposition or implementation of land use regulations "in a manner that imposes a substantial burden on the religious exercise of a person, including a religious assembly or institution" unless the burden satisfies strict scrutiny. (See 42 U.S.C., §2000cc(a)(1).) The use or conversion of real property for the purpose of religious exercise is considered to be the religious exercise of the person or entity that uses the property for that purpose. (See 42 U.S.C., §2000cc-5(7)(B).)

In Scottish Rite Cathedral Assn. of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles (2007) 156 C.A.4th 108, 67 C.R.3d 207, the court held that defendant city's revocation of the certificate of occupancy of a Masonic Cathedral did not violate RLUIPA. The cathedral was owned by plaintiff nonprofit Masonic association and operated under a lease by plaintiff for-profit limited liability company. The limited liability company rented the cathedral to non-Masonic organizations that held, mostly, commercial events. No Masonic functions had been conducted at the cathedral since 1993. Although freemasonry is not a religion, members must profess a belief in God, and its teachings include morality, justice, and religious freedom. RLUIPA does not require that the exercise of religion be central to a system of religious beliefs. (See 42 U.S.C., §2000cc-5(7)(A).) However, not all activities and facilities sponsored by a religious institution to obtain funds to further its religious activities automatically make those activities and facilities religious exercises under RLUIPA. (156 C.A.4th 119.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION
B. Establishment Clause.
2. Under California Constitution.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 513

[§ 513] Under California Constitution.

A unique situation gave rise to an opinion construing and applying both the federal and the California Establishment Clauses.

In Feminist Women's Health Center v. Philibosian (1984) 157 C.A.3d 1076, 203 C.R. 918, the owner of a defunct pathology laboratory abandoned a container of human fetuses received from physicians, clinics, and hospitals for disposal in accordance with state law (interment or incineration). The district attorney initially placed a hold on the fetuses to determine whether they constituted evidence of criminal abortions. Later, public officials and organizations became involved in a controversy over their disposal, and the district attorney received a request from the Catholic League--a right to life organization--to release them for burial in a private cemetery (Valhalla) with a religious service and a memorial plaque. Plaintiff sought to enjoin the district attorney from this disposal. The lower court gave judgment for defendants on the ground that the contract for the religious burial was made without state participation. Held, reversed.

(a) Although most of the federal cases involving the Establishment Clause deal with statutes, executive action by the district attorney pursuant to legislation conferring prosecutorial discretion can be prohibited by the clause. (157 C.A.3d 1086.)

(b) The act of burial in the religious cemetery would violate the clause.

(1) "[T]he Catholic League is a religious organization which regards a fetus as a human being and abortion as murder. While this specific belief may well cross sectarian lines, it is a belief not universally held. Consequently, any state action showing a preference for this belief will be strictly scrutinized and must be invalidated unless it is justified by a compelling governmental interest with which 'it is closely fitted to further [that] interest.' " (157 C.A.3d 1088.)

(2) "The Catholic League has a constitutionally protected right to express their view that the fetuses are murdered humans and to publicly mourn them. They do not have the right, however, to have the state's imprimatur on that expression." (157 C.A.3d 1090.) "Either the public act of disposing of the fetuses with no government display of religiosity, or the private expression of protected ideas would be proper. The impropriety comes from proceeding with the public act when the private group's intent to use that public act to frame and support the private expression is widely

(3) The proposed religious burial causes political entanglement with religion. "The abortion issue is one of the most emotionally explosive issues in today's political firmament. The appearance of support by the state, of one side of this controversy over the other, is improper political entanglement. The act of indirectly turning the fetuses over to Valhalla for religious burial as murdered humans would vitiate the studied neutrality which is the state's constitutional course." (157 C.A.3d 1091.)

(c) The "no preference of religion clause" of the California Constitution (Art. I, §4, supra, §505) furnishes additional grounds for a finding of unconstitutionality. Under the holding in Fox v. Los Angeles (1978) 22 C.3d 792, 150 C.R. 867, 587 P.2d 663, infra, §555, preference is forbidden even when there is no discrimination; and here, "[w]hatever the district attorney's motive, a preference will be objectively demonstrated if the fetuses are delivered to Valhalla in these circumstances." (157 C.A.3d 1092.)

(d) A final basis for holding the proposed act unconstitutional is the provision in the California Constitution forbidding official aid to any "religious sect, church, creed, or sectarian purpose" (Cal. Const., Art. XVI, §5). The prohibited aid under this section includes aid "in the intangible form of prestige and power." (157 C.A.3d 1093, quoting Fox v. Los Angeles, supra.)

In Duffy v. State Personnel Bd. (1991) 232 C.A.3d 1, 283 C.R. 622, the issue was whether the Department of Corrections can limit publicly paid chaplaincy positions to persons ordained, accredited by, and in good standing with the Roman Catholic Church. Plaintiff, suspended by that church, joined another denomination and applied for the position of Catholic Chaplain at the Susanville prison facility. He was accepted; but the department then learned that the Roman Catholic Diocese of Sacramento would not issue a letter of authorization, and he was rejected. He sought mandamus, contending that by funding a prison chaplaincy position limited to Roman Catholic priests in good standing with their diocese, the state violated the Establishment Clauses of both Constitutions. Held, the department's act was valid.

(a) "The challenge posed here is how to define the proper establishment clause limits on voluntary government efforts to facilitate the free exercise of religion when such exercise is burdened by government itself, here the incarceration of state inmates." (232 C.A.3d 11.) Wallace v. Jaffree (1985) 472 U.S. 38, 105 S.Ct. 2479, 86 L.Ed.2d 29, infra, §532, and Corporation of Presiding Bishop of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. Amos (1987) 483 U.S. 327, 107 S.Ct. 2862, 97 L.Ed.2d 273, supra, §512, provide a fitting analytical approach to application of the test under Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745, supra, §507. (232 C.A.3d 10, 11, 12.) Under this approach, the department's decision "does not convey a message of endorsement as perceived by an objective observer, acquainted with the test, history, and implementation of the government act at issue." (232 C.A.3d 12.)

(b) "By necessity government has deprived members of the armed forces and inmates of the opportunity to practice their faith at places of their choice. To accommodate the fundamental and constitutionally recognized need of these persons to exercise their religious beliefs, government has long relied on the practical substitute of providing for chaplains representative of the religious creeds of those deprived of their freedom and placed in their care." (232 C.A.3d 15.)

(c) The department's practice of letting the Roman Catholic Church decide which priests are theologically and ecclesiastically qualified to serve as Catholic chaplains does not constitute excessive entanglement of government with religion; it is a safeguard against doctrinal entanglement in religious issues, and protects rather than subverts First Amendment values. (232 C.A.3d 17.) The First Amendment prohibits civil courts from resolving issues on the basis of religious doctrine or practice, and just as clearly would prohibit the department from making these determinations regarding the threshold qualifications of priests seeking to serve as Catholic prison chaplains. (232 C.A.3d 18.)

(d) "[T]he only means by which Roman Catholic inmates can exercise fundamental aspects of their religious life such as instruction, mass, receipt of sacraments, and other religious rites, is by having access to a priest ordained, accredited by and in good standing with the Roman Catholic Church. The state's current requirements for Catholic chaplaincy positions assure such access for Roman Catholic inmates and we find that they do not violate the establishment clause or article I, section 4 in doing so." (232 C.A.3d 19.)

In Silo v. CHW Med. Foundation (2002) 27 C.4th 1097, 119 C.R.2d 698, 45 P.3d 1162, a religiously affiliated employer, exempt under the FEHA (see infra, §916), discharged an employee for objectionable religious speech. Held, the employer was not subject to tort liability under Cal. Const., Art. I, §8, for violating a fundamental public policy against religious discrimination. "[T]he public policy against religious discrimination in employment must be qualified by the public policy of permitting religious employers considerable discretion to choose employees who will not interfere with their religious mission or message." (27 C.4th 1108.)

Additional decisions involve the California Constitution. (See Woodland Hills Homeowners Organization v. Los Angeles Community College Dist. (1990) 218 C.A.3d 79, 93, 95, 266 C.R. 767 [community college district's 75-year lease of surplus real property to religious organization did not constitute impermissible advancement of, or entanglement with, religion]; East Bay Asian Local Dev. Corp. v. California (2000) 24 C.4th 693, 719, 102 C.R.2d 280, 13 P.3d 1122, supra, §511 [exempting noncommercial religious organizations from landmark preservation laws does not violate establishment clause or no-preference provisions of Cal. Const., Art. I, §4, or ban on aid to religion in Cal. Const., Art. XVI, §5].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

C. Free Exercise Clause.

1. Invalid Direct Restraints.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 514

[§ 514] In General.

Direct interference with religion is rare, but Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral of Russian Orthodox Church in North America (1952) 344 U.S. 94, 73 S.Ct. 143, 97 L.Ed. 120, is an illustration. Plaintiff, head of the North American Russian Orthodox Church which had seceded from control by Russian church authorities, sued to establish the right to use St. Nicholas cathedral in New York. He relied on a New York statute providing for autonomy of the American church, to prevent its political use by the Soviet government. Held, the statute was unconstitutional. This was not a valid attempt to punish subversive action by a layman or cleric, but a transfer of control over churches, interfering with the free exercise of religion. (73 S.Ct. 151, 97 L.Ed. 133.) "Even in those cases when the property right follows as an incident from decisions of the church custom or law on ecclesiastical issues, the church rule controls." (73 S.Ct. 157, 97 L.Ed. 139.)

In United States v. Ballard (1944) 322 U.S. 78, 64 S.Ct. 882, 88 L.Ed. 1148, the Court reversed a criminal conviction for using the mails to defraud, which had been based on proof of false representation of religious experiences. This was in effect a heresy trial, and no one can be put to proof of his or her religious beliefs. (64 S.Ct. 886, 88 L.Ed. 1154.) (See 5 Rotunda, §21.6 et seq.; 102 Harv. L. Rev. 933, 1258 [burdens on free exercise]; 9 Hastings Const. L. Q. 153 ["Other People's Faiths"; The Scientology Litigation and the Justiciability of Religious Fraud]; 27 Santa Clara L. Rev. 377 [resolving conflicts between federal and California standards]; 63 Proof of Facts 3d 195 [interference with free exercise]; on Free Exercise Clause covering religious belief against participation in production of armaments, see Thomas v. Review Bd. of Indiana Emp. Sec. Div. (1981) 450 U.S. 707, 101 S.Ct. 1425, 1430, 67 L.Ed.2d 624, 632, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §496; 22 Santa Clara L. Rev. 235.)

The Maryland Constitution contained a self-executing provision requiring "a declaration of belief in the existence of God" as a condition to holding "any office of profit or trust." In Torcaso v. Watkins (1961) 367 U.S. 488, 81 S.Ct. 1680, 6 L.Ed.2d 982, appellant was appointed a notary public but was refused a commission when he declined to make this declaration. Held, this was a religious test for public office and an unconstitutional invasion of his freedom of belief and religion. The court found no substance in the Maryland court's assertion that there was no unconstitutional compulsion to believe because he was not compelled to hold any office; this fact "cannot possibly be an excuse for barring him from office by state-imposed criteria forbidden by the Constitution." (81 S.Ct. 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 987.)

In Presbyterian Church in the United States v. Mary Elizabeth Blue Hull Memorial Presbyterian Church (1969) 393 U.S. 440, 89 S.Ct. 601, 21 L.Ed.2d 658, petitioner, the general church, became involved in a dispute with local churches in Georgia. The local members did not seek resolution in the church tribunals, but filed suits to enjoin the general church from interfering with title to the local churches. Under Georgia law, the implied trust of local church property for the benefit of the general church was on condition that the general church adhere to the tenets of faith and practice existing at the time of affiliation. This issue was presented to the jury under instructions stating the "departure-from-doctrine" standard, and the jury verdict was for the local churches. The trial judge then declared the implied trust terminated and enjoined the general church from interfering with the use of the property. The Georgia Supreme Court affirmed. Held, reversed. The Georgia courts, applying the departure-from-doctrine element of the implied trust theory, engaged in the process of interpreting and weighing church doctrine, in violation of the Kederoff principle. (89 S.Ct. 607, 21 L.Ed.2d 665.) (See Wilson v. Hinkle (1977) 67 C.A.3d 506, 510, 136 C.R. 731 [following Presbyterian Church]; on concept of separation of church and state as partial justification for rule against review of church controversies, see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §89 et seq.)

In McDaniel v. Paty (1978) 435 U.S. 618, 98 S.Ct. 1322, 55 L.Ed.2d 593, a Tennessee statute barring ministers or priests of any denomination from serving as delegates to the state's limited constitutional convention was held a violation of the First Amendment. The Court declared that "the right to the free exercise of religion unquestionably encompasses the right to preach, proselyte, and perform other similar religious functions." (98 S.Ct. 1327, 55 L.Ed.2d 600.) (See 6 Hastings Const. L. Q. 75.)

b. Prohibition of Ritual Slaughter of Animals.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 515

[§ 515] Prohibition of Ritual Slaughter of Animals.

In Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye v. Hialeah (1993) 508 U.S. 520, 113 S.Ct. 2217, 124 L.Ed.2d 472, Florida city ordinances prohibited the Santeria religious practice of animal sacrifice at such occasions as birth, marriage, and death. Held, the ordinances were void.

(a) Neutrality requirement. "The ordinances had as their object the suppression of religion. The pattern we have recited discloses animosity to Santeria adherents and their religious practices; the ordinances by their own terms target this religious exercise; the texts of the ordinances were gerrymandered with care to proscribe religious killing of animals but to exclude almost all secular killings; and the ordinances suppress much more religious conduct than is necessary in order to achieve the legitimate ends asserted in their defense. These ordinances are not neutral." (113 S.Ct. 2231, 124 L.Ed.2d 496.)

(b) Requirement of general applicability. Laws burdening religious practice must be of general applicability. (113 S.Ct. 2232, 124 L.Ed.2d 498.)

(c) Conclusion. "The Free Exercise Clause commits government itself to religious tolerance, and upon even slight suspicion that proposals for state intervention stem from animosity to religion or distrust of its practices, all officials must pause to remember their own high duty to the Constitution and to the rights it secures. Those in office must be resolute in resisting importunate demands and must ensure that the sole reasons for imposing the burdens of law and regulation are secular. Legislators may not devise mechanisms, overt or disguised, designed to persecute or oppress a religion or its practices. The laws here in question were enacted contrary to these constitutional principles, and they are void." (113 S.Ct. 2234, 124 L.Ed.2d 499.) (See 107 *Harv. L. VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

C. Free Exercise Clause.

1. Invalid Direct Restraints.

c. Religious Freedom Restoration Act.

[§ 516] Religious Freedom Restoration Act.

In Boerne v. Flores (1997) 521 U.S. 507, 117 S.Ct. 2157, 138 L.Ed.2d 624, the Court discussed whether Congress had the power to adopt the Religious Freedom Restoration Act. The Act was adopted in direct response to Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 872, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 108 L.Ed.2d 876, infra, §523, which held that "neutral, generally applicable laws may be applied to religious practices even when not supported by a compelling governmental interest." (117 S.Ct. 2161, 138 L.Ed.2d 635.) The Act prohibited both the states and the federal Government from substantially burdening the exercise of religion even if the burden resulted from a rule of general applicability, unless the government demonstrated that (1) it was in furtherance of a compelling governmental interest, and (2) it was the least restrictive means of furthering that compelling interest. Held, Congress lacked the power to adopt the Act.

(a) Congress may enact legislation under U.S. Const., Art. XIV, §5, enforcing the constitutional right to the free exercise of religion. (117 S.Ct. 2163, 138 L.Ed.2d 638.) However, Congress's power extends only to enforcing the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment. This power is remedial. Legislation that "alters the meaning of the Free Exercise Clause cannot be said to be enforcing the clause. Congress does not enforce a constitutional right by changing what the right is. It has been given the power 'to enforce,' not the power to determine what constitutes a constitutional violation." (117 S.Ct. 2164, 138 L.Ed.2d 638.)

(b) "While preventive rules are sometimes appropriate remedial measures, there must be a congruence between the means used and the ends to be achieved." (117 S.Ct. 2169, 138 L.Ed.2d 645.) The Act "is so out of proportion to a supposed remedial or preventive object that it cannot be understood as responsive to, or designed to prevent, unconstitutional behavior. It appears, instead, to attempt a substantive change in constitutional protections." (117 S.Ct. 2170, 138 L.Ed.2d 646.) The Act's coverage is sweeping, ensuring intrusion at every level of government. Its restrictions apply to every agency and official of the federal, state, and local governments. It applies to all federal and state law, statutory or otherwise, whether adopted before or after its enactment. "Any law is subject to challenge at any time by any individual who alleges a substantial burden on his or her free exercise of religion." (117 S.Ct. 2170, 138 L.Ed.2d 647.)

(c) "Requiring a State to demonstrate a compelling interest and show that it has adopted the least restrictive means of achieving that interest is the most demanding test known to constitutional law. ... Laws valid under Smith would fall under RFRA without regard to whether they had the object of stifling or punishing free exercise. ... This is a considerable congressional intrusion into the States' traditional prerogatives and general authority to regulate for the health and welfare of their citizens." (117 S.Ct. 2171, 138 L.Ed.2d 648.)

Two justices concurred. (117 S.Ct. 2172, 138 L.Ed.2d 649, 650.) Three justices dissented in three separate opinions, voicing concern whether Smith was correctly decided. (117 S.Ct. 2176, 2185, 2186, 138 L.Ed.2d 654, 667, 668.) (See 111 Harv. L. Rev. 153 [Boerne]; 111 Harv. L. Rev. 1542 [same]; 88 Cal. L. Rev. 1281 [Conditional Federal Spending: A Back Door to Enhanced Free Exercise Protection]; 26 Hastings Const. L. Q. 789 [Boerne]; 33 Loyola L.A. L. VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

C. Free Exercise Clause.

2. Indirect Restraints.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 517

[§ 517] In General.

General regulations having an otherwise valid object are not necessarily rendered invalid by reason of some incidental effect on religious beliefs or observances; a balancing test is employed. (See United States v. Lee (1982) 455 U.S. 252, 102 S.Ct. 1051, 71 L.Ed.2d 127, 132; 5 Rotunda, §21.6 et seq.; 2 Tribe, §14-8 et seq.; 102 Harv. L. Rev.* 377 [resolving conflicts between federal and California standards]; 63 Proof of Facts 3d 195 [interference with free exercise].) Examples of this approach include regulations in the following areas:

(1) Child Support. (See Pencovic v. Pencovic (1955) 45 C.2d 97, 103, 287 P.2d 501 [duty of religious leader to support child despite rule of religious conduct prohibiting gainful employment].)

(2) Civic and Military Duties. (See Hamilton v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1934) 293 U.S. 245, 55 S.Ct. 197, 204, 79 L.Ed. 343, 353 [compulsory military training as part of state university curriculum upheld]; 8 *So. Cal. L. L. Rev. 550.)

(3) Health. (See Jacobson v. Massachusetts (1905) 197 U.S. 11, 25 S.Ct. 358, 363, 49 L.Ed. 643, 649 [compulsory vaccination upheld]; Board of Med. Quality Assur. v. Andrews (1989) 211 C.A.3d 1346, 1353, 1354, 260 C.R. 113 [state may prohibit dangerous medical treatment despite its religious content]; on objection to blood transfusion, see 79 Harv. L. Rev.* 1; 21 A.L.R.5th 248.)

(4) Marriage. (See Davis v. Beason (1890) 133 U.S. 333, 10 S.Ct. 299, 301, 33 L.Ed. 637, 640 [polygamy is not protected by First Amendment].)

(5) Military Dress Regulations. In Goldman v. Weinberger (1986) 475 U.S. 503, 106 S.Ct. 1310, 89 L.Ed.2d 478, the Court, in a 5-4 opinion with strong dissents, held that an Air Force regulation prohibiting wearing headgear while indoors was validly applied to an officer, an Orthodox Jew and ordained rabbi who wore his yarmulke (skullcap) on the base.

(a) The review of military regulations challenged on First Amendment grounds "is far more deferential than constitutional review of similar laws or regulations designed for civilian society." (106 S.Ct. 1313, 89 L.Ed.2d 484.)

(b) "The considered professional judgment of the Air Force is that the traditional outfitting of personnel in standardized uniforms encourages the subordination of personal preferences and identities in favor of the overall group mission." (106 S.Ct. 1313, 89 L.Ed.2d 484.) Petitioner's contention that the Air Force failed to prove that an exception for his practice would threaten discipline, and that expert opinion supports this exception, is beside the point. "The desirability of dress regulations in the military is decided by the appropriate military officials. ... The Air Force has drawn the line essentially between religious apparel which is visible and that which is not, and we hold that those portions of the regulations challenged here reasonably and even-handedly regulate dress in the interest of the military's perceived need for uniformity." (106 S.Ct. 1314, 89 L.Ed.2d 485.) (See 100 Harv. L. Rev. 5, 33, 163.)

(6) Racial Discrimination: Denial of Tax-Exempt Status. Bob Jones University v. United States (1983) 461 U.S. 574, 103 S.Ct. 2017, 76 L.Ed.2d 157, held that the Internal Revenue Service did not violate petitioner's First Amendment free exercise of religion rights in denying tax-exempt status because petitioner prescribed and enforced racially discriminatory admissions standards on the basis of religious doctrine. The compelling governmental interest in eradicating racial discrimination in education outweighed the burden of denial of tax benefits. (102 S.Ct. 2034, 2035, 76 L.Ed.2d 180, 181.) (See 97 Harv. L. Rev. 261 [Bob Jones]; 33 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 389 [same].)

(7) Retirement Benefits. In Martin v. Industrial Acc. Com. (1956) 147 C.A.2d 137, 141, 304 P.2d 828, the court upheld the denial of workers' compensation benefits for refusal to consent to a blood transfusion. The case was disapproved in Montgomery v. Board of Retirement (1973) 33 C.A.3d 447, 453, 109 C.R. 181. Plaintiff, a woman clerk employed by the County of Kern, developed a uterine tumor, which caused permanent incapacity. She applied to defendant board for nonservice-connected disability retirement benefits. The Board denied the application on the ground that her condition was correctable by surgery with a short period of convalescence, and that she refused to undergo surgery because it was contrary to the teachings of her religion (Church of God, Evening Light Saints). Held, she was entitled to the benefits. (a) Sherbert v. Verner (1963) 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965, infra, §550, is controlling. The denial of retirement benefits places the same kind of burden on plaintiff's free exercise of religion as the denial of unemployment compensation in Sherbert. (33 C.A.3d 451.) (b) Although the state and county have an interest in preserving the life and health of citizens, neither courts nor other governmental agencies may compel a sane, conscious adult to undergo medical treatment against his or her wishes. And when religious beliefs are involved, "the state interest in preserving health pales into insignificance." (33 C.A.3d 452.) (c) In view of Sherbert, People v. Woody (1964) 61 C.2d 716, 40 C.R. 69, 394 P.2d 813, infra, §523, and Syrek v. Unemp. Ins. App. Bd. (1960) 54 C.2d 519, 7 C.R. 97, 354 P.2d 625, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §523, Martin no longer states the law. (33 C.A.3d 453.)

(9) Scholarships. (See Locke v. Davey (2004) 540 U.S. 712, 124 S.Ct. 1307, 1314, 158 L.Ed.2d 1, 11 [distinguishing Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye v. Hialeah (1993) 508 U.S. 520, 113 S.Ct. 2217, 124 L.Ed.2d 472, supra, §515; state scholarship program that excluded funding of devotional theological degrees did not violate Free Exercise Clause; nothing in scholarship program suggested animus toward religion, and state constitution prohibited state funding of devotional degrees].)

(10) Sex Crimes. (See People v. Baldwin (1974) 37 C.A.3d 385, 388, 389, 112 C.R. 290 [P.C. 288a, proscribing oral copulation, does not violate nonestablishment of religion prohibition of First Amendment to federal Constitution or guarantee of religious freedom in Cal. Const., Art. I, §4].)

(11) Sex Education in Schools. In Citizens for Parental Rights v. San Mateo County Bd. of Education (1975) 51

C.A.3d 1, 124 C.R. 68, former statutes providing for sex education programs in schools of various grades were upheld against a variety of constitutional attacks. The elaborate opinion rejected challenges based on the Free Exercise Clause (51 C.A.3d 12), the Establishment of Religion Clause (51 C.A.3d 20), and the Right of Privacy (51 C.A.3d 29). The court pointed out (a) that the courses were conducted by specially trained teachers under directions to call attention to the wide variety of beliefs and practices in connection with the sensitive subjects of abortion, birth control, divorce, and masturbation; and (b) that a system of excuses from participation made the program noncompulsory, and allowed parents to exclude their children from any of the classes that they thought were in conflict with their religious beliefs. (51 C.A.3d 5, 7.) (See Educ.C. 51930 et seq. [providing for comprehensive sexual health education, including HIV/AIDS prevention education]; Educ.C. 51240 [providing that students may be excused from part of health instruction that conflicts with parents' or guardians' religious training and beliefs]; 82 A.L.R.3d 579 [validity of sex education programs in public schools].)

(12) Street Vending. (See People v. Foote (2001) 91 C.A.4th Supp. 7, 18, 110 C.R.2d 260 [defendant church member was not exempt from ordinance requiring vendor's permit where his sale of incense on street had no religious connotations because incense is not, in itself, communicative, and defendant failed to show or tell prospective purchasers how incense was used in Church, or how it related to Church doctrine].)

(13) Timber Harvesting in Sacred Indian Land. In Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Assn. (1988) 485 U.S. 439, 108 S.Ct. 1319, 99 L.Ed.2d 534, the Court, following Bowen v. Roy (1986) 476 U.S. 693, 106 S.Ct. 2147, 90 L.Ed.2d 735, infra, §518, held that the Free Exercise Clause did not prevent the government from permitting timber harvesting or road-building in a portion of a National Forest traditionally used for religious purposes by three Indian tribes. "A broad range of government activities--from social welfare programs to foreign aid to conservation projects--will always be considered essential to the spiritual well-being of some citizens, often on the basis of sincerely held religious beliefs. Others will find the very same activities deeply offensive, and perhaps incompatible with their own search for spiritual fulfillment and with the tenets of their religion. The First Amendment must apply to all citizens alike, and it can give to none of them a veto over public programs that do not prohibit the free exercise of religion. The Constitution does not, and courts cannot, offer to reconcile the various competing demands on government, many of them rooted in sincere religious belief, that inevitably arise in so diverse a society as ours. That task, to the extent that it is feasible, is for the legislatures and other institutions." (108 S.Ct. 1327, 99 L.Ed.2d 548.) (See 102 Harv. L. Rev. 232 [Lyng]; 16 Hastings Const. L. Q. 483 [same]; 18 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 603 [same]; 41 Santa Clara L. Rev. 757 [same]; 23 U.S.F. L. Rev. 97 [same].)

(14) University Student Registration Fees. In Erzinger v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1982) 137 C.A.3d 389, 187 C.R. 164, plaintiff students alleged that the University of California collects a registration fee that is used partly to pay for health services which includes abortion counseling, abortion referral, and abortion; and that the collection of the part of the fee used for those purposes would force them to violate their religious beliefs as a condition for attending the university. They demanded a pro rata exemption. Held, judgment for defendants affirmed; plaintiffs made no showing that the university's collecting and using the fees prevented them from holding or expressing their views against abortion, or forced them to use the abortion-related services. (137 C.A.3d 392.) (See 20 San Diego L. Rev. 837.)

b. Social Security and Social Security Numbers.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 518

[§ 518] Social Security and Social Security Numbers.

(1) In General. The use and disclosure of social security numbers have been challenged on free exercise grounds. However, the government has a compelling interest in identifying taxpayers. (See Freis v. Soboroff (2000) 81 C.A.4th 1102, 1105, 97 C.R.2d 429; 93 A.L.R.5th 1 [Free Exercise of Religion as Applied to Individual's Objection to Obtaining or Discussing Social Security Number].) Further, the required payment of Social Security taxes is valid despite the objection that it violates religious belief. (United States v. Lee (1982) 455 U.S. 252, 102 S.Ct. 1051, 71 L.Ed.2d 127, 132).

(2) Use in Welfare Benefit Programs. In Bowen v. Roy (1986) 476 U.S. 693, 106 S.Ct. 2147, 90 L.Ed.2d 735, the question presented was "whether the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment compels the government to accommodate a religiously-based objection to the statutory requirements that a Social Security number be provided by an applicant seeking to receive certain welfare benefits and that the States use these numbers in administering the benefit programs." (106 S.Ct. 2149, 90 L.Ed.2d 741.) The objection was raised by a Native American Indian, who refused to obtain a Social Security number for his 2-year-old daughter, asserting a tribal belief that identification and other uses of the number would "rob the spirit" of the child. The Court rejected the challenge.

(a) "Never to our knowledge has the Court interpreted the First Amendment to require the Government itself to behave in ways that the individual believes will further his or her spiritual development or that of his or her family. ... Just as the Government may not insist that appellees engage in any set form of religious observance, so appellees may not demand that the Government join in their chosen religious practices by refraining from using a number to identify their daughter." (106 S.Ct. 2152, 90 L.Ed.2d 744.)

(b) "[G]overnmental regulation that indirectly and incidentally calls for a choice between securing a governmental benefit and adherence to religious beliefs is wholly different from governmental action or legislation that criminalizes religiously inspired activity or inescapably compels conduct that some find objectionable for religious reasons. Although the denial of government benefits over religious objection can raise serious Free Exercise problems, these two very different forms of government action are not governed by the same constitutional standard. A governmental burden on religious liberty is not insulated from review simply because it is indirect, ... but the nature of the burden is relevant to the standard the Government must meet to justify the burden." (106 S.Ct. 2155, 90 L.Ed.2d 749.) (See Mullaney v.

(3) Use by Department of Motor Vehicles. Following Bowen v. Roy, Brunson v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1999) 72 C.A.4th 1251, 85 C.R.2d 710, held that the trial court erred in applying the compelling interest test, rather than the rational basis test, to a religious group's objection to disclosing Social Security numbers before obtaining or renewing a driver's license. The test is the same under both the federal and California Free Exercise Clauses. (72 C.A.4th 1255, 1256.)

VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

C. Free Exercise Clause.

2. Indirect Restraints.

c. Children.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 519

[§ 519] Children.

(1) Child Custody. In Cory v. Cory (1945) 70 C.A.2d 563, 576, 161 P.2d 385, it was held an abuse of discretion to refuse to award custody of young children to their mother solely because of her membership in Jehovah's Witnesses and her belief in the teachings of the sect. The trial judge "lost sight of the constitutional provisions which guarantee religious freedom to all, and, in depriving their mother of the custody of her children because of her religious convictions, has deprived her of a constitutional right which she may not be compelled to exercise only conditionally." (70 C.A.2d 576; 15 J. Juvenile Law 57 [restricting visitation rights on religious grounds].)

(2) Child Abuse and Neglect. The application of P.C. 11166, requiring child care custodians to report child abuse, to clergy acting as child care custodians at a church school does not violate the First Amendment. (People v. Hodges (1992) 10 C.A.4th Supp. 20, 30, 13 C.R.2d 412; Conley v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Francisco (2000) 85 C.A.4th 1126, 1132, 102 C.R.2d 679 [following Hodges and distinguishing Schmoll v. Chapman University (1999) 70 C.A.4th 1434, 83 C.R.2d 426, infra, §918; requirement does not violate Free Exercise Clause or constitute excessive government entanglement with religion; church's retaliation against clergyman for complying with statutory reporting duties was "outrageous act" sufficient to support action against church for intentional infliction of emotional distress]; see 25 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1 [legislation mandating clergy to report child abuse].)

(3) Health Care. Criminal liability may be imposed for child endangerment where medical treatment is withheld for religious reasons. (See 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §291; 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §161; on providing medical care to children over parental religious objections, see 21 A.L.R.5th 248 [where child's life is not endangered]; 82 Cal. L. Rev. 1371 [debunking doctrine of parents' rights]; 94 A.L.R.5th 613 [power of court or agency to order vaccination over parental religious objection]; 21 Hastings Const. L. Q. 725 [Religion Clauses and parental decision-making regarding health care for children]; 16 J. Juvenile Law 37 [child's right to medical care]; 19 J. Juvenile Law 123 [denying child nonemergency medical treatment].)

(4) Adoption. In Scott v. Family Ministries (1976) 65 C.A.3d 492, 506, 135 C.R. 430, religious requirements imposed on prospective adoptive parents by licensed adoption agencies were held invalid. (See 7 Stanf. L. Rev. 394; 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §113.)

(5) Compulsory School Attendance. In Pierce v. Society of the Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus & Mary (1925) 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, 573, 69 L.Ed. 1070, 1077, a statute requiring compulsory attendance solely at a public school was held unconstitutional as applied to a parent who sent a child to a church-operated school.

The Pierce doctrine was reaffirmed and extended in Wisconsin v. Yoder (1972) 406 U.S. 205, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 32 L.Ed.2d 15. The state law required school attendance until age 16. Respondents, members of the Old Order Amish religion, refused to send their children past the 8th grade. They contended that education beyond that age interfered with the children's vocational training and exposed them to an environment hostile to their religious beliefs during the formative period. Held, the law as applied to respondents violated the right to free exercise of their religion.

(a) "[O]nly state interests of the highest order and those not otherwise served can overbalance legitimate claims to the free exercise of religion." (92 S.Ct. 1533, 32 L.Ed.2d 25.)

(b) The record established, and the state conceded, that the compulsory attendance law required acts by respondents at odds with the fundamental tenets of their religious beliefs. (92 S.Ct. 1534, 32 L.Ed.2d 26.)

(c) The state has not shown that its interest must override these established religious practices. (1) The proposition that some degree of education is necessary to prepare individuals to participate in society and in our political system is accepted; but the evidence showed that the additional 1 or 2 years of formal high school for Amish children would do little to serve those interests. (92 S.Ct. 1536, 32 L.Ed.2d 29.) (2) The duty of the state to protect children from "ignorance" is also conceded, but the record shows that the Amish community develops productive and law-abiding members of society, and that their system of learning-by-doing cannot be condemned because it differs from the conventional formal education. (92 S.Ct. 1537, 1538, 32 L.Ed.2d 30.) (3) The objective of the child labor laws--keeping children out of the labor market--is likewise an insufficient interest, for there is no evidence that the Amish employment of children in family farms causes them any harm or displaces adult workers. (92 S.Ct. 1540, 32 L.Ed.2d 32.)

VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

d. Prisoners.

[§ 520] Prisoners.

Two cases involving the Black Muslims (a group asserting supremacy of the dark-skinned races and opposing integration) raised the question whether the constitutional guarantee protects incarcerated prisoners. In re Ferguson (1961) 55 C.2d 663, 670, 671, 12 C.R. 753, 361 P.2d 417, inadvertently relying on a previously repealed provision of the California Constitution, held that its guarantee was subject to the authority to provide for prison government, and further held that the federal Constitution's guarantee was not fully available to state prisoners. But In re Jones (1962) 57 C.2d 860, 862, 22 C.R. 478, 372 P.2d 310, corrected both mistakes, and pointed out that the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment apply to "persons," including convicted felons. "A person is not deprived of all of his constitutional rights by reason of his incarceration for a felony." (See 75 Harv. L. Rev. 837 [Ferguson]; 35 So. Cal. L. Rev. 162 [same]; 9 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 501 [same]; 51 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1151 [A Prisoner's Right to Religious Diet Beyond the Free Exercise Clause]; 12 A.L.R.3d 1276 [Provision of Religious Facilities for Prisoners].)

The right of prisoners is also recognized by statutes. (See P.C. 5009 [state prisoners; "all prisoners shall be afforded reasonable opportunities to exercise religious freedom"]; P.C. 4027 [local prisoners]; Welf.C. 1705 [Youth Authority].)

In O'Lone v. Estate of Shabazz (1987) 482 U.S. 342, 107 S.Ct. 2400, 96 L.Ed.2d 282, state prison regulations effectively preventing Muslim inmates from attending a weekly congregational service were upheld. The regulations were justified by concerns of institutional order, security, and rehabilitation; the prisoners retained the ability to participate in other religious observances of their faith; and accommodation of the prisoners' asserted right would, in the judgment of prison officials, have adverse effects on other prisoners, on prison personnel, and on allocation of prison resources generally. (107 S.Ct. 2405, 2406, 96 L.Ed.2d 291, 292.) The court also declared that prison officials did not have the burden of proving that no reasonable alternative method existed by which the inmates' religious rights could be accommodated without creating bona fide security problems. (107 S.Ct. 2405, 96 L.Ed.2d 290.)

VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

C. Free Exercise Clause.

2. Indirect Restraints.

e. Religious Solicitation.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 521

[§ 521] Religious Solicitation.

Members of the religious sect known as Jehovah's Witnesses practice missionary evangelism by means of "colporteurs" or "ministers" who preach or sell religious literature on the streets or door to door. Attempts by municipalities to apply the usual business license tax to these activities were held invalid, as an imposition on the religious activity itself, equivalent to a tax on the privilege of delivering a sermon. (Jones v. Opelika (1943) 319 U.S. 103, 63 S.Ct. 890, 87 L.Ed. 1290; Follett v. McCormick, South Carolina (1944) 321 U.S. 573, 64 S.Ct. 717, 88 L.Ed. 938; see Cantwell v. Connecticut (1940) 310 U.S. 296, 60 S.Ct. 900, 904, 84 L.Ed. 1213, 1218 [requirement of license as prerequisite to solicitation of money constituted undue censorship of religious activities when applied to members of Jehovah's Witnesses].)

In Murdock v. Pennsylvania (1943) 319 U.S. 105, 63 S.Ct. 870, 87 L.Ed. 1292, the Court made it clear that the objection was to a license tax on the activity, and that ordinary property or income taxes were to be distinguished. (63 S.Ct. 874, 87 L.Ed. 1298.) Accordingly, a general ad valorem personal property tax may validly be applied to religious pamphlets and books stored in bulk in a building. (Watchtower Bible & Tract Soc. v. Los Angeles (1947) 30 C.2d 426, 430, 182 P.2d 178 ["It has never been supposed that the property used in the exercise of the rights of freedom of press or religion is not subject to a uniform tax for revenue imposed upon all alike"]; see Texas Monthly v. Bullock (1989) 489 U.S. 1, 109 S.Ct. 890, 103 L.Ed.2d 1, supra, §510 [disapproving dicta in Murdock and Follett].)

In Martin v. Struthers (1943) 319 U.S. 141, 63 S.Ct. 862, 863, 87 L.Ed. 1313, 1317, an ordinance prohibiting distributors of literature from ringing door bells or otherwise summoning a resident to the door was likewise held void as applied to religious colporteurs, despite the contention that it was designed to protect night and swing shift workers in war plants from disturbance of sleep, and also to guard against burglars posing as canvassers. The Court suggested that a narrowly drawn ordinance might validly furnish the desired protection, but did not indicate the legitimate boundaries thereof. (See Douglas v. Jeannette (1943) 319 U.S. 157, 63 S.Ct. 877, 87 L.Ed. 1324; Watchtower Bible & Tract Soc. of New York v. Village of Stratton (2002) 536 U.S. 150, 122 S.Ct. 2080, 2089, 153 L.Ed.2d 205, 218 [ordinance making it misdemeanor to engage in door-to-door solicitation or advocacy without first registering with mayor and obtaining permit was overly broad and violated First Amendment; ordinance required speakers to forego anonymity and spontaneity, and was not tailored to village's stated interest in preventing fraud and crime and protecting residents' privacy]; 116 Harv. L. Rev. 282 [Village of Stratton]; 3 A.L.R.2d 1431 [right of owner of housing development or apartment house to restrict canvassing, solicitation, etc.]; 35 A.L.R.2d 355 [validity of ordinance prohibiting door-to-door solicitation, etc., without invitation]; cf. People v. Vaughan (1944) 65 C.A.2d Supp. 844, 851, 150 P.2d 964 [manager could exclude Jehovah's Witnesses from hotel, and their noisy resistance justified conviction for disturbing the peace].)

Reasonable restrictions were upheld in Heffron v. International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness (1981) 452 U.S. 640, 101 S.Ct. 2559, 69 L.Ed.2d 298. A Minnesota public corporation, operating a state fair on state property, promulgated a "booth rule," providing that sale or distribution of merchandise or printed material or fund solicitation was restricted to a booth in a fixed location. Booths were available to nonprofit, charitable, and commercial enterprises on a first-come, first-served basis, without discrimination. ISKCON (respondent religious society) contended that the rule unconstitutionally suppressed its practice of Sankirtan--a religious ritual that orders its members to go into public places to distribute or sell literature and solicit donations. Held, the rule was valid.

(a) The activities of ISKCON, like those of others protected by the First Amendment, are subject to reasonable time, place, and manner restrictions. (1) The restriction may not be based on either the content or subject matter of the speech, and here it is not. (101 S.Ct. 2564, 69 L.Ed.2d 307.) (2) The regulation must also serve a significant governmental interest, and here the interest is the orderly movement of the crowd in light of the large number of exhibitors and persons attending the fair. (101 S.Ct. 2565, 69 L.Ed.2d 307.)

(b) ISKCON and its ritual of Sankirtan have no special claims to First Amendment protection. "None of our cases suggest that the inclusion of peripatetic solicitation as part of a church ritual entitles church members to solicitation rights in a public forum superior to those of members of other religious groups that raise money but do not purport to ritualize the process. Nor for present purposes do religious organizations enjoy rights to communicate, distribute, and solicit on the fairgrounds superior to those of other organizations having social, political, or other ideological messages to proselytize. These nonreligious organizations seeking support for their activities are entitled to rights equal to those of religious groups to enter a public forum and spread their views, whether by soliciting funds or by distributing literature." (101 S.Ct. 2566, 69 L.Ed.2d 309.)

(c) The validity of a place and manner restriction also depends on the existence of an alternative forum for the expression of protected speech; and here there is a forum. ISKCON may practice Sankirtan anywhere outside the fairgrounds, and it may conduct any desired activity within the grounds. Its members may mingle with the crowd and orally propagate their views, and it may distribute or sell literature and solicit funds from a booth. Considering the functions of the fair and the area in which it operates--a limited public forum for many exhibitors temporarily to present their products or views to a large number of people in an efficient fashion--the rule provides organizations with an adequate means to sell and solicit on the fairgrounds. (101 S.Ct. 2567, 69 L.Ed.2d 310.)

One justice concurred and dissented in part, and three justices dissented. (101 S.Ct. 2568, 2572, 69 L.Ed.2d 311, 316.) (See 71 Cal. L. Rev. 1012.)

In Fowler v. Rhode Island (1953) 345 U.S. 67, 73 S.Ct. 526, 97 L.Ed. 828, a local ordinance made it unlawful to "address any political or religious meeting in any public park," and petitioner, a minister of Jehovah's Witnesses, was convicted of its violation. Held, the ordinance was void. It allowed any kind of church services that did not involve an "address," and therefore was a plain discrimination against this particular sect, as much so as in Niemotko v. Maryland (1951) 340 U.S. 268, 71 S.Ct. 325, 95 L.Ed. 267, supra, §393. "To call the words which one minister speaks to his congregation a sermon, immune from regulation, and the words of another minister an address, subject to regulation, is merely an indirect way of preferring one religion over another." Arbitrary licensing regulations that operate to prevent religious meetings or circulation of religious literature have also been condemned on the distinct ground of interference with the rights of free speech and assembly. (See supra, §360; on invalidity of flag salute, see infra, §536.)

VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

C. Free Exercise Clause.

2. Indirect Restraints.

g. Use of Drugs.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 523

[§ 523] Use of Drugs.

(1) In General. It has been contended that the use of certain drugs to attain a religious experience is constitutionally protected. (See 56 Cal. L. Rev. 74, 86 [LSD]; 56 Cal. L. Rev. 100 [marijuana]; 28 Hastings L. J. 1509 [Native Americans and the Free Exercise Clause]; 1 U.S.F. L. Rev. 131 [LSD].) This view was accepted in limited form in People v. Woody (1964) 61 C.2d 716, 718, 40 C.R. 69, 394 P.2d 813, in which a statute prohibiting use of peyote was held invalid as applied to Navajo Indians whose religion involved group use of the drug as a basic experience in worship. (See 17 Stanf. L. Rev. 494.) But in People v. Collins (1969) 273 C.A.2d 486, 78 C.R. 151, the Woody holding was limited to the peculiar situation where the drug itself is an essential element of the worship. Marijuana is not so sanctified, and criminal sanctions against its possession and use are constitutional. (273 C.A.2d 487.)

(2) First Smith Case. In Employment Div. Dept. of Human Resources of State of Oregon v. Smith (1988) 485 U.S. 660, 108 S.Ct. 1444, 99 L.Ed.2d 753, the Court discussed the issue but did not decide it. Smith and other drug and alcohol abuse rehabilitation counselors in Oregon were discharged after they ingested peyote in a religious ceremony. They were denied unemployment compensation by the state Employment Division, and the Oregon Supreme Court held that this was a violation of the First Amendment, despite the fact that possession of peyote is a felony under Oregon law. The U.S. Supreme Court first pointed out that on three occasions it had held that an employee required to choose between fidelity to religious belief and cessation of work may not be denied unemployment compensation because the employee is faithful to the tenets of his or her church. (108 S.Ct. 1450, 99 L.Ed.2d 763, citing Sherbert v. Verner (1963) 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965, infra, §550, Hobbie v. Unemployment App. Com. of Florida (1987) 480 U.S. 136, 107 S.Ct. 1046, 1048, 94 L.Ed.2d 190, 197, and Thomas v. Review Bd. Indiana of Emp. Sec. Div. (1981) 450 U.S. 707, 101 S.Ct. 1425, 67 L.Ed.2d 624.)

(a) "The results we reached in Sherbert, Thomas, and Hobbie might well have been different if the employees had been discharged for engaging in criminal conduct. ... If the bigamist may be sent to jail despite the religious motivation for his misconduct, surely a State may refuse to pay unemployment compensation to a marriage counselor who was discharged because he or she entered into a bigamous relationship. The protection that the First Amendment provides to 'legitimate claims to the free exercise of religion,' ... does not extend to conduct that a State has validly proscribed." (108 S.Ct. 1451, 99 L.Ed.2d 764.)

(b) "Neither the Oregon Supreme Court nor this Court has confronted the question whether the ingestion of peyote for sincerely held religious reasons is a form of conduct that is protected by the Federal Constitution from the reach of a State's criminal laws." (108 S.Ct. 1451, 99 L.Ed.2d 764.) And it is inappropriate for this Court to do so without first receiving further guidance concerning the status of the practice as a matter of Oregon law. "Thus, paradoxical as it may first appear, a necessary predicate to a correct evaluation of respondents' federal claim is an understanding of the legality of their conduct as a matter of state law." (108 S.Ct. 1451, 99 L.Ed.2d 765.)

(3) Second Smith Case. In Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 872, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 108 L.Ed.2d 876, the Oregon Supreme Court, on remand after the first Smith case, stated that religiously inspired use of peyote fell within the prohibition of the Oregon statute, which made no exception for sacramental use of the drug; and the Oregon Court reaffirmed its previous ruling that the state could not deny unemployment benefits to employees for having engaged in that practice. The U.S. Supreme Court again granted certiorari and reversed.

(a) Respondents (Smith and the other discharged employees) argue for an enlarged meaning of "prohibiting the free exercise of religion." "They contend that their religious motivation for using peyote places them beyond the reach of a criminal law that is not specifically directed at their religious practice, and that is concededly constitutional as applied to those who use the drug for other reasons." (110 S.Ct. 1599, 108 L.Ed.2d 885.) However, "[w]e have never held that an individual's religious beliefs excuse him from compliance with an otherwise valid law prohibiting conduct that the State is free to regulate. On the contrary, the record of more than a century of our free exercise jurisprudence contradicts that proposition." (110 S.Ct. 1600, 108 L.Ed.2d 885.)

(b) "The only decisions in which we have held that the First Amendment bars application of a neutral, generally applicable law to religiously motivated action have involved not the Free Exercise Clause alone, but the Free Exercise Clause in conjunction with other constitutional protections, such as freedom of speech and of the press, ... or the right of parents. ... Some of our cases prohibiting compelled expression, decided exclusively upon free speech grounds, have also involved freedom of religion. ... And it is easy to envision a case in which a challenge on freedom of association grounds would likewise be reinforced by Free Exercise Clause concerns." (110 S.Ct. 1601, 108 L.Ed.2d 887.)

(c) "The present case does not present such a hybrid situation, but a free exercise claim unconnected with any communicative activity or parental right. Respondents urge us to hold, quite simply, that when otherwise prohibitable conduct is accompanied by religious convictions, not only the convictions but the conduct itself must be free from governmental regulation. We have never held that, and decline to do so now." (110 S.Ct. 1602, 108 L.Ed.2d 888.)

(d) "Respondents argue that even though exemption from generally applicable criminal laws need not automatically be extended to religiously motivated actors, at least the claim for a religious exemption must be evaluated under the balancing test set forth in Sherbert v. Verner." However, "[e]ven if we were inclined to breathe into Sherbert v. Verner ... some life beyond the unemployment compensation field, we would not apply it to require exemptions from a generally applicable criminal law." (110 S.Ct. 1602, 1603, 108 L.Ed.2d 888, 889.) "The rule respondents favor would open the prospect of constitutionally required exemptions from civil obligations of almost every conceivable kind." (110 S.Ct. 1605, 108 L.Ed.2d 892.)

(e) "Values that are protected against government interference through enshrinement in the Bill of Rights are not thereby banished from the political process. Just as a society that believes in the negative protection accorded to the press by the First Amendment is likely to enact laws that affirmatively foster the dissemination of the printed word, so also a society that believes in the negative protection accorded to religious belief can be expected to be solicitous of that value in its legislation as well. It is therefore not surprising that a number of States have made an exception in their drug laws for sacramental peyote use. ... But to say that a nondiscriminatory religious-practice exemption is permitted, or even that it is desirable, is not to say that it is constitutionally required, and that the appropriate occasions for its creation can be discerned by the courts. It may fairly be said that leaving accommodation to the political process will place at a relative disadvantage those religious practices that are not widely engaged in; but that unavoidable consequence of democratic government must be preferred to a system in which each conscience is a law unto itself or in which judges weigh the social importance of all laws against the centrality of all religious beliefs." (110 S.Ct. 1606, 108 L.Ed.2d 893.)

A concurring opinion of four justices supported the judgment in part (110 S.Ct. 1608, 108 L.Ed.2d 893), and three justices joined in a dissenting opinion (110 S.Ct. 1615, 108 L.Ed.2d 904). (See People v. Trippet (1997) 56 C.A.4th 1532, 1542, 66 C.R.2d 559 [evidence failed to show strongly held personal religious belief to trigger consideration of free exercise clause; discussing Smith]; 104 Harv. SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(4) (New) Test Under Religious Freedom Restoration Act. In Gonzales v. O Centro Espirita Beneficente Uniao do Vegetal (2006) 546 U.S. 418, 126 S.Ct. 1211, 163 L.Ed.2d 1017, a religious sect sued to enjoin enforcement of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C., §801 et seq.) in a manner that interfered with the use of a controlled substance in tea taken as a religious rite. Although the government conceded that the practice is a sincere exercise of religion, it argued that all use of the substance, a hallucinogen, is prohibited by the federal statute, which should prevail. The federal district court granted a preliminary injunction, and its order was affirmed by the circuit court. Held, affirmed.

(a) The Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA; 42 U.S.C., §2000bb et seq.) was enacted in response to Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 872, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 108 L.Ed.2d 876, text, p. 869, which held that states may prohibit the use of peyote in a religious sacrament. (126 S.Ct. 1216, 163 L.Ed.2d 1027.) The RFRA prohibits the federal Government from substantially burdening a person's exercise of religion, even if the burden results from a rule of general applicability. There is a single exception for cases where the government demonstrates that application of the burden to the person is in furtherance of a compelling governmental interest and is the least restrictive means of furthering that interest. (126 S.Ct. 1217, 163 L.Ed.2d 1027.) This is a strict scrutiny test. (126 S.Ct. 1220, 163 L.Ed.2d 1031.)

(b) The test was not satisfied in this case. The government's "mere invocation of the general characteristics" of the regulated substances "cannot carry the day." 21 U.S.C., §822(d) itself contemplates that exempting certain people from its requirements would be consistent with public health and safety. (126 S.Ct. 1221, 163 L.Ed.2d 1032, 1033.) A regulatory exception for the use of peyote in religious ceremonies by Indian tribes has been in place for 35 years. (126 S.Ct. 1222, 163 L.Ed.2d 1033.)

(c) The exception for peyote "fatally undermines" the government's broader argument that the Controlled Substances Act establishes a closed regulatory system permitting no exceptions. (126 S.Ct. 1222, 163 L.Ed.2d 1034.) The government's argument for uniformity "rests not so much on the particular statutory program at issue as on slippery-slope concerns that could be invoked in response to any RFRA claim for an exception to a generally applicable law. The government's argument echoes the classic rejoinder of bureaucrats throughout history: If I make an exception for you, I'll have to make one for everybody, so no exceptions." But the RFRA operates by mandating, under the compelling interest test, the consideration of exceptions to these laws. (126 S.Ct. 1223, 163 L.Ed.2d 1035.)

(d) The Court also rejected a government claim that its position was compelled by the federal Government's adherence to an international convention prohibiting the use of psychotropic substances. (126 S.Ct. 1224, 163 L.Ed.2d 1036.) (See 135 A.L.R. Fed 121 [Validity, Construction, and Application of Religious Freedom Restoration Act]; for case holding that RFRA is not applicable to states, see Boerne v. Flores (1997) 521 U.S. 507, 117 S.Ct. 2157, 138 L.Ed.2d 624, text, §516.)

[§ 524] Defamation Action Against Church.

In McNair v. Worldwide Church of God (1987) 197 C.A.3d 363, 242 C.R. 823, a case of first impression, the court was asked whether the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution "bars a defamation suit brought against a church and two of its ministers for statements made during the course of a theological controversy." (197 C.A.3d 366.) Held, the action was not barred, but was subject to the New York Times rule of malice.

(a) Protection of a person's good name is a sufficiently important state interest to justify a defamation action against the Church and its evangelist ministers. (197 C.A.3d 374.) But the reputational interest of the citizen must be balanced against the First Amendment's Free Exercise Clause. (197 C.A.3d 375.)

(b) "To resolve the issues raised by this balancing we look not to common law theories of defamation" but turn to the theory of New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686, supra, §426. (197 C.A.3d 375.) The New York Times rule was developed to protect the constitutional guarantees of free speech and free press. "We hold that the right to free exercise of religion is a constitutional guarantee of equal significance." (197 C.A.3d 377.)

(c) "Our accommodation of the competing interests of our society--one protecting reputation, the other, the free exercise of religion--requires that we hold that in order for a plaintiff to recover damages for defamatory remarks made during the course of a doctrinal explanation by a duly authorized minister, he/she must show, by clear and convincing evidence, that the defamation was made with constitutional malice, that is with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not. Whether a plaintiff is a 'public figure' or the method of publication is via a 'newspaper' is irrelevant under this holding." (197 C.A.3d 377.)

(d) The jury instructions on malice did not state the New York Times requirement. The verdict and judgment awarding compensatory and punitive damages to plaintiff must therefore be reversed, for the record does not show that plaintiff presented evidence that "crossed this 'constitutional threshold.'" (197 C.A.3d 278.)

In Molko v. Holy Spirit Assn. for the Unification of World Christianity (1988) 46 C.3d 1092, 252 C.R. 122, 762 P.2d 46, the court held that the free exercise clauses of the federal and California Constitutions did not bar a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress arising out of deceptive recruitment practices of defendant church.

(a) Religious belief is absolutely protected, but religiously motivated conduct is not. This conduct is subject to regulation for the protection of society, under a balancing test, in which the importance of a state's interest is weighed against the severity of the burden imposed. (46 C.3d 1112.)

(b) Tort liability for fraudulent recruitment does impair the Church's ability to recruit members; but the burden is not substantial. "Being subject to liability for fraud does not in any way or degree prevent or inhibit Church members from operating their religious communities, worshipping as they see fit, freely associating with one another, selling or distributing literature, proselytizing on the street, soliciting funds, or generally spreading Reverend Moon's message among the population. ... At most, it potentially closes one questionable avenue for bringing new members into the Church." (46 C.3d 1117.) (See 25 *Loyola L.A. L. j. Religious Discrimination Against Advertisers.

[§ 526] Religious Discrimination Against Advertisers.

In Pines v. Tomson (1984) 160 C.A.3d 370, 206 C.R. 866, defendants owned and operated a business telephone directory called the "Christian Yellow Pages" (CYP), which accepts advertisements only by persons who affirm orally and in writing that they have accepted Jesus Christ as their personal savior and are "born-again" Christians. Plaintiffs, Jewish businessmen and a Jewish civic organization, sought injunctive and monetary relief for violation of California statutes prohibiting religious discrimination (C.C. 51, 51.5, infra, §§898, 906). The trial court granted the requested relief by an order that prohibited defendants from requiring an oath or affirmation of a particular religious belief as a precondition to placing of an advertisement. Held, this injunction did not violate defendants' right to free exercise of religion.

(a) Nothing in the injunction prevents CYP or their advertisers from declaring "their position in Christ" or from identifying themselves as members of the Christian community; it simply enjoins them from refusing an advertisement on the ground that the person attempting to place it will not affirm that he or she is a "born-again" Christian. (160 C.A.3d 388.)

(b) Defendants also contended that compelling them to accept advertisements from non-Christians would force them to subscribe to non-Christian beliefs in violation of West Virginia State Bd. of Education v. Barnette (1943) 319 U.S. 624, 63 S.Ct. 1178, 87 L.Ed. 1628, infra, §536. This is unsound. The injunction does not require defendants to endorse these beliefs; it merely compels them to act in a nondiscriminatory manner, and they are free to publish disclaimers to assure that their compliance with the court order is not to be confused with endorsement. (160 C.A.3d 389.)

(c) The injunction does infringe on defendants' freedom of religious association by requiring them to do business with non-Christians despite their preference to the contrary. But the infringement is justified by the compelling state interest in eradicating invidious discrimination. (160 C.A.3d 390, 392, discussing Roberts v. United States Jaycees (1984) 468 U.S. 609, 104 S.Ct. 3244, 82 L.Ed. 462, supra, §389, and using the same approach.)

k. Fair Employment and Housing Act.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 527

[§ 527] Fair Employment and Housing Act.

In Smith v. Fair Emp. & Housing Com. (1996) 12 C.4th 1143, 51 C.R.2d 700, 913 P.2d 909, a landlord refused to rent an apartment to an unmarried couple because she believed that renting to people who would engage in nonmarital sex on her property would be sinful. The couple filed complaints against the landlord with the Fair Employment and Housing Commission, which determined that the landlord had violated the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Govt.C. 12900 et seq.) by discriminating against the couple on the basis of their marital status. The Commission awarded damages and ordered the landlord to cease discriminating. The Court of Appeal reversed, holding that the state could not prevent the landlord from discriminating against unmarried couples, in view of the free exercise of religion clauses of the federal and state Constitutions (U.S. Const., First Amendment; Cal. Const., Art. I, §4) and the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (RFRA). Held, reversed.

(a) Applicability of FEHA. Govt.C. 12955(a) prohibits housing discrimination on the basis of "marital status," and this ban extends to unmarried couples who cohabit. (12 C.4th 1155, 1157; see infra, §947.)

(b) No First Amendment Exemption. The First Amendment does not require that the state exempt the landlord from FEHA to avoid burdening her exercise of religious freedom. The statutory prohibition against discrimination on the basis of marital status is both generally applicable and neutral towards religion. It is generally applicable because it prohibits all discrimination without reference to motivation. It is neutral because its object is to prohibit discrimination irrespective of reason. Consequently, Govt.C. 12955(a) does not violate the First Amendment's Free Exercise Clause. (12 C.4th 1161, 1162, citing Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 872, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 108 L.Ed.2d 876, supra, §523.)

(c) No Exemption Under RFRA. The Religious Freedom Restoration Act (since held unconstitutional in Boerne v. Flores (1997) 521 U.S. 507, 117 S.Ct. 2157, 138 L.Ed.2d 624, supra, §516) does not exempt the landlord from the statutory prohibition against discrimination on the basis of marital status. Because Govt.C. 12955(a) does not substantially burden the landlord's religious exercise, there is no need to determine whether applying the statute to her furthers a compelling state interest and is the least restrictive means of doing so. (12 C.4th 1176.)

(d) No Exemption Under California Constitution. Because the landlord's claim to an exemption fails under the "compelling interest" test codified in RFRA, it necessarily fails under Cal. Const., Art. I, §4; no California court has articulated a test more protective of religious exercise than the "compelling interest" test. (12 C.4th 1179.)

Three justices joined in the lead opinion, and a fourth concurred fully in the disposition of the case. (12 C.4th 1180.) (See 108 Harv. L. Rev. 763 [note on Alaska case holding that housing anti-discrimination laws protecting unmarried couples do not violate free exercise rights of religious landlord]; 47 Hastings L. J. 1669 [conflict between free exercise rights and housing discrimination laws]; 41 Stanf. L. k. Fair Employment and Housing Act.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 528

[§ 528] (l) Prescription Contraceptive Coverage.

The Women's Contraceptive Equity Act (WCEA), Health & Saf.C. 1367.25 and Ins.C. 10123.196, requires certain health and disability insurance contracts to cover prescription contraceptives. In Catholic Charities of Sacramento v. Superior Court (2004) 32 C.4th 527, 10 C.R.3d 283, 85 P.3d 67, plaintiff employer, which opposes contraceptives on religious grounds, claimed that the statute violates the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses of the federal and California Constitutions. Held, the Act is constitutional.

(a) Although the WCEA provides an exemption for "religious" employers, plaintiff does not meet the statutory requirements for the exemption. Plaintiff's corporate purpose is not the direct "inculcation of religious values." It does not primarily employ, nor does it primarily serve, persons who share its religious tenets. And it is not a nonprofit organization as specified in the Internal Revenue Code. (32 C.4th 539.)

(b) The WCEA does not interfere with matters of internal church governance. Instead, "it implicates the relationship between a nonprofit public benefit corporation and its employees, most of whom do not belong to the Catholic Church. Only those who join a church impliedly consent to its religious governance on matters of faith and discipline." (32 C.4th 542.)

(c) The WCEA meets the test of Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 872, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 108 L.Ed.2d 876, supra, §523, that "a law that is neutral and of general applicability need not be justified by a compelling government interest even if the law has the incidental effect of burdening a particular religious practice." The Act "addresses a matter the state is free to regulate;" it regulates insurance coverage for the purpose of eliminating gender discrimination in the provision of certain health benefits. It only incidentally conflicts with plaintiff's religious beliefs "because those beliefs happen to make prescription contraceptives sinful." Thus, plaintiff must demonstrate an exception to the rule, which would require the application of strict scrutiny. (32 C.4th 549.)

(d) Strict scrutiny is not required by the fact that the WCEA exemption for religious employers contains religious terms; this does not mean that it lacks neutrality or general application. (32 C.4th 550.) Neither is strict scrutiny required by the fact that the exemption is not sufficiently broad to cover all organizations affiliated with the Catholic Church; this does not mean that the exemption discriminates against it. (32 C.4th 553.) And the fact that plaintiff must comply with a law regulating health care benefits is not a regulation of speech that, as a "hybrid" right, might trigger strict scrutiny; plaintiff is free to express its disapproval of contraceptives and to discourage its employees in their use. (32 C.4th 558.)

(e) Although whether strict scrutiny is required by Cal. Const., Art. I, §4, the California Free Exercise Clause, is not determined, the WCEA passes the strict scrutiny test. "Under that standard, a law could not be applied in a manner that substantially burdened a religious belief or practice unless the state showed that the law represented the least restrictive means of achieving a compelling interest or, in other words, was narrowly tailored." A law substantially burdens a religious belief if it conditions receipt of an important benefit on conduct proscribed by a religious faith, or denies a benefit because of conduct mandated by a religious belief, which puts substantial pressure on an adherent to modify his or her behavior or violate his or her beliefs. Here, plaintiff was not forced to offer any prescription drug coverage. (32 C.4th 562.) Plaintiff's claim that its religious beliefs also require it to offer its employees prescription drug coverage raises the question whether plaintiff's "beliefs about the requirements of 'justice and charity' are necessarily equivalent to religious beliefs." (32 C.4th 563.) However, even assuming that the Act substantially burdens a religious belief or practice, it nevertheless serves the compelling state interest of eliminating gender discrimination in the cost of health care, and is narrowly tailored to achieve that interest. (32 C.4th 564.) There are no less restrictive means readily available to achieve that interest. A broader exemption would increase the number of women affected by discrimination in the provision of health care benefits. (32 C.4th 565.)

One justice dissented. (32 C.4th 571.)

VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION
D. Religious Activity in Public Schools.
1. Religious Instruction.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 529

[§ 529] Religious Instruction.

(1) Religious Instruction in School. In McCullum v. Board of Education of School Dist. No. 71, Champaign County, Illinois (1948) 333 U.S. 203, 68 S.Ct. 461, 92 L.Ed. 649, a county board of education in Illinois instituted a plan of "released-time" religious education in its public schools, with instructors of various faiths being furnished without charge to the school authorities. Instruction was given each week for 30- and 45-minute periods, in the classrooms and during regular school hours, to children whose parents signed printed requests. Attendance of these children at the classes was required and reports of absences were made in the usual manner. Students who did not choose to take the religious instruction were required to leave their classrooms and go elsewhere in the school building for secular studies. Held, the program violated the First Amendment. The general doctrine set forth in Everson v. Board of Education of Ewing Township (1947) 330 U.S. 1, 67 S.Ct. 504, 511, 91 L.Ed. 711, 723, supra, §505, was restated but the Court reached a different result (see infra, §539). "Here not only are the state's tax-supported public school buildings used for the dissemination of religious doctrines. The State also affords sectarian groups an invaluable aid in that it helps to provide pupils for their religious classes through use of the state's compulsory public school machinery. This is not separation of Church and state." (68 S.Ct. 465, 92 L.Ed. 659.) (See 5 Rotunda, §21.5(b); 6 Pepperdine L. Rev. 105 [moral values education for child]; 61 So. Cal. L. Rev. 863 [Religious Children, Secular Schools]; 28 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1000 [accommodation of religion in public schools]; 2 A.L.R.2d 1371 [release of pupils during school hours to attend religious education classes]; 79 A.L.R.2d 1148 [use of schools for religious purposes during nonschool time]; 68 Am.Jur.2d (1993 ed.), Schools §336 et seq.)

(2) Religious Instruction Outside School. Prior to McCullum, the Los Angeles "released-time" program, established under the authority of a former state statute, was upheld in Gordon v. Board of Education of Los Angeles (1947) 78 C.A.2d 464, 178 P.2d 488. The only important difference between this and the Illinois plan was that the children were transported to places outside the school building for their religious instruction. The opinion relied heavily on the reasoning of Everson (infra, §539) and was of doubtful value as a precedent while McCullum stood unchallenged.

But the McCullum view was all but obliterated by a refined distinction in Zorach v. Clauson (1952) 343 U.S. 306, 72 S.Ct. 679, 96 L.Ed. 954, involving New York's "released-time" program. On a parent's request, a child is released during the school day to go to an outside building in a religious center for instruction or devotional exercise. If the child leaves school but fails to attend the religious center, the church reports him or her to the school. Held, the statute was valid, for there was no religious instruction in the school and no expenditure of public funds for that instruction. The Court thought that releasing the child on voluntary application for systematic religious instruction was not essentially different from releasing him or her on religious holidays. (72 S.Ct. 684, 96 L.Ed. 962.) Three justices dissented in three opinions. (72 S.Ct. 685, 687, 689, 96 L.Ed. 963, 965, 967.) One of the dissenting opinions argues that the plan is coercive in that if a child fails to go to the church, the truant officer "dogs him back to the public schoolroom," and that school instruction is more or less suspended during the released time so that other pupils will not forge ahead of the absentees. (72 S.Ct. 689, 96 L.Ed. 967.) (See 5 Rotunda, §21.5(b); 2 A.L.R.2d 1371 [release of pupils during school hours to attend religious education classes].)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law
VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION
D. Religious Activity in Public Schools.
2. Prayers and Bible Reading.
a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 530

[§ 530] In General.

In Engel v. Vitale (1962) 370 U.S. 421, 82 S.Ct. 1261, 8 L.Ed.2d 601, the New York State Board of Regents was a governmental agency created by the state Constitution to which the Legislature granted supervisory powers over the public school system. The board composed a prayer for use in the schools, and respondent Board of Education of a school district directed the principal to have it said aloud daily by each class in the presence of a teacher. The prayer read: "Almighty God, we acknowledge our dependence upon Thee, and we beg Thy blessings upon us, our parents, our teachers and our Country." In this action by objecting parents, the procedure was held unconstitutional.

(a) The prayer was concededly a religious activity. It was part of a governmental program to further religious belief, and the constitutional prohibition at least means that the government may not compose official prayers for any group to recite as part of a governmentally sponsored religious program. (82 S.Ct. 1264, 1266, 8 L.Ed.2d 604.)

(b) It was immaterial that objecting pupils could remain silent or be excused from the room. The Establishment Clause, unlike the Free Exercise Clause, may be violated without any compulsion operating on individuals; its object is to keep government and religion separate, and thereby to avoid repetition of the historical experience of established religions leading to religious persecution. (82 S.Ct. 1267, 8 L.Ed.2d 607.)

(c) It was immaterial that the prayer was nondenominational and did not amount to a total establishment of a particular religion, or that it was so brief and general that it did not threaten religious freedom. As Madison put it, a slight encroachment may lead to ultimately complete enforced conformity. (82 S.Ct. 1269, 1270, 8 L.Ed.2d 610.)

(d) To apply the Constitutional prohibition is not to indicate hostility toward religion or prayer. "It is neither sacrilegious nor antireligious to say that each separate government in this country should stay out of the business of writing or sanctioning official prayers and leave that purely religious function to the people themselves and to those the people choose to look to for religious guidance." (82 S.Ct. 1269, 8 L.Ed.2d 609.)

A dissenting justice observed that the New York school procedure was indistinguishable from the practice of the Court and both Houses of Congress, which open sessions with an invocation; and that the National Anthem, the Pledge of Allegiance, and the inscription on our coins, all follow a long tradition of recognition of and reliance on a Divine

In School Dist. of Abington Township, Pennsylvania v. Schempp (1963) 374 U.S. 203, 83 S.Ct. 1560, 10 L.Ed.2d 844, Pennsylvania and Maryland statutes required that verses from the Bible be read without comment at the opening of school exercises each day. On request of a parent or guardian, pupils who did not desire to attend were excused. Held, the statutes were unconstitutional. The court's opinions were more elaborate than those in Engel.

(a) Religion is closely identified with our history and government; e.g., in the oath of office, the opening of Congress with a chaplain's prayer, and chaplains in military forces. Statistics show that 64% of our people are church members. But religious freedom is just as strongly imbedded, and authorities list 83 separate religious bodies with memberships over 50,000, and innumerable smaller groups. (83 S.Ct. 1566, 1567, 10 L.Ed.2d 853.)

(b) Both the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses are parts of a constitutional doctrine of neutrality, based on the recognition that powerful groups might bring about a fusion of governmental and religious functions, or a concert of them. But the Free Exercise Clause is predicated on coercion, which the Establishment Clause is not. (83 S.Ct. 1571, 1572, 10 L.Ed.2d 858.)

(c) Neutrality does not establish a "religion of secularism," nor does this decision mean that study of the Bible or of religion presented objectively as part of a secular program of education is prohibited. (83 S.Ct. 1573, 10 L.Ed.2d 860.)

(d) "The place of religion in our society is an exalted one, achieved through a long tradition of reliance on the home, the church and the inviolable citadel of the individual heart and mind. We have come to recognize through bitter experience that it is not within the power of government to invade that citadel, whether its purposes or effect be to aid or oppose, to advance or retard. In the relationship between man and religion, the State is firmly committed to a position of neutrality." (83 S.Ct. 1574, 10 L.Ed.2d 860.)

An exhaustive concurring opinion covers all aspects of the problem, and particularly answers the contention of school officials that the decision makes unconstitutional every vestige of cooperation or accommodation between religion and government. (83 S.Ct. 1575, 10 L.Ed.2d 861.) (See Stone v. Graham (1980) 449 U.S. 39, 101 S.Ct. 192, 66 L.Ed.2d 199 [statute requiring posting of copy of Ten Commandments on wall of classrooms violated Establishment Clause]; Santa Fe Independent School Dist. v. Doe (2000) 530 U.S. 290, 120 S.Ct. 2266, 2275, 2281, 147 L.Ed.2d 295, 310, 319 [school district policy permitting yearly student election to determine whether to have student-led prayer at school football games violates Establishment Clause; policy is invalid on its face because it established improper majoritarian election on religion; following Lee v. Weisman (1992) 505 U.S. 577, 112 S.Ct. 2649, 120 L.Ed.2d 467, infra, §534]; 5 Rotunda, §21.5(c); 77 Harv. L. Rev. 62 [Schempp]; 28 Pepperdine L. D. Religious Activity in Public Schools.
2. Prayers and Bible Reading.
b. Student Bible Study Club.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 531

[§ 531] Student Bible Study Club.

(1) Johnson Case. In Johnson v. Huntington Beach Union High School Dist. (1977) 68 C.A.3d 1, 137 C.R. 43, defendant high school district, pursuant to statutory authority, provided for recognition of student clubs and prescribed regulations for their operation and their use of school facilities. Plaintiffs, members of a high school group, applied for recognition of a club whose express purpose was "to enable those participating to know God better ... by prayerfully studying the Bible." Held, defendant's denial of the application was proper; the administrative action sought would be state action that could not meet the three-part test of validity set forth in Committee for Public Education & Religious Liberty v. Nyquist (1973) 413 U.S. 756, 93 S.Ct. 2955, 37 L.Ed.2d 948 infra, §546.

(a) The purpose, in the abstract, might be secular in nature, but its primary effect was not. The club would be entitled to use classroom space rent free, would receive heat and light, would be monitored by a paid faculty sponsor, and would have its finances audited by defendant at defendant's expense. This financial subsidy might alone condemn the action. (68 C.A.3d 12.)

(b) The consequence of the action would be to place the state's imprimatur on the religious activity. The club would become an entity sponsored by the school, entitled to use the school name, to have free use of school property, to have access to the school newspaper and posting facilities, and to solicit contributions on campus during the school day. (68 C.A.3d 13.)

(c) The action would involve excessive governmental entanglement with religion by the school furnishing a faculty sponsor, auditing the accounts, and reviewing membership procedures. (68 C.A.3d 14.)

(d) An additional factor is the potential for divisiveness. Students who are members of less orthodox religions would be unable to organize a club, and might be subjected to pressures to conform to beliefs of a recognized club. (68 C.A.3d 14.)

(e) For all of the above reasons, the state action in question also violates the Establishment Clause of the California Constitution (Cal. Const., Art. I, §4; see supra, §505). It also violates Cal. Const., Art. XVI, §5, prohibiting appropriation of funds for a sectarian purpose (see supra, §505). (68 C.A.3d 15.)

(f) Refusal to permit the club to operate on campus is not a violation of plaintiffs' First Amendment rights. "This is not a case where plaintiffs are denied access to all public forums for religious expression; they are merely being denied use of school property during the school day for religious purposes. This deprivation in no way infringes upon their religious rights when practiced outside the confines of the school. Plaintiffs are only being denied religious expression in a manner involving state participation. Each club member remains free to believe and express his religious beliefs on an individual basis and the students' Bible study club is free to meet as such off campus outside of school hours. There is no infringement of plaintiffs' free exercise rights except to the limited extent made necessary by the establishment clause of the state and federal Constitutions." (68 C.A.3d 17.)

A lengthy dissent challenges the reasoning and conclusions reached by the majority, and argues that under the accommodation concept of Zorach v. Clauson (1952) 343 U.S. 306, 72 S.Ct. 679, 684, 96 L.Ed. 954, 962, supra, §529, a rule should emerge making it plain that "locally formulated curricula recognizing and implementing the need for moral and ethical training of school pupils not only are permissible but are to be encouraged." (68 C.A.3d 35.) (See 28 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1000, 1025.)

(2) Perumal Case. In Perumal v. Saddleback Valley Unified School Dist. (1988) 198 C.A.3d 64, 243 C.R. 545, the question before the court was stated as follows: "Must a tax supported high school district board, which has adopted a closed forum policy, allow a student club to distribute religious flyers on the school campus during school hours or to place religious advertisements in a high school yearbook?" (198 C.A.3d 68.) The district, pursuant to Educ.C. 48907 (supra, §498), enacted a board policy prohibiting off-campus groups from functioning or advertising on campus. (198 C.A.3d 69, footnote 4.) Held, under the Johnson analysis, the regulation was permissible. "Its enactment is secular, promoting the general well-being of the campus; because religious groups are not singled out for better or worse treatment, its principal or primary effect neither advances nor inhibits religion. No entanglement with religion exists." (198 C.A.3d 75.)

A lengthy dissent discusses state and federal cases, and concludes that "the suppression of purely private student religious expression cannot be reconciled with any of the clauses of the First Amendment." (198 C.A.3d 75, 94.)

(3) Equal Access Act. In 1984, Congress enacted the Equal Access Act (20 U.S.C., §4071-4074) which provides in part that it is "unlawful for any public secondary school which receives Federal financial assistance and which has a limited open forum to deny equal access or a fair opportunity to, or discriminate against, any students who wish to conduct a meeting within that limited open forum on the basis of the religious, political, philosophical, or other content of the speech at such meetings." (20 U.S.C., §4071(a); see 20 U.S.C., §4071(b) ["limited open forum" defined]; 20 U.S.C., §4071(c) ["fair opportunity" criteria]; 12 Hastings Const. L. Q. 529 [unconstitutionality of equal access policies and legislation allowing organized student-initiated religious activities in public high schools]; 15 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 103 [Religious Meetings on Public School Property]; 16 Pepperdine L. Rev. 229 [Affording Equal Treatment for Student-Initiated Religious Expression in Public Schools]; 20 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 313 [Religious Meetings in the Public High School: Freedom of Speech or Establishment of Religion]; 174 A.L.R. Fed 407 [validity, construction, and application of Act].)

In Board of Education of Westside Community Schools (Dist. 66) v. Mergens (1990) 496 U.S. 226, 110 S.Ct. 2356, 110 L.Ed.2d 191, the issue was whether the Act "prohibits Westside High School from denying a student religious group permission to meet on school premises during noninstructional time, and if so, whether the Act, so construed, violates the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment." (110 S.Ct. 2362, 110 L.Ed.2d 203.) The Court concluded that the Act did not on its face contravene the Establishment Clause; that the school board, in denying permission, violated the Act; and that it was therefore unnecessary to consider the students' claims under the Free Speech and Free Exercise Clauses. (110 S.Ct. 2373, 110 L.Ed.2d 218.) (See Van Schoick v. Saddleback Valley Unified School Dist. (2001) 87 C.A.4th 522, 527, 104 C.R.2d 562 [following Mergens; trial court erred in granting summary judgment to defendant school board on claim that it violated FEAA by refusing to grant Christian athletic club rights enjoyed by other student clubs where there was triable issue whether school had created limited open forum by recognizing two service clubs; court's conclusion that those clubs were curriculum-related because participation in them satisfied community service requirement for graduation was not dispositive].)

[§ 532] School Period of Silence.

The constitutionality of state statutes authorizing "moments of silence" in public schools has been widely debated. (See 96 Harv. L. Rev. 1874; 14 Hastings Const. L. Q. 763; 5 Rotunda, §21.5(c).)

In Wallace v. Jaffree (1985) 472 U.S. 38, 105 S.Ct. 2479, 86 L.Ed.2d 29, the court held that an Alabama statute authorizing a period of silence for "meditation or voluntary prayer" violated the Establishment Clause. The validity of another simple "moment of silence" statute was apparently conceded (105 S.Ct. 2481, 2482, 2491, 2493, 2496, 86 L.Ed.2d 33, 34, 45, 47, 50), but the record showed that the legislative intent in the statute under review was "to return voluntary prayer" to the public schools, and that the statute had no secular purpose (105 S.Ct. 2490, 86 L.Ed.2d 43). "[W]henver the State itself speaks on a religious subject, one of the questions that we must ask is 'whether the Government intends to convey a message of endorsement or disapproval of religion.' ... Keeping in mind, as we must, 'both the fundamental place held by the Establishment Clause in our constitutional scheme and the myriad, subtle ways in which Establishment Clause values can be eroded,' " the statute violates the First Amendment. 7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 533

[§ 533] California Decisions.

In Bennett v. Livermore Unified School Dist. (1987) 193 C.A.3d 1012, 238 C.R. 819, defendant school district established guidelines for the traditional religious invocation at school graduation ceremonies, although it did not provide for its content and did not require that it be given. In this action by a high school senior, the trial judge determined that inclusion of the invocation in the ceremony was unconstitutional, and enjoined the district from including it in scheduled and future ceremonies. Held, affirmed.

(a) An invocation is a form of prayer invoking God's presence, and it does not comport with the beliefs of many persons. (193 C.A.3d 1015.) "We therefore align ourselves with those cases holding impermissible the inclusion of an invocation at a public school graduation ceremony, finding that it violates both the United States and the California Constitutions." (193 C.A.3d 1016.)

(b) The U.S. Supreme Court has rejected any form of prayer, however inoffensive or nonsectarian, in the public schools. (193 C.A.3d 1018.)

(c) The religious invocation violates all three prongs of the test stated in Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745, supra, §507: (1) Its primary purpose is religious. (2) The practice of including it in a graduation ceremony conveys a message of endorsement of the particular creed represented and of religion in general. (3) If it were allowed, it would be necessary to oversee the students' choice of ceremony--the kind of entanglement condemned by Lemon. (193 C.A.3d 1020.) Marsh v. Chambers (1983) 463 U.S. 783, 103 S.Ct. 3330, 77 L.Ed.2d 1019, supra, §508, upholding the practice of opening legislative sessions with prayer, rests on the history and tradition from colonial times to the present. (193 C.A.3d 1022.)

In Sands v. Morongo Unified School Dist. (1991) 53 C.3d 863, 281 C.R. 34, 809 P.2d 809, district officials approved the selection of speakers who delivered prayers at graduation ceremonies at four high schools in the district. With one exception, every invocation or benediction was delivered by either a Protestant minister or a Catholic priest. Plaintiff taxpayers residing in the district brought an action for declaratory and injunctive relief to prohibit the religious invocations at public school ceremonies. While the action was pending, Bennett, supra, held that religious invocations at high school graduation ceremonies violated both the state and federal Constitutions. The trial court then granted summary judgment for plaintiffs. On appeal, the Court of Appeal disagreed with Bennett and reversed the trial court's judgment. Held, judgment of Court of Appeal reversed.

(a) Establishment Clause and Lemon tests. Lemon v. Kurtzman stated a three-pronged test to be applied in Establishment Clause cases. (53 C.3d 871.) This test has been controlling law for 20 years, and is applied in this case. (53 C.3d 872.)

(b) The "primary effect" test. Under this test, the inquiry is whether, irrespective of the government's actual objective, the practice conveys a message of endorsement or disapproval. (53 C.3d 872.)

(1) The religious invocations challenged here are, in whole or major part, prayers; and when a school district opens or closes the graduation ceremony with a prayer, "it sends a powerful message that it approves of the prayer's religious content." (53 C.3d 874.) "Through the practices challenged in this case, the government appears to prefer religion over nonreligion; appears to prefer religions that acknowledge the practice of petitionary prayer over religions that do not recognize such prayer; appears to prefer the religious belief that prayer should be public over the belief that prayer should be private; and implicitly endorses religions that address a single, anthropomorphic, and male deity over those that do not." (53 C.3d 874.)

(2) "The assertedly 'nonsectarian' nature of the prayers at issue here does not render their government sponsorship constitutionally acceptable." (53 C.3d 876.) And the argument that no state coercive authority is present does not justify the practice: coercion is not an element of the Establishment Clause violation. (53 C.3d 877.)

(3) The singing of traditional patriotic songs (e.g., "God Bless America") is not prohibited by this holding; these songs no longer convey significant religious meaning. (53 C.3d 873, footnote 4.)

(c) The "excessive entanglement" test. "The practice of including prayers at public high school graduation ceremonies impermissibly entangles government in religious matters in two ways: It involves governmental selection or approval of religious speakers and governmental approval of the content of public prayer." (53 C.3d 879.)

(d) Marsh case distinguished. Marsh v. Chambers, supra, upheld the practice of opening legislative sessions with prayer on the ground of its "unique history." In Edwards v. Aguillard (1987) 482 U.S. 578, 107 S.Ct. 2573, 96 L.Ed.2d 510, infra, §535, the Court made it clear that Marsh should not be applied to determine the constitutionality of public school practices. (53 C.3d 881.)

(e) Religion Clauses of California Constitution. Cal. Const., Art. I, §4, is virtually identical to the First Amendment's Establishment Clause, and the practice of government endorsement of graduation prayers violates this correspondent clause of the California Constitution. (53 C.3d 883.)

(f) Conclusion. "Ours is a religiously diverse nation. Within the vast array of Christian denominations and sects, there is a wide variety of belief and practice. Moreover, substantial segments of our population adhere to non-Christian religion or to no religion. Respect for the different religious choices of the people of this country requires that government neither place its stamp of approval on any particular religious practice, nor appear to take a stand on any religious question. In a world frequently torn by religious factionalism and the violence tragically associated with political division along religious lines, our nation's position of governmental neutrality on religious matters stands as an illuminating example of the true meaning of freedom and tolerance." (53 C.3d 883.)

Three concurring opinions were filed. The first reluctantly concurs in the judgment (53 C.3d 884), but notes that the law is in a state of flux (53 C.3d 885); discusses the "benign" recognition of religion as a part of American culture (e.g., legislative chaplains, Memorial Day of prayer, the motto "In God We Trust") (53 C.3d 890); and argues that the state constitutional provisions should not have been considered at this time (53 C.3d 902). The second opinion of two justices argues that federal cases are merely illustrative, and that our state constitutional provisions control and are validated by the district's religious invocations. (53 C.3d 905.) The third concurring opinion (53 C.3d 914) concurs in the judgment, but "reluctantly," "with the hope and expectation that the high court will soon endorse another view." (53 C.3d 918.) (For U.S. Supreme Court decision, see infra, §534.)

Two justices dissented separately. (53 C.3d 918, 939.) (See 23 Pacific L. J. 1449; 19 Pepperdine L. Rev. 749; 40 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 253.)

2. United States Supreme Court Decision.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 534

[§ 534] United States Supreme Court Decision.

Lee v. Weisman (1992) 505 U.S. 577, 112 S.Ct. 2649, 120 L.Ed.2d 467, involved a practice of the Superintendent of Schools of the city of Providence, Rhode Island, permitting school principals in middle schools and high schools to invite members of the clergy to offer invocation and benediction prayers as part of the formal graduation ceremonies. Weisman, acting for himself and his daughter, a 14-year-old middle school student, objected to any prayers at her graduation. Despite the objection, the school principal invited a rabbi who delivered an invocation and a benediction, in conformity with the principal's directive that it should be nonsectarian. The graduation ceremony was held on school premises.

In a proceeding in the federal district court the practice was held violative of the Establishment Clause; the Court of Appeals affirmed, and the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeals. The following excerpts from the lead opinion make clear the issue and the nature and scope of the holding:

(a) "These dominant facts mark and control the confines of our decision: State officials direct the performance of a formal religious exercise at promotional and graduation ceremonies for secondary schools. Even for those students who object to the religious exercise, their attendance and participation in the state-sponsored religious activity are in a fair and real sense obligatory, though the school district does not require attendance as a condition for receipt of the diploma." (112 S.Ct. 2655, 120 L.Ed.2d 480.)

(b) "We can decide the case without reconsidering the general constitutional framework by which public schools' efforts to accommodate religion are measured. ... The government involvement with religious activity in this case is pervasive, to the point of creating a state-sponsored and state-directed religious exercise in a public school." (112 S.Ct. 2655, 120 L.Ed.2d 480.)

(c) The school argued that its directions for the content of the prayers were a good faith attempt to remove sectarianism from the ceremony. However: "The question is not the good faith of the school in attempting to make the prayer acceptable to most persons, but the legitimacy of its undertaking that enterprise at all when the object is to produce a prayer to be used in a formal religious exercise which students, for all practical purposes, are obliged to attend." (112 S.Ct. 2656, 120 L.Ed.2d 481, 482.)

(d) "We are asked to recognize the existence of a practice of nonsectarian prayer, prayer within the embrace of what is known as the Judeo-Christian tradition, prayer which is more acceptable than one which, for example, makes explicit references to the God of Israel, or to Jesus Christ, or to a patron saint. ... If common ground can be defined which permits once conflicting faiths to express the shared conviction that there is an ethic and a morality which transcends human invention, the sense of community and purpose sought by all decent societies might be advanced. But though the First Amendment does not allow the government to stifle prayers which aspire to these ends, neither does it permit the government to undertake that task for itself." (112 S.Ct. 2656, 120 L.Ed.2d 482.) These concerns have particular application in the case of school officials. "The suggestion that government may establish an official or civic religion as a means of avoiding the establishment of a religion with more specific creeds strikes us as a contradiction that cannot be accepted." (112 S.Ct. 2657, 120 L.Ed.2d 483.)

(e) "The First Amendment protects speech and religion by quite different mechanisms. Speech is protected by insuring its full expression even when the government participates, for the very object of some of our most important speech is to persuade the government to adopt an idea as its own. ... The method for protecting freedom of worship and freedom of conscience in religious matters is quite the reverse. In religious debate or expression the government is not a prime participant, for the Framers deemed religious establishment antithetical to the freedom of all. The Free Exercise Clause embraces a freedom of conscience and worship that has close parallels in the speech provisions of the First Amendment, but the Establishment Clause is a specific prohibition on forms of state intervention in religious affairs with no precise counterpart in the speech provisions. ... The explanation lies in the lesson of history that was and is the inspiration for the Establishment Clause, the lesson that in the hands of government what might begin as a tolerant expression of religious views may end in a policy to indoctrinate and coerce. A state-created orthodoxy puts at grave risk that freedom of belief and conscience which are the sole assurance that religious faith is real, not imposed." (112 S.Ct. 2658, 120 L.Ed.2d 483.)

(f) "The injury caused by the government's action ... is that the State, in a school setting, in effect required participation in a religious exercise. ... Assuming, as we must, that the prayers were offensive to the student and the parent who now object, the intrusion was both real and, in the context of a secondary school, a violation of the objectors' rights. That the intrusion was in the course of promulgating religion that sought to be civic or nonsectarian rather than pertaining to one sect does not lessen the offense or isolation to the objectors. At best it narrows their number, at worst increases their sense of isolation and affront." (112 S.Ct. 2659, 120 L.Ed.2d 485.)

(g) "Inherent differences between the public school system and a session of a State Legislature distinguish this case from Marsh v. Chambers. ... The atmosphere at the opening of a session of a state legislature where adults are free to enter and leave with little comment and for any number of reasons cannot compare with the constraining potential of the one school event most important for the student to attend." (112 S.Ct. 2660, 120 L.Ed.2d 487, referring to Marsh v. Chambers (1983) 463 U.S. 783, 103 S.Ct. 3330, 77 L.Ed.2d 1019, supra, §508.)

(h) "We do not hold that every state action implicating religion is invalid if one or a few citizens find it offensive. People may take offense at all manner of religious as well as nonreligious messages, but offense alone does not in every case show a violation. We know too that sometimes to endure social isolation or even anger may be the price of conscience or nonconformity. But, by any reading of our cases, the conformity required of the student in this case was too high an exaction to withstand the test of the Establishment Clause." (112 S.Ct. 2661, 120 L.Ed.2d 487.)

Three justices concurred in a separate opinion (112 S.Ct. 2661, 120 L.Ed.2d 488); three also concurred in another separate opinion (112 S.Ct. 2667, 120 L.Ed.2d 495); and four justices joined in a dissenting opinion (112 S.Ct. 2678, 120 L.Ed.2d 509). 3. Instruction on Evolution.

[§ 535] Instruction on Evolution.

The Arkansas "anti-evolution" statute of 1928, similar to the Tennessee "monkey law" of the famous Scopes case, made it unlawful for a teacher in a state-supported school or university to teach the theory that mankind ascended or descended from a lower order of animals. In Epperson v. Arkansas (1968) 393 U.S. 97, 89 S.Ct. 266, 21 L.Ed.2d 228, the statute was held void. The state's undoubted right to prescribe curriculum does not carry with it the right to prohibit teaching of a scientific theory where sectarian conviction is the reason for the law. (89 S.Ct. 272, 21 L.Ed.2d 236.) (See 5 Rotunda, §21.5(d); 2 Tribe, §14-9.)

In Edwards v. Aguillard (1987) 482 U.S. 578, 107 S.Ct. 2573, 96 L.Ed.2d 510, Louisiana's "Balanced Treatment for Creation-Science and Evolution-Science in Public School Instruction" Act was held unconstitutional. The statute forbade the teaching of the theory of evolution in public schools unless accompanied by instruction in "creation science." No school was required to teach evolution or creation science, but if either subject was taught, the other also had to be taught. Louisiana officials defended on the ground that the legislative purpose was to protect the secular interest of academic freedom. The Supreme Court rejected the defense and held that the Establishment Clause was violated.

(a) "The Court has been particularly vigilant in monitoring compliance with the Establishment Clause in elementary and secondary schools. Families entrust public schools with the education of their children, but condition their trust on the understanding that the classroom will not purposely be used to advance religious views that may conflict with the private beliefs of the student and his or her family. Students in such institutions are impressionable and their attendance is involuntary." (107 S.Ct. 2577, 96 L.Ed.2d 519.)

(b) No clear secular purpose has been identified. Although its stated purpose is to protect academic freedom, and the Legislature may have had in mind the basic concept of fairness, the Act does not further this purpose. "The goal of providing a more comprehensive science curriculum is not furthered either by outlawing the teaching of evolution or by requiring the teaching of creation science." (107 S.Ct. 2579, 96 L.Ed.2d 521.)

(c) The legislative history shows that the purpose of the Act's sponsor was to narrow the science curriculum. If the purpose was solely to maximize the comprehensiveness and effectiveness of science instruction, it would have encouraged the teaching of all scientific theories about the origins of humankind. But under the Act, teachers who were once free to teach any and all facets of this subject are now unable to do so; and the Court of Appeals correctly concluded that the purpose was to discredit evolution by counterbalancing its teaching with the teaching of creation science. (107 S.Ct. 2580, 96 L.Ed.2d 522.) "The legislative history documents that the Act's primary purpose was to change the science curriculum of public schools in order to provide persuasive advantage to a particular religious doctrine that rejects the factual basis of evolution in its entirety." (107 S.Ct. 2582, 96 L.Ed.2d 524.)

(d) "We do not imply that a legislature could never require that scientific critiques of prevailing scientific theories be taught. ... [T]eaching a variety of scientific theories about the origins of humankind to schoolchildren might be validly done with the clear secular intent of enhancing the effectiveness of science instruction." (107 S.Ct. 2582, 96 L.Ed.2d 525.)

Two justices joined in a strong dissent. (107 S.Ct. 2591, 96 L.Ed.2d 536.) (See 101 Harv. L. Rev. 189 [Edwards]; 25 San Diego L. Rev. 829 [same]; 49 Stanf. L. Rev. 439 [constitutionality of teaching "intelligent design" in public schools].)

4. Flag Salute.

[§ 536] Flag Salute.

A challenging problem in this field arose in connection with the requirement by school boards of a ceremony involving a pledge and salute to the national flag by school children. Members of the sect of Jehovah's Witnesses objected that this violated their religious convictions, based on a literal interpretation of the scriptural prohibition against worship of "any graven image."

In Minersville School Dist. v. Gobitis (1940) 310 U.S. 586, 60 S.Ct. 1010, 84 L.Ed. 1375, the Court held the requirement valid, expressing the view that the conflicting interest of freedom and national unity must be reconciled, and that training children in patriotism was a matter of educational policy, within the legislative authority. But in West Virginia State Bd. of Education v. Barnette (1943) 319 U.S. 624, 63 S.Ct. 1178, 87 L.Ed. 1628, Gobitis was overruled and the principle declared that the object of national unity does not justify compulsory acceptance of a belief, symbolized by the pledge and salute.

The court did not rest its opinion on freedom of religion; it held invalid the attempt to secure national unity by compelling any kind of belief. "If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by work or act their faith therein. If there are any circumstances which permit an exception, they do not now occur to us." (63 S.Ct. 1187, 87 L.Ed. 1639.) (See 5 Rotunda, §21.7.)

5. Creation of Public School District for Religious Community.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 537

[§ 537] Creation of Public School District for Religious Community.

Board of Education of Kiryas Joel Village School Dist. v. Grumet (1994) 512 U.S. 687, 114 S.Ct. 2481, 129 L.Ed.2d 546, involved the village of Kiryas Joel, a religious enclave of Satmar Hasidim who practiced a strict form of Judaism. The village's boundaries had been drawn under New York's general incorporation law to include only the area inhabited by the Satmars. The village's children were educated in private religious schools, but those schools did not offer any distinctive services to handicapped children, and village residents were dissatisfied with the special education services offered in public schools outside the village. The New York Legislature, in 1989, passed a special law creating a separate school district following village lines, and the village school district then established a special education program for handicapped children. Various parties brought an action challenging the statute, and the state trial and appellate courts held that the statute was an unconstitutional establishment of religion. Held, "[b]ecause this unusual act is tantamount to an allocation of political power on a religious criterion and neither presupposes nor requires governmental impartiality toward religion, we hold that it violates the prohibition against establishment." (114 S.Ct. 2484, 129 L.Ed.2d 552.)

(a) The case-specific nature of the legislature's action in creating this district for a religious community leaves the court with no way to review the action for the purpose of insuring that government does not prefer one religion to another, or religion to irreligion. Kiryas Joel did not receive its new governmental authority as one of many communities eligible for equal treatment under a general law, and there is no assurance that the next similarly situated group will also receive a school district. (114 S.Ct. 2491, 129 L.Ed.2d 560, 561.)

(b) The Constitution permits the state to accommodate religious needs by alleviating special burdens. However, accommodation has limits, and the adjustment made here is one the cases do not permit. (114 S.Ct. 2492, 129 L.Ed.2d 562.) "Petitioners' proposed accommodation singles out a particular religious sect for special treatment, and whatever the limits of permissible legislative accommodations may be, ... it is clear that neutrality as among religions must be honored." (114 S.Ct. 2493, 129 L.Ed.2d 563.)

(c) "[W]e are clearly constrained to conclude that the statute before us fails the test of neutrality. It delegates a power this Court has said 'ranks at the very apex of the function of a State,' ... to an electorate defined by common religious belief and practice, in a manner that fails to foreclose religious favoritism. It therefore crosses the line from permissible accommodation to impermissible establishment." (114 S.Ct. 2494, 129 L.Ed.2d 565.)

Three justices dissented, arguing that the statute should be presumed valid, and that if it was intended to create a special arrangement because of the villagers' religion, it was a permissible accommodation. (114 S.Ct. 2505, 129 L.Ed.2d 579.) (See 108 Harv. L. Rev. 250; 16 J. Juvenile Law 248; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1599; 22 Western State L. Rev. 409.)

The concept of separation of church and state (supra, §505) has been tested and applied in a number of important cases dealing with aid to private schools. (See *Wilson v. In Everson v. Board of Education of Ewing Township (1947) 330 U.S. 1, 67 S.Ct. 504, 91 L.Ed. 711, a New Jersey statute allowed local school districts to provide for transportation of children to and from schools, including nonprofit private schools. Pursuant to the statute, defendant board authorized reimbursement to parents of money paid for fares on buses operated by the local transportation system. Plaintiff taxpayer challenged the constitutionality of these payments to parents of children attending Catholic parochial schools. Held, the expenditure was valid.

(a) It was not a prohibited use of tax money for a private purpose (see 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §16). (67 S.Ct. 510, 91 L.Ed. 718.)

(b) It did not "breach the wall" of separation between church and state because parochial schools were accredited under the state's compulsory education laws, and protection of the children attending them from the hazards of traffic was justifiable under the same considerations that support police and fire protection and other governmental services. 7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 540

[§ 540] United States Supreme Court Decisions.

Board of Education of Cen. School Dist. No. 1 v. Allen (1968) 392 U.S. 236, 88 S.Ct. 1923, 20 L.Ed.2d 1060, upheld a New York statute authorizing the lending of textbooks to public and private school students. The test, said the Court, is the purpose and primary effect of the law.

(a) Its stated purpose is furtherance of educational opportunities of the young. Its effect is to give financial benefits to parents and children, not to schools. Perhaps the law makes it more likely that some children will choose to attend parochial school, but the same was true of paid bus fares in Everson v. Board of Education of Ewing Township (1947) 330 U.S. 1, 67 S.Ct. 504, 91 L.Ed. 711, supra, §539. (88 S.Ct. 1926, 20 L.Ed.2d 1065.)

(b) As to the contention that books are part of the teaching process, so that the law aids in teaching religion: Secular teaching in a private school can be distinct from religious education, and parochial schools perform the task of secular education. (88 S.Ct. 1928, 20 L.Ed.2d 1066.)

Two dissenting justices saw nothing but trouble ahead: (1) The law is a "flat, flagrant, open violation" of the Constitution, totally unsupported by any case. Bus or streetcar fares of all children, lunches, police protection, etc., are distinct from books, the essential tool of education. Tax funds cannot be used to buy books, erect buildings, or pay teachers of private schools. (88 S.Ct. 1931, 20 L.Ed.2d 1069.) (2) The inevitable result is that parochial school heads will seek books on economics, history, embryology, etc., slanted to religious ideas. (88 S.Ct. 1933, 20 L.Ed.2d 1072.) (3) "[D]espite transparent camouflage that the books are furnished to students, the reality is that they are selected and their use is prescribed by the sectarian authorities." The program is "hand-tailored to satisfy the specific needs of sectarian schools." (88 S.Ct. 1941, 20 L.Ed.2d 1081.) (See Meek v. Pittenger (1975) 421 U.S. 349, 95 S.Ct. 1753, 1760, 44 L.Ed.2d 217, 230 [following Allen]; Wolman v. Walter (1977) 433 U.S. 229, 97 S.Ct. 2593, 2600, 53 L.Ed.2d 714, 726 [following Allen and Meek]; 5 Rotunda, §21.4(a); 2 Tribe, §14-10; 82 Harv. L. Rev. 172; 5 Pepperdine L. Rev. 573; cf. Norwood v. Harrison (1973) 413 U.S. 455, 93 S.Ct. 2804, 2813, 37 L.Ed.2d 723, 735 [Mississippi plan for loan of state-purchased books to private schools was valid only with certification procedure ensuring against racial and religious discrimination].)

by parochial schools was challenged as a violation of the Establishment Clause. Under Chapter 2 (20 U.S.C., §7301 et seq.), the federal Government distributes funds to state and local governmental agencies, which then lend educational materials and equipment to public and private schools based on the enrollment of each participating school. Held, Chapter 2 is not an establishment of religion.

(a) Conflict in case law. Conflict in the case law requires clarification. In Meek v. Pittenger and Wolman v. Walter, supra, the Court held that providing the same sorts of materials involved here was unconstitutional, although it did uphold providing textbooks. (120 S.Ct. 2538, 147 L.Ed.2d 672.) On the other hand, providing a sign language interpreter to a deaf student at a Catholic school was upheld in Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills School Dist. (1993) 509 U.S. 1, 113 S.Ct. 2462, 125 L.Ed.2d 1, infra, §549. (120 S.Ct. 2538, 147 L.Ed.2d 672.) Providing public employees to teach remedial classes at private schools, including religious schools, was upheld in Agostini v. Felton (1997) 521 U.S. 203, 117 S.Ct. 1997, 138 L.Ed.2d 391, infra, §545. (120 S.Ct. 2539, 147 L.Ed.2d 673.) "Meek and Wolman are anomalies in our case law. We therefore conclude that they are no longer good law." (120 S.Ct. 2540, 147 L.Ed.2d 675.)

(b) Principle of neutrality. "[T]he question whether governmental aid to religious schools results in governmental indoctrination is ultimately a question whether any religious indoctrination that occurs in those schools could reasonably be attributed to governmental action." (120 S.Ct. 2541, 147 L.Ed.2d 675.) In determining whether there is any state indoctrination, "we have consistently turned to the principle of neutrality, upholding aid that is offered to a broad range of groups or persons without regard to their religion." (120 S.Ct. 2541, 147 L.Ed.2d 675.) Thus, "if the government, seeking to further some legitimate secular purpose, offers aid on the same terms, without regard to religion, to all who adequately further that purpose, ... then it is fair to say that any aid going to a religious recipient only has the effect of furthering that secular purpose. The government, in crafting such an aid program, has had to conclude that a given level of aid is necessary to further that purpose among secular recipients and has provided no more than that same level to religious recipients." (120 S.Ct. 2541, 147 L.Ed.2d 676.)

(c) Private choices of individuals. It is important whether "any governmental aid that goes to a religious institution does so 'only as a result of the genuinely independent and private actions of individuals.'" (120 S.Ct. 2541, 147 L.Ed.2d 676, quoting Agostini.) "For if numerous private choices, rather than the single choice of a government, determine the distribution of aid pursuant to neutral eligibility criteria, then a government cannot, or at least cannot easily, grant special favors that might lead to a religious establishment. Private choice also helps guarantee neutrality by mitigating the preference for pre-existing recipients that is arguably inherent in any governmental aid program, ... and that could lead to a program inadvertently favoring one religion or favoring religious private schools in general over nonreligious ones." (120 S.Ct. 2541, 147 L.Ed.2d 676.)

(d) No incentive to undertake religious indoctrination. "[S]imply because an aid program offers private schools, and thus religious schools, a benefit that they did not previously receive does not mean that the program, by reducing the cost of securing a religious education, creates, under Agostini's second criterion, an 'incentive' for parents to choose such an education for their children. For any aid will have some such effect." (120 S.Ct. 2543, 147 L.Ed.2d 679.)

(e) Diversion of aid to religious use. The fact that Chapter 2 aid may be divertible to a religious use is not determinative. (120 S.Ct. 2547, 147 L.Ed.2d 682.) The issue is "whether the aid itself has an impermissible content. Where the aid would be suitable for use in a public school, it is also suitable for use in any private school. Similarly, the prohibition against the government providing impermissible content resolves the Establishment Clause concerns that exist if aid is actually diverted to religious uses." (120 S.Ct. 2548, 147 L.Ed.2d 684.)

Two justices concurred, questioning the plurality's (1) treatment of neutrality as coming close to singular importance in future adjudications on challenges to school aid, and (2) approval of actual diversion of governmental aid to religious indoctrination, which was unnecessary to decide here. (120 S.Ct. 2556, 147 L.Ed.2d 693.) Three justices joined in a lengthy dissent (120 S.Ct. 2572, 147 L.Ed.2d 713), objecting to the plurality's espousing "a new conception of neutrality as a practically sufficient test of constitutionality that would ... eliminate enquiry into a law's effects." (120 S.Ct. 2573, 147 L.Ed.2d 714.) (See 114 Harv. L. Rev. 239 [Mitchell v. Helms]; 22 J. Juvenile Law 180 [same]; 28 Pepperdine L. Rev. 681 [State Action and the Supreme Court's Emerging Consensus on the Line Between Establishment and Private Religious Expression].)

[§ 541] California Decisions.

Former Educ.C. 60315 authorized the Superintendent of Public Instruction to lend textbooks used in the public schools to students attending nonprofit, nonpublic schools. In California Teachers Assn. v. Riles (1981) 29 C.3d 794, 176 C.R. 300, 632 P.2d 953, the court reviewed the U.S. Supreme Court decisions at length (29 C.3d 801 et seq.) and found them irreconcilable (29 C.3d 807 et seq.). The two prior California cases dealing with our own Constitution (Bowker v. Baker (1946) 73 C.A.2d 653, 167 P.2d 256, and California Educational Facilities Authority v. Priest (1974) 12 C.3d 593, 116 C.R. 361, 526 P.2d 513, infra, §548) were examined (29 C.3d 804, 813, footnote 16), and the statute was held violative of Cal. Const., Art. IX, §8 (prohibiting appropriation of public money for support of sectarian schools) and Cal. Const., Art. XVI, §5 (prohibiting appropriation in aid of sectarian purpose).

"By providing textbooks at public expense, the loan program appropriates money to advance the education function of the school. ... In this respect the program is distinguishable from 'generalized services government might provide to schools in common with others', ... such as fire and police protection, the maintenance of roads and sidewalks, and similar public services. These services, unlike education, have no doctrinal content, and they do not advance the essential objective of the sectarian school, which is the education of the child." (29 C.3d 811.) And the California constitutional provisions "do not confine their prohibition against financing sectarian schools in whole or in part to support for their religious teaching function, as distinguished from secular instruction." (29 C.3d 812.) (See 70 Cal. L. Rev. 959 [Riles]; 10 Hastings Const. L. Q. 433 [same].)

[§ 542] Development of Law.

The approval of aid in the form of furnishing transportation and lending textbooks (see supra, §539 et seq.) inspired legislative efforts to offer more direct forms of financial assistance to private schools. (See 77 Harv. L. Rev. 1353; 81 Harv. L. Rev. 513, 1465; 82 Harv. L. Rev. 168; 56 Cal. L. Rev. 260; 24 Santa Clara L. Rev. 947 [constitutionality of former statute authorizing private school pupils to enroll in public vocational shop and science classes].) In a series of decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court, most of these efforts initially were held invalid. (See Meek v. Pittenger (1975) 421 U.S. 349, 95 S.Ct. 1753, 1764, 44 L.Ed.2d 217, 232 [Pennsylvania statute providing for loan of instructional material and equipment; invalid]; Wolman v. Walter (1977) 433 U.S. 229, 97 S.Ct. 2593, 2607, 2608, 53 L.Ed.2d 714, 734, 735 [following Meek; instructional materials and equipment, field trips; invalid].) However, more recently the Court approved providing a sign language interpreter to a deaf student at a Catholic school (see Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills School Dist. (1993) 509 U.S. 1, 113 S.Ct. 2462, 125 L.Ed.2d 1, infra, §549) and providing public employees to teach remedial classes at private, including religious, schools (see Agostini v. Helms (2000) 530 U.S. 793, 120 S.Ct. 2530, 2540, 147 L.Ed.2d 660, 675, supra, §540 [upholding receipt of Chapter 2 federal aid by parochial schools].)

[§ 543] Money for Salaries and Books.

In Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745, Rhode Island and Pennsylvania adopted programs for furnishing money to secondary and elementary schools for teachers' salaries, textbooks, and instructional materials. Under both statutes, the aid was given to church-related schools, though only for "secular" instruction. Held, the statutes were unconstitutional. Teachers in parochial schools cannot in practice remain neutral in respect of teaching religious doctrine. (91 S.Ct. 2114, 2117, 29 L.Ed.2d 761, 673.) (See 85 Harv. L. Rev. 167 [Lemon]; 23 Hastings L. J. 966 [same]; 24 Stanf. L. Rev. 687 [same]; for Lemon three-part test to determine validity of statutes giving public aid to sectarian educational institutions, see supra, §507.)

Former Educ.C. 69790 et seq., authorizing annual payments of $ 12,000 to private colleges and universities maintaining medical schools for each student enrolled in the program, was held unconstitutional in Board of Trustees v. Cory (1978) 79 C.A.3d 661, 145 C.R. 136. The statute was found to be in direct conflict with Cal. Const., Art. IX, §8 (79 C.A.3d 664, 666); and California Educational Facilities Authority v. Priest (1974) 12 C.3d 593, 116 C.R. 361, 526 P.2d 513, infra, §548, was distinguished on the ground that a subsidy to the school cannot be characterized as an "incidental" benefit (79 C.A.3d 667).

c. Grants for Special Purposes.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 544

[§ 544] Grants for Special Purposes.

(1) Grants for Maintenance and Repair. The New York statute considered in Committee for Public Education & Religious Liberty v. Nyquist (1973) 413 U.S. 756, 93 S.Ct. 2955, 37 L.Ed.2d 948, infra, §546, provided funds to private elementary and secondary schools for "maintenance and repair" of school facilities and equipment. Held, the statute was unconstitutional. Pointing out that virtually all of the schools involved were parochial, and that it was impossible to restrict payments to upkeep of facilities used exclusively for secular purposes (93 S.Ct. 2966, 37 L.Ed.2d 963), the Court concluded that the inevitable effect of the program was "to subsidize and advance the religious mission of sectarian schools." (93 S.Ct. 2969, 37 L.Ed.2d 967.)

(2) Grant for Testing and Record Keeping. In Levitt v. Committee for Public Education & Religious Liberty (1973) 413 U.S. 472, 93 S.Ct. 2814, 37 L.Ed.2d 736, a New York statute provided funds to private schools for expenses of tests and examinations of pupils, and maintenance of records of pupil enrollment, health, and personnel qualifications and characteristics. Held, the statute was subject to the same constitutional objections as in Nyquist. Despite the integral role of testing in the teaching process, "no attempt is made under the statute, and no means are available, to assure that internally prepared tests are free of religious instructions." (93 S.Ct. 2819, 37 L.Ed.2d 742.) (Cf. Committee for Public Education & Religious Liberty v. Regan (1980) 444 U.S. 646, 100 S.Ct. 840, 848, 63 L.Ed.2d 94, 107 [upholding New York statute authorizing use of public funds to reimburse private schools for performing state-mandated testing and reporting services].)

(3) Noncategorical Grants. In Roemer v. Board of Public Works of Maryland (1976) 426 U.S. 736, 96 S.Ct. 2337, 49 L.Ed.2d 179, 192, a plurality opinion upheld a state statute providing for annual noncategorical grants to private colleges, including religiously affiliated institutions, subject to the restriction that the funds not be used for "sectarian purposes." (See 90 Harv. L. Rev. 133.)

d. Shared Time of Public School Teacher.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 545

[§ 545] Shared Time of Public School Teacher.

(1) Earlier Cases. School Dist. of Grand Rapids v. Ball (1985) 473 U.S. 373, 105 S.Ct. 3216, 87 L.Ed.2d 267, held that the Community Education and Shared Time programs of a Michigan school district violated the Establishment Clause. Each program provided classes for nonpublic school students financed by the public school system, taught by teachers hired by the public school system, and conducted in leased classrooms in the nonpublic schools, most of which were sectarian religious schools. The secular purpose of the instruction was not challenged. But the religious school students spend their school day moving between "religious-school" and "public-school" classes, both conducted in the same religious-school building and largely composed of students who are adherents of the same denomination.

"[T]he challenged programs have the effect of promoting religion in three ways. The state-paid instructors, influenced by the pervasively sectarian nature of the religious schools in which they work, may subtly or overtly indoctrinate the students in particular religious tenets at public expense. The symbolic union of church and state inherent in the provision of secular, state-provided instruction in the religious school buildings threatens to convey a message of state support for religion to students and to the general public. Finally, the programs in effect subsidize the religious functions of the parochial schools by taking over a substantial portion of their responsibility for teaching secular subjects." (105 S.Ct. 3230, 87 L.Ed.2d 286.)

Two justices dissented (105 S.Ct. 3231, 87 L.Ed.2d 288), and two others concurred in part and dissented in part (105 S.Ct. 3230, 87 L.Ed.2d 287). (See companion case of Aguilar v. Felton (1985) 473 U.S. 402, 105 S.Ct. 3232, 87 L.Ed.2d 290; 99 Harv. L. Rev. 173.)

(2) Prior Cases Overruled. In Agostini v. Felton (1997) 521 U.S. 203, 117 S.Ct. 1997, 138 L.Ed.2d 391, the Court overruled its prior holding in Aguilar, supra, which barred sending public school teachers into parochial schools to provide remedial education to disadvantaged children pursuant to a congressionally mandated program. Plaintiffs (the Board of Education and a new group of parents of parochial school students), bound by the injunction in Aguilar, sought relief based on inconsistent, intervening Establishment Clause jurisprudence. The Court also overruled that portion of its holding in Grand Rapids, addressing its shared time program. (117 S.Ct. 2016, 138 L.Ed.2d 422.)

(a) Change in criteria used. "Our more recent cases have undermined the assumptions on which Grand Rapids and Aguilar relied. To be sure, the general principles we use to evaluate whether government aid violates the Establishment Clause have not changed since Aguilar was decided. ... What has changed ... is our understanding of the criteria used to assess whether aid to religion has an impermissible effect." (117 S.Ct. 2010, 138 L.Ed.2d 414.) First, the Court has abandoned the presumption "that the placement of public employees on parochial school grounds inevitably results in the impermissible effect of state-sponsored indoctrination or constitutes a symbolic union between government and religion." (117 S.Ct. 2010, 138 L.Ed.2d 414, discussing Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills School Dist. (1993) 509 U.S. 1, 113 S.Ct. 2462, 125 L.Ed.2d 1, infra, §549.) Second, the Court has "departed from the rule relied on in Grand Rapids that all government aid that directly aids the educational function of religious schools is invalid." (117 S.Ct. 2010, 138 L.Ed.2d 415, discussing Witters v. Washington Dept. of Services for the Blind (1986) 474 U.S. 481, 106 S.Ct. 748, 88 L.Ed.2d 846, infra, §549.)

(b) No impermissible financing of religion. A program placing full-time public employees on parochial campuses to provide federally mandated remedial instruction does not impermissibly finance religious indoctrination. The program makes aid available only to eligible students, which aid is supplemental to the regular curricula, and does not relieve "sectarian schools of costs they otherwise would have borne in educating their students." (117 S.Ct. 2013, 138 L.Ed.2d 417, quoting Zobrest.)

(c) No incentive to modify religious beliefs. Neither Grand Rapids nor Aguilar gave weight to the neutral, secular criteria, that neither favor nor disfavor religion, under which aid is allocated, i.e., aid is available to both religious and secular beneficiaries on a nondiscriminatory basis. Therefore, the program does not give aid recipients any incentive to modify their religious beliefs or practices to obtain the program's services. (117 S.Ct. 2014, 138 L.Ed.2d 419, 420.)

(d) No excessive entanglement between Church and State. The Court's finding of "excessive" entanglement in Aguilar rested on three grounds: (a) the program would require "pervasive monitoring by public authorities" to ensure that employees did not inculcate religion; (b) it required "administrative cooperation" between the Board and parochial schools; and (c) it might increase the dangers of "political divisiveness." The last two considerations are insufficient by themselves to create an "excessive" entanglement; they are present no matter where the services are offered, and no court has held that they cannot be offered off campus. The assumption underlying the first consideration has been undermined. "In Aguilar, the Court presumed that full-time public employees on parochial school grounds would be tempted to inculcate religion, despite the ethical standards they were required to uphold. Because of this risk pervasive monitoring would be required. But after Zobrest we no longer presume that public employees will inculcate religion simply because they happen to be in a sectarian environment. ... There is no suggestion in the record before us that unannounced monthly visits of public supervisors are insufficient to prevent or to detect inculcation of religion by public employees." (117 S.Ct. 2015, 2016, 138 L.Ed.2d 421.)

Four justices dissented in two separate opinions. (117 S.Ct. 2019, 2026, 138 L.Ed.2d 425, 434.) (See 111 Harv. L. Rev. 279 [Agostini]; 26 Pepperdine L. Rev. 407 [same]; 46 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 343 [same]; 20 J. Juvenile Law 60 [same].)

4. Financial Assistance.

e. Tuition Reimbursement.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 546

[§ 546] In General.

The New York statute considered in Committee for Public Education & Religious Liberty v. Nyquist (1973) 413 U.S. 756, 93 S.Ct. 2955, 37 L.Ed.2d 948, established a partial tuition reimbursement plan for low-income parents of children attending private elementary or secondary schools. This was held unconstitutional. "By reimbursing parents for a portion of their tuition bill, the State seeks to relieve their financial burdens sufficiently to assure that they continue to have the option to send their children to religion-oriented schools. And while the other purposes for that aid--to perpetuate a pluralistic educational environment and to protect the fiscal integrity of overburdened public schools--are certainly unexceptionable, the effect of the aid is unmistakably to provide desired financial support for nonpublic, sectarian institutions." (93 S.Ct. 2971, 37 L.Ed.2d 969.) The form of the grant--reimbursement for tuition paid with no condition attached to use of the funds, rather than a direct subsidy in advance for the special purpose--is immaterial; i.e., the absence of any element of coercion to send children to sectarian schools does not avoid the constitutional ban. "[I]f the grants are offered as an incentive to parents to send their children to sectarian schools by making unrestricted cash payments to them, the Establishment Clause is violated whether or not the actual dollars given eventually find their way into the sectarian institutions. Whether the grant is labeled a reimbursement, a reward or a subsidy, its substantive impact is still the same." (93 S.Ct. 2972, 37 L.Ed.2d 970.)

In Sloan v. Lemon (1973) 413 U.S. 825, 93 S.Ct. 2982, 2986, 37 L.Ed.2d 939, 944, the Court followed Nyquist in invalidating a similar tuition reimbursement program established by Pennsylvania law.

However, in Zelman v. Simmons-Harris (2002) 536 U.S. 639, 122 S.Ct. 2460, 153 L.Ed.2d 604, the Court upheld an Ohio tuition aid program providing two forms of aid to poor students in a city with a failing public school system. Tuition aid is based on financial need, with the poorest students being given priority and allotted the most aid. Parents choose where to spend the aid, be it in public or private, or secular or sectarian schools. Tutorial aid is provided to children who remain in public schools. The aid is part of a larger program to improve the city's schools, which includes community schools run by their own school boards and public magnet schools that emphasize particular subjects. Per pupil funding for these schools is roughly twice the amount allotted to schools participating in the tuition aid program. Held, the program does not have the "effect" of advancing religion in violation of the Establishment Clause.

(a) Past cases have made it "clear that where a government aid program is neutral with respect to religion, and provides assistance directly to a broad class of citizens who, in turn, direct government aid to religious schools wholly as a result of their own genuine and independent private choice, the program is not readily subject to challenge under the Establishment Clause." (122 S.Ct. 2467, 153 L.Ed.2d 616.) The program here is neutral towards religion. It is part of a state program to aid all children in a failed school district. The program is open to all schools located within the district. Even adjacent schools may participate. Benefits are available "on neutral terms with no reference to religion." The only preference in the program is for low-income families, who are given priority for admission and greater financial assistance. (122 S.Ct. 2467, 2468, 153 L.Ed.2d 617.)

(b) The fact that 96% of the scholarship recipients here enrolled in religious schools is irrelevant. "The constitutionality of a neutral educational aid program simply does not turn on whether and why, in a particular area, at a particular time, most private schools are run by religious organizations, or most recipients choose to use the aid at a religious school." (122 S.Ct. 2470, 153 L.Ed.2d 620.) Further, this 96% figure does not include the nearly 15,000 children enrolled in alternative community and magnet schools. (122 S.Ct. 2470, 153 L.Ed.2d 621.)

(c) Nyquist "does not govern neutral educational assistance programs that, like the program here, offer aid directly to a broad class of individual recipients defined without regard to religion." (122 S.Ct. 2472, 153 L.Ed.2d 623.)

Two justices concurred in separate opinions (122 S.Ct. 2473, 2480, 153 L.Ed.2d 623, 632), and four justices dissented in three opinions (122 S.Ct. 2484, 2485, 2502, 153 L.Ed.2d 637, 638, 658.) 7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 547

[§ 547] State Income Tax Deduction.

Another part of the New York statutory program considered in Committee for Public Education & Religious Liberty v. Nyquist (1973) 413 U.S. 756, 93 S.Ct. 2955, 37 L.Ed.2d 948, supra, §546, gave tax relief to parents who could not qualify for tuition reimbursement. They were permitted to deduct a stipulated sum from adjusted gross income for each child attending a private school; the amount of the deduction was based on taxable income, and not related to the amount of tuition actually paid. This was held unconstitutional, for its purpose and effect were the same as those of the tuition reimbursement plan. The historically approved tax exemption for church property is distinguishable. Exemption of church property confers an indirect benefit, but not for the purpose of supporting or subsidizing churches; its object was rather "to minimize involvement and entanglement between Church and State," and its elimination would involve the government in tax valuation of church property, tax liens, tax foreclosures, and other conflicts. (93 S.Ct. 2976, 37 L.Ed.2d 974, quoting Walz v. Tax Com. of New York (1970) 397 U.S. 664, 90 S.Ct. 1409, 25 L.Ed.2d 697.) Granting tax benefits, on the other hand, "would tend to increase rather than limit the involvement between Church and State." (93 S.Ct. 2976, 37 L.Ed.2d 975.)

In Mueller v. Allen (1983) 463 U.S. 388, 103 S.Ct. 3062, 77 L.Ed.2d 721, the court, distinguishing Nyquist, upheld a Minnesota tax deduction to parents for the education of children, in either public or private schools.

(a) The lines of demarcation in this area are difficult to discern. The issue is whether Minnesota's tax deduction "bears greater resemblance to those types of assistance to parochial schools we have approved, or to those we have struck down." (103 S.Ct. 3066, 77 L.Ed.2d 727.)

(b) The statute clearly has a secular purpose--to defray the cost of educational expenses incurred by parents regardless of the type of schools their children attend. (103 S.Ct. 3066, 77 L.Ed.2d 728.)

(c) The primary effect of the statute is not to advance the sectarian aims of private schools. The deduction is only one of many in the tax law; it is available to all parents including those whose children attend public schools or nonsectarian private schools; by channeling the assistance through individual parents, the state has reduced the Establishment Clause objections; and parochial schools provide an educational alternative for millions of pupils, relieving some states of substantial tax burdens incident to operation of public schools. (103 S.Ct. 3067, 77 L.Ed.2d 328.)

(d) The statute does not "excessively tangle" the state in religion. Although state officials must determine whether particular textbooks qualify for a deduction, similar types of decisions have been approved (see supra, §§540, 541). (103 S.Ct. 3071, 77 L.Ed.2d 733.)

Four justices dissented, finding no basis for distinguishing Nyquist. (103 S.Ct. 3072, 77 L.Ed.2d 734.) (See 97 Harv. L. Rev. 148 [Mueller]; 18 U.S.F. L. Rev. 785 [same].)

VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

E. Aid to Private Schools or Private School Students.

4. Financial Assistance.

f. Construction Aid to Colleges

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 548

[§ 548] Construction Aid to Colleges

In Tilton v. Richardson (1971) 403 U.S. 672, 91 S.Ct. 2091, 29 L.Ed.2d 790, the Court upheld the validity of former 20 U.S.C., §701 et seq., which provided construction grants to church related colleges and universities for buildings used exclusively for secular educational purposes. The plurality opinion relied on the cases upholding aid for bus transportation, textbook lending, and exemption from church property taxes. (91 S.Ct. 2096, 29 L.Ed.2d 800.) Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745, supra, §543, was distinguished on the basis of the significant differences between the two kinds of institutions. The affirmative policy of the precollege church school is to advance faith; college students are less impressionable, and the colleges seek to provide a secular education, without restrictions on faith for admission or faculty opinion, and with no requirement of religious activity. (91 S.Ct. 2099, 29 L.Ed.2d 802.)

A similar result was reached in Hunt v. McNair (1973) 413 U.S. 734, 93 S.Ct. 2868, 37 L.Ed.2d 923. A South Carolina statute established an Educational Facilities Authority with power to issue tax-free revenue bonds (not state obligations) to finance construction by colleges of facilities for purely secular purposes. The Authority takes title to the property, leases it to the institution, and conveys title when the bonds are discharged; it also has power to make regulations for the use of the facilities and to set rents and fees. Held, applying the three tests of Committee for Public Education & Religious Liberty v. Nyquist (1973) 413 U.S. 756, 93 S.Ct. 2955, 37 L.Ed.2d 948, supra, §546 (purpose, effect, and entanglement), the statute was valid.

(a) The purpose is manifestly secular; benefits are available to all institutions of higher learning, regardless of religious affiliation. (93 S.Ct. 2873, 37 L.Ed.2d 930.)

(b) The primary effect, considered (as in Tilton) with respect to the particular institution involved (a Baptist-controlled college with only 60% Baptist student enrollment), will not be to advance or inhibit religion. The Establishment Clause does not prohibit every program that in any manner aids an institution with a religious affiliation, even though aid in one aspect frees it to spend its other resources for religious purposes. The objectionable primary effect of aid occurs "when it flows to an institution in which religion is so pervasive that a substantial portion of its functions are subsumed in the religious mission or when it funds a specifically religious activity in an otherwise substantially secular setting." (93 S.Ct. 2874, 37 L.Ed.2d 931.) The "state aid" involved here is merely a "governmental service." There is no expenditure of public funds, and no extending or committing of a state's credit; the only aid consists of creation of an instrumentality through which educational institutions may borrow on their own credit and the security of their own property on more favorable interest terms than otherwise would be available. (93 S.Ct. 2875, 37 L.Ed.2d 932, footnote 7.)

(c) There is no excessive entanglement. The issue is closer than in Tilton because of the power of the Authority to regulate and fix charges. "[W]ere there a realistic likelihood that they would be exercised in their full detail, the entanglement problems with the proposed transaction would not be insignificant." (93 S.Ct. 2876, 37 L.Ed.2d 933.) But this case involves a test of constitutionality of the statute as applied to a proposed issue of bonds, and the state Supreme Court has narrowly interpreted it to confine the scope of assistance "to the secular aspects of this liberal arts college." Thus, no excessive entanglement is foreshadowed. (93 S.Ct. 2877, 37 L.Ed.2d 934.)

In California Educational Facilities Authority v. Priest (1974) 12 C.3d 593, 116 C.R. 361, 526 P.2d 513, the court upheld the validity of former Educ.C. 30301 et seq. (now Educ.C. 94100 et seq.), which creates an Authority with the power to issue revenue bonds to provide higher educational institutions with the means to establish and expand facilities. The statute enables private colleges to obtain financing at a lower rate of interest because the Authority may issue tax-exempt bonds. (a) Hunt v. McNair is controlling. (12 C.3d 600.) (b) No challenge can be based on the California Constitution: e.g., Cal. Const., Art. I, §4, on free exercise of religion, is not violated by this religiously neutral statute; Cal. Const., Art. IX, §8, and former Cal. Const., Art. XII, §24, prohibiting appropriation of money for, or help to, a sectarian school, are not violated by a statute that does not require an appropriation, and that is secular in purpose despite some incidental benefit to sectarian schools. (12 C.3d 603, 605.) (See 95 A.L.R.3d 1000 [state constitutional objections to issuance of revenue bonds to finance construction at private religious-affiliated colleges].)

In California Statewide Communities Dev. Authority v. All Persons Interested in the Matter of the Validity of a Purchase Agreement (2007) 40 C.4th 788, 55 C.R.3d 487, 152 P.3d 1070, the court considered the constitutionality of bond financing agreements between a public authority and three religiously affiliated schools that, for purposes of this litigation, the parties assumed to be pervasively religious. The trial court held that the agreements violated Cal. Const., Art. XVI, §5, and the Court of Appeal affirmed. Held, reversed and remanded.

(a) The following test, distilled from California Educational Facilities Authority v. Priest (1974) 12 C.3d 593, 116 C.R. 361, 526 P.2d 513, text, p. 905, applies in determining whether the issuance of government bonds benefiting religiously affiliated schools violates Cal. Const., Art. XVI, §5: (1) The bond program must serve the public interest and provide no more than an incidental benefit to religion; (2) it must be available to both secular and sectarian institutions on an equal basis; (3) it must prohibit use of bond proceeds for religious projects; and (4) it must not impose a financial burden on the government. (40 C.4th 801.)

(b) The last three requirements were easily satisfied here, but the court remanded the case to the trial court to determine whether the program served the public interest without providing more than an incidental benefit to religion. Because it was assumed that the schools to be benefited here were "pervasively sectarian," the trial court will need to examine the substance of the education that each of the schools offers. (40 C.4th 803, 806.) Each school must provide a broad curriculum in secular subjects, and "the information and coursework used to teach secular subjects must be neutral with respect to religion." (40 C.4th 803, 804.) Further, the schools must not use the facilities built or improved with the bond proceeds for theological or divinity programs or as a place of worship. (40 C.4th 806.)

(c) If the conditions to be met under the California Constitution are satisfied, then the bond program does not violate the Establishment Clause of the United States Constitution. (40 C.4th 810.) The test to be applied was set out in Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745, text, §507, and refined in Agostini v. Felton (1997) 521 U.S. 203, 117 S.Ct. 1997, 138 L.Ed.2d 391, text, §545:

(1) The government program must have a secular purpose. Here, once the California constitutional conditions are satisfied, "the program serves the primary secular purpose of increasing secular educational opportunities for Californians in general." (40 C.4th 811.)

(2) The government program must not have the impermissible effect of advancing religion. The issuance of bonds to finance campus improvements does not result in government indoctrination. The schools cannot qualify for bond funding unless they offer a broad curriculum in secular subjects, the content of which is similar to that taught in nonreligious schools. The bond program does not define its recipients by reference to religion. And the government program does not create an excessive entanglement between the state and the schools in question. (40 C.4th 811.) As part of the program, the schools have agreed not to use the funds for religious purposes, and the program provides for the appointment of an independent trustee to monitor their compliance. (40 C.4th 811, 812.)

Three justices joined in a lengthy dissent based on the pervasiveness of religion at the schools in question. (40 C.4th 812.)

E. Aid to Private Schools or Private School Students.

5. Aid to Disabled Students in Private Schools.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 549

[§ 549] Aid to Disabled Students in Private Schools.

(1) Rehabilitation Assistance. In Witters v. Washington Dept. of Services for the Blind (1986) 474 U.S. 481, 106 S.Ct. 748, 88 L.Ed.2d 846, a Washington statute provided state vocational rehabilitation assistance to the blind. Petitioner, attending a private Christian college to equip himself for a career as a pastor, missionary, or youth director, applied for benefits. The Washington Supreme Court decided that furnishing aid to petitioner would violate the Establishment Clause. Held, reversed.

(a) "It is well-settled that the Establishment Clause is not violated every time money previously in the possession of a State is conveyed to a religious institution. For example, a State may issue a paycheck to one of its employees, who may then donate all or part of that paycheck to a religious institution, all without constitutional barrier; and the State may do so even knowing that the employee so intends to dispose of his salary. It is equally well-settled, on the other hand, that the State may not grant aid to a religious school, whether cash or in-kind, where the effect of the aid is 'that of a direct subsidy to the religious school' from the State. ... Aid may have that effect even though it takes the form of aid to students or parents." (106 S.Ct. 751, 88 L.Ed.2d 854.)

(b) Under the Washington program, the money is paid directly to the student, and any aid that ultimately flows to religious institutions does so only as a result of private choices of aid recipients. Thus, the program creates no financial incentive for students to undertake sectarian education, and there was no evidence indicating that any other person had ever sought to finance religious education pursuant to the program. (106 S.Ct. 752, 88 L.Ed.2d 854.) "Nor does the mere circumstance that petitioner has chosen to use neutrally available state aid to help pay for his religious education confer any message of state endorsement of religion." (106 S.Ct. 753, 88 L.Ed.2d 855.)

(2) Providing Interpreter. In Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills School Dist. (1993) 509 U.S. 1, 113 S.Ct. 2462, 125 L.Ed.2d 1, petitioner, who had been deaf since birth, asked respondent school district to provide a sign-language interpreter to accompany him to classes at a Roman Catholic high school, pursuant to the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA, infra, §881). Held, the Establishment Clause does not bar the school district from providing an interpreter.

(a) The Supreme Court has never said that religious institutions are disabled from participating in publicly sponsored social welfare programs; if the Establishment Clause did bar religious groups from receiving general government benefits, a church could not be protected by the police and fire departments or have its public sidewalk kept in repair. "Given that a contrary rule would lead to such absurd results, we have consistently held that government programs that neutrally provide benefits to a broad class of citizens defined without reference to religion are not readily subject to an Establishment Clause challenge just because sectarian institutions may also receive an attenuated financial benefit. Nowhere have we stated this principle more clearly than in Mueller v. Allen ... , and Witters v. Washington Dept. of Services for the Blind ... , two cases dealing specifically with government programs offering general educational assistance." (113 S.Ct. 2466, 125 L.Ed.2d 10.) (For discussion of Mueller v. Allen (1983) 463 U.S. 388, 103 S.Ct. 3062, 77 L.Ed.2d 721, see supra, §547.)

(b) The reasoning of Mueller and Witters applies here. "By according parents freedom to select a school of their choice, the statute ensures that a government-paid interpreter will be present in a sectarian school only as a result of the private decision of individual parents. In other words, because the IDEA creates no financial incentive for parents to choose a sectarian school, an interpreter's presence there cannot be attributed to state decision-making. ... Indeed, this is an even easier case than Mueller and Witters in the sense that, under the IDEA, no funds traceable to the government ever find their way into sectarian schools' coffers." (113 S.Ct. 2467, 125 L.Ed.2d 11.)

(1) Denial of Unemployment Compensation. Sherbert v. Verner (1963) 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965, held that a state, administering its unemployment compensation law, could not deny benefits to a Seventh-Day Adventist for refusal to accept work on Saturday. The state's ruling "forces her to choose between following the precepts of her religion and forfeiting benefits, on the one hand, and abandoning one of the precepts of her religion in order to accept work, on the other hand." (83 S.Ct. 1794, 10 L.Ed.2d 970.) No compelling state interest justifies this infringement. (83 S.Ct. 1795, 10 L.Ed.2d 972.) (See Hobbie v. Unemployment App. Com. of Florida (1987) 480 U.S. 136, 107 S.Ct. 1046, 1048, 94 L.Ed.2d 190, 197 [denial of unemployment benefits was invalid where worker was discharged for refusing to work certain hours because of religious convictions adopted after beginning employment]; Frazee v. Caldor (1985) 472 U.S. 703, 105 S.Ct. 2914, 86 L.Ed.2d 557, a Connecticut statute provided: "No person who states that a particular day of the week is observed as his Sabbath may be required by his employer to work on such a day." Held, the statute violated the Establishment Clause. It imposed an absolute duty on employers and employees to conform their business practices to the particular religious practices of the employee, taking no account of the convenience or interests of the employer or those of other employees who do not observe a Sabbath. "This unyielding weighting in favor of Sabbath observers over all other interests" has a primary effect that impermissibly advances a particular religious practice. (105 S.Ct. 2918, 86 L.Ed.2d 563.) b. Broader Protection Under California Constitution.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 551

[§ 551] Broader Protection Under California Constitution.

In Stimpel v. State Personnel Bd. (1970) 6 C.A.3d 206, 85 C.R. 797, S was employed by the state as a construction inspector, and his duties often required inspection of work done by a contractor on Saturday. As a Seventh-Day Adventist, he refused to work on Saturday. For some time he was able to find substitutes, but eventually was discharged for being absent without leave. Held, the discharge was proper. Sherbert v. Verner (1963) 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965, supra, §550, was not controlling because unemployment benefits are available only from the state, while employment as a construction inspector is available in many places. In view of the proliferation of religions and the burden on the employer to accommodate each employee's faith, "if a person has religious scruples which conflict with the requirements of a particular job with the state, he should not accept employment or, having accepted, he should not be heard to complain if he is discharged for failing to fulfill his duties." (6 C.A.3d 209.) (See Hildebrand v. Unemp. Ins. App. Bd. (1977) 19 C.3d 765, 770, 140 C.R. 151, 566 P.2d 1297, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §497 [denial of unemployment benefits upheld where employee voluntarily accepted conflict; Sherbert v. Verner distinguished].)

In Rankins v. Commission on Professional Competence of Ducor Union School Dist. (1979) 24 C.3d 167, 154 C.R. 907, 593 P.2d 852, B, a member of the Worldwide Church of God, was required to refrain from work on certain holy days. He was employed for some years by the school district as an elementary classroom teacher, and his ability was unquestioned. However, despite denial of requested permission and warnings of dismissal, he was absent in several consecutive years for periods of 8, 5, 8, and 10 days. He was dismissed for persistent refusal to obey the school laws and regulations. A commission on professional competence found that his absences did not have a substantially detrimental effect on the educational program because adequate substitutes took care of his classes, and that dismissal interfered with his free exercise of religion. In the district's mandamus proceeding, the trial judge disagreed, upheld the dismissal, and issued the writ. Held, reversed.

(a) Cal. Const., Art. I, §8, provides that a person may not be disqualified from employment because of "creed." Though the district's rules were neutral on their face, their effect was to exclude B from his employment because of his adherence to the precepts of his church. Unless that adherence created an inability to perform the tasks required by the particular occupation, reliance on it for dismissal amounted to disqualification because of religion. (24 C.3d 172.)

(b) The constitutional provision has not been construed, but to implement §703(a)(1) of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C., §2000e(a)(1)), the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission in 1967 issued guidelines requiring employers "to make reasonable accommodations to employees' religious needs," where this is possible without undue hardship. (24 C.3d 173.) These guidelines, later incorporated into the Act, were applied in a number of cases. "We think that duty also is implied by California's constitutional prohibition of religious disqualification from employment." (24 C.3d 174.)

(c) The record shows that the district failed to make this reasonable accommodation. By statute each teacher is allowed at least 10 days of paid leave for illness or "personal necessity"; the unpaid leave required for B's religious observances would not be unreasonably burdensome. (24 C.3d 175.)

(d) Hildebrand v. Unemp. Ins. App. Bd., supra, is distinguishable. B did not voluntarily accept working conditions conflicting with his religion, and the Hildebrand opinion did not consider Cal. Const., Art. I, §8. (24 C.3d 176.) Stimpel v. State Personnel Bd., supra, predates the adoption of Cal. Const., Art. I, §8, and its categorical rejection of any employer's duty to accommodate an employee's religious practice conflicts with the constitutional provision. (24 C.3d 177.)

(e) To require accommodation of an employee's religious observances does not contravene the Establishment Clause (supra, §507); it promotes equal employment opportunities for members of all religious faiths. "[T]he effect of the accommodation is simply to lessen the discrepancy between the conditions imposed on [B's] religious observances and those enjoyed, say, for observances by adherents of majority religions as a result of the five-day week and the Christmas and Easter vacations of regular school calendars. Article I, section 8 does not require full equality of treatment of all employees' religious practices under all circumstances. It does require whatever reduction of inequality of treatment is possible through reasonable steps that do not impose undue hardship on employers." (24 C.3d 178.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

[§ 552] Labor Regulations.

(1) Child Labor. In Prince v. Massachusetts (1944) 321 U.S. 158, 64 S.Ct. 438, 88 L.Ed. 645, the guardian of a child of 9 permitted her to sell religious publications on the street. A conviction for violation of the state child labor law was upheld. Pointing out that the religious freedom of adults in this connection was fully established by prior cases, the Court declared that the power of the state to control the conduct of children so as to safeguard their health and welfare was greater and justified the application of the statute to this activity. (64 S.Ct. 444, 88 L.Ed.2d 654.) (For regulations affecting children and their care giver's free exercise of religion generally, see supra, §519.)

(2) Workers Employed by Religious Organization. In Tony & Susan Alamo Foundation v. Secretary of Labor (1985) 471 U.S. 290, 105 S.Ct. 1953, 85 L.Ed.2d 278, the minimum wage, overtime, and recordkeeping requirements of the federal Fair Labor Standards Act (see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §540) were held applicable to "associates" of petitioner who were engaged in ordinary commercial activities. Petitioner was a religious organization maintaining an evangelistic church, but its income was derived largely from the operation of a number of commercial businesses; and the "associates," though receiving no cash salaries, were provided with food, clothing, shelter, and other benefits. Held: (a) Under the "economic reality" test of employment, the "associates" were employees. (105 S.Ct. 1961, 1962, 85 L.Ed.2d 287, 288.) (b) The claim that receipt of "wages" would violate the religious convictions of the "associates" was unconvincing. Even if the Foundation were to pay wages in cash, the "associates" could voluntarily return the money; hence, application of the Act would not interfere with their free exercise of religious beliefs. (105 S.Ct. 1963, 85 L.Ed.2d 289, 290.) (On enforcement of FEHA against religious employer, see infra, §918.)

VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

F. Other Activities.

3. Sunday Closing Laws.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 553

[§ 553] Sunday Closing Laws.

In a series of cases, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the validity of compulsory Sunday Closing Laws, sometimes known as "Blue Laws," against the objection that they violated the guarantee of religious freedom. (See 24 A.L.R.2d 813 [Sunday sports]; 10 A.L.R.4th 246 [Sunday closing laws]; 27 A.L.R.4th 1155 [prohibiting sale of liquor on specific religious holidays].)

McGowan v. Maryland (1961) 366 U.S. 420, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 6 L.Ed.2d 393, involved Maryland statutes prohibiting most types of labor, business, and other commercial activities on Sunday, but containing numerous exceptions, differing in territorial location and kind of activity, and in particular allowing business activities connected with recreational activities at various places. Defendants, employees of a department store, were convicted for the Sunday sale of sundry items. Although they lacked standing to challenge the laws as a prohibition of the free exercise of religion because they alleged only economic injury and did not disclose their religious beliefs, under Everson v. Board of Education of Ewing Township (1947) 330 U.S. 1, 67 S.Ct. 504, 91 L.Ed. 711, supra, §539, they could raise the "establishment" or "separation of church and state" argument. (81 S.Ct. 1107, 6 L.Ed.2d 401.) But their argument was rejected and the conviction affirmed. The court, on an elaborate review of the history of Sunday closing laws, found that their original religious purpose had given way to a present-day secular objective of a day of rest:

(a) "Throughout this century and longer, both the federal and state governments have oriented their activities very largely toward improvement of the health, safety, recreation and general well-being of our citizens. Numerous laws affecting public health, safety factors in industry, laws affecting hours and conditions of labor of women and children, weekend diversion at parks and beaches, and cultural activities of various kinds, now point the way toward the good life for all. Sunday Closing Laws, like those before us, have become part and parcel of this great governmental concern wholly apart from their original purposes or connotations. The present purpose and effect of most of them is to provide a uniform day of rest for all citizens; the fact that this day is Sunday, a day of particular significance for the dominant Christian sects, does not bar the State from achieving its secular goals. To say that the States cannot prescribe Sunday as a day of rest for these purposes solely because centuries ago such laws had their genesis in religion would give a constitutional interpretation of hostility to the public welfare rather than one of mere separation of church and State." (81 S.Ct. 1115, 6 L.Ed.2d 410.)

(b) This finding of purpose, however, is crucial. "We do not hold that Sunday legislation may not be a violation of the 'Establishment' Clause if it can be demonstrated that its purpose--evidenced either on the face of the legislation, in conjunction with its legislative history, or in its operative effect--is to use the State's coercive power to aid religion." (81 S.Ct. 1119, 6 L.Ed.2d 414.) (See Two Guys From Harrison-Allentown v. McGinley (1961) 366 U.S. 582, 81 S.Ct. 1135, 6 L.Ed.2d 551, 561 [Pennsylvania law; following McGowan]; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 147 [McGowan].)

In Braunfeld v. Brown (1961) 366 U.S. 599, 81 S.Ct. 1144, 6 L.Ed.2d 563, the Pennsylvania law was challenged by Philadelphia merchants selling clothes and home furnishings. Each was an Orthodox Jew who had to close on Saturday for religious reasons, and thus was unable to do business from Friday night until Monday. The court recognized that many states provide exemptions for members of religious groups who observe a different day of rest, but held that this was not a constitutional requisite. Legislation making a religious practice unlawful would be unconstitutional, but not legislation making it merely more expensive. Thus, the case came within the settled constitutional authority to impose valid indirect restraints.

(a) "To strike down, without the most critical scrutiny, legislation which imposes only an indirect burden on the exercise of religion, i.e., legislation which does not make unlawful the religious practice itself, would radically restrict the operating latitude of the legislature. Statutes which tax income and limit the amount which may be deducted for religious contributions impose an indirect economic burden on the observance of the religion of the citizen whose religion requires him to donate a greater amount to his church; statutes which require the courts to be closed on Saturday and Sunday impose a similar indirect burden on the observance of the religion of the trial lawyer whose religion requires him to rest on a weekday. The list of legislation of this nature is nearly limitless." (81 S.Ct. 1147, 6 L.Ed.2d 568.)

(b) "Of course, to hold unassailable all legislation regulating conduct which imposes solely an indirect burden on the observance of religion would be a gross oversimplification. If the purpose or effect of a law is to impede the observance of one or all religions or is to discriminate invidiously between religions, that law is constitutionally invalid even though the burden may be characterized as being only indirect. But if the State regulates conduct by enacting a general law within its power, the purpose and effect of which is to advance the State's secular goals, the statute is valid despite its indirect burden on religious observance unless the State may accomplish its purpose by means which do not impose such a burden." (81 S.Ct. 1148, 6 L.Ed.2d 568.) (See Gallagher v. Crown Kosher Super Market of Massachusetts (1961) 366 U.S. 617, 81 S.Ct. 1122, 6 L.Ed.2d 536, 544 [Massachusetts law; following Braunfeld]; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 149 [Braunfeld]; on equal protection attack, see infra, §711.)

a. United States Supreme Court Decisions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 554

[§ 554] United States Supreme Court Decisions.

In Lynch v. Donnelly (1984) 465 U.S. 668, 104 S.Ct. 1355, 79 L.Ed.2d 604, the city of Pawtucket, Rhode Island, following a practice of 40 years, included a creche (Nativity scene) in its annual Christmas display. Held, this did not violate the Establishment Clause.

(a) The metaphor of the "wall" between church and state (see supra, §505) "is not a wholly accurate description of the practical aspects of the relationship that in fact exists between church and state." (104 S.Ct. 1359, 79 L.Ed.2d 610.) "There is an unbroken history of official acknowledgment by all three branches of government of the role of religion in American life from at least 1789." (104 S.Ct. 1360, 79 L.Ed.2d 611.) Thus, Christmas and Thanksgiving have been proclaimed national holidays in religious terms; our currency contains the national motto "In God We Trust," and the pledge of allegiance refers to "One nation under God"; art galleries supported by public revenues display religious paintings, and the Supreme Court chamber in which oral arguments are heard is decorated with a symbol of religion--Moses with the Ten Commandments; and there are "countless other illustrations of the Government's acknowledgment of our religious heritage and governmental sponsorship of graphic manifestations of that heritage." (104 S.Ct. 1360, 1361, 79 L.Ed.2d 611, 612.)

(b) This history helps explain why the Court has declined to take "a rigid, absolutist view" of the Clause; in each case, "the inquiry calls for line drawing; no fixed, per se rule can be framed." (104 S.Ct. 1361, 79 L.Ed.2d 613.)

(c) "The display is sponsored by the City to celebrate the Holiday and to depict the origins of that Holiday. These are legitimate secular purposes." (104 S.Ct. 1362, 79 L.Ed.2d 615.) The creche is identified with one religious faith. "It would be ironic, however, if the inclusion of a single symbol of a particular historic religious event, as part of a celebration acknowledged in the Western World for 20 centuries, and in this country by the people, by the Executive Branch, by the Congress, and the courts for 2 centuries, would so 'taint' the City's exhibit as to render it violative of the Establishment Clause. To forbid the use of this one passive symbol--the creche--at the very time people are taking note of the season with Christmas hymns and carols in public schools and other public places, and while the Congress and legislatures open sessions with prayers by paid chaplains would be a stilted over-reaction contrary to our history and to our holdings." (104 S.Ct. 1365, 79 L.Ed.2d 618.) (See 98 Harv. L. Rev. 174; 37 Hastings L. J. 499; 19 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 133.)

In Allegheny v. American Civil Liberties Union Greater Pittsburgh Chapter (1989) 492 U.S. 573, 109 S.Ct. 3086, 106 L.Ed.2d 472, involving a holiday display of a creche and a menorah on public property, the Court held that the creche display violated the Establishment Clause but the menorah did not. The lead opinion discussed the analysis set forth in Lynch in great detail (109 S.Ct. 3101, 106 L.Ed.2d 495), and explained its conclusion as to the creche as follows:

"In sum, Lynch teaches that government may celebrate Christmas in some manner and form, but not in a way that endorses Christian doctrine. Here, Allegheny County has transgressed this line. It has chosen to celebrate Christmas in a way that has the effect of endorsing a patently Christian message: Glory to God for the birth of Jesus Christ. Under Lynch, and the rest of our cases, nothing more is required to demonstrate a violation of the Establishment Clause." (109 S.Ct. 3105, 106 L.Ed.2d 500.)

Five justices concurred in the holding and reasoning of the lead opinion; an additional concurrence of three justices was filed (109 S.Ct. 3117, 106 L.Ed.2d 514); and three additional opinions, concurring and dissenting in part, were filed (109 S.Ct. 3124, 3129, 3134, 106 L.Ed.2d 523, 529, 533). (See 103 Harv. L. Rev. 228, 229 [observing that "fractured Court provided little guidance for settling disputes in this area"]; 22 Hastings Const. L. Q. 29 [suggesting adoption of endorsement test as Establishment Clause test].)

b. California Cases.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 555

[§ 555] California Cases.

In Los Angeles v. Hollinger (1963) 221 C.A.2d 154, 34 C.R. 387, a corporation sought to restore the original significance of Christmas by presenting a religious parade based on biblical scenes. It contracted with Los Angeles County to produce and distribute a film of the parade for $ 3,500, payable to it from the County Exploitation Fund. Held, the contract was invalid. Govt.C. 26100 authorizes use of tax money by the Board of Supervisors to advertise the county, etc., for the purpose of inducing immigration and increasing trade. But the Constitution (former Cal. Const., Art. IV, §30, now Cal. Const., Art. XVI, §5, supra, §505) prohibits the payment of public money in aid of any sectarian purpose. Because the purpose of the parade is clearly sectarian, the contrary determination of the Board can be disregarded. (221 C.A.2d 160.)

In Fox v. Los Angeles (1978) 22 C.3d 792, 150 C.R. 867, 587 P.2d 663, Los Angeles city officials for many years had authorized the illumination of a large cross on the city hall on Christmas holidays and Easter Sundays. In a taxpayer's suit, the trial court issued an injunction against the display. Held, affirmed, on California constitutional grounds. (a) Several state and federal courts have approved similar displays, some relying on state constitutional provisions different from those of California. (22 C.3d 795.) (b) Cal. Const., Art. I, §4 states that free exercise and enjoyment of religion "without discrimination or preference" are guaranteed. Preference thus is forbidden even when there is no discrimination; and there is preference when only the Latin cross is displayed. (22 C.3d 797.)

In Okrand v. Los Angeles (1989) 207 C.A.3d 566, 254 C.R. 913, the court, following Lynch v. Donnelly (1984) 465 U.S. 668, 104 S.Ct. 1355, 79 L.Ed.2d 604, supra, §554, held that an unlit menorah located near a decorated Christmas tree in the rotunda of city hall did not violate the Establishment Clause. (207 C.A.3d 568, 572.)

(a) "What clearly is suggested is that the city has illustrated its diversity, as well as its international and cultural eminence, by the variety of rotunda displays it permits. ... Indeed, it appears to us that the inclusion of the Katowitz Menorah during the winter holiday period promotes an image of a local government that is impartial toward religions. No one suggests, for example, that the inclusion of the African icons as ornaments during a prior holiday season constituted an endorsement of African religious faiths. The winter holiday season is important not only to the Christian citizens of Los Angeles who celebrate Christmas but to the Jewish citizens who coincidentally celebrate Chanukah." (207 C.A.3d 574.)

(b) Fox v. Los Angeles is distinguishable. In the present case the city did not exhibit a preference for a religion, there was comparable recognition of other religious symbols, the menorah stood unlit in a corner occupied by a decorated Christmas tree, and the candelabra does not focus attention on a religious doctrine in the manner of a cross. (207 C.A.3d 579, 580.)

VII. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

F. Other Activities.

4A. (New) Other Government-Sponsored Religious Displays.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 555A

[§ 555A] (New) Other Government-Sponsored Religious Displays.

In McCreary County, Kentucky v. American Civil Liberties Union of Kentucky (2005) 545 U.S. 844, 125 S.Ct. 2722, 162 L.Ed.2d 729, two Kentucky counties installed framed copies of the Ten Commandments, including citations to the Book of Exodus, in highly visible areas of their respective courthouses. After plaintiff received injunctive relief ordering the removal of the displays for violating the Establishment Clause, the counties installed new displays, which added eight other religiously themed documents in smaller frames. These displays also were ordered removed, with the direction that no similar displays be erected. The counties each then installed a third display which included framed copies of the Ten Commandments along with framed copies of the Magna Carta, the Declaration of Independence, the Bill of Rights, the lyrics of the Star Spangled Banner, the Mayflower Compact, the National Motto, the Preamble to the Kentucky Constitution, and a picture of Lady Justice. The collection was entitled "The Foundations of American Law and Government Display," and each document came with a statement about its historical and legal significance. Held, preliminary injunction affirmed. The counties' purpose in installing the displays is a sound basis for ruling on the Establishment Clause complaints, and the evolution of the displays should be considered in determining the counties' claim of a secular purpose. (125 S.Ct. 2728, 162 L.Ed.2d 740.)

(a) As stated in Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745, text, §507, one of the factors to be considered in evaluating an Establishment Clause claim is whether the government action has a "secular legislative purpose." (125 S.Ct. 2732, 162 L.Ed.2d 746.) The primary consideration in this analysis is government neutrality. "When the government acts with the ostensible and predominant purpose of advancing religion, it violates that central Establishment Clause value of official religious neutrality, there being no neutrality when the government's ostensible object is to take sides." (125 S.Ct. 2733, 162 L.Ed.2d 746.)

(b) Although the courts will generally defer to a legislature's stated purpose, "the secular purpose required has to be genuine, not a sham, and not merely secondary to a religious objective." (125 S.Ct. 2735, 162 L.Ed.2d 749.) Here, the original display was unmistakably a religious statement. (125 S.Ct. 2739, 162 L.Ed.2d 752.) At the ceremony posting the framed Commandments in one of the counties, the county executive was accompanied by his pastor, who spoke on the existence of God. (125 S.Ct. 2738, 162 L.Ed.2d 752.) The second display still focused on religious passages, showing that the counties posted the Commandments "precisely because of their sectarian content." In trying to lift the preliminary injunction after posting the third display, the counties cited one of their purposes as trying to educate the citizenry on documents playing a significant role in our law and government. (125 S.Ct. 2739, 162 L.Ed.2d 753.) But this statement was "presented only as a litigating position," without further authorizing action by the counties' governing board. "And although repeal of the earlier county authorizations would not have erased them from the record of evidence bearing on current purpose, the extraordinary resolutions for the second display passed just months earlier were not repealed or otherwise repudiated." Further, there was enhanced religious expression in the use of purely religious language in the version of the Commandments used in the third display. And the selection of the other posted material did not "suggest a clear theme that might prevail over evidence of the continuing religious object." (125 S.Ct. 2740, 162 L.Ed.2d 754.)

(c) "In holding the preliminary injunction adequately supported by evidence that the Counties' purpose had not changed at the third stage, we do not decide that the Counties' past actions forever taint any effort on their part to deal with the subject matter. We hold only that purpose needs to be taken seriously under the Establishment Clause and needs to be understood in light of context." (125 S.Ct. 2741, 162 L.Ed.2d 755.)

(d) "Nor do we have occasion here to hold that a sacred text can never be integrated constitutionally into a governmental display on the subject of law, or American history. ... [O]ur own courtroom frieze was deliberately designed ... to include the figure of Moses holding tablets exhibiting a portion of the Hebrew text of the later, secularly phrased Commandments; in the company of 17 other lawgivers, most them secular figures, there is no risk that Moses would strike an observer as evidence that the National Government was violating neutrality in religion." (125 S.Ct. 2741, 162 L.Ed.2d 755.)

Three justices joined in a lengthy dissent, and one justice joined in part of that dissent. (125 S.Ct. 2748, 162 L.Ed.2d 762.) (See 119 Harv. L. Rev. 258 [McCreary County, Kentucky].)

A monument displaying the Ten Commandments on the grounds of the Texas State Capitol was held, by a divided court, not to violate the Establishment Clause in Van Orden v. Perry (2005) 545 U.S. 677, 125 S.Ct. 2854, 162 L.Ed.2d 607. The monument was presented to Texas by a fraternal order in 1961, and stands among 16 other monuments and 21 historical markers commemorating the people and ideals of Texas. In the lead opinion, four justices declined to follow the Lemon test in this fact situation. The Court compared the monument to other acceptable displays in government buildings, like the depiction of Moses holding tablets revealing portions of the Ten Commandments in the United States Supreme Court and the statue of Moses holding the Ten Com- mandments in the rotunda of the Library of Congress' Jefferson Building. (125 S.Ct. 2862, 162 L.Ed.2d 618.) "Moses was a lawgiver as well as a religious leader. And the Ten Commandments have an undeniable historical meaning" in addition to religious significance. "Simply having religious content or promoting a message consistent with a religious doctrine does not run afoul of the Establishment Clause." (125 S.Ct. 2863, 162 L.Ed.2d 619.)

One justice concurred in the judgment (125 S.Ct. 2868, 162 L.Ed.2d 624), and four justices dissented in three opinions (125 S.Ct. 2873, 2891, 2892, 162 L.Ed.2d 631, 651). (See 94 Cal. L. Rev. 1243 [Ten Commandments cases]; 119 Harv. L. Rev. 248 [Van Orden].)

See Paulson v. Abdelnour (2006) 145 C.A.4th 400, 423, 51 C.R.3d 575 [discussing McCreary and Van Orden, and applying Lemon test; proposition providing for transfer of hilltop war memorial, which included large cross, from city to federal Government, that was necessitated by federal decision holding that cross was unconstitutional preference of religion, did not violate federal or state Establishment Clause; although memorial would continue to be maintained by veterans' group, there was no agreement that cross would be retained, there was no evidence that transfer was sham designed to retain cross, and 76% of voters approved transfer]; 26 A.L.R.6th 145 [State Constitutional Challenges to the Display of Religious Symbols on Public Property].

5. State Religious Holiday.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 556

[§ 556] State Religious Holiday.

Govt.C. 6700 designates certain days as "holidays in this state," and other statutes require closing public offices on those days (see Govt.C. 6703, 11020). Govt.C. 6700(n) specifies "Good Friday from 12 noon until 3 p.m.," and Govt.C. 6700(o) specifies "[e]very day appointed by the President or Governor for a ... holiday." Govt.C. 19853 provides that state employees are entitled to time off on certain designated holidays with pay. Pursuant to the power vested by these statutes, state Governors for some time issued executive orders for closing state offices on Good Friday between 12 noon and 3 p.m., with paid time off for state employees.

In Mandel v. Hodges (1976) 54 C.A.3d 596, 127 C.R. 244, plaintiff sought declaratory and injunctive relief, challenging the constitutionality of the legislation and the executive action. The complaint charged that designating Good Friday as a holiday without a similar designation of non-Christian holidays such as Yom Kippur violated the establishment provisions of the federal and state Constitutions. Held, judgment granting injunction affirmed.

(a) Federal Constitution. Under the three-part test of Committee for Public Education & Religious Liberty v. Nyquist (1973) 413 U.S. 756, 93 S.Ct. 2955, 37 L.Ed.2d 948, supra, §544, the Governor's executive action was unconstitutional. (1) It could not be justified on the theory of the Sunday Closing Law cases as a provision for a period of relaxation and rest (see supra, §553); Good Friday is a wholly religious day that has not become secularized, and the order therefore wholly lacked a secular purpose. (54 C.A.3d 612.) (2) The primary effect of the order was to advance religion by affording opportunity for and encouraging acts of worship. (54 C.A.3d 614.) (3) The order was an "excessive entanglement with religion." Thousands of state employees were given time off from work and many members of the public were denied access to state offices during the period. (54 C.A.3d 615.)

(b) California Constitution. The California Constitution has independent force (see supra, §178), and the order violates the provisions of Cal. Const., Art. I, §4 (supra, §505), guaranteeing free exercise of religion "without discrimination or preference." Appointment of an exclusively Christian holy day as a paid holiday "amounts to 'discrimination' against all non-Christian religions and 'preference' of those which are Christian." (54 C.A.3d 617.)

(c) Unconstitutionality of legislation. Although the principal challenge was to the executive order, the underlying legislation is also unconstitutional. On their face, the statutes providing for time off on designated holidays merely authorized the declaration of holidays; but "they have been unconstitutionally applied by the Governor with respect to

Good Friday because of the constitutional proscriptions applicable to that day as a 'wholly religious day.' " (54 C.A.3d 618.) And the Good Friday statute, although without operative effect until the Governor acts under it, is unconstitutional on its face in designating a religious holiday as a state holiday. (54 C.A.3d 618.) (See 90 A.L.R.3d 752 [validity of provision making day of religious observance a legal holiday].)

Mandel v. Hodges was distinguished in California School Employees Assn. v. Sequoia Union High School Dist. (1977) 67 C.A.3d 157, 136 C.R. 594. An agreement negotiated by plaintiff school employees' union with defendant school district designated March 28, 1975 (Good Friday) as a paid holiday. Held, the agreement was valid and enforceable.

(a) State statutes authorize union representatives to engage in these negotiations and vest authority in the trustees to approve the holidays chosen. But neither statute encourages the choice of Good Friday over any other holiday; the discretionary authority to request such days rested primarily with a nongovernmental entity. Thus, the constitutional infirmity in Mandel (governmental action by chief executive of the state) is absent. (67 C.A.3d 160.)

(b) In Mandel, the closing was from 12 noon to 3 p.m. for purely religious purposes. Here, the entire day was made a holiday, and secular considerations may have entered into its choice by the union representatives; e.g., giving classified employees a longer spring vacation. (67 C.A.3d 161.)

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 557

[§ 557] Patriotic Message on License Plates.

In Wooley v. Maynard (1977) 430 U.S. 705, 97 S.Ct. 1428, 51 L.Ed.2d 752, members of Jehovah's Witnesses challenged a New Hampshire statute that (1) requires noncommercial vehicles to bear license plates embossed with the state motto, "Live Free or Die"; and (2) as construed by the state court, makes it a misdemeanor to cover up the motto. The challenger's affidavit stated: "I refuse to be coerced by the State into advertising a slogan which I find morally, ethically, religiously and politically abhorrent." Held, the statute was invalid.

(a) It required the automobile owner to use his private property as a "mobile billboard" for constant display of the state's ideological message. This brings it within the principle declared in the flag salute case, West Virginia State Bd. of Education v. Barnette (1943) 319 U.S. 624, 63 S.Ct. 1178, 87 L.Ed. 1628, supra, §536. (97 S.Ct. 1435, 51 L.Ed.2d 762.)

(b) The state's countervailing interests in facilitating identification of passenger vehicles (commercial vehicles are not required to display the motto) and in promoting appreciation of history, individualism, and state pride, are not sufficiently compelling to outweigh the individual's First Amendment right to avoid becoming courier for the message. (97 S.Ct. 1436, 51 L.Ed.2d 764.)

Two justices took a different view, arguing that there is no required affirmation of belief in being compelled to carry a certain kind of license plate; and they added: "The fact that an atheist carries and uses U.S. currency does not, in any meaningful sense, convey any affirmation of belief on his part in the motto 'In God We Trust.' " (97 S.Ct. 1439, 51 L.Ed.2d 767.) (See 5 Hastings Const. L. Q. 392; 15 San Diego L. Rev. 815.)

A. Rights Under Federal Constitution.

1. Theory of Peripheral Rights Doctrine.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 558

[§ 558] Theory of Peripheral Rights Doctrine.

The "forgotten Ninth Amendment" states that "[t]he enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people." In Griswold v. Connecticut (1965) 381 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 14 L.Ed.2d 510, a majority of the Court revived this declaration to support the creation of "peripheral rights" not expressly mentioned in the Bill of Rights. A Connecticut statute made it a crime to use a device to prevent conception, and punished as an accessory, one who assisted in the offense. G and B, officers of the Planned Parenthood League, gave medical advice on contraceptive devices to married persons, and were convicted. Held, reversed; the statute was an unconstitutional invasion of the right of marital privacy. The several opinions, however, differ in their reasoning and conclusions:

(a) The first opinion (four justices). "[S]pecific guarantees in the Bill of Rights have penumbras, formed by emanations from those guarantees that help give them life and substance." (85 S.Ct. 1681, 14 L.Ed.2d 514.) Thus, the right of freedom of speech includes not only utterance and printing, but the right to distribute, receive, and read, and freedom of inquiry, thought, and teaching. (85 S.Ct. 1680, 14 L.Ed.2d 514.) Various guarantees "create zones of privacy," protected from governmental intrusion; one of these is the private marital relationship. "We deal with a right of privacy older than the Bill of Rights--older than our political parties, older than our school system. Marriage is a coming together for better or for worse, hopefully enduring, and intimate to the degree of being sacred. It is an association that promotes a way of life, not causes; a harmony in living, not political faiths; a bilateral loyalty, not commercial or social projects. Yet it is an association for as noble a purpose as any involved in our prior decisions." (85 S.Ct. 1682, 14 L.Ed.2d 516.)

(b) The second opinion (three of the four on the main opinion). Although the Ninth Amendment has seldom been mentioned in the cases and is not an independent source of rights, it shows a belief of the framers that the first eight Amendments did not exhaust the list. Thus, the Amendment supports the right declared here. "[T]he right of privacy in the marital relation is fundamental and basic--a personal right 'retained by the people' within the meaning of the Ninth Amendment. Connecticut cannot constitutionally abridge this fundamental right, which is protected by the Fourteenth Amendment from infringement by the States." (85 S.Ct. 1690, 14 L.Ed.2d 524.)

(c) The third opinion (one justice concurring in the judgment alone). The approach that seeks to discover a fundamental right protected by the Fourteenth Amendment either in the Bill of Rights or its "penumbra" (the "incorporation doctrine") is unsound and improperly restricts the reach of Fourteenth Amendment due process. The proper inquiry is whether the challenged statute violates basic values implicit in the concept of ordered liberty (the Palko test, supra, §218). (85 S.Ct. 1690, 14 L.Ed.2d 524.) (See also the fourth opinion, one justice, similarly concurring.)

Two dissenters argued that the law was silly and offensive but not unconstitutional; that neither the Fourteenth nor the Ninth Amendment supports the ambiguous concept of a right of privacy. (85 S.Ct. 1696 et seq., 14 L.Ed.2d 531 et seq.) (See 79 Harv. L. Rev. 162; 38 Hastings L. J. 305; 7 Hastings Const. L. Q. 777; 15 Hastings Const. L. Q. 81; 1 Lincoln L. Rev. 907 [privacy and due process rights of de facto competent minors]; 20 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 349 [Sleeping Giant: The Ninth Amendment and Criminal Law].)

The "penumbra" theory of Griswold v. Connecticut was invoked in a number of later cases dealing with various aspects of the newly recognized "right of privacy." (See Eisenstadt v. Baird (1972) 405 U.S. 438, 92 S.Ct. 1029, 31 L.Ed.2d 349, infra, §560; Roe v. Wade (1973) 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147, infra, §561; People v. Forum v. Miller (1990) 218 C.A.3d 859, 864, 267 C.R. 371 [right of privacy under Federal Constitution does not extend to immigration status or dissemination of arrest information]; Los Altos v. Barnes (1992) 3 C.A.4th 1193, 1201, 5 C.R.2d 77, infra, §1033 [zoning ordinance permitting home occupations in residential zones but prohibiting employment of assistants and requiring that use be carried on only by occupants does not violate right of privacy].) 4. Abortion.

a. Woman's Right To Have Abortion.

1. In General: Roe v. Wade.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 561

[§ 561] In General: Roe v. Wade.

(1) U.S. Supreme Court Decisions. In Roe v. Wade (1973) 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147, the constitutional challenge was directed at the Texas criminal abortion law, which permitted abortion only to save the mother's life. Jane Roe (a pseudonym), alleging that she was unmarried and pregnant, sued for declaratory relief. Held, the statute was invalid.

(a) Background of problem. In both ancient and modern times, the propriety of abortion has been a source of deep dispute among medical personnel and people generally. Anti-abortion statutes had no common law origin but were enacted mainly in the latter half of the 19th century. (93 S.Ct. 715 et seq., 35 L.Ed.2d 164 et seq.)

(b) Woman's right of privacy. This right (see supra, §558) extends to the decision of a woman to terminate her pregnancy. The detriment of denying that choice is apparent: medically diagnosable harm, psychological harm from additional unwanted offspring, and the stigma of unwed motherhood. (93 S.Ct. 727, 35 L.Ed.2d 177.)

(c) Interest of state. The fetus is not a person, and the Fourteenth Amendment protection does not extend to the unborn; but at some point in pregnancy, the state does have an interest in protecting health and prenatal life, sufficiently compelling to sustain regulation. (93 S.Ct. 728, 729, 345 L.Ed.2d 177.) In other words, the pregnant woman's right of privacy is not absolute or sole, for she carries an embryo that becomes a fetus. "The situation therefore is inherently different from marital intimacy, or bedroom possession of obscene material, or marriage, or procreation, or education, with which Eisenstadt, Griswold, Stanley, Loving, Skinner, Pierce and Meyer were respectively concerned." (93 S.Ct. 730, 35 L.Ed.2d 180.)

(d) Time when state's interest controls. The state has dual interests in protecting the health of the woman and the potentiality of human life grow in substantiality as the woman approaches term. The interest in the mother's health reaches the compelling point at the end of the first trimester, and at this point, the state may regulate such matters as the qualifications of the doctor and the conditions of the operation. But prior to that time, the doctor and patient are free to decide on an abortion without interference by the state. (93 S.Ct. 731, 732, 35 L.Ed.2d 182.) The interest in potential life arises at the point of viability; and at that point, the state may prohibit abortion except when necessary to preserve the life or health of the mother. (93 S.Ct. 732, 35 L.Ed.2d 183.)

(e) Holding. The holding was summarized in the following constitutional guidelines:

(1) "For the stage prior to approximately the end of the first trimester, the abortion decision and its effectuation must be left to the medical judgment of the pregnant woman's attending physician."

(2) "For the stage subsequent to approximately the end of the first trimester, the State, in promoting its interest in the health of the mother, may, if it chooses, regulate the abortion procedure in ways that are reasonably related to maternal health."

(3) "For the stage subsequent to viability the State, in promoting its interest in the potentiality of human life, may, if it chooses, regulate, and even proscribe, abortion except where it is necessary, in appropriate medical judgment, for the preservation of the life or health of the mother." (93 S.Ct. 732, 35 L.Ed.2d 183.)

Doe v. Bolton (1973) 410 U.S. 179, 93 S.Ct. 739, 35 L.Ed.2d 201, a companion case, involved Georgia's therapeutic abortion statute. The challenger was a young married woman with three living children, two in foster homes, the other placed for adoption. Her poverty made it impossible to support the children, and she had been advised that an abortion would involve less danger to her health than childbirth. Held, adopting the basic principles of Roe v. Wade as a foundation, the statutory requirement of accreditation by the Joint Committee on Accreditation of Hospitals is invalid because the state has not shown that only accredited hospitals meet the needs of protecting the patient; and a hospital requirement applicable to the first trimester is invalid. (93 S.Ct. 750, 35 L.Ed.2d 215.) "[T]he interposition of the hospital abortion committee is unduly restrictive of the patient's rights and needs that, at this point, have already been medically delineated and substantiated by her personal physician." (93 S.Ct. 750, 35 L.Ed.2d 216.)

Two dissenting justices denounced the reasoning and result in Roe and Doe: "The Court simply fashions and announces a new constitutional right for pregnant mothers and, with scarcely any reason or authority for its action, invests that right with sufficient substance to override most existing state abortion statutes. The upshot is that the people and the legislatures of the 50 States are constitutionally disentitled to weigh the relative importance of the continued existence and development of the fetus on the one hand against a spectrum of possible impacts on the mother on the other hand. As an exercise of raw judicial power, the Court perhaps has authority to do what it does today; but in my view its judgment is an improvident and extravagant exercise of the power of judicial review which the Constitution extends to this Court." (93 S.Ct. 763, 35 L.Ed.2d 195.) (See 87 Harv. L. Rev. 75 [Roe and Doe]; 61 Cal. L. Rev. 345 [same]; 10 San Diego L. Rev. 844 [same].)

(2) California Cases. A similar result had previously been reached in People v. Belous (1969) 71 C.2d 954, 80 C.R. 354, 458 P.2d 194, applying the underlying theories of Griswold v. Connecticut (1965) 381 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 14 L.Ed.2d 510, supra, §558, and of Perez v. Sharp (1948) 32 C.2d 711, 714, 198 P.2d 17, infra, §747. The court held the California abortion statute fatally uncertain. The rights involved, said the court, were "the woman's rights to life and to choose whether to bear children." The right to life was involved "because childbirth involves risks of death." And "[t]he fundamental right of the woman to choose whether to bear children follows from the Supreme Court's and this court's repeated acknowledgment of a 'right of privacy' or 'liberty' in matters related to marriage, family, and sex That such a right is not enumerated in either the United States or California Constitutions is no impediment to the existence of the right." (71 C.2d 963.) (On Therapeutic Abortion Act, see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §127 et seq.; on partial unconstitutionality of Act, see People v. Barksdale (1972) 8 C.3d 320, 327, 338, 105 C.R. 1, 503 P.2d 257, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §131.)

3. Development of Law.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 563

[§ 563] Development of Law.

(1) Planned Parenthood Case. In Planned Parenthood of Cen. Missouri v. Danforth (1976) 428 U.S. 52, 96 S.Ct. 2831, 49 L.Ed.2d 788, the Court considered a challenge directed at a Missouri statute comprehensively regulating abortions, and decided issues reserved in Roe v. Wade (1973) 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147, supra, §561, and Doe v. Bolton (1973) 410 U.S. 179, 93 S.Ct. 739, 35 L.Ed.2d 201, supra, §561.

(a) Definition of viability: Valid. The Act defines "viability" as "that stage of fetal development when the life of the unborn child may be continued indefinitely outside the womb by natural or artificial life-supportive systems." Held, this definition is consistent with the holding in Roe; the statute need not specify the number of weeks in pregnancy as the point of viability. (96 S.Ct. 2838, 49 L.Ed.2d 802.)

(b) The woman's consent: Valid. The Act requires a woman's written consent, informed and freely given, prior to submitting to an abortion during the first 12 weeks of pregnancy. Held, a requirement of prior written consent for some types of surgery, including abortion, is not unconstitutional. (96 S.Ct. 2840, 49 L.Ed.2d 803.)

(c) The husband's consent: Invalid. The Act requires the prior written consent of the husband if the abortion is sought during the first 12 weeks of pregnancy unless a physician certifies that it is necessary to preserve the mother's life. Held, this requirement is unconstitutional, under Roe and Doe. "Clearly, since the State cannot regulate or proscribe abortion during the first stage, when the physician and his patient make that decision, the State cannot delegate authority to any particular person, even the spouse, to prevent abortion during that same period." (96 S.Ct. 2841, 49 L.Ed.2d 805.) The husband's interest is a strong one, and the decision may have profound effects on the marriage; but, when the two partners disagree, the woman who physically bears the child and is more directly and immediately affected by the pregnancy has the greater interest. (96 S.Ct. 2841, 2842, 49 L.Ed.2d 805, 806.)

(d) Parental consent for minor's abortion: Invalid. Where the woman is under 18, the Act requires the prior written consent of a parent or person in loco parentis if the abortion is sought during the first 12 weeks of pregnancy unless a physician certifies that it is necessary to preserve the mother's life. Held, the requirement is unconstitutional. "Just as with the requirement of consent from the spouse, so here, the State does not have the constitutional authority to give a third party an absolute, and possibly arbitrary, veto over the decision of the physician and his patient to terminate the patient's pregnancy, regardless of the reason for withholding the consent." (96 S.Ct. 2843, 49 L.Ed.2d 808.) While minors have constitutional rights, the state has somewhat broader authority to regulate the activities of children than of adults (see Prince v. Massachusetts (1944) 321 U.S. 158, 64 S.Ct. 438, 88 L.Ed. 645, supra, §552), and a significant state interest may justify a particular regulation. The present holding "does not suggest that every minor, regardless of age or maturity, may give effective consent for termination of her pregnancy." However, the interests of the parent are not of sufficient weight to overcome the right of privacy of a "competent minor mature enough to have become pregnant." (96 S.Ct. 2844, 49 L.Ed.2d 808.)

(e) Prohibition of saline amniocentesis: Invalid. The Act prohibits the abortion technique of saline amniocentesis, or withdrawing of the amniotic fluid, after the first 12 weeks of pregnancy. Held, this provision is unconstitutional. It would prohibit the use of a method shown to be the one most commonly used nationally by physicians after the first trimester, and would force a woman and her physician to use methods more dangerous to her health. Hence, it cannot be upheld as a regulation reasonably related to maternal health, despite the legislative finding to that effect; instead, it is "an unreasonable or arbitrary regulation designed to inhibit, and having the effect of inhibiting, the vast majority of abortions after the first 12 weeks." (96 S.Ct. 2845, 49 L.Ed.2d 810.)

(f) Recordkeeping: Valid. The Act requires recordkeeping by health facilities and physicians for all abortions, with the declared purpose of obtaining statistical information to aid in preservation of maternal health and life, and with adequate safeguards of confidentiality. Held, the provisions, "while perhaps approaching permissible limits, are not constitutionally offensive in themselves." It may be assumed that they will not be enforced in a way that would indirectly accomplish the restrictions on abortions herein held unconstitutional. (96 S.Ct. 2846, 2847, 49 L.Ed.2d 811, 812.)

(g) Standard of care: Invalid. The Act provides that a person who performs or induces an abortion must exercise the same degree of professional care "to preserve the life and health of the fetus" that he would be required to exercise to preserve the health of a fetus intended to be born; and civil and criminal penalties are imposed for violation. Held, this provision is unconstitutional. "It does not specify that such care need be taken only after the stage of viability has been reached . . . [I]t impermissibly requires the physician to preserve the life and health of the fetus, whatever the stage of pregnancy." (96 S.Ct. 2847, 49 L.Ed.2d 813.)

Two justices filed a concurring opinion (96 S.Ct. 2850, 49 L.Ed.2d 816), three joined in an opinion concurring and dissenting (96 S.Ct. 2851, 49 L.Ed.2d 818), and one filed a separate opinion concurring and dissenting (96 S.Ct. 2856, 49 L.Ed.2d 823). (See 10 Southwestern L. Rev. 177.)

In Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health (1983) 462 U.S. 416, 103 S.Ct. 2481, 76 L.Ed.2d 687, the Court, invalidating several provisions of a city ordinance, reaffirmed Roe v. Wade. (103 S.Ct. 2487, 76 L.Ed.2d 696.) In a detailed analysis of the provisions and their effects, the following requirements were held unconstitutional: (a) A requirement that an abortion after the end of the first trimester must be performed in a hospital. (103 S.Ct. 2493 et seq., 76 L.Ed.2d 705 et seq.) (b) A requirement that an abortion on a minor under 15 have the informed written consent of a parent or guardian, or an order of court. (103 S.Ct. 2497 et seq., 76 L.Ed.2d 708 et seq.) (c) A requirement of the informed written consent of the woman after detailed oral information by her attending physician of all aspects of the pregnancy and the risks of abortion. (103 S.Ct. 2499 et seq., 76 L.Ed.2d 710 et seq.) (d) A requirement that the attending physician must inform the woman of the particular risks, the abortion techniques, subsequent care, etc. (103 S.Ct. 2501 et seq., 76 L.Ed.2d 713 et seq.) (e) A prohibition against performance of an abortion until 24 hours after the woman signs a consent form. (103 S.Ct. 2503, 76 L.Ed.2d 715.) (f) A requirement that physicians performing abortions insure that the remains of the unborn child are disposed of in "a humane and sanitary manner." (103 S.Ct. 2503, 2504, 76 L.Ed.2d 716, 717.) (See Planned Parenthood v. Ashcroft (1983) 462 U.S. 476, 103 S.Ct. 2517, 76 L.Ed.2d 733 [Missouri statute: hospital requirement is unconstitutional under Akron, but requirements of pathology report for all abortions, second physician for abortion of viable fetus, and parental or Juvenile Court consent for abortion sought by minor, were upheld]; Simopoulos v. Virginia (1983) 462 U.S. 506, 103 S.Ct. 2352, 76 L.Ed.2d 755 [upholding requirement that second-trimester abortions be performed in licensed clinics]; 97 Harv. L. Rev. 78 [Akron and Ashcroft].)

Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists (1986) 476 U.S. 747, 106 S.Ct. 2169, 90 L.Ed.2d 779, held unconstitutional the following provisions of a Pennsylvania abortion control statute: (a) an informed-consent requirement, calling for specified information to a woman seeking an abortion; (b) abortion reporting requirements with records available to the public; (c) a particular standard of care required when aborting a viable fetus; and (d) a requirement that a second physician be present during an abortion. "The States are not free, under the guise of protecting maternal health or potential life, to intimidate women into continuing pregnancies. ... Close analysis of those provisions ... shows that they wholly subordinate constitutional privacy interests and concerns with maternal health in an effort to deter a woman from making a decision that, with her physician, is hers to make." (106 S.Ct. 2178, 90 L.Ed.2d 792.) (See 100 Harv. L. Rev. 200.)

The provisions relating to informed consent that were held unconstitutional in Akron and Thornburgh were upheld in Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. Casey (1992) 505 U.S. 833, 112 S.Ct. 2791, 120 L.Ed.2d 674, infra, §565.

[§ 564] Webster Case.

In Webster v. Reproductive Health Services (1989) 492 U.S. 490, 109 S.Ct. 3040, 106 L.Ed.2d 410, a Missouri statute amended existing state law concerning unborn children and abortion. In this class action challenging the constitutionality of certain provisions, the Court considered four sections of the Act: (1) the preamble, stating the rights of unborn children; (2) the prohibition of the use of public facilities or employees to perform abortions; (3) the prohibition on public funding of abortion counseling; and (4) the requirement that physicians conduct viability tests prior to performing abortions. Held, in a plurality opinion, the challenged provisions were valid.

(a) Preamble. This states that the life of each human being begins at conception, that unborn children have protectable interests in life, health, and well-being, and that state laws are to be interpreted to provide them with all the rights, privileges, and immunities available to other persons. (109 S.Ct. 3049, 106 L.Ed.2d 426.) This provision does not restrict the activities of plaintiffs in any concrete manner, and until applied, the Court need not pass on its constitutionality. (109 S.Ct. 3050, 106 L.Ed.2d 428.)

(b) Prohibition on Use of Public Facilities or Employees To Perform Abortions. "Nothing in the Constitution requires States to enter or remain in the business of performing abortions." (109 S.Ct. 3052, 106 L.Ed.2d 430.) Maier v. Roe (1977) 432 U.S. 464, 97 S.Ct. 2376, 53 L.Ed.2d 484, infra, §568, supports the view that the state need not commit any resources to facilitating abortion. Hence, the Act's restrictions are valid. (109 S.Ct. 3052, 353, 106 L.Ed.2d 431.)

(c) Prohibition on Public Funding of Abortion Counseling. Plaintiffs no longer seek a declaratory judgment on this issue, and the controversy is therefore moot. (109 S.Ct. 3053, 106 L.Ed.2d 432.)

(d) Requirement That Physicians Conduct Viability Tests Prior to Performing Abortions. This section "creates what is essentially a presumption of viability at 20 weeks, which the physician must rebut with tests indicating that the fetus is not viable prior to performing an abortion." (109 S.Ct. 3055, 106 L.Ed.2d 434.) "The State here has chosen viability as the point at which its interest in potential human life must be safeguarded. ... It is true that the tests in question increase the expense of abortion, and regulate the discretion of the physician in determining the viability of the fetus. Since the tests will undoubtedly show in many cases that the fetus is not viable, the tests will have been performed for what were in fact second-trimester abortions. But we are satisfied that the requirement of these tests permissibly furthers the State's interest in protecting potential human life." (109 S.Ct. 3057, 106 L.Ed.2d 437.)

The opinion rejects the suggestion that the Court overrule Roe v. Wade (1973) 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147, supra, §561, pointing out that the facts of the present case differ from those at issue in Roe. "Here, Missouri has determined that viability is the point at which its interest in potential human life must be safeguarded. In Roe, on the other hand, the Texas statute criminalized the performance of all abortions, except when the mother's life was at stake. ... This case therefore affords us no occasion to revisit the holding of Roe, which was that the Texas statute unconstitutionally infringed the right to an abortion derived from the Due Process Clause ... , and we leave it undisturbed. To the extent indicated in our opinion, we would modify and narrow Roe and succeeding cases." (109 S.Ct. 3058, 106 L.Ed.2d 438.)

Four additional opinions were filed, two concurring in part, and two concurring and dissenting in part. (109 S.Ct. 3059, 3064, 3067, 3079, 106 L.Ed.2d 438, 445, 448, 463.) (See 77 Cal. L. Rev. 1181 [discussing question left open in Webster whether "prohibition on abortion counseling and referral in public funded family planning clinics violates the First Amendment"]; 18 Pepperdine L. Rev. 955 [Webster]; for discussion of "viability" vs. "trimester" rules, see Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. Casey (1992) 505 U.S. 833, 112 S.Ct. 2791, 120 L.Ed.2d 674, infra, §565.)

5. Casey Case.

[§ 565] Casey Case.

Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. Casey (1992) 505 U.S. 833, 112 S.Ct. 2791, 120 L.Ed.2d 674, involved the constitutionality of five provisions of the Pennsylvania Abortion Control Act of 1982. (1) A woman seeking an abortion must give her informed consent and be provided with certain information at least 24 hours before the abortion is performed. (2) For a minor to obtain an abortion the Act requires the informed consent of her parents, but offers a judicial bypass option if the minor does not wish to or cannot obtain such consent. (3) Unless certain exceptions apply, a married woman must sign a statement indicating that she has notified her husband of her intended abortion. (4) The Act exempts compliance with these three requirements in the event of a "medical emergency." (5) The Act imposes certain reporting requirements on facilities that provide abortion services. The lead opinion, reaffirming the essential holding of Roe v. Wade (1973) 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147, supra, §561, held that all the provisions were valid except that requiring spousal notification.

(a) Reaffirmation of Roe v. Wade.

(1) Roe's essential holding has three parts: "First is a recognition of the right of the woman to choose to have an abortion before viability and to obtain it without undue interference from the State. Before viability, the State's interests are not strong enough to support a prohibition of abortion or the imposition of a substantial obstacle to the woman's effective right to elect the procedure. Second is a confirmation of the State's power to restrict abortions after fetal viability, if the law contains exceptions for pregnancies which endanger a woman's life or health. And third is the principle that the State has legitimate interests from the outset of the pregnancy in protecting the health of the woman and the life of the fetus that may become a child. These principles do not contradict one another; and we adhere to each." (112 S.Ct. 2804, 120 L.Ed.2d 694.)

(2) In some critical respects the abortion decision is of the same character as the decision to use contraception, to which Griswold v. Connecticut (1965) 381 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 14 L.Ed.2d 510, supra, §560, Eisenstadt v. Baird (1972) 405 U.S. 438, 92 S.Ct. 1029, 31 L.Ed.2d 349, supra, §560, and Carey v. Population Services, Int. (1977) 431 U.S. 678, 97 S.Ct. 2010, 52 L.Ed.2d 675, afford constitutional protection. "We have no doubt as to the correctness of those decisions. They support the reasoning in Roe relating to the woman's liberty because they involve personal decisions concerning not only the meaning of procreation but also human responsibility and respect for it. As with abortion, reasonable people will have differences of opinion about these matters. One view is based on such reverence for the wonder of creation that any pregnancy ought to be welcomed and carried to full term no matter how difficult it will be to provide for the child and ensure its well-being. Another is that the inability to provide for the nurture and care of the infant is a cruelty to the child and an anguish to the parent. These are intimate views with infinite variations, and their deep personal character underlay our decisions in Griswold, Eisenstadt, and Carey. The same concerns are present when the woman confronts the reality that, perhaps despite her attempts to avoid it, she has become pregnant." (112 S.Ct. 2807, 120 L.Ed.2d 699.)

(3) "It was this dimension of personal liberty that Roe sought to protect, and its holding invoked the reasoning and the tradition of the precedents we have discussed, granting protection to substantive liberties of the person. Roe was, of course, an extension of those cases and, as the decision itself indicated, the separate States could act in some degree to further their own legitimate interests in protecting pre-natal life. The extent to which the legislatures of the States might act to outweigh the interests of the woman in choosing to terminate her pregnancy was a subject of debate both in Roe itself and in decisions following it." (112 S.Ct. 2808, 120 L.Ed.2d 699.)

(b) Stare decisis as a reason for reaffirming Roe.

(1) The rule of stare decisis is not an "inexorable command." "Rather, when this Court reexamines a prior holding, its judgment is customarily informed by a series of prudential and pragmatic considerations designed to test the consistency of overruling a prior decision with the ideal of the rule of law, and to gauge the respective costs of reaffirming and overruling a prior case. Thus, for example, we may ask whether the rule has proved to be intolerable simply in defying practical workability ... ; whether the rule is subject to a kind of reliance that would lend a special hardship to the consequences of overruling and add inequity to the cost of repudiation ... ; whether related principles of law have so far developed as to have left the old rule no more than a remnant of abandoned doctrine ... ; or whether facts have so changed or come to be seen so differently, as to have robbed the old rule of significant application or justification." (112 S.Ct. 2808, 120 L.Ed.2d 700.) (See 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Appeal, §§917 et seq., 949 et seq.)

(2) Roe "has in no sense proven 'unworkable,' ... representing as it does a simple limitation beyond which a state law is unenforceable." (112 S.Ct. 2809, 120 L.Ed.2d 700.)

(3) "We have seen how time has overtaken some of Roe's factual assumptions: advances in maternal health care allow for abortions safe to the mother later in pregnancy than was true in 1973 ... , and advances in neonatal care have advanced viability to a point somewhat earlier ... But these facts go only to the scheme of time limits on the realization of competing interests, and the divergences from the factual premises of 1973 have no bearing on the validity of Roe's central holding, that viability marks the earliest point at which the State's interest in fetal life is constitutionally adequate to justify a legislative ban on nontherapeutic abortions." (112 S.Ct. 2811, 120 L.Ed.2d 703.)

(4) "Because neither the factual underpinnings of Roe's central holding nor our understanding of it has changed (and because no other indication of weakened precedent has been shown) the Court could not pretend to be reexamining the prior law with any justification beyond a present doctrinal disposition to come out differently from the Court of 1973. To overrule prior law for no other reason than that would run counter to the view repeated in our cases, that a decision to overrule should rest on some special reason over and above the belief that a prior case was wrongly decided." (112 S.Ct. 2813, 120 L.Ed.2d 706.)

(c) In overruling, the Court must render legally principled decisions.

(1) "The Court must take care to speak and act in ways that allow people to accept its decisions on the terms the Court claims for them, as grounded truly in principle, not as compromises with social and political pressures having, as such, no bearing on the principled choices that the Court is obliged to make." (112 S.Ct. 2814, 120 L.Ed.2d 707.) "[O]nly the most convincing justification under accepted standards of precedent could suffice to demonstrate that a later decision overruling the first was anything but a surrender to political pressure, and an unjustified repudiation of the principle on which the Court staked its authority in the first instance." (112 S.Ct. 2815, 120 L.Ed.2d 708.)

(2) To give real substance to the woman's liberty to determine whether to carry her pregnancy to full term calls for a line that is clear; and the line should be drawn at viability, so that before that time the woman has a right to choose to terminate her pregnancy. (112 S.Ct. 2816, 120 L.Ed.2d 710.) "A logical reading of the central holding in Roe itself, and a necessary reconciliation of the liberty of the woman and the interest of the State in promoting prenatal life, require, in our view, that we abandon the trimester framework as a rigid prohibition on all previability regulation aimed at the protection of fetal life. The trimester framework suffers from these basic flaws: in its formulation it misconceives the nature of the pregnant woman's interest; and in practice it undervalues the State's interest in potential life, as recognized in Roe." (112 S.Ct. 2818, 120 L.Ed.2d 712.)

(3) Not all burdens on the right to decide whether to terminate a pregnancy will be undue; and the "undue burden" standard is the appropriate means of reconciling the State's interest with the woman's constitutionally protected liberty." (112 S.Ct. 2820, 120 L.Ed.2d 714.) "An undue burden exists, and therefore a provision of law is invalid, if its purpose or effect is to place a substantial obstacle in the path of a woman seeking an abortion before the fetus attains viability." (112 S.Ct. 2821, 120 L.Ed.2d 715.) The state may take measures to ensure that the woman's choice is informed, and measures designed to advance this interest will not be invalidated as long as their purpose is to persuade the woman to choose childbirth over abortion. (112 S.Ct. 2821, 120 L.Ed.2d 716.) The state may also enact regulations to further the health or safety of a woman seeking an abortion. (112 S.Ct. 2821, 120 L.Ed.2d 716.) And, subsequent to viability, the state may regulate and even proscribe abortion except where it is necessary for the preservation of the life or health of the mother. (112 S.Ct. 2821, 120 L.Ed.2d 716.)

(d) Validity of challenged provisions of Pennsylvania statute.

(1) The statute's definition of medical emergency, as construed by the Court of Appeals, imposes no undue burden on a woman's abortion right. (112 S.Ct. 2822, 120 L.Ed.2d 716.)

(2) The informed consent requirement is not an undue burden. "[W]e depart from the holdings of Akron I and Thornburgh to the extent that we permit a State to further its legitimate goal of protecting the life of the unborn by enacting legislation aimed at ensuring a decision that is mature and informed, even when in so doing the State expresses a preference for childbirth over abortion. In short, requiring that the woman be informed of the availability of information relating to fetal development and the assistance available should she decide to carry the pregnancy to full term is a reasonable measure to insure an informed choice, one which might cause the woman to choose childbirth over abortion." (112 S.Ct. 2824, 120 L.Ed.2d 719, citing Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health (1983) 462 U.S. 416, 103 S.Ct. 2481, 76 L.Ed.2d 687, supra, §563, and Thornburgh v. American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists (1986) 476 U.S. 747, 106 S.Ct. 2169, 90 L.Ed.2d 779, supra, §563.)

(3) The requirement of a signed statement from the woman that she has notified her spouse that she is about to undergo an abortion is an undue burden, and therefore invalid. (112 S.Ct. 2830, 120 L.Ed.2d 726.) Planned Parenthood of Cen. Missouri v. Danforth (1976) 428 U.S. 52, 96 S.Ct. 2831, 49 L.Ed.2d 788, supra, §563, held that the state cannot require a married woman to obtain her husband's consent. "The principles that guided the Court in Danforth should be our guides today. For the great many women who are victims of abuse inflicted by their husbands, or whose children are the victims of such abuse, a spousal notice requirement enables the husband to wield an effective veto over his wife's decision. Whether the prospect of notification itself deters such women from seeking abortions, or whether the husband, through physical force or psychological pressure or economic coercion, prevents his wife from obtaining an abortion until it is too late, the notice requirement will often be tantamount to the veto found unconstitutional in Danforth." (112 S.Ct. 2831, 120 L.Ed.2d 728.)

(4) The one-parent consent provision for an unemancipated young woman under 18, with its judicial bypass procedure, is valid under Ohio v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health (1990) 497 U.S. 502, 110 S.Ct. 2972, 111

L.Ed.2d 405 (Akron II), and Hodgson v. Minnesota (1990) 497 U.S. 417, 110 S.Ct. 2926, 111 L.Ed.2d 344, infra, §567. (112 S.Ct. 2832, 120 L.Ed.2d 729.)

(5) The recordkeeping and reporting provisions reasonably directed to the preservation of maternity health and properly respecting a patient's confidentiality and privacy are valid under Danforth. (112 S.Ct. 2832, 120 L.Ed.2d 729.) But the provision requiring reporting of a woman's reason for failure to provide notice to her husband is not. "This provision in effect requires women, as a condition of obtaining an abortion, to provide the Commonwealth with the precise information we have already recognized that many women have pressing reasons not to reveal. Like the spousal notice requirement itself, this provision places an undue burden on a woman's choice, and must be invalidated for that reason." (112 S.Ct. 2833, 120 L.Ed.2d 730.)

Four additional opinions were filed, two of which were by four justices, all concurring and dissenting in part. (112 S.Ct. 2838, 2943, 2855, 2873, 120 L.Ed.2d 738, 744, 758, 781.) (See 106 Harv. L. Rev. 201; 23 Hastings Const. L. Q. 825 [problems in applying Casey undue burdens standard]; 28 Loyola L.A. L. 6. Partial Birth Abortion.

[§ 566] Partial Birth Abortion.

In Stenberg v. Carhart (2000) 530 U.S. 914, 120 S.Ct. 2597, 147 L.Ed.2d 743, the Court applied Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. Casey (1992) 505 U.S. 833, 112 S.Ct. 2791, 120 L.Ed.2d 674, supra, §565, to a Nebraska statute banning "partial birth abortion" except to save the mother's life. The statutory definition of "partial birth abortion" includes partially delivering vaginally "a living unborn child before killing the unborn child and completing the delivery." Partially delivering a child in this manner means "deliberately and intentionally delivering into the vagina a living unborn child, or a substantial portion thereof" for the purpose of killing the unborn child. Held, the statute is unconstitutional.

(a) Abortion methods in second trimester. A partial birth abortion, as described above, is also known as a D & X or an intact D & E abortion. D & E generally refers to a transcervical procedure used after 13 weeks of gestation in which the cervix is dilated, instruments are used to remove fetal and placental tissue, and the walls of the uterus are then scraped with a curette to ensure that no tissue remains. Often the fetus is not removed intact. After 15 weeks, dismemberment or other destructive procedures are frequently necessary because the fetus is larger and bones are more rigid. "When instrumental disarticulation incident to D & E is necessary, it typically occurs as the doctor pulls a portion of the fetus through the cervix into the birth canal." (120 S.Ct. 2606, 147 L.Ed.2d 756.)

(b) Risks of D & E abortion. "The D & E procedure carries certain risks. The use of instruments within the uterus creates a danger of accidental perforation and damage to neighboring organs. Sharp fetal bone fragments create similar dangers. And fetal tissue accidentally left behind can cause infection and various other complications. ... Nonetheless studies show that the risks of mortality and complication that accompany the D & E procedure between the 12th and 20th weeks of gestation are significantly lower than those accompanying induced labor procedures (the next safest midsecond trimester procedures)." (120 S.Ct. 2607, 147 L.Ed.2d 756.)

(c) Advantages of D & X (partial birth) abortion. The D & X procedure involves less risk of uterine perforation or cervical laceration than a D & E involving dismemberment because it requires "fewer passes into the uterus with sharp instruments and reduces the presence of sharp fetal bone fragments that can injure the uterus and cervix. There is also considerable evidence that D & X reduces the risk of retained fetal tissue, a serious abortion complication that can cause maternal death, and that D & X reduces the incidence of a 'free floating' fetal head that can be difficult for a physician to grasp and remove and can thus cause maternal injury." (120 S.Ct. 2612, 147 L.Ed.2d 762, quoting amici brief for American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.) D & X also usually takes less time, with less blood loss and trauma. (120 S.Ct. 2612, 147 L.Ed.2d 763.)

(d) Lack of exception for health of mother. "[A] State may promote but not endanger a woman's health when it regulates the methods of abortion." (120 S.Ct. 2609, 147 L.Ed.2d 759.) This principle is not limited to situations where the pregnancy itself creates a threat to health. (120 S.Ct. 2609, 147 L.Ed.2d 759.) Thus, a state cannot force women to use methods of abortion that pose significant health risks. (120 S.Ct. 2609, 147 L.Ed.2d 760.) Here, because substantial medical authority supports the proposition that banning D & X could endanger women's health, Casey requires the statute to include an exception when it is necessary for the preservation of the mother's life or health. (120 S.Ct. 2613, 147 L.Ed.2d 764.)

(e) Statute bans D & X and D & E procedures. The plain language of the statute bans both procedures because they both "can involve the introduction of a 'substantial portion' of a still living fetus, through the cervix, into the vagina." (120 S.Ct. 2614, 147 L.Ed.2d 765.) The statute "thereby places an 'undue burden' upon a woman's right to terminate her pregnancy before viability." (120 S.Ct. 2613, 147 L.Ed.2d 764.)

Seven additional opinions were filed, three concurring (120 S.Ct. 2617, 2620, 147 L.Ed.2d 768, 769, 772), and four dissenting (120 S.Ct. 2620, 2621, 2623, 2635, 147 L.Ed.2d 772, 773, 775, 789). The dissenters assert that the majority's decision is an unprecedented expansion of prior cases and one not mandated by Casey's "undue burden" test. (120 S.Ct. 2621, 2651, 147 L.Ed.2d 774, 808.) (See 114 Harv. L. Rev. 219 [Stenberg]; 48 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1125 [Stenberg and family privacy].)

In Gonzales v. Carhart (2007) 550 U.S. 124, 127 S.Ct. 1610, 167 L.Ed.2d 480, the Court upheld the validity of the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act of 2003, 18 U.S.C., §1531. The Act punishes any physician who "knowingly performs a partial-birth abortion," as defined, except "to save the life of a mother whose life is endangered by a physical disorder, physical illness, or physical injury, including a life-endangering physical condition caused by or arising from the pregnancy itself." (127 S.Ct. 1624, 167 L.Ed.2d 499.)

(a) Act is not void for vagueness. The Act defines a partial birth abortion in explicit terms, including that the physician performing the abortion must vaginally deliver "a living fetus." Hence, the Act does not apply to delivery of an expired fetus or to abortions that do not involve vaginal delivery. Further, the Act's definition requires that the entire fetal head be outside the mother's body, or, in the case of a breech presentation, that a part of the fetal trunk past the navel be outside the mother's body. The physician must perform an "overt act," separate from delivery, that "kills the partially delivered living fetus." All the actions involved in the prohibited abortion contain scienter requirements; no crime is committed absent the requisite state of mind. (127 S.Ct. 1627, 167 L.Ed.2d 503.)

(b) Act is not invalid on its face. The Act sets forth an anatomical landmark that provides doctors of ordinary intelligence with guidelines concerning prohibited conduct, and objective criteria to judge whether a prohibited procedure has been performed. The scienter requirement protects a physician who performs a D & E procedure on a fetus that is delivered beyond the prohibited point by mistake. (127 S.Ct. 1628, 167 L.Ed.2d 504.)

(c) Act does not impose undue burden. The Act's restrictions on second trimester abortions are not overly broad. Although the intact D & E procedure is prohibited, the Act does not prohibit the D & E procedure in which a fetus is removed in parts. (127 S.Ct. 1629, 167 L.Ed.2d 505.) To meet the objections made to the Nebraska partial birth abortion statute in Stenberg v. Carhart (2000) 530 U.S. 914, 120 S.Ct. 2597, 147 L.Ed.2d 743, text, p. 935, Congress eliminated any reference to delivering a "substantial portion" of the fetus, and instead, identified specific anatomical landmarks to which the fetus must be partially delivered. (127 S.Ct. 1630, 167 L.Ed.2d 506.) Further, Congress required that the fatal overt act after delivery must be something other than completion of delivery. (127 S.Ct. 1631, 167 L.Ed.2d 507.)

(d) Act does not impose substantial obstacle to previability abortions. "Where it has a rational basis to act, and it does not impose an undue burden, the State may use its regulatory power to bar certain procedures and substitute others, all in furtherance of its legitimate interests in regulating the medical profession in order to promote respect for life, including life of the unborn." (127 S.Ct 1633, 167 L.Ed.2d 509, 510.) The partial birth abortion ban furthers the state's objectives. Congress could conclude that the banned procedure "requires specific regulation because it implicates additional ethical and moral concerns that justify a special prohibition." Congress determined that the banned procedure had a "disturbing similarity to the killing of a newborn infant." Further, the future emotional repercussions that the lack of information a mother has about how her fetus will be killed is of legitimate concern to the state. (127 S.Ct 1633, 1634, 167 L.Ed.2d 510.) Although the standard D & E procedure may be as brutal as an intact D & E, the intact procedure is different because it occurs when the fetus is partially outside of the mother's body. (127 S.Ct 1634, 167 L.Ed.2d 511.) Hence, it was reasonable for Congress to believe that the intact procedure "undermines the public's perception of the appropriate role of a physician during the delivery process, and perverts a process during which life is brought into the world." (127 S.Ct 1635, 167 L.Ed.2d 511.)

(e) Act does not require health exception. The lack of an exception for the health of the mother does not have the effect of imposing an unconstitutional burden on the abortion right. (127 S.Ct 1637, 167 L.Ed.2d 513.) Whether the Act creates significant health risks for women is a contested factual question in the medical community. (127 S.Ct 1635, 167 L.Ed.2d 511, 512.) This medical uncertainty "provides a sufficient basis to conclude in this facial attack that the Act does not impose an undue burden." (127 S.Ct 1637, 167 L.Ed.2d 513.) Further, alternatives to the prohibited procedure are available. For example, because the Act requires delivery of a living fetus, an injection that kills the fetus could be used if the intact procedure was truly necessary. (127 S.Ct 1637, 167 L.Ed.2d 514.)

(f) Act is open to proper as-applied challenge. A facial attack was not the proper method to challenge the constitutionality of the Act. The nature of the medical risk to women could be better quantified and balanced in an as-applied challenge. (127 S.Ct 1638, 167 L.Ed.2d 515.) The Act is still "open to a proper as-applied challenge in a discrete case." (127 S.Ct 1639, 167 L.Ed.2d 504.)

Two justices joined in a concurring opinion, reiterating their view that the Court's abortion jurisprudence has no basis in the Constitution. (127 S.Ct 1639, 167 L.Ed.2d 516.) Four justices dissented, partly on the ground that the Court's disposition retreats from prior rulings, like Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. Casey (1992) 505 U.S. 833, 112 S.Ct. 2791, 120 L.Ed.2d 674, text, §565, and Stenberg, supra, requiring that abortion restrictions include an exception safeguarding the health of the mother. (127 S.Ct 1640, 167 L.Ed.2d 517.) (See 121 Harv. L. Rev. 265 [Gonzales v. Carhart]; 81 So. Cal. L. Rev. 877 [same]; 42 U.S.F. L. Rev. 227 [dismantling Roe--unconstitutional purpose behind federal Partial Birth Abortion Act of 2003].)

4. Abortion.

b. Notification of Parents.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 567

[§ 567] Notification of Parents.

In H.L. v. Matheson (1981) 450 U.S. 398, 101 S.Ct. 1164, 67 L.Ed.2d 388, a Utah statute requiring a physician to notify the parent of a minor seeking an abortion was upheld; it gave neither parents nor judges a veto power over the minor's abortion decision. (See 95 Harv. L. Rev. 142; 19 Cal. Western L. Rev. 74; 77 A.L.R.5th 1 [parental notification and consent statutes].)

In Hodgson v. Minnesota (1990) 497 U.S. 417, 110 S.Ct. 2926, 111 L.Ed.2d 344, the Court, in a number of differing opinions, considered the constitutionality of the Minnesota parental notice statute. Subdivision 2 of the statute provides that no abortion shall be performed on a woman under 18 until at least 48 hours after both of her parents have been notified, unless (1) the attending physician certifies that an immediate abortion is necessary, (2) both parents have consented in writing, or (3) the woman declares that she is a victim of parental abuse or neglect. Subdivision 6 of the statute provides that if a court enjoins the enforcement of subdivision 2, the same notice requirement is effective unless a court order permits the abortion to proceed. The lead opinion states:

"For reasons that follow, we now conclude that the requirement of notice to both of the pregnant minor's parents is not reasonably related to legitimate state interests and that subdivision 2 is unconstitutional. A different majority of the Court, for reasons stated in separate opinions, concludes that subdivision 6 is constitutional." (110 S.Ct. 2930, 111 L.Ed.2d 353.)

The lead opinion's reasoning on subdivision 2 appears in the following excerpts:

(a) "A woman's decision to conceive or to bear a child is a component of her liberty that is protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution." And "the constitutional protection against unjustified state intrusion into the process of deciding whether or not to bear a child extends to pregnant minors as well as adult women." (110 S.Ct. 2936, 2937, 111 L.Ed.2d 360.)

(b) "In cases involving abortion, as in cases involving the right to travel or the right to marry, the identification of the constitutionally protected interest is merely the beginning of the analysis. State regulation of travel and of marriage is obviously permissible even though a State may not categorically exclude nonresidents from its borders, ... or deny prisoners the right to marry. ... But the regulation of constitutionally protected decisions such as where a person shall reside or whom he or she shall marry, must be predicated on legitimate state concerns other than disagreement with the choice the individual has made. ... In the abortion area, a State may have no obligation to spend its own money, or use its own facilities, to subsidize nontherapeutic abortions for minors or adults. ... A State's value judgment favoring childbirth over abortion may provide adequate support for decisions involving such allocation of public funds, but not for simply substituting a state decision for an individual decision that a woman has a right to make for herself. Otherwise, the interest in liberty protected by the Due Process Clause would be a nullity. A state policy favoring childbirth over abortion is not in itself a sufficient justification for overriding the woman's decision or for placing obstacles--absolute or otherwise--in the pregnant woman's path to an abortion." (110 S.Ct. 2937, 111 L.Ed.2d 361.)

(c) "Three separate but related interests--the interest in the welfare of the pregnant minor, the interest of the parents, and the interest of the family unit--are relevant to our consideration of the constitutionality of the 48-hour waiting period and the two-parent notification requirement." (110 S.Ct. 2941, 111 L.Ed.2d 366.)

(1) It is "clear that a requirement that a minor wait 48 hours after notifying a single parent of her intention to get an abortion would reasonably further the legitimate state interest in ensuring that the minor's decision is knowing and intelligent. ... To the extent that subdivision 2 ... requires notification of only one parent, it does just that. The brief waiting period provides the parent the opportunity to consult with his or her spouse and a family physician, and it permits the parent to inquire into the competency of the doctor performing the abortion, discuss the religious or moral implications of the abortion decision, and provide the daughter needed guidance and counsel in evaluating the impact of the decision on her future." (110 S.Ct. 2944, 111 L.Ed.2d 369.) The 48-hour delay "imposes only a minimal burden on the right of the minor to decide whether or not to terminate her pregnancy." (110 S.Ct. 2944, 111 L.Ed.2d 369.)

(2) "It is equally clear that the requirement that both parents be notified, whether or not both wish to be notified or have assumed responsibility for the upbringing of the child, does not reasonably further any legitimate state interest. The usual justification for a parental consent or notification provision is that it supports the authority of a parent who is presumed to act in the minor's best interest and thereby assures that the minor's decision to terminate her pregnancy is knowing, intelligent, and deliberate. To the extent that such an interest is legitimate, it would be fully served by a requirement that the minor notify one parent who can then seek the counsel of his or her mate or any other party, when such advice and support is deemed necessary to help the child make a difficult decision. In the ideal family setting, of course, notice to either parent would normally constitute notice to both. A statute requiring two-parent notification would not further any state interest in those instances. In many families, however, the parent notified by the child would not notify the other parent. In those cases the State has no legitimate interest in questioning one parent's judgment that notice to the other parent would not assist the minor or in presuming that the parent who has assumed parental duties is incompetent to make decisions regarding the health and welfare of the child." (110 S.Ct. 2945, 111 L.Ed.2d 370.)

(3) "Not only does two-parent notification fail to serve any state interest with respect to functioning families, it disservices the state interest in protecting and assisting the minor with respect to dysfunctional families. The record reveals that in the thousands of dysfunctional families affected by this statute, the two-parent notice requirement proved positively harmful to the minor and her family. ... In some cases, the parents were divorced and the second parent did not have custody or otherwise participate in the child's upbringing. ... In these circumstances, the privacy of the parent and child was violated, even when they suffered no physical or psychological harm. In other instances, however, the second parent had either deserted or abused the child, ... had died under tragic circumstances, ... or was not notified because of the considered judgment that notification would inflict unnecessary stress on a parent who was ill. ... In these circumstances, the statute was not merely ineffectual in achieving the State's goals but actually counterproductive. The focus on notifying the second parent distracted both the parent and minor from the minor's imminent abortion decision." (110 S.Ct. 2945, 111 L.Ed.2d 371.)

(4) "Nor can any state interest in protecting a parent's interest in shaping a child's values and lifestyle overcome the liberty interests of a minor acting with the consent of a single parent or court." Under Planned Parenthood of Cen. Missouri v. Danforth (1976) 428 U.S. 52, 96 S.Ct. 2831, 49 L.Ed.2d 788, supra, §563, "the combined force of the separate interests of one parent and the minor's privacy interest must outweigh the separate interest of the second parent." (110 S.Ct. 2946, 111 L.Ed.2d 372.) (See 104 Harv. L. Rev. 247 [Hodgson]; on "judicial bypass" procedure of minor's petition to juvenile court to authorize abortion without parental notification or consent, see Ohio v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health (1990) 497 U.S. 502, 110 S.Ct. 2972, 111 L.Ed.2d 405 [divided Court's consideration of constitutional issues involved in challenge of Ohio statute]; *Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania v. 4. Abortion.

c. Public Funding of Abortion.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 568

[§ 568] Public Funding of Abortion.

(1) In General. There is no federal constitutional requirement of Medicaid funding of abortion for an indigent woman. Title XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C., §1396 et seq.) does not require a state participating in the Medical Assistance Program to fund the cost of nontherapeutic abortions. (Beal v. Doe (1977) 432 U.S. 438, 97 S.Ct. 2366, 2370, 53 L.Ed.2d 464, 471.) The Equal Protection Clause likewise does not require a state to pay the expenses incident to nontherapeutic abortions for indigent women merely because it pays expenses of childbirth. (Maher v. Roe (1977) 432 U.S. 464, 97 S.Ct. 2376, 2380, 53 L.Ed.2d 484, 492.)

The Court in Maher made it clear that the decision does not proscribe government funding of nontherapeutic abortions; that Congress may require these benefits as a condition of state participation in the Medicaid program; and that a state is free to provide the benefits. "We hold only that the Constitution does not require a judicially imposed resolution of these difficult issues." (97 S.Ct. 2386, 53 L.Ed.2d 498.) (See Harris v. McRae (1980) 448 U.S. 297, 100 S.Ct. 2671, 2683, 65 L.Ed.2d 784, 801 [5-4 decision upholding statutory exclusion of therapeutic abortions from Medicaid coverage]; 91 Harv. L. Q.* 313 [same]; 8 Pepperdine L. Rev. 861 [same]; 118 A.L.R.5th 463 [state restrictions and limitations on public funding for abortions sought by indigent women].)

A different result was reached in California under the California constitutional right of privacy (Cal. Const., Art. I, §1). (See Committee To Defend Reproductive Rights v. Myers (1981) 29 C.3d 252, 172 C.R. 866, 625 P.2d 779, infra, §578.)

(2) Abortion Counseling. In Rust v. Sullivan (1991) 500 U.S. 173, 111 S.Ct. 1759, 114 L.Ed.2d 233, the Court rejected a facial challenge to regulations of the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services that limited the ability of Title X fund recipients to engage in abortion-related activities. The regulations specified that a Title X project "may not provide counseling concerning the use of abortion as a method of family planning or provide referral for abortion as a method of family planning." Petitioners--Title X grantees and doctors supervising Title X funds--contended that the regulations violated the First Amendment because they prohibited "all discussion about abortion as a lawful option--including counseling, referral, and the provision of neutral and accurate information about ending a pregnancy--while compelling the clinic or counsel to provide information that promotes continuing a pregnancy to term." (111 S.Ct. 1771, 114 L.Ed.2d 254.) Held, the regulations were based on a permissible construction of the statute and did not violate the First Amendment.

(a) "Here the Government is exercising the authority it possesses under Maher and McRae to subsidize family planning services which will lead to conception and childbirth, and declining to promote or encourage abortion. ... The Government can, without violating the Constitution, selectively fund a program to encourage certain activities it believes to be in the public interest, without at the same time funding an alternate program which seeks to deal with the problem in another way." (111 S.Ct. 1772, 114 L.Ed.2d 255.)

(b) The regulations do not impermissibly burden a woman's Fifth Amendment rights. "The Government has no constitutional duty to subsidize an activity merely because the activity is constitutionally protected and may validly choose to fund childbirth over abortion and 'implement that judgment by the allocation of public funds' for medical services relating to childbirth but not to those relating to abortion." (111 S.Ct. 1776, 114 L.Ed.2d 260, citing Maher, McRae, and Webster v. Reproductive Health Services (1989) 492 U.S. 490, 109 S.Ct. 3040, 106 L.Ed.2d 410, supra, §564.)

The majority opinion was signed by five justices; three separate dissenting opinions were filed. (111 S.Ct. 1778, 1786, 1788, 114 L.Ed.2d 262, 273, 275.) (See 105 *Harv. L. A. Rights Under Federal Constitution.

5. Right To Marry.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 569

[§ 569] Right To Marry.

(1) In General. In Zablocki v. Redhail (1978) 434 U.S. 374, 98 S.Ct. 673, 54 L.Ed.2d 618, a Wisconsin statute provided that a Wisconsin resident subject to a court order for support of a minor child not in that resident's custody could marry only with court permission on proof of compliance with the support obligation and a demonstration that the child was not then or was not likely thereafter to become a public charge. Held, the statute violated the Equal Protection Clause.

(a) Loving v. Virginia (1967) 388 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1817, 18 L.Ed.2d 1010, infra, §747, and subsequent cases established the right to marry as part of the fundamental right of privacy implicit in the Fourteenth Amendment Due Process Clause. (98 S.Ct. 679, 680, 54 L.Ed.2d 629, 630; see supra, §558.)

(b) The statutory classification directly and substantially interferes with that right. Some members of the class will never be able to obtain the necessary court order because they lack financial means to meet their support obligations or cannot prove that the children will not become public charges; others who can meet the requirements will be sufficiently burdened by having to do so that they will be coerced into foregoing their right. (98 S.Ct. 680, 54 L.Ed.2d 631.)

(c) The state offered evidence that the statute was intended merely to establish a mechanism for counselling persons with support obligations to children of prior marriages, and that court permission was to be automatically granted after counselling. But the statute does not contain this limitation on the power to withhold court permission. (98 S.Ct. 682, 54 L.Ed.2d 632.) And the "collection device" rationale (incentive to the applicant for a marriage license to make support payments to his or her children) cannot justify the broad infringement of the constitutional right; the state has other means of enforcement (wage assignments, civil contempt proceedings, criminal penalties). (98 S.Ct. 682, 683, 54 L.Ed.2d 632, 633.) Also, preventing a marriage may only result in children being born out of wedlock, as in the instant case. (98 S.Ct. 683, 54 L.Ed.2d 633.)

One justice dissented. (98 S.Ct. 692, 54 L.Ed.2d 644.) (See 3 Rotunda, §18.28; 93 Harv. L. Rev. 1248; 6 Hastings Const. L. Q. 91, 155; 12 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 165; for argument in favor of minor's constitutional right to remain married, despite parent or guardian's statutory authority to seek annulment, see 22 Santa Clara L. Rev. 447.)

The right to marry is not unconstitutionally infringed by a statutory provision for termination of allowances to the surviving spouse of a retired judge on the spouse's remarriage. (McCourtney v. Cory (1981) 123 C.A.3d 431, 438, 176 C.R. 639 [following Califano v. Jobst (1977) 434 U.S. 47, 98 S.Ct. 95, 54 L.Ed.2d 228, on remarriage provision of Social Security Act].)

In Turner v. Safley (1987) 482 U.S. 78, 107 S.Ct. 2254, 96 L.Ed.2d 64, a regulation promulgated by the Missouri Division of Corrections permitted an inmate to marry only with the permission of the prison superintendent, which could be given only for "compelling reasons." The term "compelling" was not defined, but prison officials testified that generally only a pregnancy or a birth of an illegitimate child would be considered a compelling reason. Held, the regulation was unconstitutional. "It is undisputed that Missouri prison officials may regulate the time and circumstances under which the marriage ceremony itself takes place. ... On this record, however, the almost complete ban on the decision to marry is not reasonably related to legitimate penological objectives." (107 S.Ct. 2267, 96 L.Ed.2d 85.)

6. Sterilization of Incompetent Conservatee.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 570

[§ 570] Sterilization of Incompetent Conservatee.

In Conservatorship of Valerie N. (1985) 40 C.3d 143, 219 C.R. 387, 707 P.2d 760, the coconservators of the person of Valerie, their adult developmentally disabled daughter, petitioned the probate court for authority to have a tubal ligation performed on her. The probate judge, relying on Prob.C. 2356(d) as it then read (prohibiting sterilization of a ward or conservatee), denied the petition, and the coconservators appealed. Held, the existing statutory scheme was unconstitutional.

(a) Appellants argued that the statute deprived Valerie of the right of procreative choice, while appointed counsel for Valerie contended that the statute furthers that right by protecting her against sterilization forced on her by the will of others. "The sad but irrefragable truth, however, is that Valerie is not now nor will she ever be competent to choose between bearing or not bearing children, or among methods of contraception. The question is whether she has a constitutional right to have these decisions made for her, in this case by her parents as conservators, in order to protect her interests in living the fullest and most rewarding life of which she is capable. At present, her conservators may, on Valerie's behalf, elect that she not bear or rear children. As means of avoiding the severe psychological harm which assertedly would result from pregnancy, they may choose abortion should she become pregnant; they may arrange for any child Valerie might bear to be removed from her custody; and they may impose on her other methods of contraception, including isolation from members of the opposite sex. They are precluded from making, and Valerie from obtaining the advantage of, the one choice that may be best for her, and which is available to all women competent to choose--contraception through sterilization. We conclude that the present legislative scheme, which absolutely precludes the sterilization option, impermissibly deprives the developmentally disabled persons of privacy and liberty interests protected by the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, and article I, section 1 of the California Constitution." (40 C.3d 160.)

(b) "The right to marriage and procreation are now recognized as fundamental, constitutionally protected interests So too, is the right of a woman to choose not to bear children, and to implement that choice by use of contraceptive devices or medication, and, subject to reasonable restrictions, to terminate a pregnancy. These rights are aspects of the right of privacy which exists within the penumbra of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution ... , and is express in section 1 of article I of the California Constitution which includes among the inalienable rights possessed by all persons in this state, that of 'privacy.' They are also within the concept of liberty protected against arbitrary restrictions by the Fourteenth Amendment." (40 C.3d 161.)

(c) "We realize that election of the method of contraception to be utilized, or indeed whether to choose contraception at all, cannot realistically be deemed a 'choice' available to an incompetent since any election must of necessity be made on behalf of the incompetent by others. The interests of the incompetent which mandate recognition of procreative choice as an aspect of the fundamental right to privacy and liberty do not differ from the interests of women able to give voluntary consent to this procedure, however. That these interests include the individual's right to personal growth and development is implicit in decisions of both the United States Supreme Court and this court." (40 C.3d 162.)

(d) "True protection of procreative choice can be accomplished only if the state permits the court-supervised substituted judgment of the conservator to be exercised on behalf of a conservatee who is unable to personally exercise this right. Limiting the exercise of that judgment by denying the right to effective contraception through sterilization to this class of conservatees denies them a right held not only by conservatees who are competent to consent, but by all other women." (40 C.3d 168.) (On 1986 amendment of Prob.C. 2356(d), limiting its prohibition to minors, see 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §1059.)

A. Rights Under Federal Constitution.

7. Withdrawal of Life Support.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 571

[§ 571] Withdrawal of Life Support.

In Cruzan v. Director, Missouri Dept. of Health (1990) 497 U.S. 261, 110 S.Ct. 2841, 111 L.Ed.2d 224, Nancy Cruzan, after a vehicle accident, was in a Missouri state hospital in a persistent vegetative state. Her parents obtained authorization from the state trial court to terminate artificial nutrition and hydration procedures, but the state Supreme Court reversed, holding that, in the absence of a statutory living will, "or clear and convincing evidence," no person can assume the choice of death for an incompetent. The issue before the U.S. Supreme Court was whether Cruzan had a federal constitutional right to require the hospital to withdraw life-sustaining treatment under the circumstances. Held, Missouri judgment affirmed.

(a) After the seminal Quinlan decision in New Jersey, most courts based a right to refuse treatment either solely on the common law right to informed consent or on both the common law right and a constitutional privacy right. (110 S.Ct. 2847, 111 L.Ed.2d 237.) "As these cases demonstrate, the common-law doctrine of informed consent is viewed as generally encompassing the right of a competent individual to refuse medical treatment. Beyond that, these decisions demonstrate both similarity and diversity in their approach to decision of what all agree is a perplexing question with unusually strong moral and ethical overtones. State courts have available to them for decision a number of sources--state constitutions, statutes, and common law--which are not available to us. In this Court, the question is simply and starkly whether the United States Constitution prohibits Missouri from choosing the rule of decision which it did. This is the first case in which we have been squarely presented with the issue of whether the United States Constitution grants what is in common parlance referred to as a 'right to die.' " (110 S.Ct. 2851, 111 L.Ed.2d 241.)

(b) A number of cases determine that a person has a "liberty interest" under the Due Process Clause in refusing medical treatment, and for the purposes of this case "we assume that the United States Constitution would grant a competent person a constitutionally protected right to refuse lifesaving hydration and nutrition." (110 S.Ct. 2852, 111 L.Ed.2d 242.) "Missouri has in effect recognized that under certain circumstances a surrogate may act for the patient ... , but it has established a procedural safeguard to assure that the action of the surrogate conforms as best it may to the wishes expressed by the patient while competent." (110 S.Ct. 2852, 111 L.Ed.2d 243.)

(c) The U.S. Constitution does not forbid the establishment of this procedural requirement. The Due Process Clause protects an interest in life as well as an interest in refusing life-sustaining medical treatment; and a state is entitled to guard against potential abuses in surrogate decisionmaking. Similarly, a state may consider that a judicial proceeding may not be an adversarial one with the guarantee of accurate fact-finding. And a state may properly decline to make judgments about the "quality" of life that a particular individual may enjoy. (110 S.Ct. 2852, 2853, 111 L.Ed.2d 243, 244.)

(d) "In sum, we conclude that a State may apply a clear and convincing evidence standard in proceedings where a guardian seeks to discontinue nutrition and hydration of a person diagnosed to be in a persistent vegetative state. We note that many courts which have adopted some sort of substituted judgment procedure in situations like this, whether they limit consideration of evidence to prior expressed wishes of the incompetent individual, or whether they allow more general proof of what the individual's decision would have been, require a clear and convincing standard of proof for such evidence." (110 S.Ct. 2854, 111 L.Ed.2d 245.) The testimony at the trial consisted primarily of Nancy Cruzan's statement made to a housemate before her accident, and did not deal in terms with withdrawal of life support; the Missouri Court in holding that this did not amount to clear and convincing evidence, did not commit constitutional error. (110 S.Ct. 2855, 111 L.Ed.2d 246.)

(e) "If the State were required by the United States Constitution to repose a right of 'substituted judgment' with anyone, the Cruzans would surely qualify. But we do not think the Due Process clause requires the State to repose judgment on these matters with anyone but the patient herself." (110 S.Ct. 2855, 111 L.Ed.2d 247.)

Two justices filed concurring opinions (110 S.Ct. 2856, 2859, 111 L.Ed.2d 247, 251), three others joined in a dissenting opinion (110 S.Ct. 2863, 111 L.Ed.2d 256), and one filed a separate dissenting opinion (110 S.Ct. 2878, 111 L.Ed.2d 275). (See Conservatorship of Wendland (2001) 26 C.4th 519, 546, 110 C.R.2d 412, 28 P.3d 151, 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §996 [before withholding hydration and nutrition from conscious but incompetent conservatee, conservator must prove by clear and convincing evidence either that conservatee wished to refuse life sustaining treatment or that withholding treatment is in conservatee's best interest]; 31 *Loyola L.A. 8. Assisted Suicide.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 572

[§ 572] Assisted Suicide.

Washington v. Glucksberg (1997) 521 U.S. 702, 117 S.Ct. 2258, 138 L.Ed.2d 772, held that Washington's ban on assisting suicide does not violate the Due Process Clause.

(a) Both suicide and assisted suicide have been punished or otherwise disapproved for over 700 years in the Anglo-American common law tradition. (117 S.Ct. 2263, 138 L.Ed.2d 782.) By the time the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, it was a crime in most states to assist a suicide. (117 S.Ct. 2265, 138 L.Ed.2d 784.) In spite of changes in medical technology and an increased emphasis on end-of-life decisionmaking, the laws in almost every state, as well as almost every western democracy, continue to prohibit assisting suicide. (117 S.Ct. 2265, 2266, 138 L.Ed.2d 785.)

(b) Under substantive due process analysis, the Due Process Clause specially protects fundamental rights and liberties deeply rooted in our nation's history and legal tradition. (117 S.Ct. 2268, 138 L.Ed.2d 787, citing Moore v. East Cleveland, Ohio (1977) 431 U.S. 494, 97 S.Ct. 1932, 52 L.Ed.2d 531 (plurality opinion).) The asserted fundamental liberty interest must be specifically described. (117 S.Ct. 2268, 138 L.Ed.2d 788, citing Reno v. Flores (1993) 507 U.S. 292, 113 S.Ct. 1439, 123 L.Ed.2d 1.)

(c) While our legal tradition has long recognized the right to be free of unwanted medical treatment, even where death may result, this right is widely regarded as distinct from the right to assistance in committing suicide. (117 S.Ct. 2270, 138 L.Ed.2d 791, citing Cruzan v. Director, Missouri Dept. of Health (1990) 497 U.S. 261, 110 S.Ct. 2841, 111 L.Ed.2d 224, supra, §571.) While many of the fundamental rights protected by the Due Process Clause involve personal autonomy, this does not mean that all important, intimate, and personal decisions are so protected. (117 S.Ct. 2271, 138 L.Ed.2d 792.)

(d) Due process requires that Washington's assisted suicide ban be rationally related to legitimate government interests. This requirement is unquestionably met. The legitimate state policies of (1) preservation of human life, (2) protecting the integrity and ethics of the medical profession, (3) protecting vulnerable persons from coercion and undue influence in end-of-life situations and from prejudice, negative stereotypes, and societal indifference, and (4) avoiding policies that open the door to voluntary and even involuntary euthanasia are all reasonably related to the assisted suicide ban. (117 S.Ct. 2271, 138 L.Ed.2d 792.)

In Vacco v. Quill (1997) 521 U.S. 793, 117 S.Ct. 2293, 138 L.Ed.2d 834, several doctors and terminally ill patients brought an action alleging that New York's ban on assisted suicide violates the Equal Protection Clause. Held, the ban does not violate equal protection.

(a) On their faces the statutes permitting patients to refuse medical treatment and the New York ban on physician-assisted suicide treat all persons similarly, permitting no one to assist a suicide and allowing anyone who is competent to refuse medical treatment. Generally, laws that apply evenhandedly to all "unquestionably comply" with the Equal Protection Clause. (117 S.Ct. 2297, 2298, 138 L.Ed.2d 841, citing New York City Transit Authority v. Beazer (1979) 440 U.S. 568, 99 S.Ct. 1355, 59 L.Ed.2d 587.)

(b) The Court of Appeals, however, concluded that terminally ill people who wish to hasten their deaths are not treated equally, since those on life-support systems may "hasten death," while those not on life support may not, because of the ban. But refusing lifesaving measures is not equivalent to assisted suicide for equal protection purposes. (117 S.Ct. 2298, 138 L.Ed.2d 842.)

(1) A patient who refuses life-sustaining medical treatment dies from the underlying pathology, while a patient who ingests lethal medication is killed by that medication. (117 S.Ct. 2298, 138 L.Ed.2d 842.)

(2) A physician who withdraws or does not begin life-sustaining medical care intends to respect the patient's wishes to cease treatment. A physician who assists suicide intends that the patient die. (117 S.Ct. 2298, 138 L.Ed.2d 842.)

(3) Where life-sustaining measures are withdrawn, death may be an unintended but foreseeable consequence, while in assisted suicide death is the intended result. (117 S.Ct. 2299, 138 L.Ed.2d 843.)

(4) The right to refuse treatment is not grounded in any supposed "right to hasten death," but instead on "well established, traditional rights to bodily integrity and freedom from unwanted touching." (117 S.Ct. 2301, 138 L.Ed.2d 846, citing Cruzan)

(5) Where a legislative classification or distinction "neither burdens a fundamental right nor targets a suspect classification," it will be upheld if it bears a rational relation to some legitimate legislative end. (117 S.Ct. 2297, 138 L.Ed.2d 841, citing Romer v. Evans (1996) 517 U.S. 620, 116 S.Ct. 1620, 134 L.Ed.2d 855, infra, §798.) The state's reasons for prohibiting assisted suicide, including "prohibiting intentional killing and preserving life; preventing suicide; maintaining physicians' role as their patients' healers; protecting vulnerable people from indifference, prejudice, and psychological and financial pressure to end their lives; and avoiding a possible slide towards euthanasia ... easily satisfy the constitutional requirement that a legislative classification bear a rational relation to some legitimate end." (117 S.Ct. 2302, 138 L.Ed.2d 847.)

A number of law reviews have commented on Glucksberg and Vacco, and the question of assisted suicide. (See 111 Harv. L. Rev. 237 [Glucksberg and Vacco]; 85 *Cal. L. Q. 669 [military discharge for homosexual activity]; 20 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 1013 [Bowers]; 14 Pepperdine L. Rev. 313 [same]; 23 San Diego L. Rev. 957 [same]; 62 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1297 [same]; 19 Hastings Const. L. Q. 1009 [Bowers Revised in the Context of State Constitutions]; 49 Stanf. L. Rev. 45 [Bowers].)

However, Bowers v. Hardwick was overruled in Lawrence v. Texas (2003) 539 U.S. 558, 123 S.Ct. 2472, 156 L.Ed.2d 508. Petitioners, two adult men, were arrested in one of their homes for violating the Texas sodomy statute, which proscribed certain intimate sexual conduct between two persons of the same sex. They were both fined on pleas of nolo contendere, and their convictions were upheld by the Court of Appeals based on Bowers. Held, reversed.

(a) This "case should be resolved by determining whether the petitioners were free as adults to engage in the private conduct in the exercise of their liberty under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment." (123 S.Ct. 2476, 156 L.Ed.2d 516.) Bowers failed "to appreciate the extent of the liberty interest at stake." It stated the issue as whether the Constitution confers a fundamental right on homosexuals to engage in sodomy, and thus whether to invalidate state laws that make this conduct illegal. Although these laws purport to do no more than prohibit particular sex acts, their penalties and purposes "have more far-reaching consequences, touching upon the most private human conduct, sexual behavior, and in the most private of places, the home. The statutes do seek to control a personal relationship that, whether or not entitled to formal recognition in the law, is within the liberty of persons to choose without being punished as criminals." (123 S.Ct. 2478, 156 L.Ed.2d 518.)

(b) "[T]here is no longstanding history in this country of laws directed at homosexual conduct as a distinct matter," as asserted in Bowers. (123 S.Ct. 2478, 156 L.Ed.2d 519.) "[E]arly American sodomy laws were not directed at homosexuals as such but instead sought to prohibit non-procreative sexual activity more generally." (123 S.Ct. 2479, 156 L.Ed.2d 519.) "Instead of targeting relations between consenting adults in private, 19th century sodomy prosecutions typically involved relations between men and minor girls or minor boys, relations between adults involving force, relations between adults implicating disparity in status, or relations between men and animals." (123

S.Ct. 2479, 156 L.Ed.2d 520.) "[F]ar from possessing 'ancient roots,' ... American laws targeting same-sex couples did not develop until the last third of the 20th century." In fact, only 9 states have singled out same-sex relations for criminal prosecution. (123 S.Ct. 2479, 156 L.Ed.2d 520.)

(c) Of course, Bowers was making the broader point that homosexuality has been condemned as immoral for centuries. Religious beliefs and respect for the traditional family helped shape this condemnation. But these considerations do not address whether the majority may use the state to enforce their views through the operation of criminal law. Even before Bowers, there was "an emerging awareness that liberty gives substantial protection to adult persons in deciding how to conduct their private lives in matters pertaining to sex." (123 S.Ct. 2480, 156 L.Ed.2d 521.)

(d) In Romer v. Evans (1996) 517 U.S. 620, 116 S.Ct. 1620, 134 L.Ed.2d 855, infra, §798, the Court struck down on equal protection grounds class-based legislation that singled out homosexuals, lesbians, and bisexuals and deprived them of protection under Colorado's anti-discrimination laws. If the Court here were to invalidate the Texas statute on equal protection grounds, "some might question whether a prohibition would be valid if drawn differently, say, to prohibit the conduct both between same-sex and different-sex participants." (123 S.Ct. 2482, 156 L.Ed.2d 523.)

(e) "When homosexual conduct is made criminal by the law of the State, that declaration in and of itself is an invitation to subject homosexual persons to discrimination both in the public and in the private spheres. The central holding of Bowers has been brought in question by this case, and it should be addressed. Its continuance as precedent demeans the lives of homosexual persons." Further, the stigma imposed by the criminal statute is not trivial. Although only a class C misdemeanor, conviction brings a criminal record and the possibility of being forced to register as a sex offender in certain states. (123 S.Ct. 2482, 156 L.Ed.2d 523.)

(f) The doctrine of stare decisis is not a bar to overruling Bowers. Bowers has not induced detrimental reliance. In fact, that decision has caused uncertainty because "the precedents before and after its issuance contradict its central holding." (123 S.Ct. 2483, 156 L.Ed.2d 523, 524.)

One justice concurred in the judgment. (123 S.Ct. 2484, 156 L.Ed.2d 526.) Three justices dissented in two opinions (123 S.Ct. 2488, 2498, 156 L.Ed.2d 530, 543), asserting that there is no constitutional right to "liberty" under the Due Process Clause. (123 S.Ct. 2491, 2498, 156 L.Ed.2d 535, 543.) (See 3 Rotunda, Supp., §18.28; 117 Harv. L. Rev. 297, 1894 [Lawrence]; 40 Cal. Western L. Rev. 149 [same]; 26 Thomas Jefferson L. Rev. 447 [effect of Lawrence on same-sex marriage bans]; 31 *Western State L. 7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 574

[§ 574] Drug Prescription Records.

In Whalen v. Roe (1977) 429 U.S. 589, 97 S.Ct. 869, 872, 51 L.Ed.2d 64, 68, the question was whether a state "may record, in a centralized computer file, the names and addresses of all persons who have obtained, pursuant to a doctor's prescription, certain drugs for which there is both a lawful and an unlawful market." The New York law involved was upheld as a valid exercise of police power, against the charge that it was a violation of both of the major kinds of privacy: the interest in avoiding disclosure of personal matters, and the interest in independence in making certain kinds of important decisions. (97 S.Ct. 877, 51 L.Ed.2d 75.) Neither the immediate nor the threatened impact of the patient identification requirements on either the reputation or the independence of patients was an invasion of the constitutional right. (97 S.Ct. 878, 51 L.Ed.2d 76.)

The Court, however, was careful to limit its holding: "We are not unaware of the threat to privacy implicit in the accumulation of vast amounts of personal information in computerized data banks or other massive government files. The collection of taxes, the distribution of welfare and social security benefits, the supervision of public health, the direction of our armed forces and the enforcement of the criminal laws, all require the orderly preservation of great quantities of information, much of which is personal in character and potentially embarrassing or harmful if disclosed. The right to collect and use such data for public purposes is typically accompanied by a concomitant statutory or regulatory duty to avoid unwarranted disclosures. Recognizing that in some circumstances that duty arguably has its roots in the Constitution, nevertheless New York's statutory scheme, and its implementing administrative procedures, evidence a proper concern with, and protection of, the individual's interest in privacy. We therefore need not, and do not, decide any question which might be presented by the unwarranted disclosure of accumulated private data--whether intentional or unintentional--or by a system that did not contain comparable security provisions." (97 S.Ct. 879, 51 L.Ed.2d 77.) (See 3 Rotunda, §18.30(b).)

B. Rights Under California Law.

1. California Constitutional Provision.

a. In General.

1. Nature and Scope.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 575

[§ 575] Nature and Scope.

Cal. Const., Art. I, §1, stating the "inalienable rights" of all "people," includes the right of privacy. (See supra, §178; 19 Hastings Const. L. Q. 1107 [privacy rights in private workplace]; 31 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 907 [privacy and due process rights of de facto competent minors]; 19 Pepperdine L. Rev. 327 [discussion of common law background and constitutional provisions]; 70 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1805 [normative and social bases for according sexual relations "fundamental right" status]; 1 Cal. Civil Practice (2003 ed.), Civil Rights Litigation, §6:1 et seq. [text and forms].)

In White v. Davis (1975) 13 C.3d 757, 120 C.R. 94, 533 P.2d 222, supra, §357, the court held that police surveillance of university classrooms and organizations was a violation of First Amendment freedoms. But the court went on to find it also a violation of the broadened right of privacy in the California Constitution.

(a) The statement in the election brochure--the only legislative history available--points out that the objective of the amendment was to give a judicial remedy against government snooping. "First, the statement identifies the principal 'mischiefs' at which the amendment is directed: (1) 'government snooping' and the secret gathering of personal information; (2) the overbroad collection and retention of unnecessary personal information by government and business interests; (3) the improper use of information properly obtained for a specific purpose, for example, the use of it for another purpose or the disclosure of it to some third party; and (4) the lack of a reasonable check on the accuracy of existing records. Second, the statement makes clear that the amendment does not purport to prohibit all incursion into individual privacy but rather that any such intervention must be justified by a compelling interest. Third, the statement indicates that the amendment is intended to be self-executing, i.e., that the constitutional provision, in itself, 'creates a legal and enforceable right of privacy for every Californian.' " (13 C.3d 775.)

(b) The police surveillance challenged here "epitomizes the kind of governmental conduct which the new constitutional amendment condemns." (13 C.3d 775.) Hence, the allegations state a prima facie violation of the constitutional right, which defendant may contest by designating compelling governmental interests. (13 C.3d 776.)

(c) "The motto of one of our great universities--Stanford University--is 'The wind of freedom blows,' but the air of its classrooms would be befouled indeed by the presence of secret police. In the course of classroom debate some thoughts will be hazarded only as the trial balloons of new theories. Yet such propositions, that are tentative only, will nevertheless be recorded by police officers, filtered through the minds of the listening informers, often incorrectly misstated to their superiors and sometimes maliciously distended. Only a brave soul would dare to express anything other than orthodoxy under such circumstances. But the classroom of the university should be a forum of free expression; its very function would largely be destroyed by the practices described in the complaint before us." (13 C.3d 777.)

In Kees v. Medical Bd. of Calif. (1992) 7 C.A.4th 1801, 10 C.R.2d 112, B. & P.C. 820 was challenged as violative of the right to privacy. Under that statute, if it appears that a licensed physician's ability to practice medicine may be impaired due to mental illness, or to physical illness affecting competency, the physician may be ordered to submit to a psychiatric examination. In Kees, the physician was ordered to submit to a psychiatric examination and to any further examinations deemed necessary by the examining physician. He submitted to the first examination, but did not submit to a later order to undergo a second one. Held, the first examination was properly ordered, but there was an insufficient showing to justify the second one.

(a) The right to privacy includes the right to mental privacy, and any invasion of that right requires a "compelling interest." (7 C.A.4th 1812, 1813, citing Long Beach City Employees Assn. v. Long Beach (1986) 41 C.3d 937, 227 C.R. 90, 719 P.2d 660, infra, §591.) The need to protect the public from the risk of harm by impaired physicians is compelling, and B. & P.C. 820 allows a mental examination only when that "is the least intrusive means of determining a physician's mental condition." (7 C.A.4th 1813.) Here, the order for the initial examination was proper in light of reports about the physician's behavior and a psychiatrist's opinion that a psychiatric evaluation was warranted. (7 C.A.4th 1815.)

(b) "Repetitive mental examinations are permissible if there is a showing of good cause." (7 C.A.4th 1814.) This was not shown here. Relying on the overbroad nature of the original order, the board ordered the second examination without any showing of good cause. (7 C.A.4th 1815.) (On privacy rights regarding communications to psychotherapist, see Cutter v. Brownbridge (1986) 183 C.A.3d 836, 841, 228 C.R. 545, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §222.)

VIII. PRIVACY

B. Rights Under California Law.

1. California Constitutional Provision.

a. In General.

2. Elements and Analysis.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 576

[§ 576] Elements and Analysis.

Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 C.4th 1, 26 C.R.2d 834, 865 P.2d 633, infra, §594, held that the NCAA's postseason drug testing program for college athletes did not violate the Privacy Initiative in Cal. Const., Art. I, §1.

(a) Cal. Const., Art. I, §1, applies to private as well as government entities. (7 C.4th 16, 20.) However, as applied to private entities, the initiative does not necessarily require a compelling state interest to justify any activity that has an impact on individual privacy. (7 C.4th 20, 22.)

(b) The right to privacy has sources both in common law and under the federal Constitution. (7 C.4th 23, 28.) Properly analyzed, neither the federal penumbral "privacy" decisions nor the California decisions construing the Privacy Initiative require use of a compelling interest standard in all situations. (7 C.4th 32, 34.) Rather, "[t]he particular context, i.e., the specific kind of privacy interest involved and the nature and seriousness of the invasion and any countervailing interests, remains the critical factor in the analysis. Where the case involves an obvious invasion of an interest fundamental to personal autonomy, e.g., freedom from involuntary sterilization or the freedom to pursue consensual familial relationships, a 'compelling interest' must be present to overcome the vital privacy interest. If, in contrast, the privacy interest is less central, or in bona fide dispute, general balancing tests are employed." (7 C.4th 34.)

(c) There are three elements of a cause of action for violation of the state constitutional right to privacy action:

(1) First, there must be a specific, legally protected privacy interest. These interests "are generally of two classes: (1) interests in precluding the dissemination or misuse of sensitive and confidential information ('informational privacy'); and (2) interests in making intimate personal decisions or conducting personal activities without observation, intrusion, or interference ('autonomy privacy')." (7 C.4th 35.) Whether a legally recognized privacy interest is present in a given case is a question of law. (7 C.4th 40.)

(2) Second, there must be a reasonable expectation of privacy, i.e., "an objective entitlement founded on broadly based and widely accepted community norms," on plaintiff's part. (7 C.4th 36, 37.) This is a mixed question of law and fact. (7 C.4th 40.)

(3) Third, "[a]ctionable invasions of privacy must be sufficiently serious in their nature, scope, and actual or potential impact to constitute an egregious breach of the social norms underlying the privacy right. Thus, the extent and gravity of the invasion is an indispensable consideration in assessing an alleged invasion of privacy." (7 C.4th 37.) This also is a mixed question of law and fact. (7 C.4th 40.)

(d) Privacy interests are not absolute, but must be balanced against other important interests. (7 C.4th 37.) A defendant may prevail by negating any of the three elements or by proving, as an affirmative defense, that the invasion of privacy is justified because it substantially furthers one or more countervailing interests. (7 C.4th 40.) When confronted with a defense based on countervailing interests, the plaintiff may undertake the burden of showing the availability and use of protective measures, safeguards, and alternatives to the defendant's conduct that would minimize the privacy intrusion. (7 C.4th 38, 40.) The existence of countervailing interests or alternative courses of conduct present threshold questions of law, while the relative strength of those interests and the feasibility of alternatives present mixed questions of law and fact. (7 C.4th 40.)

(e) Government generally has more power than do private entities, and alternatives generally exist when dealing with private entities; also, private conduct carries its own mantle of constitutional protection. (7 C.4th 38, 39.) For these reasons, "assessment of the relative strength and importance of privacy norms and countervailing interests may differ in cases of private, as opposed to government, action." (7 C.4th 38.)

(f) The "generalized differences between public and private action may affect privacy rights differently in different contexts. If, for example, a plaintiff claiming a violation of the state constitutional right to privacy was able to choose freely among competing public or private entities in obtaining access to some opportunity, commodity, or service, his or her privacy interest may weigh less in the balance. In contrast, if a public or private entity controls access to a vitally necessary item, it may have a correspondingly greater impact on the privacy rights of those with whom it deals." (7 C.4th 39.)

VIII. PRIVACY

B. Rights Under California Law.

1. California Constitutional Provision.

a. In General.

3. Rights of Partnership or Corporation.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 577

[§ 577] Rights of Partnership or Corporation.

In H & M Associates v. El Centro (1980) 109 C.A.3d 399, 167 C.R. 392, plaintiff limited partnership was the owner of an apartment complex consisting of 306 units. The complaint alleged that defendant city, through its city manager, terminated water service to all apartments without affording plaintiff a hearing or opportunity to pay amounts owing; that the city manager telephoned this information to plaintiff's mortgagees, the Federal Housing Administration, the local newspaper, and several other governmental agencies; and that as a result, plaintiff lost many tenants, became unable to make mortgage payments, and lost the property on foreclosure. Held, a cause of action was stated for interference with contract (5 Summary (10th), Torts, §737) and for invasion of privacy.

Despite the modern recognition of the partnership as an entity (109 C.A.3d 409, citing the text), there is considerable uncertainty as to the right of privacy of corporations or partnerships (109 C.A.3d 410). Plaintiff does not assert "its" right to be left alone; the damages claimed relate to its economic loss. (109 C.A.3d 410.) However, businesses have zones of privacy that are protected by various statutes (109 C.A.3d 410, 411), and the constitutional provision protects the privacy rights of "all people." Although the facts of the present case are quite different from those in White v. Davis (1975) 13 C.3d 757, 120 C.R. 94, 533 P.2d 222, supra, §575, and Porten v. University of San Francisco (1976) 64 C.A.3d 825, 134 C.R. 839, infra, §595, "what appears to be the unsolicited acts of the City fall within the framework of plaintiff's right to privacy." (109 C.A.3d 411.) (See 24 Santa Clara L. Rev. 53.)

In Roberts v. Gulf Oil Corp. (1983) 147 C.A.3d 770, 195 C.R. 393, plaintiff county assessor obtained a subpoena duces tecum compelling defendant corporation to produce records concerning its properties. Defendant conceded that it was required to furnish raw data, but refused to furnish interpretative data on studies, reports, and projects. Held, the statutes supported the assessor's demand (147 C.A.3d 780 et seq.), and defendant's assertion of the right to privacy was unavailable.

(a) General constitutional right to privacy. Corporations have "some right to privacy." But here, the assessor is seeking information that would assure that defendant and other corporations like it pay their fair share of taxes, and the assessor's right prevails over defendant's "minimal and insubstantial privacy interest in the information sought." (147 C.A.3d 795, 796, 797, 800.)

(b) California Constitution's right to privacy. Cal. Const., Art. I, §1, refers to "people," not "persons"; and the privacy right was intended to protect individuals against actions of the Government and business interests. Hence, a corporation, though for some purposes regarded as a "person," cannot claim a privacy right under this section of the California Constitution. (147 C.A.3d 790, 793.) H & M Associates is a "unique case" that "did not address the issue whether the right to privacy for corporations is a fundamental right that can be asserted as a shield to prevent government access to relevant documents." (147 C.A.3d 793, footnote 16.) (See Ameri-Med. Corp. v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (1996) 42 C.A.4th 1260, 1287, 1288, 50 C.R.2d 366 [corporate medical clinic did not have constitutional right of privacy, but it did have privacy interest in financial and employment information unrelated to fees and charges that were subject of action].)

b. Abortion.

1. Public Funding.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 578

[§ 578] Public Funding.

In Committee To Defend Reproductive Rights v. Myers (1981) 29 C.3d 252, 172 C.R. 866, 625 P.2d 779, the California Legislature, in its budget acts of 1978 and ensuing years, provided for Medi-Cal funding of expenses incurred by indigent women who decide to bear a child, but (except in specified exceptional circumstances) denied funding to those who chose to have an abortion. Held, the restrictions were unconstitutional.

(a) California Constitution is controlling. Under the reasoning of People v. Brisendine (1975) 13 C.3d 528, 119 C.R. 315, 531 P.2d 1099, and subsequent cases (supra, §109), the court must exercise independent legal judgment in ascertaining the meaning and application of state constitutional provisions. (29 C.3d 261, and footnote 4.)

(b) California's application of doctrine of unconstitutional conditions.

(1) The California Supreme Court, in People v. Belous (1969) 71 C.2d 954, 80 C.R. 354, 458 P.2d 194, supra, §561, and the U.S. Supreme Court in Roe v. Wade (1973) 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147, supra, §561, recognized the constitutional right of procreative choice as an element of the constitutional right of privacy. (29 C.3d 262.)

(2) In Danskin v. San Diego Unified School Dist. (1946) 28 C.2d 536, 171 P.2d 885, infra, §813, the court laid down the rule that a state has no power to impose an unconstitutional requirement as a condition for granting a privilege. (29 C.3d 263.) The Danskin principle has since been applied in many "public benefit" programs conditioning receipt of benefits on the waiver or forfeiture of a broad range of constitutional rights--access to a public forum, public employment, welfare benefits, public housing, unemployment benefits, and the use of public property. (29 C.3d 264.)

(3) Bagley v. Washington Township Hosp. Dist. (1966) 65 C.2d 499, 55 C.R. 401, 421 P.2d 409, supra, §255, established a three-part standard that the state must satisfy to justify exclusion of potential recipients of benefits solely on the basis of their exercise of constitutional rights: (a) The state must establish that the imposed conditions relate to the purpose of the legislation conferring the benefit; (b) the utility of imposing the conditions must outweigh any resulting impairment of the constitutional right; and (c) the state must establish the unavailability of less offensive alternatives. (29 C.3d 265, 266.) The Danskin-Bagley line of decisions makes it clear that the California approach is different from that of the United States Supreme Court, and therefore Harris v. McRae (1980) 448 U.S. 297, 100 S.Ct. 2671, 65 L.Ed.2d 784, is not persuasive. (29 C.3d 266 et seq.; see supra, §568.)

(c) Applying Bagley standards.

(1) The restrictions imposed on poor women's right of procreative choice do not relate to the primary purpose of the Medi-Cal progra--affording health care to persons who cannot afford it. (29 C.3d 271, 272.)

(2) The utility of imposing the restrictions does not outweigh the impairment of the constitutional right of procreative choice as an aspect of the right of privacy. These are among the most intimate and fundamental of all constitutional rights (29 C.3d 275), and the impairment "is significantly greater than the impairment of rights involved in almost all the past California cases in this field." (29 C.3d 276.) The state interest, by contrast, is not compelling. (a) Whatever money is saved in refusing to fund abortions will be spent many times over in paying maternity care and childbirth expenses and supporting children of indigent mothers. (29 C.3d 277.) (b) The interest in protecting the potential life of the fetus "clashes head-on with the woman's own fundamental right of procreative choice" (29 C.3d 279); and under Roe v. Wade the protection of a nonviable fetus is not a compelling state interest (29 C.3d 280). This right of procreative choice as an aspect of the right of privacy under the explicit provisions of the California Constitution prevails over the asserted state's interest in protecting a nonviable fetus. (29 C.3d 281.) Moreover, the state has not undertaken to protect the life of all fetuses, but has singled out poor women and has subordinated only their constitutional right of procreative choice to the concern for fetal life. (29 C.3d 281.)

(3) The statutory scheme does not serve the state interest in a manner least offensive to the woman's right of procreative choice. The argument that the legislation simply attempts to aid poor women who have already decided to bear a child is unconvincing. The state could readily meet the needs of indigent women by funding impartially the expenses of childbirth and abortion. (29 C.3d 283.)

(d) Conclusion. "By virtue of the explicit protection afforded an individual's inalienable right of privacy by article I, section 1 of the California Constitution ... , the decision whether to bear a child or to have an abortion is so private and so intimate that each woman in this state--rich or poor--is guaranteed the constitutional right to make that decision as an individual, uncoerced by governmental intrusion. Because a woman's right to choose whether or not to bear a child is explicitly afforded this constitutional protection, in California the question of whether an individual woman should or should not terminate her pregnancy is not a matter that may be put to a vote of the Legislature. ... If the state cannot directly prohibit a woman's right to obtain an abortion, may the state by discriminatory financing indirectly nullify that constitutional right? Once the state furnishes medical care to poor women in general, it cannot withdraw part of that care solely because a woman exercises her constitutional right to have an abortion." (29 C.3d 284.)

One lengthy concurring opinion agrees with the majority's conclusion but emphasizes the strict judicial scrutiny test. (29 C.3d 289.) Two justices joined in a dissent, criticizing the majority's constitutional analysis, its disregard of the holding of the United States Supreme Court, and its lack of deference to the legislative branch of government. (29 C.3d 297 et seq.) (See 70 Cal. L. Rev. 978; 33 Hastings L. J. 1475; 24 Cal. Western L. Rev. 107 [abortion funding in California]; 118 A.L.R.5th 463 [validity of state laws limiting public funding for abortions sought by indigent women].)

b. Abortion.

2. Rights of Minors.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 579

[§ 579] Rights of Minors.

American Academy of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 C.4th 307, 66 C.R.2d 210, 940 P.2d 797, considered the validity, under the California Constitution, of the requirement that a pregnant minor secure parental consent or judicial authorization before she may obtain an abortion. Held, the law violates the minor's right of privacy guaranteed by Cal. Const., Art. I, §1.

(a) History of medical consent laws. The common law required a parent, guardian, or other legally authorized person to provide consent for minors to receive medical treatment or services, and this requirement remains the general rule in California. However, over the past 40 years, California has enacted a variety of limited medical emancipation statutes allowing minors to consent to medical treatment in various situations. These provisions embody "a legislative recognition that, particularly in matters concerning sexual conduct, minors frequently are reluctant to inform their parents of medical conditions relating to such conduct, and consequently that there is a considerable risk that minors will postpone or avoid seeking needed medical care." Until 1987, a minor was entitled to obtain an abortion on the same grounds as an adult; in that year an abortion consent statute was enacted, providing that a minor may obtain a medically safe abortion only if she first obtains parental consent or judicial authorization. (16 C.4th 314.)

(b) Protection of reproductive privacy under California Constitution. The consent statute was drafted to comply with requirements of applicable federal decisions upholding parental consent laws in other states. However, "[b]ecause the applicable California authority establishes that the protection afforded by the California Constitution of a pregnant woman's right of choice is broader than the constitutional protection afforded by the federal constitution as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court," the consent statute must be evaluated under state constitutional principles. (16 C.4th 324, 328.)

(c) Threshold elements. To establish a significant intrusion on her privacy right under the state Constitution, plaintiff must show (1) a legally protected privacy interest; (2) a reasonable expectation of privacy in the circumstances; and (3) conduct by defendant constituting a serious invasion of privacy. (16 C.4th 330, citing Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 C.4th 1, 26 C.R.2d 834, 865 P.2d 633, infra, §594.)

(1) "[B]ecause the decision whether to continue or terminate her pregnancy has such a substantial effect on a pregnant minor's control over her personal bodily integrity, has such serious long-term consequences in determining her life choices, is so central to the preservation of her ability to define and adhere to her ultimate values regarding the meaning of human existence and life, and ... is a decision that cannot be postponed until adulthood, we conclude that a minor who is pregnant has a protected privacy interest under the California Constitution in making the decision whether to continue or to terminate her own pregnancy--and that this interest is intruded upon by" the consent statute. (16 C.4th 337.)

(2) Because the consent statute impinges on "a fundamental autonomy privacy interest of pregnant minors protected by the state constitutional privacy clause, and because the statute applies to all such minors ... there is absolutely nothing in the circumstances of the present case that would support a conclusion that the pregnant minors affected by this legislation do not have a 'reasonable expectation of privacy.'" (16 C.4th 338.)

(3) The consent statute seriously invades a privacy interest in that it denies pregnant minors the ability to obtain medically safe abortions on their own, in some instances leading them to seek "back-alley abortions" or bear unwanted children, and delays minors' access to a medically safe abortion, thereby increasing the health risks imposed by an abortion. (16 C.4th 339.)

(d) Appropriate test. In analyzing the asserted justifications for the statute, it is necessary to determine the appropriate standard these justifications must satisfy and the effect of a facial challenge to the statute as a whole rather than to the statute as applied to a particular individual or setting:

(1) A statute that impinges on the fundamental autonomy privacy right of either a minor or an adult must be evaluated under the demanding "compelling interest" test. (16 C.4th 340.)

(2) To overcome a facial challenge to the constitutionality of a statute, it is not sufficient to show that the provisions of the statute may be constitutionally applied in even a single circumstance covered by the statute. Instead, "the statute can be upheld only if those defending the statute can establish that, considering the statute's general and normal application, the compelling justifications for the statute outweigh the statute's impingement on constitutional privacy rights and cannot be achieved by less intrusive means." (16 C.4th 342.)

(e) The consent statute does not further a compelling state interest. The state's interests in protecting the health of minors and fostering the parent-child relationship are compelling interests, but these interests are not furthered by the statute:

(1) The trial court was not required to defer to the legislative findings accompanying the statute. When a statute impinges on a constitutional right, legislative findings concerning the need for or probable effect of the statute are not determinative. Although courts must give great weight to legislative findings, "the deference accorded such findings does not foreclose a court's independent judgment on facts bearing on an issue of constitutional law." (16 C.4th 348, quoting Professional Engineers in Calif. Government v. Department of Trans. (1997) 15 C.4th 543, 63 C.R.2d 467, 936 P.2d 473, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §19.)

(2) The contention that the restrictions are necessary to protect a pregnant minor's physical and emotional health are belied by the fact that California law authorizes a minor, without parental consent, to obtain medical care and make other important decisions in analogous context that pose equal or greater risks to her health and that of her child, including the decision to continue her pregnancy and give birth to a child, to obtain medical care for all conditions relating to pregnancy, and to keep her child or to give the child up for adoption. In addition, numerous other statutes authorize minors, without parental consent, to obtain medical care in a variety of settings relating to sexual activity, including medical care related to sexually transmitted diseases, rape, and sexual assault. This legislation rests on a long-standing legislative recognition that minors are often reluctant to disclose medical needs arising out of sexual activity to their parents, and consequently, the minors' health will best be protected by authorizing treatment without parental consent or judicial authorization. (16 C.4th 352.)

(3) Overwhelming evidence presented at trial, much of it uncontested, supports the conclusion that the consent statute would injure, instead of protect, the asserted interest of the minors' health and the parent-child relationship. (16 C.4th 355.) This evidence includes indications that use of the judicial bypass procedure would (a) delay an abortion, thereby increasing its medical risks; (b) inflict stress on the minor without providing any greater protection than that provided by the health care provider under prior law; and (c) lead some minors to attempt to terminate their pregnancies themselves or seek illegal abortions to avoid the court process. (16 C.4th 356.)

One justice concurred in the judgment. (16 C.4th 360.) Three justices dissented. (16 C.4th 384, 410, 418.) (See 33 U.S.F. L. Rev. 133 [Lungren]; 77 A.L.R.5th 1 [parental consent and notification statutes]; on abortion without parental consent, see 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §39; 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §391.)

B. Rights Under California Law.

1. California Constitutional Provision.

c. Medical Records and Information.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 580

[§ 580] In General.

In Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 C.A.4th 402, 57 C.R.2d 46, an employee who requested leave from work for stress-related disability was examined by two psychiatrists, who, without the employee's authorization, reported the examination results, including details of the employee's medical history and psychological profile, to the employer. Based on these reports, the employer requested the employee, as a condition of continued employment, to enter an inpatient alcohol treatment program. When he refused, the employee was fired. He sued the employer and both psychiatrists, claiming violations of the Confidentiality of Medical Information Act (C.C. 56 et seq.; see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §518 et seq.) and invasion of his constitutional right of privacy. In a bench trial, judgments were entered in favor of all defendants and against plaintiff. Held, reversed and remanded.

(1) Plaintiff established all three elements of a prima facie showing of invasion of privacy. He had a legally cognizable interest in the details of his medical and psychiatric history. (49 C.A.4th 440.) He had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the information he conveyed to the psychiatrists. (49 C.A.4th 441.) And their disclosures, which they must have known could prove highly embarrassing to plaintiff and disruptive of his relationship with his employer, constituted a serious interference with plaintiff's privacy rights. (49 C.A.4th 443.)

(2) Neither the employer's expectation that it would receive a full report, nor its "need" for details in order to evaluate plaintiff's request for leave justified the invasion of his privacy interest. The employer's expectation should have been altered by the enactment of C.C. 56.10(c)(8)(B) (limiting information health care workers paid by employers may disclose regarding an employee's medical condition requiring leave from work) and its need would have been met by substantially less information than was given. (49 C.A.4th 445, 446.) If plaintiff posed a threat to a coworker, as claimed by one defendant, then the warning required by Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1976) 17 C.3d 425, 131 C.R. 14, 551 P.2d 334, 6 Summary (10th), Torts, §1050, would have been appropriate. Neither of the psychiatrists claimed that the reports they submitted constituted a Tarasoff warning. (49 C.A.4th 446, 447.)

(3) After the psychiatrists' motion for judgment was granted, the employer presented evidence that may defeat plaintiff's constitutional claim. In light of statements made by plaintiff to his supervisors before he consulted either psychiatrist, it may be found that, by voluntarily disclosing some of the sensitive information subsequently transmitted by the psychiatrists, he waived his constitutional privacy claim. Because the evidence conflicts on this point, a remand is necessary. (49 C.A.4th 448, 449.)

(b) Constitutional claim against employer.

(1) Plaintiff also made a prima facie showing of a constitutional violation by the employer. He had a cognizable interest in maintaining the privacy of the detailed medical information he conveyed to the psychiatrists, and disclosure and misuse of that information violated his informational privacy rights. (49 C.A.4th 457.) More importantly, he had an autonomy privacy interest in "making intimate personal decisions about an appropriate course of medical treatment for his disabling stress condition, without undue intrusion or interference from his employer." (49 C.A.4th 457.) The interference with these interests, "involving both a misuse of the employee's private medical information and a penalty for his assertion of his autonomy privacy interests--was 'an egregious breach of the social norms underlying the privacy right.' " (49 C.A.4th 460, quoting Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 C.4th 1, 26 C.R.2d 834, 865 P.2d 633, infra, §594.)

(2) The employer failed to identify any countervailing interest sufficient to justify its interference. The intrusion into plaintiff's autonomy privacy interest would require a compelling interest, which the employer did not establish. Requiring plaintiff to enroll in an inpatient alcohol treatment program was unnecessary and inappropriate to address the problems underlying his disability claim, and none of the physicians consulted by the employer recommended this treatment. Less intrusive alternatives were available, including a grant of the requested disability leave, with a requirement of further evaluation before a return to work. (49 C.A.4th 461, 462.) (See Garrett v. Young (2003) 109 C.A.4th 1393, 1410, 1 C.R.3d 134, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §518 [because protections of Confidentiality of Medical Information Act are in addition to other available remedies, it is theoretically possible for disclosure that does not violate Act to violate patient's right to privacy; however, plaintiff's claim here failed because she had no reasonable expectation of privacy in information conveyed to employer]; C.C. 1798.91 [businesses may not obtain medical information directly from individuals for direct marketing purposes without providing mandated disclosures and obtaining consent]; on statutory claim under C.C. 56 et seq., see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §518 et seq.; on improper disclosure of HIV-positive status, see infra, §582.)

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 581

[§ 581] Discovery of Medical Patient's Records.

In Board of Med. Quality Assur. v. Gherardini (1979) 93 C.A.3d 669, 156 C.R. 55, the medical board, investigating a charge of medical malpractice, sought to compel a hospital to produce medical records of patients on the basis of conclusionary statements without a showing of good cause or consent of the patients. Held, order granting petition reversed. "A person's medical profile is an area of privacy infinitely more intimate, more personal in quality and nature than many areas already judicially recognized and protected." (93 C.A.3d 678.) (See Kizer v. Sulnick (1988) 202 C.A.3d 431, 248 C.R. 712 [Department of Health Services, in connection with investigation of hazardous waste facility, sought medical study on health effects on nearby residents; held, distinguishing Gherardini, study was material and relevant, and privacy could be protected by deletion of any identifying information].)

In Heda v. Superior Court (1990) 225 C.A.3d 525, 275 C.R. 136, plaintiff brought a malpractice action against defendant doctor, and moved for trial preference under C.C.P. 36(d) (7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Trial, §81) on the ground that defendant was suffering from a terminal illness. She then propounded interrogatories asking defendant to describe his physical ailments, state his doctors' prognosis, and also furnish his medical records. The trial court ordered defendant to answer. Held, mandamus granted to vacate the order. To win her trial preference motion, plaintiff may need the documentation she seeks, but her "desire for trial preference does not outweigh defendant's constitutional right to privacy for medical records. Defendant's presence at trial, while desirable, is not essential. Much of what plaintiff seeks by her preference motion, she may obtain by deposing defendant. Under proper conditions, she may video-tape the deposition and may introduce the videotape at trial if defendant is not available. ... If defendant does not survive, she may substitute his estate as defendant in the action." (225 C.A.3d 528.) (On use of videotape at trial, see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §79.)

When the constitutional right of privacy is involved, the party seeking discovery of medical records must do more than satisfy the relevancy standard of C.C.P. 2017.010 (see 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, Supp., §9 et seq.); he or she must demonstrate a compelling need that outweighs privacy rights when the interests are balanced. (*Lantz v. 7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 582

[§ 582] Disclosure of HIV-Positive Status.

In Urbaniak v. Newton (1991) 226 C.A.3d 1128, 277 C.R. 354, plaintiff disclosed his positive HIV status to a nurse following a medical examination solely for the purpose of alerting her to the need to sterilize the medical equipment used in his examination. However, his HIV status was added to the report on his examination. The report was then disseminated to his counsel, insurance companies, and ultimately to the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board.

(a) Under appropriate circumstances, disclosure of HIV-positive status may be entitled to protection under Cal. Const., Art. I, §1. "The condition is ordinarily associated either with sexual preference or intravenous drug uses. It ought not to be, but quite commonly is, viewed with mistrust or opprobrium. Under the test of tortious invasion of privacy, it is clearly a 'private fact' of which the disclosure may 'be offensive and objectionable to a reasonable [person] of ordinary sensibilities.' ... In the field of constitutional law, federal decisions concerning the right of privacy accorded to sexual practices, and California precedents dealing with the privacy attaching to medical records and the psychotherapist-patient relationship, provide judicial recognition of privacy interests in closely related areas of life." (226 C.A.3d 1140.)

(b) "The circumstances under which disclosure of HIV positive status may give rise to a cause of action pursuant to article I, section 1, are governed by the concept of 'improper use of information properly obtained.' ... In the field of health care, disclosure of information about a patient constitutes 'improper use' when it will subvert a public interest favoring communication of confidential information by violating the patient's reasonable expectations of privacy. We find such a public interest here in a patient's disclosure of HIV positive status for the purpose of alerting a health care worker to the need for safety precautions. ... The evidence here would support the inference that Urbaniak reasonably anticipated privacy. By enforcing such reasonable expectations of privacy, the courts will simultaneously foster needed disclosures of HIV positive status and protect against their abuse." (226 C.A.3d 1140.) (See Jeffrey H. v. Imai, Tadlock & Keeney (2000) 85 C.A.4th 345, 353, 101 C.R.2d 916 [plaintiff adequately pleaded violation of right to privacy by alleging defendant's disclosure of documents showing plaintiff's HIV status in disregard for their confidentiality, and use of documents in proceeding to which they had no relevance; Health & Saf.C. 120980 applies only to "health care providers responsible for receiving and keeping custody of test results in the course of medical diagnosis or treatment"]; 29 Cal. (1) Improper Posting of Notice of Employee's Termination. In Payton v. Santa Clara (1982) 132 C.A.3d 152, 183 C.R. 17, a former city employee sued the city for damages arising out of the city's alleged misconduct in posting in a public employee workroom notice of his termination and the reasons for it. Held, the complaint stated a prima facie violation of the right to privacy, and a general demurrer was improperly sustained. (132 C.A.3d 154.)

(2) Discovery of Statements Made in Mediation. In Garstang v. Superior Court (1995) 39 C.A.4th 526, 46 C.R.2d 84, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §158, the court held that statements made to a university ombudsman during mediation sessions were confidential and did not have to be revealed during discovery because the ombudsman system was based on the premise that information disclosed during the proceedings would remain confidential, and the relationship between university employees and the ombudsman is one that is worthy of societal support. (39 C.A.4th 533, 535.)

Rinaker v. Superior Court (1998) 62 C.A.4th 155, 74 C.R.2d 464, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Circumstantial Evidence, §154, involved the mediation of a civil harassment action and a juvenile delinquency proceeding arising from the same transaction. The court held that the constitutional right to privacy did not shield the mediator in the civil harassment action from testifying in the juvenile delinquency proceeding as to inconsistent statements made by the victim. The interest in promoting settlements, in this case through confidential mediation of the harassment action, must yield to the constitutional right to effective impeachment. Neither the mediator nor the victim had a reasonable expectation that inconsistent statements made about the minors would remain private if the victim were called to testify about the minors in the juvenile delinquency proceeding. (62 C.A.4th 167.)

(3) Discovery of Statements Made in Termination Proceedings. Garstang was distinguished in Saeta v. Superior Court (2004) 117 C.A.4th 261, 11 C.R.3d 610. Statements made during a hearing conducted by an employment termination review panel, which was neither an arbitration nor a mediation, were not privileged, and an order compelling a panel member's deposition testimony did not violate the member's right to privacy. The parties at the hearing had no expectation that statements made there were confidential, and the panel member's right to privacy was outweighed by the employee's need for discovery. (117 C.A.4th 272.)

(4) Medical Exam. In Feminist Women's Health Center v. Superior Court (1997) 52 C.A.4th 1234, 61 C.R.2d 187, the court held that a requirement that a health worker perform a cervical self-examination in front of other females was a reasonable condition of employment and did not violate the worker's right of privacy where the written employment agreement evidenced her knowledge of the condition and her agreement to be bound by it. (52 C.A.4th 1249.)

(5) Sexual Orientation. In Leibert v. Transworld Systems (1995) 32 C.A.4th 1693, 39 C.R.2d 65, the court held that a complaint that an employee's state constitutional right to privacy was violated when his employer used information about his sexual orientation as grounds to terminate his employment, though deplorable, did not allege a legally protected privacy interest. (32 C.A.4th 1702.)

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 584

[§ 584] Disclosure of University Tenure Proceedings.

In Kahn v. Superior Court (1987) 188 C.A.3d 752, 233 C.R. 662, a candidate for permanent appointment to a university faculty brought an action for defamation and tortious interference with advantageous business relationship against a tenured professor of the university who participated in a private department meeting to consider the appointment. Although a search committee had unanimously recommended the candidate's appointment, the department failed to endorse the recommendation. The candidate gathered information that convinced him that the professor had persuaded the department to deny the appointment on nonacademic grounds. However, his complaint made no claim of discrimination, and he had been given a comprehensive summary of events that took place and the reasons for refusal of the appointment. The trial court entered a protective order staying discovery but allowing the candidate to take the professor's deposition for the sole purpose of inquiring into his statements, motives, actions, and conduct in connection with the review and evaluation of the candidate's application. Held, mandamus granted to prevent taking the deposition.

(a) The comments made and the vote taken during the department meeting were covered by the communicators' constitutional right to privacy. (188 C.A.3d 769.)

(b) The candidate's interest in recovering monetary damages for improper denial of the appointment, and the compelling state interest in facilitating the ascertainment of truth in connection with legal proceedings, were outweighed by the professor's right to discuss with his colleagues the candidate's qualifications in confidence without fear of compelled disclosure, and by the public interest in promoting academic excellence. [§ 585] Disclosure of Employee Personnel Records.

In El Dorado Savings & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1987) 190 C.A.3d 342, 235 C.R. 303, plaintiffs brought an employment discrimination action on the basis of gender and sex against defendant association, their former employer. In discovery proceedings, plaintiffs moved to compel production of the entire personnel file of a nonparty employee, claiming that he was the only male employed by defendant in the same capacity as plaintiffs, that he had received compensation and benefits not afforded to plaintiffs, and that disclosure of his personnel file was necessary to facilitate prosecution of plaintiffs' action. The nonparty employee sought mandamus to nullify the trial court order granting plaintiffs' motion. Held, writ granted.

(a) The personnel records of petitioner were protected by the right of privacy, and the record was inadequate to support a conclusion that disclosure of the entire personnel record was justified. Consideration should be given to whether less intrusive means, such as deposing the nonparty employee and others, would yield the information sought. (190 C.A.3d 346.)

In Michael v. Gates (1995) 38 C.A.4th 737, 745, 45 C.R.2d 163, the court held that there was no violation of a police officer's constitutional right to privacy where a limited review of his personnel file did not do injustice to his reasonable expectation of privacy. (See Rosales v. Los Angeles (2000) 82 C.A.4th 419, 429, 98 C.R.2d 144 [following Michael; police officer had no reasonable expectation that his personnel records would not be disclosed to plaintiff's counsel or used by city in defending action alleging officer's sexual misconduct during employment].)

In Gilbert v. San Jose (2004) 114 C.A.4th 606, 7 C.R.3d 692, the court held that before a city could disclose personal information collected under a city ordinance from employees working in the gambling industry, the city must take reasonable steps to notify the employee to whom the information pertains of the pendency and nature of the request. The employee then must be afforded a fair opportunity to object to the disclosure and to limit the scope and nature of discovery. (114 C.A.4th 615.)

In Central Valley Chapter 7th Step Foundation v. Younger (1979) 95 C.A.3d 212, 157 C.R. 117, the court examined the procedure of the California Department of Justice in sending arrest records to public employers without deleting arrests that did not result in a conviction. Distinguishing Loder v. Municipal Court (1976) 17 C.3d 859, 132 C.R. 464, 553 P.2d 624, infra, §588, the court held that the allegations of plaintiffs brought the case within the third "mischief" of White v. Davis (1975) 13 C.3d 757, 120 C.R. 94, 533 P.2d 222, supra, §575; i.e., the dissemination of this data does not further law enforcement or criminal justice. (95 C.A.3d 236.) (See Pitman v. Oakland (1988) 197 C.A.3d 1037, 1045, 243 C.R. 306, infra, §588 [distinguishing Central Valley].)

In Central Valley Chapter of the 7th Step Foundation v. Younger (1989) 214 C.A.3d 145, 262 C.R. 496, the court reexamined the procedure considered in Central Valley I, supra, and again imposed restrictions on the dissemination of arrest records. Under P.C. 11105 and Lab.C. 432.7, the Department of Justice is required to furnish criminal history information (arrest records) to specified public agencies (exempt employers) but is prohibited from providing this information to others (nonexempt employers).

(a) Prior cases have held that retention and dissemination of arrest records impinges on the right to privacy guaranteed by Cal. Const., Art. I, §1. (214 C.A.3d 162, citing Central Valley I, Loder, and Pitman.)

(b) Law enforcement agencies may maintain these records (214 C.A.3d 161), but no compelling interest justifies dissemination of nonconviction data to nonexempt employers (214 C.A.3d 162, 165).

(c) Dissemination of this information to exempt employers is permitted. However, the department may not disseminate incomplete information without attempting to obtain complete information. Thus, an attempt must be made to determine whether ordered diversion has been successfully completed and whether an individual was exonerated where arrest was followed by dismissal or release. (214 C.A.3d 167, 170.)

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 588

[§ 588] Unprotected Acts.

An attempt to use the constitutional provision as the basis for compelled erasure or return of arrest records was unsuccessful in Loder v. Municipal Court (1976) 17 C.3d 859, 132 C.R. 464, 553 P.2d 624. The arrest for misdemeanors was apparently valid, but the authorities decided not to prosecute, and the complaint was dismissed for lack of prosecution, concurrently with plaintiff's execution of a covenant not to sue. The court pointed out that an invasion of individual privacy may be justified by a compelling interest, and listed a great many appropriate uses of arrest records in investigation of crime and identification of arrested persons, and in pretrial and posttrial proceedings, e.g., release on own recognizance, probation, and parole. These purposes constitute a substantial governmental interest (17 C.3d 868), and the arrestee's legitimate need for protection against improper use is the subject of numerous statutory provisions (17 C.3d 869 et seq.). The absence of any statute requiring expungement of the record in a case of this kind indicates a legislative determination that the compelling state interests outweigh the speculative harm asserted by plaintiff. (17 C.3d 876.) Other state and federal courts "have reaffirmed the rule that limited retention and dissemination of arrest records does not violate the right of privacy." (17 C.3d 877.)

In Pitman v. Oakland (1988) 197 C.A.3d 1037, 243 C.R. 306, plaintiff, a police communications dispatcher, was discharged following a disclosure of his arrest record to defendant city, his employer. He brought an action for violation of his constitutional right of privacy, relying on Central Valley Chapter of the 7th Step Foundation v. Younger (1979) 95 C.A.3d 212, 157 C.R. 117, supra, §587. It appeared, however, that plaintiff was subsequently convicted of a crime based on the arrest. Held, no cause of action was stated. "[W]here a plaintiff seeks to state a privacy cause of action for damages based upon the dissemination and utilization of arrest data, an essential element of the cause of action, to be pleaded and proved, is that the arrest data did not result in a conviction." (197 C.A.3d 1046.) (See Alarcon v. Murphy (1988) 201 C.A.3d 1, 6, 248 C.R. 26 [plaintiff's right to privacy was not invaded by police disclosure that he was suspect in murder case, despite lack of probable cause to arrest him for murder, where affidavit for search and arrest warrants on related charges revealed that he was murder suspect]; American G.I. Forum v. Miller (1990) 218 C.A.3d 859, 866, 867, 267 C.R. 371 [gathering and disseminating information on arrestee's status as "undocumented person" on standard arrest form does not violate right to privacy or due process; under Loder, privacy concerns are outweighed by governmental

(1) In General. In People v. Baldwin (1974) 37 C.A.3d 385, 112 C.R. 290, the court, affirming a conviction for oral copulation in a public place (P.C. 288a), rejected appellant's claims that the statute was an unconstitutional invasion of religious freedom (supra, §505) and an invasion of the right of privacy. On the privacy point, the court said:

"The real thrust of defendants' argument is that oral copulation is and should be recognized as a socially acceptable practice. When, therefore, they speak of a constitutional right to privacy or a right to be protected from an unconstitutional deprivation of their right to liberty, they seek, in effect, judicial repeal, actually, for social reasons, but under the handy guise of a vaguely defined constitutional right, of a law the repeal of which by the Legislature on social grounds has not been brought about." (37 C.A.3d 394.) (See In re T.A.J. (1998) 62 C.A.4th 1350, 1361, 73 C.R.2d 331 [there is no privacy right among minors to engage in consensual sexual intercourse, nor does minor have legitimate expectation of privacy to engage in consensual sexual activity with another minor].)

(2) Megan's Law. California requires the collection and limited disclosure of information regarding sex offenders. (P.C. 290.4; see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §189 et seq.) Additional public disclosure, including an offender's address, is required both (a) in the case of a high-risk sex offender, and (b) when there is a reasonable suspicion that a person is at risk from a sex offender. (P.C. 290.45; see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, Supp., §191.) (See *Fredenburg v. (2) Megan's Law. P.C. 290.45, as amended in 2005, now provides for additional public disclosure "when necessary to ensure the public safety based on information available" to a designated law enforcement entity concerning a person required to register as a sex offender under P.C. 290. The statute applies to every offense listed in P.C. 290, regardless of when it was committed. (P.C. 290.45(g).)

[§ 591] Compulsory Polygraph Examination.

In Long Beach City Employees Assn. v. Long Beach (1986) 41 C.3d 937, 227 C.R. 90, 719 P.2d 660, a city, as part of an internal theft investigation, ordered certain public employees to submit to a polygraph examination as a condition of continued employment. Under Lab.C. 432.2 and Govt.C. 3307, the only employees in the state subject to compulsory examinations were public employees who were not "public safety officers." Held, the legislative classification was a denial of equal protection (see infra, §694 et seq.) and possibly a violation of the right of privacy.

(a) "If there is a quintessential zone of human privacy it is the mind. Our ability to exclude others from our mental processes is intrinsic to the human personality." (41 C.3d 944.)

(b) "A polygraph examination is specifically designed to overcome this privacy by compelling communication of 'thoughts, sentiments, and emotions' which the examinee may have chosen not to communicate. The standard polygraph test is far more intrusive than a series of questions related directly to the employee's job performance or knowledge of the crimes under investigation." (41 C.3d 944.)

(c) "The intrusiveness of polygraph questions on private matters is exacerbated by three factors that make the process fundamentally different from verbal interrogation. First, '[t]he polygraph merely records general emotional arousal. It cannot distinguish anxiety or indignation from guilt.' ... Second, an employee who is asked an embarrassing personal question may be reluctant to refuse to answer it for fear of appearing dishonest. ... Finally, even if an employee chooses not to verbally answer a question on a personal matter, the polygraph will record his or her psychological response in any event." (41 C.3d 946.)

(d) "[W]e find that polygraph examinations inherently intrude upon the constitutionally protected zone of individual privacy." (41 C.3d 948.) However, because "CEA relies primarily on its contention that Bureau employees were denied equal protection, we need not decide at this juncture whether their right of privacy was improperly violated irrespective of the legislative classification that exempts private sector employees and all 'public safety officers'; from involuntary polygraph testing. To decide the latter question, we would inquire whether the City had demonstrated a compelling governmental interest in administering the polygraph examinations to these employees and whether this interest could be accomplished by less intrusive means." (41 C.3d 948, footnote 12.)

1. California Constitutional Provision.

f. Drug Testing.

1. In General: Employee or Applicant.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 592

[§ 592] In General: Employee or Applicant.

In Wilkinson v. Times Mirror Corp. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 1034, 264 C.R. 194, plaintiffs challenged a publishing company's requirement that all job applicants submit to a drug and alcohol test as part of a preemployment medical examination. Held, the requirement did not violate the right to privacy.

(a) The privacy provision of the California Constitution protects against private as well as government action. (215 C.A.3d 1040, 1043.) But the right is not absolute, and the courts have not required a compelling justification for every action that has some impact on the right. Rather, when the challenged conduct does not substantially burden the right, the question is whether the conduct is reasonable. (215 C.A.3d 1046, 1047.)

(b) Here, "[p]erhaps the most important factor in our analysis is that plaintiffs are applicants for employment, not employees, either public or private." (215 C.A.3d 1048.) California law permits private employers to condition job offers on the results of a medical examination, and urinalysis is a routine part of these examinations. "Thus subjecting urine samples to analysis for alcohol and drugs is only slightly more intrusive than the procedures which plaintiffs already reasonably had to expect as job seekers with private business." (215 C.A.3d 1049.)

(c) Also, defendant informs applicants of the drug-testing requirement, the testing procedures are designed to be minimally intrusive, and the results are confidential. (215 C.A.3d 1049.) "Simply put, applicants for jobs at Matthew Bender have a choice; they may consent to the limited invasion of their privacy resulting from the testing, or may decline both the test and the conditional offer of employment." (215 C.A.3d 1049.) (See Semore v. Pool (1990) 217 C.A.3d 1087, 1094, 266 C.R. 280 [following Wilkinson].)

In Loder v. Glendale (1997) 14 C.4th 846, 59 C.R.2d 696, 927 P.2d 1200, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §323, the court considered the validity of a program adopted by the city of Glendale under which everyone who was offered a new position by the city was required to submit to testing for drugs and alcohol. Five opinions were filed in the case, none of which commanded a majority. Four justices concluded that the program was invalid as applied to current employees seeking promotions, while five justices concluded that it was valid as applied to new job applicants. (14 C.4th 852, 853, and footnote 1.) (See Pilkington Barnes Hind v. Superior Court (1998) 66

C.A.4th 28, 34, 77 C.R.2d 596 [following Loder; job applicant who delays in submitting to preemployment drug test until after start of employment may not evade testing requirement on ground that applicant became "employee" who is immune from testing]; Smith v. State Personnel Bd. (2000) 83 C.A.4th 1350, 1360, 100 C.R.2d 491 [off-duty drug testing violated employee's right to privacy].)

Mandatory drug testing has arisen in other contexts. (See American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations v. Unemp. Ins. App. Bd. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §321 et seq.)

The commentary on mandatory drug testing in the workplace has been extensive. (See *86 Cal. L. [§ 593] Distinction: Safety Interest Insufficient To Justify Intrusion.

In Luck v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1990) 218 C.A.3d 1, 267 C.R. 618, plaintiff, employed by defendant as a computer programmer, had no tasks involving operation of trains or railroad equipment. She was discharged when she refused to submit a urine sample as part of an unannounced drug test by her employer. In this action for wrongful termination and intentional infliction of emotional distress, she received an award of compensatory and punitive damages. Held, judgment affirmed.

(a) State and federal constitutional rights. The U.S. and California Supreme Courts have held that urinalysis intrudes upon reasonable expectations of privacy. (218 C.A.3d 15, 16, discussing Skinner v. Railway Labor Executives' Assn. (1989) 489 U.S. 602, 109 S.Ct. 1402, 103 L.Ed.2d 639, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §321, and Wilkinson v. Times Mirror Corp. (1989) 215 C.A.3d 1034, 264 C.R. 194, supra, §592.) Defendant's contention that the California constitutional provision gives only informational protection is unsound; Cal. Const., Art. I, §1, has been held to protect a diverse range of personal freedoms. (218 C.A.3d 16.) In Long Beach City Employees Assn. v. Long Beach (1986) 41 C.3d 937, 227 C.R. 90, 719 P.2d 660, supra, §591, the court held that polygraph examinations are an intrusion on the right; "it seems reasonable to infer that our Supreme Court, like the United States Supreme Court in the Fourth Amendment context, would find both the collection and testing of urine to be privacy interests protected by article I, section 1." (218 C.A.3d 17.)

(b) Private employer. Cal. Const., Art. I, §1, does not specify whether its privacy provisions are limited to state action; but California cases and commentators agree that it reaches both governmental and nongovernmental conduct. (218 C.A.3d 17, citing Wilkinson.)

(c) Public interests. The constitutional right to privacy does not prohibit all incursions into individual privacy; but to be valid the invasion must be justified by a compelling interest. (218 C.A.3d 20.) Defendant argued that its interest in rail safety justified the invasion. No case law addresses this issue, but the United States Supreme Court decisions in Skinner, supra, and National Treasury Employees Union v. Von Raab (1989) 489 U.S. 656, 109 S.Ct. 1384, 103 L.Ed.2d 685, 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §322, considering safety issues in Fourth Amendment privacy cases, are persuasive authority. (218 C.A.3d 21, 22.) When an employer asserts an interest that is not obviously applicable to the specific employee in question, federal decisions applying Skinner and Von Raab hold that testing is not justifiable "absent a clear, direct nexus between the employee's duties and the nature of the feared harm." (218 C.A.3d 23.)

In this case, "Southern Pacific suggested only indirect, potential safety ramifications that might result from an imprudent decision that an employee working as Luck did might make if her judgment was impaired by drugs. Under the federal authorities, Luck's job did not have sufficient safety aspects to constitute a safety interest that might be balanced against the intrusion upon her privacy rights. When we also consider that the interest must be compelling in order to justify an intrusion of her privacy rights under our state Constitution--a higher showing than would be required under the Fourth Amendment analysis used by federal courts--it is clear that the trial court's implied ruling that Southern Pacific's safety interest did not justify the invasion of Luck's privacy was correct." (218 C.A.3d 23.) (For limitation on compelling interest test where college athletes are involved, see Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 C.4th 1, 26 C.R.2d 834, 865 P.2d 633, infra, §594.)

[§ 594] Athletes.

In Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 C.4th 1, 26 C.R.2d 834, 865 P.2d 633, student athletes challenged the NCAA's drug testing program under which randomly selected college athletes in postseason competition were required to provide urine samples for chemical analysis. The trial court, finding that the program violated the athletes' right to privacy under Cal. Const., Art. I, §1, granted a permanent injunction, and the Court of Appeal affirmed. Held, the program did not violate the constitutional provision.

(a) The NCAA's drug testing program, which involves observation of urination and disclosure of medical information, implicates both autonomy privacy and information privacy. (7 C.4th 40, 41.) However, participation in intercollegiate athletics involves close regulation and scrutiny and carries with it social norms that effectively diminish the athlete's reasonable expectation of personal privacy. Drug testing has become a highly visible, pervasive, and well-accepted part of athletic competition, and is a reasonably expected part of an athlete's life. (7 C.4th 41, 42.) Also, the athletes have no right to participate in intercollegiate competition; their ability to do so necessarily depends on their willingness to adhere to the rules that have been collectively adopted. (7 C.4th 43.)

(b) Plaintiff's privacy interests, although diminished, are not de minimis. (7 C.4th 43.) The NCAA justifies its intrusion on these diminished expectations by asserting two countervailing interests: (1) safeguarding the integrity of athletic competition; and (2) protecting the health and safety of student athletes. (7 C.4th 43, 44.) These interests are substantial (7 C.4th 44, 48), and the NCAA was not required to prove that "no less intrusive means" were available (7 C.4th 50). Neither case law nor the language or history of Cal. Const., Art. I, §1, justifies imposition of a "least offensive alternative" burden. (7 C.4th 50.)

(c) Blanket or random drug testing of current employees or employment applicants involves other considerations. "Employment settings are diverse, complex, and very different from intercollegiate athletic competition. Reasonable expectations of privacy in those settings are generally not diminished by the emphasis on bodily condition, physical training, and extracurricular competition inherent in athletics." (7 C.4th 54.)

Two justices filed concurring and dissenting opinions. (7 C.4th 58, 62.) A third justice filed a dissenting opinion, expressing the view that "[t]he majority all but abrogate the right of privacy." (7 C.4th 73.) (See 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 794 [Hill]; 29 U.S.F. L. Rev. 197 [same]; on challenging substance abuse testing in schools and colleges as violation of prohibition of Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments against unreasonable searches, see 4 *Cal. Crim. [§ 595] Disclosure of University Grades.

The third "mischief" referred to in White v. Davis (1975) 13 C.3d 757, 120 C.R. 94, 533 P.2d 222, supra, §575, was the basis of a successful pleading in Porten v. University of San Francisco (1976) 64 C.A.3d 825, 134 C.R. 839. Plaintiff alleged that he had authorized use of his Columbia University grades by defendant University of San Francisco only for evaluation of his application for admission, and that defendant had disclosed them to the State Scholarship and Loan Commission without any request by that body or any need for the transcript. Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) There was no violation of the modern common law right of privacy, because the communication was not to the public or to a large number of persons. (64 C.A.3d 828; see 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §651.)

(b) However, the self-executing provision of the Constitution conferred a right of action that was intended to go beyond the scope of the decisional law on the tort action. (64 C.A.3d 829.) Under White v. Davis, the provision was violated by the alleged improper disclosure of information obtained for a specific purpose in the absence of a compelling public interest justifying it. (64 C.A.3d 832.) The court added, however, that if it appeared that an officer or employee of the Commission, in the proper course of his or her duties, had sought the transcript, appellant's claim of invasion of privacy would fail. (64 C.A.3d 832, footnote 4.)

The 1980 Legislature implemented the Porten decision by the enactment of Educ.C. 67137 et seq., authorizing a civil action for wrongful disclosure of students' records. (See 12 Pacific L. J. 413.) However, these statutes were repealed in 1995.

[§ 596] Discovery of Sexual Experiences.

In Fults v. Superior Court (1979) 88 C.A.3d 899, 152 C.R. 210, the district attorney brought a paternity suit on behalf of petitioner against C, the alleged father of the child. C denied paternity and propounded interrogatories seeking names of all persons with whom petitioner had engaged in illicit sexual relations. Petitioner answered that she had engaged in no such relations during a period of 3 months before and 3 months after the likely date of conception, but the trial judge ordered her to answer for periods of 1 year before and after the date. Held, the order was overbroad and an invasion of her constitutional right.

(a) As in Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 844, 143 C.R. 695, 574 P.2d 766, supra, §382, dealing with associational privacy, the interrogatories here dealt with a well-established zone of privacy in sexual relations. (88 C.A.3d 903, 904.)

(b) There was no showing that the inquiry into petitioner's sexual experiences during remote periods was likely to turn up material information; hence, the right of privacy must prevail. (88 C.A.3d 904, 905.) (See Boler v. Superior Court (1987) 201 C.A.3d 467, 474, 475, 247 C.R. 185, 2 Cal. 3. Zoning Regulations and Restrictive Covenants.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 597

[§ 597] Zoning Regulations and Restrictive Covenants.

In Park Redlands Covenant Control Committee v. Simon (1986) 181 C.A.3d 87, 226 C.R. 199, plaintiff, a homeowners association committee, brought an action against defendants, owners of a home within the development, alleging violation of two restrictive covenants: (1) "This project is designed and intended for the use and residence of persons who have attained age 45." (2) "The number of residents in a unit shall be no more than three." Defendants allowed their 31-year-old daughter and her small child, and their 26-year-old son to live with them periodically. Held, the age restriction was invalid under the Unruh Act (see infra, §898 et seq.), and the number restriction violated the California constitutional right to privacy.

(a) The covenant prevented defendants from providing a place to live to any more than one of their two children. "Thus, both the more general right to choose with whom they live, and the right to live as a family, are directly impinged upon by this restriction." (181 C.A.3d 97.)

(b) The interest involved is the control of population density within the development. But Santa Barbara v. Adamson (1980) 27 C.3d 123, 164 C.R. 539, 610 P.2d 436, infra, §1032, and Chula Vista v. Pagard (1981) 115 C.A.3d 785, 171 C.R. 738, held that a regulation of population density must be made by reference to floor space and facilities. The "amorphous restriction" in this case operates in "a completely capricious fashion." (181 C.A.3d 97.)

(c) Whether a private restrictive covenant can be considered state action violative of the right of privacy is the subject of some difference of opinion (181 C.A.3d 98), but state action here can be established on two theories: First, under Shelley v. Kraemer (1948) 334 U.S. 1, 68 S.Ct. 836, 92 L.Ed. 1161, infra, §700, the court's enforcement of the covenant may be regarded as state action. (181 C.A.3d 98.) Second, the city of Redlands, in return for a special use permit, required the imposition of the age and number limitations in the recorded restrictions; and the court cannot ignore the role played by the city in creating and continuing the existence of this "private" restriction. (181 C.A.3d 99.)

In Nahrstedt v. Lakeside Village Condominium Assn. (1994) 8 C.4th 361, 33 C.R.2d 63, 878 P.2d 1275, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §114, plaintiff sued her homeowners association to prevent enforcement of a prohibition in the association's recorded covenants, conditions, and restrictions against keeping pets, contending that the restriction violated her right to privacy under Cal. Const., Art. I, §1. Held, the constitutional provision does not guarantee condominium owners the right to keep cats or dogs as household pets. (8 C.4th 387.) No fundamental public policy favors keeping pets in a condominium project. Neither the federal or state Constitutions nor any California statute confers a general right to keep household pets in common interest developments; nothing in the ballot arguments relating to the privacy provision supports this right; and case law does not recognize a privacy right to keep pets--courts that have considered condominium pet restrictions have uniformly upheld them. (8 C.4th 388, citing sister state cases.) (See 23 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1; 36 Santa Clara L. Rev. 793.)

In Tom v. San Francisco (2004) 120 C.A.4th 674, 680, 16 C.R.3d 13, defendant city, in an effort to discourage the conversion of rental housing into owner-occupied housing, adopted an ordinance requiring all tenants in common to have a right of access to all units in the property, and prohibiting tenants in common from making agreements giving them exclusive rights in individual units. Held, the ordinance violated the state right to privacy. Based on the sanctity of the home, plaintiff established the three required elements for a cause of action alleging a violation of the state privacy right under Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 C.4th 1, 26 C.R.2d 834, 865 P.2d 633, supra, §594. (120 C.A.4th 679.) Defendant's goal of providing more rental housing was not a sufficiently strong countervailing interest. The Ellis Act (Govt.C. 7060 et seq.) prevents local jurisdictions from passing ordinances that limit the rights of landlords from going out of the business of renting, and a governmental interest in precluding landlords from going out of the rental business "would not justify an extreme privacy violation, such as rendering homeowners unable to determine the persons with whom they should live, or forcing them to share their homes with others who are unwelcome." (120 C.A.4th 687.)

4. Psychosurgery and Shock Treatment.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 598

[§ 598] Psychosurgery and Shock Treatment.

In Aden v. Younger (1976) 57 C.A.3d 662, 129 C.R. 535, provisions of the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §29 et seq.) specifying conditions under which psychosurgery and electroconvulsive therapy (shock treatment) may be performed were challenged by petitioners, who were patients seeking this treatment and doctors qualified to perform it. The principal contention, that the consent restrictions violated the patient's right of privacy, was upheld.

(a) The right of privacy as an element of due process (see supra, §558 et seq.) includes privacy of the mind. "Here the state has sought to control neither what is thought by mental patients, nor how they think. Rather, the state is attempting to regulate the use of procedures which touch upon thought processes in significant ways, with neither the intention nor the effect of regulating thought processes, per se. Yet despite the lack of any showing the state has attempted to regulate freedom of thought, this legislation may diminish this right. If so, the legislation can only be sustained by showing (1) it is necessary to further a 'compelling state interest' and (2) the least drastic means has been employed to further those interests." (57 C.A.3d 679.)

(b) The state's interests are the protection of the right to refuse treatment and the prevention of unnecessary administration of hazardous and intrusive treatments. (57 C.A.3d 680.)

(c) The provision that a "responsible relative" be informed of listed items constituting "informed consent" results in a disclosure of the nature and seriousness of the patient's disorder, and violates his or her right of privacy. And, because the relative has no standing to assert the patient's rights, it is doubtful that the disclosure furthers the protection of those rights; hence, no compelling state interest appears. (57 C.A.3d 681.)

(d) The reporting system to control possible abuses of patients' rights, making treatment records available to the Director of Health, state legislators, and county supervisors, is valid only if the patient's identity is not disclosed. (57 C.A.3d 681.) But the provision making this information available to the patient, his or her attorney, conservator, or guardian, is only a limited invasion of privacy and is valid. (57 C.A.3d 681.)

(e) The provision for a review of treatments by a committee of three appointed physicians is both valid and invalid: (1) As to the incompetent patient who is incapable of giving an informed consent, the review of his or her decision is justifiable. (57 C.A.3d 682.) (2) As to the involuntary patient, a review committee's decision is likewise justified by the state's interest in preventing involuntary administration of psychosurgery. (57 C.A.3d 682.) (3) However, as to the competent and voluntary patient who gives a consent, a distinction must be made between psychosurgery and shock treatment:

First, psychosurgery is a hazardous, experimental treatment of last resort, and requiring unanimous approval by a review committee is a justifiable restraint on the patient's right to privacy. (57 C.A.3d 683.)

Second, shock treatment is not an experimental procedure and its hazards are not as serious as those of psychosurgery. Hence, where informed consent is adequately insured, there is no justification for infringing on the patient's right to privacy in selecting the treatment. (57 C.A.3d 684.)

(f) Further, the requirement that the procedure be "critically" needed for the patient's welfare was unconstitutionally vague (57 C.A.3d 678); the lack of an adequate hearing for patients on the issues of competency and voluntariness was a denial of procedural due process (57 C.A.3d 684); and the unconstitutional provisions were not severable (57 C.A.3d 685). (See 15 Santa Clara Lawyer 725; for statutory amendments to ensure greater protection of patient's right of privacy, see 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §390.)

The jury commissioner, acting under Govt.C. 6250 et seq., disclosed the identities of prospective jurors to the litigants, who investigated and compiled information concerning them. Plaintiff requested that the judge require disclosure to him of the information gathered, and on denial of his request brought this action against defendant city for violation of his right of privacy. Held, judgment for defendant on demurrer affirmed.

(a) Defendant's conduct in disclosing the names did not involve the gathering or disclosure of sensitive or personal information; the information was gathered by others. (80 C.A.3d 313.)

(b) None of the four "mischiefs" of White v. Davis (1975) 13 C.3d 757, 120 C.R. 94, 533 P.2d 222, supra, §575, was involved.

(c) There was no duty on the part of the judge to require the litigants to disclose the information; he had no knowledge of what had been gathered, and there had been no judicial determination that the litigants had done anything improper. (80 C.A.3d 314.)

(2) Interference With Right To Marry. Although the right to marry is a protected privacy right, it is not absolute. The court must balance it against important competing interests. In *Ortiz v. Defendant had a legitimate interest in protecting the officers and their families by preventing disclosure of confidential information about them to criminals, and no feasible alternatives to safeguard the information were shown. (In re Conservatorship of Valerie N. (1985) 40 C.3d 143, 160, 219 C.R. 387, 707 P.2d 760, supra, §570.)

(6) Improper Condition for Welfare Assistance. In Robbins v. Superior Court (1985) 38 C.3d 199, 211 C.R. 398, 695 P.2d 695, the court expressed its approval of the contention that in kind benefits (food and shelter at a county-run facility) offered by a county in its general assistance program, infringed on the right of privacy of single, employable residents. (38 C.3d 213.)

(7) Prohibition of Political Advertising on Municipal Bus. In Women's Int. League for Peace and Freedom, Fresno Branch v. Fresno (1986) 186 C.A.3d 30, 237 C.R. 577, a city ordinance prohibited all forms of political advertising on city-owned-and-operated buses, although commercial advertising was permitted. In an action by plaintiff, an unincorporated political organization, the trial court declared the ordinance unconstitutional and enjoined defendant-city from enforcing the ordinance against plaintiff. Held, judgment reversed. "Courts are well aware that public transportation exposes passengers to increasingly unpleasant experiences. Sensitivity to the safety and personal feelings of passengers may permit reasonable restrictions against forms of activity and expression which may come into conflict with the constitutionally protected privacy rights of the passengers." In this case, "privacy rights of the 'captive audience' justified the exclusion within transit buses of all forms of expression which could not otherwise be restricted." (186 C.A.3d 41.)

(8) Rental Records. In Department of Fair Emp. & Housing v. Superior Court (2002) 99 C.A.4th 896, 903, 121 C.R.2d 615, the court applied the balancing test of Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 C.4th 1, 26, 26 C.R.2d 834, 865 P.2d 633, supra, §594, to hold that the compelling state interest in protecting prospective tenants from discrimination outweighs the privacy interests of present and past tenants and applicants in their rental records.

(9) No Privilege for Union Representative. The right of privacy is not violated by requiring a union representative to name those employees involved in a discrimination case. (American Airlines v. Superior Court (2003) 114 C.A.4th 881, 893, 8 C.R.3d 146, distinguishing Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 C.3d 844, 143 C.R. 695, 574 P.2d 766, supra, §382.)

(10) Video Surveillance. Vo v. Garden Grove (2004) 115 C.A.4th 425, 9 C.R.3d 257, held that an ordinance requiring CyberCafes to have video surveillance showing the physical features of persons and the activity in the premises does not violate protected privacy interests of patrons in either their activity on the premises or their physical features. (115 C.A.4th 447.) A person's physical features are not confidential, and there is no reasonable expectation of privacy in a public retail establishment. (115 C.A.4th 448.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(11) (New) Identity of Putative Class Members. In Tien v. Superior Court (2006) 139 C.A.4th 528, 540, 43 C.R.3d 121, the court held that the privacy rights of putative class members who contacted plaintiff's attorney in response to a neutral letter regarding a class action outweighed defendant employer's need to learn the identity of those class members, many of whom were current employees.

VIII. PRIVACY

B. Rights Under California Law.

2. Right to Financial Privacy Act.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 603

[§ 603] Right to Financial Privacy Act.

(1) Background and General Purpose. The federal Bank Secrecy Act of 1970, requiring reporting of financial transactions, was upheld by the United States Supreme Court, which rejected a claim of Fourth Amendment right of privacy in bank records. (See California Bankers Assn. v. Shultz (1974) 416 U.S. 21, 94 S.Ct. 1494, 1510, 39 L.Ed.2d 812, 835; United States v. Miller (1976) 425 U.S. 435, 96 S.Ct. 1619, 1625, 48 L.Ed.2d 71, 77; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses §460.) The California Supreme Court came to a different conclusion, finding a protectible right of privacy in Cal. Const., Art. I, §1. (See Burrows v. Superior Court (1974) 13 C.3d 238, 246, 118 C.R. 166, 529 P.2d 590; Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 C.3d 652, 656, 125 C.R. 553, 542 P.2d 977; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses §461; 64 Cal. L. Rev. 470 [Burrows]; 28 Hastings L. J. 247 [IRS Access to Bank Records]; 10 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 13 [Privacy and Banking Records]; 33 A.L.R.5th 453 [search and seizure of bank records pertaining to customer as violation of customer's rights under state law].)

The 1976 Legislature responded with the California Right to Financial Privacy Act. (Govt.C. 7460 et seq.; see 8 Pacific L. J. 251.) The Act provides criminal and civil sanctions for its violation (Govt.C. 7485, 7486, 7487, 7488), and that evidence improperly obtained is "inadmissible in any proceeding" except one to enforce the Act. (Govt.C. 7489.) (See 10 Pacific L. J. 384 [1978 amendments to Act, dealing particularly with authorized subpoena procedures]; on Financial Information Privacy Act, Fin.C. 4050 et seq., see infra, §607.)

(2) Confidentiality of Financial Records. Subject to conditions and exceptions, "no officer, employee, or agent of a state or local agency or department thereof, in connection with a civil or criminal investigation of a customer, whether or not such investigation is being conducted pursuant to formal judicial or administrative proceedings, may request or receive copies of, or the information contained in, the financial records of any customer from a financial institution" unless (a) the records are described "with particularity"; (b) they "are consistent with the scope and requirements of the investigation"; and (c) the customer either authorizes the disclosure (as prescribed in Govt.C. 7473), or the conditions for permitted disclosure, specified in Govt.C. 7474, 7475, or 7476, are met. (Govt.C. 7470(a).) The institutions must keep records of all examinations and disclosures for 5 years and make these records available to their customers. (Govt.C. 7470(c).)

Law enforcement agencies are authorized to initiate contact with a financial institution if there is reason to believe that the institution is a victim of a crime; if the institution concludes that it is a victim, it may disclose relevant records

pursuant to Govt.C. 7471(c). (Govt.C. 7470(d).)

(3) Restrictions on Disclosure. Financial institutions are prohibited from furnishing financial information for state and local investigations of their customers except in conformity with P.C. 14160 et seq. or Govt.C. 7473 et seq. (Govt.C. 7471(a).) However: (a) They are not required to determine whether the conditions have actually been met if the document served "shows compliance on its face." (Govt.C. 7470(b).) (b) Disclosures in the ordinary course of business, where there is no reasonable cause to believe that they will be used in an investigation of a customer, are permitted. (Govt.C. 7471(b).) (c) The institutions may initiate disclosures "concerning suspected violation of any law." (Govt.C. 7471(c).) (On the immunity of financial institutions for good faith refusals to make disclosures, see Govt.C. 7471(d).)

(4) Conditions for Disclosure. The circumstances under which a disclosure is proper are set forth in Govt.C. 7473 et seq.

(a) A customer may authorize disclosure by complying with the requirements of Govt.C. 7473. In some cases, however, authorization is mandatory as a condition of a license or privilege to do business. (See, e.g., B. & P.C. 6069 [attorneys], B. & P.C. 10145, 10146 [real estate licensees and brokers].) (See also Unemp.Ins.C. 1092 [employing units must furnish authorization for disclosure of bank records]; on waivers, see Govt.C. 7490.)

(b) Three procedures for obtaining records and information from financial institutions are available to state and local agencies: (1) An administrative summons or subpoena, if a copy is served on the customer, and it includes the name of the agency or department and the "statutory purpose" for which the information is sought, and the customer does not notify the institution within 10 days that he or she has moved to quash within 10 days of service. (Govt.C. 7474(a)); for exceptions, see Govt.C. 7474(b).) (2) A search warrant issued pursuant to P.C. 1523 et seq. (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Illegally Obtained Evidence, §79 et seq.). (Govt.C. 7475.) (3) A judicial subpoena or subpoena duces tecum, if it is served on the customer and he or she does not move to quash within 10 days of service. (Govt.C. 7476(a).) (On grand jury investigations, see Govt.C. 7476(b).)

(5) Exempted Disclosures. Exceptions to the Act are specified; e.g., information that is not obtained from the customers' financial records; criminal investigations of crime reports of fraudulent use of checks, etc.; and investigations of designated state agencies and officers pursuant to statute. Further, the Act exempts a county auditor-controller or director of finance when investigating fraud against the county, but provides that a county auditor-controller or director of finance who unlawfully discloses the authorized information is guilty of a misdemeanor. (Govt.C. 7480; see Govt.C. 7493 [right to obtain credit reports from "anyone other than a financial institution"].)

VIII. PRIVACY

B. Rights Under California Law.

3. Information Practices Act.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 604

[§ 604] Information Practices Act.

(1) Nature of Act. The Information Practices Act of 1977 (C.C. 1798 et seq.) deals with the growing threat to privacy by the indiscriminate collection, maintenance, and dissemination of personal information, which has been enhanced by increased use of new information technology. The statute places strict limits on these activities. (C.C. 1798.1.) (See C.C. 1798.3 [definitions]; 5 San Fernando Valley L. Rev. 321 [Research Access into Automated Criminal Justice Information Systems and the Right to Privacy].)

(2) Scope and General Provisions. (a) All state agencies are subject to the Act, except the Legislature, the State Compensation Insurance Fund, judicial agencies established pursuant to Article VI of the Constitution, and local agencies as defined in Govt.C. 6252(a) (cities and counties, school districts, boards and commissions, etc.). (C.C. 1798.3(b).) (b) Civil remedies are provided (see C.C. 1798.45 et seq., 1798.77); intentional violations by state officers and employees are grounds for discipline, including dismissal (C.C. 1798.55); and criminal sanctions are included (C.C. 1798.56, 1798.57). (c) The Act is to be liberally construed to protect the constitutional and statutory right of privacy. (C.C. 1798.63.) (On rules of construction, see C.C. 1798.70 et seq.)

(3) Regulation of Records. Each agency must minimize the personal information it collects and maintains. (C.C. 1798.14.) To the "greatest extent practicable," information must be obtained from the individual involved (C.C. 1798.15), and all sources of information must be maintained (C.C. 1798.16). (On forms used to collect information, see C.C. 1798.17; on updating information, see C.C. 1798.18.) Each agency must also "ensure that no record containing personal information shall be modified, transferred, or destroyed to avoid compliance" with the Act. (C.C. 1798.77.)

(4) Disclosures. Disclosures of personal information are limited to those authorized in the 22 subsections of C.C. 1798.24. An accurate accounting of certain disclosures must be made, including those pursuant to subpoena or search warrant and those to law enforcement agencies. (C.C. 1798.25.) (See Lorig v. Medical Bd. (2000) 78 C.A.4th 462, 469, 92 C.R.2d 862 [disclosure of physicians' home addresses on medical board's website does not violate Act because Act allows disclosure of names and addresses of professional licensees, and physicians may choose to supply business address or post office box number as their "address of record"]; Jennifer M. v. Redwood Women's Health Center (2001) 88 C.A.4th 81, 87, 105 C.R.2d 544 [because Act only imposes limitations on government agencies, it did not cover private medical clinic, even though clinic contracted with state to provide Medi-Cal services; issue of first impression]; California Teachers Assn. v. California Com. on Teacher Credentialing (2003) 111 C.A.4th 1001, 1011, 4 C.R.3d 369

[regulation that permitted disclosure of addresses of complaining witnesses in investigation into teacher's alleged misconduct was invalid; it conflicted with Act and expanded discovery beyond other statutory requirements].)

(5) Access to and Correction of Records of Personal Information. (a) Individuals must be informed, on request, if an agency maintains a record of personal information about them, and they must also be advised of the procedures for obtaining access to and contesting the accuracy of those records. (C.C. 1798.32; on procedures, see C.C. 1798.33, 1798.34.) (b) Requests for an amendment of a record must be complied with within 30 days unless the agency informs the person affected of the reasons for its refusal, and the procedures for reviewing the refusal. (C.C. 1798.35; see C.C. 1798.36 [procedures]; C.C. 1798.37 [inclusion of individual's statement disputing record].) These procedures are not available, however, for records that evidence property rights. (C.C. 1798.39.) (c) Agencies must not disclose, and must delete, any information about another person. (C.C. 1798.42.) Agencies need not disclose any exempt information (see C.C. 1798.40) about the individual requesting access and may delete that information from any disclosures. (C.C. 1798.43.)

If it is determined that information requested is exempt from access, the requesting party must be informed that disclosure is not required by law. (C.C. 1798.41(a); on review, see C.C. 1798.41(b).) (On conditions that permit informing individual that it maintains no record, despite existence of record of confidential information, see C.C. 1798.41(c).)

In Perkey v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1986) 42 C.3d 185, 228 C.R. 169, 721 P.2d 50, the department's dissemination of fingerprint data to third parties for purposes unrelated to motor vehicle safety was held violative of the Information Practices Act. "Although fingerprints, as such, are not specifically listed in the definition of 'personal information,' there can be no doubt that the Act was intended to provide protection for precisely this type of record. Fingerprints fall within the category of information 'that identifies or describes an individual.' (§1798.3.) Moreover, a fingerprint is a much more private matter than a name or address and its disclosure can lead to much greater intrusions on privacy than the simple disclosure of an individual's name." (42 C.3d 193.) (See 14 Pepperdine L. Rev. 512.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Nature of Act. See C.E.B., Privacy Compliance and Litigation, §6.47 et seq.

(2) Scope and General Provisions. See Bates v. Franchise Tax Bd. (2004) 124 C.A.4th 367, 377, 382, 21 C.R.3d 285 [Act does not apply to nonpersonal information used by Franchise Tax Board to estimate income for taxpayers who fail to file return; Act does not supersede claims filing requirements of Government Claims Act].

(1) In General. Patients are guaranteed access to their medical records (Health & Saf.C. 123100 et seq.), but disclosure of minors' records (Health & Saf.C. 123115) and alcohol and drug abuse records (Health & Saf.C. 123125) are limited. (See 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Discovery, §120.)

(2) Confidentiality of Medical Information Act. The disclosure of medical information by health care providers and other specified persons is regulated. (See C.C. 56 et seq.; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §518 et seq.)

(3) Genetic Test Results. The unauthorized disclosure by health care service plans, self-insured welfare benefit plans, and life and disability insurers, of genetic test results contained in an applicant's or enrollee's medical records is prohibited. (See C.C. 56.17; Ins.C. 10123.35; Ins.C. 10140.1; 22 *Southwestern U. L. 5. Motor Vehicle Records.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 606

[§ 606] Motor Vehicle Records.

(1) In General. The sale of information from records of motor vehicle registration is subject to conditions designed to protect against misuse. (Veh.C. 1810(b).) And a person's registration or driver's license record may be suppressed from other persons on a showing that the person has reasonable cause to believe that he or she is the subject of stalking or that a threat of death or great bodily injury exists. (Veh.C. 1808.21(d).) Suppression is for a 1-year period but may be renewed. Further, records may be suppressed when a person submits a certificate or identification card showing participation in a state program protecting victims of domestic violence or stalking. Suppression of records under this provision lasts for 4 years, and may be renewed for subsequent 4-year periods. (Veh.C. 1808.21(e).)

(2) Home Addresses in DMV Records. Residence addresses in the Department of Motor Vehicle's records are confidential and their disclosure is prohibited except for specified purposes. (Veh.C. 1808.21; see Veh.C. 1808.22 [exemptions]; Veh.C. 1808.23 [same]; Veh.C. 1808.45 [unauthorized disclosure or false representation to obtain information is misdemeanor]; Veh.C. 1808.46 [civil penalty up to $ 100,000 for unauthorized distribution or false representations to obtain information]; *State Farm Mut. The Vehicle Code further provides that the home addresses of specified law enforcement officers and other state and local public officials and employees are confidential, if the person so requests. (See Veh.C. 1808.4; Veh.C. 1808.6 [specified officers and employees of Department of Corrections]; Veh.C. 1808.2 [investigators for district attorney and peace officers employed by Board of Prison Terms]; Veh.C. 1808.9 [person whose home address is confidential under Veh.C. 1808.2, 1808.4, or 1808.6 may be required to demonstrate eligibility on renewal of license]; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §528.)

(3) Social Security and Other Identifying Numbers on DMV Application Forms. Application forms for driver's licenses and identification cards must contain a section for the applicant's Social Security number. Application forms for motor vehicle registrations and certificates of title must contain a section for the applicant's driver's license or identification card number. All applicants must furnish the appropriate number. The number is not a public record, may not be included on any document issued by the department, and may not be disclosed by the department except for specified purposes. (Veh.C. 1653.5; see Lauderbach v. Zolin (1995) 35 C.A.4th 578, 584, 585, 41 C.R.2d 434 [upholding, except for aliens whose presence is authorized by federal law but who are ineligible to obtain number, requirement that applicants furnish Social Security number]; Nowlin v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1997) 53 C.A.4th 1529, 1536, 62 C.R.2d 409 [DMV may properly require applicants for new and renewal driver's licenses to obtain and disclose their Social Security numbers; following Lauderbach.])

(4) Insurance or Bond Information on Registration Applications. Information regarding any motor vehicle liability insurance policy or surety bond disclosed in an application for renewal of motor vehicle registration is confidential. (Veh.C. 1808.24.)

(5) Motor Vehicle Theft and Motor Vehicle Insurance Fraud Reporting Act. The disclosure by insurers of information relating to motor vehicle theft or motor vehicle insurance fraud is regulated. (See Ins.C. 1874 et seq.)

[§ 607] Other Privacy Statutes.

(1) Breast-feeding Mothers. "[A] mother may breast-feed her child in any location, public or private, except the private home or residence of another, where the mother and the child are otherwise authorized to be present." (C.C. 43.3; see 29 McGeorge L. Rev. 447 [mother's right to breast-feed in public].)

(2) Business Records. The Civil Code regulates disclosures by persons performing bookkeeping services. (See C.C. 1799 et seq.)

(3) Computer and Internet Privacy. State and local agencies and persons intending to cause imminent bodily harm are prohibited from posting the home address or telephone number of any elected or appointed official, or any specified public safety official, on the Internet without the individual's written permission. (Govt.C. 6254.21.) State agencies are prohibited from distributing or selling "any electronically collected personal information about users to any third party without prior written permission from the user, except as required to investigate possible violations" of P.C. 502 (see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Property §228 et seq.) or as authorized under the Information Practices Act (supra, §604). (Govt.C. 11015.5.) Further, operators of commercial websites or online services that collect personally identifiable information through the Internet about California residents who use their services must post their privacy policies conspicuously on their websites. (B. & P.C. 22575(a).) The privacy policy must identify the categories of personally identifiable information the operator collects and the categories of third parties with whom the operator may share that personal information. (B. & P.C. 22575(b)(1).) (See 104 Harv. L. Rev. 1898 [proposed legislation on computer crime]; 112 Harv. L. Rev. 1575 [right to speak in cyberspace]; 34 *San Diego L. (4) Customer Records. Businesses must take reasonable steps to destroy, erase, or obliterate personal information about customers in records they will no longer retain. (C.C. 1798.80 et seq.; see C.C. 1798.84 [injured customer may seek damages, civil penalty, and injunctive relief against business].) Businesses that own or license personal information about California residents must implement and maintain reasonable security procedures. (C.C. 1798.81.5 [exempting certain health care providers, financial institutions, etc., that are covered by other privacy statutes].) Security breaches of computerized data systems must be disclosed to California residents when their unencrypted personal information is reasonably believed to have been acquired by an unauthorized person. (C.C. 1798.29, 1798.82.) Businesses must notify their customers when they disclose specified personal information to third parties if the businesses know or reasonably should know that the third parties used the personal information for direct marketing purposes. (C.C. 1798.83.) (See 56 Stanf. L. Rev. 191 [Data Retention: Privacy, Anonymity, and Accountability Online].)

(5) Educational Records. The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) guarantees parents access to, and otherwise protects the privacy of, these records. (See 20 U.S.C., §1232g; Owasso Independent School Dist. No. I-011 v. Falvo (2002) 534 U.S. 426, 122 S.Ct. 934, 939, 151 L.Ed.2d 896, 904 [peer-graded work and assignments are not educational records subject to protection under 20 U.S.C., §1232g]; *Rim of the World Unified School Dist. v. Rev. 1163; on privacy of records of elementary and secondary school students, see Educ.C. 49073 et seq.)

(6) Financial Information Privacy Act. Fin.C. 4050 et seq. provide for notice and choice for consumers regarding how their nonpublic personal information is shared or sold by their financial institutions. The Act is intended to afford persons greater privacy protections than those found in the federal Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act. (Fin.C. 4050; on California Right to Financial Privacy Act, see supra, §603.) The Act provides a civil penalty for its violation. (Fin.C. 4057.)

(7) Personal Information Sent Through Mail. State agencies are prohibited from sending any outgoing U.S. mail to individuals containing personal information about that individual, including his or her Social Security, driver's license, or credit card numbers, except where the information is within sealed correspondence and cannot be viewed from the outside. (Govt.C. 11019.7.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law IX. PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES A. United States Citizenship. 1. The Abridgement Clause.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 608

[§ 608] The Abridgement Clause.

The Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution provides: "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States." By virtue of this provision, a citizen of the United States is protected against certain action by any state, even the state of which he or she is a citizen. Unlike the Equal Protection Clause (infra, §695), this Clause does not refer to "persons;" thus, corporations are not included. (Asbury Hosp. v. Cass County, North Dakota (1945) 326 U.S. 207, 66 S.Ct. 61, 63, 90 L.Ed. 6, 11.) (See 34 San Diego L. Rev. 681 [Citizenship and the Fourteenth Amendment]; 34 San Diego L. Rev. 809 [The Privileges and Immunities Clause of Article IV, Section 2: Precursor of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment]; 28 Hastings Const. L. Q. 235 [Privileges or Immunities: The Missing Link in Establishing Congressional Power To Abrogate State Eleventh Amendment Immunity]; 16*B Am.Jur.2d* (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §745 et seq.; 2 Rotunda, §14.3; 1 Tribe, §7-2.)

As originally interpreted, the Abridgement Clause gave only a vague and limited protection. Thus, in the Slaughter-House Cases (1872) 83 U.S. 36, 21 L.Ed. 394, the Court held that the privileges and immunities of United States citizenship did not include civil rights generally, but were restricted to those rights owing their existence to the federal Government, Constitution, or laws. In Maxwell v. Dow (1900) 176 U.S. 581, 20 S.Ct. 448, 44 L.Ed. 597, it was decided that the first eight amendments to the federal Constitution were not included. And in Breedlove v. Suttles (1937) 302 U.S. 277, 58 S.Ct. 205, 82 L.Ed. 252 (later overruled; see supra, §243), it was held that the privilege of voting for state officers is not derived from the federal Constitution or laws but is conferred by the state, and that the state may condition the privilege by imposing a poll tax. (See Snowden v. Hughes (1944) 321 U.S. 1, 64 S.Ct. 397, 400, 88 L.Ed. 497, 502 [right to become candidate for state office is not privilege of national citizenship]; 55 Hastings L. J. 333 [Slaughter House Cases]; 23 Thomas Jefferson L. Rev. 241 [same]; 1 Tribe, §§7-3, 7-4.)

As a result of these decisions, this part of the Fourteenth Amendment became known as the "forgotten clause." Its scope was defined by such general declarations as the remarks in the Slaughter House Cases to the effect that it protects the right to come to the seat of government, to transact business with the Government, to seek its protection, to share its offices, to have free access to its seaports and to the courts of justice of the states, to use the navigable waters, and to make use of rights secured to citizens of the United States by treaties with foreign nations.

An attempt to revive the Abridgement Clause and enlarge its effect was made in Colgate v. Harvey (1935) 296 U.S. 404, 56 S.Ct. 252, 80 L.Ed. 299. The Court held that national citizenship gave a citizen of Vermont the privilege of transacting any lawful business, and making contracts or loans in any other state, without interference by discriminatory state taxation which might become so heavy as to destroy the privilege. But the case was soon overruled by Madden v. Kentucky (1940) 309 U.S. 83, 60 S.Ct. 406, 410, 84 L.Ed. 590, 595, where the Court declared that "the right to carry out an incident to a trade, business or calling such as the deposit of money in banks is not a privilege of national citizenship."

Nevertheless, there are indications that the Abridgement Clause may have some practical content. In Hague v. Committee for Industiral Organization (1939) 307 U.S. 496, 59 S.Ct. 954, 957, 83 L.Ed. 1423, 1429, one of the opinions took the position that United States citizenship gave plaintiffs, labor organizers, the privilege of meeting and freely discussing national legislation affecting labor relations (the Wagner Act). And in Edwards v. California (1941) 314 U.S. 160, 62 S.Ct. 164, 169, 86 L.Ed. 119, 127, four justices, in a concurring opinion, contended that the right of an indigent person to move freely between states was a privilege of national citizenship. (See Acosta v. San Diego (1954) 126 C.A.2d 455, 465, 272 P.2d 92 [Indian on federal reservation in California is entitled to privileges of California citizens]; 102 Harv. L. Rev. 1925 [Congressional Power To Define and Enforce the Rights of National Citizenship]; 24 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 319 [Edwards]; on right to travel, see supra, §403.)

A. United States Citizenship.
2. Access to Courts.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 609

[§ 609] Access to Courts.

In Christopher v. Harbury (2002) 536 U.S. 403, 122 S.Ct. 2179, 153 L.Ed.2d 413, the Court discussed the requirements for bringing an action claiming an unconstitutional denial of access to the courts. Plaintiff alleged that United States Government officials concealed information about her husband, a foreign dissident held in his own country, and that this deception prevented her from filing a timely action that might have saved her husband's life. Held, no actionable claim was stated.

(a) "Whether an access claim turns on a litigating opportunity yet to be gained or an opportunity already lost, the very point of recognizing any access claim is to provide some effective vindication for a separate and distinct right to seek judicial relief for some wrong. However unsettled the basis of the constitutional right of access to courts, our cases rest on the recognition that the right is ancillary to the underlying claim, without which a plaintiff cannot have suffered injury by being shut out of court. ... It follows that the underlying cause of action, whether anticipated or lost, is an element that must be described in the complaint, just as much as allegations must describe the official acts frustrating the litigation. It follows, too, that when the access claim (like this one) looks backward, the complaint must identify a remedy that may be awarded as recompense but not otherwise available in some suit that may yet be brought." (122 S.Ct. 2186, 153 L.Ed.2d 424.)

(b) In a denial of access complaint, the plaintiff should state the underlying claim in accordance with F.R.Civ.P., Rule 8(a), "just as if it were being independently pursued, and a like plain statement should describe any remedy available under the access claim and presently unique to it." (122 S.Ct. 2188, 153 L.Ed.2d 426.) Here, plaintiff's "complaint failed to identify the underlying cause of action that the alleged deception had compromised," leaving the court and defendants to guess at the unstated cause of action and the remedy being sought independently of relief sought in the other 24 counts of the complaint. (122 S.Ct. 2188, 153 L.Ed.2d 426.)

IX. PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES

B. State Citizenship.

1. The Entitlement Clause.

a. Nature and Purpose.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 610

[§ 610] Nature and Purpose.

(1) Rights of Nonresidents. U.S. Const., Art. IV, §2, provides: "The citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states." These are privileges and immunities that citizens of one state are entitled to claim while in another state, by virtue of their state citizenship. The section prevents a state from treating a citizen of another state as an alien, discriminating against him or her in favor of its own citizens. "The primary purpose of this clause ... was to help fuse into one Nation a collection of independent, sovereign States. It was designed to insure to a citizen of State A who ventures into State B the same privileges which the citizens of State B enjoy." (Toomer v. Witsell (1948) 334 U.S. 385, 68 S.Ct. 1156, 1162, 92 L.Ed. 1460, 1471, infra, §612; see Supreme Court of New Hampshire v. Piper (1985) 470 U.S. 274, 105 S.Ct. 1272, 1276, 84 L.Ed.2d 205, 211, infra, §614 [Clause "was intended to create a national economic union"]; Saenz v. Roe (1999) 526 U.S. 489, 119 S.Ct. 1518, 1525, 1526, 143 L.Ed.2d 689, 703 [Welf.C. 11450.03, providing welfare benefits for new residents based on lesser amount recipient would have received in state of former residency, violated Privileges and Immunity Clause; newly arrived citizens have same right to privileges and immunities enjoyed by other citizens]; 113 Harv. L. Rev. 110 [Saenz]; 20 Hastings Const. L. Q. 391 [What States Owe Outsiders]; 52 Stanford L. Rev. 709 [Saenz]; 48 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. [same]; 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §745 et seq.; 1 Tribe, §§6-36, 6-37.)

The Clause bars discrimination against citizens of other states where nonresidence is the only substantial reason for the different treatment; it does not preclude disparity of treatment where there are valid, independent reasons for it. (Davis v. Franchise Tax Bd. (1977) 71 C.A.3d 998, 1001, 139 C.R. 797.)

(2) Extension of Privileges to Persons Aggrieved. The language of this section of the Constitution differs from that used in the Fourteenth Amendment. The Abridgement Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment renders void any acts that abridge the privileges or immunities protected thereby. (See supra, §608.) But Article IV, §2, declares that the citizens of each state "shall be entitled" to the privileges or immunities included within the meaning of the section. Quong Ham Wah Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com. of Calif. (1920) 184 C. 26, 39, 192 P. 1021, held that where a privilege is granted in violation of the section, the statute is not void; the constitutional clause becomes a part of the statute and extends its benefits to the citizens of other states.

IX. PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES

B. State Citizenship.

1. The Entitlement Clause.

b. Scope.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 611

[§ 611] Scope.

The original construction of the Entitlement Clause, like that given the Fourteenth Amendment Abridgement Clause (supra, §608), was narrow. It was said that the privileges include only those that are fundamental, such as the right to acquire and possess property, to pass into any other state, to reside there and engage in lawful commerce or business, or to be exempt from any higher taxes than are imposed by the state on its own citizens. (See Blake v. McClung (1898) 172 U.S. 239, 19 S.Ct. 165, 43 L.Ed. 432; Doe v. Bolton (1973) 410 U.S. 179, 93 S.Ct. 739, 751, 35 L.Ed.2d 201, 218, supra, §561 [Entitlement Clause protects persons who enter state seeking available medical services].)

Later decisions have extended the Entitlement Clause to the right to practice law (see Supreme Court of New Hampshire v. Piper (1985) 470 U.S. 274, 105 S.Ct. 1272, 84 L.Ed.2d 205, infra, §614) and the right to be employed on local public works projects (see United Bldg. & Const. Trades Council of Camden County & Vicinity v. Mayor & Council of Camden (1984) 465 U.S. 208, 104 S.Ct. 1020, 79 L.Ed.2d 249, infra, §613).

Corporations are not citizens within the meaning of the Clause. (Blake v. McClung, supra; Asbury Hosp. v. Cass County, North Dakota (1945) 326 U.S. 207, 66 S.Ct. 61, 90 L.Ed. 6.) They may, however, invoke the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and it is difficult to conceive of a right protected by the Privileges and Immunities Clause that is not also within the scope of the Equal Protection Clause. (See infra, §694 et seq.)

2. Wild Animals and Fish.

[§ 612] Wild Animals and Fish.

In Corfield v. Coryell (1825) Fed. Cas. 3, 230 (discussed in Blake v. McClung (1898) 172 U.S. 239, 19 S.Ct. 165, 43 L.Ed. 432), a state statute prohibited nonresidents from taking oysters from waters within the state. Held, the statute was valid. The oysters, like wild animals and fish, were ferae naturae; they were the common property of the citizens of the state; and, while citizens of other states were entitled to the protection of their private rights, the Constitution gave them no share in this common property.

But this theory of valid discrimination in dealing with wild animals and fish within a state was qualified in Toomer v. Witsell (1948) 334 U.S. 385, 68 S.Ct. 1156, 1165, 92 L.Ed. 1460, 1474, supra, §610. A South Carolina statute regulated the taking of migratory shrimp (free-swimming fish that migrate through the waters of several states) from its 3-mile coastal belt. An annual license fee was imposed for each shrimp boat: $ 25 for resident owners, $ 2,500 for nonresidents. Held, the statute violated Article IV, §2. It was clearly and drastically discriminatory to the point of practically excluding nonresident operators; the free-swimming migratory fish of the ocean, unlike those within the inland waters of a state, are not the special property of the state. Hence, this regulation of commercial shrimping, like the regulation of any other calling, came within the Privileges and Immunities Clause. (For similar holding relating to aliens under the Equal Protection Clause, see infra, §721.)

The continued vitality of the views expressed in Corfield was asserted in Baldwin v. Fish & Game Com. of Montana (1978) 436 U.S. 371, 98 S.Ct. 1852, 1860, 56 L.Ed.2d 354, upholding a Montana statute that charged nonresidents $ 225 for an elk-hunting license, while residents paid only $ 30. The court pointed out that elk hunting is a sport, not a means to the nonresident's livelihood, and added that "[t]he elk supply, which has been entrusted to the care of the State by the people of Montana, is finite and must be carefully tended in order to be preserved." (98 S.Ct. 1862, 56 L.Ed.2d 368.) (On impact of Commerce Clause on export of state's natural resources, see Hughes v. Oklahoma (1979) 441 U.S. 322, 99 S.Ct. 1727, 60 L.Ed.2d 250, infra, §1299.)

3. Employment Discrimination.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 613

[§ 613] Employment Discrimination.

(1) Statutory Preference to State Residents. In Hicklin v. Orbeck (1978) 437 U.S. 518, 98 S.Ct. 2482, 57 L.Ed.2d 397, Alaska's "Local Hire Under State Leases" law required the employment of Alaska residents in preference to nonresidents in all oil or gas leases, easements, etc., to which the state is a party. Held, the statute was unconstitutional. "Even if a statute granting an employment preference to unemployed residents or to residents enrolled in job training programs might be permissible, Alaska Hire's across-the-board grant of a job preference to all Alaskan residents clearly is not." (98 S.Ct. 2489, 57 L.Ed.2d 406.) The Commerce Clause cases call for the same result. (98 S.Ct. 2491, 57 L.Ed.2d 408; see infra, §1298.) (See 22 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1 [constitutionality of state preference laws].)

(2) Statutory Preference to Local Residents. In United Bldg. & Const. Trades Council of Camden County & Vicinity v. Mayor & Council of Camden (1984) 465 U.S. 208, 104 S.Ct. 1020, 79 L.Ed.2d 249, the city of Camden, New Jersey, to alleviate an employment crisis, adopted an ordinance requiring that at least 40% of the employees of contractors working on city construction projects be Camden residents. Held, the ordinance was unconstitutional.

(a) Municipal ordinance within scope of Clause. The ordinance would not have gone into effect without express approval by the State Treasurer; hence state action was involved. (104 S.Ct. 1025, 79 L.Ed.2d 256.) But even if the ordinance had been adopted solely by the city and not pursuant to a state program or with state approval, it would still be subject to the Entitlement Clause. A municipality is a political subdivision of the state from which its authority derives; and "[i]t is as true of the Privileges and Immunities Clause as of the Equal Protection Clause that what would be unconstitutional if done directly by the State can no more readily be accomplished by a city deriving its authority from the State." (104 S.Ct. 1026, 79 L.Ed.2d 256.)

(b) Discrimination on basis of municipal residence. The contention that the Entitlement Clause applies only to distinctions based on state citizenship cannot be accepted. Although the Clause contains this language, "it is now established that the terms 'citizen' and 'resident' are 'essentially interchangeable,' ... for purposes of analysis of most cases under the Privileges and Immunities Clause." (104 S.Ct. 1026, 79 L.Ed.2d 257.) A person who is not residing in a state is not residing in a city within that state; hence, whether the exercise of a privilege is conditioned on state residency or on municipal residency, he or she will be excluded. The fact that New Jersey citizens not residing in Camden will also be disadvantaged does not render the ordinance immune from constitutional challenge. New Jersey citizens may seek legislation to remedy discrimination against them; out-of-state citizens have no similar opportunity.

(c) Fundamental nature of public employment right. To come within the protection of the Entitlement Clause, the interest must be "fundamental" (see supra, §611), and pursuit of a common calling is one of the most fundamental of these interests. (104 S.Ct. 1028, 79 L.Ed.2d 258.) Public employment, however, is qualitatively different, and calls for a significant distinction:

(1) It has been held that there is no fundamental right to government employment for purposes of the Equal Protection Clause. (104 S.Ct. 1028, 79 L.Ed.2d 259.)

(2) The Commerce Clause acts as an implied restraint on state regulatory powers; but when the city acts solely as a market participant in setting conditions for public employment, no conflict between state regulation and federal regulatory authority can arise. The Privileges and Immunities Clause has a different effect. It imposes a direct restraint on state action in the interests of interstate harmony. "It is discrimination against out-of-state residents on matters of fundamental concern which triggers the Clause, not regulation affecting interstate commerce." (104 S.Ct. 1028, 79 L.Ed.2d 259, 260.) The analysis in Hicklin v. Orbeck, supra, is appropriate here. (104 S.Ct. 1029, 79 L.Ed.2d 260.)

(3) "In sum, Camden may, without fear of violating the Commerce Clause, pressure private employers engaged in public works projects funded in whole or in part by the city to hire city residents. But that same exercise of power to bias the employment decisions of private contractors and subcontractors against out-of-state residents may be called to account under the Privileges and Immunities Clause. A determination of whether a privilege is 'fundamental' for purposes of that Clause does not depend on whether the employees of private contractors and subcontractors engaged in public works projects can or cannot be said to be 'working for the city.' The opportunity to seek employment with such private employers is 'sufficiently basic to the livelihood of the Nation' ... as to fall within the purview of the Privileges and Immunities Clause even though the contractors and subcontractors are themselves engaged in projects funded in whole or part by the city." (104 S.Ct. 1029, 79 L.Ed.2d 260.)

(d) City's justification for the ordinance. The city contended that the ordinance was reasonably designed to counteract the economic evil of nonresidents living off Camden without living in Camden, and was carefully tailored to avoid unreasonable harm to nonresidents by leaving them with access to 60% of the available positions. This justification cannot be remedied on the present record without trial or findings. The case is therefore remanded to the New Jersey Supreme Court to determine the best method of making the necessary findings. (104 S.Ct. 1030, 79 L.Ed.2d 261.) (See 86 Cal. L. Rev. 1335 [resident hiring preferences: public spending exception to Privileges and Immunities Clause]; 15 Southwestern L. Rev. 431 ["substantial reason" requirement for discrimination based on residency].)

[§ 614] Residency Requirement for Attorney.

In Supreme Court of New Hampshire v. Piper (1985) 470 U.S. 274, 105 S.Ct. 1272, 84 L.Ed.2d 205, Piper, residing in Vermont about 400 yards from the New Hampshire border, took and passed the New Hampshire bar examination and was qualified in all other respects to become a member of the Bar of that state. However, New Hampshire Supreme Court Rule 42 limited bar admission to state residents, and the Court refused to swear her in unless she established a New Hampshire home address. Citing personal reasons (expense of giving up her Vermont home, young children), she brought an action in the United States district court against the state supreme court alleging that Rule 42 violated the Entitlement Clause (Art. IV, §2). Held, the residency requirement was unconstitutional.

(a) The Entitlement Clause "was intended to create a national economic union." And the Court repeatedly has found that one of the privileges is that of doing business on terms of substantial equality. (105 S.Ct. 1276, 84 L.Ed.2d 211, citing Toomer v. Witsell (1948) 334 U.S. 385, 68 S.Ct. 1156, 1165, 92 L.Ed. 1460, 1474, supra, §610, Hicklin v. Orbeck (1978) 437 U.S. 518, 98 S.Ct. 2482, 57 L.Ed.2d 397, supra, §613, and Ward v. Maryland (1870) 79 U.S. 418, 20 L.Ed. 449.)

(b) Nothing in these prior cases suggests that the practice of law should not be viewed as one of the privileges. It is important to the national economy; and in addition, the legal profession has a noncommercial role and duty. "Out-of-state lawyers may--and often do--represent persons who raise unpopular federal claims. In some cases, representation by nonresident counsel may be the only means available for the vindication of federal rights. ... The lawyer who champions unpopular causes surely is as important to the 'maintenance or well-being of the Union,' ... as was the shrimp fisherman in Toomer or the pipeline worker in Hicklin." (105 S.Ct. 1277, 84 L.Ed.2d 212.)

(c) The state's contention that the Entitlement Clause is inapplicable to law practice because a lawyer's activities are bound up with the exercise of judicial power is untenable. A lawyer is not an officer of the state in any political sense. (105 S.Ct. 1278, 84 L.Ed.2d 212.)

(d) The Entitlement Clause does not preclude discrimination where (1) there is a substantial reason for the difference in treatment, and (2) the discrimination bears a substantial relationship to the state's objective. (105 S.Ct. 1279, 84 L.Ed.2d 213, citing United Bldg. & Const. Trades Council of Camden County & Vicinity v. Mayor & Council of Camden (1984) 465 U.S. 208, 104 S.Ct. 1020, 79 L.Ed.2d 249, supra, §613.) But the state's justifications do not meet the test of substantiality. There is no evidence to support the claim that nonresidents might be less likely to keep abreast of local rules and procedures or that they will conduct their practices in a dishonest manner. (105 S.Ct. 1279, 84 L.Ed.2d 214.) The additional assertion that a nonresident member would at times be unavailable for court proceedings has more merit, but does not call for exclusion of nonresidents. The trial court, by rule or exercise of discretion, may require a lawyer residing at a great distance to retain a local attorney. (105 S.Ct. 1280, 84 L.Ed.2d 215.) The final argument, that nonresidents would be disinclined to do their share of pro bono work, is unconvincing; it is reasonable to believe that most lawyers who become members of a state bar will endeavor to perform their share of the services. (105 S.Ct. 1280, 84 L.Ed.2d 215.)

In Supreme Court of Virginia v. Friedman (1988) 487 U.S. 59, 108 S.Ct. 2260, 101 L.Ed.2d 56, Piper was extended to Virginia's rule governing admission of attorneys on motion without taking the bar examination. "The clear import of Piper is that the Clause is implicated whenever, as is the case here, a state does not permit qualified nonresidents to practice law within its borders on terms of substantial equality with its own residents." (108 S.Ct. 2265, 101 L.Ed.2d 64.) (See Barnard v. Thorstenn (1989) 489 U.S. 546, 109 S.Ct. 1294, 1299, 1302, 103 L.Ed.2d 559, 568, 572 [residency requirement for admission to Virgin Islands Bar violates Privileges and Immunities Clause; rejecting justifications similar to those rejected in Piper].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

A. Nature and Scope of Guarantee.

1. Procedural and Substantive Due Process.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 615

[§ 615] Procedural and Substantive Due Process.

(1) Federal Constitution. The Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution provides that no state shall "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." The Fifth Amendment states a similar restriction on the federal Government. (On liberty interest protected, see Smith v. Organization of Foster Families for Equality & Reform (1977) 431 U.S. 816, 97 S.Ct. 2094, 2107, 53 L.Ed.2d 14, 31, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §8; In re Roger S. (1977) 19 C.3d 921, 927, 141 C.R. 298, 569 P.2d 1286, infra, §653; on property interest protected, see Board of Regents of State Colleges v. Roth (1972) 408 U.S. 564, 92 S.Ct. 2701, 33 L.Ed.2d 548, infra, §691; American Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sullivan (1999) 526 U.S. 40, 119 S.Ct. 977, 990, 143 L.Ed.2d 130, 149 [Due Process Clause did not require workers' compensation insurers to pay disputed medical bills prior to determination that treatment was reasonable and necessary because employee's property interest in payment did not attach until particular treatment was determined to be reasonable and necessary]; Ryan v. California Interscholastic Federation - San Diego Section (2001) 94 C.A.4th 1048, 1061, 114 C.R.2d 798 [students do not have protected interest under federal Constitution to participate in interscholastic sports]; on fundamental rights protected by Fourteenth Amendment generally, see supra, §218 et seq.)

"[T]he phrase expresses the requirement of 'fundamental fairness,' a requirement whose meaning can be as opaque as its importance is lofty. Applying the Due Process Clause is therefore an uncertain enterprise which must discover what 'fundamental fairness' consists of in a particular situation by first considering any relevant precedents and then by assessing the several interests that are at stake." (Lassiter v. Department of Social Services of Durham County, North Carolina (1981) 452 U.S. 18, 101 S.Ct. 2153, 2158, 68 L.Ed.2d 640, 648; see People v. Sutton (1993) 19 C.A.4th 795, 803, 804, 23 C.R.2d 632, citing the text ["trial court violated due process by admitting the evidence regarding defendant's exercise of his extradition rights"].)

In its origin, the meaning of the term "due process" was procedural. The protection was against judicial or administrative procedure that, by reason of denial of notice and opportunity for a hearing, unfairly deprived a person of property or personal rights. (See infra, §637 et seq.) But in its development in the United States, the Due Process Clause has been interpreted as a limitation on the legislative as well as the judicial and executive branches of the Government, thus preventing arbitrary and unreasonable legislation. This aspect of the subject is known as substantive due process, to distinguish it from procedural due process. (See Davidson v. New Orleans (1877) 96 U.S. 97, 24 L.Ed. 616; 18 Cal. L. Rev. 583; 13 Southwestern L. Rev. 479 [Substantive Due Process: A Doctrine of Regulatory Control]; infra, §623 et seq.; for historical analyses, see Adamson v. California (1947) 332 U.S. 46, 67 S.Ct. 1672, 91 L.Ed. 1903; 40 Cal. L.

Substantive due process is best illustrated by cases dealing with the police power (see infra, §983), but the Clause also restricts other governmental powers (see infra, §1112 et seq., and 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §25 et seq.).

(2) State Constitution. The California Constitution also contains due process guarantees. (Art. I, §§7, 15.) (See People v. Ramirez (1979) 25 C.3d 260, 265, 266, 268, 158 C.R. 316, 599 P.2d 622, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare §135 [rejecting federal court analysis and stating different approach for California]; San Jose Police Officers Assn. v. San Jose (1988) 199 C.A.3d 1471, 1478, 245 C.R. 728 [applying Ramirez analysis]; 69 Cal. L. Rev. 1073.)

Under the California Constitution, "a claimant need not establish a property or liberty interest as a prerequisite to invoking due process protection. ... Focused rather on an individual's liberty interest to be free from arbitrary adjudicative procedures ... , procedural due process under the California Constitution is 'much more inclusive' and protects a broader range of interests than under the federal Constitution." (Ryan v. California Interscholastic Federation - San Diego Section, supra, 94 C.A.4th 1069, citing Ramirez.) However, a "claimant must nevertheless identify a statutorily conferred benefit or interest of which he or she has been deprived to trigger procedural due process under the California Constitution and the Ramirez analysis of what procedure is due." Playing interscholastic sports is not such a statutorily conferred benefit. (94 C.A.4th 1071.)

(3) Texts and Law Reviews. Commentary on due process has been extensive. (See 2 Rotunda, Chap. 15; 2 Tribe, Chap. 10; 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §890 et seq.; 1 *Cal. X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

A. Nature and Scope of Guarantee.

2. Protection Only Against Government Action.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 616

[§ 616] Protection Only Against Government Action.

"[N]othing in the language of the Due Process Clause itself requires the State to protect the life, liberty and property of its citizens against invasion by private actors. The Clause is phrased as a limitation on the State's power to act, not as a guarantee of certain minimal levels of safety and security. It forbids the State itself to deprive individuals of life, liberty, or property without 'due process of law,' but its language cannot fairly be extended to impose an affirmative obligation on the State to ensure that those interests do not come to harm through other means. ... Like its counterpart in the Fifth Amendment, the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment was intended to prevent the government 'from abusing [its] power, or employing it as an instrument of oppression.' ... Its purpose was to protect the people from the State, not to ensure that the State protected them from each other. The Framers were content to leave the extent of governmental obligation in the latter area to the democratic political processes." (DeShaney v. Winnebago County Dept. of Social Services (1989) 489 U.S. 189, 109 S.Ct. 998, 1003, 103 L.Ed.2d 249, 258, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §6; see Kathleen R. v. Livermore (2001) 87 C.A.4th 684, 698, 104 C.R.2d 772 [city library that provided unsupervised, free Internet access did not affirmatively place minors in danger of downloading objectionable material; providing Internet access was not affirmative governmental action creating duty to protect under DeShaney]; 105 Harv. Fed 37 ["State-Created Danger," or Similar Theory, as Basis for Civil Rights Action under 42 U.S.C., §1983]; on what constitutes state action, see infra, §619 et seq.)

Castle Rock, Colorado v. Gonzales (2005) 545 U.S. 748, 125 S.Ct. 2796, 162 L.Ed.2d 658, answered a question similar to that left open in DeShaney v. Winnebago County Dept. of Social Services (1989) 489 U.S. 189, 109 S.Ct. 998, 103 L.Ed.2d 249, text, p. 1009, on whether a state child protective statute entitled a child to receive protective services, which entitlement would enjoy due process protection. Here, plaintiff's children were murdered by her husband after he took them in violation of a restraining order, which the police had refused to enforce. Plaintiff claimed that the police had a history of not enforcing similar restraining orders. Held, plaintiff had no constitutionally protected property interest in having the police enforce the restraining order when they had probable cause to believe that it had been violated.

(a) For a benefit to be a property interest protected by the procedural component of the Due Process Clause, a person must "have a legitimate claim of entitlement to it." (125 S.Ct. 2803, 162 L.Ed.2d 668.) And "a benefit is not a protected entitlement if government officials may grant or deny it in their discretion." (125 S.Ct. 2803, 162 L.Ed.2d 669.)

(b) The preprinted statutory language on the back of the restraining order stating that peace officers are to use every reasonable effort to enforce the order, and to arrest or seek a warrant for the arrest of a restrained person where there is probable cause that the order has been violated, does not make "enforcement of restraining orders mandatory. A well established tradition of police discretion has long coexisted with apparently mandatory arrest statutes." (125 S.Ct. 2805, 162 L.Ed.2d 670, 671.) Thus, despite probable cause to believe that a restraining order has been violated, the police have some discretion to determine whether to act to enforce it. (125 S.Ct. 2806, 162 L.Ed.2d 672.)

(c) Even if the police had acted to enforce the order, this would have meant seeking an arrest warrant, because plaintiff's husband was not present. But seeking an arrest warrant is entitlement to nothing but procedure, which cannot be the basis for a property interest. (125 S.Ct. 2808, 162 L.Ed.2d 674.)

(d) Even if the state statute "made enforcement of restraining orders 'mandatory' because of the domestic-violence context of the underlying statute, that would not necessarily mean that state law gave" plaintiff an entitlement to enforce it. "Making the actions of government employees obligatory can serve various legitimate ends other than the conferral of a benefit on a specific class of people. ... The serving of public rather than private ends is the normal course" of criminal law because criminal acts strike at society, not just at the individual victim. It is on this basis that a prosecutor may prosecute a domestic assault even if the victim withdraws the complaint. (125 S.Ct. 2808, 2809, 162 L.Ed.2d 675.)

(e) The Court concluded that "the benefit that a third party may receive from having someone else arrested for a crime generally does not trigger protections under the Due Process Clause, neither in its procedural nor in its 'substantive' manifestations. This result reflects our continuing reluctance to treat the Fourteenth Amendment as 'a font of tort law.' " (125 S.Ct. 2810, 162 L.Ed.2d 676.)

Two justices joined in a lengthy dissent. (125 S.Ct. 2813, 162 L.Ed.2d 679.) (See O'Dea v. Bunnell (2007) 151 C.A.4th 214, 224, 59 C.R.3d 684 [following DeShaney; plaintiff correctional officer had no substantive due process claim for deprivation of liberty interests under 42 U.S.C., §1983 when he was injured while quelling fight between prison gangs; although plaintiff alleged that other officers orchestrated fight, he was not injured by state action; placing plaintiff in dangerous situation was not affirmative act of restraining individual's freedom to act on own behalf]; 119 Harv. L. Rev. 208 [Castle Rock, Colorado]; 58 Hastings L. J. 387 [same].)

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

A. Nature and Scope of Guarantee.

3. No Action for Money Damages.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 617

[§ 617] No Action for Money Damages.

In Bonner v. Santa Ana (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1465, 53 C.R.2d 671, plaintiff, a homeless person whose possessions had been thrown away by workers for defendant city, sought money damages for violation of the Equal Protection and Due Process Clauses of the California Constitution. Held, money damages are not available for violation of the state Due Process Clause.

(a) Gates v. Superior Court (1995) 32 C.A.4th 481, 38 C.R.2d 489, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §303, established that the key issue in deciding whether a state constitutional provision may be enforced by an action for money damages is not whether the text is self-executing, but whether the voters who ratified the provision intended it to be so enforceable. (45 C.A.4th 1472.) The California Due Process Clause does not mention money damages and was intended to add to the state Constitution the same right that is in the federal one. (45 C.A.4th 1473, 1474.)

(b) Davis v. Passman (1979) 442 U.S. 228, 99 S.Ct. 2264, 60 L.Ed.2d 846, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §16, held that violations of the federal Due Process Clause could be enforced by an action for money damages. (45 C.A.4th 1474.) However, that decision was predicated on the absence of an alternative judicial remedy. Here, plaintiff had an effective legal remedy--an action for conversion. (45 C.A.4th 1475, 1476; on rejection of the equal protection claim, see infra, §705.) (See Carlsbad Aquafarm v. Department of Health Services (2000) 83 C.A.4th 809, 820, 821, 100 C.R.2d 87 [discussing Gates, Bonner, and Davis; no money damages where plaintiff had other available remedies]; Katzberg v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (2002) 29 C.4th 300, 320, 328, 127 C.R.2d 482, 58 P.3d 339, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §17 [criticizing Bonner and approving Carlsbad Aquafarm; California Due Process Clause does not provide for damages action for violation of liberty interest, at least where other meaningful remedy is available]; 75 A.L.R.5th 619 [implied action for damages for state constitutional violations].)

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

A. Nature and Scope of Guarantee.

4. Persons Protected.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 618

[§ 618] Persons Protected.

(1) Clause Applies to Persons. The protection of the Due Process Clause is not, like that of the Privileges and Immunities Clause (supra, §§608, 610), confined to citizens. It extends to all persons, including corporations. (Pembina Consol. Silver Mining & Milling Co. v. Pennsylvania (1888) 125 U.S. 181, 8 S.Ct. 737, 741, 31 L.Ed. 650, 653.) But a governmental subdivision, such as a county, is not a person within the meaning of the Clause. (Riley v. Stack (1932) 128 C.A. 480, 483, 18 P.2d 110.)

(2) Aliens. Lawfully permanent resident aliens are persons within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. (See Kwong Hai Chew v. Colding (1953) 344 U.S. 590, 73 S.Ct. 472, 477, 97 L.Ed. 576, 585, supra, §476.) In most instances, their rights have found protection under the Equal Protection Clause (infra, §721 et seq.). The issue of due process has been raised, however, in connection with deportation (see supra, §476), and unsuccessfully against the exercise of the war power over enemy aliens (infra, §1326).

(3) Distinction: Foreign Governmental Action. Foreign nationals cannot invoke the Due Process Clause as a protection against arbitrary acts of their own governments. In United States v. Belmont (1937) 301 U.S. 324, 57 S.Ct. 758, 81 L.Ed. 1134, money deposited with defendant banker in New York by a Russian corporation before 1918 was confiscated by the Russian Government. In answer to defendant's objection, it was held that "our policy, Constitution, and laws have no extraterritorial operation, unless in respect to our own citizens," and what another sovereign nation has done in the way of taking property of its citizens is not a matter for judicial consideration here. (57 S.Ct. 761, 81 L.Ed. 1140.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) Aliens. See 95 Cal. L. Rev. 169 [requiring appointed counsel for asylum seekers].

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

A. Nature and Scope of Guarantee.

5. State Action.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 619

[§ 619] In General.

(1) Nature of Activity. State action prohibited by the Fourteenth Amendment is usually legislative action; but it need not be. It may be executive or judicial action. (See Adams v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1974) 11 C.3d 146, 152, 113 C.R. 145, 520 P.2d 961, infra, §647; 2 Rotunda, Chap. 16; 18 Hastings Const. L. Q. 587 [state action doctrine and Rehnquist Court]; 76 Proof of Facts 3d 89 [conduct of homeowners association prohibiting political signs as state action]; 93 Am.Jur. Trials 293 [homeowners association defense of free speech to property owner's claim of state action in enforcing restrictive covenant prohibiting yard signs]; on equivalent "color of law" requirement for actions under 42 U.S.C., §1983, see infra, §828.)

Thus, in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686, supra, §426, Alabama courts applied a rule of law that was held to be an unconstitutional infringement of free speech and press. It was immaterial that the law was applied in a civil action, and that it was common law supplemented by statute. "The test is not the form in which state power has been applied but, whatever the form, whether such power has in fact been exercised." (84 S.Ct. 718, 11 L.Ed.2d 697.) (See Sokol v. Public Util. Com. (1966) 65 C.2d 247, 252, 53 C.R. 673, 418 P.2d 265, infra, §683.)

(2) Activity Not Amounting to State Action. In several situations, participation by the state has been held to be insufficient to constitute state action:

(a) Regulation of Public Utilities. In Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co. (1974) 419 U.S. 345, 95 S.Ct. 449, 42 L.Ed.2d 477, plaintiff, a customer of defendant private utility corporation, sought damages for termination of her service, pursuant to state law, without notice and an opportunity for a hearing. Her claim that state action was involved was based on the theory that acts of an extensively regulated public utility, with a virtual monopoly and performing an essential public service, are attributable to the state. Held, distinguishing Public Util. Com. of Dist. of Columbia v. Pollak (1952) 343 U.S. 451, 72 S.Ct. 813, 96 L.Ed. 1068, and Burton v. Wilmington Parking Authority (1961) 365 U.S. 715, 81 S.Ct. 856, 6 L.Ed.2d 45, infra, §698, there was no state action. (See 89 Harv. L. Rev. 139.)

(b) Regulation of Banks. In Kruger v. Wells Fargo Bank (1974) 11 C.3d 352, 113 C.R. 449, 521 P.2d 441, the banker's equitable setoff was upheld. (See 4 Summary (10th), Negotiable Instruments, §83.) The due process challenge was rejected on the ground that no state involvement sufficient to constitute state action was shown. The court pointed out that prior cases successfully invoking the Due Process Clause involved some ministerial act of a court clerk, sheriff, or other state official; here, there was only the act of a private party. (11 C.3d 360.) And the fact that the equitable right of setoff is recognized by statute (C.C.P. 431.70) does not make it state action, for the statute did not alter its equitable nature or its availability to either party. (11 C.3d 362.)

As to the final argument, that state action is involved because banks owe their legal existence to state law, are subject to extensive regulation, and have great influence on the economic health of the nation, the court observed that the concept of state action may evolve to this point but has not yet done so. The test under Burton, is that the state must be a joint participant in the activity. "The present case, unlike Burton, involves the private decision of a private business operating on private property." (11 C.3d 366.) (See 63 Cal. L. Rev. 135; 4 Southwestern L. Rev. 285; 65 A.L.R.3d 1284 [post-Sniadach status of banker's right to set off bank's claim against depositor's funds].)

(c) Statutory Recognition of Self-Help Remedies. Flagg Bros. v. Brooks (1978) 436 U.S. 149, 98 S.Ct. 1729, 56 L.Ed.2d 185, held that a warehouseman's sale of stored goods pursuant to the self-help provision of U.C.C. 7210 (see 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §229) is not state action. (See 92 Harv. L. Rev. 120; 6 Hastings Const. L. Q. 110.)

(d) Treatment of Medicaid Patients. In Blum v. Yaretsky (1982) 457 U.S. 991, 102 S.Ct. 2777, 73 L.Ed.2d 534, a private nursing home's decision to discharge or transfer a Medicaid patient was held not to satisfy the state action requirement. A state "normally can be held responsible for a private decision only when it has exercised coercive power or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, that the choice must in law be deemed to be that of the State." (102 S.Ct. 2786, 73 L.Ed.2d 546.)

(e) Workers' Compensation Insurers. American Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sullivan (1999) 526 U.S. 40, 119 S.Ct. 977, 986, 143 L.Ed.2d 130, 144, held that although private workers' compensation insurers are authorized by the state to withhold payment for disputed medical treatment pending review, they are not "state actors."

b. Government Assisted Housing Projects.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 620

[§ 620] Government Assisted Housing Projects.

In Appel v. Beyer (1974) 39 C.A.3d Supp. 7, 114 C.R. 336, the court held that housing projects carried out by joint participation of private enterprise and government under the National Housing Act and the Housing and Urban Development Act involve state action, and therefore call for due process in eviction of a tenant holding over after expiration of the rental term.

Two cases were consolidated: Appel, in which the landlord operated a residential apartment complex financed by a federally guaranteed mortgage loan, and Korda v. McDaniels, in which a similarly financed residential project also benefited by rent supplement payments from FHA (now HUD) on behalf of the tenant. In each case, the landlord received governmental assistance in the form of low interest long-term loans, small capital investment, and income tax benefits. In consideration of this financial assistance, he was required to accept only low or moderate income tenants whose eligibility was approved by FHA, and to charge rents only at rates approved by FHA; also, FHA had to approve the project's economic feasibility, design, title status, street access, owner's credit and construction costs, and it could take over management in the event of default.

In each case, the landlord gave the tenant the 30-day notice of termination under C.C. 1946 and sued for unlawful detainer (see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §§680, 703 et seq.). The tenants pleaded the affirmative defense that a due process notice and hearing on the cause for termination was required. The trial judge rejected the defense and rendered judgment for the landlord. Held, reversed.

(a) "[T]he primary function of this owner and this housing project is to provide a conduit for federal power to turn the wheel of federal policy. Any benefit to the owner or tenant is a product of governmental action. The government is, essentially, the landlord. Without the government, there would be no such low-cost housing; with the government, the quality and cost of the housing is such as the government allows." (39 C.A.3d Supp. 13.)

(b) The government has become a joint participant and the project is not purely private, under the holdings in Burton v. Wilmington Parking Authority (1961) 365 U.S. 715, 81 S.Ct. 856, 6 L.Ed.2d 45, infra, §698, and federal and state decisions involving governmentally assisted housing projects. (39 C.A.3d Supp. 13.)

(c) The government's policy of offering decent housing at low cost for persons of modest means, by inducing private enterprise to supply it through federal subsidization, coupled with acceptance and reliance by the tenants, created "status by entitlement," a "species of property." (39 C.A.3d Supp. 15.) Under Goldberg v. Kelly (1970) 397 U.S. 254, 90 S.Ct. 1011, 25 L.Ed.2d 287, infra, §685, and federal and state decisions on publicly owned or governmentally assisted housing, this property right or entitlement protected tenants from eviction without prior notice and proof of good cause. (39 C.A.3d Supp. 16.)

(d) "The best procedural due process in such cases would be (1) a written notice from landlord to tenant setting forth the facts claimed to constitute good cause for eviction and (2) pleading and proof of those facts in the subsequent unlawful detainer action. That is the procedure recommended by a number of the courts considering the problem . . . Administrative type procedures that avoid judicial hearings, while sometimes nominally approved . . . have not always had acceptance when challenged." (39 C.A.3d Supp. 19.)

(e) What constitutes "good cause" for eviction depends on "the facts perceived in relation to the purposes of the relevant housing law and the posture of the affected parties." (39 C.A.3d Supp. 19.) "In some instances it has been intimated that guidelines to good cause for eviction are found in the definition of 'undesirable' tenants set forth in the regulations of the supervising public agency . . . or in the 'standards for eligibility' established by such regulations . . . or simply in destructive or anti-social conduct of the tenant." (39 C.A.3d Supp. 19.) (See Department of Housing & Urban Dev. v. Rucker (2002) 535 U.S. 125, 122 S.Ct. 1230, 1233, 152 L.Ed.2d 258, 266 [under 42 U.S.C., §1437d(l)(6), public housing authorities may terminate tenancies for any drug-related criminal activity of household members or guests, regardless of whether tenant knew of that activity]; 37 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1175 [Rucker].)

A. Nature and Scope of Guarantee.

5. State Action.

c. Nonjudicial Foreclosure.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 621

[§ 621] Nonjudicial Foreclosure.

In Garfinkle v. Superior Court (1978) 21 C.3d 268, 146 C.R. 208, 578 P.2d 925, plaintiffs Mr. and Mrs. G bought a home from Mr. and Mrs. L, whose loan was secured by a deed of trust in favor of defendant bank. The deed of trust contained due-on-sale and power of sale clauses. Defendant offered to let plaintiffs assume the L loan at an increased rate of interest. Plaintiffs refused, and defendant accelerated the loan, making the total balance due. On default, defendant gave notice under C.C. 2924. Plaintiffs sought declaratory and injunctive relief, challenging the constitutionality of the procedure of nonjudicial sale. Held, the statute is constitutional.

(a) Federal Constitution: Fourteenth Amendment due process. The challenge depends on whether California's procedure constitutes state action; i.e., "whether the state is significantly involved in the nonjudicial foreclosure procedure so as to bring that procedure within the reach of the due process clause." (21 C.3d 276.) Plaintiffs' contention, primarily based on Connolly Dev. v. Superior Court (1976) 17 C.3d 803, 827, 132 C.R. 477, 553 P.2d 637, infra, §647, is unsound; there are significant differences between the creditors' remedies involved in Connolly and the power of sale procedure:

(1) The mechanic's lien and stop notice procedure are authorized by statute; the power of sale is authorized solely by the contract. (21 C.3d 277.)

(2) Although the exercise of the contractual remedy has been subjected to comprehensive statutory regulation, this does not constitute state encouragement or facilitation of use of the remedy. (a) The statutes do not authorize or compel inclusion of a power of sale provision. (b) The statutes do not compel exercise of the power of sale. (21 C.3d 278.)

(3) Acknowledging the legal validity of the title transferred by nonjudicial foreclosure is not an encouragement of the procedure, for virtually all private arrangements between parties assume the supportive role of the state. The statutory regulations, enacted primarily to protect the debtor, do not make the creditor's action state action. (21 C.3d 279.)

(4) The acts of the county recorder in connection with nonjudicial foreclosure are ministerial in nature, and not discretionary acts that might be deemed state action. (21 C.3d 280.)

(5) Judicial intervention to enforce rights acquired at a trustee's sale (i.e., unlawful detainer against the trustor) does not constitute state involvement; any party with rights under a contract may find it necessary to resort to the courts to enforce those rights. (21 C.3d 280.)

(6) Finally, the argument based on Adams v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1974) 11 C.3d 146, 113 C.R. 145, 520 P.2d 961, infra, §647, that state action is involved because the state has delegated the traditional function of enforcement of liens, is untenable. The power of sale in nonjudicial foreclosure, unlike that involved in Adams, is contractual, not statutory; and nonjudicial foreclosure has been recognized for over a century, hence, it cannot be regarded as a function traditionally and exclusively performed by the state. (21 C.3d 281.)

(b) California Constitution: Due process under Article I, §7(a). Although this section does not expressly contain the requirement of state action, under Kruger v. Wells Fargo Bank (1974) 11 C.3d 352, 113 C.R. 449, 521 P.2d 441, supra, §619, the requirement is implicit. And although federal decisions on the requirement under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments are not binding, "we have found no reason to depart from those cases in the present context." (21 C.3d 281, 282.) Hence, for the reasons set forth in relation to the federal constitutional claim, the claim under the California Constitution is rejected. (21 C.3d 282.) (See 67 Cal. L. Rev. 684.)

5. State Action.

d. Athletic Associations.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 622

[§ 622] Athletic Associations.

(1) No State Action. In National Collegiate Athletic Assn. v. Tarkanian (1988) 488 U.S. 179, 109 S.Ct. 454, 102 L.Ed.2d 469, the NCAA, an unincorporated association of public and private universities and colleges that regulates intercollegiate athletics, imposed sanctions on the University of Nevada, Las Vegas (UNLV), a state university, for recruiting violations, and threatened further sanctions if UNLV did not suspend Tarkanian, the basketball coach. UNLV suspended him, and Tarkanian sued in state court, alleging violation of his Fourteenth Amendment due process rights and 42 U.S.C., §1983 (infra, §819). Held, the NCAA's participation was not state action.

(a) UNLV's action was state action, but the question is "whether UNLV's actions in compliance with the NCAA rules and recommendations turned the NCAA's conduct into state action." (109 S.Ct. 462, 102 L.Ed.2d 485.) The answer is no. "Neither UNLV's decision to adopt the NCAA's standards nor its minor role in their formulation is a sufficient reason for concluding that the NCAA was acting under color of Nevada law when it promulgated" those standards. (109 S.Ct. 463, 102 L.Ed.2d 487.)

(b) The claim that UNLV delegated its authority to the NCAA ignores the adversary relationship between the NCAA and UNLV throughout the investigation. (109 S.Ct. 464, 102 L.Ed.2d 487.) The NCAA did not discipline Tarkanian, but simply used its authority to threaten sanctions against UNLV, which had options other than suspension. (109 S.Ct. 465, 102 L.Ed.2d 488, 489.)

(2) State Action. In Brentwood Academy v. Tennessee Secondary School Athletic Assn. (2001) 531 U.S. 288, 121 S.Ct. 924, 148 L.Ed.2d 807, the issue was "whether a statewide association incorporated to regulate interscholastic athletic competition among public and private secondary schools may be regarded as engaging in state action when it enforces a rule against a member school." (121 S.Ct. 927, 148 L.Ed.2d 814.) Held, plaintiff private member school could bring an action against defendant association under 42 U.S.C., §1983 (infra, §819).

(a) Defendant's regulatory activity "should be treated as state action owing to the pervasive entwinement of state school officials in the structure of the Association, there being no offsetting reason to see the Association's acts in any other way." (121 S.Ct. 927, 148 L.Ed.2d 814.) State action may be found if "there is such a 'close nexus between the State and the challenged action' that seemingly private behavior 'may be fairly treated as that of the State itself.' " (121 S.Ct. 930, 148 L.Ed.2d 817, quoting Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison Co. (1974) 419 U.S. 345, 95 S.Ct. 449, 42 L.Ed.2d 477, supra, §619.)

(b) Here, unlike in Tarkanian, all the member public schools were located within a single state. (121 S.Ct. 931, 148 L.Ed.2d 818.) "[T]o the extent of 84% of its membership, the Association is an organization of public schools represented by their officials acting in their official capacity to provide an integral element of secondary public schooling." The public school officials "do not merely control but overwhelmingly perform all but the purely ministerial acts by which the Association exists and functions in practical terms. Only the 16% minority of private school membership prevents this entwinement of the Association and the public school system from being total and their identities totally indistinguishable." (121 S.Ct. 932, 148 L.Ed.2d 819.) Further, state board members are assigned ex officio to serve on defendant's committees, and the defendant's ministerial employees are eligible for membership in the state retirement system. (121 S.Ct. 932, 148 L.Ed.2d 821.)

Four justices dissented, stating that the Court had never before found state action based on mere "entwinement." (121 S.Ct. 935, 148 L.Ed.2d 823.) (See 115 Harv. L. Rev. 437 [Brentwood Academy].)

a. In General.

[§ 623] In General.

(1) What Constitutes Invalid Retrospective Law. A retrospective or retroactive law is not invalid as such. Neither the federal nor the California Constitution prohibits the enactment of legislation operating on preexisting matters, rights, or obligations. (League v. Texas (1902) 184 U.S. 156, 22 S.Ct. 475, 46 L.Ed. 478; McCann v. Jordan (1933) 218 C. 577, 579, 24 P.2d 457; Macedo v. Macedo (1938) 29 C.A.2d 387, 390, 84 P.2d 552.)

A retrospective law is invalid, however, if it conflicts with certain constitutional protections, e.g., if it (a) is an ex post facto law (1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §10 et seq.), (b) impairs the obligation of a contract (infra, §1278) or (c) deprives a person of a vested right or substantially impairs that right, thereby denying due process. (2) Statute Prospective in Effect. Even though a statute in some respects deals with a prior event or transaction, its actual effect may be prospective and its operation valid. (See *Record v. Indemnity Ins. Witkin Summary of California Law

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

B. Retrospective Legislation.

1. Changes Affecting Substantive Rights.

b. Clarification of Existing Law.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 624

[§ 624] Clarification of Existing Law.

An amendment that "merely clarifies existing law may be given retroactive effect even without an expression of legislative intent for retroactivity." (Negrette v. California State Lottery Com. (1994) 21 C.A.4th 1739, 1744, 26 C.R.2d 809 [amendment defining "substantial proof," for purposes of validating claim for state lottery prize when actual winning ticket is not received, was properly applied to claim filed before amendment was enacted]; see Borden v. Division of Med. Quality (1994) 30 C.A.4th 874, 878, 35 C.R.2d 905 [amendment making protection of public highest consideration in disciplining physicians could be applied retroactively, where it was declaratory of existing law, revocation of physician's license existed both before and after amendment, and medical board always had broad discretion].)

In Western Sec. Bank v. Superior Court (1997) 15 C.4th 232, 62 C.R.2d 243, 933 P.2d 507, the issuer of letters of credit brought a declaratory relief action against a bank that had loaned money to a partnership to purchase a shopping center. After the partnership defaulted, the bank modified the terms of the loan and was given unconditional, irrevocable standby letters of credit by the general partners as additional security. When the partnership again went into default, the bank nonjudicially foreclosed on the real property security and attempted to draw on the standby letters of credit of which it was the beneficiary. The Court of Appeal held that, under C.C.P. 580d, California's antideficiency legislation, the issuer of a standby letter of credit, provided to a real property lender as additional security, may decline to honor it after receiving notice that it is to be used to discharge a deficiency following the beneficiary-lender's nonjudicial foreclosure. The Supreme Court granted review, and while the matter was pending, the Legislature passed an urgency statute to state that a letter of credit is not a form of suretyship obligation (amending C.C. 2787), excluding letters of credit from the purview of antideficiency laws (adding C.C.P. 580.5), and declaring unenforceable letters of credit issued to avoid defaults on purchase money mortgages for owner-occupied real property containing one to four residential units (adding C.C.P. 580.7). The Supreme Court transferred the case to the Court of Appeal to reconsider its decision in light of the legislation. The Court of Appeal determined that the statute constituted a substantial change in existing law and, in the absence of clear evidence that the Legislature intended the statute to operate retrospectively, held that it did not affect its prior conclusions on the parties' rights and obligations. Held, in a 4-3 opinion, the statute applied.

(a) Intent that statute operate retrospectively. "[S]tatutes do not operate retrospectively unless the Legislature plainly intended them to do so." (15 C.4th 243.) When a statute provides that it clarifies or declares existing law, it is indicative of a legislative intent that the statute applies to all existing causes of action from the date of its enactment, and the court must give effect to this intention unless there is some constitutional objection. (15 C.4th 244.) Here, the Legislature made its intent plain: " 'to confirm the independent nature of the letter of credit engagement and to abrogate the holding' " in the earlier opinion in this case. (15 C.4th 245.) The Legislature's intent was also evident in its statement of the facts justifying the statute's enactment as an urgency statute: " 'In order to confirm and clarify the law applicable to obligations which are secured by real property or an estate for years therein and which also are supported by a letter of credit, it is necessary that this act take effect immediately.' " (15 C.4th 245.) "If the Legislature acts promptly to correct a perceived problem with a judicial construction of a statute, the courts generally give the Legislature's action its intended effect." (15 C.4th 246.)

(b) Change versus clarification in law.

(1) The amendment to C.C. 2787 "plainly made no substantive change in the law." (15 C.4th 246.) The amendment added a statement that a "letter of credit is not a form of suretyship obligation." While generally a surety's liability for an obligation is secondary to, and derivative of, the principal's liability for that obligation, the liability of the issuer of a letter of credit to the letter's beneficiary is direct and independent of the underlying transaction between the beneficiary and the issuer's customer. Thus, as the amendment made clear, "existing law viewed a letter of credit as an obligation of the issuing bank rather than as a form of guaranty or a surety obligation." (15 C.4th 247.)

(2) C.C.P. 580.5 specifies that letter of credit transactions do not violate the antideficiency laws, and that a lender's resort to a letter of credit and the issuer's right to reimbursement do not constitute an "action" under C.C.P. 726, or a failure to proceed against security, regardless of whether they come before or after a foreclosure. (15 C.4th 247.) The Court of Appeal, citing Union Bank v. Gradsky (1968) 265 C.A.2d 40, 71 C.R. 64, 4 Summary (10th), Security Transactions in Real Property, §202, and Commonwealth Mortg. Assur. Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 211 C.A.3d 508, 259 C.R. 425, 4 Summary (10th), Security Transactions in Real Property, §202, saw this section as a change in the law by analogizing standby letters of credit to guaranties and emphasizing the similarities of purpose and function. Gradsky held that after nonjudicial foreclosure of real property secured by a note, the creditor could not recover the note's unpaid balance from a guarantor. (15 C.4th 248.) Commonwealth Mortgage followed Gradsky, to hold that a mortgage guaranty insurer could not enforce indemnity agreements to obtain reimbursement from the debtors for the insurer's payment to the lender after the lender's nonjudicial sale of its real property security. (15 C.4th 249.) The Court of Appeal mistook standby letters of credit by seeing them only as a form of guaranty. (15 C.4th 250.) The Court of Appeal also overlooked that the parties specifically intended the standby letters of credit to be additional security. "When viewed as additional security for a note also secured by real property, a standby letter of credit does not conflict with the statutory prohibition of deficiency judgments." (15 C.4th 251.) C.C.P. 580d "does not limit the security for notes given for the purchase of real property only to trust deeds; other security may be given as well. ... Creditors may resort to such other security in addition to nonjudicial foreclosure of the real property security." (15 C.4th 252.)

(3) C.C.P. 580.7, declaring unenforceable letters of credit issued to avoid defaults in purchase money mortgages for owner-occupied real property containing one to four residential units, was specifically made effective as to letters of credit issued after the effective date of the statute. (15 C.4th 247, footnote 6.)

(c) No change in law. The Legislature plainly intended the statutes, other than C.C.P. 580.7, to apply to existing loan transactions supported by outstanding letters of credit. Therefore, the Legislature's action did not effect a change in the law, but was simply a clarification that confirmed the state of the law prior to the Court of Appeal's first opinion. (15 C.4th 252.)

Three justices dissented and concurred in two separate opinions. All three justices expressed the view that the statute went beyond a mere clarification of existing law, and they would have given the statute prospective application only. (15 C.4th 253, 254.) (See Murray v. Oceanside Unified School Dist. (2000) 79 C.A.4th 1338, 1348, 1354, 95 C.R.2d 28, citing the text [applying Western Sec. Bank to repeal of Lab.C. 1102.1 (prohibiting discrimination in workplace based on sexual orientation) and placement of statute's protections within FEHA (Govt.C. 12940(j)(1))).

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 625

[§ 625] Rule and Test.

A person attacking a retrospective law must first establish some vested right. (See Santa Barbara v. Modern Neon Sign Co. (1961) 189 C.A.2d 188, 195, 11 C.R. 57 [zoning cases on invalidity of destruction of nonconforming use without reasonable amortization period (see infra, §1044) applied by analogy to ordinance requiring removal, within 1 year, of moving signs visible from highway]; Cox v. State Social Welfare Bd. (1961) 193 C.A.2d 708, 718, 14 C.R. 776 [legislative power to withdraw or specify conditions on old age benefits upheld; no vested right]; 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §699 et seq.; infra, §626 et seq.; on retroactive tax legislation, see 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §30.)

An attempt by repeal of a statute to deprive a plaintiff of an accrued contractual cause of action is a violation of the Due Process Clause as well as the Contract Clause. (Coombes v. Getz (1932) 285 U.S. 434, 52 S.Ct. 435, 76 L.Ed. 866, infra, §1281; see Wexler v. Los Angeles (1952) 110 C.A.2d 740, 747, 243 P.2d 868 [divorced mother's accrued cause of action for child's death was not subject to statutory change making father a necessary party].)

The vested right concept was reexamined in Flournoy v. California (1964) 230 C.A.2d 520, 41 C.R. 190, upholding the retroactive application of statutory immunities under the governmental Tort Claims Act (see 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §222).

(a) The term "vested right" is not susceptible of clear definition, and its meaning is not dependent on the distinction between statutory and common law rights or between contract and tort causes of action. (230 C.A.2d 531.)

(b) Retroactivity is determined by certain factors: "[T]he nature and strength of the policy interest served by the statute, the extent to which the statute modifies or abrogates the asserted preenactment right, and the nature of the right which the statute alters." (230 C.A.2d 532, quoting 73 Harv. L. Rev. 697.) The first factor is illustrated by the mortgage moratorium case, Home Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Blaisdell (1934) 290 U.S. 398, 54 S.Ct. 231, 78 L.Ed. 413, infra, §1289; the second is applied by the cases that distinguish between statutes affecting rights and those affecting remedies; and the third involves the element of reliance or reasonable expectation of continuance of preexisting law. (230 C.A.2d 531.)

(c) Here, the public interest in the limited defense given by Govt.C. 835.4 is important; the effect on the preenactment right is not great, and retroactivity involves no element of surprise, "Grouping together the three factors, upon the summation of which constitutional retroactivity depends, we find here legislation wherein public interest is great and such interest attaches importantly to its retroactive application. We weigh this against a right which has not been, in our estimate, grievously impaired. And also, as a part of the weighing process, we deal with a right which only existed through the retroactive application of Muskopf. The result of this weighing tips the scales to require our decision that the legislative declaration of retroactivity ... is not unconstitutional--as applied to the facts and provisions of the 1963 legislation here involved." (230 C.A.2d 537.)

"In determining whether a retroactive law contravenes the due process clause, we consider such factors as the significance of the state interest served by the law, the importance of the retroactive application of the law to the effectuation of that interest, the extent of reliance upon the former law, the legitimacy of that reliance, the extent of actions taken on the basis of that reliance, and the extent to which the retroactive application of the new law would disrupt those actions." (In re Marriage of Bouquet (1976) 16 C.3d 583, 592, 128 C.R. 427, 546 P.2d 1371.)

In Graczyk v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (1986) 184 C.A.3d 997, 229 C.R. 494, plaintiff, a state university student, was injured playing football on the university team. His workers' compensation claim was rejected on the ground that he was excluded from coverage by Lab.C. 3352. The statute was then amended to clarify an earlier amendment excluding uncompensated participants in athletic events, by specifically excluding students participating in amateur sporting events sponsored by public agencies. The amending statute contained a legislative finding that the amendment was declarative of existing law and stated that it was to apply to claims filed prior to its effective date. Held, denial of claim affirmed.

(a) Plaintiff's inchoate right to benefits under the workers' compensation law was wholly statutory and had not been reduced to judgment at the time of the clarifying amendment. "Where a right of action does not exist at common law, but depends solely on statute, the repeal of the statute destroys the inchoate right unless it has been reduced to final judgment, or unless the repealing statute contains a saving clause." (184 C.A.3d 1006.) Thus, plaintiff had no vested right in employee status at the time of his injury. (184 C.A.3d 1007.)

(b) Retroactive application is also justified by the policy factors set forth in Flournoy. The state has a significant interest in defining the employer-employee status, and retroactive application serves this interest by clarifying the exclusion of athletes under the earlier amendment. (184 C.A.3d 1008.)

[§ 626] In General.

(1) No Vested Right. If a landowner applies for or obtains a permit to construct a building under an existing zoning ordinance, and thereafter the ordinance is amended to prohibit structures of that type in the particular zone, the new law may operate retroactively to compel denial or revocation of the permit where the landowner has not engaged in substantial building or incurred expenses in connection with building. (Brougher v. Board of Public Works of San Francisco (1928) 205 C. 426, 432, 271 P. 487; see McCann v. Jordan (1933) 218 C. 577, 579, 24 P.2d 457; Avco Community Developers v. South Coast Regional Com. (1976) 17 C.3d 785, 791, 132 C.R. 386, 553 P.2d 546; Vincent Petroleum Corp. v. Culver City (1941) 43 C.A.2d 511, 516, 111 P.2d 433 [license or permit issued under police power, e.g., to drill for oil in particular district, is mere privilege and not property, and can be revoked at any time]; Hermosa Beach Stop Oil Coalition v. Hermosa Beach (2001) 86 C.A.4th 534, 552, 103 C.R.2d 447 [even though defendant had contract with city to drill for oil, it had no vested right to do so when initiative prohibiting oil drilling was passed; defendant had never acquired necessary permits and no substantial work had been done towards constructing project].)

In Spindler Realty Corp. v. Monning (1966) 243 C.A.2d 255, 53 C.R. 7, plaintiff, contemplating the construction of a hotel or apartment house, obtained a grading permit, and spent a considerable sum grading. But before he could complete his plans and get a building permit, the city adopted a rezoning ordinance prohibiting the proposed use. Held, a grading permit, though here a necessary prerequisite to a building permit, was not its equivalent, and no vested right arose. (243 C.A.2d 264.) (See Stokes v. Board of Permit App. (1997) 52 C.A.4th 1348, 1357, 61 C.R.2d 181 [property owner had no vested right to complete construction of bathhouse despite spending almost $ 400,000 in improvements where he misrepresented current use of property and misled city into issuing building permits based on this misrepresentation]; Arviv Enterprises v. South Valley Area Planning Com. (2002) 101 C.A.4th 1333, 1349, 125 C.R.2d 140 [imposition of building hiatus to allow plaintiff developer to complete environmental impact report on total development did not interfere with plaintiff's vested right to build permitted part of development where initial permit was issued without compliance with California Environmental Quality Act or area specific plan].)

obtained a vested right to drill, and the attempted revocation of the permit was a denial of due process. Vincent Petroleum Corp., supra, was distinguished and its language limited to the situation in which the permittee fails to comply with the conditions of the permit. (85 C.A.2d 795.) (See Russ Bldg. Partnership v. San Francisco (1988) 44 C.3d 839, 846, 244 C.R. 682, 750 P.2d 324, infra, §627; Highland Dev. Co. v. Los Angeles (1985) 170 C.A.3d 169, 186, 215 C.R. 881 [dictum]; Griffin v. Marin (1958) 157 C.A.2d 507, 511, 321 P.2d 148]; Kaufman & Broad Cen. Valley v. Modesto (1994) 25 C.A.4th 1577, 1588, 1589, 30 C.R.2d 904 [tentative map statutes incorporate due process notice requirements, and fee increases after developer's rights have vested are limited to those for which adequate standards for determining scope and extent of increases existed at time map was deemed complete]; Davidson v. San Diego (1996) 49 C.A.4th 639, 646, 648, 56 C.R.2d 617 [developer had vested right under zoning ordinance to have permit application considered under regulations that existed on date it was submitted; however, plaintiff could be required to abide by later regulations necessary to protect public health and safety]; 22 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 791 [vested rights], 813 [Development Agreement and Vesting Tentative Map]; 28 Santa Clara L. Rev. 417 [when real property rights vest in California].)

(3) Criticism of Rule. In Raley v. California Tahoe Regional Planning Agency (1977) 68 C.A.3d 965, 975, 985, 137 C.R. 699, the court, finding no vested right on which an attack could be successfully made, strongly criticized the operation of the rule. Plaintiff, developer of a shopping center near Lake Tahoe, received preliminary approval from the Tahoe Regional Planning Agency (TRPA) and the California Tahoe Regional Planning Agency (CTRPA). After changes in the membership of CTRPA, it reviewed the highway improvement plan providing access to the shopping center, and adopted an interim plan requiring review of the environmental impact of projects for which construction had not commenced. Plaintiff had not yet acquired a building permit or spent money for actual construction, but had incurred substantial expenses in reliance on the preliminary approval. The trial judge granted a writ restraining CTRPA from interfering with the development. Held, reversed.

(a) A property developer cannot challenge changes in zoning or other land use regulations during the preparatory stages of his or her project (see infra, §1040). When the developer obtains a building permit and expends substantial funds in reliance on it, a vested right to proceed may be acquired (68 C.A.3d 975); here, however, plaintiff merely obtained a preliminary approval of the project, and no vested right resulted from that. (68 C.A.3d 977.)

(b) Plaintiff also sought to support the judgment on the theory of equitable estoppel arising from discriminatory conduct of the agency; but the record failed to show arbitrary or capricious action. (68 C.A.3d 983.)

(c) Though compelled, the result is unfortunate. Plaintiff "spent $ 150,000 in reliance upon a land use permit lawfully granted by a state instrumentality which was then repudiated by a related state instrumentality"; plaintiff was "the victim of maladroitly engineered environmental controls"; the mechanisms to protect the environment involved protracted and undependable administrative procedures, so that "many entrepreneurs run out of money or heart or both long before the finish line"; the "vested rights rule gives a green light to administrative vacillation virtually up to the moment the builder starts pouring concrete." (68 C.A.3d 984, 985.)

(d) "[T]he vested rights rule draws a distinction between 'soft' development costs (land, options, planning and design) and 'hard' construction costs. Only the latter evoke the rule's protection. To the developer both kinds of cost represent dollars of equal hardness. The vested rights rule draws no distinction between two kinds of regulatory-administrative shifts: (a) demands emanating from new regulatory laws or changing socioeconomic conditions; (b) an administrative change-of-mind on the part of a single administrative board. Such a change-of-mind occurred here." (68 C.A.3d 985.) (See 29 Hastings L. J. 623.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) No Vested Right. See Hafen v. Orange (2005) 128 C.A.4th 133, 142, 26 C.R.3d 584 [following Avco Community Developers v. South Coast Regional Com. (1976) 17 C.3d 785, 132 C.R. 386, 553 P.2d 546, text, p. 1023; trial court erred in issuing writ compelling county to issue grading permit without developer first obtaining site plan permit, as required by zoning regulation adopted after tentative parcel map was approved, where developer had no vested right that would exempt him from compliance].

[§ 627] Distinction: Permit Subject to Condition.

In Russ Bldg. Partnership v. San Francisco (1988) 44 C.3d 839, 244 C.R. 682, 750 P.2d 324, plaintiffs received permits to develop new office buildings, performed substantial work, and therefore had a vested right to complete them under the conditions of the permit. But the Planning Commission's resolution approving the permit contained this language: "In recognition of the need for expanded transportation services to meet peak demand generated by cumulative office development in the downtown area, [the developer] shall participate in a downtown assessment district, or similar fair and appropriate mechanism, to provide funds for maintaining and augmenting transportation service, should such a mechanism be established by the City." Nearly 2 years later, defendant enacted the Transit Impact Development Fee ordinance (TIDF), requiring developers of downtown buildings to pay a fee not exceeding $ 5 per square foot of new office space, to provide revenue for the municipal railway to offset the anticipated costs of the increased peak-period ridership. Plaintiffs filed actions challenging the retroactive application of the ordinance, and the trial court found that TIDF did not impair their vested right. The Court of Appeal disagreed, but the Supreme Court, on review, reversed that part of the judgment of the Court of Appeal, holding that the condition of the permit encompassed the TIDF, and therefore that its imposition did not impair the developers' vested rights.

(a) Plaintiffs argued that the language of the transit mitigation condition was intended only to describe a funding mechanism that would include both prior and present developments, and not one directed solely at new developments. (44 C.3d 847.) But plaintiffs understood that they would be required to pay some amount to fund increased transit demands, and, while the TIDF is not an assessment district, it is a "similar fair and appropriate" transit funding mechanism. (44 C.3d 854.)

(b) Plaintiffs also argued that it is not the intent of the language but rather what plaintiffs understood it to provide that is dispositive of their claim; i.e., that their vested rights were limited by the condition only to the extent that its language provided notice of the imposition of the TIDF. This is unsound. "A vested right requires more than a good faith subjective belief that one has it. ... Ambiguous enactments are subject to construction according to established rules, and while a vested right may protect a party from future enactments it provides no protection against the appropriate application of those rules to the enactment that created the right." (44 C.3d 853.)

c. Vested Right as Basis of Attack.

3. Community Property Cases.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 628

[§ 628] Community Property Cases.

In California, a number of amendments to our community property laws have been adopted to equalize the rights and interests of the spouses, mainly by enlarging those of the wife and limiting those of the husband. Where rights have been limited, the courts have usually held that the amendments could not be retroactively applied to property previously acquired. (See In re Marriage of Buol (1985) 39 C.3d 751, 762, 218 C.R. 31, 705 P.2d 354, 11 Summary (10th), Community Property, §229; In re Marriage of Fabian (1986) 41 C.3d 440, 449, 224 C.R. 333, 715 P.2d 253, 11 Summary (10th), Community Property, §230; In re Marriage of Heikes (1995) 10 C.4th 1211, 1218, 1225, 44 C.R.2d 155, 899 P.2d 1349, 11 Summary (10th), Community Property, §230 [due process precluded application of former C.C. 4800.2, requiring reimbursement for separate property contributions to acquisition of community property, to property acquired before effective date of statute].)

However, retroactive application is justified when necessary to serve a sufficiently important state interest. (See Addison v. Addison (1965) 62 C.2d 558, 566, 43 C.R. 97, 399 P.2d 897 [quasi-community property legislation]; In re Marriage of Bouquet (1976) 16 C.3d 583, 592, 128 C.R. 427, 546 P.2d 1371, supra, §625 [amendment making husband's earnings after separation his separate property, applied to rights whenever acquired]; In re Marriage of Barnes (1987) 43 C.3d 1371, 1376, 1377, 240 C.R. 855, 743 P.2d 915 [treatment of military retirement benefits as community property]; *Robertson v. d. Changes in Conditions of License.

[§ 629] Changes in Conditions of License.

It is frequently declared that the license to practice a profession or calling, such as medicine or law, once obtained by compliance with legally prescribed conditions, is a "property right" or "vested property right" that is entitled to protection. The cases that state this proposition are, however, mainly concerned with arbitrary proceedings that deny procedural due process. A distinct question arises where a regulatory statute retroactively changes the qualifications for the license, so that the licensee faces more onerous conditions or is actually prevented from further practice.

In Rosenblatt v. California State Bd. of Pharmacy, Dept. of Professional & Vocational Standards (1945) 69 C.A.2d 69, 158 P.2d 199, the court held that granting the license confers no vested right on the licensee, and that the licensee accepts it subject to the power of the state to impose further regulations in the public interest. Accordingly, while petitioner had qualified and had been licensed as an "assistant pharmacist" on the basis of certain training and experience, it was held proper to deny him a renewal license after the Legislature repealed the statutes permitting persons of such lesser skill to engage in this work. (69 C.A.2d 73.)

In Castleman v. Scudder (1947) 81 C.A.2d 737, 185 P.2d 35, petitioners, business opportunity brokers, made contracts to sell businesses. The contracts lacked a definite termination date. Thereafter, a statute was enacted to provide for revocation or suspension of a broker's license for demanding a fee under this kind of a contract. Held, the statute was applicable to petitioners, who made claims for commissions after the statute became effective. "[H]aving qualified as licensees in a business already regulated under the police power of the state, they thereby accepted such licenses subject to the possibility of further regulatory legislation upon the same subject matter." (81 C.A.2d 740.)

2. Changes in Procedure.

a. Valid Retrospective Laws.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 630

[§ 630] Valid Retrospective Laws.

There is no vested right in existing remedies and rules of procedure and evidence. Hence, generally speaking, the Legislature may change these rules and make the changes apply retroactively to causes of action or rights that accrued prior to the change. (Mattson v. Department of Labor & Industries of Washington (1934) 293 U.S. 151, 55 S.Ct. 14, 79 L.Ed. 251; San Bernardino v. State Industrial Acc. Com. (1933) 217 C. 618, 628, 20 P.2d 673; Patek v. California Cotton Mills (1935) 4 C.A.2d 12, 15, 40 P.2d 927; see Landau v. Superior Court (1998) 81 C.A.4th 191, 213, 97 C.R.2d 657 [although statutory amendment requiring writ review of decisions revoking physicians' licenses operated prospectively, it applied to proceedings begun before effective date of amendment because amendment related only to procedure]; Florence Western Med. Clinic v. Bonta (2000) 77 C.A.4th 493, 503, 91 C.R.2d 609 [statute is applied retroactively only if it changes legal consequences of act completed before effective date of statute; statute addressing procedures to be used in legal proceedings not yet concluded operates prospectively for acts to be performed after effective date of statute]; Physicians Committee for Responsible Medicine v. Tyson Foods (2004) 119 C.A.4th 120, 127, 13 C.R.3d 926 [statute limiting applicability of anti-SLAPP statute]; 41 A.L.R.2d 798 [venue statutes]; 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §§705, 706.)

In Los Angeles v. Oliver (1929) 102 C.A. 299, 315, 283 P. 298, at the time a condemnation suit was brought, the statute made the value of the property determinable as of the time of trial; an amendment that changed the time to that of summons (23 months earlier) was held validly applicable to a suit already commenced. The only vested right was that just compensation be paid, and the procedure for ascertainment, within reasonable limits, was subject to legislative change. (102 C.A. 311.) (See Mercury Herald Co. v. Moore (1943) 22 C.2d 269, 274, 138 P.2d 673 [changes in procedure to redeem lands sold for tax delinquency]; Casey v. Katz (1952) 114 C.A.2d 391, 393, 250 P.2d 291 [amendment requiring filing of claim against estate of decedent tortfeasor was validly applied to cause of action for malicious prosecution that arose prior to amendment]; Halbert v. Berlinger (1954) 127 C.A.2d 6, 14, 273 P.2d 274 [same amendment; following Casey]; Hogan v. Ingold (1952) 38 C.2d 802, 812, 243 P.2d 1 [statute requiring security for costs in shareholder's derivative suit was validly applied to action commenced after enactment, although brought by plaintiff who acquired his shares before, and based on wrongs allegedly committed before]; *Owens v. probationary teacher right to hearing and protection against dismissal except for cause]; Aronson v. Superior Court (1987) 191 C.A.3d 294, 297, 236 C.R. 347, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §432 [retroactive application of shortened statute of limitations]; Plotkin v. Sajahtera (2003) 106 C.A.4th 953, 961, 131 C.R.2d 303 [amendment of parking lot signage ordinance that stated it was declaratory of existing law, and city council's stated intent that purpose of amendment was to instruct code enforcement personnel that "clarification" applied to their recent issuance of warning letters and to future enforcement, showed council's intent that amendment apply retroactively]; 81 A.L.R.2d 417 [shortening time allowed for appellate review]; 98 A.L.R.2d 1105 [imposing, removing, or changing monetary limitation of recovery for personal injury or death].)

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

B. Retrospective Legislation.

2. Changes in Procedure.

b. Efficient Remedy Must Be Left.

[§ 631] Efficient Remedy Must Be Left.

(1) In General. An important qualification of the rule stated in the preceding section is that the Legislature cannot, by a purported change in procedure, cut off all remedy. Unless it leaves a reasonably efficient remedy to enforce the right, the right itself is affected, and the statute will be held invalid as an impairment of a substantive right (supra, §623). (See Lane v. Wilson (1939) 307 U.S. 268, 59 S.Ct. 872, 876, 83 L.Ed. 1281, 1283 [statute requiring Blacks to register in a 12-day period or be perpetually barred from voting; period held too restricted].)

The distinction is illustrated by cases dealing with the 1933 amendments to former C.C.P. 583 (now C.C.P. 583.310 et seq.), providing for mandatory dismissal of an action not brought to trial within 5 years. Formerly, the period ran from the filing of the answer; by amendment the period ran from filing of the action (complaint), an earlier date. As to pending actions in which the time had already run if the new statute were applied, it was invalid because it immediately cut off the entire remedy. (Coleman v. Superior Court (1933) 135 C.A. 74, 76, 26 P.2d 673.) But as to pending actions in which a substantial period of time still remained to bring the case to trial, the amendment was given a valid retroactive application. (Rosefield Packing Co. v. Superior Court (1935) 4 C.2d 120, 122, 47 P.2d 716; see Casey v. Katz (1952) 114 C.A.2d 391, 393, 250 P.2d 291 [time adequate]; Halbert v. Berlinger (1954) 127 C.A.2d 6, 14, 273 P.2d 274 [same]; Aronson v. Superior Court (1987) 191 C.A.3d 294, 296, 236 C.R. 347 [retroactive shortening of statute of limitations; under Rosefield, reasonable time is question of law]; Santangelo v. Allstate Ins. Co. (1998) 65 C.A.4th 804, 816, 76 C.R.2d 735 [statute requiring arbitration to be concluded within 5 years was properly applied to claim that had been pending 4 years and 10 months when statute went into effect; 2 months to complete arbitration was reasonable under facts of case].)

There is considerable authority to the effect that the statute must, in these situations, expressly provide a reasonable time limit, and that where the Legislature fails to do so, retroactive application is invalid even though in fact a substantial period was available before it became effective. However, in Rosefield, California took the contrary position.

(2) Doctrine Inapplicable to Remedy of State or Local Agency. The doctrine that an efficient remedy must be left is relevant only where a statute affects the remedy of a private person. It does not apply where the state gives up a remedy of its own or of one of its agencies. The issue in this kind of case is not due process, but whether the Legislature has made a gift of public money in violation of the constitutional prohibition. (California Emp. Stabilization Com. v. Payne

3. Deprivation of Defense.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 632

[§ 632] Deprivation of Defense.

It has been held that a statute that deprives a person of an existing defense to another's claim may be deemed an impairment of a vested right; i.e., the immunity from successful suit is equivalent to a right. Thus, in Morris v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1935) 2 C.2d 764, 43 P.2d 276, the law at the time of an automobile accident made violation of the speed limit contributory negligence per se, barring recovery. After the suit was commenced, an amendment made this violation only prima facie evidence of negligence. Held, the amendment could not be applied to the pending action, for it would deprive the defendant of an absolute defense. (2 C.2d 767.)

There are two chief illustrations of statutes taking away existing defenses:

(1) Statutes of Limitation. Where the statute has not yet run, the Legislature may validly extend the period. (Mudd v. McColgan (1947) 30 C.2d 463, 468, 183 P.2d 10.) But where it has already run, the defense is regarded in most states as a vested right and the Legislature cannot remove the bar and destroy the defense by a retroactive law. (See Chambers v. Gallagher (1918) 177 C. 704, 708, 171 P. 931.) The United States Supreme Court has taken the contrary position, holding that the statute of limitations ordinarily relates to remedies rather than rights, and that the retroactive revival of a barred personal claim for money or damages merely disappoints a hope of defense and does not deprive the defendant of a vested right. Under this view, an extension of the period of the statute is void only where the lapse of time has created a property right, e.g., a title to real or personal property by adverse possession. (Chase Sec. Corp. v. Donaldson (1945) 325 U.S. 304, 65 S.Ct. 1137, 1142, 89 L.Ed. 1628, 1635.) (See 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §§433, 434.)

(2) Curative Statutes. Where the performance of governmental functions is unauthorized or invalid, by reason of irregularities or inaccuracies in compliance with law, the Legislature may sometimes remedy the defects and validate the acts by a curative statute. The theory is that what the Legislature could have authorized originally it can later validate by ratification, and that procedural requirements that it could have omitted originally it can dispense with later. (See Graham v. Goodcell (1931) 282 U.S. 409, 51 S.Ct. 186, 194, 75 L.Ed. 415, 440; Swayne & Hoyt v. United States (1937) 300 U.S. 297, 57 S.Ct. 478, 480, 81 L.Ed. 659, 663; Chase v. Trout (1905) 146 C. 350, 358, 80 P. 81; Talbot v. Wake (1977) 74 C.A.3d 428, 438, 141 C.R. 463; 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §707; 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §30.) But where a right or title has already vested, it cannot be impaired by subsequent curative legislation. (Miller v. McKenna (1944) 23 C.2d 774, 781, 147 P.2d 531.) (On clarification of existing statute, see supra, §624.)

4. Construction Against Retroactivity.

a. General Rule.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 633

[§ 633] General Rule.

A statute affecting a substantive right will, if possible, be construed prospectively to avoid a declaration of unconstitutionality. (See Evangelatos v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1188, 1207, 246 C.R. 629, 753 P.2d 585, infra, §634; McClung v. Employment Dev. Dept. (2004) 34 C.4th 467, 475, 20 C.R.3d 428, 99 P.3d 1015, infra, §928 [where court had definitively ruled that statute did not impose personal liability on nonsupervisory coworkers, subsequent amendment to impose that liability, stating that statute is "declaratory of existing law," does not make statute apply retroactively]; Saso v. Furtado (1951) 104 C.A.2d 759, 764, 232 P.2d 583 [statutory regulation restricting manner and extent of transfer of liquor license was inapplicable to agreement to transfer, performance of which was due before act went into effect]; Wienholz v. Kaiser Foundation Hosp. (1989) 217 C.A.3d 1501, 1503, 267 C.R. 1 [amendment to B. & P.C. 6146, raising maximum contingency fee in medical malpractice case, applies prospectively; hence, trial court could not award fee in excess of statutory limits in effect at time fee agreement was entered]; Horsemen's Benevolent & Protective Assn. v. Valley Racing Assn. (1992) 4 C.A.4th 1538, 1551, 6 C.R.2d 698, citing the text; Aktar v. Anderson (1997) 58 C.A.4th 1166, 1182, 68 C.R.2d 595 [because retroactive application of statute mandating recoupment of food stamp overissuances would increase recipient's liability for past benefits, statute would be applied prospectively]; Riley v. Hilton Hotels Corp. (2002) 100 C.A.4th 599, 607, 123 C.R.2d 157 [ordinance stating that new enactment is "declaratory of existing law and does not alter" meaning of former section, as adopted in 1962, does not expressly declare that change is retroactive or evidence intent to rebut presumption of prospective application]; West Hollywood v. 1112 Inv. Co. (2003) 105 C.A.4th 1134, 1143, 130 C.R.2d 168 [amendment to rent control statute that changed, as opposed to clarified, law by closing loophole, would be given prospective effect]; cf. McKeon v. Hastings College (1986) 185 C.A.3d 877, 887, 888, 230 C.R. 176 [administrative regulations are subject to same rule; here, however, defendant consented to retroactive application, thus waiving protection of rule against retroactivity]; Mahon v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. (1988) 199 C.A.3d 616, 620, 623, 245 C.R. 103 [retroactive application was proper where prior law was unsettled, so there could be no justifiable reliance on it].)

Even a procedural statute that may validly be given a retroactive operation will ordinarily, for reasons of fairness, be construed as prospective unless the legislative intent to make it retroactive clearly appears. (Krause v. Rarity (1930) 210 C. 644, 655, 293 P. 62; Rainey v. Michel (1936) 6 C.2d 259, 281, 57 P.2d 932; Douglas Aircraft Co. v. Cranston (1962) 58 C.2d 462, 465, 24 C.R. 851, 374 P.2d 819; Roten-Oeschger v. Flournoy (1977) 72 C.A.3d 254, 259, 139 C.R.

731; Johnson v. Alexis (1983) 143 C.A.3d 82, 85, 191 C.R. 529; Utter v. Alexis (1985) 173 C.A.3d 194, 197, 219 C.R. 30.)

Thus, in DiGenova v. State Bd. of Education (1962) 57 C.2d 167, 18 C.R. 369, 367 P.2d 865, the Education Code was amended to require the revocation of teaching credentials of persons convicted of designated sex offenses. Held, the new law was inapplicable to petitioner, convicted before its adoption. "It is settled therefore that no statute is to be given retroactive effect unless the Legislature has expressly so declared and that this rule is not limited by a requirement that a statute be liberally construed to effect its objects and promote justice." (57 C.2d 174.)

This policy is particularly strong where the statute, though partly procedural in form, is mainly substantive in nature or effect. In Aetna Cas. & Surety Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com. (1947) 30 C.2d 388, 182 P.2d 159, the contention was made that there is no presumption against retrospective construction of statutes relating merely to remedies and modes of procedure. The court's answer was as follows: "This reasoning ... assumes a clear-cut distinction between purely 'procedural' and purely 'substantive' legislation. In truth, the distinction relates not so much to the form of the statute as to its effects. If substantial changes are made, even in a statute which might ordinarily be classified as procedural, the operation on existing rights would be retroactive because the legal effects of past events would be changed, and the statute will be construed to operate only in futuro unless the legislative intent to the contrary clearly appears." (30 C.2d 394.) (See California, Subsequent Injuries Fund v. Industrial Acc. Com. (1957) 48 C.2d 355, 361, 310 P.2d 1 [following Aetna]; Estate of Giordano (1948) 85 C.A.2d 588, 594, 193 P.2d 771 [statute changing burden of proof as to reciprocal inheritance rights]; Ghera v. Sugar Pine Lumber Co. (1964) 224 C.A.2d 88, 89, 36 C.R. 305, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §431 [new statute enlarging limitation period for recovery of penal damages for trespass]; General Ins. Co. v. Commerce Hyatt House (1970) 5 C.A.3d 460, 471, 85 C.R. 317 [statute providing that parties to contract may require written notice of intention to rely on excuse of prevention]; Estate of Hilton (1996) 44 C.A.4th 890, 908, 910, 52 C.R.2d 491, 14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §538 [amendment modifying statutory fee schedule paid to attorneys in estate matters, whether substantive or procedural, could not be applied retroactively to prior partial statutory fee orders]; 66 A.L.R.2d 1444 [changing manner of distribution of recovery or settlement for wrongful death]; 98 A.L.R.2d 1105 [statute imposing, removing, or changing monetary limitation of recovery for personal injury or death].)

In People v. Smith (1983) 34 C.3d 251, 259, 193 C.R. 692, 667 P.2d 149, the question was whether Proposition 8 (The Victims' Bill of Rights; see 1 Cal. Criminal Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §102 et seq.) applied to a crime committed before its adoption. The court observed that some of the provisions, though procedural in form, might affect rights of a defendant so substantial as to come within the prohibition of ex post facto laws. (34 C.3d 259, 260, 261, 262.) Hence, "to avoid doubts as to the constitutionality of this measure under the ex post facto clause, we construe Proposition 8 to apply only to criminal proceedings arising out of offenses committed on or after the date it took effect." (34 C.3d 262.) (On ex post facto laws generally, see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §10 et seq.)

In re Cindy B. (1987) 192 C.A.3d 771, 779, 237 C.R. 677, involving an amendment to C.C. 232(a)(2) to allow termination of parental rights on expanded grounds, was held nonretroactive for the following reasons: (a) The amendment had a potent substantive effect; (b) there was no clear legislative intent to make it retroactive; (c) there was no express declaration of retroactivity; (d) the legislative scheme required prospective application; (e) lack of notice raised a question of due process, calling for a construction to avoid unconstitutionality. (192 C.A.3d 779 et seq.)

Authority* (2005) 131 C.A.4th 66, 74, 31 C.R.3d 411 [statutory statement that statute does not apply to actions filed on or before particular date, which was more than 4 years before statute's effective date, amounted to statement of retroactivity]. Ghera case:

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

4. Construction Against Retroactivity.

b. Initiative Measure.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 634

[§ 634] Initiative Measure.

Where an initiative measure is involved, the court must look to the intent of the voters. In Russell v. Superior Court (1986) 185 C.A.3d 810, 814, 230 C.R. 102, the Fair Responsibility Act of 1986 (Proposition 51; see 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §52 et seq.) was held nonretroactive on the following analysis: (a) the Act contained no express provision for retroactivity; (b) nothing in its wording suggested retroactive intent, for the operative language was worded in the future tense; (c) the ballot arguments and analysis were either worded in the future tense, or were ambiguously worded in the present tense without sufficient indication that the voters understood that passage of the Act would impact pending cases; (d) the Act's "findings," reciting inequities of joint liability and the imminent financial crisis facing "deep pocket" public entity defendants, do not show a clear intent for immediate application to pending cases; a prospective application would satisfy the desire for immediate relief, and retroactive application would result in a windfall to insurance companies.

The same conclusion on the nonretroactivity of Proposition 51 was reached in Evangelatos v. Superior Court (1988) 44 C.3d 1188, 1212, 246 C.R. 629, 753 P.2d 585, on an elaborate review of the case law:

(a) The traditional approach was stated in United States v. Security Industrial Bank (1982) 459 U.S. 70, 103 S.Ct. 407, 412, 74 L.Ed.2d 235, 243: "The principle that statutes operate only prospectively, while judicial decisions operate retrospectively, is familiar to every law student. ... This court has often pointed out: '[T]he first rule of construction is that legislation must be considered as addressed to the future, not to the past. ... The rule has been expressed in varying degrees of strength but always of one import, that a retrospective operation will not be given to a statute which interferes with antecedent rights ... unless such be "the unequivocal and inflexible import of the terms, and the manifest intention of the legislature." ' ' (44 C.3d 1207.)

(b) California cases are in accord. (44 C.3d 1207, citing Aetna Cas. & Surety Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com. (1947) 30 C.2d 388, 182 P.2d 159, supra, §633, and the text.) And C.C. 3, stating that no part of the Code is retroactive unless expressly so declared, "represents a specific legislative codification of this general legal principle." (44 C.3d 1207; see footnote 11, and 44 C.3d 1208, citing many cases.)

(c) The drafters of the statute, in omitting any provision on retroactivity, "must have recognized that the statute would not be applied retroactively." (44 C.3d 1211.)

(d) Defendants (the alleged tortfeasors) contended that the intent of the electorate is controlling over that of the drafters, and that the voters intended a retroactive application. This is unsound:

(1) There is no reliable basis for finding this conflicting intent; neither the Legislative Analyst's analysis nor any of the statements of proponents or opponents in the ballot pamphlet spoke to the retroactivity question. "Because past cases have long made it clear that initiative measures are subject to the ordinary rules and canons of statutory construction ... , informed members of the electorate who happened to consider the retroactivity issue would presumably have concluded that the measure--like other statutes--would be applied prospectively because no express provision for retroactive application was included in the proposition." (44 C.3d 1212.)

(2) The claim that the declared "remedial" purpose of the measure demonstrates an intended retroactivity cannot be sustained. "Most statutory changes are, of course, intended to improve a preexisting situation and to bring about a fairer state of affairs, and if such an objective were itself sufficient to demonstrate a clear legislative intent to apply a statute retroactively, almost all statutory provisions and initiative measures would apply retroactively rather than prospectively." (44 C.3d 1213.)

(3) If the voters had considered the issue, they might have recognized that retroactive application could result in placing individuals who had acted in reliance on the old law in a worse position than litigants under the new law. (44 C.3d 1215 et seq., discussing problems of joinder of tortfeasors and settlement.)

(4) Defendants also argued that even if there is insufficient evidence of an intent of the electorate, this intent should be inferred by the court from the measure's statement of purpose and the election brochure arguments, which demonstrate that the proposition was adopted to meet a liability insurance crisis that cannot be alleviated by a prospective application. This argument is based on a mistaken view of the consequences. The vast majority of tort actions are resolved by settlement rather than by trial, and because the amounts at which cases are settled reflect the defendant's potential liability at trial, the effects of the measure on damages actually paid are likely to be felt at a much earlier date than defendants predict. (44 C.3d 1218, 1219.)

(5) Statutory provisions similar to Proposition 51 were enacted in other states at approximately the same time as California's measure, and in response to the same concerns over the effects of high liability insurance premiums. A review of these provisions demonstrates that this factor does not necessarily evidence an intent to apply the statute retroactively. The legislative bodies that focused on the issue arrived at different conclusions of whether, and to what extent, such a statutory modification should apply to preexisting causes of action. (44 C.3d 1220.)

(e) Defendants also contended that the measure should be applied retroactively by analogy to the retroactive application of Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 C.3d 804, 119 C.R. 858, 532 P.2d 1226, 6 Summary (10th), Torts, §1329 (the decision abolishing the defense of contributory negligence and substituting the doctrine of comparative negligence). But Li was a change in common law doctrine made by judicial decision, not statutory enactment. "It is because of this difference in the governing legal principles that in most states in which the comparative negligence rule has been adopted through judicial decision--like California--the newly adopted rule has been applied to at least some pending cases ... , while in those states in which comparative negligence has been established by statute, the change has almost uniformly been applied prospectively." (44 C.3d 1221.)

A strong dissent of three justices attacks the reasoning of the majority opinion on all major points. (44 C.3d 1242.) (See Yoshioka v. Superior Court (1997) 58 C.A.4th 972, 978, 68 C.R.2d 553 [retroactive application of Proposition 213 (C.C. 3333.4), initiative prohibiting uninsured motorists and drunk drivers from collecting noneconomic damages in motor vehicle accident cases, does not violate due process]; Jenkins v. Los Angeles (1999) 74 C.A.4th 524, 536, 88 C.R.2d 149, 6 Summary (10th), Torts, §1657 [following Yoshioka; Proposition 213 (C.C. 3333.3), prohibiting convicted felon from recovering damages for negligence if injuries were proximately caused by commission of felony or immediate flight, is constitutional and applies retroactively]; Rosasco v. Commission on Judicial Performance (2000) 82 C.A.4th 315, 320, 323, 98 C.R.2d 111 [amendment of Cal. Const., Art. VI, §18(d) (Proposition 190) to provide sanctions against former judges for specified misconduct while in office, operated prospectively only in absence of express provision for retroactive application; following Evangelatos].)

c. Repeal of Statute Without Saving Clause.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 635

[§ 635] Repeal of Statute Without Saving Clause.

An exception to the rule of prospective construction is recognized where a right of action is created by statute and the statute is repealed without a saving clause. The repeal will operate retroactively to terminate a pending action based on the statute. (See 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §72 [statutory right of action repealed].) The same is true where a penal law is repealed without a saving clause; pending prosecutions under the old law are abated. (See 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Introduction to Crimes, §66.)

In Governing Bd. of Rialto Unified School Dist. v. Mann (1977) 18 C.3d 819, 135 C.R. 526, 558 P.2d 1, the court pointed out that this principle has broad application to criminal statutes, quasi-criminal statutes (e.g., those imposing forfeitures or statutory penalties), and civil statutes. (18 C.3d 829, 830.) In this case, it was applied to the 1976 legislation changing the treatment of marijuana offenders by reducing the penalty for possession of small amounts, and prohibiting a public entity, including a school district, from revoking an individual's employment on the basis of a pre-1976 conviction for possession of marijuana (Health & Saf.C. 11361.7(b)). The dismissal of defendant teacher, based on such a conviction, was held improper, for the repeal of the criminal statute making possession either a felony or misdemeanor eliminated the authority of the school board to treat it as a felony and hence, a ground of dismissal under the Education Code. (18 C.3d 830.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW
C. Extraterritorial Legislation.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 636

[§ 636] Extraterritorial Legislation.

Rights vested in one state cannot be impaired by legislation of another. So, if a citizen of one state exercises his or her privilege of coming into another, the latter state cannot, as a condition of entrance, compel that person to give up property rights vested elsewhere. (See Estate of Thornton (1934) 1 C.2d 1, 5, 33 P.2d 1, 11 Summary (10th), Community Property, §252.) Similarly, one state cannot tax land or interests in land situated outside its borders. (Senior v. Braden (1935) 295 U.S. 422, 55 S.Ct. 800, 79 L.Ed. 1520; see 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §32.)

One state cannot impose additional burdens and liabilities on a party under a contract validly made in another state. (Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Delta & Pine Land Co. (1934) 292 U.S. 143, 54 S.Ct. 634, 636, 78 L.Ed. 1178, 1181.) However, Osborn v. Ozlin (1940) 310 U.S. 53, 60 S.Ct. 758, 84 L.Ed. 1074, held that a state may require that all insurance contracts on property or persons within the state be signed by a local agent who receives the usual fee, even though the contract is written outside the state with a broker outside the state. "[T]he mere fact that state action may have repercussions beyond state lines is of no judicial significance so long as the action is not within that domain which the Constitution forbids." (60 S.Ct. 761, 84 L.Ed. 1078.) (See Watson v. Employers Liab. Assur. Corp. (1954) 348 U.S. 66, 75 S.Ct. 166, 170, 99 L.Ed. 74, 82 [state statute allowing direct tort action against liability insurer was validly applied to foreign insurer whose contract was made in another state with a clause against such action].)

Statutes providing for escheat of intangible property, such as unclaimed insurance money due on matured policies, or shares of stock and dividends, raise serious questions of extraterritoriality, for the situs of the intangible is fictional, and more than one state may seek to apply its statute to the property. The constitutional principle is now established that the holder of the property (e.g., the insurance company or other corporation) is deprived of due process if it is compelled to give it up in one jurisdiction without assurance of freedom from suit in another. (See Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pennsylvania (1961) 368 U.S. 71, 82 S.Ct. 199, 201, 7 L.Ed.2d 139, 142; Texas v. New Jersey (1965) 379 U.S. 674, 85 S.Ct. 626, 13 L.Ed.2d 596; 2 Cal. Proc. X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

D. Nature of Procedural Due Process.

1. Long-Established and New Procedures.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 637

[§ 637] Long-Established and New Procedures.

Procedure established by long usage is usually considered sufficient to fulfill the requirements of due process. (See Frank v. Maryland (1959) 359 U.S. 360, 79 S.Ct. 804, 811, 3 L.Ed.2d 877, 884.) But it is not necessary that new procedure conform to past usage; it is sufficient if the methods are in harmony with the underlying principles of the constitutional guarantee. (See Twining v. New Jersey (1908) 211 U.S. 78, 29 S.Ct. 14, 20, 53 L.Ed. 97, 107; Snyder v. Massachusetts (1934) 291 U.S. 97, 54 S.Ct. 330, 332, 78 L.Ed. 674, 677; People v. Troche (1928) 206 C. 35, 42, 273 P. 767; Bell v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (2004) 115 C.A.4th 715, 751, 9 C.R.3d 544 [use of statistical methodology of random sampling and extrapolation reflected level of accuracy that was consistent with due process in determining aggregate classwide damages in action to recover unpaid overtime pay]; 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §901 et seq.; 3 Rotunda, §17.1; 2 Tribe, §10-7 et seq.)

Thus, in Hurtado v. California (1884) 110 U.S. 516, 4 S.Ct. 111, 122, 28 L.Ed. 232, 239, California added to its established method of indictment of criminals charged with felonies the alternative procedure of information. Held, because the rights of the accused were fully protected under the new procedure, it was valid.

Another innovation was found consistent with due process in Smith v. Smith (1954) 125 C.A.2d 154, 270 P.2d 613, upholding the constitutionality of the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (see 8 Cal. Procedure (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §398A et seq.): (a) The courts of two sovereigns may be allowed to participate in taking evidence in a single case with one acting in an ancillary capacity to the deciding court in another forum. (b) The defendant in the responding state may be bound by a judgment of support without the plaintiff being present; this is a matter of practice, not jurisdiction, and the defendant may examine the plaintiff by deposition taken outside the forum state. (125 C.A.2d 167.)

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

D. Nature of Procedural Due Process.

2. Notice Is Fundamental.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 638

[§ 638] Notice Is Fundamental.

Notice is fundamental to due process: "Engrained in our concept of Due Process is the requirement of notice. Notice is sometimes essential so that the citizen has the chance to defend charges. Notice is required before property interests are disturbed, before assessments are made, before penalties are assessed. Notice is required in a myriad of situations where a penalty or forfeiture might be suffered for mere failure to act." (Lambert v. California (1957) 355 U.S. 225, 78 S.Ct. 240, 243, 2 L.Ed.2d 228, 231; People v. Swink (1984) 150 C.A.3d 1076, 1079, 198 C.R. 290, infra, §659; see West Covina v. Perkins (1999) 525 U.S. 234, 119 S.Ct. 678, 681, 142 L.Ed.2d 636, 643 [in seizing property subject to search warrant, no individualized notice of state law remedies for its return need be given because that information is available in published statutes and case law]; 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §931 et seq.)

Thus, our former "arrest and bail" statute was held unconstitutional because it deprived the defendant of liberty through the act of a law enforcement officer; and the provision that the defendant might apply to the court to vacate the arrest order or reduce bail did not afford a fair opportunity to challenge the imprisonment, for there was no requirement of notice of this right. (In re Harris (1968) 69 C.2d 486, 490, 72 C.R. 340, 446 P.2d 148, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §5.)

In Groppi v. Leslie (1972) 404 U.S. 496, 92 S.Ct. 582, 30 L.Ed.2d 632, petitioner was alleged to have disrupted a session of the Wisconsin Legislature by a sit-in on the floor of the Assembly lasting from midday to nearly midnight. Two days after the event, without notice, a contempt resolution was passed, served on petitioner in jail (where he was already confined following arrest), and his subsequent confinement was pursuant to this contempt resolution. Held, relief on habeas corpus should have been granted; the confinement was a violation of due process.

The opinion repeats familiar basic principles, and emphasizes the fact that summary procedure was unnecessary where the event occurred 2 days before. (a) In such event, the opportunity for a hearing would enable the alleged contemnor to establish mistaken identity, mental incompetency as a defense, or other matters in mitigation. (b) When immediate action is taken, the contemnor is present, no question of identity arises, and he or she has an opportunity to speak, in the nature of the right of allocution of a criminal defendant. (92 S.Ct. 587, 30 L.Ed.2d 639.) Ex parte Terry (1888) 128 U.S. 289, 9 S.Ct. 77, 32 L.Ed. 405, where the court acted promptly after the lawyer contemnor had voluntarily left the courtroom, is distinguishable. (92 S.Ct. 588, 30 L.Ed.2d 640.) "While a different result might well follow had the Wisconsin Assembly acted immediately upon occurrence of the contemptuous conduct and while the contemnor was in the chamber, or nearly within the Capitol building, as in Terry, we conclude the procedures employed in this case were beyond the legitimate scope of that power because of the absence of notice or any opportunity to respond." (92 S.Ct. 588, 30 L.Ed.2d 640.)

D. Nature of Procedural Due Process.

3. Non-Essential Matters.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 639

[§ 639] Non-Essential Matters.

Due process does not require a judicial proceeding. (*Anderson Nat. Bank v. And it does not guarantee either a correct decision or consistency in decisions. (Central Land Co. of West Virginia v. Laidley (1895) 159 U.S. 103, 16 S.Ct. 80, 83, 40 L.Ed. 91, 95; *Worcester County Trust Co. v. The right of appeal to a higher court is not essential to due process in judicial proceedings. (See McKane v. Durston (1894) 153 U.S. 684, 14 S.Ct. 913, 914, 38 L.Ed. 867, 868; Superior Wheeler Cake Corp. v. Superior Court (1928) 203 C. 384, 386, 264 P. 488; *Rucker v. X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

E. Procedural Due Process in Judicial Proceedings.

1. Essential Elements.

a. Jurisdiction, Notice, and Hearing.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 640

[§ 640] Jurisdiction, Notice, and Hearing.

The elements of due process in judicial proceedings are covered in detail in California Procedure and will be briefly summarized in this and the following sections:

(1) Jurisdiction. The court must have jurisdiction over the parties and the subject matter of the action; i.e., the case must be one that the court is empowered to consider, and the parties must be given notice of the proceeding unless they waive this notice by a voluntary appearance. (Scott v. McNeal (1894) 154 U.S. 34, 14 S.Ct. 1108, 1112, 38 L.Ed. 896, 901; Harrington v. Superior Court (1924) 194 C. 185, 188, 228 P. 15; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §§10, 11, 108 et seq.) A personal judgment is therefore binding only on parties to the proceeding and persons in privity with them; it cannot validly bind strangers with adverse interests. (Riley v. New York Trust Co. (1942) 315 U.S. 343, 62 S.Ct. 608, 86 L.Ed. 885; Hansberry v. Lee (1940) 311 U.S. 32, 61 S.Ct. 115, 117, 85 L.Ed. 22, 26; 7 Cal. Proc. (4th), Judgment, §388 et seq.)

(2) Notice and Opportunity for Hearing. The parties must have reasonable notice and an opportunity for hearing. (Twining v. New Jersey (1908) 211 U.S. 78, 29 S.Ct. 14, 20, 53 L.Ed. 97, 111; *Griffin v. X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

E. Procedural Due Process in Judicial Proceedings.

1. Essential Elements.

b. Fair Hearing.

2. Impartial Judge.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 642

[§ 642] Impartial Judge.

An essential element of a fair hearing is an impartial judge. Thus, a judge with a pecuniary interest should not preside over a hearing; and a trial for misdemeanor before a local judge who received costs from a convicted defendant as an addition to his salary was held a denial of due process. (Tumey v. Ohio (1927) 273 U.S. 510, 47 S.Ct. 437, 444, 71 L.Ed. 749, 758; see Ward v. Village of Monroeville, Ohio (1972) 409 U.S. 57, 93 S.Ct. 80, 34 L.Ed.2d 267 [Tumey doctrine applied to trial on traffic charge before local mayor whose court fines supplied substantial portion of village funds, despite fact that mayor did not personally receive any money; test is existence of possible temptation to be partisan]; 72 A.L.R.3d 375 [disqualification of judge for pecuniary interest in fines, forfeitures, or fees payable by litigants].) (On pecuniary interest of members of administrative body, see American Motors Sales Corp. v. New Motor Vehicle Bd. (1977) 69 C.A.3d 983, 988, 138 C.R. 594, infra, §671 [discussing Tumey and Ward].)

In re Murchison (1955) 349 U.S. 133, 75 S.Ct. 623, 99 L.Ed. 942, reached the same conclusion on a different principle of impartiality: A judge cannot be both prosecutor and judge. A Michigan law authorized any judge of a court of record to act as a "one-man grand jury" to investigate crime. One of these judges questioned M, a police officer, about gambling and bribery, and charged him with perjury. The judge then ordered M to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, held the hearing himself, and sentenced M for contempt. Held, this was a denial of due process. "[N]o man can be a judge in his own case and no man is permitted to try cases where he has an interest in the outcome. ... A single 'judge-grand jury' is even more a part of the accusatory process than an ordinary lay grand juror. Having been a part of that process a judge cannot be, in the very nature of things, wholly disinterested in the conviction or acquittal of those accused." (75 S.Ct. 625, 99 L.Ed. 946.)

In Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Lavoie (1986) 475 U.S. 813, 106 S.Ct. 1580, 89 L.Ed.2d 823, involving a bad-faith insurance claim, the state supreme court justice who wrote the opinion and cast the deciding vote for the insured on appeal failed to recuse himself even though he was engaged in similar litigation against his own insurer. Held, his participation violated defendant insurer's due process rights. The issues on appeal involved an unsettled area and the opinion "possibly made new law." (106 S.Ct. 1586, 89 L.Ed.2d 833.) In participating in the decision, the justice acted as a judge in his own case and had a direct, personal, substantial, and pecuniary interest in the outcome. (106 S.Ct. 1586, 1587, 89 L.Ed.2d 834, 835, citing Tumey, Ward, and Murchison.)

In Catchpole v. Brannon (1995) 36 C.A.4th 237, 42 C.R.2d 440, plaintiff sued her former employers for sexual harassment, assault and battery, and infliction of emotional distress. Judgment was rendered for defendants by the trial court sitting without a jury, and plaintiff appealed, claiming gender bias by the trial judge. Held, reversed for a new trial on all issues before a different judge.

(a) "Whatever disagreement there may be in our jurisprudence as to the scope of the phrase 'due process of law,' there is no dispute that it minimally contemplates the opportunity to be fully and fairly heard before an impartial decision maker. The presence of judicial partiality is, of course, most pernicious where--as claimed here--it bears directly on the matter to be decided." (36 C.A.4th 245.)

(b) On appeal, plaintiff is not required to demonstrate actual bias. "Where the average person could well entertain doubt whether the trial judge was impartial, appellate courts are not required to speculate whether the bias was actual or merely apparent, or whether the result would have been the same if the evidence had been impartially considered and the matter dispassionately decided ... , but should reverse the judgment and remand the matter to a different judge for a new trial on all issues." (36 C.A.4th 247.)

(c) "Appellant's claim of gender bias rests on the related contentions that the trial judge displayed a belief that sexual harassment cases are relatively unimportant and invoked sexual stereotypes in evaluating appellant's behavior and credibility. There is, unfortunately, substance to these claims. Two factors create the strong impression of gender bias. The first is the tenor of the proceedings and impatience the trial judge repeatedly expressed, which conveyed the sense he considered sexual harassment cases 'detrimental to everyone concerned' and a misuse of the judicial system. The second factor relates to the assessment of appellant's credibility. The court's finding that appellant was not believable, the primary justification provided for the judgment against her, rests on stereotyped thinking about women and misconceptions of the social and economic realities many women confront. Considered as a whole, the court's comments reflect a predetermined disposition to rule against appellant based on her status as a woman." These factors "provide a reasonable person ample basis upon which to doubt whether appellant received a fair trial." (36 C.A.4th 249.) (See Hall v. Harker (1999) 69 C.A.4th 836, 843, 82 C.R.2d 44 [appearance of bias against attorneys; following Catchpole].)

1. Essential Elements.

b. Fair Hearing.

3. Communications Between Judges.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 643

[§ 643] Communications Between Judges.

A due process challenge to ex parte communications between judges was rejected in People v. Hernandez (1984) 160 C.A.3d 725, 206 C.R. 843. After defendant had pleaded guilty to robbery, A, the trial judge, had a conversation with Judge C about that judge's use of sentencing criteria in a similar case. Held, the conversation was not a violation of the Canons of Judicial Ethics (see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §53 et seq.), and did not deprive defendant of procedural due process.

(a) Defendant's counsel argued that because neither he nor the accused was present at the consultation, the accused was denied the opportunity to be heard in response to the statements of the consulted judge. Because Judge A stated on the record that he had consulted Judge C, and all parties were given an opportunity to respond to Judge A's statements, counsel in effect contended that any ex parte communication between judges on a pending criminal case is a violation of the defendant's due process rights. (160 C.A.3d 742.)

(b) The risk that a defendant will be deprived of his or her interest in being heard by an impartial tribunal "is minimal in light of the safeguards." The defendant may move to disqualify a judge he or she believes not to be fair and impartial, or may move to disqualify the judge for actual bias. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §91 et seq.) No motion was made here, and there is no showing that Judge A received any evidence in the conversation or considered any facts outside the record. (160 C.A.3d 745.)

(c) The real issue raised by defendant's argument is that of appearance of fairness; and in assessing the propriety of conversation between judges on a pending matter, consideration must be given to the "dignitary interests" of the individual and the "responsibility" of the judicial officer. (160 C.A.3d 748.) Here, defendant had an opportunity to present his "story," and did not question the honesty and integrity of the judge or his proper performance of his judicial functions. (160 C.A.3d 749.)

(d) "The governmental interest is the same as a litigant's interest--having fair, knowledgeable and impartial judicial officers presiding over disputed matters. To deprive judges of the opportunity to discuss cases with their colleagues in the context we have discussed would, as previously noted, not add to or detract from fairness or impartiality in fact.

However, to prohibit contact between judges on pending matters would be adverse to governmental interests in a knowledgeable judiciary and facilitating the judiciary's ability to exercise its discretion wisely." (160 C.A.3d 749.)

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

E. Procedural Due Process in Judicial Proceedings.

2. Actions In Personam.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 644

[§ 644] Actions In Personam.

An action in personam, or personal action, is one that seeks to impose a liability or obligation on a particular person or persons, and jurisdiction of the party or parties is necessary for the validity of the judgment. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §108.) In the celebrated case of Pennoyer v. Neff (1877) 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565, 572, the court laid down the rule that jurisdiction to render a personal judgment against a nonresident must be obtained by personal service of process on the defendant within the territorial jurisdiction of the state. In that case, an Oregon statute provided that, in an action against a nonresident having property within the state, service might be made by publication. Neff, a nonresident, owned real property in the state. Mitchell brought an action against him for services as attorney. Summons was published but the property was not attached. Neff did not appear; judgment by default was entered, and the plaintiff levied execution on the property and sold it. Pennoyer purchased at the sale and Neff brought this action against him. Held, the judgment was void, and Neff was entitled to recover the property; the authority of the courts of a state is restricted to its territorial limits, and they have no power to enforce a personal judgment against a nonresident, based on service by publication.

The doctrine of Pennoyer v. Neff has undergone considerable attrition, and today stands for little more than the proposition that personal service within the state is the typical and preferred method, and that substituted or constructive service is justifiable only under special circumstances. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §118 et seq.) The important special circumstances under which substituted service has been held constitutionally valid are as follows:

(1) Action against person domiciled in the state but absent. (Milliken v. Meyer (1940) 311 U.S. 457, 61 S.Ct. 339, 342, 85 L.Ed. 278, 283; Allen v. Superior Court (1953) 41 C.2d 306, 309, 259 P.2d 905; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §129.)

(2) Action against nonresident doing business in the state, on cause of action arising out of the business. (Henry L. Doherty & Co. v. Goodman (1935) 294 U.S. 623, 55 S.Ct. 553, 79 L.Ed. 1097; Travelers Health Assn. v. Virginia (1950) 339 U.S. 643, 70 S.Ct. 927, 94 L.Ed. 1154; *Lewis Mfg. Co. v. (4) Action against person who expressly consents to substituted service. (See Frey & Horgan Corp. v. Superior Court (1936) 5 C.2d 401, 404, 55 P.2d 203 [contract provision]; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §179 et seq.)

The Second Restatement of Conflict of Laws and the California Jurisdiction and Procedure Act of 1969 recognize additional bases of personal jurisdiction, including residence, nationality or citizenship, doing an act in the state, causing an effect in the state by an act done elsewhere, ownership, use, or possession of a thing in the state, and "other relationships to the state which make the exercise of judicial jurisdiction reasonable." (Rest.2d, Conflict of Laws §27; see C.C.P. 410.10; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §110 et seq.)

[§ 645] Proceedings In Rem.

An action or proceeding in rem is one that seeks to affect the interests of all persons in certain property. An action or proceeding quasi in rem is one in which the plaintiff seeks to satisfy a personal claim out of property seized and subjected to the jurisdiction of the court, or to determine the interests of a particular person or persons in certain property. (See 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §234 et seq.)

The basic elements of jurisdiction are (1) situs of the property within the state, and (2) jurisdiction of a competent court over the property, by valid notice and opportunity for a hearing. (See Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank (1950) 339 U.S. 306, 70 S.Ct. 652, 656, 94 L.Ed. 865, 872; Hanson v. Superior Court (1957) 49 C.2d 338, 342, 316 P.2d 960; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §244.)

Proceedings involving status, such as divorce, annulment, guardianship, and adoption, have sometimes been described as "substantially in rem," the status being regarded as a "res" or subject matter located within the state of domicile of the person whose status is involved. 4. Creditors' Remedies.

a. In General: Sniadach Rule.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 646

[§ 646] In General: Sniadach Rule.

In a series of significant decisions, the United States and California Supreme Courts held the traditional prejudgment seizure remedies--garnishment, attachment, and replevin (California claim and delivery)--unconstitutional, except in special situations. The common element in each, the taking of property without an opportunity for a hearing, is a denial of due process. (See Sniadach v. Family Finance Corp. of Bay View (1969) 395 U.S. 337, 89 S.Ct. 1820, 23 L.Ed.2d 349 [prejudgment garnishment of wages]; Fuentes v. Shevin (1972) 407 U.S. 67, 92 S.Ct. 1983, 32 L.Ed.2d 556, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §249 [prejudgment replevin]; Blair v. Pitchess (1971) 5 C.3d 258, 270, 96 C.R. 42, 486 P.2d 1242, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §248 [claim and delivery]; Randone v. Appellate Department (1971) 5 C.3d 536, 547, 96 C.R. 709, 488 P.2d 13, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §49 [attachment]; People v. Surety Ins. Co. (1978) 82 C.A.3d 229, 237, 147 C.R. 65 [comprehensive listing of cases applying Sniadach rule in four categories]; cf. Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co. (1974) 416 U.S. 600, 94 S.Ct. 1895, 40 L.Ed.2d 406, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §250 [Louisiana sequestration statute held valid]; and see 3 Rotunda, §17.9; 88 Harv. L. Rev. 71 [Sniadach, Fuentes, Mitchell]; 8 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 339 [From Sniadach to North Georgia Finishing]; 26 Stanf. L. Rev. 673 [Randone]; for discussion of cases and statutory procedure for attachment and claim and delivery, see 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §§49 et seq., 248 et seq.; on garnishment, see 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §232 et seq.)

North Georgia Finishing v. Di-Chem (1975) 419 U.S. 601, 95 S.Ct. 719, 42 L.Ed.2d 751, attempts to explain the distinction between statutes invalid under Fuentes v. Shevin and valid under Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co.. Georgia had a traditional garnishment statute authorizing a creditor to garnish on a conclusory affidavit and bond, with the writ issued by a court clerk, and no method of discharge except by filing a bond. Held, the statute was invalid.

(a) The Georgia court thought that Sniadach was limited to garnishment of wages, but failed to consider Fuentes, which holds that the Due Process Clause applies to any deprivation of property without notice and opportunity for a hearing. "Here, a bank account, surely a form of property, was impounded and, absent a bond, put totally beyond use during the pendency of the litigation on the alleged debt, all by a writ of garnishment issued by a court clerk without notice or opportunity for an early hearing and without participation by a judicial officer." (95 S.Ct. 722, 42 L.Ed.2d 757.)

(b) Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co. does not support the statute. In that case, the affidavit required facts and a judge passed on it; also, an immediate hearing after seizure was provided. (95 S.Ct. 722, 42 L.Ed.2d 757.)

(c) The contention that both Fuentes and Mitchell deal only with consumers who are victims of contracts of adhesion is untenable. "It may be that consumers deprived of household appliances will more likely suffer irreparably than corporations deprived of bank accounts, but the probability of irreparable injury in the latter case is sufficiently great so that some procedures are necessary to guard against the risk of initial error. We are no more inclined now than we have been in the past to distinguish among different kinds of property in applying the Due Process Clause." (95 S.Ct. 723, 42 L.Ed.2d 758.) (See 88 Harv. L. Rev. 1510; 8 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 339; 9 Southwestern L. Rev. 785.)

[§ 647] Illustrations.

(1) Cases Holding Statutes Invalid. The following are examples of statutes found defective under the standard laid down in the Sniadach line of cases (supra, §646):

The statutory requirement of a bond on appeal from a judgment of the small claims court was held invalid in Brooks v. Small Claims Court (1973) 8 C.3d 661, 105 C.R. 785, 504 P.2d 1249. The opinion points out that the small claims court was being used largely by institutional creditors with highly developed skills in processing claims, and that the ordinary debtor, without the right to counsel until appeal, was at a decided disadvantage. (8 C.3d 669.) Thus, the requirement of an undertaking on appeal "constitutes a taking of property prior to a due process hearing with right to counsel." (8 C.3d 667.) (See 62 Cal. L. Rev. 421.)

In Adams v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1974) 11 C.3d 146, 113 C.R. 145, 520 P.2d 961, the garageman's lien statute was held invalid to the extent that it provided for sale without adequate notice. The court found state action notwithstanding the fact that no state officers or court processes were involved. The vehicle service lien and enforcement procedures are created and governed by statute, the procedure is administered by the Department of Motor Vehicles, and the transfer of title to a lien sale buyer is recorded by the department. Due process was violated by the short notice provisions--30 days for a car worth over $ 500, 20 days if worth less than that--and by the short periods of redemption. (11 C.3d 155, 156, 157.) (For amendments designed to cure the constitutional defects, see 13 Summary (10th), Personal Property, §237; and see Martin v. Heady (1980) 103 C.A.3d 580, 587, 589, 163 C.R. 117 [involuntary lien sale procedures in aircraft lien law held invalid under Adams]; 26 Hastings L. J. 383 [due process in consumer protection: repossession and adhesion contracts]; 6 Pacific L. J. 98 [Adams case]; 14 Santa Clara Lawyer 659 [State Action in Self-Help Automobile Repossession].)

(2) Cases Holding Statutes Valid. The following are examples of statutes that meet the Sniadach standard:

Forcible entry and wrongful detainer statutes, with provisions for speedy trial and restriction of the issues to rent and performance of the covenants of the lease, are valid. The short period is not oppressive where the tenant is given a proper hearing, and limitation of the issues in the summary proceeding does not impair the tenant's right to bring an action and litigate a claim for damages or other relief. (Lindsey v. Normet (1972) 405 U.S. 56, 92 S.Ct. 862, 869, 31

L.Ed.2d 36, 45 [Oregon statute].)

Levy of execution without a hearing is proper despite the existence of exempt property; i.e., the debtor can constitutionally be required to make an affirmative claim of exemption. (Phillips v. Bartolomie (1975) 46 C.A.3d 346, 350, 121 C.R. 56, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §162; Taylor v. Madigan (1975) 53 C.A.3d 943, 963, 126 C.R. 376, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §221.) (See Wyshak v. Wyshak (1977) 70 C.A.3d 384, 388, 394, 138 C.R. 811 [execution of judgments providing for installment support payments are valid].)

The statutory procedure for recordation of a mechanic's lien and bonded stop notice is constitutional. (Connolly Dev. v. Superior Court (1976) 17 C.3d 803, 827, 132 C.R. 477, 553 P.2d 637, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §215; see 65 Cal. L. Rev. 513.)

A statute that requires an affirmative demand for a hearing is valid. In People v. Surety Ins. Co. (1978) 82 C.A.3d 229, 147 C.R. 65, the lower court ordered forfeiture of bail when the defendant was not surrendered after conviction. Appellant insurer contended that P.C. 1305 (see 4 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Pretrial Proceedings, §103) is unconstitutional in providing for a declaration of forfeiture without notice and hearing. Held, the statute is valid. The mere declaration did not deprive appellant of any substantial right; and the resulting judgment could be entered only after expiration of a 180-day period during which appellant had notice and an opportunity for a hearing. (82 C.A.3d 238.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW
E. Procedural Due Process in Judicial Proceedings.
5. Indigent's Access to Courts.
a. Indigent Plaintiffs.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 648

[§ 648] Indigent Plaintiffs.

The principles of due process in judicial proceedings were developed in connection with the rights of defendants brought into court by plaintiffs. (See supra, §426 et seq.) But due process may also be involved where a plaintiff can only assert a claim or settle a dispute in a judicial proceeding. The plaintiff must have access to the judicial forum, and if, by reason of indigency, he or she cannot pay court fees or costs, imposition of these charges may effectively deny this access.

No decision has yet established a right of all indigents in all circumstances to litigate without payment of fees and costs. But in Boddie v. Connecticut (1971) 401 U.S. 371, 91 S.Ct. 780, 28 L.Ed.2d 113, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §391, the court held that the right does exist in actions for divorce. "[A] state may not, consistent with the obligations imposed on it by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, preempt the right to dissolve this legal relationship without affording all citizens access to the means it has prescribed for doing so." (91 S.Ct. 789, 28 L.Ed.2d 122.) (See Earls v. Superior Court (1971) 6 C.3d 109, 113, 98 C.R. 302, 490 P.2d 814; Cohen v. Board of Supervisors (1971) 20 C.A.3d 236, 239, 97 C.R. 550 [plaintiff was not entitled to county payment of cost of service by publication on spouse who could not be personally served, because alternative methods of service, e.g., mailing, were available]; 52 A.L.R.3d 844 [marital actions]; 3 Rotunda, §17.10; 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §§391, 403.)

The narrow scope of the Boddie rule is emphasized in two later decisions:

(1) A person seeking a discharge in bankruptcy may not claim exemption from fees; i.e., the interest he or she asserts is not of the same constitutional level as that of a person seeking to dissolve a marriage. (United States v. Kras (1973) 409 U.S. 434, 93 S.Ct. 631, 34 L.Ed.2d 626, infra, §804.)

(2) A recipient of welfare relief whose benefits are affected by an adverse administrative decision is not entitled to judicial review without payment of fees. Due process requires a pretermination evidentiary hearing under the rule of Goldberg v. Kelly (1970) 397 U.S. 254, 90 S.Ct. 1011, 25 L.Ed.2d 287, infra, §685, but the interest of the welfare recipient in judicial review of the administrative determination is not greater than that of the person seeking a bankruptcy discharge. (Ortwein v. Schwab (1973) 410 U.S. 656, 93 S.Ct. 1172, 1174, 35 L.Ed.2d 572, 575.)

5. Indigent's Access to Courts.
b. Indigent Defendants.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 649

[§ 649] Indigent Defendants.

In Little v. Streater (1981) 452 U.S. 1, 101 S.Ct. 2202, 68 L.Ed.2d 627, a Connecticut statute provided that in paternity actions the cost of blood grouping tests must be borne by the party requesting them. Appellant, an indigent state prisoner, was the defendant in a paternity suit brought by a mother who was receiving public assistance for the child. His motion for an order directing blood grouping tests on the mother and child at state expense was denied, and the trial judge found that he was the father and ordered payments of child support. Held, judgment reversed.

(a) The standards governing appellant's due process claim are those set forth in Boddie v. Connecticut (1971) 401 U.S. 371, 91 S.Ct. 780, 28 L.Ed.2d 113, supra, §648, and Mathews v. Eldridge (1976) 424 U.S. 319, 96 S.Ct. 893, 47 L.Ed.2d 18, infra, §687. (101 S.Ct. 2205, 2209, 2210, 68 L.Ed.2d 632, 638, 639.)

(b) Under the Connecticut statute, the mother may rely on the prima facie case of her accusation, and the burden is on the reputed father to show his innocence by evidence other than his own testimony. "Without aid in obtaining blood test evidence in a paternity case, an indigent defendant, who faces the State as an adversary when the child is a recipient of public assistance and who must overcome the evidentiary burden Connecticut imposes, lacks 'a meaningful opportunity to be heard.' " (101 S.Ct. 2210, 68 L.Ed.2d 638.)

There is no general constitutional right to appointment of counsel in a civil action. (See 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §74.) The United States Supreme Court has recognized an indigent's right to appointed counsel only where the indigent may lose physical liberty if he or she loses the litigation; "[i]t is against this presumption that all the other elements in the due process decision must be measured." (Lassiter v. Department of Social Services of Durham County, North Carolina (1981) 452 U.S. 18, 101 S.Ct. 2153, 2159, 68 L.Ed.2d 640, 649 [no constitutional right to appointment of counsel for indigent parents in a proceeding to terminate parental rights]; see Iraheta v. Superior Court (1999) 70 C.A.4th 1500, 1511, 1514, 83 C.R.2d 471 [following Lassiter; no right to appointment of counsel in civil action for injunction to abate conduct of criminal street gangs as public nuisance; possibility of future imprisonment for violation of injunction was not determinative]; 95 Harv. L. Rev. 132 [Little and Lassiter]; 15 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 1123 [Lassiter]; on appointment of counsel for indigent criminal defendants, see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §170 et seq.)

However, an indigent prisoner who is named as a defendant in a civil action is entitled to appointed counsel when the prisoner is "confronted with a bona fide legal action threatening" his or her interests and "no other relief will preserve" his or her right of access to the courts. (Payne v. Superior Court (1976) 17 C.3d 908, 924, 132 C.R. 405, 553 P.2d 565, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §75; see Yarbrough v. Superior Court (1985) 39 C.3d 197, 216 C.R. 425, 702 P.2d 583, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §78.)

There is no constitutional right to appointment of an interpreter for an indigent civil defendant unable to speak or understand English. (Jara v. Municipal Court (1978) 21 C.3d 181, 186, 145 C.R. 847, 578 P.2d 94, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §396.)

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

E. Procedural Due Process in Judicial Proceedings.

6. Hearing on Child Custody.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 650

[§ 650] Hearing on Child Custody.

In Stanley v. Illinois (1972) 405 U.S. 645, 92 S.Ct. 1208, 31 L.Ed.2d 551, petitioner lived with a woman for 18 years and had three illegitimate children. On her death, the Illinois court declared the children wards of the court and placed them under guardianship, without any hearing or consideration of petitioner's fitness for custody. This was in compliance with Illinois law, which required notice and hearing and proof of unfitness before a child could be taken from a married parent, but presumed that an unmarried father was unfit. Held, the presumption was a denial of due process. Although the state may be correct in asserting that most unmarried fathers are unsuitable and neglectful parents, not all are unfit. If petitioner is a fit parent, the goals of the state law are not achieved by separating him from his children. (92 S.Ct. 1213, 1214, 31 L.Ed.2d 559.) The convenience of the procedure by presumption rather than proof cannot justify refusal of a hearing to a father on the substantial interest in custody of his children. (92 S.Ct. 1215, 31 L.Ed.2d 561.) (For equal protection issue, see infra, §775; for California cases applying Stanley, see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §61 et seq.)

In Quilloin v. Walcott (1978) 434 U.S. 246, 98 S.Ct. 549, 54 L.Ed.2d 511, a Georgia statute denied the authority of an unwed natural father to prevent adoption of an illegitimate child; i.e., the consent of the mother with custody was sufficient where the father had failed to legitimate the child. In this case, the father had not petitioned for legitimation during the 11-year period between the child's birth and filing of the adoption petition, and had never sought custody or contributed to the child's support; but he contended that an adoption decree could not be rendered without a finding that he was unfit. The lower court denied his petition for legitimation and granted the petition for adoption. Thus, the issue was not denial of a hearing, for a full hearing had been given on his legitimation petition. The issue was one not covered by Stanley: whether, under the circumstances (the father's failure to shoulder any significant responsibility for the child), the state could give him less veto authority than it provides to a married father. The Court held that the decree granted under those circumstances was not a denial of due process or equal protection. (98 S.Ct. 555, 54 L.Ed.2d 520.) (See 6 Hastings Const. L. Q. 83.)

Lehr v. Robertson (1983) 463 U.S. 248, 103 S.Ct. 2985, 77 L.Ed.2d 614, involved a New York statute that created a "putative father registry." A man who files with the registry demonstrates his intent to claim paternity of a child born out of wedlock, and is therefore entitled to receive notice of any proceeding to adopt the child. New York law also provided for notice to several other classes of possible fathers of children born out of wedlock (those adjudicated to be the father, those identified as the father on the birth certificate, those who live openly with the child and mother and hold themselves out to be the father, those identified as the father by the mother in a sworn written statement, and those who were married to the mother before the child was 6 months old). Plaintiff did not register and was not in any of the designated classes, he had never provided the mother or the child with any financial support, and he had never offered to marry the mother. But he challenged the New York statutory scheme on the ground that he had a constitutional right to prior notice and an opportunity to be heard before being deprived of his interest in the parent-child relationship. Held, the statute was validly applied. The extent to which a natural father's biological relationship with his illegitimate child receives protection under the Due Process Clause is determined by the principles laid down in Stanley and Quilloin, supra, and Caban v. Mohammed (1979) 441 U.S. 380, 99 S.Ct. 1760, 60 L.Ed.2d 297, infra, §776.

(a) When an unwed father demonstrates a full commitment to the responsibilities of parenthood by coming forward to participate in rearing his child, his interest in personal contact with the child acquires substantial protection under the Due Process Clause. The mere existence of a biological link does not merit equivalent constitutional protection. (103 S.Ct. 2993, 77 L.Ed.2d 627.)

(b) Plaintiff never had any significant custodial, personal, or financial relationship with the child, and did not seek to establish a legal tie until after the child was 2 years old. (103 S.Ct. 2994, 77 L.Ed.2d 627.)

Three justices dissented, contending that by filing a suit to establish paternity and notifying the adoption court of his action and interest, plaintiff effectively made himself known, and "it is the sheerest formalism to deny him a hearing because he informed the State in the wrong manner." (103 S.Ct. 3000, 77 L.Ed.2d 635.) (See 104 Harv. L. Rev. 800 [New York case on unwed fathers]; on biological father's due process right to establish paternity despite existence of presumed father, see Michael M. v. Giovanna F. (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1272, 7 C.R.2d 460, infra, §777.)

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

E. Procedural Due Process in Judicial Proceedings.

7. Commitment of Mentally Ill Person.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 651

[§ 651] In General.

The involuntary commitment of mentally ill persons raises a number of due process questions. (See 3 Rotunda, §17.9; 87 Harv. L. Rev. 1193 [Developments in the Law]; 70 Cal. L. Rev. 54 [The Case Against Involuntary Commitment of the Mentally Disordered]; 7 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 93 [Civil Commitment under California L.P.S. Act]; 22 Santa Clara L. Rev. 807 [involuntary commitments in California under L.P.S. Act]; 31 Stanf. L. Rev. 541 et seq. [symposium]; 28 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 906 [Involuntary Civil Commitment: The Inadequacy of Existing Procedural and Substantive Protections]; infra, §§653, 654; on California's involuntary commitment statute (L.P.S. Act), see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §29 et seq.; on hearing required for revocation of outpatient status of person previously acquitted of a criminal charge on an insanity plea, see In re Anderson (1977) 73 C.A.3d 38, 140 C.R. 546; 29 A.L.R.4th 394.)

In Addington v. Texas (1979) 441 U.S. 418, 99 S.Ct. 1804, 60 L.Ed.2d 323, the court examined the question of the standard of proof required to commit an individual involuntarily, for an indefinite period, to a state mental hospital.

(a) The three standards. (1) In a typical civil case involving a monetary dispute between private parties, society has a minimal concern. The burden of proof is a mere preponderance of the evidence, the litigants sharing the risk of error in roughly equal fashion. (2) In a criminal case, the interests of the defendant are such that historically and without any explicit constitutional requirement they are protected by standards designed to exclude as nearly as possible the likelihood of an erroneous judgment. The burden is to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. (3) The intermediate standard--some combination of "clear," "cogent," "unequivocal" and "convincing"--is used in civil cases involving allegations of fraud or quasi-criminal wrongdoing, or where particularly important individual interests are involved. (99 S.Ct. 1808, 60 L.Ed.2d 329.)

(b) Role of jury. "[E]fforts to analyze what lay jurors understand concerning the differences among these three tests or the nuances of a judge's instructions on the law may well be largely an academic exercise. ... We probably can assume no more than that the difference between a preponderance of the evidence and proof beyond a reasonable doubt probably is better understood than either of them in relation to the intermediate standard of clear and convincing evidence." (99 S.Ct. 1808, 60 L.Ed.2d 330.) Nevertheless, in cases involving individual rights, whether criminal or civil, the standard reflects the value society places on individual liberty. (99 S.Ct. 1809, 60 L.Ed.2d 330.)

(c) Proper standard for civil commitment proceeding.

(1) Preponderance is not sufficient. The individual's interest is of such weight and gravity that he or she should not be asked to share equally with society the risk of error. Hence, confinement requires more substantial proof than a preponderance. (99 S.Ct. 1810, 60 L.Ed.2d 331.)

(2) Beyond reasonable doubt is not necessary. In re Winship (1970) 397 U.S. 358, 90 S.Ct. 1068, 25 L.Ed.2d 368, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §878, saw no controlling difference in loss of liberty and stigma between conviction of an adult and a delinquency adjudication of a juvenile. But a civil commitment is different. It involves layers of professional review, and the concern of family and friends generally will provide continuous opportunities for correction of an erroneous commitment. (99 S.Ct. 1810, 1811, 60 L.Ed.2d 332.) Moreover, in view of the lack of certainty and fallibility of psychiatric diagnosis, there is a serious question whether a state could ever meet the burden of proof beyond a reasonable doubt that an individual is both mentally ill and likely to be dangerous. (99 S.Ct. 1811, 60 L.Ed.2d 333.) Some states have, either legislatively or judicially, adopted the criminal law standard, but due process does not require it. (99 S.Ct. 1812, 60 L.Ed.2d 334.)

(3) Clear and convincing evidence is required. This middle level, adopted in various forms by 25 states, strikes a fair balance between the rights of the individual and the legitimate concerns of the state, and is required to meet the due process guarantee. (99 S.Ct. 1812, 1813, 60 L.Ed.2d 334, 335.) The additional term "unequivocal"--calling for proof that admits of no doubt, and approximating the burden in criminal cases--was held necessary in deportation and denaturalization cases (see supra, §§194, 476), where the issues were susceptible of objective proof and the consequences to the individual were unusually drastic. This is not a constitutional requirement for civil commitment cases. (99 S.Ct. 1812, 1813, 60 L.Ed.2d 335.)

[§ 652] Defendant Not Guilty by Reason of Insanity.

In Foucha v. Louisiana (1992) 504 U.S. 71, 112 S.Ct. 1780, 118 L.Ed.2d 437, the Louisiana commitment scheme allowed a person acquitted by reason of insanity to be committed to a mental institution until he was able to demonstrate that he was not dangerous to himself and others, even though he did not suffer from any mental illness. Held, this procedure violates due process. "[T]he State must establish insanity and dangerousness by clear and convincing evidence in order to confine an insane convict beyond his criminal sentence, when the basis for his original confinement no longer exists." (112 S.Ct. 1788, 118 L.Ed.2d 452.)

Two justices joined in one dissenting opinion (112 S.Ct. 1791, 118 L.Ed.2d 455), and three justices joined in another (112 S.Ct. 1797, 118 L.Ed.2d 463). (See *People v. X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

E. Procedural Due Process in Judicial Proceedings.

7. Commitment of Mentally Ill Person.

c. Minor.

1. California Decisions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 653

[§ 653] California Decisions.

In re Roger S. (1977) 19 C.3d 921, 141 C.R. 298, 569 P.2d 1286, explored the right of a minor of 14 years or more to procedural due process when committed to a state hospital on application of his or her parent or guardian, and held the existing procedure constitutionally defective.

(a) Liberty interest of minor. Personal liberty, with its principal ingredient of freedom from bodily restraint, is a fundamental interest protected by the California and United States Constitutions. (19 C.3d 927.) But the liberty interest of a minor is not coextensive with that of an adult, for the parent's own liberty includes the right to direct the upbringing of children. (19 C.3d 928; see Wisconsin v. Yoder (1972) 406 U.S. 205, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 32 L.Ed.2d 15, supra, §519.) When the state itself initiates action to deprive the minor of liberty, he or she is clearly entitled to due process. The question presented by this case, however, is what rights the minor has when a parent initiates the action. (19 C.3d 928.)

(b) Limits of parental power. The parent does not have the unrestricted power to place a child in a state operated mental hospital, thereby waiving the due process rights that the child would have if the state sought the commitment.

(1) The situation is different from that involving hospitalization for treatment of a physical condition. There is physical restraint, injury to reputation, and the greater possibility of mistaken diagnosis than in cases of physical illness. "The serious consequences attendant upon involuntary commitment of a minor as a mentally ill or disordered person, and the significant potential for error in diagnosis convinces us that a minor who is mature enough to participate intelligently in the decision to independently assert his right to due process in the commitment decision must be permitted to do so." (19 C.3d 929.)

(2) Although to permit the child to assert this right does to some extent conflict with parental authority, a substantial state interest justifies it. Society has an interest in avoiding an erroneous commitment that might jeopardize the health or safety of the child. (19 C.3d 930.)

(3) Recognition of the right does not impermissibly impinge on the parent's right of control, for neither the state nor the parent has an interest in unnecessary curtailment of the child's freedom. (19 C.3d 930.)

(4) Recognition of the child's right would not necessarily weaken the family unit; it is the minor who wishes to return, and the parent who would remove him. (19 C.3d 930.)

(c) No denial of equal protection. The contention of the minor that equal protection demands that he receive all of the substantive and procedural rights extended to adults by the L.P.S. Act (see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §29 et seq.) and to juvenile court wards (see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §949) cannot be accepted. The liberty interest of a minor is qualitatively different from that of an adult, being subject to greater state regulation and even greater control by his or her parents; hence minors are not similarly situated with adults for purposes of equal protection analysis. (19 C.3d 934.)

(d) Requirements of due process. The procedures required by the L.P.S. Act are not mandated by due process. But procedures must be followed that will ensure the child a fair opportunity to establish that he is not mentally ill or disordered, or that, even if he is, confinement in a state mental hospital is unnecessary to protect him or others and might harm rather than improve his condition. (19 C.3d 935.) The present screening procedure does not offer an adequate forum in which to resolve either the disputed questions of fact or conflicting medical opinions. (19 C.3d 936.)

(1) In view of the drastic invasion of the minor's right to personal liberty, and the potential damage that may accompany an erroneous placement, there must be an opportunity for "a precommitment hearing before a neutral factfinder." Postadmission procedures are inadequate. (19 C.3d 937.)

(2) "[A]t a minimum, due process requires that the person receive a hearing after adequate written notice of the basis for the proposed action; an opportunity to appear in person and to present evidence in his own behalf; the right to confrontation by, and the opportunity to cross-examine, adverse witnesses; a neutral and detached decision maker; findings by a preponderance of the evidence; and a record of the proceeding adequate to permit meaningful judicial or appellate review." (19 C.3d 937.) Because the minor may be presumed to lack the ability to produce and present evidence or to discover and propose alternative treatment, "due process also requires that counsel be provided for the minor." (19 C.3d 938.) (See 19 C.3d 938, footnote 10, pointing out that the minor may waive any of these rights, providing that he is aware of the consequences and does so voluntarily and intelligently; and noting the suggestion of a commentator that a certificate of counsel should accompany the waiver.)

(3) The minor is not entitled to either a jury trial or a judicial hearing. A judicial hearing is required when the state seeks to deprive an adult of his or her liberty by commitment to a mental hospital; but when a parent, who has the right and obligation to control the child's personal liberty, takes this action, an administrative hearing may be adequate. (19 C.3d 939.)

(4) The evidentiary requirement of proof beyond a reasonable doubt does not apply; the lesser standard of proof by a preponderance of evidence will satisfy due process in these hearings. (19 C.3d 939.)

(e) Rights of minors previously committed. Minors already committed under Welf.C. 6000 are not entitled to release, but are entitled to a hearing, on request, on the propriety of their continued confinement. (19 C.3d 939, 940.) They may accordingly seek relief by habeas corpus in the superior court; and on a petition stating a prima facie case an order to show cause should issue and a hearing should be held. (19 C.3d 940.)

The court expressly refrained from considering (1) the validity of the procedure as applied to children under 14 (19 C.3d 927, footnote 3, 931); (2) whether parents may compel minors of 14 or over to submit to medical and/or psychiatric treatment in a closed private facility or on an outpatient basis (19 C.3d 927, footnote 3). (See 66 Cal. L. Rev. 344; 70 Cal. L. Rev. 373 [impact of Roger S. on California mental health system]; 48 Hastings L. J. 1137 [protecting children from involuntary civil commitment because of their sexual orientation]; 17 U.S.F. L. Rev. 797 [due process issues in mental health treatment commitment of minors].)

"Counsel," as required by Roger S. (19 C.3d 938), means an attorney; a local court rule permitting appointment of a nonlawyer "advisor" is invalid. (In re Antoine C. (1986) 186 C.A.3d 424, 427, 230 C.R. 738.)

7. Commitment of Mentally Ill Person.

2. United States Supreme Court Decisions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 654

[§ 654] United States Supreme Court Decisions.

In Parham v. J.R. (1979) 442 U.S. 584, 99 S.Ct. 2493, 61 L.Ed.2d 101, involving a Georgia statute, the court made a definitive ruling on the issue of what process is constitutionally due a minor child whose parent or guardian seeks state administered mental health care for the child. In upholding the validity of the statute, the court applied the criteria of Mathews v. Eldridge (1976) 424 U.S. 319, 96 S.Ct. 893, 47 L.Ed.2d 18, infra, §687, as follows:

(a) Interest of the child. The child has a substantial liberty interest in not being confined unnecessarily and not being labeled erroneously as mentally ill. (99 S.Ct. 2503, 61 L.Ed.2d 118.)

(b) Interests of the parents. The cases have always recognized the broad parental authority over minor children; and this includes the duty to seek and follow medical advice. There are limits, however, as in the holding of Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth (1976) 428 U.S. 52, 96 S.Ct. 2831, 49 L.Ed.2d 788, supra, §563, that an absolute veto over a child's decision to have an abortion is unconstitutional. But this does not mean that the power to make these decisions should be transferred from the parents to an agency or officer of the state. (99 S.Ct. 2504, 2505, 61 L.Ed.2d 119, 120.) "In defining the respective rights and prerogatives of the child and parent in the voluntary commitment setting, we conclude that our precedents permit the parents to retain a substantial, if not the dominant, role in the decision, absent a finding of neglect or abuse, and that the traditional presumption that the parents act in the best interests of their child should apply." However, "parents cannot always have absolute and unreviewable discretion to decide whether to have a child institutionalized. They, of course, retain plenary authority to seek such care for their children, subject to a physician's independent examination and medical judgment." (99 S.Ct. 2505, 61 L.Ed.2d 120.)

(c) Interest of the state. The state has a significant interest in confining the use of its costly mental health facilities to cases of genuine need, and in not imposing unnecessary procedural obstacles that may discourage the mentally ill or their families from seeking needed psychiatric assistance. (99 S.Ct. 2505, 61 L.Ed.2d 120.) It also has an interest in allocating priority to the diagnosis and treatment of patients as soon as they are admitted to a hospital rather than to time-consuming "procedural minuets" before the admission, and in utilization of the time of psychiatrists, psychologists, and other behavioral specialists in patient care rather than in preparation for and participation in hearings. (99 S.Ct. 2506, 61 L.Ed.2d 120.)

(d) Due process is satisfied if inquiry is made by neutral factfinder. "[T]he risk of error inherent in the parental decision to have a child institutionalized for mental health care is sufficiently great that some kind of inquiry should be made by a 'neutral factfinder' to determine whether the statutory requirements for admission are satisfied That inquiry must carefully probe the child's background using all available sources, including, but not limited to, parents, schools and other social agencies. Of course, the review must also include an interview with the child. It is necessary that the decisionmaker have the authority to refuse to admit any child who does not satisfy the medical standards for admission. Finally, it is necessary that the child's continuing need for commitment be reviewed periodically by a similarly independent procedure." (99 S.Ct. 2506, 61 L.Ed.2d 121.)

(e) Formal hearing is not required. (1) Due process does not require that the neutral trier of fact be law-trained or a judicial or administrative officer; a staff physician will suffice. (2) It is not necessary that the deciding physician conduct a formal or quasi-formal hearing; informal traditional medical investigative techniques will suffice. The questions are essentially medical in character. (99 S.Ct. 2507, 61 L.Ed.2d 123.) Moreover, a formalized hearing may be a significant intrusion into the parent-child relationship, and there is a serious risk that an adversarial confrontation will adversely affect the ability of the parents to assist the child while in the hospital and to facilitate his return home. (99 S.Ct. 2508, 61 L.Ed.2d 124.)

(f) Commitment of ward calls for same rule. Although there are differences between a request for admission to a state mental hospital made by the child's parents and one made by the state on behalf of a ward, the differences do not justify requiring different procedures for admission. The state agency having custody of the child has a duty to consider its best interests, and "the State may constitutionally allow that custodial agency to speak for the child, subject, of course, to the restrictions governing natural parents." (99 S.Ct. 2512, 61 L.Ed.2d 129.) It is possible, however, that procedures required in reviewing a ward's need for continuing care should be different. (99 S.Ct. 2512, 61 L.Ed.2d 129.)

One justice concurred, and three justices joined in a concurring and dissenting opinion, chiefly asserting that the Georgia statute was unconstitutional in failing to accord precommitment hearings to juvenile wards. (99 S.Ct. 2513, 2515, 61 L.Ed.2d 130, 133.) (See Secretary of Public Welfare of Pennsylvania v. Institutionalized Juveniles (1979) 442 U.S. 640, 99 S.Ct. 2523, 2526, 2528, 61 L.Ed.2d 142, 148, 151 [Pennsylvania's procedures met Parham test and satisfied due process]; 93 Harv. L. Rev. 89 [Parham]; 7 Hastings Const. L. Q. 387 [same]; 32 Hastings L. J. 1285 [same]; 48 Hastings L. J. 1137 [protecting children from involuntary civil commitment because of their sexual orientation]; 31 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 929 [observations on juvenile commitment cases]; 20 Santa Clara L. 8. Treatment of Incompetent Nursing Home Patient.

[§ 655] Treatment of Incompetent Nursing Home Patient.

In Rains v. Belshe' (1995) 32 C.A.4th 157, 38 C.R.2d 185, the constitutionality of Health & Saf.C. 1418.8 was at issue. The statute "allows certain incompetent patients residing in nursing homes or intermediate care facilities to receive medical treatment, after a physician has determined a patient's incapacity to give informed consent to the treatment and an interdisciplinary review team has determined such treatment is medically appropriate." (32 C.A.4th 162.) The statute was designed to deal with the need for quick, routine, and often ongoing medical care for those nursing home patients who lack the capacity to consent to the procedure in question and who do not have another person with legal authority to give that consent. (32 C.A.4th 166.) Held, the statute is constitutional.

(a) Under the analytical framework of Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 C.4th 1, 26 C.R.2d 834, 865 P.2d 633, supra, §594, although incompetent patients have a right to privacy, Health & Saf.C. 1418.8 neither invades a reasonable expectation of privacy, nor is it a serious invasion of the right to privacy. (32 C.A.4th 171, 173, 175.) Under the traditional balancing approach, an invasion of privacy is justified by a compelling state interest. (32 C.A.4th 175, 177.)

(b) Procedural due process is satisfied, even though the determination of incapacity is made by the patient's physician, by (1) the presumption that physicians will act ethically; (2) a clear standard and method, including an interview with the patient, to guide the physician in making the determination; (3) the review of the decision by a patient's representative in most, if not all, cases; (4) the right to have the decision judicially reviewed; and (5) the applicability of relevant state and federal standards. (32 C.A.4th 178, 186, 187, citing Washington v. Harper (1990) 494 U.S. 210, 110 S.Ct. 1028, 108 L.Ed.2d 178.)

1. Right to Notice and Hearing.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 657

[§ 657] In General.

(1) In General. Procedural due process does not require a trial before a court. A proceeding before an administrative officer or board is adequate if the basic requirements of notice and opportunity for hearing are met. (See Ohio Bell Tel. Co. v. Public Util. Com. of Ohio (1937) 301 U.S. 292, 304, 57 S.Ct. 724, 730, 81 L.Ed. 1093, 1101 [it is necessary that "the 'inexorable safeguard' ... of a fair and open hearing be maintained in its integrity. ... The right to such a hearing is one of 'the rudiments of fair play' ... assured to every litigant by the Fourteenth Amendment as a minimal requirement"]; Rosenblit v. Superior Court (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1434, 1444, 282 C.R. 819, infra, §659; Beck Dev. Co. v. Southern Pac. Trans. Co. (1996) 44 C.A.4th 1160, 1188, 1189, 52 C.R.2d 518 [determination by Department of Toxic Substances Control that land is hazardous waste property is quasi-judicial in nature and requires notice and hearing comporting with due process standards]; Burt v. Orange (2004) 120 C.A.4th 273, 285, 15 C.R.3d 373 [trial court erred in denying plaintiff's petition for hearing on county's decision to file suspected child abuse report on her; plaintiff asserted sufficient claim for familial and informational privacy, and Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act impliedly recognizes that suspected child abuser has right to present timely challenge to filed report and must be given reasonable opportunity to rebut charge]; supra, §638 et seq.; 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §967; 2 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Administrative Law §294 et seq.)

(2) Texts and Commentary. The legal literature on due process in administrative proceedings is extensive. X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

1. Right to Notice and Hearing.

b. Adequate Notice and Hearing.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 658

[§ 658] Adequate Notice and Hearing.

(1) In General. The sufficiency of the notice and hearing is determined by considering the purpose of the procedure, its effect on the rights asserted, and other circumstances. (Anderson Nat. Bank v. Lueckett (1944) 321 U.S. 233, 64 S.Ct. 599, 606, 88 L.Ed. 692, 705 ["fundamental requirement of due process is an opportunity to be heard upon such notice and proceedings as are adequate to safeguard the right for which the constitutional protection is invoked"]; Blinder, Robinson & Co. v. Tom (1986) 181 C.A.3d 283, 289, 226 C.R. 339, quoting the text; California Teachers Assn. v. Butte Community College Dist. Bd. of Trustees (1996) 48 C.A.4th 1293, 1302, 56 C.R.2d 269 [community college district's layoff of instructor was valid, even though initial determination to terminate was made without required hearing, where proper hearing, at which matter was considered de novo, was held before district made its final decision].)

(2) Required Statutory Provision for Notice and Hearing. It has been held that the statute itself must provide for notice and hearing, and that the absence thereof is not cured by extraofficial or casual notice, or a hearing granted as a matter of discretion. (Coe v. Armour Fertilizer Works (1915) 237 U.S. 413, 35 S.Ct. 625, 629, 59 L.Ed. 1027, 1032; H. Moffat Co. v. Hecke (1924) 68 C.A. 35, 39, 228 P. 546.) This rule may, however, be satisfied by construing general statutory language to require notice and hearing, despite the absence of an express provision. (See Aylward v. State Bd. of Chiropractic Examiners (1948) 31 C.2d 833, 838, 192 P.2d 929; Bess v. Park (1956) 144 C.A.2d 798, 802, 301 P.2d 978 [provision that administrative officer "shall hear and determine" controversy implies that both parties will be given reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing].)

(3) Kinds of Notice. Under proper circumstances, various kinds of notice have been upheld; e.g., mail or posting. (See Anderson Nat. Bank v. Lueckett, supra [posting]; Simpson v. Los Angeles (1953) 40 C.2d 271, 280, 253 P.2d 464 [5-day notice before disposition of unclaimed dog]; Bess v. Park (1956) 144 C.A.2d 798, 804, 301 P.2d 978 [notice by ordinary mail to address of licensed business].)

In Atkins v. Parker (1985) 472 U.S. 115, 105 S.Ct. 2520, 86 L.Ed.2d 81, the Massachusetts Department of Public Welfare mailed a notice to over 16,000 food stamp recipients informing them in general terms of a change in federal law that might result in either a reduction or a termination of their benefits. The district court and Court of Appeals decided that the notice was defective in failing to advise each household of the precise change in benefits or to provide each with the information necessary to calculate the change. Held, reversed. "Surely Congress can presume that such a notice relative to a matter as important as a change in a household's food-stamp allotment would prompt an appropriate inquiry if it is not fully understood." (105 S.Ct. 2531, 86 L.Ed.2d 94.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(3) Kinds of Notice. Due process is satisfied by actual notice. (Benson v. California Coastal Com. (2006) 139 C.A.4th 348, 353, 42 C.R.3d 580 [landowner who failed to appear after receiving written notice of hearing was not entitled to rely on conversations with staff of Coastal Commission predicting what action commission might take and regarding landowner's need to attend hearing].)

See California School Employees Assn. v. Livingston Union School Dist. (2007) 149 C.A.4th 391, 400, 56 C.R.3d 923 [disciplinary notice to school district employee, who was off for summer break, giving him 5 days' notice from date of mailed service to request hearing, did not satisfy due process].

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

1. Right to Notice and Hearing.
- c. Illustrations of Inadequate Procedure.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 659

[§ 659] Illustrations of Inadequate Procedure.

Proceedings that wholly deny notice or hearing, or provide inadequate methods, are lacking in due process. (See Morgan v. United States (1938) 298 U.S. 468, 56 S.Ct. 906, 80 L.Ed. 1288; Morgan v. United States (1936) 304 U.S. 1, 58 S.Ct. 773, 82 L.Ed. 1129; Kwong Hai Chew v. Colding (1953) 344 U.S. 590, 73 S.Ct. 472, 97 L.Ed. 576, supra, §476 [expulsion of resident alien without hearing]; Trans-Oceanic Oil Corp. v. Santa Barbara (1948) 85 C.A.2d 776, 797, 194 P.2d 148 [revocation by city council of permit to drill for oil, without notice or hearing]; Andrews v. State Bd. of Registration for Civil & Professional Engineers (1954) 123 C.A.2d 685, 695, 267 P.2d 352 [denial of application for registration as electrical engineer without hearing]; Merco Const. Engineers v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. of Los Angeles (1969) 274 C.A.2d 154, 168, 79 C.R. 23 [statutory penalty on prime contractor for failure to list proposed subcontractors in bid, imposed by simple billing or deducting without notice]; In re Roger S. (1977) 19 C.3d 921, 939, 141 C.R. 298, 569 P.2d 1286, supra, §653 [hearing required for involuntary commitment of minor initiated by parent]; Petrillo v. Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. (1988) 197 C.A.3d 798, 807, 808, 243 C.R. 74 [termination of disability retirement benefits].)

In Wisconsin v. Constantineau (1971) 400 U.S. 433, 91 S.Ct. 507, 27 L.Ed.2d 515, a 40-year-old Wisconsin statute authorized various local officials to publicly post a written notice prohibiting the sale or gift of liquor to a person whose bad drinking habits put his or her family in want, or made the person dangerous to the peace, etc. The chief of police of Hartford published a notice forbidding sales to Mrs. C., an adult resident, for 1 year. She sued in the federal district court, and a three-judge court held the law unconstitutional. Held, affirmed. The posting was a degrading label, and where a person's good name is at stake, notice and an opportunity for hearing are essential. This Act contained no provision for either. (91 S.Ct. 510, 27 L.Ed.2d 518.)

In Vlandis v. Kline (1973) 412 U.S. 441, 93 S.Ct. 2230, 37 L.Ed.2d 63, Connecticut imposed higher tuition and fees for nonresident university students than for resident students. The classification was not challenged (see infra, §742), but two students, claiming to be bona fide residents, attacked the statutory provision creating a conclusive presumption of nonresident status, for the entire period of attendance, if the applicant was living outside the state at the time of application. Held, the presumption operated to deny due process. Conclusive presumptions were disfavored in Bell v. Burson (1971) 402 U.S. 535, 91 S.Ct. 1586, 29 L.Ed.2d 90, infra, §662, and Stanley v. Illinois (1972) 405 U.S. 645, 92 S.Ct. 1208, 31 L.Ed.2d 551, supra, §650. Here, the state has "reasonable alternative means of making the crucial determination," and due process requires "that the State allow such an individual the opportunity to present evidence showing that he is a bona fide resident entitled to the in-state rates." (93 S.Ct. 2236, 37 L.Ed.2d 71.) (See United States Dept. of Agriculture v. Murry (1973) 413 U.S. 508, 93 S.Ct. 2832, 2835, 37 L.Ed.2d 767, 773 [Vlandis followed, conclusive presumption in Federal Food Stamp Act invalidated]; Atkisson v. Kern County Housing Authority (1976) 59 C.A.3d 89, 96, 130 C.R. 375, infra, §785 [following Vlandis and Murry]; 87 Harv. L. Rev. 67 [Vlandis].)

In People v. Lockheed Shipbuilding & Const. Co. (1973) 35 C.A.3d 776, 111 C.R. 106, former Lab.C. 6313 provided that the Division of Industrial Safety may investigate the cause of all industrial injuries resulting in disability or death, and make "just and reasonable" orders or recommendations with respect to the cause; and former Lab.C. 6315 made violation of any of these orders or recommendations a misdemeanor. A misdemeanor complaint was filed against defendant corporation and certain individuals, charging violations of five orders. Held, Lab.C. 6315, as applied to orders made under Lab.C. 6313, is unconstitutional.

(a) The provision for investigations and recommendations is by itself valid. But when coupled with the criminal sanction, it is violative of due process. Neither notice nor an opportunity for hearing is afforded before the penalty is imposed, and the statute itself must provide for both where the proceeding is quasi-judicial. (35 C.A.3d 780, 781, quoting the text.)

(b) The constitutional requirement does not apply to quasi-legislative action (see infra, §674), but the orders made under Lab.C. 6313 are quasi-judicial. They do not affect classes of employers or places of employment, but are directed to a specific employer after an accident. (35 C.A.3d 781.)

(c) The summary action exception (see infra, §678) cannot justify the statute; it does not provide for any hearing, either before or after the supposed emergency, and provision for a hearing at some stage is essential. (35 C.A.3d 781, quoting the text.)

(d) The statutes were invalid as arbitrary special legislation, conferring on an administrative agency authority "to make law in individual cases, involving an individual employer, without a hearing and solely on its untrammelled opinion as to the wisdom of such a rule." (35 C.A.3d 785.)

In Kash Enterprises v. Los Angeles (1977) 19 C.3d 294, 138 C.R. 53, 562 P.2d 1302, a Los Angeles municipal ordinance validly regulated the time, place, and manner of maintaining newsracks on the city's sidewalks. (See supra, §351.) It further provided, however, that a public officer could summarily remove any newsrack that he or she believed to be in violation of the regulations; that thereafter the owner would be notified of the seizure and informed that it would be deemed abandoned and destroyed unless the owner claimed it within 45 days and paid the cost of removal. Held, these provisions, which gave no hearing on the merits either before or after the seizure, constituted a denial of procedural due process. (19 C.3d 308, 309.) The court rejected the suggestion that the owner's option of instituting an action against the city after notice of seizure was sufficient to sustain a seizure procedure that afforded no hearing. (19 C.3d 309.)

In People v. Swink (1984) 150 C.A.3d 1076, 198 C.R. 290, S posted $ 5,000 cash bail to guarantee the appearance of L at a preliminary hearing. L failed to appear, the bail was forfeited, and pursuant to P.C. 1305, a notice was mailed to S stating that "bail will remain forfeited until the defendant appears." P.C. 1305 permits setting aside a forfeiture if the defendant appears within 180 days, and after that period expired, the cash bail was paid over to the county treasurer. L appeared 10 days later, and S moved to discharge the forfeiture, but the trial court denied the motion. Held, reversed. The notice sent under P.C. 1305 was a denial of procedural due process because it did not inform a lay surety of the statutory procedure and time limitations for setting aside the forfeiture. It merely referred to the declaration of forfeiture, and by failing to mention time limitations, implied that the forfeiture would be automatically discharged on appearance of the defendant. (150 C.A.3d 1081.)

In Boehm v. Merced (1985) 163 C.A.3d 447, 209 C.R. 530, the board of supervisors of defendant county reduced

general assistance grant levels for indigent county residents, and authorized a hearing to any recipient who requested it within 2 days of the date of notice of the action. Held, on a review of the case law, the 2-day limitation was a denial of due process. (163 C.A.3d 456.)

Logan v. Zimmerman Brush Co. (1982) 455 U.S. 422, 102 S.Ct. 1148, 71 L.Ed.2d 265, held that a state could not terminate a discharged employee's right to a hearing before the state's Fair Employment Practices Commission for failure to comply with a procedural requirement, where the failure was due to inaction of a state official over whom the employee had no control. The state may erect reasonable procedural requirements for triggering the right to an adjudication, e.g., statutes of limitation or filing fees; and it may terminate a claim for failure to comply with a reasonable procedural or evidentiary rule; but an opportunity for a hearing must be given at a meaningful time and in a meaningful manner, and it was denied in this case. (102 S.Ct. 1158, 1159, 71 L.Ed.2d 279.) (See 96 Harv. L. Rev. 96.)

In Rosenblit v. Superior Court (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1434, 282 C.R. 819, plaintiff doctor obtained medical staff privileges at respondent hospital in 1986, and in January 1988 a newly appointed executive committee of the hospital suspended his privileges and scheduled a hearing. The hospital gave him inadequate notice of charges, it denied him access to records, it refused to allow him representation by counsel, and it rejected his request to question members of the panel on bias. The hearing was then conducted, and the panel rendered a decision against him with no specific findings. The trial court denied his petition for mandamus. Held, reversed with directions to grant a writ compelling the hospital to afford him a fair hearing.

(a) "In evaluating whether Hospital provided Rosenblit a fair hearing, the inadequacy of the notice, the refusal to permit copying of medical records, and the vagueness of the administrative findings are inextricably related. Having reviewed the cumulative impact of the manner in which Hospital initiated its proceedings, responded to Rosenblit's repeated requests for specificity, and ultimately rendered judgment on his professional competency, we conclude the proceedings had a notable stench of unfairness." (231 C.A.3d 1445.)

(b) "The record demonstrates Hospital was dedicated to removing Rosenblit rather than providing a physician with a fair opportunity to defend his treatment regimen. Hospital resisted fair treatment at every crucial step of the proceedings. Since Rosenblit was kept in the dark about the specific charges made against him, of his asserted opportunity to obtain copies of the charts, and finally of the basis upon which the hearing panel decided the issues adversely to him, he was denied the basic right to a fair hearing. We agree with amicus that such a charade does not serve the public interest." (231 C.A.3d 1448.)

(c) The right to a fair procedure includes the right to impartial adjudicators, and fairness requires a practical method of testing impartiality. (231 C.A.3d 1448; see infra, §666.) Here, the hearing panel conducted a private voir dire; and the chairman of the appellate board and the chairman of the judicial review committee had both been treating physicians on one of the cases under scrutiny. "In circumstances such as these, an opportunity to expose potential bias is essential. Rosenblit was denied any semblance of fairness by the secret unreported voir dire conducted by the members themselves." (231 C.A.3d 1448, 1449.)

Witkin Summary of California Law

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

1. Right to Notice and Hearing.

d. Right-Privilege Distinction Repudiated.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 660

[§ 660] Right-Privilege Distinction Repudiated.

Where the private interest affected by governmental action could be characterized "as a mere privilege subject to the Executive's plenary power," it was traditionally held that there is no constitutional right to notice and hearing. (Cafeteria & Restaurant Workers Union, Local 473, AFL-CIO v. McElroy (1961) 367 U.S. 886, 81 S.Ct. 1743, 1749, 6 L.Ed.2d 1230, 1236, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §313; see State Bd. of Equalization of Calif. v. Superior Court (1935) 5 C.A.2d 374, 377, 42 P.2d 1076 [license to sell liquor]; Saso v. Furtado (1951) 104 C.A.2d 759, 763, 232 P.2d 583 [dictum].)

The right-privilege distinction has, however, been repudiated in subsequent cases, and its application appears to be confined to situations such as that presented in McElroy. "[R]elevant constitutional restraints limit state power to terminate an entitlement whether the entitlement is denominated a 'right' or a 'privilege.'" (Bell v. Burson (1971) 402 U.S. 535, 91 S.Ct. 1586, 1589, 29 L.Ed.2d 90, 94, infra, §662; see Board of Regents of State Colleges v. Roth (1972) 408 U.S. 564, 92 S.Ct. 2701, 2706, 33 L.Ed.2d 548, 557, infra, §691 [denying relief, but observing that the court "has fully and finally rejected the wooden distinction between 'rights' and 'privileges' that once seemed to govern the applicability of procedural due process rights"]; 75 Harv. L. Rev. 72, 434 [new Defense Department regulation after McElroy]; 81 Harv. L. Rev. 1439 [Demise of the Right-Privilege Distinction]; 86 Harv. L. Rev. 880 [government subsidized housing]; 35 Stanf. L. Rev. 69 [reemergence of right-privilege distinction: price of protesting too much]; 3 Rotunda, §17.2; 2 Tribe, §10-8.)

Although property interests extend beyond ownership of tangibles to specific benefits (see Board of Regents v. Roth, supra, and Goldberg v. Kelly (1970) 397 U.S. 254, 90 S.Ct. 1011, 25 L.Ed.2d 287, infra, §685), there must be a claim of entitlement to the benefit and not a mere expectancy or unilateral hope of it. (Paramount Convalescent Center v. Department of Health Care Services (1975) 15 C.3d 489, 494, 125 C.R. 265, 542 P.2d 1 [under California statutes, licensed nursing home had no property interest in annual renewal of contract].)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

1. Right to Notice and Hearing.

e. Right To Practice Profession Involved.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 661

[§ 661] Right To Practice Profession Involved.

In Endler v. Schutzbank (1968) 68 C.2d 162, 65 C.R. 297, 436 P.2d 297, plaintiff sued for declaratory and injunctive relief against defendant Commissioner of Corporations. The complaint alleged that plaintiff had been employed by financial institutions in California for nearly 15 years; that this employment was his main source of livelihood; that while he was office manager of H Finance Corporation, the Commissioner informed H that a former employer of plaintiff had charged him with forgery and embezzlement, and that unless plaintiff was discharged the Commissioner would take steps to revoke its license; that the Commissioner continued to threaten this action against any personal property broker employing plaintiff; and that the Commissioner refused to give plaintiff a formal hearing on the charges. Held, a cause of action was stated.

(a) The state, in regulating qualifications of individuals employed by licensed business establishments, must proceed within the limits of procedural due process. (68 C.2d 170.)

(b) Due process requirements are not always the same; but in Willner v. Committee on Character & Fitness (1963) 373 U.S. 96, 83 S.Ct. 1175, 10 L.Ed.2d 224, refusal of a hearing to an applicant for the bar was held to be a denial of due process because the case involved the power to regulate an entire trade or profession. Under Willner, "[p]rocedural due process requires notice, confrontation, and a full hearing whenever action by the state significantly impairs an individual's freedom to pursue a private occupation." (68 C.2d 172.)

(c) The argument that the Commissioner is not proceeding directly against plaintiff, and that his employer has free choice to hire him and face discipline, is untenable. The state bears responsibility for private conduct that it encourages (here by threats). "[A]ny person whose freedom to pursue his profession is seriously restricted by an official action or course of conduct designed to discourage his employment may compel the government to afford him a hearing complying with the traditional requirements of due process." (68 C.2d 178.)

In Slaughter v. Edwards (1970) 11 C.A.3d 285, 90 C.R. 144, plaintiffs obtained a fraud judgment against defendant, a licensed real estate broker, and filed an application in the action for an order directing payment out of the Real Estate Education and Recovery Fund, pursuant to B. & P.C. 10470 et seq. (See 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §67 et seq.) The order was made and defendant broker appealed. Held, the provision for automatic suspension of the license without a hearing was unconstitutional.

(a) Where suspension or revocation is a ministerial determination of the happening of an event, e.g., a criminal conviction, due process is satisfied by the party's day in court in the criminal proceeding. Where, however, an independent judicial or quasi-judicial determination of facts must be made, a hearing is required. (11 C.A.3d 294.)

(b) In a disciplinary proceeding under B. & P.C. 10177.5, to revoke a license after a final judgment, the licensee is guaranteed notice and hearing on the issue whether the fraud judgment was with reference to a transaction for which a license is required. The same issue is presented in an application to the Fund under B. & P.C. 10471. The determination that the claim is a proper one and therefore calls for automatic suspension of a license cannot be made in a proceeding to which the licensee was not a party. (11 C.A.3d 295.)

(c) Due process was not satisfied by the fact that defendant licensee was present at the hearing; he was called as a witness for the Commissioner, and was not a party to the proceeding. (11 C.A.3d 293, 295.) (See Rodriguez v. Department of Real Estate (1996) 51 C.A.4th 1289, 1299, 59 C.R.2d 652 [distinguishing Slaughter; subsequent statutory procedure comports with due process]; Oberholzer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1999) 20 C.4th 371, 390, 84 C.R.2d 466, 975 P.2d 663 [following Rodriguez; Commission's procedure, which gave judge right to respond before Commission issued advisory or "stinger" letter criticizing judge's performance, comported with due process; formal hearing was not required]; for subsequent amendment to B. & P.C. 10471 and 10473, providing for notice and hearing, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §68 et seq.)

In Hackethal v. California Med. Assn. (1982) 138 C.A.3d 435, 441, 187 C.R. 811, the court declared that a private organization must refrain from arbitrary action in exclusion or expulsion of a member. In Salkin v. California Dental Assn. (1986) 176 C.A.3d 1118, 224 C.R. 352, plaintiff dentist was publicly censured, and brought this action alleging denial of a fair hearing. Defendant associations contended that the due process requirement applies only to exclusion and expulsion cases. Held, the due process requirement applies to cases where the punishment is less than expulsion, including suspension and the disciplinary censure involved here. (176 C.A.3d 1123, 1124.) A private organization, "if tinged with public stature or purpose, may not expel or discipline a member adversely affecting substantial property, contract or other economic rights, except as a result of fair proceedings which may be provided for in an atmosphere of good faith and fair play." (176 C.A.3d 1125.) (See Shacket v. Osteopathic Med. Bd. of Calif. (1996) 51 C.A.4th 223, 230, 58 C.R.2d 715 [medical board was not required to provide hearing on challenge to reporting entity's status as peer review body, or on whether disciplinary suspension by peer review body had merit, before disseminating report]; 10 A.L.R.5th 1 [rights as to notice and hearing in proceedings to revoke or suspend license to practice medicine].)

In California Teachers Assn. v. California (1999) 20 C.4th 327, 338, 347, 84 C.R.2d 425, 975 P.2d 622, the court held that Educ.C. 44944(e) is facially unconstitutional. The statute requires a teacher who is threatened with suspension or dismissal to pay one-half the cost of the administrative law judge at the pretermination hearing when the teacher is ultimately suspended or dismissed. It attaches a financial burden or risk to the exercise of a hearing right that effectively denies a right to the hearing itself. The state's interest in discouraging unsuccessful hearings is not a legitimate interest, and the state's interest in recouping the costs of the adjudicator does not outweigh the competing interests at stake.

California Teachers Assn. was distinguished in Zuckerman v. State Bd. of Chiropractic Examiners (2002) 29 C.4th 32, 40, 124 C.R.2d 701, 53 P.3d 119. Zuckerman upheld a regulation providing that chiropractors found to have committed misconduct may be liable for the reasonable prehearing costs of investigation and enforcement incurred by the Board of Chiropractic Examiners. The regulation serves the proper legislative goal of reducing the Board's operating costs, and not the improper purpose of discouraging hearing requests. (29 C.4th 42.) Further, the assessment of costs is discretionary and subject to judicial review. (29 C.4th 44.)

See Gray v. Superior Court (2005) 125 C.A.4th 629, 636, 23 C.R.3d 50 [bail condition prohibiting defendant from practicing medicine, imposed on request of medical board, was constitutionally invalid; condition was imposed without prior notice, evidentiary showing, or opportunity to be heard]; Florio v. California (1999) 20 C.4th 327, 84 C.R.2d 425, 975 P.2d 622, text, p. 1072; provision in memorandum of understanding requiring public employee to bear one-half cost of hearing officer on appeal of termination was unconstitutional, and unconstitutionality could not be waived by collective bargaining agreement]; American Liberty Bail Bonds v. Garamendi (2006) 141 C.A.4th 1044, 1063, 46 C.R.3d 541, 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, Supp., §18 [distinguishing Gray v. Riverside (2008) 162 C.A.4th 492, 499, 76 C.R.3d 21 [following Florio; provision in memorandum of understanding requiring disciplined employee to pay one-half of hearing cost for administrative appeal when employee chooses to use own counsel instead of being represented by union was unconstitutional].

In Gresher v. Anderson (2005) 127 C.A.4th 88, 25 C.R.3d 408, the court held that the process of the Department of Social Services by which certain community and child care workers may be exempted from the ban on employment imposed on those with criminal convictions failed to meet due process standards. The notice merely stated that the department had "received criminal history" about them and asked for certain information, but failed to inform them about which convictions they needed to address in their exemption request. (127 C.A.4th 104.) Further, the form letter giving notice that the exemption had been denied was inadequate for failing to specify the basis for the decision in terms sufficiently specific to permit a reasonably informed decision on whether to pursue an appeal. (127 C.A.4th 112.) (See Doe v. Saenz (2006) 140 C.A.4th 960, 995, 45 C.R.3d 126 [applying Gresher analysis to nonexempt offenses].)

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

1. Right to Notice and Hearing.
- f. Suspension of Driver's License.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 662

[§ 662] Suspension of Driver's License.

In Bell v. Burson (1971) 402 U.S. 535, 91 S.Ct. 1586, 29 L.Ed.2d 90, Georgia's Motor Vehicle Safety Responsibility Act provided for suspension of the vehicle registration and driver's license of an uninsured motorist if (1) the motorist had an accident and the aggrieved parties made a report claiming damages, and (2) the motorist failed to post security to cover the amount claimed. Petitioner, a clergyman who needed his car to travel in rural communities, was involved in an accident, and the report of the allegedly injured party claimed damages of $ 5,000. At the administrative hearing, petitioner denied liability, but the issue was excluded from consideration. At the subsequent trial court review, evidence on the issue was admitted and petitioner was found free from fault. The state appellate court, however, held that liability was not involved and that the suspension was proper. Held, reversed.

(a) Denial of procedural due process. The statute did not require all motorists to carry insurance or post security; such a statute would be valid. Where, as here, the license was issued without security, and its possession was essential to pursuit of a livelihood, it could not be taken away without procedural due process, whether characterized as a "right" or a "privilege." (91 S.Ct. 1589, 29 L.Ed.2d 94.)

(b) Nature of hearing required. The administrative inquiry into fault need not take the form of a full adjudication; this can be made only in litigation between the parties involved. Because the only purpose of the statute is to obtain security or payment of a judgment resulting from the accident, the inquiry may be limited to determining "whether there is a reasonable possibility of judgments in the amounts claimed being rendered against the licensee." (91 S.Ct. 1590, 29 L.Ed.2d 95.)

(c) No-fault statute distinguished. Fault is crucial in the operation of the present statute. Several provisions indicate this; e.g., there is no suspension if the injured party executes a release or there is an adjudication of nonliability. "Since the statutory scheme makes liability an important factor in the State's determination to deprive an individual of his licenses, the State may not, consistently with due process, eliminate consideration of that factor in its prior hearing." (91 S.Ct. 1590, 29 L.Ed.2d 96.)

(d) Emergency doctrine distinguished. This is not an emergency situation that would justify suspension first and a hearing on the fault issue afterwards; hence due process requires an appropriate hearing before termination of the license. (91 S.Ct. 1591, 29 L.Ed.2d 96.)

(e) Alternative methods of making statute effective. The state may (1) give an administrative hearing on the issue; (2) postpone the suspension until after a judicial hearing or until judgment in a damage suit by the injured party; or (3) devise an entirely new regulatory scheme consistent with due process. (91 S.Ct. 1591, 29 L.Ed.2d 96.)

The California statute, as construed, imposed a duty to determine culpability, and in that respect complied with the Bell test. (See Orr v. Superior Court (1969) 71 C.2d 220, 226, 77 C.R. 816, 454 P.2d 712, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §407.) But the statute did not provide for a personal hearing prior to suspension. (The department decision was made on the basis of the written accident report.) Rios v. Cozens (1972) 7 C.3d 792, 103 C.R. 299, 499 P.2d 979, overruling Orr to the extent inconsistent, found this to be a fatal defect: "We hold that a hearing is required and that at such a hearing the licensee is entitled to review the reports or other evidence upon which the department contemplates determining that he is possibly responsible for the accident, and to present reports or testimony to establish his claim of nonculpability, all within reasonable due process procedures which the department may employ." (7 C.3d 799.)

In response to Rios, a compulsory financial responsibility law, not involving a finding of fault, was enacted. (See Veh.C. 16000 et seq., 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §408 et seq.; on notice and hearing requirements, see Veh.C. 16075, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §412.) The constitutionality of the law was upheld in Anacker v. Sillas (1976) 65 C.A.3d 416, 421, 135 C.R. 537, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Enforcement of Judgment, §408.

In Dixon v. Love (1977) 431 U.S. 105, 97 S.Ct. 1723, 52 L.Ed.2d 172, the court, applying the criteria of Mathews v. Eldridge (1976) 424 U.S. 319, 96 S.Ct. 893, 47 L.Ed.2d 18, infra, §687, upheld an Illinois statute and administrative regulations providing for an initial summary decision based on official records, with an administrative hearing available only after the suspension or revocation takes effect. "The present case is a good illustration of the fact that procedural due process in the administrative setting does not always require application of the judicial model. When a governmental official is given the power to make discretionary decisions under a broad statutory standard, case-by-case decisionmaking may not be the best way to assure fairness. Here the Secretary commendably sought to define the statutory standard narrowly by the use of his rulemaking authority. The decision to use objective rules in this case provides drivers with more precise notice of what conduct will be sanctioned and promotes equality of treatment among similarly situated drivers." (97 S.Ct. 1729, 52 L.Ed.2d 181.) (See Mackey v. Montrym (1979) 443 U.S. 1, 99 S.Ct. 2612, 2617, 2621, 61 L.Ed.2d 321 [following Dixon]; Burkhart v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1981) 124 C.A.3d 99, 108, 177 C.R. 175 [procedural due process, as defined in Mathews v. Eldridge, does not preclude use of hearsay in license suspension hearing]; Peretto v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1991) 235 C.A.3d 449, 460, 1 C.R.2d 392 [California procedure, under which administrative hearing is available on request before effective date of suspension, comports with due process]; Menge v. Reed (2000) 84 C.A.4th 1134, 1141, 101 C.R.2d 443 [following Rios; school bus driver who allegedly submitted adulterated urine specimen in random drug test was entitled to hearing before DMV, to determine whether she in fact adulterated specimen, prior to revocation of her school bus driver's certificate; failure to attend hearings before school district and state board did not constitute waiver of right to hearing before DMV]; 7 Pepperdine L. Rev. 737 [Mackey]; 60 A.L.R.3d 361 [necessity of notice and hearing]; 60 A.L.R.3d 427 [sufficiency of notice and hearing].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

2. Type of Hearing Required.

a. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 663

[§ 663] In General.

A number of cases "illustrate Professor Davis' observation that the law determining the adequacy of administrative hearings 'is mostly judge-made law ... ' and 'the standards are essentially the same whether judges are giving content to due process, whether they are giving meaning to inexplicit statutory provisions, or whether they are developing a kind of common law.' " (Roth v. Los Angeles (1975) 53 C.A.3d 679, 692, 126 C.R. 163.) (See 2 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Administrative Law §298 et seq.; Pierce, 2 Administrative Law Treatise 4th, Chaps. 9, 10; on adjudications under the Administrative Procedure Act generally, see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, §47 et seq.)

United States Supreme Court decisions emphasize the flexibility of the hearing requirement and the sufficiency of various kinds of hearing procedures. Thus, in Cafeteria & Restaurant Workers Union, Local 473, AFL-CIO v. McElroy (1961) 367 U.S. 886, 81 S.Ct. 1743, 6 L.Ed.2d 1230, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §313, the court said: "The Fifth Amendment does not require a trial-type hearing in every conceivable case of government impairment of private interest. ... The very nature of due process negates any concept of inflexible procedures universally applicable to every imaginable situation. ... [C]onsideration of what procedures due process may require under any given set of circumstances must begin with a determination of the precise nature of the government function involved as well as of the private interest that has been affected by governmental action." (81 S.Ct. 1748, 6 L.Ed.2d 1236.) (See Mathews v. Eldridge (1976) 424 U.S. 319, 96 S.Ct. 893, 903, 47 L.Ed.2d 18, 33, infra, §687.)

Hannah v. Larche (1960) 363 U.S. 420, 80 S.Ct. 1502, 4 L.Ed.2d 1307, is to similar effect: " 'Due process' is an elusive concept. Its exact boundaries are undefinable, and its content varies according to specific factual contexts. Thus, when governmental agencies adjudicate or make binding determinations which directly affect the legal rights of individuals, it is imperative that those agencies use the procedures which have traditionally been associated with the judicial process. On the other hand, when governmental action does not partake of an adjudication, as for example, when a general fact-finding investigation is being conducted, it is not necessary that the full panoply of judicial procedures be used. Therefore, as a generalization, it can be said that due process embodies the differing rules of fair play, which through the years, have become associated with differing types of proceedings. Whether the Constitution requires that a particular right obtain in a specific proceeding depends upon a complexity of factors. The nature of the alleged right involved, the nature of the proceeding, and the possible burden on that proceeding, are all considerations which must be taken into account." (80 S.Ct. 1515, 4 L.Ed.2d 1321.)

Dami v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (1959) 176 C.A.2d 144, 1 C.R. 213, makes the same point: "Due process cannot become a blunderbuss to pepper proceedings with alleged opportunities to be heard at every ancillary and preliminary stage, or the process of administration itself must halt. Due process insists upon the opportunity for a fair trial, not a multiplicity of such opportunities. Due process is not a frozen Draconian code but the concept that in some one of multifarious procedures the accused shall be afforded before judgment the right to a full hearing. The form of the procedure is not vital, only the substance of the right." (176 C.A.2d 151.)

The hearing required is only one appropriate to the nature of the case. (Smith v. Organization of Foster Families for Equality & Reform (1977) 431 U.S. 816, 97 S.Ct. 2094, 2112, 53 L.Ed.2d 14, 37 [New York statutory and administrative regulations on removal of foster child from foster homes were constitutionally adequate]; see Rosenblit v. Superior Court (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1434, 282 C.R. 819, supra, §659; Stacy & Witbeck v. San Francisco (1995) 36 C.A.4th 1074, 1087, 44 C.R.2d 472 [in proceeding by city public utilities commission to declare contractor an irresponsible bidder, hearing procedures were fair where contractor received notice of hearing and charges, advance synopsis of evidence, opportunity to present witnesses and evidence, and right to counsel]; Mohilef v. Janovici (1996) 51 C.A.4th 267, 294, 299, 58 C.R.2d 721 [due process does not mandate sworn testimony or right to cross-examine all witnesses in administrative proceedings to abate public nuisance]; E.W.A.P. v. Los Angeles (1997) 56 C.A.4th 310, 324, 65 C.R.2d 325 [following Mohilef]; Southern Calif. Underground Contractors v. San Diego (2003) 108 C.A.4th 533, 544, 133 C.R.2d 527 [contractor challenging proposed debarment from further contracts with city was afforded due process by being given timely and adequate notice of reasons for proposed debarment, and by being afforded opportunity to confront witnesses at depositions, to effectively present its position in writing, and to present arguments and evidence orally before decisionmaker].) And advance notice and a hearing are not a constitutional requisite to imposition of a small administrative service fee against a licensee. (See Escondido Imports v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1983) 145 C.A.3d 834, 838, 839, 193 C.R. 772 [applying factors set forth in Mathews v. Eldridge, supra].)

In California Radioactive Materials Management Forum v. Department of Health Services (1993) 15 C.A.4th 841, 19 C.R.2d 357, the court, construing the Radiation Control Law, made this distinction: "[T]he Legislature specifically separated proceedings for granting or amending a license from proceedings to suspend or revoke a license, and required formal adjudicatory proceedings only with respect to the latter. ... We have found no basis for implying a formal adjudicatory hearing requirement with respect to license applications and we have found no other statutory basis for the claim that a formal adjudicatory hearing is required. Accordingly, we conclude that the proposed hearings are not statutorily required." (15 C.A.4th 867.)

In Bollinger v. San Diego Civil Service Com. (1999) 71 C.A.4th 568, 84 C.R.2d 27, the court stated that where an administrative agency relegates the evidentiary hearing to one or more of its members, "the better practice would be to give the employee the opportunity to respond orally or in writing to the factual findings and recommendation before a final decision is made." (71 C.A.4th 577.) However, here, a closed session ratification of a hearing officer's findings of fact and recommendation on the employee's demotion satisfied due process. The employee "received notice of the proposed demotion and the basis therefor and had the opportunity to fully respond at a public evidentiary hearing." (71 C.A.4th 578.) Further, he "could have sought review of the substantive merits of the commission's decision in his petition for writ relief, based upon the record of the evidentiary hearing." (71 C.A.4th 578.)

Shewry* (2006) 137 C.A.4th 700, 720, 40 C.R.3d 547 [due process did not require evidentiary hearing with live testimony before pharmacist's status as Medi-Cal provider could be terminated for failure to disclose disciplinary action against him in Medi-Cal enrollment application]; *American Liberty Bail Bonds v. X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

2. Type of Hearing Required.

b. Evidence, Witnesses, and Cross-Examination.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 664

[§ 664] Evidence, Witnesses, and Cross-Examination.

No general principle can be stated as to the nature of the administrative hearing that will comply with due process, but the following rules are illustrative:

(1) Legally Competent Evidence. While the common law or statutory rules governing admissibility of evidence need not be strictly followed, legally competent evidence will ordinarily be required to sustain the determination of an administrative body. (See Consolidated Edison Co. of New York v. N.L.R.B. (1938) 305 U.S. 197, 59 S.Ct. 206, 217, 83 L.Ed. 126, 140 [board's orders cannot be justified "without a basis in evidence having rational probative force. Mere uncorroborated hearsay or rumor does not constitute substantial evidence"]; Walker v. San Gabriel (1942) 20 C.2d 879, 881, 129 P.2d 349; Armistead v. Los Angeles (1957) 152 C.A.2d 319, 324, 313 P.2d 127; Medical Bd. of Calif. v. Superior Court (2003) 111 C.A.4th 163, 178, 4 C.R.3d 403 [statute providing that physician's failure to complete diversion program successfully could result in filing of accusation for discipline, which may include acts giving rise to original diversion, did not create independent basis for discipline and did not authorize medical board to impose discipline solely on physician's failure to complete program; otherwise, medical board could evade burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence that physician's ability to practice medicine was impaired]; 11 Cal. Western L. Rev. 373 [agency misconduct in investigation as basis for suppression of evidence]; 8 Southwestern L. Rev. 577 [hearsay]; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §54 et seq.; 2 Pierce, Admin. Law 4th, Chap. 9; 2 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Administrative Law §345 et seq.; C.E.B., Administrative Hearing Practice 2d, §7.65 et seq.)

(2) Confidential Reports and Independent Information. The determination cannot be based on confidential reports or independent information received by the administrative board and not known to an aggrieved party. He or she has a right to cross-examine witnesses and produce evidence in refutation. (See Ohio Bell Tel. Co. v. Public Util. Com. of Ohio (1937) 301 U.S. 292, 57 S.Ct. 724, 81 L.Ed. 1093; Morgan v. United States (1938) 304 U.S. 1, 58 S.Ct. 773, 776, 82 L.Ed. 1129, 1132; Willner v. Committee on Character & Fitness (1963) 373 U.S. 96, 83 S.Ct. 1175, 1180, 10 L.Ed.2d 224, 229 [denial of admission to bar on ex parte statements violates due process]; Olive Proration Program Committee for Olive Proration Zone No. 1 v. Agricultural Prorate Com. (1941) 17 C.2d 204, 210, 109 P.2d 918; 76 Harv. L. Rev. 233 [regulation and control of ex parte communications with administrative agencies]; 12 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 969 [ex parte contacts with zoning board]; 18 A.L.R.2d 552 [administrative decision or finding based on evidence secured outside hearing, and without presence of interested party or counsel]; 2 A.L.R.3d 1266 [applications for admission to bar]; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §69 et seq.; 2 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Administrative Law §345 et seq.; C.E.B., Administrative Hearing Practice 2d, §7.67 et seq.; on ex parte communications under the Administrative Procedure Act, see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, §58 et seq.)

In English v. Long Beach (1950) 35 C.2d 155, 159, 217 P.2d 22, the court said: "It has been held that where there is substantial evidence, properly admitted, which supports a tribunal's determination, its order or decision will not be annulled because of errors in ruling on the admission of other evidence. ... There is considerable difference, however, between the alleged improper admission of evidence, such as hearsay, for example, and the consideration of and reliance upon information received without the knowledge of the parties and at a time and place other than that appointed for the hearing. In the former class of cases, the parties are informed of the evidence to be used against them, they may object to it, explain it, or test it and introduce countervailing evidence. None of those safeguards are available, however, when the board secretly obtains information and bases its determination thereon." (35 C.2d 159.)

(3) Privileges. The privilege against self-incrimination and other privileges of witnesses are recognized in administrative proceedings. (See Borror v. Department of Inv. (1971) 15 C.A.3d 531, 542, 92 C.R. 525; C.E.B., Administrative Hearing Practice 2d, §7.109 et seq.; 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Introduction, §74.)

While due process requires a "meaningful opportunity to be heard," it does not encompass the right to make false statements about charged misconduct. If answering an employer's investigatory question could expose the employee to criminal prosecution, the employee may exercise the constitutional right to remain silent. (LaChance v. Erickson (1998) 522 U.S. 262, 118 S.Ct. 753, 756, 139 L.Ed.2d 695, 700, 701 [federal agency could sanction employees for making false statements during agency's investigation of them for employment-related misconduct].)

(4) Discovery. Discovery in administrative proceedings is authorized by judicial decision and statute. (See 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, §85.)

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

2. Type of Hearing Required.

c. Counsel.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 665

[§ 665] Counsel.

(1) General Right to Counsel. The right to be represented by one's own counsel in administrative proceedings is unquestioned. (See Steen v. Board of Civil Service Commrs. (1945) 26 C.2d 716, 727, 160 P.2d 816; Borror v. Department of Inv. (1971) 15 C.A.3d 531, 540, 92 C.R. 525; Govt.C. 11509; 33 A.L.R.3d 229 [comment note].)

In Wood v. City Civil Service Com. (1975) 45 C.A.3d 105, 119 C.R. 175, plaintiff civil service employee was discharged, and appealed to the city's civil service commission. A hearing was regularly scheduled, but his counsel, on the day before the date set, notified the commission of his involvement in another court appearance and his inability to be present. On the hearing day, the commission waited only a half-hour and then proceeded with the evidence. Plaintiff, acting on prior advice of his counsel, remained silent, and the order of discharge was affirmed. The commission denied a rehearing and the trial court denied mandamus. Held, reversed with directions to issue the writ directing a rehearing of the matter. The hearing was one-sided and unfair, and it was an abuse of discretion to deny a rehearing. (45 C.A.3d 111.)

(2) Exception: Peer Review Committee Hearings. An exception has been recognized for peer review committee hearings on the performance of a doctor; it is sufficient to allow representation by another doctor, thus avoiding "the controversial and contentious atmosphere which would likely be created by the participation of attorneys." (Gill v. Mercy Hosp. (1988) 199 C.A.3d 889, 902, 245 C.R. 304.)

(3) Right of Indigents. Whether an indigent is entitled to appointment of counsel at public expense, as in criminal and quasi-criminal proceedings (see 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §§149 et seq., 170 et seq.), is strongly questioned, and thus far there is little authority supporting such a constitutional right. (See 18 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 758 [elaborate examination of issue, and argument for right in selected adjudicative proceedings].)

In Borror, supra, a disciplinary proceeding was instituted against petitioner by the Department of Investment, Division of Real Estate. On an inquiry by the hearing officer, petitioner said that she did not have an attorney because she could not afford one. Her license was revoked, and she sought mandamus. The superior court judge granted the writ on the theory that she had a right to appointed counsel because she could face a criminal prosecution if the accusations were sustained. (15 C.A.3d 538.) Held, reversed. "[W]e conclude that in a proceeding to revoke or suspend a license or other administrative action of a disciplinary nature the licensee or respondent is entitled to have counsel of his own choosing, which burden he must bear himself, and that he is not denied due process of law when counsel is not furnished him, even though he is unable to afford counsel. Such a proceeding does not bear a close identity to the aims and objectives of criminal law enforcement, but has for its objective the protection of the public rather than to punish the offender. There is no constitutional requirement, therefore, that the hearing officer or the agency advise a party that he is entitled to be represented by counsel and that if he cannot afford counsel one will be afforded him." (15 C.A.3d 543.)

d. Impartial Body or Officer.

1. General Rule.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 666

[§ 666] General Rule.

(1) In General. The hearing must be before an impartial body or officer. (See Wong Yang Sing v. McGrath (1950) 339 U.S. 33, 70 S.Ct. 445, 452, 94 L.Ed. 616, 626; American Motors Sales Corp. v. Superior Court (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1434, 282 C.R. 819, supra, §659.)

In Withrow v. Larkin (1975) 421 U.S. 35, 95 S.Ct. 1456, 43 L.Ed.2d 712, a physician attacked a statute permitting the medical board to hold a hearing on suspension of a license after it had conducted the investigation. Held, the statute was valid. In re Murchison (1955) 349 U.S. 133, 75 S.Ct. 623, 99 L.Ed. 942, supra, §642, is distinguishable, and the variety and complexity of administrative proceedings make it necessary to reject the broad proposition that the combination of investigating and judging functions is a denial of due process. (95 S.Ct. 1467, 43 L.Ed.2d 427.) However, a court may determine from special facts in a particular case that "the risk of unfairness is intolerably high." (95 S.Ct. 1470, 43 L.Ed.2d 730.) (See 89 Harv. L. Rev. 76.)

In Hortonville Joint School Dist. No. 1 v. Hortonville Education Assn. (1976) 426 U.S. 482, 96 S.Ct. 2308, 2314, 49 L.Ed.2d 1, 9, the Court followed Withrow, holding that a school board that had negotiated with teachers could decide to dismiss them for engaging in an illegal strike.

In Burrell v. Los Angeles (1989) 209 C.A.3d 568, 257 C.R. 427, a provision of the Los Angeles city charter provided for the review of disciplinary actions against city employees, but prohibited a reduction in the penalty without the consent of the department manager who initially imposed discipline. Held, the provision was constitutional.

(a) Prior cases have distinguished between administrative hearings and judicial proceedings in determining whether a decision maker meets the requirement of impartiality. (209 C.A.3d 577, 578, 579, discussing Withrow; Murchison; Hortonville; and Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Lavoie (1986) 475 U.S. 813, 106 S.Ct. 1580, 89 L.Ed.2d 823, supra, §642.)

(b) Applying these Supreme Court decisions, "the lower and intermediate federal courts have concluded that the right to a fair and impartial tribunal is not violated by permitting the official who makes the initial disciplinary decision to have the final say in the matter." (209 C.A.3d 579.) The California Supreme Court has construed the state Due Process Clause in the same manner. (209 C.A.3d 581, 582.)

(c) A disciplined employee does have the right to have the reviewing body determine whether there is sufficient evidence to uphold the charges of misconduct; and the charter provision protects this right. (209 C.A.3d 581.)

(2) Administrative Prosecutorial Officers. The requirements for impartial hearing officers are designed for officials performing judicial or quasi-judicial functions. They are not applicable to those acting in a prosecutorial or plaintiff-like capacity. "In an adversary system, they are necessarily permitted to be zealous in their enforcement of the law. The constitutional interests in accurate finding of facts and application of law, and in preserving a fair and open process for decision, are not to the same degree implicated if it is the prosecutor, and not the judge, who is offered an incentive for securing civil penalties." (Marshall v. Jerrico (1980) 446 U.S. 238, 100 S.Ct. 1610, 1616, 64 L.Ed.2d 182, 192 [upholding section of Fair Labor Standards Act providing that civil penalties collected for unlawful employment of child labor must be returned to Department of Labor as reimbursement for money spent in determining violation].)

In Blinder, Robinson & Co. v. Tom (1986) 181 C.A.3d 283, 226 C.R. 339, appellant challenged the constitutionality of Govt.C. 11511 on the ground that it allows a prosecuting agency officer, rather than an impartial hearing officer, to make the determination whether to grant or deny process to compel attendance of witnesses. (181 C.A.3d 290.) The court, bound by case law upholding the statute, rejected the contention that it was facially unconstitutional, and also found nothing in the record to show that appellant could not have a fair hearing. But the opinion adds: "What troubles us about Government Code section 11511, and its application in this case is not merely the combination of investigatory, accusatory and adjudicatory functions in one person. It is, rather, the additional power of that same person to make the decision denying the accused the right to produce evidence at the hearing. This is accomplished by effectively denying the accused the right to take depositions without affording it the right to a review of that denial by a neutral or impartial person at an early and meaningful stage of the administrative proceedings before the burden of proof has shifted to the accused." (181 C.A.3d 295.) Govt.C. 11511, as amended in 1995, now only permits an agency to order deposition testimony when an administrative law judge has not been appointed.

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

2. Type of Hearing Required.

d. Impartial Body or Officer.

2. Conflict of Interest.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 667

[§ 667] Conflict of Interest.

Howitt v. Superior Court (1992) 3 C.A.4th 1575, 5 C.R.2d 196, involved a conflict of interest problem. H, an Imperial County deputy sheriff, was transferred by the sheriff's department and summarily suspended without pay. He sought an administrative hearing before the County Employment Appeals Board, a quasi-independent administrative tribunal. At the hearing he discovered that the sheriff's department would be represented by a deputy county counsel, and that the county counsel himself would advise the board and prepare its written opinion. H sought mandamus to compel the county counsel's office to disqualify itself from advising the board. Held, the county counsel's office can perform both roles only if the adviser for the decision maker is screened from inappropriate contact with the advocate.

(a) The cases recognize a due process entitlement to an impartial decision maker, but conclude that overlapping functions do not amount to a constitutional violation unless there is specific evidence of bias. (3 C.A.4th 1580, discussing Withrow v. Larkin (1975) 421 U.S. 35, 95 S.Ct. 1456, 43 L.Ed.2d 712, supra, §666, and Kloepfer v. Commission on Judicial Performance (1989) 49 C.3d 826, 264 C.R. 100, 782 P.2d 239, 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §76.) "Both Withrow and Kloepfer exemplify administrative procedures which depart to some extent from the pure adversary model of a passive and disinterested tribunal hearing evidence and argument presented by partisan advocates. The departure is perhaps more dramatic in Withrow, where the functions of investigation and adjudication are effectively merged in the same persons, than in Kloepfer, where the commission's staff conducted an initial investigation. Nonetheless, these decisions and numerous others stand for the proposition that the pure adversary model is not entitled to constitutionally enshrined exclusivity as the means for resolving disputes in '[t]he incredible variety of administrative mechanisms [utilized] in this country. ... ' The mere fact that the decision maker or its staff is a more active participant in the fact-finding process--similar to the judge in European civil law systems--will not render an administrative procedure unconstitutional." (3 C.A.4th 1581.)

(b) Most of the cases that have considered a due process challenge focus on the agency, commission, or board itself, and not on a lawyer's representation of conflicting interests. But a few have considered the overlapping functions of lawyers and have reached inconsistent conclusions. (3 C.A.4th 1582.) Authority supporting a lawyer's participation in a proceeding as both an advocate and adviser to the decision maker stems largely from two cases decided long before Withrow. (3 C.A.4th 1583, citing Chosick v. Reilly (1954) 125 C.A.2d 334, 270 P.2d 547, and Ford v. Civil Service

Com. of Los Angeles (1958) 161 C.A.2d 692, 327 P.2d 148.) Ford provided the linchpin for Greer v. Board of Education (1975) 47 C.A.3d 98, 121 C.R. 542, which rejected a challenge, and observed that, by the very nature of the administrative process, the agency or one of its agents or representatives is bound to be involved in the initiation and prosecution of charges. (3 C.A.4th 1583.) Midstate Theatres v. Stanislaus (1976) 55 C.A.3d 864, 128 C.R. 54, reached a conclusion diametrically opposite to Greer, relying on both due process principles and an applicable statute. (3 C.A.4th 1584.)

(c) Where advocacy and decision-making roles are combined, the essential objectivity of an adjudicator is lost. "Here, as part of an adversary process, the county counsel will be asked to advise the Board about legal issues which Board members feel are relevant in deciding whether one of his subordinates wins or loses the case. To allow an advocate for one party to also act as counsel to the decision maker creates the substantial risk that the advice given to the decisionmaker, 'perhaps unconsciously,' ... will be skewed." (3 C.A.4th 1585.)

(d) "Performance of both roles by the same law office is appropriate only if there are assurances that the adviser for the decision maker is screened from any inappropriate contact with the advocate." (3 C.A.4th 1586.) The burden of providing these assurances must rest with the law officer performing the dual roles. "As a practical matter, were the burden allocated otherwise, it would seldom if ever be possible for the opposing party to demonstrate that the lawyer in question had not been adequately screened. If the adviser has been screened, it should be relatively easy for county counsel to explain the screening procedures in effect. On the other hand, if there has been improper contact, it would likely be known only to the lawyers involved and perhaps to the board members. A party challenging the dual representation would have virtually no way of obtaining evidence to demonstrate any impropriety." (3 C.A.4th 1587.)

A concurring opinion criticizes the majority's premise--"that dual representation, standing alone, offends petitioner's due process rights"; this view "runs counter to the established principles which underlie the law of administrative hearing process." (3 C.A.4th 1589.) (See Clark v. Hermosa Beach (1996) 48 C.A.4th 1152, 1172, 56 C.R.2d 223 [city council member who lived within one block of proposed development and who, as citizen, had opposed earlier version of development plan had disqualifying conflict of interest, and his participation in council decision disapproving plan deprived developer of fair hearing]; Nightlife Partners, Ltd. v. Beverly Hills (2003) 108 C.A.4th 81, 93, 133 C.R.2d 234 [following Howitt v. Superior Court; petitioners' due process rights were violated where defendant city's advocate for initial denial of permit renewal application acted as legal adviser to administrative hearing officer reviewing that denial]; Quintero v. Santa Ana (2004) 114 C.A.4th 810, 814, 7 C.R.3d 896 [following Nightlife Partners; administrative hearing to terminate plaintiff's employment with city violated due process where deputy city attorney that represented city before personnel board also had acted as counsel for board, including revising board's rules and procedures and giving advice regarding their effect]; for further discussion of conflict of interest issue, see 1 Cal. 2. Type of Hearing Required.

d. Impartial Body or Officer.

3. Bias.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 668

[§ 668] Bias.

(1) Actual Bias. Actual bias of an administrative body or officer violates due process. (See Saks & Co. v. Beverly Hills (1951) 107 C.A.2d 260, 264, 237 P.2d 32 [revocation of zoning variances by biased city council]; Perlman v. Shasta Joint Junior College Dist. Bd. of Trustees (1970) 9 C.A.3d 873, 883, 88 C.R. 563 [expulsion of student by biased and prejudiced board]; Gai v. Selma (1998) 68 C.A.4th 213, 221, 228, 79 C.R.2d 910 [commission member's remote, indirect, and uncertain pecuniary interest in outcome of terminated police officer's appeal did not amount to actual bias or to "probability or likelihood of actual bias"]; 10 A.L.R.3d 694 [zoning--disqualification of biased officer].)

In Concrete Pipe & Products of Calif. v. Construction Laborers Pension Trust for Southern Calif. (1993) 508 U.S. 602, 113 S.Ct. 2264, 124 L.Ed.2d 539, the Court upheld provisions of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) added by the Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act of 1980 (MPPAA) (29 U.S.C., §§1381, 1391) for determining the "withdrawal liability" of an employer who withdraws from a multiemployer pension plan. Under MPPAA, the employer's liability for its share of unvested benefits is first assessed in a notification by the "plan sponsor." If the employer objects and the dispute is not resolved, it is referred to arbitration. The sponsor's determinations and actuarial calculations are presumed correct unless a contesting party shows by a preponderance of the evidence that either (1) a determination was unreasonable or clearly erroneous, or (2) the actuarial assumptions and methods were, in the aggregate, unreasonable. Plaintiff Concrete Pipe, a withdrawing employer who lost in arbitration, challenged MPPAA on the ground that it denies access to an impartial decision maker. Held, the statute does not unconstitutionally deny an impartial adjudicator.

(a) Concrete Pipe argued that the plan sponsor (here, the plan trustees) might have a bias toward imposition of the greatest possible liability. There are several reasons why that might be so. (113 S.Ct. 2276, 124 L.Ed.2d 560.) However, in making their initial liability determination, the trustees are acting in an enforcement rather than an adjudicatory capacity. The first adjudication is the proceeding before the arbitrator. (113 S.Ct. 2278, 124 L.Ed.2d 562.)

(b) The first presumption, that factual determinations are correct, uses three inconsistent terms--"preponderance," "clearly erroneous," and "unreasonable"--to describe the burden of persuasion placed on the employer. (113 S.Ct. 2279, 124 L.Ed.2d 563.) The ambiguity caused by this incoherence must be resolved by construing the statute to avoid serious constitutional problems. Thus, the presumption is construed to place the burden on the employer to disprove a challenged factual determination by a preponderance. (113 S.Ct. 2283, 124 L.Ed.2d 568.) So construed, the statute permits independent consideration of factual issues by the arbitrator, and thus is constitutional. (113 S.Ct. 2283, 124 L.Ed.2d 569.)

(c) The second presumption, that the actuarial calculations are correct, does not involve the same possibility of bias. The actuarial assumptions and methods are initially selected by the plan actuary, a trained professional, and are technical in nature. (113 S.Ct. 2284, 124 L.Ed.2d 570.) Moreover, the employer's burden is simply to show that the combination of methods and assumptions would not have been acceptable to a reasonable actuary, and thus that they fall outside the range of reasonable actuarial practice. Placing this burden on the employer does not raise a due process issue. (113 S.Ct. 2286, 124 L.Ed.2d 572.)

(2) Appearance of Bias. In Andrews v. Agricultural Lab. Rel. Bd. (1981) 28 C.3d 781, 171 C.R. 590, 623 P.2d 151, agricultural employees filed complaints under Lab.C. 1160.2, alleging that employers committed unfair labor practices. For the hearing, the board appointed M as a temporary administrative law officer. Counsel for the employers sought to disqualify M on a showing that he was an attorney member of a public interest law firm that had represented farm workers and Mexican-Americans challenging employment discrimination. Held, he was not disqualified. (a) A trier of fact with expressed political or legal views cannot be disqualified on that basis alone. (28 C.3d 791.) (b) Even if these views could result in "an appearance of bias," in the sense of a subjective belief in its existence, this is an insufficient ground for disqualification; the moving party must demonstrate the existence of actual bias. (28 C.3d 792, 793, 794.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Actual Bias. See Nasha L.L.C. v. Los Angeles (2004) 125 C.A.4th 470, 483, 22 C.R.3d 772 [planning commission member's authorship of newsletter that clearly advocated position against project while its approval was pending before commission gave rise to unacceptable probability of actual bias]; 4 A.L.R.6th 263 [bias of officer in zoning proceeding requiring disqualification or affecting validity of decision; superseding 10 A.L.R.3d 694, text, p. 1085].

Witkin Summary of California Law

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

2. Type of Hearing Required.

d. Impartial Body or Officer.

4. Financial Interest.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 669

[§ 669] Financial Interest.

(1) In General. Due process may be denied where the hearing officer or members of the hearing body have a financial interest in the outcome of the hearing. (See Gibson v. Berryhill (1973) 411 U.S. 564, 93 S.Ct. 1689, 1698, 36 L.Ed.2d 488, 499 [district court properly enjoined proceedings of Alabama Optometry Board where members had indirect financial interest in prohibiting practice of optometry by employees of optical companies].)

(2) Effect of Government's Selection and Payment of Hearing Officer. The fact that a hearing officer is paid by the employer does not, by itself, create a disqualifying financial interest. (See Linney v. Turpen (1996) 42 C.A.4th 763, 768, 776, 49 C.R.2d 813 [suspended police officer was not denied due process where hearing officer was selected from civil service commission list composed of persons who met specified criteria].) However, "a temporary administrative hearing officer has a pecuniary interest requiring disqualification when the government unilaterally selects and pays the officer on an ad hoc basis and the officer's income from future adjudicative work depends entirely on the government's goodwill. ... While the rules governing this disqualification of administrative hearing officers are in some respects more flexible than those governing judges, the rules are not more flexible on the subject of financial interest. Applying those rules, courts have consistently recognized that a judge has a disqualifying financial interest when plaintiffs and prosecutors are free to choose their judge and the judge's income from judging depends on the number of cases handled. No persuasive reason exists to treat administrative hearing officers differently." (Haas v. San Bernardino (2002) 27 C.4th 1017, 1024, 1036, 119 C.R.2d 341, 45 P.3d 280 [invalidating statutory procedure used by many counties]; see McIntyre v. Santa Barbara County Employees' Retirement System (2001) 91 C.A.4th 730, 735, 110 C.R.2d 565 [following Linney; fact that defendant retirement board unilaterally selected hearing officers did not violate due process, and defendant was not "prohibited from both investigating and adjudicating applications for retirement benefits"]; *Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control v. Alcoholic Beverage Control App. Bd. (3) Receipt of Campaign Contributions. In Woodland Hills Residents Assn. v. City Council (1980) 26 C.3d 938, 164 C.R. 255, 609 P.2d 1029, a citizens' group challenged approval of a subdivision map by the Los Angeles City Council, on the ground that the developer, its engineering firm, and its attorneys had made substantial contributions to the campaign committees of council members. Held, the members receiving the contributions were not disqualified from action on the application for approval. The contributions were made in compliance with statutory requirements, and to disqualify council members for receiving them would threaten constitutionally protected political speech and associational freedoms. (26 C.3d 945, 946.) (See BreakZone Billiards v. Torrance (2000) 81 C.A.4th 1205, 1228, 97 C.R.2d 467 [following Woodland Hills].)

When a particular agency is the only one with authority to pass on a matter, a rule of necessity may be invoked and disqualification precluded. (See *Griggs v. 2. Type of Hearing Required.

d. Impartial Body or Officer.

6. Partially Interested Board.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 671

[§ 671] Partially Interested Board.

A New Motor Vehicle Board was established in 1967 to hear appeals of new car dealers on eligibility for licensing, regulation of practices, and discipline for rule violations. (Veh.C. 3000; see Veh.C. 3001 [four of nine members of Board must be new car dealers].) Statutes added in 1973 required the Board to institute procedures for adjudication of disputes between new car dealers and new car manufacturers (Veh.C. 3050 and 3066), and to determine whether a manufacturer's termination of a dealer's franchise was for good cause (Veh.C. 3060). In American Motors Sales Corp. v. New Motor Vehicle Bd. (1977) 69 C.A.3d 983, 138 C.R. 594, plaintiff manufacturer gave C, its franchisee, notice of termination for failure to develop a sufficient sales volume, but the Board, after a hearing, concluded that the termination was without good cause. In this mandamus proceeding, the trial judge held the 1973 amendments unconstitutional. Held, affirmed.

(a) The dealer-members of the Board have an economic stake in franchise termination cases; i.e., it is to the dealer's advantage not to have termination take place for low sales performance. (69 C.A.3d 988.) Hence, Tumey v. Ohio (1927) 273 U.S. 510, 47 S.Ct. 437, 444, 71 L.Ed. 749, 758, supra, §642, Ward v. Village of Monroeville (1972) 409 U.S. 57, 93 S.Ct. 80, 34 L.Ed.2d 267, and Gibson v. Berryhill (1973) 411 U.S. 564, 93 S.Ct. 1689, 36 L.Ed.2d 488, 499, holding that pecuniary interest of the adjudicating officer or body is a denial of due process, are applicable. (69 C.A.3d 988, 990.)

(b) Prior to the 1973 amendments, there was no constitutional infirmity in the composition of the Board; it is well settled that a licensing or regulatory agency may be composed in whole or in part of members of the business or profession regulated. (69 C.A.3d 990.) But the new law gave the Board the power to regulate the economic and contractual relations of others. In effect, the Legislature took sides in controversies between dealers and manufacturers, "making certain that the dealer interests would at all times be substantially represented and favored on the adjudicating body." (69 C.A.3d 991.)

(c) In Tumey and the other cases cited, the entire adjudicatory body was infected by pecuniary interest, while here only a minority of the board is so infected. These cases do not hold that every multiple-person administrative agency violates due process whenever one or more members is possessed of a pecuniary interest. (69 C.A.3d 991.) Nor is a car dealer per se constitutionally ineligible to sit on the Board. "What we hold is that the combination of (1) the mandated dealer-Board members, (2) the lack of any counterbalance in mandated manufacturer members, (3) the nature of the adversaries in all cases (dealers v. manufacturers), and (4) the nature of the controversy in all cases (dispute between dealer and manufacturer) deprives a manufacturer-litigant of procedural due process, because the state does not furnish an impartial tribunal." (69 C.A.3d 992.) The evil "is not eliminated by stacking the deck 4/9ths of the way rather than all the way." (69 C.A.3d 993.)

One justice dissented, relying mainly on a federal district court decision dealing with regulation of pharmacists. (69 C.A.3d 994.)

American Motors Sales Corp. was followed in Chevrolet Motor Div. v. New Motor Vehicle Bd. (1983) 146 C.A.3d 533, 541, 194 C.R. 270, and Nissan Motor Corp. v. New Motor Vehicle Bd. (1984) 153 C.A.3d 109, 114, 202 C.R. 1. In response to Chevrolet and Nissan, the board adopted a policy of voluntary recusal of dealer members in dealer-manufacturer disputes, and in 1985, Veh.C. 3050 and 3066 were amended to provide that a "dealer may not participate in, hear, comment, advise other members upon, or decide, any matter" involving a franchisor-franchisee dispute. The recusal policy and the 1985 amendments were held constitutional in American Isuzu Motors v. New Motor Vehicle Bd. (1986) 186 C.A.3d 464, 471, 473, 230 C.R. 769.

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

2. Type of Hearing Required.

e. Hearing and Determination.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 672

[§ 672] Hearing and Determination.

In judicial proceedings, an agency is free to depart from conventional practices that do not affect the fundamental fairness of the hearing. (See Automotive Management Group v. New Motor Vehicle Bd. (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1002, 1011, 1012, 24 C.R.2d 904, citing the text [New Motor Vehicle Board's procedure of permitting administrative law judge to adjudicate timeliness of dealer's protest of termination of franchise pursuant to franchisor's motion to dismiss protest was fair; board was not first required to "accept" protest and then hear issue itself]; Pierce, 1 Admin. Law 4th, Chap 8; C.E.B., Administrative Hearing Practice 2d, §7.34 et seq.; 84 Harv. L. Rev. 612 [summary judgments in administrative adjudication]; 13 Stanf. L. Rev. 307 [administrative declaratory orders].) Thus:

(1) There is no absolute right to make an oral argument on a question of law involved in the proceedings. (See Federal Communications Com. v. WJR, The Goodwill Station (1949) 337 U.S. 265, 69 S.Ct. 1097, 1103, 93 L.Ed. 1353, 1360.)

(2) There is no violation of constitutional due process in a closed hearing with the public excluded. (See Swars v. Council of Vallejo (1949) 33 C.2d 867, 873, 206 P.2d 355 [civil service commission]; on statutory requirements for public hearings, see infra, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, §79 et seq.)

(3) The standards of a judge's findings of fact need not be met; an informal report is sufficient. (Santa Barbara v. Purcell (1967) 251 C.A.2d 169, 177, 59 C.R. 345; see Rogers v. Carleson (1973) 30 C.A.3d 54, 63, 106 C.R. 140 [denial of claims for aid by Director of State Department of Social Welfare, annulled for failure to give reasons for decision; decision based on federal and state regulations, due process issue not reached]; Rosenblit v. Superior Court (1991) 231 C.A.3d 1434, 1445, 282 C.R. 819, supra, §659 [vague and conclusory findings inadequate].)

(4) It is generally held that an administrative agency cannot reopen and change or annul its own final determinations of fact, unless the statute gives it some such continuing jurisdiction. (Olive Proration Program Committee for Olive Proration Zone No. 1 v. Agricultural Prorate Com. (1941) 17 C.2d 204, 209, 109 P.2d 918; *Wilbur v. X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

2. Type of Hearing Required.

f. Who May Render Decision.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 673

[§ 673] Who May Render Decision.

In Morgan v. United States (1936) 298 U.S. 468, 56 S.Ct. 906, 912, 80 L.Ed. 1288, 1295, and Morgan v. United States (1936) 304 U.S. 1, 58 S.Ct. 773, 82 L.Ed. 1129, the Court declared that the person who makes the determination "must consider and appraise the evidence"; that a fair hearing is denied where subordinates hold a hearing, and the decision is thereafter made by an officer who does not attend the hearing or read a transcript of the proceedings, but relies on the recommendation of the subordinates.

This rule has been substantially followed in California cases dealing with the procedure before the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board (see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §444), and in proceedings under the Administrative Procedure Act (see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, §47 et seq.).

In Vollstedt v. Stockton (1990) 220 C.A.3d 265, 269 C.R. 404, plaintiff city employee was demoted. The city civil service commission, after a 2-day hearing, recommended to the city manager that plaintiff be reinstated, but did not include a written statement of facts. The city manager, without reviewing the evidence presented at the hearing, rejected the commission's recommendation and upheld the demotion on the basis of information supplied by the city personnel director. Held, this procedure violated the rule of "he who decides must hear," as set forth in Morgan and applied in later cases. (220 C.A.3d 275, 276.)

Under Veh.C. 3066 (supra, §671), either the New Motor Vehicle Board or an administrative law judge may preside at hearings to protest decisions to terminate automobile dealership franchises. However, a decision rendered by an administrative law judge must be reviewed by the board. (Automotive Management Group v. New Motor Vehicle Bd. (1993) 20 C.A.4th 1002, 1012, 1013, 24 C.R.2d 904, citing the text.)

In Yaqub v. Salinas Valley Memorial Healthcare System (2004) 122 C.A.4th 474, 18 C.R.3d 780, the court held that in the absence of evidence of impartiality, the fact that the panel for two hearings relating to plaintiff physician's suspension of hospital privileges was made up of the same three members did not violate hospital bylaws or any statute. The first hearing dealt essentially with plaintiff's competency and the second hearing dealt with his compliance with the conditions of the suspension. (122 C.A.4th 487.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Flippin v. Los Angeles City Bd. of Civil Service Commrs. (2007) 148 C.A.4th 272, 281, 55 C.R.3d 458 [no due process violation occurred where manager who recommended termination of plaintiff's employment acted as Skelly hearing officer in preremoval process; no rule prevented dual function, manager did not impose discharge, and there were three more levels of administrative review, including full evidentiary hearing before neutral hearing examiner, before final discharge].

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

3. Non-Adjudicatory Proceedings.

a. Quasi-Legislative Action.

1. Constitutional Requirement.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 674

[§ 674] Constitutional Requirement.

(1) In General. Due process requires a hearing where the proceeding is quasi-judicial in nature (see supra, §657). A hearing is not required in quasi-legislative proceedings. (See Wood v. Public Util. Com. (1971) 4 C.3d 288, 292, 93 C.R. 455, 481 P.2d 823 [regulatory commission adopting rules governing service and fixing rates]; California Optometric Assn. v. Lackner (1976) 60 C.A.3d 500, 505, 131 C.R. 744 [Director of Health adopting regulations establishing Medi-Cal rates]; Lin v. California (2000) 78 C.A.4th 931, 935, 93 C.R.2d 88 [Denti-Cal providers had no right to hearing before being required to obtain prior authorization to perform restorative services; requirement did not terminate their relationship with Denti-Cal and, in any event, they had no entitlement to continued participation in Denti-Cal program]; Machado v. State Water Resources Control Bd. (2001) 90 C.A.4th 720, 726, 109 C.R.2d 116 [due process did not require hearing before issuance of cleanup and abatement order because order did not impose civil or criminal penalties or shut down or otherwise prevent operation of business, and it was issued only after observation of unlawful discharges and notification to plaintiff of problem]; 87 Harv. L. Rev. 782 [procedural requirements for agency rulemaking]; 63 Cal. L. Rev. 886 [due process rights of participation in rulemaking]; Pierce, 1 Admin. Law 4th, Chap. 7; 2 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Administrative Law §200 et seq.)

(2) Necessity of Record. There must, however, be some record of the basis for the determination. In California Assn. of Nursing Homes etc. v. Williams (1970) 4 C.A.3d 800, 84 C.R. 590, 85 C.R. 735, the court said:

"Generally, an administrative agency, directed to fix rates or price levels after a hearing, may not base its decision upon evidence outside the record and not made available for rebuttal by the affected parties. In part the demand is implied from statutes calling for public hearing as an assurance of fairness. In part it derives from the ineluctable need for an administrative record as the basis of effective judicial review. In some cases effective review entails examination of the administrative findings in order to test the legal principles employed by the agency and to discern the sufficiency of the evidence. In other cases the need is for the transcribed oral testimony and the documentary exhibits." (4 C.A.3d 811.)

In Williams, the Medi-Cal administrator, adopting a regulation governing reimbursement of nursing homes under the Medi-Cal program, completely failed to provide a hearing or record of any evidentiary basis for its action, and accordingly the regulation was held invalid. Private negotiations with the agency's staff and organizations affected did not constitute substantial compliance with the requirement of public hearing and opportunity for the public to participate. (4 C.A.3d 813.) (See Pierce, 1 Admin. Law 4th, Chap. 8; 18 A.L.R.2d 552 [administrative decision or finding based on evidence secured outside hearing, and without presence of interested party or counsel]; on review of quasi-legislative determinations, see 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, §39 et seq.; on attacking regulation in subsequent adjudicative proceedings in which it is applied, see Rosas v. Montgomery (1970) 10 C.A.3d 77, 88 C.R. 907, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Extraordinary Writs, §264.)

3. Non-Adjudicatory Proceedings.

a. Quasi-Legislative Action.

2. Statutory Requirement.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 675

[§ 675] Statutory Requirement.

Even though a quasi-legislative administrative agency is required to give a hearing, that hearing need not be a "trial-type," with opportunity for cross-examination of witnesses and rebuttal; an "argument type" hearing is sufficient. "[A] hearing allowed by legislative grace is not circumscribed by the restrictions applicable to judicial or quasi judicial adversary proceedings." (Franchise Tax Bd. v. Superior Court (1950) 36 C.2d 538, 549, 225 P.2d 905 [determination of tax rate for financial corporations]; see Ray v. Parker (1940) 15 C.2d 275, 296, 101 P.2d 665; Security-First Nat. Com. (1980) 102 C.A.3d 577, 589, 162 C.R. 734 [rebuttal was not required in quasi-legislative hearing determining construction insulation standards]; Pierce, 1 Admin. Law 4th, Chap. 8.)

For the same reason, findings are not required as the basis for a regulation. (See Pacific States Box & Basket Co. v. White (1935) 296 U.S. 176, 56 S.Ct. 159, 164, 80 L.Ed. 138, 146; California Drive-In Restaurant Assn. v. Clark (1943) 22 C.2d 287, 301, 140 P.2d 657; 1 Pierce, Admin. Law 4th, §8.5; 60 Cal. L. Rev. 1276 [need for procedural innovation in administrative rulemaking].)

Govt.C. 11346 et seq. establish basic minimum procedural requirements for agency rulemaking, including notice and an opportunity for interested parties to present statements and arguments (Govt.C. 11346.8) and the right to obtain a judicial declaration as to the validity of a regulation by an action for declaratory relief (Govt.C. 11350; see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §§815, 818). There is, however, no requirement of a hearing with the right to offer oral testimony and oral argument. (*California Optometric Assn. v. 3. Non-Adjudicatory Proceedings.

a. Quasi-Legislative Action.

3. Approval of Subdivision Map.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 676

[§ 676] Approval of Subdivision Map.

In Horn v. Ventura (1979) 24 C.3d 605, 156 C.R. 718, 596 P.2d 1134, defendant county's planning department considered and approved a tentative subdivision map for O's property (division into only four lots, hence not subject to the Subdivision Map Act). On the theory that this action is quasi-legislative, no notice was given to other property owners in the area who might be affected by the development. Plaintiff, an adjacent owner, sought mandamus to compel setting aside the approval. Held, on the facts pleaded he was entitled to this relief.

(a) Procedural due process (notice and opportunity for hearing) is required where the governmental decision is adjudicatory in nature; and the legislative-adjudicatory distinction is well settled. (24 C.3d 612, 613.) However, while a general zoning ordinance is legislative in character, less extensive use planning decisions, such as the grant of a variance or conditional use permit, are adjudicatory. (24 C.3d 613.) Subdivision approvals are similar. The issues of suitability of a subdivision plan in terms of topography, density, public health, and access rights, or community land use plans, involve the exercise of judgment and balancing of conflicting interests. (24 C.3d 614, rejecting contrary view of San Mateo v. Palomar Holding Co. (1962) 208 C.A.2d 194, 199, 24 C.R. 905.) Plaintiff's allegations that the plan would substantially interfere with his access to the public streets, and increase both traffic congestion and air pollution, described a deprivation requiring procedural due process protection. (24 C.3d 615.)

(b) The rule therefore is that "whenever approval of a tentative subdivision map will constitute a substantial or significant deprivation of the property rights of other landowners, the affected persons are entitled to a reasonable notice and an opportunity to be heard before the approval occurs." (24 C.3d 616.)

(c) The notice constitutionally required is that which is reasonably calculated to afford affected persons the realistic opportunity to protect their interests. (24 C.3d 617.) The notice given here--posting at central public buildings, and mailings to persons requesting notice--was inadequate. "Those persons significantly affected by a proposed subdivision cannot reasonably be expected to place themselves on a mailing list or 'haunt' county offices on the off-hand chance that a pending challenge to those interests will thereby be revealed." (24 C.3d 618.) While no specific formula should be imposed, "acceptable techniques might include notice by mail to the owners of record of property situated within a designated radius of the subject property, or by the posting of notice at or near the project site, or both." (24 C.3d 618.)

(See Kennedy v. Hayward (1980) 105 C.A.3d 953, 960, 165 C.R. 132 [following Horn].)

[§ 677] Investigative Process.

In Hannah v. Larche (1960) 363 U.S. 420, 80 S.Ct. 1502, 4 L.Ed.2d 1307, the federal Commission on Civil Rights conducted an investigation of alleged black voting deprivations in Louisiana. Voting registrars and others were subpoenaed to bring records and explain their activities. But the Commission, though pressed, refused to disclose the identities of the complainants or to permit their cross-examination by the witnesses. In this action to enjoin the Commission from acting, the Court stated the constitutional issue as follows: "Whether persons whose conduct is under investigation by a governmental agency of this nature are entitled, by virtue of the Due Process Clause, to know the specific charges that are being investigated, as well as the identity of the complainants, and to have the right to cross-examine those complainants and other witnesses." (80 S.Ct. 1514, 4 L.Ed.2d 1321.) The answer was no. The practice of the vast majority of investigating agencies--legislative, executive, and judicial--has been to deny the rights of appraisal, confrontation, and cross-examination, and the policy is sound:

"[T]he investigative process could be completely disrupted if investigative hearings were transformed into trial-like proceedings, and if persons who might be indirectly affected by an investigation were given an absolute right to cross-examine every witness called to testify. Fact-finding agencies without any power to adjudicate would be diverted from their legitimate duties and would be plagued by the injection of collateral issues that would make the investigation interminable. Even a person not called as a witness could demand to appear at the hearing, cross-examine any witness whose testimony or sworn affidavit allegedly defamed or incriminated him, and call an unlimited number of witnesses of his own selection. This type of proceeding would make a shambles of the investigation, and stifle the agency in its gathering of facts." (80 S.Ct. 1515, 4 L.Ed.2d 1322.)

In Smith v. Board of Med. Quality Assur. (1988) 202 C.A.3d 316, 248 C.R. 704, the failure of B. & P.C. 2292 to require a hearing before subjecting a physician to a professional competency examination was challenged. Under the statute, if there is reasonable cause to believe that a physician cannot practice medicine with reasonable skill and safety to patients, the Board of Medical Quality Assurance may order the competency examination. First, both the Board and an outside medical consultant must conclude that the required reasonable cause exists. Then the Board files a petition and the physician may file an opposition. These papers are reviewed by a designated body, which may conduct a hearing. If a reasonable cause finding is made, an oral professional competency examination is ordered before two physicians. If the physician fails this examination and a second one before two other physicians, an accusation of incompetence may be filed, which, if proved, subjects the physician to discipline. In proceedings on an accusation, the physician is entitled to all due process rights. Held, there was no violation of due process.

(a) The reasonable cause proceeding is investigatory, not adjudicative. The authority to compel an examination that may result in evidence of incompetence and possible revocation of the physician's license does not alter this conclusion. As in Hannah v. Larche, the possibility that the information disclosed may be used in later proceedings does not alter the investigatory nature of this proceeding. (202 C.A.3d 322, 323.)

(b) Neither the physician's property interest in his license nor his liberty interest is violated by being required to undergo this nondisciplinary examination. If an accusation is filed, he is granted the full range of due process rights. (202 C.A.3d 326, 327.)

(c) The safeguards provided later in the process adequately protect the physician's interests, and to require the full range of due process rights at this stage of the proceedings would hamper the investigation and cause great fiscal and administrative burdens. Balancing the private and governmental interests, the state Due Process Clause does not require the full range of due process rights at the reasonable cause hearing. (202 C.A.3d 327, 329.)

(d) Giving the Board discretion whether to grant or deny a hearing does not violate equal protection. (202 C.A.3d 324, 325.) (See Goodstein v. Cedars-Sinai Med. Center (1998) 66 C.A.4th 1257, 1266, 78 C.R.2d 577 [peer review committee's policy of nondisclosure of identities of complainants comported with concept of fair procedure].)

4. Summary Action Without Prior Hearing.

a. In General.

1. Nature and Scope of Exception.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 678

[§ 678] Nature and Scope of Exception.

The requirement of prior notice and a hearing (see supra, §657) is subject to exceptions where summary action is necessary in the public interest. (See Yakus v. United States (1944) 321 U.S. 414, 64 S.Ct. 660, 676, 88 L.Ed. 834, 858; Leslie's Pool Mart v. Department of Food & Agriculture (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1524, 273 C.R. 373, infra, §680; Pierce, 2 Admin. Law 4th, §9.6, 12:14; C.E.B., Administrative Hearing Practice 2d, §1.38; 2 Am.Jur.2d (1994 ed.), Administrative Law §297.) The following are examples:

(1) Seizure and detention or destruction, under the police power, of dangerous property, such as diseased cattle, infected food or clothing, or instruments that can be used only for illegal purposes. (See Lawton v. Steele (1894) 152 U.S. 133, 14 S.Ct. 499, 502, 38 L.Ed. 385, 390 [state statute, allowing officers to destroy nets used in illegal fishing, upheld]; Ewing v. Mytinger & Casselberry (1950) 339 U.S. 594, 70 S.Ct. 870, 94 L.Ed. 1088 [seizure of misbranded articles under federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act]; Patrick v. Voss (1992) 7 C.A.4th 1398, 1404, 9 C.R.2d 763 [due process requires that means of compensation be available for wrongful seizure, but does not require that statute that creates procedure for seizure also provide remedy for wrongful seizure]; 14 A.L.R.3d 366 [summary destruction of gambling devices].)

(2) Seizure of property used in illegal drug trafficking. (See Health & Saf.C. 11470 et seq., 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §209 et seq.; 21 U.S.C., §881; *Calero-Toledo v. In the absence of exigent circumstances, the Due Process Clause prohibits the government in a civil forfeiture case from seizing real property without first providing notice and an opportunity to be heard. (United States v. James Daniel

(3) Summary seizure by the Insurance Commissioner of the assets of an insolvent insurance company under Ins.C. 1011. (See Financial Indem. Co. v. Superior Court (1955) 45 C.2d 395, 401, 289 P.2d 233; Rhode Island Ins. Co. v. Downey (1949) 95 C.A.2d 220, 233, 212 P.2d 965.)

(5) Seizure of property of enemy aliens in wartime. (See Estate of Stagnaro (1951) 107 C.A.2d 98, 102, 236 P.2d 593; infra, §1326.)

(6) Suspension of a driver's license on the licensee's refusal to take an intoxication test. (See Mackey v. Montrym (1979) 443 U.S. 1, 99 S.Ct. 2612, 2617, 2621, 61 L.Ed.2d 321 [due process satisfied by provision for prompt postsuspension hearing]; 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses, §427.)

(8) (New) Termination of at-will public employee for nondisciplinary reasons. See *Kreutzer v. X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

4. Summary Action Without Prior Hearing.

a. In General.

2. Right to Subsequent Hearing.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 679

[§ 679] Right to Subsequent Hearing.

Where summary action is authorized (see supra, §678), there must be notice and an opportunity for a hearing at some stage; i.e., the party is entitled to a subsequent hearing to review the determination and obtain redress if it is found improper, and this subsequent opportunity for a hearing satisfies due process. (Ewing v. Mytinger & Casselberry (1950) 339 U.S. 594, 70 S.Ct. 870, 94 L.Ed. 1088; Financial Indem. Co. v. Superior Court (1955) 45 C.2d 395, 401, 289 P.2d 233; Stewart v. San Mateo (1966) 246 C.A.2d 273, 286, 54 C.R. 599 [ordinance regulating private patrol officers, providing for summary revocation or suspension of permit but with subsequent hearing before administrative agency; valid]; cf. Samuels v. McCurdy (1925) 267 U.S. 188, 45 S.Ct. 264, 69 L.Ed. 568 [no specific statutory hearing is necessary; sufficient that defendant has right to seek injunction against destruction of seized property]; Patton v. Board of Harbor Commrs. (1970) 13 C.A.3d 536, 541, 91 C.R. 832 [city charter validly denied hearing on 5-day suspension of public employee for insubordination; detriment was too small to support constitutional right to challenge minor disciplinary action].)

In Carrera v. Bertaini (1976) 63 C.A.3d 721, 134 C.R. 14, the court held invalid the provision of P.C. 597f (and a local ordinance based on it) for the summary impoundment of neglected farm animals without a hearing. The owner's action to review the seizure was not an adequate remedy, for the impoundment immediately resulted in substantial charges for impound fees and costs, which, at the time of the superior court trial 6 weeks later, amounted to $ 2,477. (63 C.A.3d 729.)

In Menefee & Son v. Department of Food & Agriculture (1988) 199 C.A.3d 774, 245 C.R. 166, plaintiffs planted a crop of endive and lettuce for the purpose of producing seed, and used an unauthorized toxic chemical to control birds attacking the seedlings. Defendant, the director of the Department of Food and Agriculture, acting pursuant to former Food & Ag.C. 12648, declared the field a public nuisance, seized it, and prohibited the harvest. The section then provided that if a crop had been treated with an unauthorized economic poison that could reasonably create a health hazard or an unfair business advantage, the director could declare the crop a public nuisance, seize and hold it for 30 days, and, if no action was filed to protest the seizure, order the crop destroyed. Held, the statute violates California's Due Process Clause (Cal. Const., Art. I, §7), for the following reasons:

(a) Its application is not limited to emergency situations, but broadly applies to any misuse of chemicals. (199 C.A.3d 782.)

(b) It fails to provide for any administrative hearing; a judicial proceeding for return of the property is not a substitute for a hearing on the merits of the seizure. (199 C.A.3d 782.)

(c) Even if a judicial action could serve as a substitute, this one is deficient. It gives the owner only 30 days to sue; it does not provide compensation in the event that the seizure proves to have been wrongful; and it does not provide the necessary type of judicial hearing. "[I]f a judicial proceeding is the owner's first and only opportunity to have a hearing on the merits of the seizure, then it is essential that the department be required to bear the burden of proof on all issues and the statute must so provide." (199 C.A.3d 782.)

(d) In this case, plaintiffs brought an action for injunctive relief and/or mandamus, and the trial judge applied the usual abuse of discretion standard for review. This standard is wholly inappropriate when the owner's court appearance is his first and only opportunity to contest the merits of the seizure. "The result of the proceedings in this case is that to the date of this decision the department has not yet been required to appear before an impartial hearing officer and carry the burden of proving any of the facts upon which it relies in seizing the ... crop. It follows that the plaintiffs have not yet been accorded the minimal due process to which they are entitled before the government may interfere with their property interests." (199 C.A.3d 783.) Food & Ag.C. 12648(c) was revised in 1988 to provide that notice must be given prior to seizure, or, if the notice would result in the director's loss of control of the crop, within 5 days of seizure, and that the owner has 15 days to request a hearing before the director.

In Bryte v. La Mesa (1989) 207 C.A.3d 687, 691, 255 C.R. 64, the court, following Menefee, held that Welf.C. 8102, providing for confiscation of a deadly weapon from a person detained for a mental examination, was invalid for failure to provide prompt administrative review. The statute was amended in 1991 to expedite the review process.

In Bergeron v. Department of Health Services (1999) 71 C.A.4th 17, 24, 26, 83 C.R.2d 481, no hearing was required before withholding Medi-Cal payments pending a fraud investigation where a regulation provided procedural notice mechanisms and an opportunity to respond to withholding the notice, and a full contested hearing would be afforded if the matter went to court.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

See Corrales v. Bradstreet (2007) 153 C.A.4th 33, 60, 62 C.R.3d 440 [administrative evidentiary hearing before Labor Commissioner was not required before penalties could be imposed on employer for denying meal and rest breaks to employees; employer had ability to render decision inconsequential by filing appeal in trial court, where employer would have full due process protections and commissioner's decision was entitled to no weight].

4. Summary Action Without Prior Hearing.

a. In General.

3. Distinction: Summary Action Unnecessary.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 680

[§ 680] Distinction: Summary Action Unnecessary.

In Phillips v. San Luis Obispo County Dept. of Animal Regulation (1986) 183 C.A.3d 372, 228 C.R. 101, plaintiffs' dog, which had bitten several children, was seized by defendant County Department of Animal Regulation, and after an informal hearing, was ordered destroyed. Plaintiff petitioned for mandamus to vacate the destruction order, contending that the regulatory ordinances were unconstitutional in failing to provide notice and a hearing to the owner before the animal was destroyed. Held, the writ should issue.

(a) "Principles of due process apply to all takings of non de minimis property, including such disparate objects as farm animals ... , a motorcycle engine ... , a tortoise ... , or a newsrack. ... We think that dogs, being personal property and having economic value, are also included within its reach." (183 C.A.3d 377, citing Carrera v. Bertaini (1976) 63 C.A.3d 721, 134 C.R. 14, supra, §679, Hughes v. Neth (1978) 80 C.A.3d 952, 146 C.R. 37, infra, §1060, and Kash Enterprises v. Los Angeles (1977) 19 C.3d 294, 138 C.R. 53, 562 P.2d 1302, supra, §659.)

(b) Simpson v. Los Angeles (1953) 40 C.2d 271, 253 P.2d 464, approving an ordinance permitting summary disposition of unclaimed dogs, is distinguishable; here, the owners claimed the dog, contested the order, and demanded a hearing. (183 C.A.3d 378.)

(c) Even where summary seizure is necessary to protect others (e.g., where a dog is rabid), there must be a prompt postseizure hearing. (183 C.A.3d 379, citing Kash and Carrera, supra.)

(d) The informal "courtesy hearing" in this case did not satisfy due process; the statute or ordinance must provide for notice and hearing. (183 C.A.3d 380, citing Kash, supra, and Merco Const. Engineers v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. of Los Angeles (1969) 274 C.A.2d 154, 79 C.R. 23.) (See supra, §659.)

In Leslie's Pool Mart v. Department of Food & Agriculture (1990) 223 C.A.3d 1524, 273 C.R. 373, plaintiff sold swimming pool supplies, including an oxidizer used to control bacteria and algae. Defendant's employees entered plaintiff's stores and seized and quarantined the oxidizer under Food & Ag.C. 12961 et seq., on the ground that it was a pesticide, that it had not been registered as such, and that its possession and sale was therefore illegal under the Economic Poisons Act (Food & Ag.C. 12501 et seq.). Plaintiff was not given prior notice and was not given a hearing on the merits either before or after the seizure. The product was later registered under the Act and the quarantine was lifted. Held, the seizure and quarantine violated plaintiff's federal and state due process rights.

(a) Notice and a hearing are normally required before deprivation of property, but summary seizure may be permissible if extraordinary circumstances, such as an immediate threat to public health or welfare, require very prompt action. (223 C.A.3d 1531, 1532.) Here, however, defendant director knew for over a year that plaintiff was selling the oxidizer without registering it as a pesticide, and it "would be specious" to claim that there were exigent circumstances justifying summary action. (223 C.A.3d 1533.)

(b) Nor can summary action be justified on the basis of an insubstantial risk of error. The director is not likely to err as to whether a product is registered, but the question of whether the product is a pesticide that must be registered is complex. (223 C.A.3d 1533.)

(c) Defendant argues that the availability of legal relief satisfies the due process requirement of a hearing. It is unclear whether this would be sufficient under the federal Constitution. However, under California law, when summary action is allowed, a prompt postseizure administrative hearing is required; a judicial remedy alone does not satisfy due process. (223 C.A.3d 1532, 1536.)

b. Obscene Matter.

1. Valid Seizure or Injunction.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 681

[§ 681] Valid Seizure or Injunction.

Summary seizure of obscene matter under a search warrant may be authorized by a statute that complies with the requirements of due process. Thus, in Aday v. Superior Court (1961) 55 C.2d 789, 797, 13 C.R. 412, 362 P.2d 47, the statutory procedure was upheld where it contained the following protective provisions: (1) a preliminary ex parte determination of the issue of obscenity on probable cause before issuance of the warrant; (2) an opportunity for a determination after seizure by controverting the warrant; (3) a final judicial determination of the issue in the subsequent criminal proceeding; (4) availability of such remedies as mandamus to regain possession of the property found not obscene.

In Kingsley Books v. Brown (1957) 354 U.S. 436, 77 S.Ct. 1325, 1 L.Ed.2d 1469, the Court approved a New York statute authorizing an injunction against possession or sale of obscene matter and its surrender for destruction. Distinguishing cases on injunction against future publications (supra, §§359, 363 et seq.), the Court pointed out that seizure and destruction of instruments of ascertained wrongdoing is a well established practice (77 S.Ct. 1329, 1 L.Ed.2d 1473), and that the injunction proceeding, with a hearing and opportunity to refrain from violation of the law, is practically less objectionable than the continual threat of prosecution for any actual sale. There is no constitutional objection to this practice. "It is not for this Court thus to limit the State in resorting to various weapons in the armory of the law. Whether proscribed conduct is to be visited by a criminal prosecution or by a qui tam action or by injunction or by some or all of these remedies in combination, it is a matter within the legislature's range of choice." (77 S.Ct. 1328, 1 L.Ed.2d 1474.) (See Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton (1973) 413 U.S. 49, 93 S.Ct. 2628, 2634, 37 L.Ed.2d 446, 454 [injunction proceeding; no restraint on exhibition until after full adversary proceeding and judicial determination by highest state court]; Heller v. New York (1973) 413 U.S. 483, 93 S.Ct. 2789, 37 L.Ed.2d 745 [copy of film seized only to preserve it as evidence; no restraint on exhibition].)

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

4. Summary Action Without Prior Hearing.

b. Obscene Matter.

2. Invalid Procedure.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 682

[§ 682] Invalid Procedure.

The procedure under a Missouri statute was held lacking in due process safeguards in Marcus v. Search Warrants of Property at 104 East Tenth St., Kansas City, Missouri (1961) 367 U.S. 717, 81 S.Ct. 1708, 6 L.Ed.2d 1127. A magistrate issued a search warrant on probable cause to believe that obscene matter was being kept at a place. The material seized was chosen on the spot by police officers acting on their own judgment without guides or standards, and it was suppressed for a 2-month period before the hearing. At that time, it appeared that among the publications taken were texts on sex problems and marriage, and only one-third of the total were finally held obscene. The Court pointed out that the line between obscene matter and constitutionally protected publications is finely drawn, and that the state does not have the same freedom to adopt summary procedures as it has in dealing with liquor and gambling instruments. "Procedures which sweep so broadly and with so little discrimination are obviously deficient in techniques required by the Due Process Clause." (81 S.Ct. 1717, 6 L.Ed.2d 1137.) Kingsley Books v. Brown (1957) 354 U.S. 436, 77 S.Ct. 1325, 1 L.Ed.2d 1469, supra, §681, was distinguished on the grounds that the New York injunction ran only against a named publication, did not authorize restraint before determination of the issue of obscenity, and provided for a speedy judicial decision. (81 S.Ct. 1717, 6 L.Ed.2d 1138.)

In A Quantity of Copies of Books v. Kansas (1964) 378 U.S. 205, 84 S.Ct. 1723, 12 L.Ed.2d 809, a Kansas statute provided for filing a verified charge on information and belief that there was an obscene book in the county; then seizure of the book and impounding; then an adversary hearing, and, if obscenity was found, destruction. The Kansas Attorney General, believing (correctly) that the statutory scheme did not meet the requirements of Marcus, went further, in this case, identifying titles of a group of novels and filing copies of seven representative books with passages marked. The judge also went beyond the statute by conducting a 45-minute ex parte inquiry, looking at the books and finding them obscene. The seizure followed, and then the hearing, resulting in a determination that all were obscene and an order for destruction. Held, reversed, but for differing reasons. The first opinion, with four justices, followed Marcus, holding that a hearing after seizure is not sufficient: "For if seizure of books precedes an adversary determination of their obscenity, there is danger of abridgment of the right of the public in a free society to unobstructed circulation of nonobscene books." (84 S.Ct. 1727, 12 L.Ed.2d 814.) Two other justices thought the books were not obscene, but two dissenters argued that the Kingsley Books test was met by the statute, and that the distinction between hearing before and after seizure was unrealistic. (84 S.Ct. 1728, 12 L.Ed.2d 815.) (See Roaden v. Kentucky (1973) 413 U.S. 496, 93 S.Ct. 2796, 2801, 37 L.Ed.2d 757, 764 [seizure without warrant].)

In Fort Wayne Books v. Indiana (1989) 489 U.S. 46, 109 S.Ct. 916, 103 L.Ed.2d 34, the state filed a civil action against the operator of an adult bookstore, alleging that it had violated the state Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations statute (RICO) by repeated violations of the state obscenity laws. The state sought forfeiture of all property used in the racketeering activity and moved for immediate seizure of all property subject to forfeiture. After an ex parte hearing, the trial court ordered immediate seizure of the bookstore and its contents. Held, the pretrial seizure was improper.

(a) A single copy of a book or film may be seized on a showing of probable cause, but wholesale seizure of expressive material without a prior adversarial hearing is improper. (109 S.Ct. 927, 103 L.Ed.2d 51, 52, citing Marcus and Heller v. New York (1973) 413 U.S. 483, 93 S.Ct. 2789, 37 L.Ed.2d 745.)

(b) Even assuming that probable cause exists to believe that the items are obscene and that a RICO violation has occurred, and thus that the bookstore and its contents are forfeitable, pretrial seizure is still unconstitutional. The materials are presumptively protected by the First Amendment, and seizure is allowed only after the claimed justification is established in an adversary proceeding. (109 S.Ct. 928, 929, 103 L.Ed.2d 53, 54.)

c. Termination of Utility Service.

[§ 683] Telephone Service.

In Sokol v. Public Util. Com. (1966) 65 C.2d 247, 53 C.R. 673, 418 P.2d 265, a Public Utilities Commission regulation required that a communications facility discontinue service to any subscriber the utility had reasonable cause to believe was using the service in connection with unlawful activity, and further provided that a written notice from a law enforcement official would constitute reasonable cause. On discontinuance, the subscriber's sole remedy was a complaint filed with the Commission, with no civil liability for damages on the part of the facility. Pursuant to a request of the San Francisco Chief of Police, asserting reasonable cause to believe that petitioner's telephones were used in connection with illegal bookmaking, the telephone company discontinued service. Held, the regulation was unconstitutional.

(a) State action. The Commission rule required removal on police request, and state officials were involved, despite the fact that a telephone company employee physically disconnected the phone. (65 C.2d 252.)

(b) Invalid summary action. Due process depends on the circumstances. The state argued that bookmakers rely almost exclusively on the telephone, and that abrupt discontinuance without advance notice is effective in suppressing the illegal enterprise. But it is equally effective in destroying a legal business to which telephone service is indispensable. (65 C.2d 254.) And restraint on communication by a subscriber affects his or her right of free speech. (65 C.2d 255.) If police had wished to search the premises, they would have had to show probable cause to a magistrate and get a search warrant. A comparable requirement, with the very brief delay involved, would not preclude effective law enforcement. (65 C.2d 255.)

(c) Valid summary action. The court laid down guidelines for a proper regulation: "[W]hatever new procedure is hereafter devised must at a minimum require that the police obtain prior authorization to secure the termination of service by satisfying an impartial tribunal that they have probable cause to act, in a manner reasonably comparable to a proceeding before a magistrate to obtain a search warrant. In addition, after service is terminated the subscriber must be promptly afforded the opportunity to challenge the allegations of the police and to secure restoration of the service." (65 C.2d 256.) (See 30 A.L.R.3d 1143 [refusal of service for gamblers]; 32 A.L.R.3d 1041 [refusal of service because of improper language].)

Following the decision in Sokol, the Commission adopted a rule requiring probable cause, notice, and a hearing, which the Supreme Court held valid, rejecting a number of constitutional challenges. (See Goldin v. Public Util. Com. (1979) 23 C.3d 638, 647, 670, 153 C.R. 802, 592 P.2d 289.)

4. Summary Action Without Prior Hearing.

c. Termination of Utility Service.

2. Municipal Utility Service.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 684

[§ 684] Municipal Utility Service.

Memphis Light, Gas & Water Div. v. Craft (1978) 436 U.S. 1, 98 S.Ct. 1554, 56 L.Ed.2d 30, holds that a customer's entitlement to continued service from a municipal utility is a property interest and that due process requires notice and an opportunity for a hearing before service can be terminated. The procedure found invalid was a final notice contained in bills for overdue charges, stating that service would be discontinued if payment was not made by a certain date.

(a) Property interest. Under state law, a public utility cannot terminate service at will, but only "for cause"; hence the customer has "a legitimate claim of entitlement" to protection of the Due Process Clause. (98 S.Ct. 1561, 56 L.Ed.2d 40.)

(b) Notice. "The purpose of notice under the Due Process Clause is to apprise the affected individual of, and permit adequate preparation for, an impending hearing. Notice in a case of this kind does not comport with constitutional requirements when it does not advise the customer of the availability of a procedure for protesting a proposed termination of utility service as unjustified." (98 S.Ct. 1563, 56 L.Ed.2d 42.)

(c) Hearing. Applying the balancing approach of Mathews v. Eldridge (1976) 424 U.S. 319, 96 S.Ct. 893, 47 L.Ed.2d 18, infra, §687, "some administrative procedure for entertaining customer complaints prior to termination is required to afford reasonable assurance against erroneous or arbitrary withholding of essential services." (98 S.Ct. 1564, 56 L.Ed.2d 44.)

(d) Common-law remedies inadequate. Ordinarily, due process requires the opportunity for a hearing prior to deprivation of a significant property interest. The factors that have justified exceptions (see supra, §680) are not present here. Judicial remedies are unsuitable to the resolution of factual disputes typically involving sums of money too small to justify engaging counsel or bringing a suit. (98 S.Ct. 1565, 1566, 56 L.Ed.2d 45, 46.)

Three justices dissented, finding no justification in the record for this "procedural innovation" based on hypothetical examples, and suggesting that the new rule is based on a policy determination rather than construction of the Constitution.

In Perez v. San Bruno (1980) 27 C.3d 875, 880, 68 C.R. 114, 616 P.2d 1287, the court said: "We here confront the question whether a municipality providing water, sewer, and garbage disposal services to its citizens and billing therefor by means of a single unified statement may constitutionally resort to the remedy of cessation of water service when a citizen, refusing to pay that component of the unified billing relating to garbage collection and disposal services but paying the other components thereof, fails to make full and complete payment for municipal services rendered."

Plaintiff, alleging that she disposes of all garbage by means of sanitary recycling techniques, refused to pay that portion of the unified bill, and defendant city, acting pursuant to its city code, shut off her water service. Held, there was no violation of substantive or procedural due process. The city, to encourage and support all components of its public health and sanitation program, has made continuance of all the offered utility services contingent on payment for all. This system is reasonably related to the legitimate goal sought to be achieved. (27 C.3d 892.)

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

4. Summary Action Without Prior Hearing.

d. Denial of Welfare Aid.

1. Termination of Aid.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 685

[§ 685] Termination of Aid.

(1) Goldberg Rule. Goldberg v. Kelly (1970) 397 U.S. 254, 90 S.Ct. 1011, 25 L.Ed.2d 287, involved New York's federally assisted program of Aid to Families with Dependent Children. Its administrators allowed termination of aid without prior notice and hearing, affording only a subsequent hearing with judicial review. Held, refusal to give a prior evidentiary hearing is a denial of procedural due process.

(a) Welfare benefits as a right. Welfare benefits are even more entitled to constitutional protection than unemployment compensation, tax exemption, or public employment. (90 S.Ct. 1017, 25 L.Ed.2d 296.) "Thus the crucial factor in this context--a factor not present in the case of the blacklisted government contractor, the discharged government employee, the taxpayer denied a tax exemption, or virtually anyone else whose governmental entitlements are ended--is that termination of aid pending resolution of a controversy over eligibility may deprive an eligible recipient of the very means by which to live while he waits. Since he lacks independent resources, his situation becomes immediately desperate. His need to concentrate upon finding the means for daily subsistence, in turn, adversely affects his ability to seek redress from the welfare bureaucracy." (90 S.Ct. 1018, 25 L.Ed.2d 297.) The governmental interest in avoiding payment to judgment-proof ineligible persons does not override the recipient's interest; the state has other weapons, e.g., prompt hearings to cut down costs. (90 S.Ct. 1019, 25 L.Ed.2d 298.)

(b) Nature of required hearing. The constitutional requirement of notice and a hearing, in the present context, means that a welfare recipient must have timely and adequate notice detailing the reasons for a proposed termination, and an effective opportunity to defend by confronting any adverse witnesses and by presenting his or her own arguments and evidence orally. (90 S.Ct. 1020, 25 L.Ed.2d 298.) Counsel need not be provided, but the recipient must be allowed to appear with an attorney of his or her choice. (90 S.Ct. 1022, 25 L.Ed.2d 299.) The decision must rest solely on legal rules and evidence adduced at the hearing, and the officer should state the reasons for the determination and indicate the evidence relied on. (90 S.Ct. 1022, 25 L.Ed.2d 301.) The officer must be impartial. Prior involvement in the case will not necessarily bar the officer from hearing it, but he or she should not have participated in making the determination under review. (90 S.Ct. 1022, 25 L.Ed.2d 301.)

(c) Invalidity of New York procedure. The state uses a 7-day notice by letter, and a personal conference with a caseworker, to convey the notice and its basis. But it does not permit recipients to appear personally to present evidence orally and confront or cross-examine adverse witnesses. These omissions are fatal. (90 S.Ct. 1021, 25 L.Ed.2d 299.)

A strong dissent criticized the freezing of welfare programs in constitutional directives, emphasized the need to prevent fraud in the enormous aid program, and argued that the holding might backfire. Because it may take years to get a person off relief rolls, officials will be reluctant to put persons on initially without an exhaustive investigation. (90 S.Ct. 1028, 25 L.Ed.2d 305.) (See 84 Harv. L. Rev. 100 [Goldberg]; 46 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1263 [same]; 5 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 542 [California Welfare Fair Hearings: An Adequate Remedy?]; 47 A.L.R.3d 277 [sufficiency of notice or hearing required prior to termination of welfare benefits]; 3 Rotunda 2d, §17.9.)

(2) California Programs. Wheeler v. Montgomery (1970) 397 U.S. 280, 90 S.Ct. 1026, 25 L.Ed.2d 307, dealing with the California program, followed Goldberg.

In McCullough v. Terzian (1970) 2 C.3d 647, 651, 87 C.R. 195, 470 P.2d 4, the court, on the authority of Goldberg and Wheeler, held California's Department of Social Welfare hearing procedures defective. (See 47 A.L.R.3d 277.) However, the requirements of notice and of a hearing, in English, were held to comply with the requirements of due process even though the recipient is literate in Spanish and not in English. Non-English-speaking persons have access to numerous sources for language assistance. (Guerrero v. Carleson (1973) 9 C.3d 808, 813, 109 C.R. 201, 512 P.2d 833; see 61 Cal. L. Rev. 1405.)

The guidelines of Goldberg and McCullough were applied in Jennings v. Jones (1985) 165 C.A.3d 1083, 212 C.R. 134. Defendant county terminated general assistance welfare benefits after a hearing at which the caseworker who made the decision was not present and could not be compelled to attend. Held, this predetermination hearing mechanism violated due process. Although the hearing need not provide all the elements of a judicial or quasi-judicial trial, the minimal requirements of confrontation and right of cross-examination must be met, and were denied here. (165 C.A.3d 1088, 1089, 1090.) "The appearance at the hearing of a file custodian does not, by itself, satisfy the requirement of confrontation nor provide for meaningful cross-examination. The recipient whose benefits are being terminated cannot cross-examine a file. Nor can there be any meaningful cross-examination of a temporary custodian who did not participate in the decision to terminate benefits, and who has no independent knowledge of the case." (165 C.A.3d 1090.)

[§ 686] Denial of Application for Aid.

The Goldberg requirement of a hearing on termination of benefits (see supra, §685) does not apply to the initial denial of an application. In view of the "wide spectrum of benefits" available to persons (e.g., public employment, public education, tax exemptions, licenses), a routine requirement of an evidentiary hearing on each denial would place an overwhelming burden on government. (Zobriscky v. Los Angeles (1972) 28 C.A.3d 930, 933, 105 C.R. 121 [pointing out, however, that on a proper showing an improper denial may be reviewed and an evidentiary hearing ordered].) e. Termination of Disability Benefits.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 687

[§ 687] Termination of Disability Benefits.

Mathews v. Eldridge (1976) 424 U.S. 319, 96 S.Ct. 893, 47 L.Ed.2d 18, involved the Social Security Act's provisions for disability benefits to workers. Eligibility is not based on financial need, and is entirely unrelated to the worker's income or support from other sources. The determination whether a disability exists and when it ceases is made by a state agency, which communicates with the disabled worker, obtains information from him or her and from medical sources, and gives the worker full opportunity to review medical reports and submit additional evidence. The agency's determination is subject to reconsideration on request of the worker; on denial the worker has a right to an evidentiary hearing before an administrative law judge, and ultimately to judicial review; and if the benefits are found to have been improperly terminated, the worker is entitled to retroactive payments.

In the instant case, Eldridge was awarded disability benefits in June, 1968. On a review in March, 1972, he was notified of termination. He did not seek reconsideration, but instead brought an action in the federal district court, contending that Goldberg v. Kelly (1970) 397 U.S. 254, 90 S.Ct. 1011, 25 L.Ed.2d 287, supra, §685, established his right to an evidentiary hearing prior to termination. Held, there is no such right.

(a) Implicit in prior decisions of the Court is the principle that the continued receipt of social security disability benefits is a statutorily created "property interest" protected by the Fifth Amendment. (96 S.Ct. 901, 47 L.Ed.2d 32.) The court has consistently held that some form of hearing is required before an individual can be finally deprived of a property interest. (96 S.Ct. 902, 47 L.Ed.2d 32.)

(b) The issue here is whether due process requires an evidentiary hearing prior to the initial termination of benefits. Goldberg is the only case holding that such a hearing is required; Fuentes v. Shevin (1972) 407 U.S. 67, 92 S.Ct. 1983, 32 L.Ed.2d 556, 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §249, merely spoke of something more than an ex parte proceeding before a clerk. (96 S.Ct. 902, 47 L.Ed.2d 32, also citing Bell v. Burson (1971) 402 U.S. 535, 91 S.Ct. 1586, 29 L.Ed.2d 90, supra, §662.) Identification of the specific dictates of due process generally requires consideration of three distinct factors:

(1) The private interest that will be affected by the official action. As in Goldberg, the sole interest of the recipient is in the uninterrupted receipt of income pending final administrative decision on his or her claim; but, unlike the situation in Goldberg, disability benefits are not based on financial need; hence the potential deprivation is generally likely to be less than in Goldberg, even though the long delay (over 1 year) of the administrative process makes it significant. (96 S.Ct. 905, 906, 47 L.Ed.2d 36.)

(2) The fairness and reliability of existing predetermination procedures. In welfare entitlement, a wide variety of information may be relevant; but in disability the decision in most cases turns on unbiased medical reports by physical specialists, with little reason to question credibility or veracity, and there is therefore less value in an evidentiary hearing. (96 S.Ct. 907, 47 L.Ed.2d 38.)

(3) The government's interest. A substantial expense would be incurred in providing evidentiary hearings, and the public interest in conserving scarce fiscal and administrative resources must be considered. More than that, "[t]he ultimate balance involves a determination as to when, under our constitutional system, judicial-type procedures must be imposed upon administrative action to assure fairness. ... The judicial model of an evidentiary hearing is neither a required, nor even the most effective, method of decisionmaking in all circumstances. ... In assessing what process is due in this case, substantial weight must be given to the good-faith judgments of the individuals charged by Congress with the administration of the social welfare system that the procedures they have provided assure fair consideration of the entitlement claims of individuals. ... This is especially so where, as here, the prescribed procedures not only provide the claimant with an effective process for asserting his claim prior to any administrative action, but also assure a right to an evidentiary hearing, as well as to subsequent judicial review, before the denial of his claim becomes final." (96 S.Ct. 909, 47 L.Ed.2d 41.) (See 26 Stanf. L. Rev. 549 [application of Goldberg requirements to termination of social security benefits].)

4. Summary Action Without Prior Hearing.

f. Disciplinary Action Against Students.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 688

[§ 688] In General.

(1) Nature of Rights. Students in colleges and schools have constitutionally protected rights (see supra, §487 et seq.), and in addition are entitled to due process in disciplinary proceedings taken against them. Notice of the charges and grounds, and a hearing adequate for the circumstances, are essential; but there is no requirement of a judicial-type hearing with the right to counsel, the right of cross-examination or observance of the rules of evidence, and the privilege against self-incrimination. (See Goldberg v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1967) 248 C.A.2d 867, 881, 57 C.R. 463; Charles S. v. Board of Education (1971) 20 C.A.3d 83, 89, 97 C.R. 422; 24 Cal. Western L. Rev. 65 [university student's right to retain counsel for disciplinary proceeding]; 48 So. Cal. L. Rev. 836 [privilege against self-incrimination]; for statutory procedure, see infra, §690.)

(2) Expulsion or Dismissal. Expulsion of a student for a major infraction of regulations requires notice and a hearing, and, if the hearing is not directly before the governing board, findings. (Perlman v. Shasta Joint Junior College Dist. Bd. of Trustees (1970) 9 C.A.3d 873, 879, 883, 88 C.R. 563 [expulsion order was properly nullified by lower court on showing that board was biased and had decided to expel student before hearing]; Wong v. Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1972) 22 C.A.3d 763, 99 C.R. 531 [dismissal of student for cheating; procedure fully complied with due process requirements]; 58 A.L.R.2d 903 [right of student to hearing before suspension or expulsion]; 55 Proof of Facts 3d 313 [improper expulsion of student].)

In Board of Curators of University of Missouri v. Horowitz (1978) 435 U.S. 78, 98 S.Ct. 948, 55 L.Ed.2d 124, a medical school student was dismissed for failure to meet academic standards, after a number of academic reviews of her work. Held, assuming that the dismissal deprived her of a "liberty" interest in pursuing a medical career, she was not denied due process. Goss v. Lopez (1975) 419 U.S. 565, 95 S.Ct. 729, 42 L.Ed.2d 725, infra, §689, dealt with a violation of rules of conduct; failure to meet academic standards calls for far less stringent procedural requirements. The historic judgment of educators, supported by many decisions, is that formal hearings before decisionmaking bodies need not be held in the case of academic dismissals. (98 S.Ct. 953, 954, 955, 55 L.Ed.2d 132, 133, 134.) (See Regents of Univ. of Michigan v. Ewing (1985) 474 U.S. 214, 106 S.Ct. 507, 88 L.Ed.2d 523 [dismissal of student from educational program was a proper exercise of the faculty's professional judgment]; Banks v. Dominican College (1995) 35 C.A.4th 1545, 1551, 42 C.R.2d 110 [dismissal of university student from graduate teaching program, based on her unacceptable academic performance in clinical teaching program, was proper]; Perez v. Hastings College of the Law (1996) 45 C.A.4th 453, 456, 459, 53 C.R.2d 1 [dismissal of student from law school because of failure to maintain required GPA was not denial of due process where student did not show extraordinary or compelling reasons excusing his failure]; 6 Hastings Const. L. Q. 104 [Horowitz].)

(3) Suspension. The relatively minor sanction of suspension may be imposed without formal notice and hearing. Notice may be given by telephone, mail, or other appropriate method; and, if a meeting with school officials is requested, it may be informal. But the suspended student should be given an opportunity to be present at the meeting and to offer informal proof of his or her side of the case. (Charles S. v. Board of Education, supra, 20 C.A.3d 93, 94; on statutory procedure for short suspensions, see infra, §690.)

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

4. Summary Action Without Prior Hearing.

f. Disciplinary Action Against Students.

2. Due Process in Short Suspensions.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 689

[§ 689] Due Process in Short Suspensions.

In Goss v. Lopez (1975) 419 U.S. 565, 95 S.Ct. 729, 42 L.Ed.2d 725, several high school students were suspended for misconduct under a statute authorizing suspensions up to 10 days without a hearing. Held, the statute was unconstitutional.

(a) The charges, if sustained and recorded, could seriously damage the students' standing with their fellow pupils and teachers and interfere with later opportunities for higher education and employment. (95 S.Ct. 736, 42 L.Ed.2d 735.) A 10-day suspension is thus a serious event, and not de minimis; hence, it is subject to the requirements of due process. (95 S.Ct. 737, 42 L.Ed.2d 735.)

(b) "What process is due" is a practical question; the timing and content of the notice, and the nature of the hearing, will depend on appropriate accommodation of the competing interests; but "due process requires, in connection with a suspension of 10 days or less, that the student be given oral or written notice of the charges against him and, if he denies them, an explanation of the evidence the authorities have and an opportunity to present his side of the story." (95 S.Ct. 739, 740, 42 L.Ed.2d 739.)

(c) There need be no delay between the notice and the hearing; informal discussion may occur almost immediately after the misconduct, provided that, as a general rule, notice and a hearing should preclude removal from school. And there are exceptional situations, where students pose a continuing danger to persons or property or an ongoing threat of disruption, which justify immediate removal, with notice and hearing thereafter. (95 S.Ct. 740, 42 L.Ed.2d 739.)

(d) Elaborate or formal trial-type hearings are not necessary. "We stop short of construing the Due Process Clause to require, countrywide, that hearings in connection with short suspensions must afford the student the opportunity to secure counsel, to confront and cross-examine witnesses supporting the charge or to call his own witnesses to verify his version of the incident. Brief disciplinary suspensions are almost countless. To impose in each such case even truncated trial type procedures might well overwhelm administrative facilities in many places and, by diverting resources, cost more than it would save in educational effectiveness. Moreover, further formalizing the suspension process and escalating its formality and adversary nature may not only make it too costly as a regular disciplinary tool but also destroy its effectiveness as part of the teaching process." (95 S.Ct. 740, 42 L.Ed.2d 740.)

(e) This holding is limited to the short suspension not exceeding 10 days. Longer suspensions, or expulsions for the remainder of the school term, may require more formal procedures. "Nor do we put aside the possibility that in unusual situations, although involving only a short suspension, something more than the rudimentary procedures will be required." (95 S.Ct. 741, 42 L.Ed.2d 740.)

Four justices joined in a strong dissent. (95 S.Ct. 741, 42 L.Ed.2d 741.) (See Granowitz v. Redlands Unified School Dist. (2003) 105 C.A.4th 349, 356, 129 C.R.2d 410 [informal meeting of school officials, student, and student's parents to explain charges of sexual misconduct, followed by notice of suspension listing reasons for 5-day suspension, including statutes violated, satisfied due process requirements]; 89 Harv. X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

4. Summary Action Without Prior Hearing.

f. Disciplinary Action Against Students.

3. Revised Statutory Procedure.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 690

[§ 690] Revised Statutory Procedure.

(1) In General. In response to Goss v. Lopez (1975) 419 U.S. 565, 95 S.Ct. 729, 42 L.Ed.2d 725, supra, §689, the 1977 Legislature amended the Education Code to meet the due process requirements of that decision. The statutes, as subsequently amended and renumbered, are Educ.C. 48900 et seq. They apply to acts "related to school activity or school attendance occurring within a school under the jurisdiction of the superintendent or principal or occurring within any other school district." (Educ.C. 48900; see Fremont Union High School Dist. v. Santa Clara County Bd. of Education (1991) 235 C.A.3d 1182, 1186, 286 C.R. 915 ["Whether the pupil is attending his or her own school or involved in his or her own school activity is not determinative"].) (On student's performance of community service in lieu of suspension or expulsion, see Educ.C. 48900.6.)

(2) Suspension. Suspensions from school by the principal, which may not exceed 5 consecutive school days, require an informal conference at which the pupil is informed of the reason for the suspension and the evidence against him or her, and is given an opportunity to present evidence in his or her defense. (Educ.C. 48911.) Statutes specify the grounds for suspension (see Educ.C. 48900 et seq.; Granowitz v. Redlands Unified School Dist. (2003) 105 C.A.4th 349, 358, 129 C.R.2d 410 [grabbing girl's buttocks qualified as use of force and as threat to instructional process sufficient to subject student to suspension under Educ.C. 48900.5 for first time offense]), and provide a special procedure for emergency situations (see Educ.C. 48911(c); Thompson v. Sacramento City Unified School Dist. (2003) 107 C.A.4th 1352, 1363, 132 C.R.2d 748 [arguing with another student and setting fire to poster, which student was not accused of doing until 2 weeks after occurrence, did not constitute clear and present danger to persons or property sufficient to require immediate suspension of student under Educ.C. 48911, without benefit of investigation and presuspension conference]). (On suspension from class by teacher, see Educ.C. 48910; on student's performance of community service in lieu of suspension or expulsion, see Educ.C. 48900.6.)

Local school districts are authorized to establish policies that permit school officials "to conduct a meeting with the parent or guardian of a suspended pupil to discuss the causes, the duration, the school policy involved, and other matters pertinent to the suspension." (Educ.C. 48914.) When a pupil is suspended, the school must make a reasonable effort to contact his or her parent or guardian in person or by phone, and the parent or guardian must be notified in writing. (Educ.C. 48911(d).)

(3) Expulsion. This more drastic measure requires a hearing for the pupil and his or her parent or guardian before the governing board of the school district (Educ.C. 48918(a)) or a hearing officer or administrative panel (Educ.C. 48918(d)), within 30 school days from the date of the principal's recommendation for expulsion (Educ.C. 48918(a)). (See Garcia v. Los Angeles County Bd. of Education (1981) 123 C.A.3d 807, 810, 177 C.R. 29 [time provisions are mandatory and jurisdictional; school board's failure to abide by them invalidated its action]; cf. Board of Education v. Sacramento County Bd. of Education (2001) 85 C.A.4th 1321, 1329, 102 C.R.2d 872 [disagreeing with Garcia; time provisions are merely directory as evidenced by lack of provision for penalty, inclusion of provision for postponement, and stated requirement that matters be pursued with "reasonable diligence"]; on requirement that rules be adopted governing expulsion hearings in cases involving sexual assault, see Educ.C. 48918.5.) The hearing is closed unless the pupil or his or her parent or guardian requests that it be open. (Educ.C. 48918(c).)

The pupil and his or her parent or guardian have the rights to notice, to appear in person, to be represented by counsel, to inspect documents, to confront witnesses, and to question and present evidence. (Educ.C. 48918(b).) However, the power of school boards under Educ.C. 48918(i) to issue subpoenas for percipient witnesses is discretionary, not mandatory. (Woodbury v. Brown-Dempsey (2003) 108 C.A.4th 421, 432, 134 C.R.2d 124.) The technical rules of evidence do not apply, but evidence must be of the kind on "which reasonable persons are accustomed to rely in the conduct of serious affairs." A decision to expel must be supported by substantial evidence. (Educ.C. 48918(h).)

The determination is made by the governing board. (Educ.C. 48918(c).) If the hearing is held before a hearing officer or administrative panel, the officer or panel must recommend for or against expulsion; the governing board must accept a recommendation against expulsion, but may reject a recommendation for expulsion. (Educ.C. 48918(e).) A final action to expel must be taken by the governing board at a public meeting (Educ.C. 48918(j)), and may be appealed to the county board of education, which must hold a hearing and render its decision (Educ.C. 48919). The governing board's decision whether to expel a pupil ordinarily must be made within 10 school days after the conclusion of the hearing. (Educ.C. 48918(a).)

In John A. v. San Bernardino City Unified School Dist. (1982) 33 C.3d 301, 187 C.R. 472, 654 P.2d 242, plaintiff high school student was expelled for participating in a fight in which two boys were injured. At a hearing before a three-person administrative panel, plaintiff denied kicking or striking the victims, but a written report of an investigation conducted by the vice principal contained statements from six witnesses that were in direct conflict with plaintiff's testimony. Neither the victims nor any other witnesses testified at the hearing, and no explanation for their absence was offered. After the panel's recommendation for expulsion was accepted by the school board and affirmed by the county board of education, plaintiff's petition for mandamus compelling his readmission to school was denied. Held, reversed; the procedure violated former Educ.C. 48914 (now Educ.C. 48918); hence, due process claims involving denial of rights of confrontation and cross examination were not reached.

(a) The statute requires that the evidence be of the kind on which "reasonable persons are accustomed to rely in the conduct of serious affairs." "[A] reasonable person in the conduct of serious affairs will not rely solely on written statements but will demand that witnesses be produced so that their credibility may be tested and their testimony weighed against conflicting evidence when their testimony appears readily available and there is no substantial reason why their testimony may not be produced." (33 C.3d 307.)

(b) However, where the board finds that revealing witnesses' names and requiring them to testify may subject them to a substantial risk of retaliation, the witnesses are not "readily available," and the board may rely on statements and reports. (33 C.3d 308.)

(c) The following contentions are rejected: (1) that the use of school district employees (teachers from schools other than plaintiff's) to conduct the hearing denied plaintiff his right to an impartial factfinder (perfect impartiality is not required; Legislature may choose to use persons attuned to school problems), and (2) that failure of the notice to inform plaintiff that, if indigent, he was entitled to free legal assistance violated his right to counsel (right to free counsel in these situations varies throughout the state; the district was unable to determine availability of the right to plaintiff without knowing what matters he would assert at the hearing). (33 C.3d 308, 309.)

A dissent argued that (a) neither the constitutional Due Process Clauses nor the statute giving the accused the right to question witnesses who "testify at the hearing" requires confrontation and cross-examination in a school setting; and (b) if imposed, this requirement will severely erode schools' ability to maintain decorum and impose discipline, e.g., for fear of reprisal, students will refuse to give evidence; school districts will be forced to hire lawyers to prosecute and to conduct hearings; schools will be turned into mini-courthouses. (33 C.3d 316, 317.) (See T.H. v. San Diego Unified School Dist. (2004) 122 C.A.4th 1267, 1282, 1286, 19 C.R.3d 532 [school district's "zero tolerance" policy requiring principal to recommend expulsion hearing for students committing specified offenses does not violate due process or state statutes].)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) In General. Educ.C. 48900 was amended in 2008 to add that the statute applies to acts under the jurisdiction of the superintendent "of the school district."

Witkin Summary of California Law

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

4. Summary Action Without Prior Hearing.

g. Dismissal of Professors and Schoolteachers.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 691

[§ 691] Dismissal of Professors and Schoolteachers.

In Board of Regents of State Colleges v. Roth (1972) 408 U.S. 564, 92 S.Ct. 2701, 33 L.Ed.2d 548, R, a university teacher hired for a fixed term of one academic year, was informed that he would not be rehired. Held, the failure to grant him a hearing or to state reasons for the determination was not a denial of due process.

(a) Where a protected interest is involved, there is a right to some kind of prior hearing before deprivation of that interest. But the interest must be one that comes within the Fourteenth Amendment's protection of "liberty" or "property." (92 S.Ct. 2706, 33 L.Ed.2d 557.)

(b) There was no deprivation of liberty. The state made no charge against his good name as in Wisconsin v. Constantineau (1971) 400 U.S. 433, 91 S.Ct. 507, 27 L.Ed.2d 515, supra, §659, nor did it impose a stigma or other disability that would foreclose other employment opportunities. (92 S.Ct. 2707, 33 L.Ed.2d 558.) The record did not show that the decision was improperly based on the exercise of First Amendment rights. (92 S.Ct. 2708, 33 L.Ed.2d 559.) There was merely a termination of employment; and "[i]t stretches the concept too far to suggest that a person is deprived of 'liberty' when he simply is not rehired in one job but remains as free as before to seek another." (92 S.Ct. 2708, 33 L.Ed.2d 560.)

(c) There was no deprivation of property. Although property interests protected by procedural due process extend beyond ownership of tangibles, and include some specific benefits (e.g., welfare aid, under Goldberg rule, supra, §685), there must be a legitimate claim of entitlement to the benefit, not merely an abstract need for it or a unilateral expectation of it. (92 S.Ct. 2709, 33 L.Ed.2d 561.) Here, the statute that created the interest made no provision for reemployment. Hence, R simply had an abstract concern in his being rehired, but no property interest sufficient to require a hearing on the decision not to rehire. (92 S.Ct. 2710, 33 L.Ed.2d 561.) (See 24 Hastings L. J. 1253.)

On the other hand, if (1) the employment is under a system of tenure, by express agreement or by implied contract, or (2) the dismissal or refusal to rehire is a retaliation for exercise of First Amendment rights, refusal of a hearing is a denial of due process. (Perry v. Sindermann (1972) 408 U.S. 593, 92 S.Ct. 2694, 2698, 2700, 33 L.Ed.2d 570, 579; see Bekiaris v. Board of Education (1972) 6 C.3d 575, 586, 100 C.R. 16, 493 P.2d 480; Zumwalt v. Trustees of Calif. State Colleges (1973) 33 C.A.3d 665, 678, 109 C.R. 344.) (On adequacy of hearing, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §292 et seq.; on discharge of nontenured employees, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §307 et seq.)

Brown v. State Personnel Bd. (1985) 166 C.A.3d 1151, 213 C.R. 53, holds that extreme delay in instituting a disciplinary proceeding may preclude dismissal of a professor. Four years after discovery of allegations that plaintiff associate professor had been guilty of sexual harassment of female students, formal charges were made, and the administrative proceeding resulted in dismissal. Held, plaintiff was entitled to reinstatement.

(a) Govt.C. 19635 contains a 3-year statute of limitations on punitive action against a state employee for any cause based on any civil service law of the state. This section clearly does not apply to the present case. (166 C.A.3d 1157, 1158.)

(b) The doctrine of laches does apply to administrative proceedings. (166 C.A.3d 1158, citing Gates v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1979) 94 C.A.3d 921, 156 C.R. 791, 9 Cal. Proc. (4th), Administrative Proceedings, §97.) Unreasonable delay can be found as a matter of law where the delay is longer than the period of the statute of limitations in analogous cases at law. (166 C.A.3d 1159, citing In re Marriage of Modnick (1983) 33 C.3d 897, 909, 191 C.R. 629, 663 P.2d 187, 8 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attack on Judgment in Trial Court, §229.) Hence, the 3-year period of Govt.C. 19635 is relevant. "We borrow this period and hold that unless excused, a delay in the initiation of disciplinary proceedings for more than three years is unreasonable as a matter of law." (166 C.A.3d 1160.)

(c) Prejudice is established by detrimental reliance on the status quo. (166 C.A.3d 1162.) Here, in the absence of contrary proof, it must be assumed that plaintiff's advancement to tenure led him to devote his energies to this college and to forego other employment opportunities. "The loss of four years at the outset of an academic career is a considerable change of position in reliance upon the status quo." (166 C.A.3d 1163.) (See California Teachers Assn. v. California (1999) 20 C.4th 327, 338, 84 C.R.2d 425, 975 P.2d 622, supra, §661 [Educ.C. 44944(e)], requiring dismissed or suspended teachers to pay one-half cost of pretermination hearing, is invalid on its face); Webster v. Trustees of Calif. State University (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1456, 1462, 1463, 24 C.R.2d 150 [tenured state university professor over age 70 who applied for continuation of his tenure under 5 Cal. Code Reg. 43662, but who was terminated by university for substandard job performance, had vested right in continuation of his employment]; Picton v. Anderson Union High School Dist. (1996) 50 C.A.4th 726, 733, 734, 57 C.R.2d 829 [school district had duty to notify Commission on Teacher Credentialing of teacher's resignation and to provide Committee of Credentials with facts that were cause of disciplinary action; portion of agreement between teacher and district that would foreclose transmission of facts was illegal as matter of public policy].)

Witkin Summary of California Law

X. DUE PROCESS OF LAW

F. Procedural Due Process in Administrative Proceedings.

4. Summary Action Without Prior Hearing.

h. Punitive Action Against Civil Service Employee.

1. In General.

7 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 692

[§ 692] In General.

(1) Balancing of Interests. The statutory procedure for discipline of a civil service employee (Govt.C. 19570 et seq.) formerly called for a simple notification of the action taken, with an evidentiary hearing after the discipline was imposed. In Skelly v. State Personnel Bd. (1975) 15 C.3d 194, 124 C.R. 14, 539 P.2d 774, the procedure was held unconstitutional.

(a) Property interest. A permanent civil service employee has a property interest in the continuation of his or her employment, which is protected by due process. (15 C.3d 206, citing Board of Regents of State Colleges v. Roth (1972) 408 U.S. 564, 92 S.Ct. 2701, 33 L.Ed.2d 548, supra, §691.)

(b) Test of procedural due process in disciplinary procedures. The strict theory of Sniadach v. Family Finance Corp. of Bay View (1969) 395 U.S. 337, 89 S.Ct. 1820, 23 L.Ed.2d 349, and Fuentes v. Shevin (1972) 407 U.S. 67, 92 S.Ct. 1983, 32 L.Ed.2d 556, that in the case of a significant deprivation of a property interest there must be prior notice and hearing except in extraordinary circumstances (see supra, §646) has given way to a less inflexible approach: The timing and content of the notice and the nature of the hearing will depend on an appropriate accommodation of the competing interests involved. (15 C.3d 209, citing Goss v. Lopez (1975) 419 U.S. 565, 95 S.Ct. 729, 42 L.Ed.2d 725, supra, §689.) The court in balancing the interests takes into account a number of factors, including: "whether predeprivation safeguards minimize the risk of error in the initial taking decision, whether the surrounding circumstances necessitate quick action, whether the postdeprivation hearing is sufficiently prompt, whether the interim loss incurred by the person affected is substantial, and whether such person will be entitled to adequate compensation in the event the deprivation of his property interest proves to have been wrongful." (15 C.3d 209.)

(c) Arnett case controlling. Arnett v. Kennedy (1974) 416 U.S. 134, 94 S.Ct. 1633, 40 L.Ed.2d 15, involving the federal civil service act, is controlling. The several opinions of the justices were in disagreement on a number of matters, but they compel the conclusion that the California statute does not meet constitutional demands. "It is clear that due process does not require the state to provide the employee with a full trial-type evidentiary hearing prior to the initial taking of punitive action. However, at least six justices on the high court agree that due process does mandate that the employee be accorded certain procedural rights before the discipline becomes effective. As a minimum, these preremoval safeguards must include notice of the proposed action, the reasons therefor, a copy of the charges and materials upon which the action is based, and the right to respond, either orally or in writing, to the authority initially imposing discipline." (15 C.3d 215.) Hence, the provision for punitive action in Govt.C. 19574 violates the due process clauses of the federal and California Constitutions. (15 C.3d 215.) (See Shoemaker v. Los Angeles (1995) 37 C.A.4th 618, 629, 633, 43 C.R.2d 774 [because physician's reassignment, without reduction in pay, from chief of emergency medicine department to physician specialist did not implicate property right, due process did not require predisciplinary procedural safeguards; reviewing scope of Skelly requirements]; Dobbins v. San Diego County Civil Service Com. (1999) 75 C.A.4th 125, 131, 89 C.R.2d 39 [reassignments that were not disciplinary did not trigger hearing rights]; on right of public employee to hearing on termination of employment for alleged violation of constitutional or statutory rights, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §289 et seq.)

(2) Short Suspension. The Skelly and Arnett holdings were distinguished in Civil Service Assn. v. San Francisco (1978) 22 C.3d 552, 150 C.R. 129, 586 P.2d 162, dealing with a 4-day disciplinary suspension imposed without prior notice and opportunity for a hearing.

(a) Although a permanent employee has a property interest, due process does not require a Skelly type notice and hearing in short-term suspensions of no more than 5 days. (22 C.3d 560.) The flexible approach of Mathews v. Eldridge (1976) 424 U.S. 319, 96 S.Ct. 893, 47 L.Ed.2d 18, supra, §687, should be followed. (22 C.3d 561.)

(b) Although the risk of error may be just as great in a short suspension as in a discharge, the consequences are not, and the interim loss to the employee should not be deemed "substantial" in the absence of special circumstances not shown here. (22 C.3d 562.) Goss v. Lopez, supra, is distinguishable because of its emphasis on the permanent effect of suspension on the life of a child. (22 C.3d 563.) Hence, "the employee's interest in continued employment, viewed in the context of the shortness of the suspensions here involved and the city's competing interest in prompt action for the maintenance of discipline, does not demand an accommodation of the nature we required in Skelly." (22 C.3d 563.)

(c) The employee is, however, entitled to "some modicum of due process protection," i.e., to a procedure that will apprise him or her of the proposed action and the reasons therefor, will furnish a copy of the charges and materials on which the action is based, and will give him the right to respond "either during the suspension or within a reasonable time thereafter." (22 C.3d 564.) This kind of procedure will provide a meaningful hedge against erroneous action, and an opportunity for the employee to protect his or her reputation and avoid the harmful effects on his or her record of an unwarranted penalty. (22 C.3d 564.)

Three justices dissented, arguing that Skelly and Goss are not distinguishable, and that they establish a right to prior notice and opportunity for hearing. (22 C.3d 568.)

(3) Statutory Amendment. Advance written notice of an adverse action must be given. This notice must include (a) a statement of the nature and effective date of the action, (b) a statement of the reasons for the action "in ordinary language," and (c) a statement of the employees' right to answer and appeal. (Govt.C. 19574.)

State Personnel Bd.* (1975) 15 C.3d 194, 124 C.R. 14, 539 P.2d 774, text, p. 1119, does not require that every document listed in case against officer be produced prior to pretermination hearing where materials that are provided adequately explain and give substance of employer's evidence so that officer can adequately respond at pretermination stage; however, city must still provide full and fair posttermination evidentiary hearing].

[§ 693] Termination Under AWOL Statute.

Under former Govt.C. 19503 (the "AWOL statute," now Govt.C. 19996.2), a civil service employee's absence without leave for 5 days is deemed an abandonment of the job, subjecting the employee to "automatic resignation." As applied to the employee in Zike v. State Personnel Bd. (1983) 145 C.A.3d 817, 822, 823, 193 C.R. 766, the court found the statute unconstitutional in failing to provide the preremoval safeguards required by Skelly v. State Personnel Bd. (1975) 15 C.3d 194, 124 C.R. 14, 539 P.2d 774, supra, §692.

In Coleman v. Department of Personnel Administration (1991) 52 C.3d 1102, 1118, 278 C.R. 346, 805 P.2d 300, following the approach of Mathews v. Eldridge (1976) 424 U.S. 319, 96 S.Ct. 893, 47 L.Ed.2d 18, supra, §687, the issue was what procedural safeguards must be afforded a permanent civil service employee subject to Govt.C. 19996.2. "We base our resolution of this issue on our analyses of the AWOL statute itself and of pertinent decisions of the United States Supreme Court, and on our assessments of the employee's private interest in retaining employment and of the public's interest in promptly removing from the state payroll those employees who are absent without leave. We conclude that before the state invokes the AWOL statute, due process requires that it provide the employee with notice and an opportunity to respond. But because a constructive resignation under the AWOL statute differs significantly from a dismissal for cause, we also conclude that due process does not require that the employee be given a postseverance evidentiary hearing." XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS

1. Federal Constitution.
a. In General.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 694

[§ 694] In General.

(1) Restrictions on State. The Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution provides that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." (See 3 Rotunda, Chap. 18; 2 Tribe, Chap. 16; 34 Stanf. L. Rev. 453 [congressional power to implement guarantee under §5 of Amendment]; Cal. Civil Practice, 2 Civil Rights Litigation, §8:1 et seq. [text and forms for actions involving equal protection]; 16*B Am.Jur.2d* (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §777 et seq.)

(2) Restrictions on Federal Government. There is no Equal Protection Clause applicable to the federal Government. (La Belle Iron Works v. United States (1921) 256 U.S. 377, 41 S.Ct. 528, 65 L.Ed. 998; Hirabayashi v. United States (1943) 320 U.S. 81, 63 S.Ct. 1375, 1385, 87 L.Ed. 1774, 1786; Harding v. Harding (2002) 99 C.A.4th 626, 635, 121 C.R.2d 450, citing the text.)

However, the federal Constitution does require uniformity in certain instances, e.g., in the imposition of indirect taxes. (U.S. Const., Art. I, §8; see 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §106.) And it is now settled that discrimination may be so arbitrary and injurious as to be deemed a violation of due process. (See Detroit Bank v. United States (1943) 317 U.S. 329, 63 S.Ct. 297, 301, 87 L.Ed. 304, 311; Bolling v. Sharpe (1954) 347 U.S. 497, 74 S.Ct. 693, 694, 98 L.Ed. 884, 886, infra, §750; Schneider v. Rusk (1964) 377 U.S. 163, 84 S.Ct. 1187, 1190, 12 L.Ed.2d 218, 222, supra, §196; Shapiro v. Thompson (1969) 394 U.S. 618, 89 S.Ct. 1322, 1335, 22 L.Ed.2d 600, 619, infra, §735 [District of Columbia]; 3 Rotunda, §18.1; 27 Hastings Const. L. Q. 243 [Justice Murphy and the Fifth Amendment].)

In Hampton v. Wong (1976) 426 U.S. 88, 96 S.Ct. 1895, 48 L.Ed.2d 495, infra, §724, the Court said: "The federal sovereign, like the States, must govern impartially. The concept of equal justice under law is served by the Fifth Amendment's guarantee of due process, as well as by the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Although both Amendments require the same type of analysis ... , the Court of Appeals correctly stated that the two protections are not always coextensive. Not only does the language of the two Amendments differ, but more importantly, there may be overriding national interests which justify selective federal legislation that would be unacceptable for an individual State. On the other hand, when a federal rule is applicable to only a limited territory, such as the District of Columbia, or an insular possession, and when there is no special national interest involved, the Due Process Clause has been construed as having the same significance as the Equal Protection Clause." (96 S.Ct. 1904,

XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS
A. Nature and Scope of Constitutional Provisions.
1. Federal Constitution.
b. Meaning of Equal Protection.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 695

[§ 695] Meaning of Equal Protection.

(1) In General. The Equal Protection Clause requires that persons under like circumstances be given equal protection and security in the enjoyment of personal and civil rights, the acquisition and enjoyment of property, the enforcement of contracts, and the prevention and redress of wrongs, and that they be subject to similar taxes and penalties.

The Clause creates no new rights. Unlike the Due Process Clause, it does not guarantee any minimum of protection, but merely requires that persons similarly situated receive equal treatment. (Skinner v. Oklahoma (1942) 316 U.S. 535, 62 S.Ct. 1110, 1112, 86 L.Ed. 1655, 1659; In re Kotta (1921) 187 C. 27, 31, 200 P. 957; but see *Bolling v. (2) Texts and Law Reviews. The meaning of equal protection has been discussed extensively. (See 3 Rotunda, §18.2; 74 Cal. L. Rev. 1687 [substantive equality and equal opportunity]; 86 *Cal. L. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS
A. Nature and Scope of Constitutional Provisions.
1. Federal Constitution.
c. Scope of Guarantee.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 696

[§ 696] Scope of Guarantee.

(1) Persons and Entities Protected. Like the Due Process Clause (supra, §618), the equal protection guarantee extends to persons, including aliens (Wo v. Hopkins (1886) 118 U.S. 356, 6 S.Ct. 1064, 1070, 30 L.Ed. 220, 226; infra, §721) and corporations (Gulf, Colorado, & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Ellis (1897) 165 U.S. 150, 17 S.Ct. 255, 41 L.Ed. 666). But it is said that the Clause does not require equal treatment of private persons or corporations and the state. (See Tustin Heights Assn. v. Board of Supervisors of Orange (1959) 170 C.A.2d 619, 632, 339 P.2d 914, infra, §1036; California Assn. for Safety Education v. Brown (1994) 30 C.A.4th 1264, 1286, 36 C.R.2d 404 [Driver Training Penalty Assessment Fund is not "person" for purposes of Equal Protection Clause].)

Although discrimination is usually against a class of persons, a single individual may invoke the constitutional protection on a showing of unequal treatment. (See Gaines v. Canada (1938) 305 U.S. 337, 59 S.Ct. 232, 83 L.Ed. 208, infra, §749; Village of Willowbrook v. Olech (2000) 528 U.S. 562, 120 S.Ct. 1073, 1074, 145 L.Ed.2d 1060, 1062 [equal protection claim may be brought by "class of one" where plaintiff alleges that he or she has been intentionally treated differently and there is no rational basis for difference in treatment]; Genesis Environmental Services v. San Joaquin Valley Unified Air Pollution Control Dist. (2003) 113 C.A.4th 597, 606, 6 C.R.3d 574 [following Olech].)

(2) Rights Protected. The Clause protects not only property rights (infra, §709 et seq.) and personal rights (infra, §721 et seq.), but also political rights, such as the right to vote (supra, §238 et seq.).

West's Key Number Digest, Civil Rights k.k.108 et seq.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(1) Persons and Entities Protected.

Class-of-one theory: In Engquist v. Oregon Dept. of Agriculture (2008) 553 U.S. ___, 128 S.Ct. 2146, 170 L.Ed.2d 975, plaintiff employee brought a class-of-one equal protection claim alleging that her public employment was terminated for arbitrary, vindictive, and malicious reasons. The Court held that the class-of-one theory of equal protection, recognized in Village of Willowbrook v. Olech (2000) 528 U.S. 562, 120 S.Ct. 1073, 145 L.Ed.2d 1060, text, p. 70, does not apply to public employment. (128 S.Ct. 2151, 170 L.Ed.2d 983.)

(a) In constitutional analysis, there is a crucial difference between the government exercising regulatory power as a lawmaker and the government managing its internal operations as an employer. The government as employer has far broader powers than it has as a sovereign. (128 S.Ct. 2151, 170 L.Ed.2d 983.) And the government has far greater leeway in dealing with citizen employees than it does when dealing with citizens at large. (128 S.Ct. 2151, 170 L.Ed.2d 984.) Although employees do not lose their constitutional rights when they are hired by the government, "those rights must be balanced against the realities of the employment context." In striking the appropriate balance, the Court must consider "whether the asserted employee right implicates the basic concerns of the relevant constitutional provision, or whether the claimed right can more readily give way to the requirements of the government as employer." (128 S.Ct. 2152, 170 L.Ed.2d 985.)

(b) The Equal Protection Clause requires all persons subject to legislation or regulation who are in the same circumstances to be treated alike. Thus, when it appears that an individual is being singled out for different treatment by the government, the specter of arbitrary classification is raised, and equal protection requires the government to show a rational basis for the difference. Olech involved the government's regulation of property, and the cases on which it relied involved property assessment and taxation schemes. In those cases, there was a clear standard against which departures could be assessed. "There was no indication in Olech that the zoning board was exercising discretionary authority based on subjective, individualized determinations." (128 S.Ct. 2153, 170 L.Ed.2d 986.)

(c) Employment decisions are very "often subjective and individualized, resting on a wide array of factors that are difficult to articulate and quantify." Individual personalities, interpersonal relationships, and the varied needs of the workplace must be considered. (128 S.Ct. 2154, 170 L.Ed.2d 987.) "Thus, the class-of-one theory of equal protection--which presupposes that like individuals should be treated alike, and that to treat them differently is to classify them in a way that must survive at least rationality review--is simply a poor fit in the public employment context." (128 S.Ct. 2155, 170 L.Ed.2d 988.) Government offices simply could not function if every employment decision was subject to constitutional review. (128 S.Ct. 2156, 170 L.Ed.2d 989.)

(d) The class-of-one theory of equal protection is contrary to the concept of at-will government employment. Although public employees are now mostly protected by various statutory schemes preventing discharge for impermissible reasons, "a government's decision to limit the ability of public employers to fire at will is an act of legislative grace, not constitutional mandate." (128 S.Ct. 2156, 170 L.Ed.2d 989.)

Three justices joined in a dissent. (128 S.Ct. 2157, 170 L.Ed.2d 991.)

See 34 Ecology L. Q. 493 [Olech and its progeny]; 32 A.L.R.6th 457 [Application of Class-of-One Theory of Equal Protection to Public Employment].

A. Nature and Scope of Constitutional Provisions.

1. Federal Constitution.

d. State Action.

2. State Participation or Involvement.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 698

[§ 698] State Participation or Involvement.

Actions of private individuals performing state functions are subject to the Fourteenth Amendment. (See Smith v. Allwright (1944) 321 U.S. 649, 64 S.Ct. 757, 88 L.Ed. 987, supra, §252 [white primaries]; Amalgamated Food Employees Union Local 590 v. Logan Valley Plaza (1968) 391 U.S. 308, 88 S.Ct. 1601, 20 L.Ed.2d 603, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §648.) The same is true of acts of private persons where there is a significant state participation or involvement.

In Burton v. Wilmington Parking Authority (1961) 365 U.S. 715, 81 S.Ct. 856, 6 L.Ed.2d 45, the city of Wilmington, Delaware, created a Parking Authority, which leased part of the premises to a private restaurant operator. The restaurant refused service to petitioner, a Black. Held, this was state action. The land and building were publicly owned, the relationship of the restaurant to the parking facility was close--it was in fact an integral part of the facility; and the state must be considered a participant. "[W]hat we hold today is that when a State leases public property in the manner and for the purpose shown to have been the case here, the proscriptions of the Fourteenth Amendment must be complied with by the lessee as certainly as though they are binding covenants written into the agreement itself." (81 S.Ct. 862, 6 L.Ed.2d 52.) (See 5 Pepperdine L. Rev. 95 [narrowing judicial focus as alternative to Burton].)

In Moose Lodge No. 107 v. Irvis (1972) 407 U.S. 163, 92 S.Ct. 1965, 32 L.Ed.2d 627, the Moose Lodge, following its established policy, refused service at the dining room to a black guest of a member. The district court granted an injunction on the ground that issuance of a liquor license was state involvement that would make discrimination a violation of the Amendment. Thereafter, the state liquor control board adopted a regulation requiring club licensees to adhere to their constitutions and bylaws, and the Lodge then amended its bylaws to require racial restrictions on guests as well as members. Held, the issuance of the liquor license was not state involvement, but the subsequent regulation was.

(a) A private club, not publicly funded, with well-defined requirements for membership, and open only to members and invited guests, may refuse service on the basis of race without violating the Fourteenth Amendment. The fact that it receives some benefit from the state, by license or utility services, does not destroy its private character. (92 S.Ct. 1971, 32 L.Ed.2d 637.) The "symbiotic relationship between lessor and lessee" in Burton was not present here. (92 S.Ct. 1972,

32 L.Ed.2d 638.)

(b) The regulation, however, though neutral in terms, placed state sanctions behind the discriminatory membership rules. "State action, for purposes of the Equal Protection Clause, may emanate from rulings of administrative and regulatory agencies as well as from legislative or judicial action." (92 S.Ct. 1974, 32 L.Ed.2d 641.) (See Gilmore v. Montgomery (1974) 417 U.S. 556, 94 S.Ct. 2416, 2426, 41 L.Ed.2d 304, 319 [question whether city's action in allowing exclusive use of recreational facilities by all-white private schools and groups involved state action referred to district court on remand, with strong suggestion that Burton, rather than Moose Lodge, should control]; *Brentwood Academy v. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law
XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS
A. Nature and Scope of Constitutional Provisions.
1. Federal Constitution.
d. State Action.
3. Acts of State Officers.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 699

[§ 699] Acts of State Officers.

The state action prohibited by the Fourteenth Amendment need not be legislative action. The acts of an executive or judicial officer may also violate the constitutional protection, as where a state judge excludes Blacks from juries. (Ex parte Virginia (1879) 100 U.S. 339, 25 L.Ed. 676; see infra, §744.) Hence, in addition to cases arising under discriminatory state legislation, the Equal Protection Clause may be invoked in cases where state officials have acted, and sometimes where individuals have acted under the authority of state legislation. (See McFarland v. American Sugar Refining Co. (1916) 241 U.S. 79, 36 S.Ct. 498, 60 L.Ed. 899; Lane v. Wilson (1939) 307 U.S. 268, 59 S.Ct. 872, 83 L.Ed. 1281; Cochran v. Kansas (1942) 316 U.S. 255, 62 S.Ct. 1068, 86 L.Ed. 1453 [preventing party from perfecting appeal]; Cooper v. Aaron (1958) 358 U.S. 1, 78 S.Ct. 1401, 3 L.Ed.2d 5, infra, §751 [local school board, under legislative and executive pressure, sought to delay desegregation]; supra, §252.)

However, where the statute itself is fair and nondiscriminatory on its face, and the contention is that it is applied in a discriminatory manner, proof of discrimination alone is insufficient, because it may merely amount to a showing of disobedience of the state law by the officer. The evidence must show an "intentional or purposeful discrimination" so that the practical effect is equivalent to a discrimination incorporated in the statute. (Snowden v. Hughes (1944) 321 U.S. 1, 64 S.Ct. 397, 401, 88 L.Ed. 497, 502 [canvassing board, in alleged violation of state law, excluded plaintiff's certificate of candidacy for state assembly; showing held insufficient]; see Akins v. Texas (1945) 325 U.S. 398, 65 S.Ct. 1276, 89 L.Ed. 1692, infra, §744; People v. Winters (1959) 171 C.A.2d Supp. 876, 883, 342 P.2d 538; Cilderman v. Los Angeles (1998) 67 C.A.4th 1466, 1470, 80 C.R.2d 20 [following Snowden]; cf. People v. Harris (1960) 182 C.A.2d Supp. 837, 842, 5 C.R. 852 [conviction reversed for refusal to permit evidence of discrimination].)

An interesting application of this principle was given in Wade v. San Francisco (1947) 82 C.A.2d 337, 186 P.2d 181. Plaintiffs, seeking an injunction against defendant city and its enforcement officers, alleged that an ordinance prohibiting the solicitation of magazine subscriptions on streets or sidewalks was being enforced against them by arrest and prosecution, while others were allowed to engage in the same activity without molestation by the police. The police had full knowledge of the facts, and deliberately refrained from arresting other violators, with the intent to discriminate against plaintiffs. Holding the pleading good against a general demurrer, the court emphasized three points: (a) Mere laxity in enforcement of a valid law, though it results in unequal application, violates no constitutional rights. (b)

Unequal application of the law to an individual as a result of intentional and purposeful discrimination does violate constitutional rights. (c) If the proof sustains plaintiffs' allegations, an injunction is proper, but it "should be so framed as to permit the future enforcement of the ordinance against all violators without discrimination if the defendants see fit in the proper performance of their duty so to enforce it." (82 C.A.2d 339.) (See People v. Gordon (1951) 105 C.A.2d 711, 721, 234 P.2d 287 [no purposeful discriminatory enforcement of Unfair Trade Practices Act].)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law

XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS

A. Nature and Scope of Constitutional Provisions.

1. Federal Constitution.

d. State Action.

4. Judicial Action in Private Litigation.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 700

[§ 700] Judicial Action in Private Litigation.

A new and expanded theory of state action was announced in Shelley v. Kraemer (1948) 334 U.S. 1, 68 S.Ct. 836, 92 L.Ed. 1161, infra, §746. Certain property owners had entered into agreements restricting the occupancy of their lands to Whites. Petitioners, who were black, purchased and occupied parcels in the restricted area. Proceedings were then brought to restrain them from doing so, and the state court granted the requested injunctive relief. Held, the state court's judgment was a denial of equal protection.

(a) The rights to own, enjoy, and dispose of property are protected by the Fourteenth Amendment, and racial restrictions could not constitutionally be imposed by state statute or ordinance. (68 S.Ct. 841, 92 L.Ed. 1174.)

(b) The private restrictive covenants, voluntarily adhered to, involve no state action and hence do not conflict with the Constitution. But the restrictions were enforced by court order, and this was state judicial action. The state acts, within the scope of the Fourteenth Amendment, not only where its judicial officers deny procedural due process or equal protection but where in enforcing a common law rule they deny substantive rights guaranteed by the Amendment; the Amendment covers exertions of state power in all forms. (68 S.Ct. 842, 92 L.Ed. 1176.)

(c) Here, the state has made available to private individuals "the full coercive power of government to deny to petitioners, on the grounds of race or color, the enjoyment of property rights in premises which petitioners are willing and financially able to acquire and which the grantors are willing to sell. The difference between judicial enforcement and nonenforcement of the restrictive covenants is the difference to petitioners between being denied rights of property available to other members of the community and being accorded full enjoyment of those rights on an equal footing." (68 S.Ct. 845, 92 L.Ed. 1183.) (For legislation nullifying racial restrictive covenants, see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §201.)

Shelley sets forth no clear test to determine when private action becomes state action by reason of the use of judicial process to enforce or sanction it. In subsequent decisions, state courts, distinguishing the case, have refused to interfere with other kinds of private discriminatory practices. (See Newby v. Alto Riviera Apartments (1976) 60 C.A.3d 288, 295, 131 C.R. 547, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §707 [serving notice to quit, which is not process issued by court, does not constitute state action].)

In Evans v. Abney (1970) 396 U.S. 435, 90 S.Ct. 628, 24 L.Ed.2d 634, Georgia's Senator Bacon, in 1911, left a will conveying property in trust to his home city of Macon, to be used exclusively as a public park for white persons. The restriction was held unconstitutional in Evans v. Newton (1966) 382 U.S. 296, 86 S.Ct. 486, 15 L.Ed.2d 373, infra, §759. Thereafter, petitioners, the same black plaintiffs as in the earlier case, sought to have the cy pres doctrine applied by striking the racial restrictions. The Georgia courts concluded that the trust had failed and the property had reverted to the heirs of the Senator. Held, affirmed. The application of the cy pres doctrine is a matter of state law; and the state court's conclusion that the testator had no general charitable intent and only sought accomplishment of a particular purpose did not violate any constitutional rights. (90 S.Ct. 633, 24 L.Ed.2d 642.) (See dissent, citing Shelley and Reitman v. Mulkey (1967) 387 U.S. 369, 87 S.Ct. 1627, 18 L.Ed.2d 830, and arguing that enforcement of the reverter was unconstitutional.)

Witkin Summary of California Law
XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS
A. Nature and Scope of Constitutional Provisions.
1. Federal Constitution.
e. Classification of Subjects of Legislation.
1. General Principle.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 701

[§ 701] General Principle.

The equality guaranteed by the Equal Protection Clause is equality under the same conditions, and among persons similarly situated. The Legislature may make a reasonable classification of persons and businesses and other activities and pass special legislation applying to certain classes. However, the classification must not be arbitrary; it must be based on some difference in the classes having a substantial relation to a legitimate object to be accomplished. (See Gulf, Colorado, & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Ellis (1897) 165 U.S. 150, 17 S.Ct. 255, 261, 41 L.Ed. 666, 670; Morey v. Doud (1957) 354 U.S. 457, 77 S.Ct. 1344, 1349, 1 L.Ed.2d 1485, 1490, infra, §715; Reed v. Reed (1971) 404 U.S. 71, 92 S.Ct. 251, 253, 30 L.Ed.2d 225, 229, infra, §771; Superior Wheeler Cake Corp. v. Superior Court (1928) 203 C. 384, 389, 264 P. 488; Pacific Indem. Co. v. Myers (1931) 211 C. 635, 644, 296 P. 1084; Hargens v. Alcoholic Bev. Control App. Bd. (1968) 263 C.A.2d 601, 605, 69 C.R. 868; People v. Health Laboratories of North America (2001) 87 C.A.4th 442, 447, 104 C.R.2d 618, citing the text [exemption of enforcement actions by public prosecutors from SLAPP suit special motion to strike procedure (see 5 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §962) does not violate equal protection laws]; 36 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 447 [Overinclusion and Underinclusion: A New Model]; 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §808 et seq.)

In Blumenthal v. Board of Med. Examiners (1962) 57 C.2d 228, 18 C.R. 501, 368 P.2d 101, a statute required of an applicant for license as a dispensing optician either 5 years of experience in the establishment of a licensed dispensing optician or a 5-year period of license in another state. Petitioner, otherwise qualified, challenged the regulation as discriminatory. Held, mandamus granted to compel his registration.

Despite its proper objective of protecting the public against incompetent and unethical opticians, the statute is fatally discriminatory, and there is no basis for the legislative classification. "There is a complete absence of any relationship between the experience requirements sought to be imposed and the legislative effort to correct ethical abuses in the profession." (57 C.2d 234.) Further, the effect of the statute would have been to confer on currently licensed dispensing opticians the unlimited and unguided power to exclude persons from the profession, because they were under no duty to employ anyone; and they would have had virtually absolute economic control over employees required to serve under them for 5 years in order to attain professional status. (57 C.2d 235, 236.)

In McLaughlin v. Florida (1964) 379 U.S. 184, 85 S.Ct. 283, 13 L.Ed.2d 222, infra, §748, the Court rejected the holding of Pace v. Alabama (1883) 106 U.S. 583, 1 S.Ct. 637, 27 L.Ed. 207, that where different offenses are involved, and all within a class are treated alike, there is no unconstitutional discrimination. "Judicial inquiry under the Equal Protection Clause ... does not end with a showing of equal application among the members of the class defined by the legislation. The courts must reach and determine the question whether the classifications drawn in a statute are reasonable in light of its purpose--in this case, whether there is an arbitrary or invidious discrimination between those classes covered by Florida's cohabitation law and those excluded. That question is what Pace ignored and which must be faced here." (85 S.Ct. 288, 13 L.Ed.2d 228.)

In Brown v. Merlo (1973) 8 C.3d 855, 106 C.R. 388, 506 P.2d 212, infra, §795, the court, as a basis for holding the Guest Law unconstitutional, restated the modern approach to the doctrine:

(a) When a statute treats one class differently from another, there must be something more than nondiscriminatory application within the class; there must be "some rationality in the nature of the class singled out." (8 C.3d 861.)

(b) In determining the scope of the class singled out for special burdens or benefits, the court cannot confine its view to the specific statute, but must judge its operation against the background of other legislative, administrative, and judicial directives governing legal rights of similarly situated persons. (8 C.3d 862.)

XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS
A. Nature and Scope of Constitutional Provisions.
1. Federal Constitution.
e. Classification of Subjects of Legislation.
2. Statute Need Not Cover Field.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 702

[§ 702] Statute Need Not Cover Field.

A regulatory statute is not invalid merely because it does not cover the whole of a permissible field. The Legislature may recognize "degrees of evil," and deal with the more important ones. (West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish (1937) 300 U.S. 379, 57 S.Ct. 578, 585, 81 L.Ed. 703, 713; Tigner v. Texas (1940) 310 U.S. 141, 60 S.Ct. 879, 883, 84 L.Ed. 1124, 1129; United States v. Petrillo (1947) 332 U.S. 1, 67 S.Ct. 1538, 1542, 91 L.Ed. 1877, 1883; Heron v. Riley (1930) 209 C. 507, 518, 289 P. 160; Powers Farms v. Consolidated Irr. Dist. (1941) 19 C.2d 123, 131, 119 P.2d 717; Warner Bros. Pictures v. Brodel (1948) 31 C.2d 766, 777, 192 P.2d 949; see Queenside Hills Realty Co. v. Saxl (1946) 328 U.S. 80, 66 S.Ct. 850, 852, 90 L.Ed. 1096, 1098 ["The legislature is entitled to hit the evil that exists"]; Williamson v. Lee Optical of Oklahoma (1955) 348 U.S. 483, 75 S.Ct. 461, 465, 99 L.Ed. 563, 572; Werner v. Southern Calif. Associated Newspapers (1950) 35 C.2d 121, 132, 216 P.2d 825; Leavenworth Properties v. San Francisco (1987) 189 C.A.3d 986, 992, 234 C.R. 598.)

In People v. International Steel Corp. (1951) 102 C.A.2d Supp. 935, 941, 226 P.2d 587, a statute provided for the formation of air pollution control districts to reduce smog. The law prohibited discharge of an air contaminant for more than 3 minutes in 1 hour, darker in shade than No. 2 on the Ringelmann Chart of the U.S. Bureau of Mines. Defendants were convicted of a violation consisting of discharge of smoke from burning automobile bodies. They objected that the statute unreasonably discriminates in favor of one who puts a contaminant in the air of less than the criminal density, even though he or she continues for a long time and eventually discharges more contaminant than one who goes beyond the permitted density for a mere 3 minutes. But this, said the court, is the old untenable argument that the Legislature drew the line in the wrong place; there can be no classification if the line is not drawn somewhere.

Nor is it necessary that the legislation directly benefit the entire public. It may be deemed of ultimate public benefit even though a particular class is more directly aided. Thus, although slum clearance and low cost housing projects may furnish accommodations for relatively few persons, they are of ultimate benefit to all in their effect on public health and safety. (Housing Authority of Los Angeles v. Dockweiler (1939) 14 C.2d 437, 451, 460, 94 P.2d 794.)

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 703

[§ 703] Traditional Rule.

The presumption is in favor of the classification based on legislative experience, and it will not be rejected unless plainly arbitrary. (*Borden's Farm Products Co. v. Rev. 152 [Fritz]; 102 Harv. L. Rev. 201 [Kadrmas]; 16 Hastings Const. L. Q. 581 [same].)

In Railway Express Agency v. New York (1949) 336 U.S. 106, 69 S.Ct. 463, 93 L.Ed. 533, a city traffic regulation prohibited the use of exterior space on the sides of trucks for commercial advertising, but allowed that space to be used to advertise the owner's own business. Held, the regulation was valid, because local authorities may well have concluded that those who advertised their own products did not present so large and serious a traffic problem. "[T]he classification has relation to the purpose for which it is made and does not contain the kind of discrimination against which the Equal Protection Clause affords protection. It is by such practical considerations based on experience rather than by theoretical inconsistencies that the question of equal protection is to be answered." (69 S.Ct 465, 93 L.Ed. 539.)

In People v. Glaze (1980) 27 C.3d 841, 166 C.R. 859, 614 P.2d 291, the court held unconstitutional an ordinance requiring picture arcades to close between 2 a.m. and 9 a.m. The purpose--to prevent masturbation during hours when law enforcement problems are greatest--did not justify the drastic curtailment of First Amendment freedoms, because less restrictive measures were available to deal with the objectionable conduct. (27 C.3d 847.) (On validity of closing regulations generally, see infra, §711.)

[§ 704] Two-Tier Test of Classification.

(1) In General. The U.S. Supreme Court has adopted a "two-tier" test of classification. (See *McDonald v. "In ordinary equal protection cases not involving suspect classifications or the alleged infringement of a fundamental interest, the classification is upheld if it bears a rational relationship to a legitimate state purpose. ... But if the statutory scheme imposes a suspect classification, such as one based on race ... , or a classification which infringes on a fundamental interest, such as the right to pursue a lawful occupation ... , or the right to vote ... , the classification must be closely scrutinized and may be upheld only if it is necessary for the furtherance of a compelling state interest." (2) Application of Strict Standard. The strict standard has been applied in a number of cases. (See Bernal v. Fainter (1984) 467 U.S. 216, 104 S.Ct. 2312, 2316, 81 L.Ed.2d 175, 179; *Grutter v. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law
XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS
A. Nature and Scope of Constitutional Provisions.
2. California Constitution.
a. Nature and Effect of Provisions.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 705

[§ 705] Nature and Effect of Provisions.

(1) In General. Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a), expressly prohibits the denial of equal protection of the laws. (See Hawkins v. Superior Court (1978) 22 C.3d 584, 593, 150 C.R. 435, 586 P.2d 916 [denial of postindictment preliminary hearing violates Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a)]; Gay Law Students Assn. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 458, 468, 156 C.R. 14, 595 P.2d 592, infra, §708.) In addition, the California Constitution contains a number of provisions calling for uniformity in legislation. They go further than the Fourteenth Amendment, particularly in invalidating legislation where the basis for classification is wholly unreasonable, although the person raising the challenge does not show direct denial of equal protection as to himself or herself.

These provisions are (a) Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(b), which prevents the granting of special privileges or immunities to particular citizens or classes of citizens that are not granted to all; (b) Cal. Const., Art. IV, §16(a), requiring uniform operation of general laws (see infra, §707); and (c) Cal. Const., Art. IV, §16(b), barring local or special laws (see infra, §706). (See Mansur v. Sacramento (1940) 39 C.A.2d 426, 429, 103 P.2d 221 [city charter provision prohibiting employment of person whose spouse received compensation from tax revenues was void]; Sagaser v. McCarthy (1986) 176 C.A.3d 288, 305, 221 C.R. 746 [Cal. Const., Art. IV, §16, and Cal. Const., Art. I, §7, have essentially the same meaning]; San Francisco v. Flying Dutchman Park (2004) 122 C.A.4th 74, 87, 18 C.R.3d 532 [Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(b), only applies to "citizens," and not to corporations].)

(2) Same Test of Constitutionality. Where the charge is that equal protection is denied, the effect of both Constitutions is the same. "[T]he test for determining the validity of a statute where a claim is made that it unlawfully discriminates against any class is substantially the same under the state prohibitions against special legislation and the equal protection clause of the federal constitution." (Los Angeles v. Southern Calif. Tel. Co. (1948) 32 C.2d 378, 389, 196 P.2d 773; see Werner v. Southern Calif. Associated Newspapers (1950) 35 C.2d 121, 131, 216 P.2d 825; *Brown v. In Department of Mental Hygiene v. Kirchner (1965) 62 C.2d 586, 588, 43 C.R. 329, 400 P.2d 321, after a prior California decision, the U.S. Supreme Court had remanded the cause because of uncertainty on whether the decision rested on the federal or state Constitution or both. In its clarifying opinion, the California Supreme Court said: "These provisions of our state Constitution have been generally thought in California to be substantially the equivalent of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. While it is our view that we should reach the same conclusion under the Fourteenth Amendment we were (and we are) in any event independently constrained to the result we reached" by the California Constitution. (62 C.2d 588.)

(3) No Action for Money Damages. In Bonner v. Santa Ana (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1465, 53 C.R.2d 671, plaintiff, a homeless person whose possessions had been thrown away by workers for defendant city, sought money damages for violation of the Equal Protection and Due Process Clauses of the California Constitution. Held, following Gates v. Superior Court (1995) 32 C.A.4th 481, 38 C.R.2d 489, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §303, money damages are not available for violation of the state Equal Protection Clause. (45 C.A.4th 1472.) XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS
A. Nature and Scope of Constitutional Provisions.
2. California Constitution.
b. Local or Special Laws.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 706

[§ 706] Local or Special Laws.

(1) Original Provision. Former Cal. Const., Art. IV, §25, provided that the "Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases," and listed 33 of these cases, and "in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable." This prohibition applied whenever no reasonable grounds for a local law appeared; i.e., where it was not founded on a natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction. (Marsh v. Hanly (1896) 111 C. 368, 372, 43 P. 975; Chitwood v. Hicks (1933) 219 C. 175, 177, 25 P.2d 406; Hollman v. Warren (1948) 32 C.2d 351, 196 P.2d 562, infra, §717; see 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §869 et seq.)

But this Clause does not prevent reasonable classification; "an act of the Legislature applicable to one class only, when that class is reasonably the subject of classification, is a general law." (Rainey v. Michel (1936) 6 C.2d 259, 270, 57 P.2d 932; see People v. Western Fruit Growers (1943) 22 C.2d 494, 506, 140 P.2d 13; Los Angeles v. Standard Oil Co. of Calif. (1968) 262 C.A.2d 118, 123, 68 C.R. 512.) The apparent restriction of the Clause was substantially nullified by the judicially approved statutory classification of counties by population in such a manner that there may be only one county in each class. (See Govt.C. 28020; Madera v. Gendron (1963) 59 C.2d 798, 801, 31 C.R. 302, 382 P.2d 342; infra, §§716, 717.)

A similarly liberal treatment was accorded to special districts. In Corona Unified Hosp. Dist. v. Superior Court (1964) 61 C.2d 846, 40 C.R. 745, 395 P.2d 817, a statute was enacted in 1963, applicable to hospital districts formed after June 1, 1961, and operative only until June 1, 1964, to enable those districts to use lease-back financing. Upholding the statute, the court said: "[W]e may assume it to be true ... that the Corona district was the motivating force behind the enactment of the subject statute. But it does not follow that the measure is unconstitutional. ... [T]he benefits of this law were made generally available to any district formed after June 1, 1961 (and it appears that at least six districts were thus formed) which had not yet operated a hospital or established a capital outlay fund (and it appears that at least three of these six had not done so)." (61 C.2d 853.) (See infra, §719.)

(2) Current Provision. Former Cal. Const., Art. IV, §25, was repealed in the constitutional revision of 1966, and replaced by Cal. Const., Art. IV, §16. The section deleted the listing of specific cases and substituted "statute" for "law," providing simply: "A local or special statute is invalid in any case if a general statute can be made applicable." But no change in meaning was intended, except that the word "statute" was used in place of "law" to indicate that the prohibition is directed only at legislative and initiative statutes, and not at local ordinances. (See Constitution Revision Commission 1966 Report, p. 39.)

Cal. Const., Art. IV, §16, was amended in 1974 to add subdivision (a) on uniform operation of general laws (former Cal. Const., Art. I, §11, infra, §707). The provision on local or special statutes is in Cal. Const., Art. IV, §16(b). (See White v. California (2001) 88 C.A.4th 298, 305, 105 C.R.2d 714 [state laws dealing with Orange County's bankruptcy do not violate Cal. Const., Art. IV, §16(b), because general statute could not be made applicable due to county's unique financial crisis]; Malibu v. California Coastal Com. (2004) 121 C.A.4th 989, 994, 18 C.R.3d 40 [statute requiring Coastal Commission to draw up local coastal program (LCP) for plaintiff city, which had neglected to do so for many years leaving burden of processing all of city's development permits on Commission, was not invalid special legislation even though other coastal cities had not implemented LCPs; Legislature can solve problems incrementally, starting with worst offenders].)

[§ 707] Uniform Operation of General Laws.

Cal.Const., Art. IV, §16(a) (formerly Art. I, §11), provides that "[a]ll laws of a general nature have uniform operation." (See Pacific Coast Dairy v. Police Court of San Francisco (1932) 214 C. 668, 672, 8 P.2d 140; Department of Mental Hygiene v. McGilvery (1958) 50 C.2d 742, 754, 329 P.2d 689; White v. Church (1986) 185 C.A.3d 627, 630, 231 C.R. 565 [statute governing election to office of sheriff in one county was invalid].) This Clause does not apply to municipal ordinances, but Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(b) (formerly Art. I, §21), does limit the power of the municipality. (In re Gatsios (1928) 95 C.A. 762, 273 P. 826; see Lucchesi v. San Jose (1980) 104 C.A.3d 323, 332, 163 C.R. 700.)

In Alta Bldg. Material Co. v. Cameron (1962) 202 C.A.2d 299, 20 C.R. 713, the constitutionality of a statutory provision requiring a mechanic's lien claimant to give a 15-day (now 20-day) notice to the owner, but excepting those under direct contract with the owner or those performing actual labor for wages, was upheld. The court drew this distinction: A substantive discrimination, giving one lien claimant priority over another, might be an unconstitutional impairment of the lien. But here, the difference in treatment relates only to a procedural matter--giving notice. There is a logical reason for the provision. The owner usually would be apprised of potential claims of those with whom he or she contracts directly and those who perform actual labor for wages on the property, but is hardly likely to be apprised of those who furnish materials or supply labor of others; as to those the notice gives the owner an opportunity to avoid a cloud on his or her title. (202 C.A.2d 304.)

A. Nature and Scope of Constitutional Provisions.

2. California Constitution.

d. Discrimination by Public Utility.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 708

[§ 708] Discrimination by Public Utility.

In Gay Law Students Assn. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 458, 156 C.R. 14, 595 P.2d 592, plaintiffs, individual homosexuals and organizations of homosexuals, brought a class action against PT&T, the principal California public utility furnishing telephone service, and the Fair Employment Practice Commission (see infra, §920). The complaint alleged that PT&T practiced discrimination against homosexuals in hiring, firing, and promotion of employees, and plaintiffs sought declaratory relief, injunction, and damages. The complaint further alleged that the FEPC improperly refused to take steps to remedy employment discrimination against homosexuals by PT&T and other employers. Judgment was given for both defendants on demurrer. Held, reversed as to PT&T, affirmed as to the FEPC.

(a) The California constitutional provision against discrimination. Both state and federal Equal Protection Clauses prohibit state and governmental entities from arbitrarily discriminating in employment against any class of individuals. California and some other jurisdictions have extended this principle to prohibit discrimination against homosexuals. (24 C.3d 467.) The constitutional issue decided here is that the same protection is afforded against discriminatory treatment by "a privately owned monopoly or quasi-monopoly."

(1) Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a), states that "[a] person may not be ... denied equal protection of the laws." Unlike the Fourteenth Amendment, the California provision contains no explicit "state action" requirement. (24 C.3d 468.) Kruger v. Wells Fargo Bank (1974) 11 C.3d 352, 113 C.R. 449, 521 P.2d 441, supra, §619, observed that the provision was not intended to cover all purely private conduct; but in both Kruger and Garfinkle v. Superior Court (1978) 21 C.3d 268, 146 C.R. 208, 578 P.2d 925, supra, §621, the court pointed out that federal decisions applying the state action requirement of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments are not binding. (24 C.3d 469.)

(2) A California regulated public utility is in many respects more akin to a governmental entity than to a purely private employer. It has powers--like eminent domain--generally enjoyed only by governmental entities. Hence, it may not properly claim prerogatives of "private autonomy." (24 C.3d 470.)

(3) Arbitrary discrimination in employment by a state-protected public utility "particularly flouts constitutional principles": (a) From the point of view of the individual seeking employment, the injury is greater than in the case of an ordinary employer; arbitrary rejection by the only company authorized to perform many telephone communication services leaves the individual with no alternative employer. (24 C.3d 470.) (b) The general public may disapprove a private employer's discrimination by refusing to patronize that employer; the public cannot do this in the case of a public utility. (24 C.3d 471.) (c) The public utility's monopoly derives directly from the exclusive franchise provided by the state, which frees it from competition and enables it to wield enormous power over employment opportunities. (24 C.3d 471, 472.)

(4) Federal decisions in the field of labor union monopolies, e.g., where a union is chosen as the exclusive bargaining agent under the Railway Labor Act, are consistent with the conclusion reached here; they "establish the proposition that a private entity that, by virtue of state action, is afforded monopoly control over employment opportunities, is not free to exercise its power without regard to constitutional restraints." (24 C.3d 473.)

(b) The Public Utilities Code provision against discrimination. Pub.Util.C. 453(a) states: "No public utility shall, as to rates, charges, service, facilities, or in any other respect, make or grant any preference or advantage to any corporation or person or subject any corporation or person to any prejudice or disadvantage." The statutory language, the legislative history, the evolution of the common law principle that the section codifies, and the constitutional considerations already discussed, call for an interpretation of the section to prohibit a public utility from engaging in arbitrary employment discrimination. (24 C.3d 478 et seq.) The common law doctrine on which the section is based "is a dynamic one" (24 C.3d 481), and its modern development is illustrated by James v. Marinship Corp. (1944) 25 C.2d 721, 155 P.2d 329, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §627, holding that a union that has attained a monopoly of the supply of labor occupies a quasi-public position similar to that of a public service business, and cannot arbitrarily discriminate in employment opportunities. (24 C.3d 482.) Later California decisions have declared the same principle applicable to professional and business associations and public and private hospitals. (24 C.3d 483.) It is unnecessary to decide whether the common law doctrine, as thus developed, in and of itself prohibits a public utility from engaging in arbitrary employment discrimination; the statute codifying the doctrine has made it applicable "in any respect." (24 C.3d 483.) In light of this interpretation of Pub.Util.C. 453(a), plaintiff's complaint states a cause of action under Pub.Util.C. 2106, authorizing a person injured by an illegal public utility practice to recover monetary damages (see infra, §1089). (24 C.3d 486.)

(c) The Labor Code provisions on political freedom. Lab.C. 1101 and 1102 prohibit employers from interfering with the political activities of employees (see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §§255, 348). The term "political activity" covers such actions as participation in litigation, wearing of symbolic armbands, and association with others for the advancement of beliefs and ideas. (24 C.3d 487.) Measured by these standards, the struggle of the homosexual community for equal rights, particularly in the field of employment, is a political activity. "Indeed the subject of the rights of homosexuals incites heated political debate today, and the 'gay liberation movement' encourages its homosexual members to attempt to convince other members of society that homosexuals should be accorded the same fundamental rights as heterosexuals. The aims of the struggle for homosexual rights, and the tactics employed, bear a close analogy to the continuing struggle for civil rights waged by blacks, women, and other minorities." (24 C.3d 488.) The allegations of the complaint can reasonably be construed as charging that PT&T discriminates in particular against persons who identify themselves as homosexual, who defend homosexuality, or who are identified with activist homosexual organizations; so construed they charge that PT&T has adopted a policy tending to control or direct the political activities of employees in violation of Lab.C. 1101, and has attempted to coerce employees to refrain from following a particular course of political activity, in violation of Lab.C. 1102. (24 C.3d 488.) Hence, under Lockheed Aircraft Corp. v. Superior Court (1946) 28 C.2d 481, 171 P.2d 21, an action for damages may be brought. (24 C.3d 489.)

(d) The Fair Employment Practice Act. This statute (now Govt.C. 12900 et seq., the Fair Employment and Housing Act, infra, §915) prohibited discrimination on various grounds, but did not refer to homosexuality or sexual orientation. (24 C.3d 489.) Amendments added several categories, indicating that unlike the Unruh Act (see infra, §898), the FEPA was not intended to bar all forms of arbitrary discrimination. (24 C.3d 490.) And the provision against discrimination on the basis of "sex" could not be construed to encompass discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. (24 C.3d 491.)

(e) Conclusion. "If this court were to accede to PT&T's sought sanction for its alleged arbitrary discriminatory practices, we would approve of a rule that would extend beyond the subject of employment discrimination against homosexuals. We would necessarily empower any public utility to engage in an infinity of arbitrary employment practices. To cite only a few examples, the utility could refuse to employ a person because he read books prohibited by the utility, visited countries disapproved by the utility, or simply exhibited irrelevant characteristics of personal appearance or background disliked by the utility. Such possible arbitrary discrimination, casting upon the community the shadow of totalitarianism, becomes crucial when asserted by an institution that exerts the vast powers of a monopoly sanctioned by government itself. We do not believe a public utility can assert such prerogatives in a free society dedicated to the protection of individual rights." (24 C.3d 492.)

Three justices joined in a dissent, challenging the majority opinion on all points. (24 C.3d 493.) The dissent concludes with a strong affirmation of rights of homosexuals, but declares that courts "should not attempt to police general employment practices in the absence of some clear constitutional or statutory authority." (24 C.3d 501.) (See 68 Cal. L. Rev. 680; 20 Santa Clara L. Rev. 263.) (On discrimination against homosexuals, lesbians, and bisexuals as violation of Equal Protection Clause, see infra, §798; on prohibition in Fair Employment and Housing Act against discrimination based on sexual orientation, see infra, §931.)

Pub.Util.C. 453(a) reflects a public utility's duty to exercise its franchise in the public interest by broadly prohibiting discrimination that may subject a person to prejudice or disadvantage. It is consistent with this purpose to construe the statute as prohibiting retaliatory measures against journalists or newspapers based on the content of their reporting on matters lying within the exercise of a public utility's franchise. (Savage v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 21 C.A.4th 434, 455, 26 C.R.2d 305, citing Gay Law Students.)

Individuals and corporations are often treated separately. (See 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §863.) Thus, a statutory protection may be afforded to individual borrowers and not extended to corporate borrowers (see Berry Hotels System v. Capitol Properties (1937) 9 C.2d 12, 14, 68 P.2d 974), and a criminal statute may be made applicable to individuals and not to corporations, or a different punishment may be prescribed (see People v. Sivin (1933) 133 C.A. 644, 24 P.2d 860).

In Los Angeles v. Southern Calif. Tel. Co. (1948) 32 C.2d 378, 392, 196 P.2d 773, a statute giving telegraph or telephone corporations the right to erect lines and poles on public roads and highways was upheld on the ground that "there are sound purposes to be served in encouraging the corporate operation of telephone systems."

b. Classes of Corporations.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 710

[§ 710] Classes of Corporations.

Different kinds of corporations may be treated differently. (See 16B Am.Jur.2d (1998 ed.), Constitutional Law §§861, 862.) Thus, banking corporations are affected with a public interest, and their stockholders may, for the protection of the depositing public, be subjected to greater liabilities than those of ordinary corporations. (Rainey v. Michel (1936) 6 C.2d 259, 271, 57 P.2d 932.)

But the court in Rainey said: "It would not be proper at this time to indicate whether the power to classify stockholders of state banks differently from other stockholders includes the power to classify the stockholders, so far as liability is concerned, of all the different types of corporations provided for in the ... Code as to information and powers." (6 C.2d 273.) (See Asbury Hosp. v. Cass (1945) 326 U.S. 207, 66 S.Ct. 61, 64, 90 L.Ed. 6, 13 [upholding statute requiring corporations, within 10 years, to dispose of farmlands not used in their business, but exempting corporations whose business was dealing in farmlands].)

Classification of state and national banks is upheld in many situations. But a statute requiring a state bank to obtain a permit for the issuance of securities, and exempting national banks from this requirement, was held void as to the state banks. (Miller v. Union Bank & Trust Co. (1936) 7 C.2d 31, 34, 59 P.2d 1024.) And a statute permitting mutual insurance companies to act through salaried agents, and denying the privilege to stock companies, was held unreasonable. (Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co. v. Harrison (1937) 301 U.S. 459, 57 S.Ct. 838, 840, 81 L.Ed. 1223, 1226.) 8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 711

[§ 711] Closing Regulations.

Although closing hour ordinances may be valid health measures (see infra, §1075), discriminatory municipal regulations will not be sustained. In Deese v. Lodi (1937) 21 C.A.2d 631, 69 P.2d 1005, an ordinance required closing on Sundays (or Saturdays, at option), holidays, and evenings. It applied to grocery stores and meat, fruit, and vegetable markets, but excepted tobacco and drug stores, bakeries, restaurants, confectionaries, ice cream parlors, service stations, and places of amusement. The court held it void, finding no sufficient reason for the exceptions. (21 C.A.2d 637.) (See Gaetano Bocci & Sons Co. v. Lawndale (1930) 208 C. 720, 723, 284 P. 654 [ordinance prohibiting stone cutting works or monument yards from operating on Sundays, but permitting cemeteries, crematories, and other businesses to operate, was invalid]; Skaggs v. Oakland (1936) 6 C.2d 222, 224, 57 P.2d 478 [delivery of bakery goods]; Justesen's Food Stores v. Tulare (1938) 12 C.2d 324, 330, 84 P.2d 140 [ordinance similar to one in Deese v. Lodi]; 10 A.L.R.2d 813 [sports and games]; 53 A.L.R.3d 942 [restaurants]; 10 A.L.R.4th 246 [modern status of "Sunday closing" or "blue" laws].)

A group of Supreme Court decisions upholding Sunday closing laws against the freedom of religion challenge (supra, §553) also rejected the equal protection challenge. In Gallagher v. Crown Kosher Super Market of Massachusetts (1961) 366 U.S. 617, 81 S.Ct. 1122, 1125, 6 L.Ed.2d 536, 539, the three-judge lower federal court described the statutory system as an "unbelievable hodgepodge," but the Supreme Court nevertheless upheld the classification on the authority of McGowan v. Maryland (1961) 366 U.S. 420, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 6 L.Ed.2d 393. McGowan states the principal objections and answers as follows:

(a) On the statutory exemptions for Sunday sale of particular merchandise--tobacco, milk, confectionaries, fruits, gas and oil, newspapers, etc.--the Legislature could reasonably find that this was necessary for health or enhancement of the recreational atmosphere of the day. (81 S.Ct. 1105, 6 L.Ed.2d 399.)

(b) On the statutory exemption allowing operators of a beach, dancing saloon, or amusement park in a certain county to sell merchandise incidental to these businesses: This is not an unreasonable discrimination against retailers in other counties, because the Equal Protection Clause relates to equality between persons rather than areas, and territorial uniformity is not required. Nor does this exemption unconstitutionally discriminate against other retailers who sell the same merchandise. The Legislature could find that these commodities should only be sold on Sunday by those vendors at locations where they are most likely to be put to use immediately. There would be great difficulty in enforcement if large retail establishments were allowed to remain open on Sunday but were restricted to the sale of certain merchandise. (81 S.Ct. 1106, 6 L.Ed.2d 399.)

In cases dealing with regulation of the price of milk, discrimination in favor of dealers "not having a well advertised trade name" was upheld. (Borden's Farm Products Co. v. Ten Eyck (1936) 297 U.S. 251, 56 S.Ct. 453, 80 L.Ed. 669 [these dealers were permitted to sell at 1% less].) [§ 713] Other Regulations.

Many other classifications of businesses have been sustained. (See Wheeler v. Kraner (1937) 21 C.A.2d 460, 461, 69 P.2d 881 [classification of mining equipment and machinery, in requiring recordation of conditional sales was valid]; In re Hartmann (1938) 25 C.A.2d 55, 59, 76 P.2d 709 [special permit required of agents and canvassers for periodicals and other publications was valid]; Carlin v. Palm Springs (1971) 14 C.A.3d 706, 712, 92 C.R. 535, infra, §1063; on discrimination against businesses operating outside city or county, see infra, §1004; on classification of businesses for purposes of taxation, and discriminatory taxes and license fees, see 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §41 et seq.)

In Fraenkel v. Bank of America (1953) 40 C.2d 845, 256 P.2d 569, a statutory exemption from the contractor's licensing requirements was made for contractors engaging in construction work incidental to farming or agriculture. Held, the classification was valid; the Legislature may have had in mind the fact that in many rural districts licensed contractors are few, and other skilled persons, including farmers themselves, are available for this occasional work. (40 C.2d 850.) (Cf. Franchise Motor Freight Assn. v. Seavey (1925) 196 C. 77, 82, 235 P. 1000 [statute regulating auto stage transportation companies, which exempted those engaged exclusively in carrying farm products, was invalid].)

Classification that seems arbitrary may sometimes be supported on the theory that the activity (e.g., the liquor business or gambling) could be wholly prohibited, and that in consequence, almost any legislative method of regulation will be accepted. (See infra, §1060.) Horse racing with pari-mutuel betting is a form of legalized gambling that can be wholly prohibited or allowed under stringent regulations. A California statute gave the Corporation Commissioner special authority over the sale of securities for financing racing enterprises, and the Commissioner adopted a regulation that the security should have a par value of at least $ 1,000. In Hollywood Turf Club v. Daugherty (1950) 36 C.2d 352, 224 P.2d 359, petitioner's attack on the statute and regulation, as a discrimination against an investor of small means, was rejected. The Legislature could have determined that a higher par value would result in fewer stockholders and therefore easier scrutiny of activities; also that investors of small means should be discouraged from the risk of investment in this hazardous, highly regulated business. (36 C.2d 358.)

Unequal treatment of those engaged in the same or substantially similar type of business or activity is obviously suspect, and the court will carefully examine the circumstances to determine whether substantial differences exist between the classified businesses. The court, relying in part on *Carlin v. 8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 715

[§ 715] Valid Classifications.

The following are illustrative of classifications sustained:

(1) Size. Morey v. Doud (1957) 354 U.S. 457, 77 S.Ct. 1344, 1350, 1 L.Ed.2d 1485, 1491, recognized as appropriate the classification of large and small businesses for a legitimate purpose. Thus, special regulation of small loans, and classification of personal property brokers according to the size of their loans, is valid. (In re Fuller (1940) 15 C.2d 425, 428, 102 P.2d 321; Carter v. Seaboard Finance Co. (1949) 33 C.2d 564, 587, 203 P.2d 758.) (See Leavenworth Properties v. San Francisco (1987) 189 C.A.3d 986, 992, 234 C.R. 598 [moratorium on condominium conversion based on number of units in building was valid].)

(2) Closed Class: Preference for Prior Activity. Practical considerations and due process objections may sometimes justify exemption of a closed class of businesses, such as those previously unregulated, from a newly enacted regulation applicable to the same activity. (See infra, §811.)

(3) Exclusive Permit for Taxicab Stand. The relatively unlimited public control over use of the highways has been held to justify statutes or ordinances that give exclusive rights to one common carrier. (See infra, §1080.) In re Petersen (1958) 51 C.2d 177, 331 P.2d 24, held that the same principles justified a San Francisco ordinance that gave the chief of police power to designate exclusive taxi stands on public streets with the written consent of the person occupying the ground floor of the building. The result was that Yellow Cab Company, apparently for consideration paid to the owners, received every major hotel, shop, and department store stand. The court saw no unconstitutionality in this practical discrimination against other taxi companies, and also thought the public interest was served by a sole permittee (less traffic obstruction, no aggressive solicitation, better and more constant service). (51 C.2d 182.) (See critical dissent, 51 C.2d 186; 47 Cal. L. Rev. 590; 6 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 448.)

(4) Nonprofit Activity. In Phillips v. Board of Police Commrs. of Los Angeles (1966) 240 C.A.2d 410, 415, 49 C.R. 490, the court upheld a Los Angeles ordinance providing that only nonprofit organizations sponsoring youth activities could obtain a permit to conduct or sponsor a teenage dance. The principal factual bases for the legislative determination were (a) opportunities for exploitation by narcotics pushers and purveyors of pornographic material, and (b) the profit motive as limiting willingness to provide adequate supervision or necessary services.

(5) Business Otherwise Unregulated. In Escrow Institute of Calif. v. Pierno (1972) 24 C.A.3d 361, 366, 100 C.R. 880, the court upheld Fin.C. 17000 et seq., regulating the business of independent escrow agents, and exempting banks, trust companies, savings and loan associations, attorneys, title insurance companies, and real estate licensees. All of the exempted persons and institutions are subject to extensive regulation under particular statutes, and the Escrow Law was a reasonable method of reaching the formerly unregulated independent agents.

(6) Assault Weapons. The failure of the Legislature, in attempting to ban assault weapons, to include certain weapons in the statute that are indistinguishable from the weapons listed, does not violate equal protection. The Legislature may take a step-by-step approach to reform. (Kasler v. Lockyer (2000) 23 C.4th 472, 488, 97 C.R.2d 334, 2 P.3d 581, 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §163.)

(1) Size. See Hernandez v. Hanford (2007) 41 C.4th 279, 59 C.R.3d 442, 302, 159 P.3d 33, Supp., infra, §1020 [ordinance permitting only large department stores, but with square footage limitation, to sell furniture in particular district did not violate equal protection; one of purposes of ordinance was to attract and retain large department stores in particular district].

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 716

[§ 716] Counties or Cities.

The classification of counties or cities by classes, according to population, for various types of legislation appropriate to their distinct needs, is a familiar one. (See Rauer v. Williams (1897) 118 C. 401, 403, 50 P. 691; Ex parte Jackson (1904) 143 C. 564, 566, 77 P. 457; Paso Robles War Memorial Hosp. Dist. v. Negley (1946) 29 C.2d 203, 205, 173 P.2d 813 [Local Hospital District Law for counties with population of 200,000 or less; classification is valid because large counties have many private hospitals while small ones seldom have them]; Walnut Creek v. Silveira (1957) 47 C.2d 804, 810, 306 P.2d 453 [Limited Bond Obligation Law for small cities (population 4,000 or less) with large surrounding urban population]; Madera v. Gendron (1963) 59 C.2d 798, 801, 31 C.R. 302, 382 P.2d 342.) (On classification of counties by population, see Govt.C. 28020 et seq.)

The validity of these classifications by population, and the application of different laws to different areas, has been upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court. In Salsburg v. Maryland (1954) 346 U.S. 545, 74 S.Ct. 280, 98 L.Ed. 281, the statutes authorized admission of illegally obtained evidence in prosecutions for certain gambling misdemeanors in Arundel County where gambling had increased, but prohibited the use of this evidence in similar prosecutions in other counties, and in prosecutions for other misdemeanors in Arundel County. Held: (a) A state has wide discretion in prescribing practice under its police power, and (b) "[t]he Equal Protection Clause relates to equality between persons as such rather than between areas." (74 S.Ct. 283, 98 L.Ed. 287.) Thus, variations in procedure, either by authorized local option or by direct legislation, are not in conflict with the Constitution. (74 S.Ct. 284, 98 L.Ed. 288.)

b. Single County or City and County.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 717

[§ 717] Single County or City and County.

The population test results in the classification of Los Angeles County by itself for certain types of legislation. These statutes are valid where the large population is relevant to the object of the regulation. A former statute, applicable only to counties with a population over 4 million (Los Angeles alone), required the assessor to furnish information on the value of tax-assessed property in the public school district, to facilitate budget-making. The statute, dealing with special problems of a large county, was valid. (Board of Education of Los Angeles v. Watson (1966) 63 C.2d 829, 833, 48 C.R. 481, 409 P.2d 481.)

But in Hollman v. Warren (1948) 32 C.2d 351, 196 P.2d 562, a long-standing and obviously unwarranted discrimination was nullified. A statute formerly allowed the Governor to appoint as many notaries public as necessary for the public convenience, except that, in counties of the second class, not more than 222 could be appointed. The only county of that class was San Francisco. Held, the statute was void. "The legislation on its face expressly chooses without reason to limit the number of notaries for one county, and one county only, thus leaving no room for the presumption of constitutionality or for the presumption that the Legislature had a conceivably rational basis for the limitation ... or the presumption of constitutionality from the long existence of the statute without attack." (32 C.2d 359.)

Similarly, the classification of a "city and county" is an attempt to single out San Francisco, the only city and county in the state, for special legislation. In Stout v. Democratic County Cen. Committee of San Francisco (1952) 40 C.2d 91, 251 P.2d 321, a statute provided that in any city and county the county central committee of a political party could increase its membership by a majority vote of the committee. Everywhere except in San Francisco the committee members were apportioned according to population and chosen by the voters. Held, following Hollman v. Warren, the provision was invalid. (40 C.2d 95.)

[§ 718] Experimental Program in Specified Counties.

In McGlothlen v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1977) 71 C.A.3d 1005, 140 C.R. 168, the court examined constitutional challenges directed at former Veh.C. 13201.5, enacted in 1975 to provide a 2-year demonstration program for alcoholic rehabilitation of persons convicted of driving under the influence, in lieu of suspension of their driver's licenses. The program was limited to four approved counties, and petitioners, convicted in a county not approved (Solano), contended that the statute was unconstitutionally discriminatory. The trial judge agreed and rendered judgment extending the statutory benefits to persons in Solano County. Held, reversed.

(a) Legislative intent. The Legislature, in establishing the pilot program in specified counties and for a limited period, sought to consider various types of programs to determine how the new procedures would work before applying them statewide. This appears from a letter of the author made a part of the legislative record, and therefore a matter judicially noticed and a proper extrinsic aid to interpretation. (71 C.A.3d 1015, citing the text and Cal. Evidence.)

(b) No denial of equal protection. Department of Motor Vehicles v. Superior Court (1976) 58 C.A.3d 936, 130 C.R. 311, held that no fundamental right was involved and that, applying the traditional test of rational relationship of the classification to the statutory purpose (see supra, §703), it was valid. This decision is sound and should be followed. Territorial uniformity is not a constitutional requisite, and the Legislature may properly seek the experience of a limited program before extending it to all counties. (71 C.A.3d 1021.)

(c) No violation of other California constitutional provisions. Challenges based on Cal. Const., Art. IV, §16(a) and §16(b) (supra, §§706, 707), are equally without substance. "By its nature, the demonstration, as distinguished from the ultimate program, cannot be conducted by a general law with uniform operation." (71 C.A.3d 1024.) Because the California provisions are substantially the equivalent of the federal Equal Protection Clause, the rejection of the equal protection attack calls for a similar rejection of the additional challenge. (71 C.A.3d 1025, 1026.)

[§ 719] District Created by Special Act.

Special laws to create improvement and protection districts are common, despite Cal. Const., Art. IV, §16(b) (supra, §706). (See 38 So. Cal. L. Rev. 72; 23 Hastings L. J. 913.)

In Solvang Mun. Imp. Dist. v. Jensen (1952) 111 C.A.2d 237, 244 P.2d 492, plaintiff public corporation was created by special legislative act, although two general laws--the Public Utility District Act and the Municipal Corporation Act--were available. Upholding the validity of the district, the court pointed out that (a) the improvements were urgently needed, while formation under the general laws would have required petitions and elections; (b) the general laws confer extensive powers, and the people might not have voted favorably for a municipal or utility district. Thus, incorporation under the general law would have given them a form of government they neither needed nor wanted, and the special legislation involved none of the evils against which the Constitution protects. (111 C.A.2d 241.) (See Corona Unified Hosp. Dist. v. Superior Court (1964) 61 C.2d 846, 853, 40 C.R. 745, 395 P.2d 817, supra, §706; *People v. Sun Pac. The Legislature has the power to treat public entities differently than private persons. (See Flournoy v. California (1964) 230 C.A.2d 520, 524, 41 C.R. 190 [upholding constitutionality of 1963 governmental tort liability act and its immunities].)

A former statute required a bond of not less than $ 500 to secure costs and attorneys' fees in an action against the state. In Vinnicombe v. California (1959) 172 C.A.2d 54, 341 P.2d 705, an inverse condemnation suit, plaintiffs challenged the statute as improperly singling out the state alone, as distinguished from political subdivisions and private corporations. Held, the attack was without substance. Irrigation districts may be classified separately from other political subdivisions, and there is even more justification for putting the state in a class separate from them. (172 C.A.2d 59.) 5. Aliens.
a. In General.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 721

[§ 721] In General.

(1) Invalidity of Classification. Alienage has long been an improper classification in all but a few special situations. (See infra, §730.) Thus, a statute subjecting aliens to a poll tax was held unconstitutional. (In re Kotta (1921) 187 C. 27, 29, 200 P. 957.) (For unconstitutionality of poll tax in all cases, see supra, §243.) And a statute requiring employers of more than five persons to hire a certain percentage of citizens was likewise held invalid. (Truax v. Raich (1915) 239 U.S. 33, 36 S.Ct. 7, 11, 60 L.Ed. 131, 136.)

In Takahashi v. Fish & Game Com. (1948) 334 U.S. 410, 68 S.Ct. 1138, 92 L.Ed. 1478, petitioner, a Japanese alien ineligible for citizenship under the former federal law, had engaged in commercial fishing off the California coast since 1915. In 1945, a California statute was enacted to prohibit issuance of commercial fishing licenses to ineligible aliens. The California court held it constitutional on the theory of the state's power to conserve fish and game in coastal waters. (30 C.2d 719, 185 P.2d 805.) The U.S. Supreme Court reversed. (a) Truax v. Raich establishes the general principle that the Fourteenth Amendment protects an alien's right to work in common occupations. (b) The state's argument that the statute simply follows the classification of federal naturalization laws in discriminating against ineligible aliens is unsound, because the state has no powers over immigration and naturalization comparable to those of the federal Government. (c) The chief contention of the state, that it has a "special public interest" to preserve for its citizens the fish swimming in the coastal belt, is likewise untenable. "To whatever extent the fish in the three-mile belt off California may be 'capable of ownership' by California, we think that 'ownership' is inadequate to justify California in excluding any or all aliens who are lawful residents of the State from making a living by fishing in the ocean off its shores while permitting all others to do so." (68 S.Ct. 1143, 92 L.Ed. 1488.) (For rejection of ineligible alien classification, see infra, §722.)

The modern view that classification of aliens is inherently suspect and anachronistic is restated in a number of later decisions repudiating early cases that had upheld the classification in special situations. Under today's approach, it is not enough to show that the classification reasonably relates to the purposes of the law. "[T]he state must bear the burden of establishing that the classification constitutes a necessary means of accomplishing a legitimate state interest, and that the law serves to promote a compelling state interest." (Purdy & Fitzpatrick v. California (1969) 71 C.2d 566, 579, 79 C.R. 77, 456 P.2d 645, infra, §723; see *Graham v. [§ 722] Alien Land Laws.

The California Alien Land Law, which limited the right of aliens then ineligible for citizenship to acquire real property, was originally upheld on the theory of safeguarding the security of the state by keeping ownership of the land in citizens and persons eligible to citizenship. (See Terrace v. Thompson (1923) 263 U.S. 197, 44 S.Ct. 15, 68 L.Ed. 255; Webb v. O'Brien (1923) 263 U.S. 313, 44 S.Ct. 112, 68 L.Ed. 318; Mott v. Cline (1927) 200 C. 434, 447, 253 P. 718.) The legislation was nevertheless strongly attacked, and later U.S. Supreme Court decisions avoided any square declaration of approval of this constitutional theory. (See Oyama v. California (1948) 332 U.S. 633, 68 S.Ct. 269, 275, 92 L.Ed. 249, 259 [validity of Act assumed "for purposes of argument only," though unnecessary to decide; four concurring justices would hold it unconstitutional]; Takahashi v. Fish & Game Com. (1948) 334 U.S. 410, 68 S.Ct. 1138, 1144, 92 L.Ed. 1478, 1488, supra, §721 [assuming continued validity of cases upholding Act].)

The California statute was finally held unconstitutional in Fujii v. California (1952) 38 C.2d 718, 242 P.2d 617. The court first observed that, although the classification was ostensibly based on eligibility for citizenship, the actual basis was race or nationality; i.e., Japanese, though not named, were excluded by reference to the then federal naturalization statute. (38 C.2d 729.) A classification by race will be subjected to the most rigid scrutiny because the Fourteenth Amendment was designed to prevent discrimination on that basis. (38 C.2d 730.)

The court next examined and rejected all of the supposed justifications for the law; e.g., that it promoted loyalty (no connection between eligibility to citizenship and loyalty); that ownership of farm lands may be specially treated (farming is an ancient and common occupation). (38 C.2d 732 et seq.) The opinion concludes: "The California Alien Land Law is obviously designed and administered as an instrument for effectuating racial discrimination, and the most searching examination discloses no circumstances justifying classification on that basis. There is nothing to indicate that those alien residents who are racially ineligible for citizenship possess characteristics which are dangerous to the legitimate interests of the state, or that they, as a class, might use the land for purposes injurious to public morals, safety or welfare." (38 C.2d 737.) (See 9 Cal. Western L. Rev. 18; 32 Hastings L. J. 251 [Alien Land Laws: Constitutional Limitations on State Power to Regulate]; on elimination of Japanese ineligibility to citizenship under Naturalization Act, see supra, §190.)

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 723

[§ 723] Public Works Employment.

It was formerly held that the state had the same power as a private employer to prescribe the conditions under which it would permit public works to be done, and could favor its own citizens and exclude aliens from employment on these projects. (See Heim v. McCall (1915) 239 U.S. 175, 36 S.Ct. 78, 60 L.Ed. 206; Pasadena v. Charleville (1932) 215 C. 384, 398, 10 P.2d 745.)

This exception to the general rule of invalidity of classifications based on alienage was repudiated in Purdy & Fitzpatrick v. California (1969) 71 C.2d 566, 79 C.R. 77, 456 P.2d 645, where contractors on public works were subjected to penalties for violating the prohibitory statute (former Lab.C. 1850). The statute was held invalid on two grounds: (a) as an encroachment on the congressional scheme for immigration and naturalization (see supra, §183); and (b) as a denial of equal protection.

On the equal protection point, the court observed that Takahashi v. Fish & Game Com. (1948) 334 U.S. 410, 68 S.Ct. 1138, 92 L.Ed. 1478, supra, §721, "dealt a death blow to the 'proprietary' rationale" as a justification for exclusion of aliens from occupations, and called for the overruling of Pasadena v. Charleville. (71 C.2d 586.) The statute was then condemned in the following language: "The classification ... operates irrationally without reference to any legitimate state interest except that of favoring United States citizens over citizens of other countries. This latter objective does not reflect such a compelling state interest that it would permit us to sustain this kind of discrimination." (71 C.2d 585.) (See 58 Cal. L. Rev. 184; 9 Cal. Western L. Rev. 15 [right to employment]; 4 Pacific L. J. 275 [legislative response to Purdy].)

d. Federal Civil Service.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 724

[§ 724] Federal Civil Service.

In Hampton v. Wong (1976) 426 U.S. 88, 96 S.Ct. 1895, 48 L.Ed.2d 495, plaintiffs were aliens lawfully and permanently residing in the U.S. They sued to challenge the constitutionality of regulations of the federal Civil Service Commission and other federal agencies excluding all except American citizens (and natives of Samoa) from employment in most federal civil service positions. Each plaintiff adequately alleged his qualifications for the job sought. Held, the regulations were unconstitutional.

(a) Equal protection implied in due process. In federal territory, where no special national interest is involved, the Due Process Clause has the same significance as the Equal Protection Clause. (96 S.Ct. 1904, 48 L.Ed.2d 507; see supra, §694.)

(b) Federal power over immigration and naturalization. Plaintiffs relied mainly on Sugarman v. Dougall (1973) 413 U.S. 634, 93 S.Ct. 2842, 37 L.Ed.2d 853, infra, §725, and In re Griffiths (1973) 413 U.S. 717, 93 S.Ct. 2851, 37 L.Ed.2d 910, infra, §725, holding invalid state laws restricting employment to citizens. But the paramount federal power over immigration and naturalization calls for a distinction. "[O]verriding national interests may provide a justification for a citizenship requirement in the federal service even though an identical requirement may not be enforced by a State." (96 S.Ct. 1904, 48 L.Ed.2d 507.) On the other hand, the Commission's contention that the federal power is so plenary as to permit arbitrary discrimination against resident aliens cannot be accepted. (96 S.Ct. 1904, 48 L.Ed.2d 507.)

(c) Application of test.

(1) The Commission's rule has its impact on "an identifiable class of persons" already subject to disadvantages; the added disadvantage of ineligibility for employment in a major section of the economy "is of sufficient significance to be characterized as a deprivation of an interest in liberty." By reason of the Fifth Amendment, such a deprivation must be accompanied by due process. (96 S.Ct. 1905, 48 L.Ed.2d 508.) "Respondents argue that this scrutiny requires invalidation of the Commission rule under traditional equal protection analysis. It is true that our cases establish that the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment authorizes that type of analysis of federal rules and therefore that the Clause has a substantive as well as a procedural aspect. However, it is not necessary to resolve respondents' substantive claim, if a narrower inquiry discloses that essential procedures have not been followed." (96 S.Ct. 1905, 48 L.Ed.2d 508.)

(2) When the federal Government asserts an overriding national interest as justification for a discriminatory rule that would violate the Equal Protection Clause if adopted by a state, due process requires a legitimate basis for presuming that the rule was actually intended to serve that interest. (96 S.Ct. 1905, 48 L.Ed.2d 508.) Here, it may be assumed that if Congress or the President had expressly imposed the citizenship requirement, it would be justified. (96 S.Ct. 1906, 48 L.Ed.2d 509.) But they have not done so; and the Civil Service Commission, with authority to promote the efficiency of the federal civil service, has no authority to carry out the important national interests justifying a citizenship requirement for federal employment. (96 S.Ct. 1906, 1910, 48 L.Ed.2d 510, 515.) "That agency has no responsibility for foreign affairs, for treaty negotiations, for establishing immigration quotas or conditions of entry, or for naturalization policies." (96 S.Ct. 1910, 48 L.Ed.2d 515.) Administrative convenience--the desirability of having one simple rule excluding all noncitizens when citizenship is a legitimate requirement for some important and sensitive positions--is not a justification for wholesale deprivation of employment opportunities. (96 S.Ct. 1911, 48 L.Ed.2d 515.)

(d) Conclusion. "In sum, assuming without deciding that the national interests identified by the petitioners would adequately support an explicit determination by Congress or the President to exclude all noncitizens from the federal service, we conclude that those interests cannot provide an acceptable rationalization for such a determination by the Civil Service Commission. The impact of the rule on the millions of lawfully admitted resident aliens is precisely the same as the aggregate impact of comparable state rules which were invalidated by our decision in Sugarman. By broadly denying this class substantial opportunities for employment, the Civil Service Commission rule deprives its members of an aspect of liberty. Since these residents were admitted as a result of decisions made by the Congress and the President, implemented by the Immigration and Naturalization Service acting under the Attorney General of the United States, due process requires that the decision to impose that deprivation of an important liberty be made either at a comparable level of government or, if it is to be permitted to be made by the Civil Service Commission, that it be justified by reasons which are properly the concern of that agency. We hold that §338.101(a) of the Civil Service Commission Regulations has deprived these respondents of liberty without due process of law and is therefore invalid." (96 S.Ct. 1912, 48 L.Ed.2d 516.)

Two concurring justices reserved the equal protection questions for a congressional or presidential enactment. (96 S.Ct. 1912, 48 L.Ed.2d 516.) Four dissenting justices vigorously attacked the "novel conception of the procedural due process guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment" and the doctrine evolved from it of "delegation of legislative authority." While the majority agree that the Equal Protection Clause does not provide a basis for invalidating a denial of federal employment, "[t]he Court instead inexplicably melds together the concepts of equal protection, procedural and substantive due process" to produce its holding. (96 S.Ct. 1913, 48 L.Ed.2d 518.) And because Congress could have excluded aliens from Civil Service, the fact that it chose to allow the Commission to do so does not render the governmental policy any less political or more subject to judicial scrutiny. (96 S.Ct. 1916, 1917, 48 L.Ed.2d 522.) (See 90 Harv. L. Rev. 105; 15 San Diego L. Rev. 171.)

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 725

[§ 725] Profession, Business, or Employment.

It was formerly held that the state may restrict membership in the licensed professions, such as law, to citizens. (See Large v. State Bar (1933) 218 C. 334, 335, 23 P.2d 288.) Large was overruled in Raffaelli v. Committee of Bar Examiners (1972) 7 C.3d 288, 301, 101 C.R. 896, 496 P.2d 1264, and the California statute requiring citizenship for admission to the Bar was held unconstitutional. (See 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §375; 53 A.L.R.3d 1163 [validity of citizenship requirement for right to practice law].) The U.S. Supreme Court came to the same conclusion. (In re Griffiths (1973) 413 U.S. 717, 93 S.Ct. 2851, 2855, 37 L.Ed.2d 910, 916.)

Raffaelli appears to eliminate any justification for a citizenship requirement for other professions or businesses (see 7 C.3d 303), and the 1972 Legislature promptly amended a number of statutes licensing businesses and professions to delete the requirement. (See Examining Bd. of Engineers, Architects & Surveyors v. Flores de Otero (1976) 426 U.S. 572, 96 S.Ct. 2264, 49 L.Ed.2d 65 [engineer or architect]; on prohibition against discrimination in employment generally, see Cal. Const., Art. I, §8, infra, §762.)

In Sugarman v. Dougall (1973) 413 U.S. 634, 93 S.Ct. 2842, 37 L.Ed.2d 853, the U.S. Supreme Court took the further step of holding unconstitutional a citizenship requirement for classified civil service positions. (See Ruiz-Cano v. San Diego (1979) 98 C.A.3d 803, 806, 807, 159 C.R. 602 [following Sugarman; charter provision with indiscriminate bar on employment of aliens was invalid].)

In Bernal v. Fainter (1984) 467 U.S. 216, 104 S.Ct. 2312, 81 L.Ed.2d 175, the Court, holding unconstitutional a Texas statute requiring notaries public to be citizens, analyzed the "political function" exception, which allows exclusion of aliens from positions intimately related to the process of democratic self-government. (104 S.Ct. 2316, 81 L.Ed.2d 180, discussing Foley v. Connelie (1978) 435 U.S. 291, 98 S.Ct. 1067, 55 L.Ed.2d 287, infra, §732, Ambach v. Norwick (1979) 441 U.S. 68, 99 S.Ct. 1589, 60 L.Ed.2d 49, infra, §733, and Cabell v. Chavez-Salido (1982) 454 U.S. 432, 102 S.Ct. 735, 70 L.Ed.2d 677, infra, §732.) Applying the Cabell test, the Court found the exception inapplicable to a notary. A notary's duties are essentially clerical and ministerial; a notary does not exercise the wide discretion of public school teachers. Although considerable damage could result from negligent or dishonest performance, the same is true of duties performed by cashiers, building inspectors, janitors who clean offices of public officials, and many other categories of personnel. "What distinguishes such personnel from those to which the political function exception is properly applied is that the latter are either invested with policy-making responsibility or broad discretion in the execution of public policy that requires the routine exercise of authority over individuals." (104 S.Ct. 2319, 81 L.Ed.2d 184.) (On validity of requirement that law enforcement officers and teachers be citizens, see infra, §§732, 733.)

P.C. 12021(a) formerly made it a crime for an alien to own or possess a concealable firearm. The statute was upheld in 1924 (In re Rameriz (1924) 193 C. 633, 650, 226 P. 914) on the theory that it was a proper means of promoting the state's interest in public safety. But the assumption that aliens with these weapons are more dangerous than citizens is no longer supportable in light of Raffaelli v. Committee of Bar Examiners (1972) 7 C.3d 288, 101 C.R. 896, 496 P.2d 1264, supra, §725. Accordingly, in People v. Rappard (1972) 28 C.A.3d 302, 305, 104 C.R. 535, the court concluded that Rameriz was no longer controlling, and that the statute was unconstitutional. Language pertaining to aliens was deleted from the statute in 1974. (See 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against Public Peace and Welfare, §174 et seq.)

In Graham v. Richardson (1971) 403 U.S. 365, 91 S.Ct. 1848, 29 L.Ed.2d 534, Arizona and Pennsylvania statutes restricting welfare benefits to citizens or aliens with a long period of residence (15 years), were held unconstitutional. The states relied on the subsequently repudiated "special interest doctrine," that a state may restrict the right of noncitizens to exploit resources. The Court pointed out that this doctrine was heavily grounded on the discredited distinction between right and privilege (91 S.Ct. 1853, 29 L.Ed.2d 543), and that Takahashi v. Fish & Game Com. (1948) 334 U.S. 410, 68 S.Ct. 1138, 92 L.Ed. 1478, supra, §721, cast doubt on its continuing validity. "Whatever may be the contemporary vitality of the special public-interest doctrine in other contexts after Takahashi, we conclude that a State's desire to preserve limited welfare benefits for its own citizens is inadequate to justify Pennsylvania's making noncitizens ineligible for public assistance, and Arizona's restricting benefits to citizens and longtime resident aliens." (91 S.Ct. 1853, 29 L.Ed.2d 543.) (See 9 Cal. Western L. Rev. 17; 42 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1425 [symposium on immigration and right of aliens to public benefits]; 45 U.C.L.A. L. h. Financial Assistance for Higher Education.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 728

[§ 728] Financial Assistance for Higher Education.

In Nyquist v. Mauclet (1977) 432 U.S. 1, 97 S.Ct. 2120, 53 L.Ed.2d 63, New York, by statute, provided financial assistance to students pursuing higher education. In addition to a modest residence requirement, the following restrictions were made on eligibility: The applicant must be a citizen, or must have made application for citizenship, or if not qualified must affirm his or her intent to apply when qualified and must apply as soon as eligible, or must be a member of the class of refugees paroled by the Attorney General. Mauclet was a citizen of France, a permanent resident of the United States, married to an American citizen and with a citizen child. Rabinovitch was a citizen of Canada, also a permanent resident, who registered with Selective Service on his 18th birthday. Both, however, declared their intention to retain their original citizenship and not become naturalized. They challenged the statutory restrictions as a denial of equal protection. Held, the restrictions were invalid.

(a) Suspect classification. The contention that the statute does not discriminate against aliens who intend to become citizens is answered by Graham v. Richardson (1971) 403 U.S. 365, 91 S.Ct. 1848, 29 L.Ed.2d 534, supra, §727: "The fact that the statute is not an absolute bar does not mean that it does not discriminate against the class." (97 S.Ct. 2125, 53 L.Ed.2d 70.) Hence, the strict scrutiny test applies (see supra, §704). (97 S.Ct. 2124, 53 L.Ed.2d 69.)

(b) Incentive to naturalization is insufficient state interest. The statute is said to offer an incentive to aliens to become naturalized; but this is not a permissible state interest, for control over immigration and naturalization is exclusively in the federal Government. (97 S.Ct. 2126, 53 L.Ed.2d 71.) "If the encouragement of naturalization through these programs were seen as adequate, then every discrimination against aliens could be similarly justified." (97 S.Ct. 2127, 53 L.Ed.2d 72.)

(c) Enhancing educational level of electorate is insufficient state interest. The other purpose, to offer assistance to prospective voters, is likewise insufficient. Although this education is a laudable objective, it would not be frustrated by including resident aliens in the program. (97 S.Ct. 2127, 53 L.Ed.2d 72.)

(d) No harm to State. "Resident aliens are obligated to pay their full share of the taxes that support the assistance programs. There thus is no real unfairness in allowing resident aliens an equal right to participate in programs to which they contribute on an equal basis. And although an alien may be barred from full involvement in the political arena, he may play a role--perhaps even a leadership role--in other areas of import to the community. The State surely is not harmed by providing resident aliens the same educational opportunity it offers to others." (97 S.Ct. 2127, 53 L.Ed.2d 72.)

Four dissenting justices, in three opinions, made these main points: (a) With the exception of Graham v. Richardson, all the prior cases relied on prohibited aliens from engaging in certain occupations or professions, thereby impairing their ability to earn a livelihood. (b) Graham v. Richardson involved denial of welfare benefits essential to sustain life. (c) Here, the state is not preventing aliens from obtaining an education, but is providing economic incentives to its own citizens, and to those who intend to become citizens, to induce them to pursue higher studies which in the long run will benefit the state. (97 S.Ct. 2127, 2128, 53 L.Ed.2d 73.) (d) Offering incentives to resident alien scholars to become naturalized is a permissible purpose for a state. (97 S.Ct. 2129, 53 L.Ed.2d 75.) (See 5 Hastings Const. L. Q. 128; 14 Cal. Western L. Rev. 514.)

5. Aliens.

i. Education for Illegal Alien Children.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 729

[§ 729] Education for Illegal Alien Children.

(1) In General. In Plyler v. Doe (1982) 457 U.S. 202, 102 S.Ct. 2382, 72 L.Ed.2d 786, a state statute withholding state funds from local school districts for the education of children of illegal aliens was held a violation of the Equal Protection Clause. The Court declared that lack of enforcement of the laws barring entry has resulted in the creation of a substantial "shadow population" of illegal migrants (102 S.Ct. 2395, 72 L.Ed.2d 800), and it found no substantial state interest in depriving their innocent children of the benefits of free public education offered to other children (102 S.Ct. 2400, 72 L.Ed.2d 805, 807).

Four justices joined in a dissent asserting that the Court's holding "manifests the justly criticized judicial tendency to attempt speedy and wholesale formulation of 'remedies' for the failures--or simply the laggard pace--of the political process of our system of government." (102 S.Ct. 2408, 72 L.Ed.2d 816.) (See 96 Harv. L. Rev. 130; 11 Hastings Const. L. Q. 599; 23 J. Juvenile Law 41 [California's attempt to legislate undocumented children out of public education]; 16 Pacific L. J. 1101; on valid classifications of illegal aliens generally, see infra, §731.)

(2) Residence for Tuition Purposes. American Assn. of Women v. Board of Trustees (1995) 31 C.A.4th 702, 38 C.R.2d 15, was a taxpayer suit to compel defendant board of trustees of the California State University to follow Educ.C. 68050 and 68062(h), insofar as they apply to undocumented aliens establishing residence for purposes of resident or nonresident tuition. Educ.C. 68050 requires persons classified as nonresidents to pay nonresident tuition; Educ.C. 68062(h) allows an alien to establish residence, unless the Immigration and Nationality Act precludes him or her from establishing domicile in the United States.

An unappealed Alameda County superior court case had found that Educ.C. 68062(h) was unconstitutional, insofar as it permitted the determination of residence for undocumented aliens to be made on terms other than those applied to U.S. citizens, and had enjoined the California State University from establishing California residence for these aliens on terms different from that of U.S. citizens. A later decision, Regents of Univ. of Calif. v. Superior Court (1990) 225 C.A.3d 972, 276 C.R. 197, better known as the Bradford decision, had held that Educ.C. 68062(h) was constitutional on its face and as applied, and that it precluded undocumented aliens from qualifying as California residents for tuition purposes. The issue in the present case was which decision prevailed--the Alameda County superior court case or the Bradford decision. The trial judge granted mandamus, compelling defendant to comply with the two statutes and enjoining it from violating them. Held, affirmed.

(a) Bradford, as an appellate decision determining that Educ.C. 68062(h) is constitutional, controls. Nothing in Bradford says that it is not binding on the California State University system, and Educ.C. 68062(h) in fact applies to that system (Educ.C. 68000, 68011, 68012). (31 C.A.4th 706.)

(b) However, Bradford's conclusion that Educ.C. 68062(h) precludes undocumented aliens from qualifying as residents for tuition purposes goes beyond the relief sought by plaintiffs. Educ.C. 68062(h) "does not, itself, make a blanket preclusion of undocumented alien students from qualifying as California residents for tuition purposes. That section clearly establishes the preclusionary standard as the domiciliary provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. §1101 et seq.).\" (31 C.A.4th 707.)

Educ.C. 68130.5, added in 2001, provides that students, other than nonimmigrant aliens as defined by 8 U.S.C., §1101(a), are exempt from paying nonresident tuition at California state universities and community colleges if they meet all the following requirements:

(1) Attendance at a California high school for 3 or more years. (Educ.C. 68130.5(a)(1).)

(2) Graduation from a California high school or attainment of its equivalency. (Educ.C. 68130.5(a)(2).)

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 730

[§ 730] In General.

The dwindling list of permissible discriminations against aliens includes the following:

(1) Voting. Citizenship is a reasonable condition on the right to vote, and this classification of aliens is valid. (People v. Rodriguez (1973) 35 C.A.3d 900, 902, 111 C.R. 238; Padilla v. Allison (1974) 38 C.A.3d 784, 786, 113 C.R. 582.)

(2) Medicare Program. In Mathews v. Diaz (1976) 426 U.S. 67, 96 S.Ct. 1883, 48 L.Ed.2d 478, a class action, resident aliens challenged the constitutionality of the federal statute limiting an alien's eligibility for participation in the Medicare program by two conditions: a 5-year period of residence, and admission for permanent residence. Held, both conditions were valid.

(a) Distinction between rights of citizens and aliens. "The fact that all persons, aliens and citizens alike, are protected by the Due Process Clause does not lead to the further conclusion that all aliens are entitled to enjoy all the advantages of citizenship or, indeed, to the conclusion that all aliens must be placed in a single homogeneous legal classification. For a host of constitutional and statutory provisions rest on the premise that a legitimate distinction between citizens and aliens may justify attributes and benefits for one class not accorded to the other, and the class of aliens is itself a heterogeneous multitude of persons with a wide-ranging variety of ties to this country." (96 S.Ct. 1890, 48 L.Ed.2d 489.)

(b) Resolution of issue in this case. The precise issue is whether the statutory discrimination within the class of aliens is permissible; and a narrow standard of judicial review must be employed where the decision is by Congress or the President in the area of immigration and naturalization. (96 S.Ct. 1892, 48 L.Ed.2d 491.) Congress may reasonably make an alien's eligibility depend on both the character and duration of his or her residence, and individual hardship suffered by drawing the line does not affect the validity of the statute. (96 S.Ct. 1893, 48 L.Ed.2d 492.) Graham v. Richardson (1971) 403 U.S. 365, 91 S.Ct. 1848, 29 L.Ed.2d 534, supra, §727, involving state statutes, is distinguishable. "[T]he Fourteenth Amendment's limits on state powers are substantially different from the constitutional provisions applicable to the federal power over immigration and naturalization." (96 S.Ct. 1895, 48 L.Ed.2d 494.) (See 5 Hastings

Const. L. Q. 561.)

(3) Policemen and Schoolteachers. A citizenship requirement for the positions of police officer or public school teacher is valid. (See infra, §§732, 733.)

(4) Applicants for Political Asylum. A county's denial of welfare benefits to aliens who have requested but not yet been granted political asylum, on the ground that the aliens are not "lawfully resident" in the county, does not deny equal protection. (Khasminskaya v. Lum (1996) 47 C.A.4th 537, 544, 54 C.R.2d 915.)

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 731

[§ 731] Illegal Aliens.

(1) In General. Denial of employment and unemployment benefits to illegal aliens has been upheld. (See De Canas v. Bica (1976) 424 U.S. 351, 96 S.Ct. 933, 47 L.Ed.2d 43, supra, §20 [prohibition of employment is valid exercise of police power and not infringement of federal power over immigration]; Alonso v. California (1975) 50 C.A.3d 242, 251, 123 C.R. 536 [valid denial of unemployment benefits to illegal alien who is not entitled to employment].) And, because undocumented aliens lack community ties and may be poor risks to comply with probation terms, illegal alien status is a factor that may be considered by a sentencing court in determining whether to grant probation. (People v. Sanchez (1987) 190 C.A.3d 224, 230, 231, 235 C.R. 264.) (See American G.I. Forum v. Miller (1990) 218 C.A.3d 859, 868, 267 C.R. 371 [because illegal aliens are not suspect class, collecting and disseminating information on arrestee's status as "undocumented person" does not violate equal protection]; on education of children of illegal aliens, see supra, §729.)

(2) Proposition 187. Proposition 187, approved by the voters in the November 1994 general election, provided that only U.S. citizens or lawfully admitted aliens could receive public benefits. Further, when public entities reasonably suspected that an applicant for services was an illegal alien, the entity was required to report that suspicion to the applicant and to designated authorities. (See 16 J. Juvenile Law 210 [application of Plyler v. Doe (1982) 457 U.S. 202, 102 S.Ct. 2382, 72 L.Ed.2d 786, supra, §729, to denial of benefits to undocumented alien children under Proposition 187]; 31 U.S.F. L. Rev. 345 [same]; 26 Pacific L. J. 989 [Proposition 187].)

Most of Proposition 187 was preempted by the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C., §1101 et seq. (League of United Latin Amer. Citizens v. Wilson (1995) 908 F.Supp. 755, 768.) The remaining benefit denial provisions were preempted by the 1996 adoption of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act, 8 U.S.C., §1601 et seq. (League of United Latin Amer. Citizens v. Wilson (1997) 997 F.Supp. 1244, 1252.) However, P.C. 114, making it a felony to conceal one's true citizenship or resident alien status through the use of false documents, is severable from the unconstitutional portions of Proposition 187, and is not preempted by federal law. (People v. Salazar-Merino (2001) 89 C.A.4th 590, 597, 107 C.R.2d 313.)

(1) In General. Noncitizen victims of human trafficking, domestic violence, and other specified crimes are eligible for public social services and health care to the same extent as individuals who are admitted to the United States as refugees under 8 U.S.C., §1157. These services terminate if there is a final administrative denial of a visa application. (Welf.C. 18945, added in 2006.)

[§ 732] Law Enforcement Officers.

In Foley v. Connelie (1978) 435 U.S. 291, 98 S.Ct. 1067, 55 L.Ed.2d 287, plaintiff, an alien eligible for naturalization in due course, applied for appointment as a New York State Trooper, and was denied the right to take the examination. In this action, he challenged the constitutionality of the New York requirement, similar to that in most other states, of citizenship as a condition of appointment to the police force. Held, the statute was valid.

(a) Recent decisions have required close scrutiny of state action to exclude aliens from various benefits. However, "[t]he essence of our holdings to date is that although we extend to aliens the right to education and public welfare, along with the ability to earn a livelihood and engage in licensed professions, the right to govern is reserved to citizens." (98 S.Ct. 1071, 55 L.Ed.2d 293.)

(b) The office of a policeman is not a common occupation. The police function fulfills a fundamental obligation of government, and police officers are clothed with authority to exercise a variety of discretionary powers with serious impact on individuals. (98 S.Ct. 1071, 1072, 55 L.Ed.2d 293, 294.) "[I]t would be as anomalous to conclude that citizens may be subjected to the broad discretionary powers of noncitizen police officers as it would be to say that judicial officers and jurors with power to judge citizens can be aliens." (98 S.Ct. 1072, 55 L.Ed.2d 294.) Hence, citizenship bears a rational relationship to the special demands of the position. (98 S.Ct. 1073, 55 L.Ed.2d 295.)

Three justices dissented, arguing that no valid distinction can be made between alien attorneys and alien police officers. (98 S.Ct. 1076, 1077, 55 L.Ed.2d 299.) (See 32 Hastings L. J. 163; 6 Hastings Const. L. Q. 180; 4 A.L.R.4th 380 [validity, construction, and application of residence requirement for policemen or firemen].)

In Cabell v. Chavez-Salido (1982) 454 U.S. 432, 102 S.Ct. 735, 70 L.Ed.2d 677, the reasoning of Foley was applied to uphold the validity of California's requirement that probation officers be citizens. (102 S.Ct. 742, 743, 70 L.Ed.2d 688, 689.) Four dissenting justices thought that the exclusion of resident aliens "stems solely from state parochialism and hostility toward foreigners who have come to this country lawfully." (102 S.Ct. 751, 70 L.Ed.2d 699.) (See 23 Santa Clara L. Rev. 691.)

4. Public Schoolteachers.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 733

[§ 733] Public Schoolteachers.

In Ambach v. Norwick (1979) 441 U.S. 68, 99 S.Ct. 1589, 60 L.Ed.2d 49, a New York statute forbade certification as a public schoolteacher of aliens unless they had manifested an intention to apply for citizenship. Held, the restriction did not violate the Equal Protection Clause.

(a) Development of law on discrimination against aliens. Although the early cases, such as Truax v. Raich (1915) 239 U.S. 33, 36 S.Ct. 7, 11, 60 L.Ed. 131, 136, supra, §721, recognized some state power to exclude aliens from public employment, later cases departed from this public interest doctrine. But it is still a general principle that some state functions are so bound up with the operation of the state as a governmental entity as to permit the exclusion from those functions of persons who have not become part of the process of self-government. (99 S.Ct. 1592, 1593, 60 L.Ed.2d 54, 55.) Thus, applying the rational basis standard, exclusion of aliens from the police force was upheld in Foley v. Connelie (1978) 435 U.S. 291, 98 S.Ct. 1067, 55 L.Ed.2d 287, supra, §732. (99 S.Ct. 1593, 60 L.Ed.2d 55.)

(b) The governmental function exception. "The distinction between citizens and aliens, though ordinarily irrelevant to private activity, is fundamental to the definition and government of a State." (99 S.Ct. 1593, 60 L.Ed.2d 55.) The assumption of the status of citizenship "denotes an association with the polity which, in a democratic republic, exercises the powers of governance." (99 S.Ct. 1594, 60 L.Ed.2d 55.)

(c) Teaching as a governmental function. Public education fulfills a fundamental obligation of government, because teachers play a critical part in developing students' attitudes toward government and understanding of the role of citizens. (99 S.Ct. 1595, 60 L.Ed.2d 57.) The teacher also serves as a role model for students, and has an obligation to promote civic virtues and understanding. (99 S.Ct. 1596, 60 L.Ed.2d 58.) Hence, public schoolteachers come within the governmental function exception, and the statute is valid if a citizenship requirement bears a rational relationship to a legitimate state interest. (99 S.Ct. 1596, 60 L.Ed.2d 59.)

(d) Legitimate state interest. The statute bars from teaching only those aliens who have shown unwillingness to become citizens; they have in effect classified themselves. "They prefer to retain citizenship in a foreign country with the obligations it entails of primary duty and loyalty. They have rejected the open invitation extended to qualify for eligibility to teach by applying for citizenship in this country." (99 S.Ct. 1596, 60 L.Ed.2d 59.) The statute furthers the judgment of New York that citizenship should be a qualification for teaching the young. (99 S.Ct. 1597, 60 L.Ed.2d 59.)

Four dissenting justices saw no distinction between this and other cases invalidating discrimination against aliens, particularly In re Griffiths (1973) 413 U.S. 717, 93 S.Ct. 2851, 2855, 37 L.Ed.2d 910, 916, supra, §725, on the practice of law. (See 92 Harv. L. Rev. 1516; 32 Hastings L. J. 163; 7 Hastings Const. L. Q. 484.)

[§ 734] In General.

Because the Equal Protection Clause applies to all "persons" (supra, §696), discrimination against nonresidents of a state in such matters as the right to engage in employment or business is unconstitutional. (See Abe v. Fish & Game Com. of Calif. (1935) 9 C.A.2d 300, 306, 49 P.2d 608 [statute authorizing commercial fishing license only to residents]; cf. Toomer v. Piper (1985) 470 U.S. 274, 105 S.Ct. 1272, 1277, 84 L.Ed.2d 205, 212, supra, §614 [same]; 53 A.L.R.3d 1163 [residence requirements for right to practice law].)

C.C.P. 526a, providing for a taxpayer's suit to enjoin expenditures for a public improvement (see 4 Cal. Proc. (4th), Pleading, §144), gives the right to citizen residents, and to corporations whether residents or not. In Irwin v. Manhattan Beach (1966) 65 C.2d 13, 19, 51 C.R. 881, 415 P.2d 769, the court held that a taxpayer of the city, though not a resident, could sue; the discrimination against a nonresident individual was obviously unconstitutional.

b. Welfare Benefits.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 735

[§ 735] Welfare Benefits.

The common requirement of 1 year's residence in a state before welfare may be sought by an indigent was declared unconstitutional in Shapiro v. Thompson (1969) 394 U.S. 618, 89 S.Ct. 1322, 22 L.Ed.2d 600. The majority reasoned as follows:

(a) The principal justification for the legislation--preservation of the fiscal integrity of state programs by discouraging an influx of poor families--is an unconstitutional object, violating the fundamental right to travel. (89 S.Ct. 1328, 22 L.Ed.2d 611; see supra, §403.)

(b) Even though indigents might enter the state solely to obtain larger benefits than in their home state, they cannot be fenced out, any more than indigents generally can be excluded, or those who move to a state to take advantage of better educational facilities can be excluded. (89 S.Ct. 1330, 22 L.Ed.2d 613.)

(c) The distinction cannot be made on the basis of contributions to the community through payment of taxes; this could logically be used to bar new residents from schools and parks, or to deprive them of police protection. (89 S.Ct. 1330, 22 L.Ed.2d 614.)

(d) Administrative objectives cannot support the legislation. Because the classification touches on the fundamental right of interstate movement (see supra, §403), "its constitutionality must be judged by the stricter standard of whether it promotes a compelling state interest." (89 S.Ct. 1333, 22 L.Ed.2d 617.)

(e) The Social Security Act of 1935 did not expressly approve this requirement; but, even if it did, Congress may not authorize states to violate the Equal Protection Clause. (89 S.Ct. 1335, 22 L.Ed.2d 619.)

Three dissenting justices took violent issue with the decision. They contended that Congress did approve, and could constitutionally approve, the residence requirement; and they warned of dangerous implications in the numerous situations involving residence requirements. (89 S.Ct. 1342, 1346, 22 L.Ed.2d 621, 627.) (See Saenz v. Roe (1999) 526 U.S. 489, 119 S.Ct. 1518, 1525, 1528, 143 L.Ed.2d 689, 702, 703 [following Shapiro; Welf.C. 11950.03, providing reduced welfare benefits for new residents based on lesser amount they would have received in former state, violated Privileges and Immunities and Citizenship Clauses of federal Constitution; state's interest in saving money did not justify discriminating among equally eligible citizens]; 83 *Harv. L. The opinion relied on Shapiro v. Thompson (1969) 394 U.S. 618, 89 S.Ct. 1322, 22 L.Ed.2d 600, supra, §735, and *Dunn v. [§ 737] Greater Benefits to Established Residents.

Zobel v. Williams (1982) 457 U.S. 55, 102 S.Ct. 2309, 72 L.Ed.2d 672, invalidated an Alaska statutory dividend program under which income from its natural resources (state-owned oil land) was distributed to adult citizens. The amount of the dividend was dependent on the length of the citizen's residence, so that a 1-year resident received $ 50, and a resident since Alaska became a state received $ 1,050. Thus, the statute created fixed and permanent distinctions between an ever increasing number of perpetual classes of concededly bona fide residents, in violation of the Equal Protection Clause.

"If the States can make the amount of a cash dividend depend on length of residence, what would preclude varying university tuition on a sliding scale based on years of residence--or even limiting access to finite public facilities, eligibility for student loans, for civil service jobs, or for government contracts by length of domicile? Could States impose different taxes based on length of residence? Alaska's reasoning would open the door to state apportionment of other rights, benefits and services according to length of residence. It would permit the states to divide citizens into expanding numbers of permanent classes. Such a result would be clearly impermissible." (102 S.Ct. 2314, 72 L.Ed.2d 680.)

In Del Monte v. Wilson (1992) 1 C.4th 1009, 1011, 4 C.R.2d 826, 824 P.2d 632, the question was whether "the distribution of veterans' benefits conditioned on California residence at a fixed point in the past violates the federal constitutional right to equal protection of the laws." Held, following recent decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court, "the statutes providing for such a distribution are unconstitutional."

The opinion discusses Zobel v. Williams and a number of other Supreme Court cases. (1 C.4th 1015 et seq.) The court followed Califano v. Westcott (1979) 443 U.S. 76, 99 S.Ct. 2655, 61 L.Ed.2d 382, infra, §768, in choosing the remedy of extension of coverage to include the parties aggrieved, where the statute is defective because of underinclusiveness. In Bay Area Women's Coalition v. San Francisco (1978) 78 C.A.3d 961, 144 C.R. 591, defendant's charter required 5 years' residence for persons appointed to city boards and commissions. Held, the provision was unconstitutional.

(a) Although these restrictions on eligibility for appointive office do not have the same impact as restrictions on eligibility for elective office (see supra, §259), all residence restrictions penalize the fundamental right to travel, and are therefore subject to the strict scrutiny test. (78 C.A.3d 967, 968.)

(b) The city has failed to sustain its burden of showing a compelling governmental interest. The contention that the durational residence requirement is necessary to insure a knowledge and understanding of local issues has been repeatedly rejected (see supra, §259); and the appointee's "vested interest" in the performance of his or her job can be assured by the requirement of continuing residence. (78 C.A.3d 970, 971.) (On residence requirement for municipal employees, see infra, §740.)

[§ 739] In General.

(1) Nonresident Attachment. The classification of nonresidents for special treatment in the attachment statute has two rational and proper purposes: (a) It gives the court jurisdiction quasi in rem, and (b) it is a substitute for supplemental proceedings in aid of execution, which are not likely to be effective against nonresidents. (See National General Corp. v. Dutch Inns of America (1971) 15 C.A.3d 490, 496, 93 C.R. 343; Property Research Financial Corp. v. Superior Court (1972) 23 C.A.3d 413, 422, 100 C.R. 233; 6 Cal. Proc. (4th), Provisional Remedies, §§237, 238.)

(2) Local Recreation Facilities for Residents. In the field of local legislation, a deliberate discrimination against nonresidents of a city may be justified by legitimate concern for the interest of residents. In McClain v. South Pasadena (1957) 155 C.A.2d 423, 318 P.2d 199, use of defendant city's municipal pool was by regulation limited to residents of the city. Plaintiff, a black child, challenged her exclusion, contending that white nonresidents were often admitted; but the trial judge found that the regulation was applicable without racial distinctions, despite the alleged lack of uniform enforcement. Hence, the restriction was justified under the municipal police power, because of the limited size and capacity of the pool and the population of the city. "The primary purpose of a municipal corporation is to contribute toward the welfare, health, happiness and interest of the inhabitants of such corporation, and not to further the interests of those residing outside its limits." (155 C.A.2d 438.) (See 57 A.L.R.3d 998 [Power of Municipality To Charge Nonresidents Higher Fees Than Residents for Use of Municipal Facilities].)

(3) Residence Requirement for Jurors. The 1-year residence requirement of a former version of C.C.P. 198 for prospective trial jurors was upheld in Adams v. Superior Court (1974) 12 C.3d 55, 115 C.R. 247, 524 P.2d 375, on the grounds that (a) newcomers are not a cognizable class; (b) the constitutional guarantee is for the benefit of the litigant, and does not create a fundamental right to serve on a jury; and (c) the historic "vicinage" requirement supports the view that there is a rational basis for seeking jurors acquainted with local conditions, customs, and mores. (12 C.3d 60, 61, 62.)

(4) Residence Requirement for Divorce. (See Sosna v. Iowa (1975) 419 U.S. 393, 95 S.Ct. 553, 42 L.Ed.2d 532, 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §73; 89 Harv. L. Rev. 88.)

(5) Residence Requirement for Municipal Employees. (See infra, §740.)

(6) Preferential Parking for Local Residents. (See infra, §741.)

(7) Nonresident Student Fees. (See infra, §742.)

2. Residence Requirement for Municipal Employees.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 740

[§ 740] Residence Requirement for Municipal Employees.

A charter requirement that, except for special waiver, all city officers and employees must be or become residents within 6 months after their appointment or employment, was upheld in Ector v. Torrance (1973) 10 C.3d 129, 109 C.R. 849, 514 P.2d 433.

(a) The traditional equal protection test (see supra, §703) applies, and a number of state and federal decisions have held that the requirement bears a rational relationship to one or more legitimate state purposes. (10 C.3d 134.) "Among the governmental purposes ... are the promotion of ethnic balance in the community; reduction in high unemployment rates of inner-city minority groups; improvement of relations between such groups and city employees; enhancement of the quality of employee performance by greater personal knowledge of the city's conditions and by a feeling of greater personal stake in the city's progress; diminution of absenteeism and tardiness among municipal personnel; ready availability of trained manpower in emergency situations; and the general economic benefits flowing from local expenditure of employees' salaries." (10 C.3d 135.)

(b) Asserted fundamental rights, as a basis for invoking the "strict" equal protection test (see supra, §704), are not involved here:

(1) The "right to travel" (see supra, §403) has been declared in connection with international travel and movement between states; none of the benefits are reaped from routine daily trips from home to work, and no "right to commute" has been recognized. (10 C.3d 135.) The right to move within a state has been declared in cases invalidating durational residence requirements (see supra, §§245, 259), but no such waiting period is involved here. (10 C.3d 135.)

(2) No authority supports the claim that limiting the place of residence is a violation of the right to marry and the right of privacy. "The critical question whether a legislative act is to be denied the presumption of validity and subjected to strict judicial scrutiny does not turn on the ingenuity of counsel in conceiving remotely possible ways in which the act might affect those rights. Appellant need not necessarily prove he was wholly denied the rights he now invokes, but he must at least show that his exercise of those rights was actually and significantly impaired." (10 C.3d 136.)

(3) There is no recognized fundamental right to be "let alone" in the choice of a place of residence, "and it is not the province of the courts to create substantive constitutional rights in the name of guaranteeing equal protection of the laws." (10 C.3d 137.) (See 62 Cal. L. Rev. 434; 67 Cal. L. Rev. 386 [Durational Residence Requirements for Public Employment]; 23 Cal. Western L. Rev. 24 [constitutionality of continuing residence requirements for local government employees].)

Cal. Const., Art. XI, §10(b), was added in 1976 in response to Ector v. Torrance. It provides that a city, county, or public district may not require its employees to be residents of the city, county, or district, but may require employees "to reside within a reasonable and specific distance of their places of employment or other designated location." The provision does not apply to residence requirements imposed by state law, and does not create a fundamental constitutional right invoking strict scrutiny of residence requirements. Thus the rational basis test continues to apply in cases challenging employment residence restrictions on equal protection grounds. (See Wall v. Municipal Court (1990) 223 C.A.3d 247, 250, 272 C.R. 702 [municipal court traffic trial commissioners: possibility either that commissioners who are familiar with locality are more efficient or that citizens have greater confidence when local residents adjudicate traffic cases was sufficient justification for state requirement that they live in judicial district of employment]; Graham v. Kirkwood Meadows Public Util. Dist. (1994) 21 C.A.4th 1631, 1644, 26 C.R.2d 793 [public utility district's requirement that employees live within three miles of work violated neither Govt.C. 50083, prohibiting local districts from requiring employees to reside within district, nor equal protection guarantees].)

3. Preferential Parking for Local Residents.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 741

[§ 741] Preferential Parking for Local Residents.

To stem the flow of commuter traffic from commercial and industrial districts into adjoining residential neighborhoods, municipalities have adopted ordinances giving local residents the preferred right to park in their areas. The U.S. Supreme Court, in County Bd. of Arlington v. Richards (1977) 434 U.S. 5, 98 S.Ct. 24, 54 L.Ed.2d 4, upheld the validity of these regulations. "To reduce air pollution and other environmental effects of automobile commuting, a community reasonably may restrict on-street parking available to commuters, thus encouraging reliance on car pools and mass transit. The same goal is served by assuring convenient parking to residents who leave their cars at home during the day. A community may also decide that restrictions on the flow of outside traffic into particular residential areas would enhance the quality of life there by reducing noise, traffic hazards, and litter. ... The Constitution does not outlaw these social and environmental objectives, nor does it presume distinctions between residents and nonresidents of a local neighborhood to be invidious. The Equal Protection Clause requires only that the distinction drawn by an ordinance like Arlington's rationally promote the regulation's objectives." (98 S.Ct. 26, 54 L.Ed.2d 7.)

In People v. Housman (1984) 163 C.A.3d Supp. 43, 210 C.R. 186, the court, following County Bd. of Arlington and Ector v. Torrance (1973) 10 C.3d 129, 109 C.R. 849, 514 P.2d 433, supra, §740, rejected the contention that there was a fundamental "right to commute," i.e., a right to travel between home and place of employment, and upheld a Beverly Hills preferential parking ordinance, with elaborate findings of necessity. (163 C.A.3d Supp. 49, 50, 52.)

[§ 742] Nonresident Student Fees.

(1) University Student. The validity of nonresident university fees was upheld in Kirk v. The Board Regents of Univ. of Calif. (1969) 273 C.A.2d 430, 78 C.R. 260. Petitioner, a resident of Ohio, married a California resident and moved to this state in July 1967. That fall, she enrolled at the University, was classified as a nonresident, and sought mandamus to compel reclassification as a resident. Held, judgment dismissing writ affirmed.

(a) The theory of Shapiro v. Thompson (1969) 394 U.S. 618, 89 S.Ct. 1322, 22 L.Ed.2d 600, supra, §735, does not apply: "While we fully recognize the value of higher education, we cannot equate its attainment with food, clothing and shelter. Shapiro involved the immediate and pressing need for preservation of life and health of persons unable to live without public assistance, and their dependent children. Thus, the residence requirements in Shapiro would cause great suffering and even loss of life. The durational residence requirement for attendance at publicly financed institutions of higher learning do not involve similar risks. Nor was petitioner ... precluded from the benefit of higher education. Charging higher tuition fees to nonresident students cannot be equated with granting of basic subsistence to one class of needy residents while denying it to an equally needy class of residents." (273 C.A.2d 440.)

(b) The residence requirement is not an absolute, permanent classification; petitioner can be reclassified as a resident on proof of her permanent residence here. (273 C.A.2d 443.) The state "has a valid interest in providing tuition-free education to those who have demonstrated by a year's residence a bona fide intention of remaining here and who, by reason of that education, will be prepared to make a greater contribution to the state's economy and future." (273 C.A.2d 444.) (See Gurfinkel v. Los Angeles Community College Dist. (1981) 121 C.A.3d 1, 6, 9, 175 C.R. 201 [following Kirk]; 53 Hastings L. J. 1093 [current residence requirements]; 56 A.L.R.3d 641 [provisions governing determination of residence for fixing out-of-state tuition].)

(2) Public School Student. In Martinez v. Bynum (1983) 461 U.S. 321, 103 S.Ct. 1838, 75 L.Ed.2d 879, the Court upheld a Texas law denying tuition-free admission to public schools for a minor who lived apart from a parent or guardian, if his or her presence in the school district was for the primary purpose of attending the public free schools. "A bona fide residence requirement, appropriately defined and uniformly applied, furthers the substantial state interest in assuring that services provided for its residents are enjoyed only by residents. Such a requirement with respect to attendance in public free schools does not violate the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. It does not burden or penalize the constitutional right of interstate travel, for any person is free to move to a State and establish residence there. A bona fide residence requirement simply requires that the person does establish residence before demanding the services that are restricted to residents." (103 S.Ct. 1842, 75 L.Ed.2d 887.)

7. Race or National Origin.

a. In General.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 743

[§ 743] In General.

(1) Nature of Prohibition. Except for unusual statutes, e.g., the alien land laws (directed against Japanese; supra, §722) and the anti-miscegenation laws (directed against any racial intermarriage; infra, §747), most of the measures of racial discrimination were directed at Blacks. And although discrimination against Blacks in respect of voting rights is expressly prohibited by the Fifteenth Amendment (see supra, §227), discrimination is also prohibited by the Fourteenth Amendment; i.e., classification on the basis of race, color, or national origin is improper. (See supra, §§252, 697; infra, §744 et seq.) The California Constitution also protects the rights of person from being disqualified from entering or pursuing any "business, profession, vocation, or employment" based on race, color, or national origin. (Cal. Const., Art. I, §8.) (See Flynt v. California Gambling Control Com. (2002) 104 C.A.4th 1125, 1141, 129 C.R.2d 167, 1 Summary (10th), Contracts, §634 [although federal legislation affecting Indian gambling rights relates to Indians as such, it is not based on impermissible racial classifications; tribal Indians belong to political group that is specially recognized as sovereign nation; thus, rational basis test applies to law giving tribes special gambling rights]; on proscriptions against racial discrimination in federal Civil Rights Act, see infra, §§814 et seq., 869; in Unruh Civil Rights Act, see infra, §905; in California Fair Employment and Housing Act, see infra, §921.)

(2) Proof of Racially Discriminatory Intent. Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Dev. Corp. (1977) 429 U.S. 252, 97 S.Ct. 555, 563, 50 L.Ed.2d 450, 464, stated that official action will not be held unconstitutional solely because it results in a racially disproportionate impact; proof of a racially discriminatory intent or purpose is required. (97 S.Ct. 563, 50 L.Ed.2d 464.) However, cases involving a clear pattern, unexplainable on grounds other than race, are rare. Usually, a court must look to other evidence; e.g., the background of the challenged decision, the specific sequence of events leading up to it, and the legislative or administrative history. (97 S.Ct. 564, 50 L.Ed.2d 465.) (See 91 Harv. L. Rev. 163; 5 Hastings Const. L. Q. 92 [Arlington Heights].)

1. In General.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 744

[§ 744] In General.

(1) Intentional Discrimination Shown. The intentional exclusion of Blacks from service on grand or trial juries solely because of race, whether by state legislation or acts of administrative officers, is a denial of equal protection to a black defendant in a criminal case. (Norris v. Alabama (1935) 294 U.S. 587, 55 S.Ct. 579, 580, 79 L.Ed. 1074, 1076 [trial jury]; People v. Hines (1939) 12 C.2d 535, 538, 86 P.2d 92 [same]; Hill v. Texas (1942) 316 U.S. 400, 62 S.Ct. 1159, 86 L.Ed. 1559 [grand jury]; Cassell v. Texas (1950) 339 U.S. 282, 70 S.Ct. 629, 632, 94 L.Ed. 839, 845 [same]; Reece v. Georgia (1955) 350 U.S. 85, 76 S.Ct. 167, 169, 100 L.Ed. 77, 81 [same].)

The discrimination is, of course, seldom made express by statute; instead, systems have been devised that indirectly result in the exclusion of Blacks. But all these schemes were held violative of the constitutional guarantee where intentional discrimination was shown (supra, §699). Thus, in Patton v. Mississippi (1947) 332 U.S. 463, 68 S.Ct. 184, 92 L.Ed. 76, it was proved that in a county with a substantial black population no Black had served as a juror in the criminal courts for 30 years. The Court declared that the principle applies "regardless of whether the discrimination was embodied in statute or was apparent from the administrative practices of state jury selection officials, and regardless of whether the system for depriving defendants of their rights was 'ingenious or ingenuous.'" (68 S.Ct. 185, 92 L.Ed. 78.) (See Avery v. Georgia (1953) 345 U.S. 559, 73 S.Ct. 891, 97 L.Ed. 1244 [jury commissioners used system of white and yellow tickets, and no Black was selected on panel of 60]; Eubanks v. Louisiana (1958) 356 U.S. 584, 78 S.Ct. 970, 973, 2 L.Ed.2d 991, 994; Alexander v. Louisiana (1972) 405 U.S. 625, 92 S.Ct. 1221, 31 L.Ed.2d 536 [grand jury, all white]; 101 Harv. L. Rev. 1557 [Race and the Criminal Jury]; 20 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 581 [statistical method of showing discrimination in jury selection].)

The same view was taken of discrimination against Mexicans in Hernandez v. Texas (1954) 347 U.S. 475, 74 S.Ct. 667, 98 L.Ed. 866. Petitioner, convicted of murder, contended that persons of Mexican descent were systematically excluded from service as jury commissioners, grand jurors, and petit jurors, in Jackson County, Texas. The Texas system appeared fair on its face, but the state stipulated that, despite a substantial Mexican population, for the last 25 years there was no record of a person with a Mexican or Latin American name having served. The Court declared that it "taxes our credulity" to say that mere chance brought about this result; it "bespeaks discrimination, whether or not it was a conscious decision on the part of any individual jury commissioner." (74 S.Ct. 672, 98 L.Ed. 872.)

(2) Intentional Discrimination Not Shown. In Akins v. Texas (1945) 325 U.S. 398, 65 S.Ct. 1276, 1279, 89 L.Ed. 1692, 1696, where the jury commissioners selected only one Black for a 12-man grand jury, though the black population amounted to 15 1/2%, the Court found no denial of equal protection. "Fairness in selection has never been held to require proportional representation of races upon a jury. ... Purposeful discrimination is not sustained by a showing that on a single grand jury the number of members of one race is less than that race's proportion of the eligible individuals." (See Brown v. Allen (1953) 344 U.S. 443, 73 S.Ct. 397, 416, 97 L.Ed. 469, 498 [no purposeful discrimination in statute providing for use of property and poll tax lists, although they contained higher proportion of Caucasians than Blacks].)

(3) Waiver of Objection. The right to raise an objection to a jury may be waived by failure to comply with reasonable state procedures. In Michel v. Louisiana (1955) 350 U.S. 91, 76 S.Ct. 158, 100 L.Ed. 83, a Louisiana statute required raising of objections to a grand jury before the third day after the court term ended or before trial, whichever was earlier. Held, the time allowed was reasonable; hence, the requirement was valid, and barred a belated challenge by black defendants to an all-white grand jury. (Cf. Williams v. Georgia (1955) 349 U.S. 375, 75 S.Ct. 814, 822, 99 L.Ed. 1161, 1173 [belated raising of issue allowed in capital case].)

b. Jury Selection.

2. Exclusionary Use of Peremptory Challenge.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 745

[§ 745] Exclusionary Use of Peremptory Challenge.

(1) Former View. In Swain v. Alabama (1965) 380 U.S. 202, 85 S.Ct. 824, 13 L.Ed.2d 759, petitioner, convicted of rape and sentenced to death, challenged the Alabama system of the "struck jury," in which the defense and prosecution strike jurors alternately from a venire until 12 are left. By this means the prosecutor eliminated all six Blacks on the venire, and petitioner contended that this practice had been so consistently followed that no Black had ever served on a jury in the county. Although the Court found nothing inherently unconstitutional in this kind of peremptory challenge, it did declare, in a strong dictum, that systematic exclusion by this method, if proved, would violate the Equal Protection Clause.

(a) If systematic striking had been proved. "[W]hen the prosecutor in a county, in case after case, whatever the circumstances, whatever the crime and whoever the defendant or the victim may be, is responsible for the removal of Negroes who have been selected as qualified jurors by the jury commissioners and who have survived challenges for cause, with the result that no Negroes ever serve on petit juries, the Fourteenth Amendment claim takes on added significance. ... In these circumstances, giving even the widest leeway to the operation of irrational but trial-related suspicions and antagonisms, it would appear that the purposes of the peremptory challenge are being perverted. If the State has not seen fit to leave a single Negro on any jury in a criminal case, the presumption protecting the prosecution may well be overcome. Such proof might support a reasonable inference that Negroes are excluded from juries for reasons wholly unrelated to the outcome of the particular case on trial and that the peremptory system is being used to deny the Negro the same right and opportunity to participate in the administration of justice enjoyed by the white population. These ends the peremptory challenge is not designed to facilitate or justify." (85 S.Ct. 837, 838, 13 L.Ed.2d 774.)

(b) Burden of proof not met. The record showed that often the prosecution and defense agreed on striking, and that many black defendants do not want a mixed jury. The fact that no Black had served on a jury in the county was not enough to support the inference of discrimination in this type of case, i.e., where the elimination resulted from the exercise of peremptory challenges in which defense counsel participated. (85 S.Ct. 839, 13 L.Ed.2d 775.)

The dissenting opinion argued that (1) because only about 10-15% of the venires were Blacks, the striking system made it possible to exclude all of them; (2) that when it was shown that no Black had ever been on a jury, the burden of going forward shifted to the state to show a proper basis for exclusion. (85 S.Ct. 845, 13 L.Ed.2d 783.) (See 79 Harv. L. Rev. 135.)

(2) Modern View. The Swain view was rejected for California criminal trials in People v. Wheeler (1978) 22 C.3d 258, 287, footnotes 35, 36, 148 C.R. 890, 583 P.2d 748, 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §495. The court, relying on the independent grounds doctrine (see supra, §109), said that "the use of peremptory challenges to remove prospective jurors on the sole ground of group bias violates the right to trial by a jury drawn from a representative cross-section of the community" under Cal. Const., Art. I, §16. (22 C.3d 277.) (See 92 Harv. L. Rev. 1770 [proposal that Sixth Amendment regulate exercise of peremptory Challenge]; 97 Harv. L. Rev. 193 [use of peremptory challenge to exclude racial group from jury]; 101 Harv. L. Rev. 1557 [Race and the Criminal Jury]; 12 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 747 [Wheeler and Swain]; 16 San Diego L. Rev. 897 [Wheeler]; 32 Stanf. L. Rev. 189 [same]; 79 A.L.R.3d 14 [use of peremptory challenge to exclude from jury persons belonging to class or race].)

The U.S. Supreme Court rejected Swain in Batson v. Kentucky (1986) 476 U.S. 79, 106 S.Ct. 1712, 90 L.Ed.2d 69, which has been followed and construed in a number of subsequent cases. (See 5 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Criminal Trial, §496.)

The 2000 Legislature added a statutory prohibition. Peremptory challenges may not be used "to remove a prospective juror on the basis of an assumption that the prospective juror is biased" merely because of race, color, or national origin. (C.C.P. 231.5.)

[§ 746] Racial Restrictive Covenants.

In Shelley v. Kraemer (1948) 334 U.S. 1, 68 S.Ct. 836, 92 L.Ed. 1161, supra, §700, the U.S. Supreme Court practically invalidated racial covenants restricting occupancy of real property by holding that equitable enforcement of the covenants was a denial of equal protection. One of the arguments for enforceability was that Blacks were free to make covenants excluding white persons, and that the formerly accepted principle of the segregation laws relating to schools (equal facilities and treatment) should apply. The Court summarily rejected this argument, declaring that the rights created by the Amendment are personal and guaranteed to the individual, and that equal protection "is not achieved through indiscriminate imposition of inequalities." (68 S.Ct. 846, 92 L.Ed. 1185.) (See Cumings v. Hokr (1948) 31 C.2d 844, 846, 193 P.2d 742 [changing former California rule in accordance with holding of Shelley]; Claremont Imp. Club v. Buckingham (1948) 89 C.A.2d 32, 33, 200 P.2d 47 [following Shelley where constitutional question was raised for first time on appeal]; 3 A.L.R.2d 466 [restrictive covenants, etc., discriminating against persons on account of race, color, or religion].)

In Shelley, the Court observed that the agreements standing alone and voluntarily adhered to did not involve state action or a denial of constitutional rights. The question then arose whether an action for damages for breach of the covenant could still be maintained. This question was answered in Barrows v. Jackson (1953) 346 U.S. 249, 73 S.Ct. 1031, 97 L.Ed. 1586 (affirming 112 C.A.2d 534, 247 P.2d 99). The opinion declared that state action is involved in a damage suit as well as in an equitable action to enforce the covenant, and that non-Whites are deprived of equal protection because they will either be unable to buy or will be required to pay a higher price to meet the damages the seller may incur. "This Court will not permit or require California to coerce respondent to respond in damages for failure to observe a restrictive covenant that this Court would deny California the right to enforce in equity ... or that this Court would deny California the right to incorporate in a statute ... or that could not be enforced in a federal jurisdiction because such a covenant would be contrary to public policy." (73 S.Ct. 1036, 97 L.Ed. 1596.) (For discussion of standing of defendant to raise constitutional issue, see supra, §85; on legislation nullifying racial restrictive covenants, see 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §201.)

In Hurd v. Hodge (1948) 334 U.S. 24, 68 S.Ct. 847, 92 L.Ed. 1187, racial restrictive covenants were held unenforceable against a U.S. citizen residing in the District of Columbia, on the theory that the Civil Rights Act should be given a construction and application similar to that given to the Fourteenth Amendment itself. An additional, broader, though somewhat less clear ground of the decision was stated as follows: "It is not consistent with the public policy of the United States to permit federal courts in the Nation's capital to exercise general equitable powers to compel action denied the state courts where such state action has been held to be violative of the guaranty of the equal protection of the laws. We cannot presume that the public policy of the United States manifests a lesser concern for the protection of such basic rights against discriminatory action of federal courts than against such action taken by the courts of the States." (68 S.Ct. 852, 92 L.Ed. 1195.) (For proscriptions against discrimination in housing under federal Civil Rights Act, see infra, §851; under Unruh Civil Rights Act, see infra, §908; and under California Fair Employment and Housing Act, see infra §945 et seq.)

7. Race or National Origin.

d. Anti-Miscegenation Law.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 747

[§ 747] Anti-Miscegenation Law.

In Perez v. Sharp (1948) 32 C.2d 711, 198 P.2d 17, petitioners, a white woman and a black man, were denied a marriage license by respondent county clerk. Respondent relied on former C.C. 60 (repealed in 1959) prohibiting marriages between white and black persons. Held, mandamus granted to compel issuance of the license. The first opinion (of three justices) reasons as follows:

(a) There is a fundamental right to marry the person of one's choice, which is protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. "Marriage is thus something more than a civil contract subject to regulation by the state; it is a fundamental right of free men. There can be no prohibition of marriage except for an important social objective and by reasonable means." (32 C.2d 714.) Hence, discrimination on the basis of race alone can be justified only if the differences between the racial groups bear a substantial relation to a legitimate legislative objective. (32 C.2d 714, 718.)

(b) The assumption made in support of these statutes, that the black race is inferior, has no modern scientific support. (32 C.2d 722.)

(c) The theory of segregation in common carriers and schools (equal facilities for each group) cannot justify denial of the right to marry an "irreplaceable" person. "Human beings are bereft of worth and dignity by a doctrine that would make them as interchangeable as trains." (32 C.2d 725.)

(d) To say that mixed marriages should be prevented because they create social tensions is to argue for the perpetuation of the racial prejudices causing the social tensions. (32 C.2d 727.)

A fourth justice concurred on the ground that the statute violated the guarantee of religious freedom because there was no "clear and present danger" justifying the prohibition. (32 C.2d 740.)

The unconstitutionality of these laws was finally declared by the U.S. Supreme Court in Loving v. Virginia (1967) 388 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1817, 18 L.Ed.2d 1010. A black woman and a white man, Virginia residents, were married in the District of Columbia. On their return to Virginia they were convicted of violating its statutes prohibiting marriage between white and black persons. Held, these laws violate both the Equal Protection and Due Process Clauses.

(a) Equal protection. The State's justification--white and black persons are equally subject to prosecution--is insufficient. The statutes rest solely on distinctions drawn according to race, and there is no legitimate purpose that justifies it. "There can be no doubt that restricting the freedom to marry solely because of racial classification violates the central meaning of the Equal Protection Clause." (87 S.Ct. 1823, 18 L.Ed.2d 1018.)

(b) Due process. The "freedom to marry" is a vital personal right. "To deny this fundamental freedom on so unsupportable a basis as the racial classifications embodied in these statutes, classifications so directly subversive of the principle of equality at the heart of the Fourteenth Amendment, is surely to deprive all the State's citizens of liberty without due process of law. The Fourteenth Amendment requires that the freedom of choice to marry not be restricted by invidious racial discriminations. Under our Constitution, the freedom to marry or not marry, a person of another race, resides with the individual and cannot be infringed by the State." (87 S.Ct. 1824, 18 L.Ed.2d 1018.)

A concurring justice repeated his sweeping assertion in McLaughlin v. Florida (1964) 379 U.S. 184, 85 S.Ct. 283, 13 L.Ed.2d 222, infra, §748, that "it is simply not possible for a state law to be valid under our Constitution which makes the criminality of an act depend upon the race of the actor." (87 S.Ct. 1824, 18 L.Ed.2d 1018.)

In Stokes v. County Clerk of Los Angeles (1953) 122 C.A.2d 229, 264 P.2d 959, petitioners sought mandamus to compel the issuance of a marriage license without disclosing the information on race and color required by former C.C. 69, 69a and Health & Saf.C. 10526. Held, writ denied; the requirement was a reasonable regulation that placed no limitation on the right to marry and did not discriminate between races. The court relied mainly on the argument of Health Department officials that this was part of a comprehensive system of identification and statistics, required in marriage, birth, and death certificates, and designed to obtain information as to population, birth, and death rates, the relationship of color or race to factors of mortality, morbidity, fecundity, and public health. (122 C.A.2d 233.)

The challenged provision was, however, repealed in 1959, and statutes now prohibit recording the parties' race or color. (See Family C. 354(d) [application for marriage license]; Health & Saf.C. 103175 [marriage certificate].)

[§ 748] Interracial Cohabitation Law.

A Florida statute made it a crime for a black person and a white person of the opposite sex, unmarried, to habitually occupy the same room at night. It was enacted to serve the same general purpose as the state's interracial marriage prohibition. In McLaughlin v. Florida (1964) 379 U.S. 184, 85 S.Ct. 283, 13 L.Ed.2d 222, the Court held the cohabitation law invalid.

(a) Because the central purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment is to eliminate racial discrimination, racial classifications are "constitutionally suspect" and subject to the "most rigid scrutiny." (85 S.Ct. 288, 13 L.Ed.2d 228.)

(b) There was no overriding statutory purpose to justify this classification. There was no suggestion that a White and a Black are more likely to engage in illicit intercourse than all-white or all-black couples, and the proper legislative purpose of dealing with illicit promiscuity was fully served by the general statutes punishing adultery and fornication. (85 S.Ct. 289, 13 L.Ed.2d 229.)

1. Former Separate but Equal Doctrine.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 749

[§ 749] Former Separate but Equal Doctrine.

(1) Facilities Equal. The theory was early declared and long followed that state laws requiring segregation of racial groups in schools or conveyances, etc., were valid; i.e., that the mere separation itself did not constitute a discrimination against any race. (See Plessy v. Ferguson (1896) 163 U.S. 537, 16 S.Ct. 1138, 41 L.Ed. 256; Gong Lum v. Rice (1927) 275 U.S. 78, 48 S.Ct. 91, 72 L.Ed. 172.)

(2) Facilities Unequal. Segregation was held unconstitutional where the facilities and treatment furnished to each racial group within the state were unequal in fact. (See Gaines v. Canada (1938) 305 U.S. 337, 59 S.Ct. 232, 83 L.Ed. 208 [state required to admit Black to white law school where there was no black law school; payment of tuition for out-of-state school was insufficient]; Sipuel v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma (1948) 332 U.S. 631, 68 S.Ct. 299, 92 L.Ed. 247; McLaurin v. Oklahoma State Regents for Higher Education (1950) 339 U.S. 637, 70 S.Ct. 851, 94 L.Ed. 1149 [placing black graduate student in segregated parts of classroom, library, and cafeteria constituted impairment of his ability to study and denial of equal protection]; Sweatt v. Painter (1950) 339 U.S. 629, 70 S.Ct. 848, 94 L.Ed. 1114 [separate Texas law school for Blacks was unequal in facilities to University of Texas Law School].)

(3) Segregation in Interstate Carrier. The denial of equal facilities by segregation on an interstate carrier was condemned as a violation of the Interstate Commerce Act provision against discrimination. (Mitchell v. United States (1941) 313 U.S. 80, 61 S.Ct. 873, 85 L.Ed. 1201; Henderson v. United States (1950) 339 U.S. 816, 70 S.Ct. 843, 94 L.Ed. 1302; Boynton v. Virginia (1960) 364 U.S. 454, 81 S.Ct. 182, 5 L.Ed.2d 206 [segregation in bus terminal restaurant].)

(4) Doctrine Repudiated. In Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Shawnee, Kansas (1954) 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873, infra, §750, the separate but equal doctrine was repudiated for school segregation cases, and later decisions applied the holding to other public facilities. 7. Race or National Origin.

f. Segregation.

2. Public Schools Generally.

aa. Segregation Unconstitutional.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 750

[§ 750] Segregation Unconstitutional.

(1) In General. The major issue in racial segregation involving the public schools was settled in Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Shawnee, Kansas (1954) 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873. In consolidated cases from Kansas, South Carolina, Virginia, and Delaware, black minors sought admission to public schools on a nonsegregated basis, contrary to state laws requiring or permitting segregation according to race. Held, relief granted.

(a) The issue of the present validity of the separate but equal doctrine is squarely presented by findings that the black and white schools are being equalized with respect to buildings, teachers, curricula, and other tangible factors. (74 S.Ct. 691, 98 L.Ed. 880.)

(b) Education today is perhaps the most important function of state and local governments--the foundation of good citizenship, an instrument for awakening the child to cultural values and preparing the child for life. The opportunity for an education, "where the state has undertaken to provide it, is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms." (74 S.Ct. 691, 98 L.Ed. 880.)

(c) The intangible factors relied on in Sweatt v. Painter (1950) 339 U.S. 629, 70 S.Ct. 848, 94 L.Ed. 1114, and McLaurin v. Oklahoma State Regents for Higher Education (1950) 339 U.S. 637, 70 S.Ct. 851, 94 L.Ed. 1149, in finding a denial of equal protection, i.e., the ability to study with and engage in discussion and exchange of views with other students, apply with added force to children in grade and high schools. "To separate them from others of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone." (74 S.Ct. 691, 98 L.Ed. 880.)

(d) The doctrine of Plessy v. Ferguson (1896) 163 U.S. 537, 16 S.Ct. 1138, 41 L.Ed. 256, is rejected. "We conclude that in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal. Therefore, we hold that the plaintiffs and others similarly situated for whom the actions have been brought are, by reason of the segregation complained of, deprived of the equal protection of the laws." (74 S.Ct. 692, 98 L.Ed. 881.) (See 38 A.L.R.2d 1188 [note on racial segregation]; 5 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Civil Rights §281 et seq.)

The same conclusion was reached in an attack on segregation in the District of Columbia, which is not a state and hence not subject to the Equal Protection Clause. In Bolling v. Sharpe (1954) 347 U.S. 497, 74 S.Ct. 693, 98 L.Ed. 884, the Court relied on the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment: "[T]he concepts of equal protection and due process, both stemming from our American ideal of fairness, are not mutually exclusive. The 'equal protection of the laws' is a more explicit safeguard of prohibited unfairness than 'due process of law,' and, therefore, we do not imply that the two are always interchangeable phrases. But, as this Court has recognized, discrimination may be so unjustifiable as to be violative of due process." (74 S.Ct. 694, 98 L.Ed. 886.) "Although the Court has not assumed to define 'liberty' with any great precision, that term is not confined to mere freedom from bodily restraint. Liberty under law extends to the full range of conduct which the individual is free to pursue, and it cannot be restricted except for a proper governmental objective. Segregation in public education is not reasonably related to any proper governmental objective, and thus it imposes on Negro children of the District of Columbia a burden that constitutes an arbitrary deprivation of their liberty in violation of the Due Process Clause." (74 S.Ct. 694, 98 L.Ed. 887.)

[§ 751] Initial Implementation of Brown Decision.

Early resistance to Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Shawnee, Kansas (1954) 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873, supra, §750, passive and active, produced several important pronouncements from the Supreme Court.

In Brown v. Board of Education (1955) 349 U.S. 294, 75 S.Ct. 753, 99 L.Ed. 1083, the Court considered the manner in which the first Brown decision was to be given effect. Recognizing the complexity of the problems arising from the required transition, and the differences in local conditions, the Court determined that implementing orders should be made by the lower federal courts in accordance with equitable principles and practices, and accordingly remanded the cases. But the opinion, while envisaging the need for additional time to put the decision into full effect, declares that "a prompt and reasonable start toward full compliance" must be made, and that "[t]he burden rests upon the defendants to establish that such time is necessary in the public interest and is consistent with good faith compliance at the earliest practicable date." (75 S.Ct. 756, 99 L.Ed. 1106.) (See 3 Rotunda, §18.9.)

In Cooper v. Aaron (1958) 358 U.S. 1, 78 S.Ct. 1401, 3 L.Ed.2d 5, the federal district Court had approved a postponement by Arkansas of a desegregation plan, brought about by legislative and executive opposition to the decision. Citing the Supremacy Clause (supra, §8), the Court emphatically declared that "the constitutional rights of children not to be discriminated against in school admission on grounds of race or color ... can neither be nullified openly and directly by state legislators or state executive or judicial officers, nor nullified indirectly by them through evasive schemes for segregation." (78 S.Ct. 1409, 3 L.Ed.2d 116.) And the basic Brown principle was unanimously reaffirmed by the Court (with three new justices): "The principles announced in that decision and the obedience of the States to them, according to the command of the Constitution, are indispensable for the protection of the freedoms guaranteed by our fundamental charter for all of us. Our constitutional ideal of equal justice under law is thus made a living truth." (79 S.Ct. 1410, 3 L.Ed.2d 18.) (See McNeese v. Board of Education for Community Unit School Dist. 187, Cahokia, Illinois (1963) 373 U.S. 668, 83 S.Ct. 1433, 10 L.Ed.2d 622 [federal Civil Rights Act may be invoked by black student forced to attend segregated school]; *Griffin v. [§ 752] Unconstitutional Methods of Segregation.

(1) Transfer System. In Goss v. Board of Education of Knoxville, Tennessee (1963) 373 U.S. 683, 83 S.Ct. 1405, 10 L.Ed.2d 632, the desegregation plan adopted by the Board of Education of Knoxville, Tennessee, included a transfer system. Under it a white or black student could, on request, obtain a transfer from a school in his or her zone to a school in an outside zone in which his or her race was in the majority, but not where it was in the minority. In other words, the student had free choice of segregation but not of integration outside his or her zone. The effect would be to promote segregation, and it was accordingly held unconstitutional.

(2) District Zoning. In Jackson v. Pasadena City School Dist. (1963) 59 C.2d 876, 31 C.R. 606, 382 P.2d 878, the complaint of a black junior high school pupil alleged that, by intentional gerrymandering of zones, defendant board kept junior high schools predominantly black or predominantly white; and that in consequence, he was forced to attend an inherently inferior school. Held, reversing a judgment on demurrer, a cause of action was stated. Three points stand out in the opinion:

(a) Although the federal cases were usually concerned with complete segregation, the same unconstitutional discrimination is involved where black children are forced to attend a predominantly black school. (59 C.2d 880.)

(b) The unconstitutional racial imbalance may be brought about not only by compelling Blacks to attend a predominantly black school, but also by providing different schools in which white students are naturally placed because of proximity and convenience. (59 C.2d 881.)

(c) Even in the absence of proof of intentional discriminatory action as alleged, it may be the constitutional duty of school authorities to take affirmative steps to prevent racial imbalance resulting from residential segregation. "Residential segregation is in itself an evil which tends to frustrate the youth in the area and to cause antisocial attitudes and behavior. Where such segregation exists it is not enough for a school board to refrain from affirmative discriminatory conduct. The harmful influence on the children will be reflected and intensified in the classroom if school attendance is determined on a geographic basis without corrective measures. The right to an equal opportunity for education and the harmful consequences of segregation require that school boards take steps, insofar as reasonably feasible, to alleviate racial imbalance in schools regardless of its cause." (59 C.2d 881.) (See 11 A.L.R.3d 780 [de facto segregation in public schools]; for restatement of Jackson principle, see infra, §754.)

(3) Closing Schools. The segregationists of Prince Edward County, Virginia, devised a plan to overcome the effect of Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Shawnee, Kansas (1954) 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873, supra, §750. A constitutional amendment authorized the use of public funds to assist students attending private schools, legislation closed the public schools, and local officials refused to levy taxes for integrated schools. As a result, the public schools remained closed in this county, and black children were without formal education from 1959 to 1963.

In Griffin v. County School Bd. of Prince Edward (1964) 377 U.S. 218, 84 S.Ct. 1226, 12 L.Ed.2d 256, black children sued in the federal district court to enjoin defendant officials from paying public funds to support segregated private schools. The district court enjoined payment so long as the public schools remained closed. Held, affirmed. The Virginia statute allowing each county the option to operate public schools or not, as applied in this case, meant that children in Prince Edward County had to go to private schools or none at all, while in other counties they could go to public schools. The reason for the law was solely to prevent white and black children from attending the same school. "Whatever nonracial grounds might support a State's allowing a county to abandon public schools, the object must be a constitutional one, and grounds of race and opposition to desegregation do not qualify as constitutional." (84 S.Ct. 1233, 12 L.Ed.2d 265.) (On challenges to tuition grants under Establishment of Religion Clause, see supra, §546.)

(4) Freedom of Choice Plan. In Green v. County School Bd. of New Kent, Virginia (1968) 391 U.S. 430, 88 S.Ct. 1689, 20 L.Ed.2d 716, New Kent County, Virginia, had two segregated schools. In 1965, the School Board adopted a plan under which a pupil was free to choose his or her school. Not a single white child chose the predominantly black school, and 85% of the black children continued to attend the all-black school. Held, this plan was not a satisfactory implementation of Brown. Freedom of choice is not in itself unconstitutional, but it can be accepted only if effective in desegregation. The burden is on the Board to produce a plan that promises realistically to work now. (88 S.Ct. 1694, 20 L.Ed.2d 725.) (See Monroe v. Board of Commrs. of Jackson, Tennessee (1968) 391 U.S. 450, 88 S.Ct. 1700, 1703, 20 L.Ed.2d 733, 738 ["free transfer" plan, permitting choice after initial assignment; same test applies, whether it accomplishes effective desegregation, and plan failed to meet it]; 82 Harv. L. Rev. 111 [Green; commenting on lack of guidance in opinion on what should be done]; 81 Cal. L. Rev. 1029 [School Choice as Method for Desegregating an Inner-City School District].)

[§ 753] Duty To Desegregate and Guidelines.

(1) Duty To Desegregate. The standard of "all deliberate speed" laid down in Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Shawnee, Kansas (1954) 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873, supra, §750, is no longer acceptable. "[T]he obligation of every school district is to terminate dual school systems at once and to operate now and hereafter only unitary schools." (Alexander v. Holmes County Bd. of Education (1969) 396 U.S. 19, 90 S.Ct. 29, 24 L.Ed.2d 19; see Dayton Bd. of Education v. Brinkman (1979) 443 U.S. 526, 99 S.Ct. 2971, 2979, 61 L.Ed.2d 720, 734; Columbus Bd. of Education v. Penick (1979) 443 U.S. 449, 99 S.Ct. 2941, 2950, 61 L.Ed.2d 666, 678; People v. San Diego Unified School Dist. (1971) 19 C.A.3d 252, 265, 96 C.R. 658; Pena v. Superior Court (1975) 50 C.A.3d 694, 700, 123 C.R. 500; 84 Harv. L. Rev. 32 [Alexander]; 93 Harv. L. Rev. 119 [Dayton and Columbus]; 100 Harv. L. Q.* 505 [Dayton and Columbus]; 41 Stanf. L. Rev. 61 [desegregation as Cold War imperative]; 50 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1547 [vestiges of segregation]; on integration under Civil Rights Act of 1964, see 42 U.S.C., §2000c et seq.)

(2) Guidelines. In Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Bd. of Education (1971) 402 U.S. 1, 91 S.Ct. 1267, 1279, 28 L.Ed.2d 554, 570, the Court offered guidelines for eliminating segregation, considering four problem areas:

(a) Racial balances or racial quotas. It is not essential that every school must reflect the racial composition of the school system as a whole, but a limited use of mathematical ratios is an appropriate starting point. (91 S.Ct. 1280, 28 L.Ed.2d 571.)

(b) One-race schools. The existence of some virtually one-race schools is not itself proof that segregation is being practiced; but where there is a history of segregation, school officials have the burden of showing that the schools are genuinely nondiscriminatory. (91 S.Ct. 1281, 28 L.Ed.2d 572.)

(c) Remedial altering of attendance zones. "Racially neutral" plans may be inadequate to counteract the effects of past segregation resulting from discriminatory location of school sites or distortion of school size; it may be necessary to pair and group noncontiguous school zones. (91 S.Ct. 1283, 28 L.Ed.2d 573.)

(d) Transportation of students. Bus transportation has been an integral part of the public education system for years, and may be a necessary tool of school desegregation. "Desegregation plans cannot be limited to the walk-in school." (91 S.Ct. 1283, 28 L.Ed.2d 575.) (See Wright v. Council of Emporia (1972) 407 U.S. 451, 92 S.Ct. 2196, 2204, 33 L.Ed.2d 51, 62 [desegregation was not achieved by splitting dual system into two unitary but essentially segregated systems]; United States v. Scotland Neck City Bd. of Education (1972) 407 U.S. 484, 92 S.Ct. 2214, 33 L.Ed.2d 75; Keyes v. School Dist. No. 1, Denver, Colorado (1973) 413 U.S. 189, 93 S.Ct. 2686, 37 L.Ed.2d 548; 83 Harv. L. Rev. 1434 [Swann]; 85 Harv. L. Rev. 74 [same]; 86 Harv. L. Rev. 62 [Wright]; 61 Cal. L. Rev. 858 [alternative schools for minority students]; 4 Lincoln L. Rev. 156 [Swann].)

Federal courts cannot impose a multidistrict, areawide remedy to a single district de jure segregation problem, without proof that other included districts had committed acts effecting segregation, and without an opportunity for the included districts to be heard on the propriety of the remedy. (Milliken v. Bradley (1974) 418 U.S. 717, 94 S.Ct. 3112, 3127, 41 L.Ed.2d 1069, 1091.) (See 88 Harv. L. Rev. 61; 28 Stanf. L. Rev. 521; 2 Hastings Const. L. Q. 349.)

In the second Milliken case, Milliken v. Bradley (1977) 433 U.S. 267, 97 S.Ct. 2749, 53 L.Ed.2d 745, the Court upheld a desegregation decree ordering compensatory or remedial educational programs for schoolchildren who had been subjected to past acts of de jure segregation. (See 9 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 815; 12 U.S.F. L. Rev. 15.)

In United States v. Fordice (1992) 505 U.S. 717, 112 S.Ct. 2727, 120 L.Ed.2d 575, the court said: "Because the former de jure segregated system of public universities in Mississippi impeded the free choice of prospective students, the State in dismantling that system must take the necessary steps to ensure that the choice now is truly free. The full range of policies and practices must be examined with this duty in mind. That an institution is predominantly white or black does not in itself make out a constitutional violation. But surely the State may not leave in place policies rooted in its prior officially-segregated system that serve to maintain the racial identifiability of its universities if those policies can practicably be eliminated without eroding sound educational policies." (112 S.Ct. 2745, 120 L.Ed.2d 602.) (See 106 Harv. L. Rev. 230.)

Missouri v. Jenkins (1995) 515 U.S. 70, 115 S.Ct. 2038, 132 L.Ed.2d 63, discussed the proper scope of a district court's remedial authority. If an intradistrict violation is involved, the court cannot order a remedy directed at an interdistrict goal. (115 S.Ct. 2049, 132 L.Ed.2d 81.) Hence, an order designed to improve the "desegregative attractiveness" of the district and to reverse "white flight" to the suburbs is beyond the court's authority, because the remedy is designed to accomplish indirectly what the court lacks the authority to mandate directly: the interdistrict transfer of students. (115 S.Ct. 2051, 2055, 132 L.Ed.2d 83, 87.) (See 109 Harv. L. Rev. 239 [Missouri v. Jenkins]; 50 Hastings L. J. 475 [same]; 28 Hastings Const. L. Q. 655 [tensions between integration and school reform]; 28 Hastings Const. L. Q. 699 [tracking students by academic ability]; 28 Hastings Const. L. Q. 739 [return to neighborhood schools]; 45 Stanf. L. Rev. 1099 [all-male African American public schools].)

(3) Court Order To Increase Taxes. "However wide the discretion of local authorities in fashioning desegregation remedies may be, 'if a state-imposed limitation on a school authority's discretion operates to inhibit or obstruct the operation of a unitary school system or impede the disestablishing of a dual school system, it must fall; state policy must give way when it operates to hinder vindication of federal constitutional guarantees.'" Thus, "a local government with taxing authority may be ordered to levy taxes in excess of the limit set by the state statute where there is reason based on the Constitution for not observing the statutory limitation. ... To hold otherwise would fail to take account of the obligations of local governments, under the Supremacy Clause, to fulfill the requirements that the Constitution imposes on them." (Missouri v. Jenkins (1990) 495 U.S. 33, 110 S.Ct. 1651, 1666, 109 L.Ed.2d 31, 58.) (See 104 Harv. L. Rev. 296 [federal court's power to compel state legislative action; discussing Jenkins and Spallone v. United States (1990) 493 U.S. 265, 110 S.Ct. 625, 107 L.Ed.2d 644, supra, §148].)

ee. Elimination of De Facto Segregation.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 754

[§ 754] Elimination of De Facto Segregation.

In Crawford v. Board of Education (1976) 17 C.3d 280, 130 C.R. 724, 551 P.2d 28, defendant school board conceded that the schools were substantially segregated, but contended that it had no duty to take remedial action because the segregation was de facto in origin. After describing Jackson v. Pasadena City School Dist. (1963) 59 C.2d 876, 31 C.R. 606, 382 P.2d 878, supra, §752, as "the seminal decision in this line of cases" (17 C.3d 290), the Court said: "[S]ince Jackson this court has consistently reiterated the principle that the constitutional obligations of school boards in California include an obligation to undertake reasonably feasible steps to alleviate school segregation, regardless of its cause." (17 C.3d 292.) The school district's argument that this view should be abandoned and the de facto-de jure distinction be adopted was rejected not only on constitutional grounds but on an extended recital of the practical difficulties in applying the distinction. (17 C.3d 298 et seq.) The court then proceeded to clarify both the scope of the school board's obligations and the proper role of the judiciary in implementing the constitutional principle:

(a) The requirement is only that steps be taken to eliminate segregated schools--those in which the minority student enrollment is so disproportionate as to isolate them from others. (17 C.3d 303.) Set racial or ethnic percentages cannot be established. "[W]e see nothing inherently invalid in the fact that percentages of various racial or ethnic groups may vary, even significantly, in different schools throughout a school district, or even that a particular minority group may be completely unrepresented in a particular school." (17 C.3d 304.)

(b) The practical problems confronting school boards are difficult, and many administrative techniques for desegregating have been devised; e.g., redrawing neighborhood attendance zones, pairing or clustering of schools, establishment of "magnet schools," and "satellite zoning." "Under these circumstances, local school boards should clearly have the initial and primary responsibility for choosing between these alternative methods." (17 C.3d 305.)

(c) Although the court should defer to the judgment of a school district that demonstrates a commitment to the necessity of immediately instituting reasonable and feasible steps toward desegregation, the court should intervene where the school board has not implemented this course of action. "Faced with a recalcitrant or intractable school board, a trial court may exercise broad equitable powers in formulating and supervising a plan which the court finds will insure meaningful progress to alleviate the harmful consequences of school segregation in the district." (17 C.3d 307.)

Here, the trial judge's finding that the board had failed to act was sustained by the record (17 C.3d 307), and the judgment ordering preparation and implementation of a plan was affirmed (17 C.3d 310). (See N.A.A.C.P. v. San Bernardino City Unified School Dist. (1976) 17 C.3d 311, 314, 130 C.R. 744, 551 P.2d 48 [following Crawford]; McKinny v. Board of Trustees of the Oxnard Union High School Dist. (1982) 31 C.3d 79, 92, 181 C.R. 549, 642 P.2d 460, infra, §758 [following Crawford]; N.A.A.C.P. v. San Bernardino City Unified School Dist. (1982) 138 C.A.3d 70, 76, 187 C.R. 646 [judgment reversed for failure to apply Crawford criteria, with recommendation that trial judge use methodology approved in McKinny]; 65 Cal. L. Rev. 319 [Crawford]; 10 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 499, 565 [same]; 26 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 1183 [same].) (On assignment of pupils outside school district, see Tinsley v. Palo Alto Unified School Dist. (1979) 91 C.A.3d 871, 891, 894, 907, 154 C.R. 591.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

In Parents Involved in Community Schools v. Seattle School Dist. No. 1 (2007) 551 U.S. 701, 127 S.Ct. 2738, 168 L.Ed.2d 508, parents in school districts in two different states challenged, on equal protection grounds, student assignment plans that used race to determine placement in certain schools. In seeking to racially balance Seattle high schools, the district classified children as white or nonwhite. In Louisville, students in elementary schools were designated as black or "other" for placement purposes. Both Courts of Appeal upheld the plans. Held, reversed and remanded. Assigning students to different public schools on the basis of race when the districts had never operated legally segregated schools (Seattle) or had achieved unitary status (Louisville) violated the Fourteenth Amendment guarantee of equal protection.

(a) No compelling interest shown. Because of the racial classifications involved here, the action must be reviewed under a strict scrutiny standard. (127 S.Ct. 2751, 168 L.Ed.2d 523.) Hence, the school districts must demonstrate that the classifications used in the assignment plans were narrowly tailored to achieve a compelling government interest. Remedying the effects of past intentional discrimination is a compelling interest, but Seattle failed to show that it was ever segregated by law, and Louisville, which had operated under a desegregation decree, had eliminated the vestiges of segregation and had achieved unitary status. (127 S.Ct. 2752, 168 L.Ed.2d 523.) Grutter v. Bollinger (2003) 539 U.S. 306, 123 S.Ct. 2325, 156 L.Ed.2d 280, text, §970, recognized the government's compelling interest in using racial classifications to further its interest in diversity in higher education. (127 S.Ct. 2753, 168 L.Ed.2d 524.) However, these cases did not involve higher education, and race was not used here to broaden students' exposure to diverse cultures and ideas. Instead, the plans viewed race exclusively in terms of white/nonwhite or black/other. (127 S.Ct. 2753, 2754, 168 L.Ed.2d 525.)

(b) No necessity for racial classification. The classifications had little effect in either district on student assignments. In Seattle, of the 307 assignments affected by the use of race, only 52 students were assigned to schools that they had not listed as a preference and to which they would not otherwise have been assigned. (127 S.Ct. 2759, 2760, 168 L.Ed.2d 531.) In Louisville, racial guidelines accounted for only 3% of assignments. Further, the districts failed to show that they seriously considered race-neutral alternatives to meet their goals. (127 S.Ct. 2760, 168 L.Ed.2d 532.)

One justice concurred in part and concurred in the judgment. (127 S.Ct. 2788, 168 L.Ed.2d 562.) One justice dissented in a separate opinion and joined with three other justices in a strong dissent. (127 S.Ct. 2797, 2800, 168 L.Ed.2d 572, 575.) (See 95 Cal. L. Rev. 277 [Seattle School]; 121 Harv. L. Rev. 98 [same]; 35 Hastings Const. L. Q. 1 [same].)

The guidelines set forth in Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Bd. of Education (1971) 402 U.S. 1, 91 S.Ct. 1267, 28 L.Ed.2d 554, supra, §753, were interpreted in Pasadena City Bd. of Education v. Spangler (1976) 427 U.S. 424, 96 S.Ct. 2697, 49 L.Ed.2d 599. The federal district court in 1970 ordered the Pasadena Unified School District to institute a plan for desegregation, which would have no school with a majority of minority students, and the court retained jurisdiction to continue to evaluate the plan and its execution. The school district submitted a plan which the court approved, and it was promptly implemented. Subsequently, normal residence changes resulted in a black student enrollment exceeding 50% in 5 of the 32 schools. The Court said: "[T]he District Court was not entitled to require the School District to rearrange its attendance zones each year so as to ensure that the racial mix desired by the court was maintained in perpetuity. For having once implemented a racially neutral attendance pattern in order to remedy the perceived constitutional violations on the part of the defendants, the District Court had fully performed its function of providing the appropriate remedy for previous racially discriminatory attendance patterns." gg. Dissolution of Desegregation Decree.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 756

[§ 756] Dissolution of Desegregation Decree.

In Board of Education of Oklahoma City Public Schools, Independent School Dist. No. 89, Oklahoma County, Oklahoma v. Dowell (1991) 498 U.S. 237, 111 S.Ct. 630, 112 L.Ed.2d 715, petitioner Board of Education of Oklahoma City sought dissolution of a federal district court decree imposing a school desegregation plan, on the ground that it had complied for a substantial period of time. The district court granted relief, but the Court of Appeals held that relief was dependent on "a clear showing of grievous wrong evoked by new and unforeseen conditions." Held, reversed; this test is too stringent.

"A district court need not accept at face value the profession of a school board which has intentionally discriminated that it will cease to do so in the future. But in deciding whether to modify or dissolve a desegregation decree, a school board's compliance with previous court orders is obviously relevant. In this case the original finding of de jure segregation was entered in 1961, the injunctive decree from which the Board seeks relief was entered in 1972, and the Board complied with the decree in good faith until 1985. Not only do the personnel of school boards change over time, but the same passage of time enables the District Court to observe the good faith of the school board in complying with the decree. The test espoused by the Court of Appeals would condemn a school district, once governed by a board which intentionally discriminated, to judicial tutelage for the indefinite future. Neither the principles governing the entry and dissolution of injunctive decrees, nor the commands of the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, require any such Draconian result." (111 S.Ct. 637, 112 L.Ed.2d 729.) (See 105 Harv. L. Rev. 266.)

In Freeman v. Pitts (1992) 503 U.S. 467, 112 S.Ct. 1430, 118 L.Ed.2d 108, the Court cited Dowell and Pasadena City Bd. of Education v. Spangler (1976) 427 U.S. 424, 96 S.Ct. 2697, 49 L.Ed.2d 599, supra, §755, in support of its conclusions on relinquishment of judicial control: "We hold that, in the course of supervising desegregation plans, federal courts have the authority to relinquish supervision and control of school districts in incremental stages, before full compliance has been achieved in every area of school operations. While retaining jurisdiction over the case, the court may determine that it will not order further remedies in areas where the school district is in compliance with the decree. That is to say, upon a finding that a school system subject to a court-supervised desegregation plan is in compliance in some but not all areas, the court in appropriate cases may return control to the school system in those areas where compliance has been achieved, limiting further judicial supervision to operations that are not yet in full compliance with the court decree. In particular, the district court may determine that it will not order further remedies in the area of student assignments where racial imbalance is not traceable, in a proximate way, to constitutional violations." (112 S.Ct. 1445, 118 L.Ed.2d 134.) (See Board of Education of the San Diego Unified School Dist. v. Superior Court (1998) 61 C.A.4th 411, 422, 71 C.R.2d 562 [trial court did not abuse discretion in accelerating end of court supervision where continued supervision was no longer necessary to compel compliance with constitutional obligations, and control over schools should be restored to school district]; 106 Harv. Rev. 147 [Killing Brown Softly: The Subtle Undermining of Effective Desegregation in Freeman v. Pitts].)

In determining whether a school district has achieved partially unitary status, the issue is whether a reduction in achievement by minority students attributable to prior de jure segregation has been remedied to the extent practicable; whether student achievement levels are at or below the national norm is not the appropriate test. (Missouri v. Jenkins (1995) 515 U.S. 70, 115 S.Ct. 2038, 2055, 132 L.Ed.2d 63, 88, supra, §753.)

[§ 757] In General.

(1) Invalid Prohibition. North Carolina enacted a law providing that no student should be assigned or compelled to attend a school on account of race, etc., or for the purpose of creating a racial balance; and involuntary busing in contravention of the article was prohibited. In North Carolina State Bd. of Education v. Swann (1971) 402 U.S. 43, 91 S.Ct. 1284, 28 L.Ed.2d 586, the law was held unconstitutional. (a) The absolute prohibition of assignment would obstruct the remedies granted in Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Bd. of Education (1971) 402 U.S. 1, 91 S.Ct. 1267, 28 L.Ed.2d 554, supra, §753. (b) The statute "exploits an apparently neutral form to control school assignment plans by directing that they be 'color blind' "; against the background of segregation, this violates Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Shawnee, Kansas (1954) 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873, supra, §750. (c) The prohibition would also hamper the ability of local authorities to remedy constitutional violations. (91 S.Ct. 1286, 28 L.Ed.2d 589.) (See 50 A.L.R.3d 1089 [judicial relief against busing plan].)

(2) California Statute. In San Francisco in 1969, the elementary schools had a serious racial imbalance. To remedy it, the Board of Education established two elementary school complexes, assigning many pupils to schools not within walking distance from home, and providing voluntary bus transportation for them. In 1970, Educ.C. 1009.5 was adopted, providing that "no governing board of a school district shall require any student or pupil to be transported for any purpose or for any reason without the written permission of the parent or guardian." To implement its assignment program, the board requested its planning officer to execute a requisition for a computer study, and he refused, relying on Educ.C. 1009.5. In San Francisco Unified School Dist. v. Johnson (1971) 3 C.3d 937, 92 C.R. 309, 479 P.2d 669, the board sought mandamus. Held, writ granted.

(a) Prohibition of assignment is invalid. It is permissible to prohibit busing as a means of transportation, but not permissible to restrict authority to assign pupils. Although the U.S. Supreme Court has not yet ruled on the point, a majority of courts have held that assignment for the objective of racial integration is constitutional; i.e., although racial classifications are constitutionally suspect, and in a society free from past discrimination any attempt at racial classification might be bad, at the present time nondiscrimination may be attained only by taking color into consideration. "We conclude that the racial classification involved in the effective integration of public schools, does not deny, but secures, the equal protection of the laws." (3 C.3d 951.)

(b) Parental control as state action. Educ.C. 1009.5, if applied to pupil assignments, would constitute state action contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment, because school boards exercise a state function; and state authorization to parents to control assignments (i.e., to discriminate) is no less state action than state imposed discrimination. (3 C.3d 953, citing Mulkey v. Reitman (1966) 64 C.2d 529, 50 C.R. 881, 413 P.2d 825, and Reitman v. Mulkey (1967) 387 U.S. 369, 87 S.Ct. 1627, 18 L.Ed.2d 830.)

(c) Busing as only effective device. The U.S. Supreme Court has required school boards to make plans to affirmatively eliminate segregation (see supra, §753), and pupil assignment to distant schools requiring bus transportation will often be the only effective device to eliminate de facto segregation. (3 C.3d 956.)

(d) Conclusion. The statute "must be construed to avoid any limitation on the authority of school boards in the assignment of pupils to their respective schools." It "limits only the power of school districts to compel students to utilize any particular mode of transportation without parental consent." (3 C.3d 960.) (See 2 Pacific L. J. 451 [Educ.C. 1009.5].)

Educ.C. 1009.5 was amended in 1972 to exempt emergency transportation, and was renumbered as Educ.C. 35350 in 1976.

Educ.C. 1009.6, an initiative measure adopted in 1972 after Johnson, and renumbered Educ.C. 35351 in 1976, provides that "[n]o public school student shall, because of his race, creed, or color, be assigned to or be required to attend a particular school." This statute was held unconstitutional in Santa Barbara School Dist. v. Superior Court (1975) 13 C.3d 315, 324, 327, 118 C.R. 637, 530 P.2d 605, for the reasons set forth in Johnson, Swann, and Keyes v. School Dist. No. 1, Denver, Colorado (1973) 413 U.S. 189, 93 S.Ct. 2686, 37 L.Ed.2d 548.

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(2) California Statute. Educ.C. 35351, as amended in 2007, provides that no public school pupil can be assigned or required to attend a particular school because of the characteristics listed in Educ.C. 220 (see Supp., infra, §893).

bb. Constitutional Amendment.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 758

[§ 758] Constitutional Amendment.

In 1979, Cal. Const., Art. I, §7(a), was amended by "Proposition 1" to provide that "nothing contained herein or elsewhere in this Constitution imposes upon the State of California or any public entity, board, or official any obligations or responsibilities which exceed those imposed by the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution with respect to the use of pupil school assignment or pupil transportation." The amendment also required modification of existing judgments or orders to conform to its provisions. (See 10 Golden Gate L. Rev. 611.)

(1) Proposition 1 and the California Constitution. In McKinny v. Board of Trustees of the Oxnard Union High School Dist. (1982) 31 C.3d 79, 181 C.R. 549, 642 P.2d 460, the court, upholding a school district's voluntary desegregation plan, summarized the effects of the amendment as follows: "Proposition 1 conforms a school board's obligations with respect to 'pupil school assignment' and 'pupil transportation' to those duties imposed by the federal equal protection clause; it prohibits California courts from ordering changes in 'pupil school assignment' or 'pupil transportation' unless there has been a federal constitutional violation and federal case law would permit such a remedy. However, the amendment neither releases school districts from their state constitutional obligation to take reasonably feasible steps to alleviate segregation regardless of its cause, nor divests California courts of authority to order desegregation measures other than pupil school assignment or pupil transportation When a school district fails to fulfill its state constitutional obligations, we retain our power to compel, for example, school closure, school site selection, creation of special 'magnet schools,' curriculum changes, or other steps to overcome the adverse effects of school segregation." (31 C.3d 93.)

(2) Proposition 1 Does Not Violate Federal Constitution. In Crawford v. Board of Education (1980) 113 C.A.3d 633, 170 C.R. 495 (Crawford II), the court held that the amendment did not violate the Equal Protection Clause.

(a) As pointed out in Crawford v. Board of Education (1976) 17 C.3d 280, 130 C.R. 724, 551 P.2d 28, supra, §754 (Crawford I), busing is merely one of the many techniques that might be used to achieve desegregation; and the effect of the constitutional amendment is merely to withdraw that one technique, leaving all others intact. (113 C.A.3d 651,

(b) This does not amount to removal of a previously given state right, for the amendment does not create a right to discriminate or change any substantive law of rights. "[I]t merely removes court-ordered pupil school assignment and transportation as a remedy available to cure state-proscribed racial imbalance in public schools." (113 C.A.3d 653.) If a state is not under a federal duty to adopt a particular act in the first place (e.g., rectification of racial imbalance resulting from population shifts), rescission of the act cannot be unconstitutional. (113 C.A.3d 653.) Thus, "California can conform its constitutional protection of rights in this and other areas to those given under the United States Constitution, even though the specific protection under the California Constitution might have previously exceeded that under the federal Constitution." (113 C.A.3d 654.)

(c) The amendment was not adopted with a discriminatory purpose. It declares that it "is necessary to make most effective use of the limited resources available for public education, to maximize educational opportunities, to protect the health and safety of pupils, to enhance the ability of parents to participate in the educational process, and to prevent the waste of scarce fuel resources." (113 C.A.3d 654.)

(d) The amendment does not deprive minority children of a vested right. "The sole vested right involved, if that is the proper phrase, is the right of a pupil to receive an education which is not intentionally segregated and to attend a school where the school board has performed its duty to take all reasonable steps to alleviate segregation, regardless of cause." This right, recognized in Crawford I, "has not been removed by Proposition 1, which does not purport to change the duty imposed on a school board by California law to take all reasonably feasible steps to alleviate racial segregation in its schools regardless of cause." (113 C.A.3d 655.) Prior to the amendment, no particular remedy had been mandated. (113 C.A.3d 656.)

Crawford II was affirmed in Crawford v. Board of Education of Los Angeles (1982) 458 U.S. 527, 102 S.Ct. 3211, 73 L.Ed.2d 948 (Crawford III).

(a) "Proposition I does not inhibit enforcement of any federal law or constitutional requirement. Quite the contrary, by its plain language the Proposition seeks only to embrace the requirements of the Federal Constitution with respect to mandatory school assignments and transportation. It would be paradoxical to conclude that, by adopting the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, the voters of the State thereby had violated it. Moreover, even after Proposition I, the California Constitution still imposes a greater duty of desegregation than does the Federal Constitution. The state courts of California continue to have an obligation under state law to order segregated school districts to use voluntary desegregation techniques, whether or not there has been a finding of intentional segregation. The school districts themselves retain a state law obligation to take reasonably feasible steps to desegregate, and they remain free to adopt reassignment and busing plans to effectuate desegregation." (102 S.Ct. 3217, 73 L.Ed.2d 955.)

(b) "Were we to hold that the mere repeal of race related legislation is unconstitutional, we would limit seriously the authority of States to deal with the problems of our heterogeneous population. States would be committed irrevocably to legislation that has proven unsuccessful or even harmful in practice. And certainly the purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment would not be advanced by an interpretation that discouraged the States from providing greater protection to racial minorities. Nor would the purposes of the Amendment be furthered by requiring the States to maintain legislation designed to ameliorate race relations or to protect racial minorities but which has produced just the opposite effects. Yet these would be the results of requiring a State to maintain legislation that has proven unworkable or harmful when the State was under no obligation to adopt that legislation in the first place. Moreover, and relevant to this case, we would not interpret the Fourteenth Amendment to require the people of a State to adhere to a judicial construction of their State Constitution when that Constitution itself vests final authority in the people." (102 S.Ct. 3219, 73 L.Ed.2d 957.) (See Tinsley v. Superior Court (1983) 150 C.A.3d 90, 100, 197 C.R. 643 [Crawford is dispositive of equal protection issue]; cf. Washington v. Seattle School Dist. No. 1 (1982) 458 U.S. 457, 102 S.Ct. 3187, 73 L.Ed.2d 896 [initiative measure having effect of permitting busing only for nonracial reasons was violative of Equal Protection Clause].)

f. Segregation.

4. Public Facilities.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 759

[§ 759] Public Facilities.

Many decisions have made it clear that state action compelling segregation in public facilities violates the Fourteenth Amendment. (See Turner v. Memphis (1962) 369 U.S. 350, 82 S.Ct. 805, 807, 7 L.Ed.2d 762, 765 [injunction against operating segregated eating and restroom facilities in airport restaurant operating under lease from city, where statute called for segregation]; Johnson v. Virginia (1963) 373 U.S. 61, 83 S.Ct. 1053, 10 L.Ed.2d 195 [reversing conviction of black person of contempt for failure to sit in black section of Richmond traffic court]; Watson v. Memphis (1963) 373 U.S. 526, 83 S.Ct. 1314, 1321, 10 L.Ed.2d 529, 539 [no justification for delay in desegregating public parks and recreational facilities]; Griffin v. Maryland (1964) 378 U.S. 130, 84 S.Ct. 1770, 12 L.Ed.2d 754 [private amusement park].)

The theory of these decisions was greatly extended in Evans v. Newton (1966) 382 U.S. 296, 86 S.Ct. 486, 15 L.Ed.2d 373. A testator in 1911 devised land to the city of Macon, Georgia, to be used as a park for white people only. Later, the city allowed some black people to use it. In litigation by the city and heirs of the testator, the city resigned as trustee and the trial court appointed three private individuals. Held, segregation in this public facility was unconstitutional. The testator could validly have left his land for use as a private club, school, or center, without any governmental control. But a park is traditionally maintained by the municipality and has a governmental character. The substitution of private trustees did not make constitutional the continuance of segregation. (86 S.Ct. 490, 15 L.Ed.2d 379.)

Four justices dissented in three opinions. (86 S.Ct. 490, 495, 496, 15 L.Ed.2d 379, 384, 386.) Two of the justices saw grave dangers in the loose language and vague holding of the majority, saying that this "public function" theory of state action "substitutes for the comparatively clear and concrete tests of state action a catch-phrase approach as vague and amorphous as it is far-reaching. It dispenses with the sound and careful principles of past decisions in this realm. And it carries the seeds of transferring to federal authority vast areas of concerns whose regulation has wisely been left by the Constitution to the States." (86 S.Ct. 500, 15 L.Ed.2d 390.) (See 80 Harv. L. Rev. 160.)

A different approach was taken in Palmer v. Thompson (1971) 403 U.S. 217, 91 S.Ct. 1940, 29 L.Ed.2d 438, holding that there was no affirmative duty to maintain public swimming pools after a desegregation order. The alleged motive to avoid segregation was irrelevant, where the closing affected white and black people equally. (91 S.Ct. 1945, 29 L.Ed.2d 445.) Two justices concurred (91 S.Ct. 1946, 29 L.Ed.2d 446, 447), and four justices dissented in three separate opinions (91 S.Ct. 1948, 1952, 1968, 29 L.Ed.2d 448, 453, 471). (See 85 Harv. L. Rev. 86; 23 Hastings L. J. 889.)

5. Restaurants.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 760

[§ 760] Restaurants.

A number of "sit-in" cases were decided in favor of the civil right.

In Peterson v. Greenville (1963) 373 U.S. 244, 83 S.Ct. 1119, 10 L.Ed.2d 323, petitioners, 10 black persons, seated themselves at the lunch counter of the Kress store in Greenville, South Carolina, and refused to leave when the manager announced that the counter was closed and asked everyone to leave. Their conduct was inoffensive, and black patronage was welcomed at all departments of the store except the lunch counter. They were convicted and sentenced for violation of a local ordinance requiring racial separation in restaurants. Held, the convictions were contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment, for the state's criminal process was employed to enforce the unconstitutional discrimination. (83 S.Ct. 1121, 10 L.Ed.2d 326.)

In Lombard v. Louisiana (1963) 373 U.S. 267, 83 S.Ct. 1122, 10 L.Ed.2d 338, the facts were similar to those in Peterson except for the absence of a segregation ordinance. But city officials, including the mayor and superintendent of police, had issued public statements denouncing sit-ins and unequivocally stating their intention to prohibit them. The convictions for trespass were therefore reversed, the Court holding that the state may act as authoritatively through its executive as its legislative body, and that the official declarations had the same coercive effect in directing segregated service as the ordinance in Peterson. (83 S.Ct. 1125, 10 L.Ed.2d 342.)

In Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham (1963) 373 U.S. 262, 83 S.Ct. 1130, 10 L.Ed.2d 335, defendants, black ministers, were convicted of aiding and abetting violation of a criminal trespass ordinance. The evidence was that they asked for volunteers to participate in sit-down demonstrations, and that G and D volunteered and participated in a demonstration. However, the convictions of G and D were held unconstitutional under Peterson, and accordingly the convictions of defendants were reversed under the established rule that there can be no conviction for aiding and abetting another to do a noncriminal act. (83 S.Ct. 1132, 10 L.Ed.2d 337.)

In Bell v. Maryland (1964) 378 U.S. 226, 84 S.Ct. 1814, 12 L.Ed.2d 822, black students who refused to leave a restaurant were convicted of criminal trespass. After affirmance of their conviction in the highest state court, the Supreme Court granted certiorari, and then Maryland passed a Civil Rights Act making it unlawful to deny accommodations on the basis of color, etc. Held, repeal of a criminal statute before final disposition of the case ordinarily requires dismissal of the proceeding; accordingly, the case was remanded to the Maryland courts to consider the effect of the supervening change in the law in connection with its general savings clause, and the constitutional issue was not reached. (84 S.Ct. 1821, 12 L.Ed.2d 830.) (See Robinson v. Florida (1964) 378 U.S. 153, 84 S.Ct. 1693, 12 L.Ed.2d 771 [following Peterson and Lombard]; on access to public accommodations under 1964 Civil Rights Act, see infra, §850.)

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 761

[§ 761] Public Housing.

In Banks v. Housing Authority of San Francisco (1953) 120 C.A.2d 1, 260 P.2d 668, the San Francisco Housing Authority, a state agency created by Health & Saf.C. 34200 et seq. pursuant to the federal Housing Act (42 U.S.C., §1437 et seq.), constructed low rent housing. In renting, it followed a "neighborhood pattern" policy, the essence of which was that Blacks, Chinese, and Whites were segregated. The Authority asserted that its plan called for enough units to meet needs in proportion to population (70% White, 30% Black), but actual construction for black occupation was not up to schedule. Held, mandamus properly issued to compel certification of petitioner without regard to race or color, and to adopt a policy of rental without regard to color.

(a) The Equal Protection Clause protects individuals, not racial groups (120 C.A.2d 8); hence, distribution on the basis of proportionate needs of the groups, ignoring eligibility of the individuals, does not meet the constitutional test (120 C.A.2d 9).

(b) The neighborhood pattern policy has the same objective as the racial restrictive covenants that the state is prohibited from enforcing (supra, §746). "What sort of a 14th Amendment might it be that would, at the same time, countenance active sponsorship and fostering of such restrictions by the executive branch of the state or local government?" (120 C.A.2d 17.) (See 92 Cal. L. Rev. 841 [equal protection as bar to neighborhood integration]; 14 A.L.R.2d 153 [race as permissible consideration in choosing tenants or purchasers of real estate]; 28 Am.Jur. 8. Women.

a. In General.

1. Constitutional Provisions and Early Cases.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 762

[§ 762] Constitutional Provisions and Early Cases.

(1) Constitutional Provisions. The California Constitution states that a "person may not be disqualified from entering or pursuing a business, profession, vocation, or employment because of sex, race, creed, color, or national or ethnic origin." (Cal. Const., Art. I, §8.) And the Fourteenth Amendment, applicable to all "persons," protects women against discriminatory legislation.

(2) Early Cases. The traditional view was that the Fourteenth Amendment did not create a "fictitious equality" between men and women, and that classification on the basis of sex may sometimes be proper. Thus, it was believed that the physical disadvantages of women in industry called for greater protection, as in special regulation of maximum hours of labor and minimum wages. (West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish (1937) 300 U.S. 379, 57 S.Ct. 578, 81 L.Ed. 703 [minimum wage]; Muller v. Oregon (1908) 208 U.S. 412, 28 S.Ct. 324, 52 L.Ed. 551 [hours of labor]; see 39 A.L.R.2d 740 [minimum wage laws].) It was also held that a state could confine jury service to men, and therefore could exempt women who did not expressly seek to serve. (Hoyt v. Florida (1961) 368 U.S. 57, 82 S.Ct. 159, 7 L.Ed.2d 118; on unconstitutionality of exclusion, see infra, §765.)

In Goesaert v. Cleary (1948) 335 U.S. 464, 69 S.Ct. 198, 93 L.Ed. 163, a Michigan statute provided that in cities of over 50,000 population, no female could be licensed as a bartender unless she was the "wife or daughter of the male owner." Held, the statute was valid. (a) The state could forbid all women from working behind a bar; their modern social and legal position "does not preclude the States from drawing a sharp line between the sexes, certainly, in such matters as the regulation of the liquor traffic." (69 S.Ct. 199, 93 L.Ed. 165.) (b) The legislators could reasonably conclude that the moral and social hazards were minimized in the case of the barmaid whose husband or father was the owner of the business; accordingly, the exemption of this class of women was a proper classification. Because "the line they have drawn is not without a basis in reason, we cannot give ear to the suggestion that the real impulse behind this legislation was an unchivalrous desire of male bartenders to try to monopolize the calling." (69 S.Ct. 200, 93 L.Ed. 166.) (See People v. Jemnez (1942) 49 C.A.2d Supp. 739, 742, 121 P.2d 543 [statute prohibiting women bartenders held valid on grounds that liquor business is matter of privilege, not right, and classification had reasonable purpose]; Hargens v. Alcoholic Bev. Control App. Bd. (1968) 263 C.A.2d 601, 608, 69 C.R. 868 [statute prohibiting liquor licensee from using woman not his wife to dispense liquor for consumption on premises was valid]; 46 A.L.R.3d 369 [employment of women where liquor is sold]; on prohibition of female bartenders as invalid discrimination, see infra, §765.)

8. Women.
a. In General.
2. Modern View.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 763

[§ 763] Modern View.

(1) Strict Scrutiny of Gender Classification. There has been a radical change in the judicial attitude toward special statutory treatment of women. "[C]lassifications based upon sex, like classifications based upon race, alienage, and national origin, are inherently suspect and must therefore be subjected to close judicial scrutiny." (Frontiero v. Richardson (1973) 411 U.S. 677, 93 S.Ct. 1764, 1768, 36 L.Ed.2d 583, 589, infra, §771; see Sail'er Inn v. Kirby (1971) 5 C.3d 1, 17, 95 C.R. 329, 485 P.2d 529, infra, §765; Bobb v. Municipal Court (1983) 143 C.A.3d 860, 866, 192 C.R. 270 [alleged discrimination by judge in asking prospective female jurors about their marital status, without directing same questions to men; lead opinion of single justice, strict scrutiny applied]; 12 Hastings Const. L. Q. 315 [Bobb]; infra, §§765, 767 et seq.)

(2) Distinction: Denial of Liquor License to Spouse. In Reece v. Alcoholic Bev. Control App. Bd. (1976) 64 C.A.3d 675, 134 C.R. 698, the unique character of liquor regulation was held to justify denial of a liquor license to the spouse of a law enforcement officer. The regulations disqualified (a) any person employed by an agency with duties including enforcement of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, and (b) the spouse of a person so disqualified. S, wife of a sheriff's detective, bought a grocery store to operate as her separate property business, with no control by her husband. Held, nevertheless, an off-sale beer and wine license was properly denied. (a) There was no discrimination on the basis of sex, for the regulation applied to many male and female employees and to their male and female spouses. (64 C.A.3d 680.) (b) The conflict of interest of persons employed in law enforcement is clear. That of the spouse is less clear, but it cannot be assumed that the husband has no concern about her separate property, and the disqualifying regulation is rationally related to the governmental interest in vigilant and fair enforcement of liquor laws. (64 C.A.3d 683, 684.)

(3) Distinction: Commission on Status of Women. Govt.C. 8246, authorizing communication between the California Commission on Status of Women and the Legislature, is constitutional. "[T]he use of gender-framed measures, supported by public resources, to remedy gender bias serves the interests of equality protected by our Constitution." And "[t]he use of public resources for the establishment of a commission to develop and advocate measures to foster the economic and social equality of women is not a preference of women over men in the application of public resources." (Miller v. California Com. on Status of Women (1984) 151 C.A.3d 693, 699, 198 C.R. 877, supra, §339.)

8. Women.

b. Employment.

1. Invalid Discrimination.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 765

[§ 765] Invalid Discrimination.

(1) Employment in Connection With Sale of Liquor. Former B. & P.C. 25656 prohibited a woman from tending bar unless she was the liquor licensee, wife of the licensee, or singly or with her husband the sole shareholder of a corporation licensee. The statute was upheld in People v. Jemnez (1942) 49 C.A.2d Supp. 739, 121 P.2d 543, and Hargens v. Alcoholic Bev. Control App. Bd. (1968) 263 C.A.2d 601, 69 C.R. 868, on reasoning similar to that set forth in Goesaert v. Cleary (1948) 335 U.S. 464, 69 S.Ct. 198, 93 L.Ed. 163, supra, §762. In Sail'er Inn v. Kirby (1971) 5 C.3d 1, 95 C.R. 329, 485 P.2d 529, Jemnez and Hargens were disapproved, and Goesaert was disparaged and distinguished. (5 C.3d 21, 22.)

(a) California Constitution. The protection of former Cal. Const., Art. XX, §18 (now Cal. Const., Art. I, §8; see supra, §762), was invoked by In re Maguire (1881) 57 C. 604, to invalidate an ordinance prohibiting women from waiting on customers at night in a place where liquor was sold. Under the reasoning of this case, only inability to perform the tasks of an occupation justifies discrimination against women. And the old arguments that a liquor establishment requires a man to preserve order, and that women might be injured by inebriated customers, no longer can be made. Bars are not more dangerous than other establishments; cocktail waitresses are permitted to work among customers; and, even if it be assumed that bartending is more dangerous than waiting on tables, women must be permitted to take their chances if qualified. "Such tender and chivalrous concern for the well-being of the female half of the adult population cannot be translated into legal restrictions on employment opportunities for women." (5 C.3d 10.)

(b) Federal Civil Rights Act. The statute is also invalid under the Federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C., §2000e-2(a), infra, §855); the federal Act is controlling under the Supremacy Clause. (5 C.3d 10.) The Act permits an exception only where there is a bona fide occupational classification reasonably necessary to the normal operation of the business. (42 U.S.C., §2000e-2(e).) Guidelines of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission call for "an individual inquiry into a particular woman applicant's qualifications, or, at most, a clearly justifiable general classification with respect to a particular job category." (5 C.3d 14.) Federal decisions have invalidated weight-lifting restrictions, hours limitations, and exclusionary job categories. (5 C.3d 14.) Applying these standards, the statute is not based on a bona fide occupational qualification. The Legislature concedes this by exempting women licensees and wives of licensees; and the state has made no showing that bartenders are endangered by their work and require physical strength not possessed by women for self-defense and to maintain order; "the saloon days of the Wild West are long gone." (5 C.3d 15.)

(c) Equal Protection. The Equal Protection Clauses of the federal and California Constitutions also invalidate the legislation. A fundamental interest--the right to work--is involved, and the classification is strictly scrutinized. (5 C.3d 17; see supra, §704.) The status of sex, like race and lineage, frequently bears no relation to the ability to perform or contribute to society. And the state has shown no compelling interest. The theory that women without a proprietary right in the license will commit improper acts, or will be an unwholesome influence on the public, is wholly without support in logic or experience. (5 C.3d 20, 21.) (See 60 Cal. L. Rev. 833; 23 Hastings L. J. 311; on federal and state civil rights legislation prohibiting sex discrimination, see infra, §§861 et seq., 925 et seq.)

Sail'er Inn recognized the legislative power to prevent "improprieties" in connection with the sale of liquor (e.g., employment of a person to encourage purchase). This was the basis of the holding in Locker v. Kirby (1973) 31 C.A.3d 520, 525, 107 C.R. 446, that a rule of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control prohibiting the use of topless waitresses was valid. The court pointed out that the rule did not prevent a woman from working as a waitress in an establishment selling liquor, nor prevent her from doing so in topless dress in an establishment not selling liquor. The contention that the regulation was unconstitutionally discriminatory in its application to females alone was given a short answer: "[T]he naked female breast has for centuries been a symbol of sexuality" and the male chest has not. (31 C.A.3d 526.) (See 67 A.L.R.5th 431 [Regulation of Exposure of Female, But Not Male, Breasts].)

(2) Height and Weight Requirements. In Hardy v. Stumpf (1974) 37 C.A.3d 958, 112 C.R. 739, a city police department's minimum height and weight requirements were held discriminatory against women seeking positions as police officers. The court pointed out that a seemingly neutral job requirement, which has the practical effect of disqualifying a disproportionate number of one sex, is discriminatory (37 C.A.3d 962), and it found no substantial evidence establishing a rational relationship between the requirement and the job (37 C.A.3d 963).

After the decision in Hardy, the city devised a physical performance test, including a requirement that the applicant scale a six-foot wall. Plaintiff Hardy failed the test, and challenged this requirement. In Hardy v. Stumpf (1978) 21 C.3d 1, 8, 9, 145 C.R. 176, 576 P.2d 1342, the court held that the test was reasonably related to the job, and did not violate either the Equal Protection Clause or the Civil Rights Act. (See 67 Cal. L. Rev. 703.) (On valid discrimination in employment, see infra, §766; on discrimination on basis of weight under Fair Employment and Housing Act, see infra, §938.)

(3) Pregnancy. Discrimination based on a woman's pregnancy is prohibited by Cal. Const., Art. I, §8. (Badih v. Myers (1995) 36 C.A.4th 1289, 1292, 43 C.R.2d 229; on federal and state civil rights legislation prohibiting discrimination on basis of pregnancy, see infra, §§877, 926.)

In Long v. State Personnel Bd. (1974) 41 C.A.3d 1000, 116 C.R. 562, plaintiff woman, an ordained Methodist minister, had been employed as a Protestant chaplain at three California state hospitals. She applied for that position at a facility of the California Youth Authority. Her request was denied because of a "male-only certification" of the position by defendant board. At her hearing, it was shown that the inmate population at the facility consisted of about 400 young males of an average age of 19 1/2 years, all committed by criminal courts, for a broad range of criminal offenses including sex crimes; that the setting is dangerous for all employees; that about a dozen females are employed in clerical and correctional capacities, in an effort to "normalize" the institution for the benefit of the inmates, but their contact with the wards--as distinguished from the contact of a chaplain--is limited; and that complete security for the chaplain cannot be provided. The board upheld the classification and the trial court denied mandamus. Held, affirmed.

(a) California Constitution. Former Cal. Const., Art. XX, §18 (now Cal. Const., Art. I, §8; see supra, §762), prohibits disqualification of women from pursuing a vocation or profession, but the regulation in question does not do that. Plaintiff is free to pursue her occupation of minister or chaplain; she is merely precluded from doing so at the particular facility because of the particular circumstances. (41 C.A.3d 1007.)

(b) Equal protection. Although the "strict scrutiny" test applies to sex discrimination (see supra, §704), the statute meets the test of a compelling state interest. The work involves intimate contact with the male wards, interfering with their personal privacy; there is also the danger of escape or altercation, which a woman would be less able to handle than a man; and there would be the further danger of sexual or physical attack on her. (41 C.A.3d 1011, 1012.) Accordingly, plaintiff's interest in the position must yield to the interests of the inmates and the public. (41 C.A.3d 1014.)

(c) Federal Civil Rights Act. The approach under the Civil Rights Act is substantially the same as that under the Equal Protection Clause. The burden is on the employer to prove a bona fide occupational classification reasonably necessary to the normal operation of the business or enterprise. (41 C.A.3d 1016, 1018.) The burden was met here, as it was in a recent Pennsylvania case in which it was held that Youth Center supervisors and superintendents for a juvenile detention home could be restricted to men. (41 C.A.3d 1016.) (See 92 Cal. L. Rev. 147 [permissible sex discrimination].)

c. Exclusion From Juries.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 767

[§ 767] Exclusion From Juries.

The Louisiana Constitution formerly provided that a woman should not be selected for jury service unless she had previously filed a written declaration of her desire to serve. In Taylor v. Louisiana (1975) 419 U.S. 522, 95 S.Ct. 692, 42 L.Ed.2d 690, defendant, a man convicted of aggravated kidnaping, contended on appeal that the resulting systematic exclusion of women deprived him of his federal constitutional right to a representative jury (see supra, §215). Held, he had standing to raise the issue although not a member of the excluded class (see supra, §85), and the statute was unconstitutional.

(a) The "fair cross section of the community" requirement (see supra, §215) was violated by the systematic exclusion of women under the challenged state constitutional provision. (95 S.Ct. 698, 42 L.Ed.2d 698.)

(b) The reasoning and implications of Hoyt v. Florida (1961) 368 U.S. 57, 82 S.Ct. 159, 7 L.Ed.2d 118, supra, §762, are no longer acceptable. "If it was ever the case that women were unqualified to sit on juries or were so situated that none of them should be required to perform jury service, that time has long since passed. If at one time it could be held that Sixth Amendment juries must be drawn from a fair cross section of the community but that this requirement permitted the almost total exclusion of women, this is not the case today. Communities differ at different times and places. What is a fair cross section at one time or place is not necessarily a fair cross section at another time or a different place. Nothing persuasive has been presented to us in this case suggesting that all-male venires in the parishes involved here are fairly representative of the local population otherwise eligible for jury service." (95 S.Ct. 701, 42 L.Ed.2d 702.) (See 89 Harv. L. Rev. 95; 23 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 344; 70 A.L.R.5th 587 [state cases on exclusion of women from juries in criminal case as violation of accused's constitutional rights or as ground for reversal of conviction].)

The Taylor rule was declared prospectively; hence, it was held inapplicable to a conviction obtained by a jury empanelled prior to the decision. (Daniel v. Louisiana (1975) 420 U.S. 31, 95 S.Ct. 704, 42 L.Ed.2d 790.) (See 9 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 801.)

In Duren v. Missouri (1979) 439 U.S. 357, 99 S.Ct. 664, 666, 671, 58 L.Ed.2d 579, 584, 589, the Court applied the Taylor approach to hold unconstitutional a statute providing for an automatic exemption from jury service for a woman requesting that she be excused. (See J.E.B. v. Alabama (1994) 511 U.S. 127, 114 S.Ct. 1419, 128 L. Ed. 2d 89 [applying equal protection scrutiny to sex-based peremptory challenges of jurors]; 108 Harv. L. Rev. 240 [J.E.B.]; 19 Santa Clara L. Rev. 1113 [Duren].)

d. Social Security Benefits.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 768

[§ 768] Social Security Benefits.

In Califano v. Westcott (1979) 443 U.S. 76, 99 S.Ct. 2655, 61 L.Ed.2d 382, the Court examined the AFDC program, which provides benefits to families whose dependent children have been deprived of parental support because of the unemployment of the father, but does not provide these benefits when the mother becomes unemployed. The federal district court held that this distinction violates the Fifth Amendment Due Process Clause, and ordered that payments be made to families deprived of support because of the unemployment of the mother. Held, affirmed.

(a) Unconstitutional gender-based qualification. The gender classification is unconstitutional under Frontiero v. Richardson (1973) 411 U.S. 677, 93 S.Ct. 1764, 36 L.Ed.2d 583, infra, §771, Weinberger v. Wiesenfeld (1975) 420 U.S. 636, 95 S.Ct. 1225, 43 L.Ed.2d 514, infra, §772, and Califano v. Goldfarb (1977) 430 U.S. 199, 97 S.Ct. 1021, 51 L.Ed.2d 270, infra, §772. Although in those cases the benefits were a form of compensation earned by a woman, or were directly related, the argument for this distinction "invites a return to the discredited view that welfare benefits are a 'privilege' not subject to the guarantee of equal protection." (99 S.Ct. 2661, 61 L.Ed.2d 390, 391.) The classification is not substantially related to the attainment of important and valid statutory goals. "It is, rather, part of the 'baggage of sexual stereotypes' that presumes the father has the 'primary responsibility to provide a home and its essentials,' while the mother is the 'center of home and family life.' ... Legislation that rests on such presumptions, without more, cannot survive scrutiny under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment." (99 S.Ct. 2663, 61 L.Ed.2d 393.)

(b) Extension of coverage where statute is defective because of underinclusiveness. The court may either declare the statute a nullity and thus deny benefits to the class the Legislature intended to benefit, or may extend the coverage of the statute to include those who are aggrieved by the exclusion. In several previous cases involving federal benefits, this Court has suggested that extension rather than nullification is the proper course (see Frontiero v. Richardson; Jimenez v. Weinberger (1974) 417 U.S. 628, 94 S.Ct. 2496, 41 L.Ed.2d 363, infra, §781), and has affirmed district court judgments ordering that welfare benefits be paid to members of an unconstitutionally excluded class. (99 S.Ct. 2663, 61 L.Ed.2d 393.)

Four justices joined in a brief opinion concurring in the declaration of unconstitutionality, but asserting that the relief given was exactly what Congress wished to prevent, and contending that Congress should have freedom to rewrite the statute. (99 S.Ct. 2666, 61 L.Ed.2d 395.) (See 93 Harv. L. Rev. 130; on discriminatory disqualification for unemployment compensation, see Boren v. Department of Emp. Dev. (1976) 59 C.A.3d 250, 255, 256, 130 C.R. 683.)

A distinct issue arises where the statute provides for different treatment of women of different marital status. (See Califano v. Boles (1979) 443 U.S. 282, 99 S.Ct. 2767, 61 L.Ed.2d 541 [Social Security Act provision restricting "mother's insurance benefits" to widow and divorced wives of wage earners was not denial of equal protection to unmarried mother of illegitimate child]; Bowen v. Owens (1986) 476 U.S. 340, 106 S.Ct. 1881, 90 L.Ed.2d 316 [upholding provision granting survivor's benefits to remarried widowed spouse, and not to divorced widowed spouse].)

8. Women.
e. Crimes.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 769

[§ 769] Crimes.

(1) Crime of Wife-Beating. P.C. 273d, which prior to amendment made it a felony for a husband to inflict corporal injury on his wife, was challenged in People v. Cameron (1975) 53 C.A.3d 786, 126 C.R. 44. Defendant contended that he was denied equal protection because the law did not apply to unmarried men who assaulted their paramours or to wives who assaulted their husbands. Held, the classification was valid; wives as an object of abuse by their spouses are a class distinctly set apart by the conditions under which their abuse customarily occurs.

(a) Women are physically less able to defend themselves than men. (53 C.A.3d 791.)

(b) The existence of the crime of assault under P.C. 245(a), either a felony or a misdemeanor (see 1 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Crimes Against the Person, §35), does not make P.C. 273d unnecessary. The offense against the wife usually occurs at night, without witnesses, and often in the presence of a helpless child; an officer cannot easily determine whether a felony has been committed and cannot arrest for a misdemeanor not committed in his presence, hence the officer may leave the wife in the home, subject to the danger of additional abuse; and the wife's choice of leaving may involve the problem of what to do with the children, and the difficulty of finding a hospitable place to go. (53 C.A.3d 792, 793.)

(c) The state's interest in preserving a marriage (see 11 Summary (10th), Husband and Wife, §15) supports the legislative deterrent of a felony prosecution to deter male aggressiveness. (53 C.A.3d 793.)

(d) Although the number of civil and criminal laws in which sex is a significant factor is decreasing, a rational basis may still be found (53 C.A.3d 793), and is present here. The number of wives who assault their husbands is far less than that of husbands who assault their wives, and the Legislature may properly recognize degrees of evil and confine regulation to classes of cases in which the need is most evident. (53 C.A.3d 795; see supra, §702.) However, "we do not wish to be understood as saying that section 273d could not with justification be made applicable to the reverse situation, namely assaults by wives upon husbands." (53 C.A.3d 797.) (See 5 A.L.R.4th 708 [constitutionality of assault and battery laws limited to protection of females or providing greater penalties for males than for females].)

In 1977, P.C. 273d was amended to apply only to cruel or inhuman corporal punishment of children. And it is now a felony for either "spouse, former spouse, cohabitant, former cohabitant, or the mother or father of his or her child," to wilfully inflict "corporal injury, resulting in a traumatic condition," on the other spouse or cohabitee. (P.C. 273.5.)

(2) Statutory Rape. In Michael M. v. Superior Court (1979) 25 C.3d 608, 159 C.R. 340, 601 P.2d 572, a 4-3 decision, the court rejected a constitutional challenge to P.C. 261.5, which defined the offense of "unlawful sexual intercourse" as intercourse "with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, where the female is under the age of 18 years."

(a) The statute discriminates on the basis of sex because only females may be victims and only males may violate it. But the classification is justified by an important state interest. "[T]he law herein challenged is supported not by mere social convention but by the immutable physiological fact that it is the female exclusively who can become pregnant. ... Accordingly, the Legislature is amply justified in retaining its historic statutory rape law because of the potentially devastating social and economic results which may follow its violation." (25 C.3d 611.)

(b) The argument that the classification is overbroad, and that the state's interest in preventing pregnancy could be served by excluding from the statute's coverage those who use birth control techniques or are incapable of procreation, is not persuasive. Legislators would be reluctant to subject an underage victim to cross-examination on this issue, or to rely on the doubtful efficacy of contraceptives or the claim of nonemission. (25 C.3d 613.)

(c) The argument that the statute is impermissibly underinclusive in not holding the female equally culpable is likewise unpersuasive. The Legislature may reasonably have concluded that the female is subjected to far greater risks than the male (25 C.3d 613), and that criminal prosecution of a minor female would practically eliminate the possibility of enforcement of a statute designed to protect minor female victims. The Legislature could adopt a gender-neutral statute but is not constitutionally compelled to do so. (25 C.3d 614.)

The dissenting opinion disagrees with the majority's historical analysis, calls attention to the gender-neutral laws of 31 jurisdictions, and finds no justification for the statute in the reasons set forth by the majority. (25 C.3d 615.)

The U.S. Supreme Court came to the same conclusion as the majority opinion. (Michael M. v. Superior Court (1981) 450 U.S. 464, 101 S.Ct. 1200, 67 L.Ed.2d 437.) (See 95 Harv. L. P.C. 261.5 was amended in 1993 to define "unlawful sexual intercourse" as intercourse "with a person who is not the spouse of the perpetrator, if the person is a minor." (P.C. 261.5(a); see 15 J. Juvenile Law 197 [Teenage Sex in California: Thirteen Years After Michael M.]; on unlawful sexual intercourse, see 2 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Sex Offenses and Crimes Against Decency, §20 et seq.)

[§ 770] Educational Opportunities.

United States v. Virginia (1996) 518 U.S. 515, 116 S.Ct. 2264, 135 L.Ed.2d 735, held that Virginia's exclusion of women from Virginia Military Institute (VMI) denies equal protection to women.

(a) Admission of women would require modifications of VMI's "adversative method" of training. However, VMI's goal of producing "citizen-soldiers" is not inherently unsuitable to women, and gender classifications cannot be justified on the basis of generalizations about the roles and abilities of men and women. (116 S.Ct. 2279, 2282, 135 L.Ed.2d 756, 759.) "Women's successful entry into the federal military academies, and their participation in the Nation's military forces, indicate that Virginia's fears for the future of VMI may not be solidly grounded. The State's justification for excluding all women from 'citizen-soldier' training for which some are qualified, in any event, cannot rank as 'exceedingly persuasive,' as we have explained and applied that standard." (116 S.Ct. 2281, 135 L.Ed.2d 758, 759.)

(b) Virginia's proposed remedy of establishing a parallel program for women--Virginia Women's Institute for Leadership (VWIL)--does not cure the constitutional violation. The VWIL program is a "pale shadow" of VMI, and the VWIL solution is reminiscent of Sweatt v. Painter (1950) 339 U.S. 629, 70 S.Ct. 848, 94 L.Ed. 1114, where Texas proposed a separate law school for Blacks. (116 S.Ct. 2282, 2285, 135 L.Ed.2d 759, 763.) "In line with Sweatt, we rule here that Virginia has not shown substantial equality in the separate educational opportunities the State supports at VWIL and VMI." (116 S.Ct. 2286, 135 L.Ed.2d 764.) [§ 771] Other Discriminatory Treatment.

(1) Unequal Right to Letters of Administration. In Reed v. Reed (1971) 404 U.S. 71, 92 S.Ct. 251, 30 L.Ed.2d 225, an Idaho statute listing the class of persons entitled to priority in letters of administration of an intestate, contained a provision that where several persons are equally entitled, "males must be preferred to females." In this case, an adopted child died and his mother and father sought letters. The judge, deeming himself bound by the statute, appointed the father with no inquiry into relative capabilities, and the Idaho Supreme Court affirmed. Held, reversed. The object of the statute was to reduce the area of controversy in probate courts, but the method was inconsistent with equal protection. "To give a mandatory preference to members of either sex over members of the other, merely to accomplish the elimination of hearings on the merits, is to make the very kind of arbitrary legislative choice forbidden by the Equal Protection Clause." (92 S.Ct. 254, 30 L.Ed.2d 230.)

(2) Unequal Rights of Servicewoman. In Frontiero v. Richardson (1973) 411 U.S. 677, 93 S.Ct. 1764, 36 L.Ed.2d 583, the Court considered a challenge to the statute dealing with dependents of a servicewoman. A serviceman may claim his wife as a dependent regardless of whether she is in fact dependent on him for support; a servicewoman may claim her husband as a dependent only if he is in fact dependent on her for more than one-half of his support. Held, the statute was an invalid discrimination on the basis of sex. Four justices, applying the strict test (see supra, §763), found that the sole basis for the classification was administrative convenience in avoiding the determination of actual dependency of wives, and that this was insufficient to justify the dissimilar treatment of men and women similarly situated. (93 S.Ct. 1772, 36 L.Ed.2d 594.) The concurring opinions, although rejecting the strict test, found the classification discriminatory. (See 87 Harv. L. Rev. 116 [Frontiero]; 23 Hastings L. J. 199 [Women and the Draft].)

(3) Control of Community Property. In Kirchberg v. Feenstra (1981) 450 U.S. 455, 101 S.Ct. 1195, 67 L.Ed.2d 428, a Louisiana statute allowing husbands but not wives to execute mortgages on jointly owned property without spousal consent was held unconstitutional.

(4) Unequal Treatment of Female Jail Inmates. In Molar v. Gates (1979) 98 C.A.3d 1, 12, 17, 21, 159 C.R. 239, minimum security jail facilities--providing special privileges for male but not for female inmates--were held to violate the state and federal Constitutions. (See 38 Santa Clara L. Rev. 555 [Cruel and Unusual Punishment of Female Inmates: The Need for Redress Under 42 U.S.C., §1983]; 47 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1453 [Denial of Work Release Programs to

[§ 772] In General.

Challenges to sex discrimination against men have had mixed results. (See 90 Cal. L. Rev. 997 [Disestablishing Sex and Gender]; 92 Cal. L. Rev. 147 [permissible sex discrimination].)

(1) Tax Exemption of Widow but Not Widower: Valid. In Kahn v. Shevin (1974) 416 U.S. 351, 94 S.Ct. 1734, 40 L.Ed.2d 189, a Florida statute giving widows an annual $ 500 tax exemption was challenged by plaintiff widower. Held, the classification was valid. Despite recent federal statutes seeking to provide equal job opportunities for women, they still suffer discrimination in employment; and while a widower can usually continue in his occupation on the death of his wife, a widow in many cases is suddenly forced into the unfamiliar job market with fewer skills. Hence, the law was "reasonably designed to further the state policy of cushioning the financial impact of spousal loss upon the sex for whom that loss imposes a disproportionately heavy burden." (94 S.Ct. 1737, 40 L.Ed.2d 193.) (See 88 Harv. L. Rev. 129; 31 Hastings L. J. 1379.)

(2) Social Security Benefits Denied to Widower: Invalid. In Weinberger v. Wiesenfeld (1975) 420 U.S. 636, 95 S.Ct. 1225, 43 L.Ed.2d 514, the statute involved was a Social Security Act provision (former 42 U.S.C., §402(g)) that on the death of a husband and father, benefits are payable to the widow and children, but on the death of a wife and mother, they are payable only to the children. On the death of his working wife (whose earnings had been the family's main support), plaintiff sought benefits for himself as well as his child, and on denial of his claim, brought this action. Held, the "gender-based distinction" was invalid for the reasons set forth in Frontiero v. Richardson (1973) 411 U.S. 677, 93 S.Ct. 1764, 36 L.Ed.2d 583, supra, §771.

(a) The purpose of the statute was to afford protection for the family, and its framers proceeded on the presumption that men are more likely than women to be the primary supporters of their spouses and children. But this generalization cannot justify the denigration of efforts of women who do work. (95 S.Ct. 1231, 1232, 43 L.Ed.2d 522, 523.)

(b) The statute, like that in Frontiero, operates to deprive women of protection for their families that men receive as a result of their employment. The husband here was not given the opportunity to show that he was dependent on his wife for support; and the Social Security taxes the wife paid afforded her less protection than those paid by employed men. (95 S.Ct. 1232, 43 L.Ed.2d 523.) (See 89 Harv. L. Rev. 95; 23 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 249.)

Califano v. Goldfarb (1977) 430 U.S. 199, 97 S.Ct. 1021, 51 L.Ed.2d 270, involved the Social Security Act provision that (a) on the death of a husband, survivors' benefits are paid to his widow; but (b) on the death of a wife, the benefits are payable to her widower only if he had received at least one-half of his support from her. Held, this gender-based distinction was a denial of equal protection under the reasoning of Weinberger v. Wiesenfeld and Frontiero v. Richardson. (See 5 Hastings Const. L. Q. 74; 10 West L.A. L. Rev. 67.)

(3) Unequal Promotion Rights of Naval Officer: Valid. In Schlesinger v. Ballard (1975) 419 U.S. 498, 95 S.Ct. 572, 42 L.Ed.2d 610, B, a Navy lieutenant, was passed over for promotion after 9 years of service, and under the statutory scheme, was subject to mandatory discharge. He claimed a denial of equal protection because the statutes governing female naval officers gave a 13-year tenure before mandatory discharge for want of promotion. Held, the statutory system, in light of its history and objectives, was not unconstitutionally discriminatory. Reed v. Reed (1971) 404 U.S. 71, 92 S.Ct. 251, 30 L.Ed.2d 225, supra, §771, and Frontiero v. Richardson were distinguished as dealing with classifications based on administrative convenience alone. Here, they were based on the Navy's needs; in particular, furnishing motivation to qualified officers to seek higher levels of command. (95 S.Ct. 578, 42 L.Ed.2d 618.) (See 89 Harv. L. Rev. 95; 13 Cal. Western L. Rev. 317; 23 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 236.)

(4) Discrimination in Educational Opportunity: Invalid. In Mississippi University for Women v. Hogan (1982) 458 U.S. 718, 102 S.Ct. 3331, 73 L.Ed.2d 1090, the Court held (5-4) that a statute excluding males from enrollment in a state-supported professional nursing school was unconstitutional. A strong dissenting opinion pointed out that of the state's 8 universities and 16 junior colleges, all except MUW are coeducational, and that at least two other Mississippi universities would have provided the male applicant with the nursing curriculum he wanted. "The Court in effect holds today that no State may now provide even a single institution of higher learning open only to women students." (102 S.Ct. 3342, 73 L.Ed.2d 1105.) (See 96 Harv. L. Rev. 110; 105 Harv. L. Rev. 1741 [Inter-City Single Sex Schools: Educational Reform or Invidious Discrimination?].)

(5) Discrimination Against Males Under 21: Invalid. In Craig v. Boren (1976) 429 U.S. 190, 97 S.Ct. 451, 50 L.Ed.2d 397, an Oklahoma statute prohibited the sale of beer to males under 21 and to females under 18. Held, the gender-based differential was a denial of equal protection to males 18 to 21 years of age, under the principles of Reed v. Reed, supra, and cases following it. (97 S.Ct. 457, 50 L.Ed.2d 408.) The Court also held that the Twenty-First Amendment, which created an exception to the normal operation of the Commerce Clause (see infra, §1311), could not support a gender-based discrimination in liquor regulation. (97 S.Ct. 462, 50 L.Ed.2d 413.) Two justices dissented. (See 91 Harv. L. Rev. 177; 5 Hastings Const. L. Q. 63; 50 So. Cal. L. Rev. 702.)

(6) Miscellaneous Challenges. Challenges to discrimination against males have arisen in a variety of other situations. (See 10 Pacific L. J. 201 [sex discrimination against males in setting automobile insurance rates]; 18 A.L.R.4th 910 [statutory or constitutional provision allowing widow but not widower to take against will or receive dower, allowances, homestead rights, or the like]; 88 A.L.R.5th 67 [voir dire exclusion of men from state jury or jury panel]; 166 A.L.R. Fed 1 [What Constitutes Reverse or Gender Discrimination Against Males Violative of Federal Constitution or Statutes--Nonemployment Cases]; on discriminatory presumption of dependency in workers' compensation, see infra, §773; on statutes allowing alimony to wife but not to husband, see infra, §774.)

SUPPLEMENT: [This section is current through the latest supplement]

(5a) (New) Domestic Violence and Inmate Programs Serving Women Only. In Woods v. Horton (2008) 167 C.A.4th 658, 84 C.R.3d 332, plaintiffs challenged, on equal protection grounds, several statutes administered by defendants relating to domestic violence programs and programs for inmate mothers. Held, the gender-based domestic violence classifications violate equal protection and the statutes must be reformed to provide funding for victims of domestic violence regardless of gender; the programs for inmate mothers do not violate equal protection. The greater need for services by female victims of domestic violence does not provide a compelling state interest for the gender-based classification in the domestic violence statutes. (167 C.A.4th 675.) However, the programs for inmate mothers are based on considerations of the differences between male and female inmates. Plaintiffs failed to show that the needs of inmate fathers were not being met, or that any inmate father who would qualify for one of the programs was denied its benefits.

[§ 773] Workers' Compensation.

In Arp v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (1977) 19 C.3d 395, 138 C.R. 293, 563 P.2d 849, Mrs. A was an employee of a company wholly owned by Mr. A, earning $ 6,000 per year. She was fatally injured in an industrial accident, and Mr. A applied for death benefits. Former Lab.C. 3501(a) established a conclusive presumption of total dependency of a surviving wife. Mr. A contended that this provision was an unconstitutional discrimination against a surviving husband, and that the benefits of the section should be extended to him. Held, the statute is unconstitutional, and all applicants must prove actual dependency under Lab.C. 3502 (see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §313).

(a) Standards by which classification must be tested. The federal decisions invalidating and upholding classifications based on sex have been unclear, but the most recent pronouncement is that these classifications are acceptable only when they further "important governmental objectives" and are "substantially related to achievement of those objectives." (19 C.3d 400, citing Craig v. Boren (1976) 429 U.S. 190, 97 S.Ct. 451, 50 L.Ed.2d 397, supra, §772.) California, applying Cal. Const., Art. I, §7, has adopted the strict scrutiny/compelling state interest test. (19 C.3d 400, citing Sail'er Inn v. Kirby (1971) 5 C.3d 1, 95 C.R. 329, 485 P.2d 529, supra, §765.)

Califano v. Goldfarb (1977) 430 U.S. 199, 97 S.Ct. 1021, 51 L.Ed.2d 270, supra, §772, and Frontiero v. Richardson (1973) 411 U.S. 677, 93 S.Ct. 1764, 36 L.Ed.2d 583, supra, §771, invalidated gender-based distinctions; Kahn v. Shevin (1974) 416 U.S. 351, 94 S.Ct. 1734, 40 L.Ed.2d 189, supra, §772, and Schlesinger v. Ballard (1975) 419 U.S. 498, 95 S.Ct. 572, 42 L.Ed.2d 610, supra, §772, upheld the classifications. In both of the latter cases, the Supreme Court held that males and females were not similarly situated with respect to matters governed by the challenged statutes, and that the practices designed to compensate for real disabilities imposed on one sex were constitutionally permissible. (19 C.3d 403.)

(c) Kahn and Ballard reasoning is inapplicable. The argument for upholding the conclusive presumption of Lab.C. 3501(a) is that after centuries of economic discrimination against females, men and women are not similarly situated with respect to economic factors; hence, a provision designed to mitigate the continuing consequences of past economic abuse is not only an appropriate legislative goal but also meets the more stringent compelling state interest test. Also, conferring a benefit on widows does not per se deprive widowers of substantial benefits to which they are otherwise entitled. (19 C.3d 403, 404.) This "ameliorative classification" argument is nevertheless unpersuasive because:

(1) It is based on "role stereotypes." (19 C.3d 405.) The underlying assumption that married men support their families and married women do not "is outmoded in a society where more often than not a family's standard of living depends upon the financial contributions of both marital partners." (19 C.3d 406.)

(2) Even if this "benign" legislative purpose were to be accepted, the method chosen by the Legislature must, under the federal standard, be "substantially related" to the ameliorative goal; and under the California standard, it must represent the narrowest and least restrictive means by which the objective can be achieved. (19 C.3d 406.)

(3) Lab.C. 3501(a) does not meet either test. "[W]hen a statute is sexually discriminatory on its face, and is unsupported by any clear indication of ameliorative purpose, when it potentially disadvantages large numbers of the very sex it purports to aid, and does so by perpetuating the paternalistic notion that a woman's financial contribution is unlikely to be of substantial importance to the family unit," it cannot be said either to be necessary to the realization of a compelling state goal, or to rest on some ground of difference having a fair and substantial relation to the legislative object. (19 C.3d 407.)

(d) Statute is invalidated, not extended to cover men. The decisions in Califano v. Goldfarb, Weinberger v. Wiesenfeld (1975) 420 U.S. 636, 95 S.Ct. 1225, 43 L.Ed.2d 514, supra, §772, and Frontiero v. Richardson extended the statutory benefits to males and females alike. But remedying a constitutional defect by rewriting statutory language "is a comparatively drastic alternative, to be invoked sparingly, and only when the result achieved by such a course is more consistent with legislative intent than the result that would attend outright invalidation." (19 C.3d 407.) This is not the case here:

(1) The legislative intent to exclude widowers appears in the 1917 repeal of the original limited presumption in their favor. (19 C.3d 408.)

(2) The statute probably was intended merely to promote administrative convenience in granting automatic death benefits to all widows, eliminating the expense and inconvenience of case-by-case hearings. (19 C.3d 409.)

(3) A determination that the public interest would best be served by extending the presumption to widowers should be made by the Legislature. This action would have some impact on workers' compensation insurance rates, and the Legislature can evaluate the competing policies, obtain statistical information, and exercise an informed and practical judgment. (19 C.3d 409.)

(4) The invalidation of Lab.C. 3501(a) will not result in unfair hardship to an employee's survivors. An unemployed spouse can easily establish total dependency, and even an employed spouse may be able to show partial dependency. Moreover, the conclusive presumption in favor of minor children (see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §312) remains in effect; hence, though a fully employed widow with a minor child may receive nothing herself, the family unit loses nothing because the full death benefit will go to the child. "The only persons who will suffer substantial loss of benefits by reason of the invalidation of the widow's presumption are childless, financially self-sufficient wives. If the Legislature elects to extend the conclusive presumption to such persons it may easily do so, affording equal treatment to widowers." (19 C.3d 410.) (See 66 Cal. L. Rev. 447.) (See Wengler v. Druggists Mut. Ins. Co. (1980) 446 U.S. 142, 100 S.Ct. 1540, 64 L.Ed.2d 107 [similar Missouri statute was unconstitutional].)

As amended in 1989 and 2002, Lab.C. 3501 provides that a spouse to whom a deceased employee is married at the time of death is conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support on the deceased employee if the surviving spouse earned $ 30,000 or less in the 12 months preceding the death. (Lab.C. 3501(b).) A child under the age of 18, or a child of any age found to be physically or mentally incapacitated from earning, is presumed to be wholly dependent. (Lab.C. 3501(a).) (On proof of actual dependency, see 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §313.)

[§ 774] Alimony.

Orr v. Orr (1979) 440 U.S. 268, 99 S.Ct. 1102, 59 L.Ed.2d 306, invalidated the Alabama statutes requiring husbands but not wives to pay alimony on divorce.

(a) Classification on the basis of sex--women or men--is subject to strict scrutiny, and the justifications advanced by the state are insufficient. Needy males could be helped along with needy females with little additional burden on the state; and individualized hearings can determine which women were discriminated against during their marriage so as to leave them unprepared to fend for themselves. (99 S.Ct. 1112, 1113, 59 L.Ed.2d 320; see Craig v. Boren (1976) 429 U.S. 190, 97 S.Ct. 451, 50 L.Ed.2d 397, supra, §772, and *Stanton v. (b) "Where, as here, the State's compensatory and ameliorative purposes are as well served by a gender-neutral classification as one that gender-classifies and therefore carries with it the baggage of sexual stereotypes, the State cannot be permitted to classify on the basis of sex. And this is doubly so where the choice made by the State appears to redound--if only indirectly--to the benefit of those without need for special solicitude." (99 S.Ct. 1113, 59 L.Ed.2d 321.) [§ 775] In General.

(1) Denial of Right To Sue for Wrongful Death. In Parham v. Hughes (1979) 441 U.S. 347, 99 S.Ct. 1742, 60 L.Ed.2d 269, a Georgia statute permitted the mother of an illegitimate child to sue for wrongful death of the child, but denied the right to a father who had not legitimated the child. Held, 5-4, the statute was constitutional. The plurality opinion of four justices reasons as follows:

(b) The distinction based on sex is justifiable where it is realistically based on differences in the situations of men and women, as in Schlesinger v. Ballard (1975) 419 U.S. 498, 95 S.Ct. 572, 42 L.Ed.2d 610, supra, §772. (99 S.Ct. 1747, 60 L.Ed.2d 276.) Under the Georgia statute, only the father can by unilateral action legitimate a child, and the conferral of the right to sue if he does is reasonable. (99 S.Ct. 1748, 60 L.Ed.2d 278.)

(c) The classification is rationally related to a permissible state objective: creating a mechanism for dealing with the often difficult problem of proving the paternity of illegitimate children, and the related danger of spurious claims. If paternity has not been established before the commencement of a wrongful death action, a defendant may be faced with the possibility of multiple suits, and settlement of actions may be difficult. (99 S.Ct. 1748, 60 L.Ed.2d 278.) (See 7 Hastings Const. L. Q. 459.)

(2) Right to Hearing on Fitness for Custody. The father of an illegitimate child, on the death of the mother, is entitled to the same hearing on fitness for custody as the father of a legitimate child. (See Stanley v. Illinois (1972) 405 U.S. 645, 92 S.Ct. 1208, 1216, 31 L.Ed.2d 551, 562, supra, §650 [main opinion rests on due process, four justices thought equal protection was also denied]; cf. Quilloin v. Walcott (1978) 434 U.S. 246, 98 S.Ct. 549, 555, 54 L.Ed.2d 511, 520, supra, §650 [distinguishing Stanley]; 25 Cal. Western L. Rev. 123; 19 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 1087.)

2. Right To Withhold Consent to Adoption.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 776

[§ 776] Right To Withhold Consent to Adoption.

(1) In General. Caban v. Mohammed (1979) 441 U.S. 380, 99 S.Ct. 1760, 60 L.Ed.2d 297, dealt with the New York adoption statute, which permits an unwed mother to prevent adoption of an illegitimate child by withholding consent, but does not give this right to the natural father. He can only object on the ground of the best interests of the child. In this case, the mother and the father lived together after the children's birth, and the father maintained contact with them after the mother's remarriage and also contrived to obtain their custody. The mother sought adoption, the father appeared in the proceedings in opposition, and the Court granted the decree. Held, reversed; the statute was unconstitutional. It met the due process requirements of Stanley v. Illinois (1972) 405 U.S. 645, 92 S.Ct. 1208, 31 L.Ed.2d 551, supra, §650, but its gender-based distinction was a denial of equal protection.

(a) Even if unwed mothers as a class were closer than unwed fathers to their newborn infants, this may not be true as the age of the children increases. (99 S.Ct. 1765, 60 L.Ed.2d 305.)

(b) The state's interest in promoting adoption of illegitimate children is important, but is not a sufficient justification. There was no showing that unwed fathers are more likely to object to adoption than are unwed mothers, nor is there any self-evident reason why they would be. (99 S.Ct. 1767, 1768, 60 L.Ed.2d 306, 307.)

(c) The suggestion that adoption may be impeded because it is often impossible to locate unwed fathers is not persuasive. These difficulties need not persist past infancy; and where adoption of an older child is sought, the state may properly deny the privilege of veto to a father who has never participated in the rearing of the child or has abandoned the child. In the present case, the father had established a substantial relationship with the child and had admitted his paternity. (99 S.Ct. 1768, 1769, 60 L.Ed.2d 307, 308.)

(d) The statute "both excludes some loving fathers from full participation in the decision whether their children will be adopted and, at the same time, enables some alienated mothers arbitrarily to cut off the paternal rights of fathers." This undifferentiated distinction does not bear a substantial relationship to the state's interests. (99 S.Ct. 1769, 60 L.Ed.2d 308.) (See W.E.J. v. Superior Court (1979) 100 C.A.3d 303, 160 C.R. 862, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §68 [distinguishing Caban on ground that statute denies veto right only to fathers who have neither gone through

(2) Right To Withhold Consent Absent Showing of Father's Unfitness. In Adoption of Kelsey S. (1992) 1 C.4th 816, 4 C.R.2d 615, 823 P.2d 1216, the primary question was "whether the father of a child born out of wedlock may properly be denied the right to withhold his consent to his child's adoption despite his diligent and legal attempts to obtain custody of his child and to rear it himself, and absent any showing of the father's unfitness as a parent." The court concluded that, "under these circumstances, the federal constitutional guarantees of equal protection and due process require that the father be allowed to withhold his consent to his child's adoption and therefore that his parental rights cannot be terminated absent a showing of his unfitness" under former C.C. 221.20. (1 C.4th 821.)

(a) The statutory framework. The relevant statutes are former C.C. 7004 (now Family C. 7611, 7611.5, 7612; see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §17 et seq.), former C.C. 7017 (now Family C. 7660 et seq.; see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §61 et seq.), and former C.C. 221.20 (now Family C. 8604; see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §98 et seq.). "This statutory scheme creates three classifications of parents: Mothers, biological fathers who are presumed fathers, and biological fathers who are not presumed fathers (i.e., natural fathers). A natural father's consent to an adoption of his child by third parties is not required unless the father makes the required showing that retention of his parental rights is in the child's best interest. Consent, however, is required of a mother and a presumed father regardless of the child's best interest. The natural father is therefore treated differently from both mothers and presumed fathers." (1 C.4th 825.)

(b) Acquiring presumed father status by obtaining constructive receipt of the child: no statutory basis. A man becomes a "presumed father" under former C.C. 7004(a)(4) if he receives the child into his home and openly holds out the child as his natural child. Here, petitioner openly held out the child as his own, but did not physically receive the child into his home. He was prevented from doing so by the mother, by court order, and allegedly also by the prospective adoptive parents. (1 C.4th 823.) He contends that the statute should not be construed in a way that the mother can unilaterally bar the father from receiving their child into his home and thereby deprive him of presumed father status. Nothing in the language or legislative history of the statute supports the claim of constructive receipt, and the decisions either provide little guidance or cast doubt on the notion. (1 C.4th 829.)

(c) Natural father's federal constitutional rights: U.S. Supreme Court decisions. The precise question in the present case has not been addressed by the U.S. Supreme Court. "We are guided, however, by a series of high court decisions dealing with the rights of unwed fathers." (1 C.4th 830 et seq., discussing Stanley v. Illinois, supra; Quilloin v. Walcott (1978) 434 U.S. 246, 98 S.Ct. 549, 54 L.Ed.2d 511, supra, §650; Caban v. Mohammed, supra; Lehr v. Robertson (1983) 463 U.S. 248, 103 S.Ct. 2985, 77 L.Ed.2d 614, supra, §650; and Michael H. v. Gerald D. (1989) 491 U.S. 110, 109 S.Ct. 2333, 105 L.Ed.2d 91, 1 Cal. Evidence (4th), Burden of Proof and Presumptions, §166.) "Although the foregoing court decisions do not provide a comprehensive rule for all situations involving unwed fathers, one unifying and transcendent theme emerges. The biological connection between father and child is unique and worthy of constitutional protection if the father grasps the opportunity to develop that biological connection into a full and enduring relationship." (1 C.4th 838.)

(d) Natural father's constitutional rights: California decisions. State decisions do not squarely answer the exact question before this court, but they "at least reflect an acknowledgment of some degree of federal constitutional protection for natural fathers." (1 C.4th 839, discussing In re Baby Girl M. (1984) 37 C.3d 65, 207 C.R. 309, 688 P.2d 918, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §65, Michael U. v. Jamie B. (1985) 39 C.3d 787, 218 C.R. 39, 705 P.2d 362, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §65, W.E.J. v. Superior Court, supra, and Jermstad v. McNelis (1989) 210 C.A.3d 528, 258 C.R. 519, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §68.) "We agree with the Jermstad court that a biological father has a constitutionally cognizable opportunity interest in developing a relationship with his child. However, in light of the Legislature's prompt and unequivocal amendment to section 4600 to supersede our decision in Baby Girl M. ... , we cannot conclude that the Legislature intended to preserve the detriment standard. To the contrary, it is clear that the Legislature meant to provide natural fathers with far less rights than both mothers and presumed fathers have under California's statutory system. The question is whether that distinction is constitutionally tenable." (1 C.4th 844.)

(e) The constitutionally protected interest of an unwed, natural father. "Does the mother's ability to determine the father's rights substantially serve an important governmental interest? The question is the same 'whether the analysis [is] undertaken as a matter of due process or equal protection.' " (1 C.4th 844.) The state has an important and valid interest in the well-being of children born out of wedlock; but "[i]s the state's important interest ... substantially furthered by allowing the mother to deny the child's biological father an opportunity to form a relationship with the child that would give the father the same statutory rights as the mother (or a presumed father) in deciding whether the child will be adopted by third parties?" (1 C.4th 844.) Respondents' position is that allowing the biological father to have the same rights as the mother would make adoptions more difficult because the consent of both parties is more difficult to obtain than the consent of the mother alone. "This reasoning is flawed in several respects." (1 C.4th 845.)

(1) "Respondents' view too narrowly assumes that the proper governmental objective is adoption. ... We cannot conclude in the abstract that adoption is itself a sufficient objective to allow the state to take whatever measures it deems appropriate. Nor can we merely assume, either as a policy or factual matter, that adoption is necessarily in a child's best interest. This assumption is especially untenable in light of the rapidly changing concept of family." (1 C.4th 845.)

(2) "If the possible benefit of adoption were by itself sufficient to justify terminating a parent's rights, the state could terminate an unwed mother's rights based on nothing more than a showing that her child's best interest would be served by adoption. Of course, that is not the law. ... We simply do not in our society take children away from their mothers--married or otherwise--because a 'better' adoptive parent can be found. We see no valid reason why we should be less solicitous of a father's efforts to establish a parental relationship with his child." (1 C.4th 846.)

(3) "Nor is there evidence before us that the statutory provisions allowing the mother to determine the father's rights are, in general, substantially related to protecting the child's best interest. As a matter of cold efficiency, we cannot disagree that eliminating a natural father's rights would make adoption easier in some cases. ... That, however, begs the question because it assumes that an unwed mother's decision to permit an immediate adoption of her newborn is always preferable to custody by the natural father, even when he is a demonstrably fit parent. We have no evidence to support that assumption. Moreover, the assumption has already been rejected" by the U.S. Supreme Court. (1 C.4th 846, citing and quoting Caban, supra.)

(4) The lack of a substantial relationship between the state's interest in protecting a child and in allowing the mother sole control is best demonstrated by the results of a mother preventing the father from obtaining presumed status. "Under the statute, the father has basically two ways in which to achieve that status: he can either marry the mother, or he can receive the child into his home and hold it out as his natural child. Of course, the first alternative is entirely within the mother's control. She cannot be forced to marry the father. The second alternative is, for the most part, also within her control. She can deny the father the right to come into her home. She can also deny him the right to take the child into his home. Faced with the mother's denial, the father has only one recourse aside from illegal self-help. He must seek a court order granting him custody so that he can take the child into his home and thereby gain presumed father status. As in this case, however, the trial court may deny him custody based on its view that the child is better served by remaining with the mother or third parties, e.g., prospective adoptive parents. Similarly, he may (as apparently initially occurred in this case) obtain a court order granting him custody, but enforcement of the order may be thwarted by third parties." (1 C.4th 847.)

(5) "The anomalies under this statutory scheme become readily apparent." (a) A father who is willing and able to exercise his parental responsibilities can have his rights terminated merely on a showing that his child's best interest would be served by adoption. If the mother were equally of the opposite character--unwilling and unable--her rights could be terminated only under the much more protective standards of former C.C. 221.20. (1 C.4th 847.) (b) The system also leads to irrational distinctions between fathers. A model father can be denied presumed father status, but a father of dubious ability and intent can achieve it by the fortuitous circumstance of the mother allowing him to come into her home if only briefly--perhaps a single day. (1 C.4th 847.)

(6) Former C.C. 7004(a) and "the related statutory scheme violates the federal constitutional guarantees of equal protection and due process for unwed fathers to the extent that the statutes allow a mother unilaterally to preclude her child's biological father from becoming a presumed father and thereby allowing the state to terminate his parental rights on nothing more than a showing of the child's best interest. If an unwed father promptly comes forward and demonstrates a full commitment to his parental responsibilities--emotional, financial, and otherwise--his federal constitutional right to due process prohibits the termination of his parental relationship absent a showing of his unfitness as a parent. Absent such a showing, the child's well-being is presumptively best served by continuation of the father's parental relationship. Similarly, when the father has come forward to grasp his parental responsibilities, his parental rights are entitled to equal protection as those of the mother." (1 C.4th 849, disapproving W.E.J., supra.)

(7) A court should consider all factors relevant to that determination, including his conduct before and after the child's birth, his public acknowledgment of paternity payment of pregnancy and birth expenses, and prompt legal action to seek custody of the child. (1 C.4th 849.) But "we caution that our decision affords no protection, constitutional or otherwise, to a male who impregnates a female as a result of nonconsensual sexual intercourse. ... The sexual intercourse is voluntary only for the father." (1 C.4th 849, footnote 14.)

(f) Application of the correct standard to this case.

(1) Petitioner and the prospective adoptive parents sharply disagree on the threshold constitutional question whether petitioner demonstrated a sufficient commitment to his parental responsibilities. The case is therefore remanded to the trial court to make the determination in the first instance. (1 C.4th 850.)

(2) If the required commitment is found, a further question will arise: whether he can be deprived of the right to withhold his consent to the adoption because of unfitness. "As with the threshold question of whether petitioner did all he could reasonably do to act like a father, we cannot fairly decide in the first instance whether he was unfit and could thus be deprived of his right to withhold consent. We leave it to the trial court to decide this question, if necessary." (1 C.4th 851.) The proper standard is whether he is now fit or unfit; and a finding of unfitness must be supported by clear and convincing evidence. (1 C.4th 851.)

(3) If the trial court concludes that petitioner has a right to withhold consent, that decision will bear only on the question of whether the adoption will proceed. "Even if petitioner has a right to withhold his consent (and chooses to prevent the adoption), there will remain the question of the child's custody. That question is not before us, and we express no view on it." (1 C.4th 851.)

(g) Application of decision to other cases. No reasons are present for exceptions to the general rule of retroactivity of judicial decisions; hence, this decision "shall be given retroactive effect as to all cases not yet final as of the date this decision is filed." (1 C.4th 851.) In proceedings in which a final judgment has been entered, the judgment "cannot be challenged either directly or collaterally." (1 C.4th 852.)

One justice, concurring only in the result, took the position that the constitutional holding was unnecessary; if a preponderance of the evidence supported the allegations of the majority, the mother and proposed adoptive parents would be estopped from denying that the biological father had assumed the status of a presumed father. (1 C.4th 852, 853.) (See Adoption of Michael H. (1995) 10 C.4th 1043, 1050, 43 C.R.2d 445, 898 P.2d 891 [under Kelsey S., biological father did not have constitutional right to refuse consent to adoption, where he did not promptly show full commitment to his parental responsibilities after learning of pregnancy; fact that he did so after child was born was too late]; Adoption of Alexander M. (2001) 94 C.A.4th 430, 438, 114 C.R.2d 218 [following Kelsey S.]; In re Jerry P. (2002) 95 C.A.4th 793, 803, 815, 116 C.R.2d 123, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §603 [extending holding in Kelsey S. to dependency proceeding and to man who was not biological father]; In re Kyle F. (2003) 112 C.A.4th 538,

3. Standing Where Presumed Father Exists.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 777

[§ 777] Standing Where Presumed Father Exists.

In Michael M. v. Giovanna F. (1992) 5 C.A.4th 1272, 7 C.R.2d 460, plaintiff Michael and defendant Giovanna, both single, lived together and became engaged. During their engagement a child, later named Brian, was conceived. Subsequently Giovanna broke off the engagement and married defendant Matthew. Michael, after repeated unsuccessful attempts to establish his relationship with the child, filed this action against Giovanna and Matthew for a declaration of paternity under the Uniform Parentage Act (see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §17 et seq.). The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer on the ground that a biological father has no standing to sue so long as a different presumed father exists (see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §46 et seq.), and that, because Matthew and Giovanna were married when Brian was born, Matthew was the presumed father. Held, as applied to plaintiff Michael, the standing provisions of the Uniform Parentage Act constituted a denial of due process.

(a) Michael's complaint invokes both procedural and substantive due process. First, because he has been denied standing to sue he has been deprived of a hearing to assert his claimed right to form a parental relationship with Brian. Second, his claim is based on a recognized substantive due process right to be free of state interference with personal relations between family members. (5 C.A.4th 1279.)

(b) Michael's claim depends on the existence of a constitutionally protected interest in a biological father's parental relation with his offspring. "Though there is no clear agreement on the exact boundaries of such a right, the extremes are well defined. First, there is no constitutionally protected interest in a parental relation where the basis for that relation is the genetic or biological connection created by impregnation alone. ... Where an unwed father fails to demonstrate any interest in forming a relationship with a child from the beginning, any rights conferred by the biological connection are lost. ... At the other end of the spectrum, an existing parental relationship established between an unwed biological father and his child or children is entitled to the same constitutional protections as a parent-child relationship formed within a marriage." (5 C.A.4th 1279.)

(c) The issue in Adoption of Kelsey S. (1992) 1 C.4th 816, 4 C.R.2d 615, 823 P.2d 1216, supra, §776, is closely related to the problem here. "Like the biological father in Kelsey S., Michael has promptly taken every step open to him to form a relationship with his child. Under the reasoning of Kelsey S. and the federal precedents it discusses, his actions have preserved his 'opportunity interest' in being a parent. That interest is protected as a matter of due process." (5 C.A.4th 1280.)

(d) Kelsey S. and the line of cases on which it relies arise out of adoption proceedings initiated by a biological mother, in which a biological father raises objections to the termination of his parental rights. Because the placement for adoption is itself an acknowledgment that any then-existing family unit has dissolved, courts considering a biological father's right to withhold consent have not considered the balance between those rights and the state's interest in preserving the integrity of existing families. "Here, in contrast, Brian has not been placed for adoption. Rather, the mother and her husband have, like Michael, done everything in their power to establish a stable traditional family unit. Thus, our consideration of Michael's challenge to the statutory scheme which denies him standing to establish his paternity does not occur in a vacuum. We must balance his acknowledged due process interest in the opportunity to form a parental relationship against the countervailing interests of Matthew and Giovanna, and those of the state, in preserving family integrity." (5 C.A.4th 1281.)

(e) "Where a child is conceived during and born into an existing marriage, but has been fathered by a man outside the marriage, the application of both traditional common law and modern constitutional principle have almost universally produced the same result; the biological father may be barred by the state from developing a relationship with the child against the married parents' wishes. The traditional method of achieving this result was the conclusive presumption of paternity, which no one could challenge, least of all the biological father." (5 C.A.4th 1282.) Though the conclusive presumption does not apply where the child, as here, is conceived out of wedlock, the UPA provisions operate in the same manner. (5 C.A.4th 1282.)

(f) The interests of the state and biological father are well defined. First, under Stanley v. Illinois (1972) 405 U.S. 645, 92 S.Ct. 1208, 31 L.Ed.2d 551, supra, §650, a biological father has a substantive due process right to a parental relationship with his offspring; and where state law impinges on that right, the father's interest must be balanced against those of the state. (5 C.A.4th 1282.) Second, the state has a continuing interest in the welfare of the child, and in "familial stability." (5 C.A.4th 1283.)

(g) "[T]here is a significant difference between this case and those in which the conclusive presumption of paternity applies. Here, Giovanna's marriage to Matthew occurred after Brian was conceived, and after both Giovanna and Michael were aware they had conceived a child. Under these circumstances, we believe the state's interest in preserving family integrity is significantly reduced, since the marriage family did not exist when the child was conceived. Where the marriage partners are joined, both knowing that the child is in utero and there is a different biological father in existence, we find no tenable basis on which to find a threat to the unity of the family flowing from the biological father's prompt attempt to establish a relationship with the child. ... Indeed, we find the situation analogous to that in which a divorced parent retains joint custody or visitation rights after the remarriage of his or her former partner, a situation in which the state has determined any threat to family integrity is outweighed by other considerations. ... That common situation offends no public policy which would protect the second marriage from interference by the divorced parent. Similarly here, allowing Michael to exercise the opportunity interest he has secured by his prompt action does not offend the state's interest in preserving the integrity of an existing family against challenge by third persons." (5 C.A.4th 1284.)

(h) "We therefore hold that where unwed parents conceive, and the mother marries another before the birth of the child, the biological father's substantive due process right to a relationship with his child requires that he be allowed standing under the UPA to attempt to establish the paternity of the child, so long as he has promptly taken sufficient steps to preserve that interest. ... In view of our conclusion, we do not reach Michael's claims based on equal protection, or those based on the California Constitution." (5 C.A.4th 1285.)

The classification of minors is common and almost invariably upheld in such fields as compulsory education, employment, etc. (See In re Spencer (1906) 149 C. 396, 401, 86 P. 896; *People v. (1) Protection Against Obscenity. (See supra, §§439, 440.)

(2) Illegitimate Children. (See infra, §780 et seq.)

(3) Curfew. A curfew ordinance restricting minors on the streets or public places of a city in the nighttime is valid if reasonable in terms. A prohibition against presence alone ("being in" a particular place) is unconstitutionally overbroad; a prohibition against loitering or remaining is usually upheld. (See People v. Walton, supra, 70 C.A.2d Supp. 866 [remaining or loitering on public street or place between 9 p.m. and 4 a.m.; no restriction on right to use streets in going to places of business or amusement or for other purposes]; In re Nancy C. (1972) 28 C.A.3d 747, 755, 105 C.R. 113 [loitering, etc., on public streets after 10 p.m., with reasonable exceptions]; 97 Harv. L. Rev. 1163 [assessing scope of minors' fundamental rights: juvenile curfews and Constitution]; 107 Harv. L. Rev. 1693 [juvenile curfews as response to gang violence]; 24 Hastings Const. L. Q. 219 [juvenile curfew ordinances in California]; 16 J. Juvenile Law 188 [issues raised by juvenile curfews]; 19 J. Juvenile Law 84 [future of nocturnal juvenile curfew ordinances]; 83 A.L.R.4th 1056 [juvenile curfew regulations].) (For constitutionality of limitations on associational rights of gang members under First Amendment, see supra, §408.)

(4) Restrictions on Admission to Dance Halls. In Dallas v. Stanglin (1989) 490 U.S. 19, 109 S.Ct. 1591, 104 L.Ed.2d 18, a city ordinance restricted admission of persons between 14 and 18 years of age to certain dance halls. Held, the restriction was valid. The city could reasonably conclude that teenagers might be susceptible to corrupting influences if permitted, unaccompanied by their parents, to frequent a dance hall with older persons. Hence, a rational relationship existed between the age restriction and the city's interest in promoting the welfare of teenagers. (109 S.Ct. 1596, 1597, 104 L.Ed.2d 27, 28.)

Answering the argument that the ordinance violated the associational rights of patrons, the Court distinguished Roberts v. United States Jaycees (1984) 468 U.S. 609, 104 S.Ct. 3244, 82 L.Ed.2d 462, supra, §389. Limiting the right of minors to dance with adults, and the right of adults to dance with minors, does not involve "the sort of expressive association that the First Amendment has been held to protect. The hundreds of teenagers who congregate each night at this particular dance hall are not members of any organized association; they are patrons of the same business establishment. Most are strangers to one another, and the dance hall admits all who are willing to pay the admission fee. There is no suggestion that these patrons 'take positions on public questions,' or perform any of the other similar activities described in Board of Directors of Rotary Int. v. Rotary Club of Duarte." (109 S.Ct. 1595, 104 L.Ed.2d 26; on Rotary Club cases, see infra, §902.) (See Burnett v. San Francisco Police Dept. (1995) 36 C.A.4th 1177, 1188, 1190, 42 C.R.2d 879 [city ordinance excluding persons under 21 years of age from after-hours clubs does not violate equal protection].)

(5) Dangerous Minors. The extended detention of dangerous minors committed to the Youth Authority, pursuant to Welf.C. 1800 et seq., is valid. (See In re Cavanaugh (1965) 234 C.A.2d 316, 322, 44 C.R. 422; In re J.F. (1969) 268 C.A.2d 761, 772, 74 C.R. 464; 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §965 et seq.)

(6) Unsupervised Minors. In Ames v. Hermosa Beach (1971) 16 C.A.3d 146, 153, 93 C.R. 786, a local ordinance making it unlawful to lease rooms to persons under 18 without a "responsible adult" as a cotenant was upheld as a reasonable means of meeting the problems of unsupervised minors at a beach resort community.

(7) Counsel Fees in Juvenile Court. Welf.C. 903.1, making parents of minors liable for the cost of counsel appointed in juvenile court proceedings, is valid. In imposing the obligation on parents of indigent minors and not on indigent adults, the Legislature may have considered the likelihood of reimbursement from indigent adults minimal; also, reimbursement assists counties in meeting the increasing cost of counsel for indigent minors and encourages parents and children alike to avoid acts of delinquency. (In re Ricky H. (1970) 2 C.3d 513, 522, 86 C.R. 76, 468 P.2d 204.)

(8) Sealing Records of Juvenile Court. Welf.C. 781, requiring a 5-year waiting period before a petition may be filed by a minor to seal juvenile court records, is valid. The policy of the statute is to keep the past record of juvenile behavior for individualized guidance and rehabilitation. (T.N.G. v. Superior Court (1971) 4 C.3d 767, 783, 94 C.R. 813, 484 P.2d 981; see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §501.) (On sealing and destruction of juvenile court records on determination of factual innocence, see Welf.C. 781.5, 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §504 et seq.)

(9) Revocation of Minor's Driving License. Veh.C. 13352.3 provides that on conviction or adjudication of wardship of a minor for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs, the minor's license must be revoked until he or she reaches 18, or for 1 year, whichever is longer. In re Arthur W. (1985) 171 C.A.3d 179, 217 C.R. 183, involved a minor who received a 1-year revocation for an offense committed shortly before his 18th birthday. He challenged the provision on the ground that if the offense had been committed after his 18th birthday, revocation would be limited to 6 months, and he might be granted probation. Held, the statute was valid.

(a) Age is not a suspect classification (see infra, §802), and the right to drive is not a specific constitutional guarantee; hence, the rational basis test is applied. (171 C.A.3d 186.) As shown by statistics, the classification bears a rational relationship to the interest in preventing injury and death on the highways. (171 C.A.3d 188.)

(b) The rights of minors in this activity are not coextensive with those of adults; other statutes dealing with driving represent a legislative determination that minors do not have the discretion and judgment entitling them to unrestrained permission to operate motor vehicles. (171 C.A.3d 190.) The license revocation consequences of Veh.C. 13352.3 are imposed only on a finding that the minor has violated the criminal laws against driving while intoxicated. The longer period of license revocation thus serves an additional state interest in protection and safety of the minor and the public, by removing from the highways children who have clearly demonstrated the lack of judgment necessary to safely operate a motor vehicle. (171 C.A.3d 190.)

[§ 779] Invalid Classification.

Examples of invalid classification of minors include the following:

(1) Extended Incarceration of Youthful Misdemeanants. Statutes that authorize commitment of a misdemeanor between the ages of 16 and 21 for a term longer than the maximum that can be imposed on an adult for the same offense (former Welf.C. 1731.5, 1770) are unconstitutional; the discriminatory sentencing scheme is not necessary to achieve a compelling state interest. (People v. Olivas (1976) 17 C.3d 236, 257, 131 C.R. 55, 551 P.2d 375; see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §960 et seq.; 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §76 et seq.) (See 4 Hastings Const. L. Q. 757.)

(2) Statute of Limitations for Malpractice Actions. Malpractice actions by adults must be brought within 3 years of the date of injury, but malpractice actions by minors must be brought within 3 years of the date of the wrongful act. (C.C.P. 340.5; see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §§536, 540.) In Photias v. Doerfler (1996) 45 C.A.4th 1014, 53 C.R.2d 202, 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, Supp., §540, the court held that the statute does nothing to curb the problem of "long-tail" claims, and thus that there is no rational basis for the classification. (45 C.A.4th 1017, 1020.)

(3) Youth Group Fees at Public Recreation Areas. State and local agencies are prohibited from charging an excess fee to a youth group, or requiring a permit, that is not required of a similar number of persons, for the use of, or access to, a public beach or recreation area. (Govt.C. 53077.5.)

(4) Male and Female Distinctions. Utah and Arkansas had statutes fixing the age of majority for females at 18 and for males at 21. In Stanton v. Stanton (1975) 421 U.S. 7, 95 S.Ct. 1373, 43 L.Ed.2d 688, the Utah statute was challenged by a divorced mother with custody of a boy and a girl, when the father refused to pay child support required by the divorce decree after the girl became 18. Held, the statute was an unconstitutional discrimination based on sex. Applying the principles of Reed v. Reed (1971) 404 U.S. 71, 92 S.Ct. 251, 30 L.Ed.2d 225, supra, §771, there was no compelling state interest or rational basis for the distinction between male and female minors.

[§ 780] Action for Wrongful Death of Parent.

In Levy v. Louisiana (1968) 391 U.S. 68, 88 S.Ct. 1509, 20 L.Ed.2d 436, a Louisiana statute was construed by the state court as giving the right of action for wrongful death only to legitimate children. Held, this was a denial of equal protection to illegitimates suing for wrongful death of their mother, who had raised them. No authority in point was found, but the court declared that (a) an illegitimate child is a person, with responsibilities of a citizen and correlative rights; and (b) illegitimacy has no relation to the nature of the wrong, for they suffer the same loss as any other dependent children.

Three dissenting justices referred to the "constitutional curiosities" of the main opinion, and described the process of decision as "brute force." The dissenters pointed out that there is no common law action for wrongful death, and that Louisiana, like other states, created the statutory right in favor of a certain class of persons, based on family relationship, and excluding as irrelevant issues of actual affection, nurture, and dependence. They concluded that the Constitution does not command a classification based on biological rather than legal relationships. (88 S.Ct. 1512 et seq., 20 L.Ed.2d 444 et seq.) (See Glon v. American Guarantee & Liab. Ins. Co. (1968) 391 U.S. 73, 88 S.Ct. 1515, 20 L.Ed.2d 441 [following Levy]; 82 Harv. L. [§ 781] Workers' Compensation and Other Benefits.

(1) Workers' Compensation Death Benefit. In Weber v. Aetna Cas. & Surety Co. (1972) 406 U.S. 164, 92 S.Ct. 1400, 31 L.Ed.2d 768, the Louisiana's workers' compensation statute, which relegated dependent unacknowledged illegitimate children to the status of "other dependents," was held unconstitutional. Their loss of support was equal to that of dependent legitimate and acknowledged illegitimate children; and it made no difference that illegitimates were not so broadly barred as in Levy v. Louisiana (1968) 391 U.S. 68, 88 S.Ct. 1509, 20 L.Ed.2d 436, supra, §780, because the discrimination was clear. (92 S.Ct. 1405, 31 L.Ed.2d 775.)

(2) Disability Benefits. In Jimenez v. Weinberger (1974) 417 U.S. 628, 94 S.Ct. 2496, 41 L.Ed.2d 363, the Court, following the Weber approach, held unconstitutional a provision of the Social Security Act distinguishing between classes of illegitimates for the purpose of preventing spurious claims. Disability insurance benefits were given without a showing of dependency to those entitled to inherit, or legitimated, or illegitimate only because of a formal defect in their parents' ceremonial marriage; benefits were denied to illegitimate children born after the disability who were not in these categories. "Assuming that the appellants are in fact dependent on the claimant, it would not serve the purposes of the Act to conclusively deny them an opportunity to establish their dependency and their right to insurance benefits, and it would discriminate between the two subclasses of after-born illegitimates without any basis for the distinction since the potential for spurious claims is exactly the same as to both subclasses." (94 S.Ct. 2501, 41 L.Ed.2d 370.)

(3) Survivorship Benefits. Mathews v. Lucas (1976) 427 U.S. 495, 96 S.Ct. 2755, 49 L.Ed.2d 651, dealing with a surviving child's insurance benefits under the Social Security Act, reaches a conclusion opposite to that of Jimenez v. Weinberger. The Act conditions the eligibility of an illegitimate child on a showing that the deceased wage earner was the child's parent, who was living with the child or contributing to his or her support. Held, the condition was valid. (a) Congress was able to avoid the burden and expense of specific case-by-case determination by the use of these presumptions of dependency; and the statutory classification is a reasonable empirical judgment consistent with a design to qualify entitlement to benefits on a child's dependency at the time of the parent's death. (96 S.Ct. 2764, 2765, 49 L.Ed.2d 663.) (b) Jimenez is distinguishable because the statute involved in that case conclusively denied benefits to some classes of illegitimate children. (96 S.Ct. 2765, 49 L.Ed.2d 664.) (c) Although the statutory criteria do not compel the presumption of dependency, it is permissible. "Drawing upon its own practical experience, Congress has tailored statutory classifications in accord with its calculations of the likelihood of actual support suggested by a narrow set of objective and apparently reasonable indicators." (96 S.Ct. 2767, 49 L.Ed.2d 667.)

Three justices dissented, contending that Jimenez was controlling. (96 S.Ct. 2767, 49 L.Ed.2d 667.) (See 90 Harv. L. Rev. 123.)

3. Support by Father.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 782

[§ 782] Support by Father.

The principle of Levy v. Louisiana (1968) 391 U.S. 68, 88 S.Ct. 1509, 20 L.Ed.2d 436, supra, §780, and Weber v. Aetna Cas. & Surety Co. (1972) 406 U.S. 164, 92 S.Ct. 1400, 31 L.Ed.2d 768, supra, §781, was extended in Gomez v. Perez (1973) 409 U.S. 535, 93 S.Ct. 872, 35 L.Ed.2d 56. A Texas court decided that an illegitimate child had no right to support from his or her natural father in the absence of a statute. Held, reversed; a state may not deny substantial benefits to illegitimate children that are accorded to children generally. "[O]nce a State posits a judicially enforceable right on behalf of children to needed support from their natural fathers there is no constitutionally sufficient justification for denying such an essential right to a child simply because her natural father has not married her mother." (93 S.Ct. 875, 35 L.Ed.2d 60.) (See 38 A.L.R.3d 628.)

The Texas Legislature in response to Gomez authorized an action by an illegitimate child to establish paternity and obtain support, but the statute provided that the action had to be brought before the child was 1 year old. In Mills v. Habluetzel (1982) 456 U.S. 91, 102 S.Ct. 1549, 71 L.Ed.2d 770, the Court held that the short limitation denied illegitimate children the equal protection of the law. "The period for asserting the right to support must be sufficiently long to permit those who normally have an interest in such children to bring an action on their behalf despite the difficult personal, family, and financial circumstances that often surround the birth of a child outside of wedlock. It would hardly satisfy the demands of equal protection and the holding of Gomez to remove an 'impenetrable barrier' to support, only to replace it with an opportunity so truncated that few could utilize it effectively." (102 S.Ct. 1553, 71 L.Ed.2d 776.)

In Clark v. Jeter (1988) 486 U.S. 456, 108 S.Ct. 1910, 100 L.Ed.2d 465, a Pennsylvania 6-year statute of limitations on an illegitimate's suit to establish paternity was held invalid.

(a) Between the extremes of rational basis review and strict scrutiny "lies a level of intermediate scrutiny, which generally has been applied to discriminatory classifications based on sex or illegitimacy." (108 S.Ct. 1914, 100 L.Ed.2d 471.) A concurring opinion in Mills explained why statutes of limitation longer than 1 year may be unconstitutional: "First, the State has a countervailing interest in ensuring that genuine claims for child support are satisfied. Second, the fact that Texas tolled most other causes of action during a child's minority suggested that proof problems do not become overwhelming during this period. Finally, the practical obstacles to filing a claim for support are likely to continue after the first year of the child's life." (108 S.Ct. 1915, 100 L.Ed.2d 472.)

(b) "[T]he 6-year statute of limitations is not substantially related to Pennsylvania's interest in avoiding the litigation of stale or fraudulent claims." In a number of instances, Pennsylvania permits the issue of paternity to be litigated more than 6 years after the birth of an illegitimate child (e.g., within 2 years of a support payment made by the father); and these tolling provisions cast doubt on the state's purported interest in avoiding litigation of stale or fraudulent claims. (108 S.Ct. 1917, 100 L.Ed.2d 473, 474.)

4. Public Aid.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 783

[§ 783] Public Aid.

The same insistence on equal treatment of illegitimate children underlies the decision in King v. Smith (1968) 392 U.S. 309, 88 S.Ct. 2128, 20 L.Ed.2d 1118. The Social Security Act provides federal aid to families with dependent children. A needy child is one whose parent is continuously absent. Alabama had a regulation, however, that denied aid to the children of a mother who "cohabits," i.e., has frequent sexual relations, with an able-bodied man--a "substitute father." Held, the regulation was invalid. Alabama's interest in discouraging illicit sexual behavior and illegitimacy may be protected by other means; its interest in economically allocating its aid funds may be protected by its power to set the level of benefits and the standard of need. Regarding social ills caused by poverty, and causes and cures for poverty, the Court said: "[D]estitute children who are legally fatherless cannot be flatly denied federally funded assistance on the transparent fiction that they have a substitute father." (88 S.Ct. 2142, 20 L.Ed.2d 1135.)

Thus, the majority decided the case on statutory interpretation, but a concurring opinion reached the same result on constitutional grounds, citing Levy v. Louisiana (1968) 391 U.S. 68, 88 S.Ct. 1509, 20 L.Ed.2d 436, supra, §780. (88 S.Ct. 2143, 20 L.Ed.2d 1136.) (See *New Jersey Welfare Rights Organization v. 5. Right To Inherit.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 784

[§ 784] Right To Inherit.

(1) Labine v. Vincent Case. The Court in Levy v. Louisiana (1968) 391 U.S. 68, 88 S.Ct. 1509, 20 L.Ed.2d 436, supra, §780, "did not say and cannot fairly be read to say that a State can never treat an illegitimate child differently from legitimate offspring." (Labine v. Vincent (1971) 401 U.S. 532, 91 S.Ct. 1017, 1019, 28 L.Ed.2d 288, 292.) In Labine, the guardian of an acknowledged illegitimate girl attacked a Louisiana statute providing that such a child could take by will from his or her father but not as an heir if the father died intestate. Held, the law was valid. Here, unlike in Levy, there was no absolute bar to inheritance. The child could inherit if the father had legitimated her (by marrying the mother, by so stating in writing in his acknowledgment of paternity), or if he had executed a will in her favor. The discrimination made by the statute is similar to that against concubines and in favor of a wife. One relationship is socially sanctioned and legally recognized, the other is illicit. (91 S.Ct. 1021, 28 L.Ed.2d 294.) The dissent of four justices asserts that "only a moral prejudice, prevalent in 1825 when the Louisiana statutes under consideration were adopted, can support Louisiana's discrimination against illegitimate children." (91 S.Ct. 1031, 28 L.Ed.2d 305.) (See 38 A.L.R.3d 613 [discrimination on basis of illegitimacy].)

In Estate of Ginochio (1974) 43 C.A.3d 412, 112 C.R. 565, the court, following Labine, rejected a constitutional challenge to former Prob.C. 255 (14 Summary (10th), Wills and Probate, §90). The court said: "There are several grounds indeed upon which the classification of the Legislature distinguishing between legitimate and illegitimate children may be upheld. First, since there is no vested right to succession, it is subject to such conditions and limitations as the Legislature may prescribe Second, the state indisputably has a paramount interest in encouraging the institution of marriage and discouraging the birth of illegitimate children. That it chooses to use its inheritance laws as one of its methods in that effort is entirely within its constitutional province. ... Third, statutes which provide that the illegitimate child takes only from and through his mother in the absence of an acknowledgment of his intestate father embody nothing more than the presumed intent of the deceased. Since each person is constitutionally free to dispose of his property in an unfettered manner, it cannot be said that statutes reflecting the probable intent of individuals are unreasonable." (43 C.A.3d 418.)

(2) Trimble v. Gordon. The U.S. Supreme Court came to the opposite conclusion in Trimble v. Gordon (1977) 430 U.S. 762, 97 S.Ct. 1459, 52 L.Ed.2d 31, holding the Illinois law invalid. Labine v. Vincent was disparaged (97 S.Ct.

1464, 52 L.Ed.2d 37, footnote 12), and although the Illinois and Louisiana statutes were found to be different, the Court indicated that the Labine analysis was no longer acceptable. (97 S.Ct. 1468, 52 L.Ed.2d 43, footnote 17.) Four justices dissented, finding Labine constitutionally indistinguishable. (97 S.Ct. 1468, 52 L.Ed.2d 43.) (See 91 Harv. L. Rev. 177; 5 Hastings Const. L. Q. 114; 5 Pepperdine L. Rev. 609.)

(3) Lalli v. Lalli. Trimble v. Gordon was distinguished in Lalli v. Lalli (1978) 439 U.S. 259, 99 S.Ct. 518, 58 L.Ed.2d 503, upholding a New York statute that required illegitimate children who would inherit from their fathers to bring a filiation suit during the lifetime of the father and obtain an order determining paternity.

(a) The statute in Trimble, requiring marriage of the parents, excluded significant categories of illegitimate children whose inheritance rights can be recognized without jeopardizing the orderly settlement of estates or the dependability of titles. (99 S.Ct. 523, 58 L.Ed.2d 510.) The New York statute makes a single procedural requirement. This requirement bears a substantial relation to the state interests: Paternity of an illegitimate child presents peculiar problems of proof, and spurious claims are difficult to expose. (99 S.Ct. 525, 58 L.Ed.2d 513.)

(b) The means adopted by the state to further these interests are reasonable. An accurate resolution of claims is enhanced by placing paternity disputes in a judicial forum while the father is alive; a man will be able to defend his reputation against unjust claims of paternity; and delay and uncertainty in estate administration will be minimized where the entitlement of an illegitimate child is a matter of judicial record. (99 S.Ct. 526, 58 L.Ed.2d 513.) The law may appear to operate unfairly as to some illegitimate children who would be able to establish their relationship without serious disruption of the administration of estates, but occasional inequitable results do not condemn the law. The reach of the statute in Trimble was far in excess of its justifiable purpose; that of the New York statute, liberally interpreted by New York courts, is not. (99 S.Ct. 527, 58 L.Ed.2d 514.)

One justice, concurring in the judgment, thought that Trimble was now "a derelict," and that the Court had "gratifyingly" reverted to the principles of Labine. (99 S.Ct. 529, 58 L.Ed.2d 516.) Four dissenting justices thought Trimble was controlling and that the statute should have been held invalid. (99 S.Ct. 529, 58 L.Ed.2d 517.) (See 12 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 389; 7 Hastings Const. L. Q. 470.)

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 785

[§ 785] Married and Unmarried Persons.

(1) In General. In Eisenstadt v. Baird (1972) 405 U.S. 438, 92 S.Ct. 1029, 31 L.Ed.2d 349, supra, §560, Massachusetts laws (a) permitted married persons to obtain contraceptives to prevent pregnancy, but only on prescription; (b) prohibited unmarried persons from obtaining them from anyone to prevent pregnancy; and (c) allowed both married and unmarried persons to obtain them from anyone to prevent the spread of disease. Defendant gave a contraceptive to an unmarried woman after a lecture, and was convicted. Held, the laws denied equal protection. The discrimination could not be justified as a deterrence to fornication and a promotion of community health; if distribution of contraceptives to married persons cannot be prohibited (see Griswold v. Connecticut (1965) 381 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 14 L.Ed.2d 510, supra, §560), a ban on distribution to unmarried persons is equally impermissible. (92 S.Ct. 1038, 31 L.Ed.2d 362.) (See 86 Harv. L. Rev. 116 [Eisenstadt]; 18 Hastings Const. L. Q. 487 [constitutional issues in Uniform Status of Children of Assisted Conception Act's restriction of surrogacy to married couples].)

(2) Nonmarital Cohabitants. In Atkisson v. Kern County Housing Authority (1976) 59 C.A.3d 89, 130 C.R. 375, plaintiff, a 33-year-old divorcee with six children, leased living quarters in a low income public housing unit operated by defendant Housing Authority. Defendant adopted a policy forbidding a tenant to live with a person of the opposite sex to whom the tenant was not related by blood, marriage, or adoption. Plaintiff lived with a man in violation of the policy and defendant found her in violation of the lease. Held, the policy was unconstitutional.

(a) It established a conclusive presumption of immorality, irresponsibility, and the demoralization of tenant relations from the fact of unmarried cohabitation; this was a denial of due process under such cases as Vlandis v. Kline (1973) 412 U.S. 441, 93 S.Ct. 2230, 37 L.Ed.2d 63, supra, §659, and United States Dept. of Agriculture v. Murry (1973) 413 U.S. 508, 93 S.Ct. 2832, 37 L.Ed.2d 767. (59 C.A.3d 96.)

(b) The classification of cohabiting unrelated adults could not be justified under the applicable statutory purposes. This "classification improperly assumes a connection with undesirable conduct associated with the class (e.g., demoralizing tenancy relations) and the conduct of the individual." (59 C.A.3d 98.) And the total ban would apply to an unmarried couple with children of their own, thereby violating the right of privacy as well as denying equal protection. (59 C.A.3d 98.)

In Hinman v. Department of Personnel Administration (1985) 167 C.A.3d 516, 213 C.R. 410, the State Employees

Dental Care Act was interpreted by the administration to limit benefits to employees and their family members including spouses. Plaintiffs challenged the denial of coverage to unmarried partners of homosexual employees. Held, there was no discrimination against homosexuals because the classification was based on marriage and is justified by the state's interest in promoting marriage. (167 C.A.3d 527, citing Norman v. Unemp. Ins. App. Bd. (1983) 34 C.3d 1, 9, 192 C.R. 134, 663 P.2d 904, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §503.) (See 14 Hastings Const. L. Q. 111; on discrimination against homosexuals, lesbians, and bisexuals, see infra, §798.)

[§ 786] Insanity Commitments.

In Baxstrom v. Herold (1966) 383 U.S. 107, 86 S.Ct. 760, 15 L.Ed.2d 620, a New York statute provided that where a convicted person is serving a term in a state institution for the criminally insane, and is certified to be still mentally ill at the time of termination of his or her sentence, the person may be civilly committed to an institution without a judicial trial of the issue of his or her present sanity. Held, this was a denial of equal protection.

(a) Persons civilly committed are given the right to a jury trial on the question of their sanity; only those committed at the expiration of a prison term are denied the right. This is not a reasonable classification of civilly insane and criminally insane. The issue is whether the person is mentally ill at all, and on that issue, there is no basis for the distinction made. (86 S.Ct. 762, 15 L.Ed.2d 622.)

(b) Capriciousness is particularly shown by the fact that a person with a past criminal record is entitled to a jury trial on a civil commitment if he or she is not in prison at the time the proceedings are instituted. This disposes of any semblance of rationality of the classification based on criminal propensities. (86 S.Ct. 764, 15 L.Ed.2d 624.) (See People v. Gibson (1988) 204 C.A.3d 1425, 1437, 1440, 1442, 252 C.R. 56 [citing Baxstrom; statute permitting commitment of convicted defendant on completion of prison term on basis of more lenient standard than is used for other involuntary commitments violates equal protection]; *Heller v. California statutes permit freeing a child from his or her parent when the parent is incapable of supporting or controlling the child due to the parent's developmental or mental disability or mental illness. (Family C. 7826, 7827; see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §323 et seq.)

In re Eugene W. (1972) 29 C.A.3d 623, 105 C.R. 736, held a former version of these statutes constitutional. The statute (a) does not discriminate against the poor; the parent must also be incapable of control, and (b) does not discriminate against the mentally disabled by not covering the physically disabled; physically handicapped persons have demonstrated ability to support and control children, but soundness of mind is essential to performance of these functions. 8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 788

[§ 788] Insane Person's Relatives.

Former Welf.C. 6650 (now Welf.C. 7275 with slight changes) provided that the husband, wife, father, mother, or children of a mentally ill person in a state institution were liable for his or her care. In Department of Mental Hygiene v. Kirchner (1964) 60 C.2d 716, 36 C.R. 488, 388 P.2d 720, S was adjudged mentally ill and committed, and plaintiff sued her daughter under the statute. Held, the statute was invalid. (a) "[T]he purposes of confinement and treatment or care ... encompass the protection of society from the confined person, and his own protection and possible reclamation as a productive member of the body politic. Hence the cost of maintaining the state institution, including provision of adequate care for its inmates, cannot be arbitrarily charged to one class in the society." (60 C.2d 720.) (b) The statute imposed an absolute liability on the relatives without the right to recoupment from the assets of the patient; thus it selected a particular class for "a species of taxation," without rational basis. (60 C.2d 722.)

The court disapproved contrary expressions in such cases as Department of Mental Hygiene v. McGilver (1958) 50 C.2d 742, 755, 329 P.2d 689 (60 C.2d 723), and added a dictum concerning the modern welfare programs under which all citizens contribute through taxes: "From all of this it appears that former concepts which have been suggested to uphold the imposition of support liability upon a person selected by an administrative agent from classes of relatives designed by the Legislature may well be reexamined." (60 C.2d 722.) (See Department of Mental Hygiene v. Kirchner (1965) 62 C.2d 586, 588, 43 C.R. 329, 400 P.2d 321 [on remand from U.S. Supreme Court, stating that holding rests not only on Fourteenth Amendment equal protection but also on California Constitution's equivalent provisions, see supra, §705]; *Department of Mental Hygiene v. d. Developmentally Disabled Persons.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 789

[§ 789] Developmentally Disabled Persons.

In Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Center (1985) 473 U.S. 432, 105 S.Ct. 3249, 87 L.Ed.2d 313, the city of Cleburne, Texas, had a zoning ordinance that permitted various multiple dwellings in an apartment house district but required a special use permit for a hospital for the feeble-minded. Cleburne Living Center, seeking to operate a group home for the developmentally disabled, was denied a permit on the ground that the home would come within the hospital exclusion. The Court of Appeals, applying the quasi-suspect classification calling for heightened judicial scrutiny, concluded that the ordinance was unconstitutional both on its face and as applied. Held, reversed in part and affirmed in part.

(a) Nature of heightened scrutiny test. The general rule that legislation will be sustained if the classification is rationally related to a legitimate state interest gives way when a statute deals with a suspect classification such as race, alienage or national origin, gender, or illegitimacy. In these cases, the laws are subjected to strict scrutiny and will be sustained only if suitably tailored to serve a compelling state interest. (105 S.Ct. 3255, 87 L.Ed.2d 320.) But as pointed out in Massachusetts Bd. of Retirement v. Murgia (1976) 427 U.S. 307, 96 S.Ct. 2562, 49 L.Ed.2d 520, infra, §802, differential treatment based on age does not call for strict scrutiny because the aged have not experienced a history of purposeful unequal treatment. (105 S.Ct. 3255, 87 L.Ed.2d 321.) "The lesson of Murgia is that where individuals in the group affected by a law have distinguishing characteristics relevant to interests the state has the authority to implement, the courts have been very reluctant, as they should be in our federal system and with our respect for the separation of powers, to closely scrutinize legislative choices as to whether, how and to what extent those interests should be pursued. In such cases, the Equal Protection Clause requires only a rational means to serve a legitimate end." (105 S.Ct. 3255, 87 L.Ed.2d 321.)

(b) Developmental disability is not quasi-suspect classification. For a number of reasons, the strict scrutiny standard is inapplicable to this classification:

(1) The developmentally disabled range from those whose disability is not immediately evident to those requiring constant care; and how this large and diversified group is to be treated is a task for legislators guided by qualified professionals, and not by "the perhaps ill-informed opinions of the judiciary." (105 S.Ct. 3256, 87 L.Ed.2d 321.)

(2) The legislative response, national and state, to the plight of the developmentally disabled reflects the differences between the developmentally disabled and others, and the need of governmental bodies for flexibility and freedom from judicial oversight in shaping their remedial efforts. (105 S.Ct. 3256, 3257, 87 L.Ed.2d 322, 323.)

(3) If the developmentally disabled were deemed quasi-suspect, it would be difficult to find a principled way to distinguish other groups who have perhaps immutable difficulties setting themselves off from others who can claim some degree of prejudice from at least part of the public; e.g., the aging, the disabled, the mentally ill, and the infirm. (105 S.Ct. 3257, 87 L.Ed.2d 324.) The appropriate method of reaching instances of discrimination against the developmentally disabled is not to create a new quasi-suspect classification. Because developmental disability "is a characteristic that the government may legitimately take into account in a wide range of decisions, and because both state and federal governments have recently committed themselves to assisting" the developmentally disabled, "we will not presume that any given legislative action, even one that disadvantages" the developmentally disabled, "is rooted in considerations that the Constitution will not tolerate." (105 S.Ct. 3258, 87 L.Ed.2d 324.)

(4) The standard of rational relation to a legitimate governmental purpose "affords government the latitude necessary both to pursue policies designed to assist" the developmentally disabled "in realizing their full potential, and to freely and efficiently engage in activities that burden" the developmentally disabled "in what is essentially an incidental manner. The State may not rely on a classification whose relationship to an asserted goal is so attenuated as to render the distinction arbitrary or irrational." (105 S.Ct. 3258, 87 L.Ed.2d 324.)

(c) Ordinance is unconstitutional as applied in this case. The city does not require a special permit in the zone for apartment houses, multiple dwellings, boarding and lodging houses, fraternity or sorority houses, dormitories, apartment hotels, hospitals, sanitariums, nursing homes for convalescents or the aged, private clubs or fraternal orders, and other specified uses. The record does not reveal a rational basis for believing that a facility for the developmentally disabled would pose any special threat to the city's legitimate interests. (105 S.Ct. 3257, 3258, 87 L.Ed.2d 325, 326.) Thus, it appears that requiring a permit in this case would rest on an irrational prejudice against the developmentally disabled, "including those who would occupy the Featherston facility and who would live under the closely supervised and highly regulated conditions expressly provided for by state and federal law." (105 S.Ct. 3260, 87 L.Ed.2d 327.)

Two separate opinions were filed, one concurring and one concurring and dissenting in part. (105 S.Ct. 3260, 3262, 87 L.Ed.2d 327, 330.) (See Adoption of Kay C. (1991) 228 C.A.3d 741, 752, 756, 278 C.R. 907 [rejecting claims that former C.C. 227b (now Family C. 9100; see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §§145, 148), authorizing adoption decree to be set aside within 5 years where child manifests developmental disability or mental illness, violates equal protection and due process]; 99 *Harv. 13. Indigent Criminal Defendant.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 790

[§ 790] Indigent Criminal Defendant.

(1) In General. A state cannot constitutionally require a criminal defendant to pay court costs in order to plead not guilty and defend; i.e., there can be no discrimination on account of poverty. In Griffin v. Illinois (1956) 351 U.S. 12, 76 S.Ct. 585, 589, 100 L.Ed. 891, 898, Illinois law provided a free reporter's transcript for appeals only in death cases. Petitioners, convicted of robbery, were unable to obtain an adequate review because of inability to pay for a transcript. Held, conviction reversed; the statute denied equal protection. Although due process does not guarantee appellate review of a lower court decision, if the right of appeal is given, the statute must not discriminate on grounds of poverty. "There can be no equal justice where the kind of trial a man gets depends on the amount of money he has. Destitute defendants must be afforded as adequate appellate review as defendants who have money enough to buy transcripts." (76 S.Ct. 590, 100 L.Ed. 899.) (See 55 A.L.R.2d 1072 [right of indigent defendant in criminal case to state aid regarding new trial or appeal].)

In Burns v. Ohio (1959) 360 U.S. 252, 79 S.Ct. 1164, 3 L.Ed.2d 1209, petitioner, sentenced to life imprisonment for burglary, had one appellate review in forma pauperis, and later sought leave to file a discretionary appeal to the Ohio Supreme Court pursuant to a statute authorizing it. The clerk, following a court directive, refused to docket the appeal because of failure to pay the $ 20 filing fee. The state contended that Griffin was distinguishable because petitioner had already had one appeal and the additional review sought was a matter of discretion and not of right. Held, Griffin applied; regardless of the nature of review, it cannot be denied solely for reasons of indigency.

Rinaldi v. Yeager (1966) 384 U.S. 305, 86 S.Ct. 1497, 16 L.Ed.2d 577, involved a New Jersey statute enacted after Griffin. It provided that persons furnished transcripts who were convicted and imprisoned must reimburse the county out of their institutional earnings. Rinaldi, in state prison, earned 20 cents a day for a 5-day week, and this amount was withheld. He sued for an injunction, contending that the duty to reimburse would discourage appeals by indigents. This contention was not reached, but the statute was nevertheless held invalid as a denial of equal protection.

(a) The Equal Protection Clause requires more than nondiscriminatory application within the class it establishes; there must be some rationality in the nature of the class. (86 S.Ct. 1499, 16 L.Ed.2d 580.) There was no rational classification here. Reimbursement was required only from one class of unsuccessful criminal appellants--those confined in state institutions. Those sentenced to pay fines, or given probation, having equally benefited from free transcripts on appeal, were not required to reimburse. (86 S.Ct. 1500, 16 L.Ed.2d 580.)

(b) "This Court has never held that the States are required to establish avenues of appellate review, but it is now fundamental that, once established, these avenues must be kept free of unreasoned distinctions that can only impede open and equal access to the courts." (86 S.Ct. 1500, 16 L.Ed.2d 581.)

(c) However, the implication that reimbursement can never be required was dispelled by two observations: "We may assume that a State can validly provide for recoupment of the costs of appeals from those who later become financially able to pay." (86 S.Ct. 1501, 16 L.Ed.2d 581.) And "repayment could easily be made a condition of probation or parole." (86 S.Ct. 1500, 16 L.Ed.2d 581.)

(2) Fee for Writ of Habeas Corpus. The principle underlying Burns and Griffin was followed in Smith v. Bennett (1961) 365 U.S. 708, 81 S.Ct. 895, 6 L.Ed.2d 39. Iowa required a $ 4 filing fee for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner, an indigent, sought to file in forma pauperis and was refused permission. Held, this was a denial of equal protection, despite the state's contention that it may limit its writ because the petitioner may get one without fee in the federal courts. "Throughout the centuries the Great Writ has been the shield of personal freedom insuring liberty to persons illegally detained. Respecting the State's grant of a right to test their detention, the Fourteenth Amendment weighs the interests of rich and poor criminals in equal scale, and its hand extends as far to each. In failing to extend the privilege of the Great Writ to its indigent prisoners, Iowa denies them equal protection of the laws." (81 S.Ct. 898, 6 L.Ed.2d 43.)

(3) Right to Law Library or Alternative Sources. Bounds v. Smith (1977) 430 U.S. 817, 97 S.Ct. 1491, 52 L.Ed.2d 72, held that the fundamental constitutional right of access to the courts "requires prison authorities to assist inmates in the preparation and filing of meaningful legal papers by providing prisoners with adequate law libraries or adequate assistance from persons trained in the law." (97 S.Ct. 1498, 52 L.Ed.2d 83.)

However, in Lewis v. Casey (1996) 518 U.S. 343, 116 S.Ct. 2174, 135 L.Ed.2d 606, a class action brought by inmates of various Arizona prisons, the Court stressed that Bounds involved the right of access to the courts, not a right to a law library or to legal assistance, and disclaimed statements in Bounds suggesting that the state must enable a prisoner to discover grievances and litigate effectively once in court. (116 S.Ct. 2179, 2181, 135 L.Ed.2d 617, 619; see 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §47 et seq.)

14. Persons Convicted of Crimes.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 791

[§ 791] Persons Convicted of Crimes.

Separate treatment of persons convicted of crimes has been upheld in a number of situations:

(1) Habitual Criminal Statutes. Statutes permitting increased sentences for habitual criminals do not deny equal protection. (See People v. Richardson (1946) 74 C.A.2d 528, 542, 169 P.2d 44; 89 Harv. L. Rev. 356; 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §333.)

(2) Escaped Convicts. Classification of convicts escaping from prison on the basis of their original sentences, making the escape punishable by additional imprisonment for this period, has been upheld. (Sullivan v. Ashe (1937) 302 U.S. 51, 58 S.Ct. 59, 82 L.Ed. 43.)

(3) Drug Rehabilitation Programs. Exclusion from a drug rehabilitation program of persons convicted of aggravated crimes of violence (Welf.C. 3052) is proper. "It was not unreasonable for the Legislature, in an attempt to stress the nonpunitive nature of the program, to exclude, because of a rational fear of custodial problems, addicts with a history of a propensity for committing crimes of violence." (People v. Harris (1971) 17 C.A.3d 388, 393, 95 C.R. 80.) (See Marshall v. United States (1974) 414 U.S. 417, 94 S.Ct. 700, 38 L.Ed.2d 618 [provision of federal Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act, excluding from its discretionary commitment addicts with two or more felony convictions, is valid].)

(4) Exclusion From Jury Service. Excluding ex-felons from jury service does not deny equal protection. (Rubio v. Superior Court (1979) 24 C.3d 93, 101, 105, 154 C.R. 734, 593 P.2d 595.)

(5) Employment Discrimination. Govt.C. 1029, which prohibits employment of an ex-felon as a peace officer, is constitutional. (Hetherington v. State Personnel Bd. (1978) 82 C.A.3d 582, 590, 147 C.R. 300; see 26 Hastings L. J. 1403 [effect of employment discrimination against ex-prisoners]; 56 Stanf. L. Rev. 1597 [challenging ex-felon's employment discrimination]; 38 U.S.F. L. Rev. 193 [removing barriers to employment].)

(6) Disenfranchisement. The U.S. Supreme Court has upheld disenfranchisement of persons convicted of felonies, but this is no longer authorized by the California Constitution. (See supra, §§246, 247.)

(7) Registration of Sex Offenders. Sex offenders convicted of specified offenses must register with local authorities on release from prison, and information about them is subject to public disclosure. (See P.C. 290 et seq.; 3 Cal. Crim.

Law (3d), Punishment, §183 et seq.)

(8) Person Residing With Convicted Felon. In Lopez v. McMahon (1988) 205 C.A.3d 1510, 253 C.R. 321, the court upheld the constitutionality of Health & Saf.C. 1596.871, requiring denial of an application for a children's day care facility license if the applicant resides with a person convicted of a violent felony. Plaintiff's application was denied on the ground that her husband had been convicted of armed robbery. The court concluded that the statutory provision was rationally related to the legitimate purpose of protecting children from the risk of harm. (205 C.A.3d 1516.) Plaintiff's additional contention that the statute abridged her constitutional right of privacy by interfering with her right to live with her husband was rejected. The restriction is imposed only on an applicant for a day care license, and the adverse effect of the disqualification was incidental, unintended, and not an unconstitutional intrusion on the right of privacy. (205 C.A.3d 1520.)

(9) Clothing Restrictions. Prison regulations restricting the right of prisoners to wear and possess certain items of civilian clothing have been upheld. (See In re Alcala (1990) 222 C.A.3d 345, 271 C.R. 674, 3 Cal. Crim. Law (3d), Punishment, §66.)

[§ 792] Vexatious Litigant in Pro. Per.

The vexatious litigant statute (C.C.P. 391 et seq.; see 3 Cal. Proc. (4th), Actions, §339 et seq.) requires security for costs from one who has repeatedly brought unsuccessful actions in pro. per., on a showing that there is no reasonable probability that he or she will prevail in the particular action. In Taliaferro v. Hoogs (1965) 236 C.A.2d 521, 46 C.R. 147, the court upheld the classification of persons proceeding in pro. per. as distinguished from those represented by lawyers. "Attorneys are governed by prescribed rules of ethics and professional conduct, and, as officers of the court, are subject to disbarment, suspension, and other disciplinary sanctions not applicable to litigants in propria persona." b. Penalty on Unsuccessful Appellant.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 793

[§ 793] Penalty on Unsuccessful Appellant.

Bankers Life & Cas. Co. v. Crenshaw (1988) 486 U.S. 71, 108 S.Ct. 1645, 100 L.Ed.2d 62, upheld a Mississippi statute that imposed a 15% penalty on parties who appeal unsuccessfully from a money judgment. The Court distinguished Lindsey v. Normet (1972) 405 U.S. 56, 92 S.Ct. 862, 31 L.Ed.2d 36, supra, §647, which held that to require an appealing tenant to post a bond twice the amount of rent expected to accrue pending appeal violated the Equal Protection Clause.

(a) Unlike the statute in Lindsey, Mississippi's penalty does not single out a class of appellants in an arbitrary fashion; it applies both to plaintiffs and defendants, and to all money judgments as well as to many judgments whose money value may readily be determined. (108 S.Ct. 1653, 100 L.Ed.2d 75.)

(b) Because the penalty operates only after judgment has been affirmed without modification, there is less risk than in Lindsey of discouraging appellants who believe they have meritorious appeals but lack funds to post a bond. (108 S.Ct. 1653, 100 L.Ed.2d 76.)

(c) "In short, unlike the double-bond provision condemned in Lindsey, the means chosen ... are reasonably related to the achievement of the State's objectives of discouraging frivolous appeals, compensating appellees for the intangible costs of litigation, and conserving judicial resources." (108 S.Ct. 1654, 100 L.Ed.2d 76.)

[§ 794] Attorneys' Fees to Particular Litigants.

(1) Invalid Provisions. A statute that authorizes the award of attorneys' fees to a single class of litigants or in a single class of cases may violate the Equal Protection Clause. d. Tort Action by Guest.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 795

[§ 795] Tort Action by Guest.

The former Guest Law (Veh.C. 17158), denying liability of a host to a guest for ordinary negligence in operating a motor vehicle, was held unconstitutional in Brown v. Merlo (1973) 8 C.3d 855, 106 C.R. 388, 506 P.2d 212.

(a) Classifications of statute. The guest law, in force in about half of the states (8 C.3d 858, footnote 1), established three levels of classification: (1) automobile guests differently from paying passengers; (2) automobile guests differently from other social guests; and (3) subclasses of automobile guests: those injured in a vehicle, during a ride, on a public highway. (8 C.3d 863.)

(b) Constitutional issue. Silver v. Silver (1929) 280 U.S. 117, 50 S.Ct. 57, 74 L.Ed. 221, upheld the Connecticut Act. But the challenge there was based on the distinction made between automobile guests and guests in other conveyances, and the Silver court saw the statute as merely one of many new regulatory measures dealing with automobiles. Moreover, the case was decided before the development of almost universal liability insurance. Subsequent California cases assumed constitutionality of the law and never directly passed on the issue. (8 C.3d 863, footnote 4.)

(c) First justification: protection of hospitality. The Act has been mainly justified on the ground that it promotes hospitality by insulating generous drivers from lawsuits instituted by ungrateful guests. This is not a sufficient basis for the classification:

(1) Liability insurance has eliminated this notion; the insurer, not the generous host, is protected by the law. Hence, under the basic tenet of the common law (equally a guide to constitutional adjudication), the rule should cease because the reason for it has ceased; i.e., constitutionality predicated on the existence of a particular state of facts may be challenged when they no longer exist. (8 C.3d 869.)

(2) The purpose of fostering hospitality cannot rationally justify lowering protection for one class of guests (automobile, airplane, or motorboat) while late common law decisions relevant to constitutional adjudication, like Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 C.2d 108, 70 C.R. 97, 443 P.2d 561, 6 Summary (10th), Torts, §1086, on licensee-trespasser, and Malloy v. Fong (1951) 37 C.2d 356, 232 P.2d 241, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §43, and Silva v.

Providence Hosp. of Oakland (1939) 14 C.2d 762, 97 P.2d 798, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §43, on abolition of charitable immunity, have recognized negligence liability of hosts to all other guests. (8 C.3d 865, 870, 871.)

(3) Characterization of a guest's suit as an act of ingratitude is inconsistent with the state's overriding policy to insure compensation for all innocent victims of automobile accidents, which underlies the Financial Responsibility Law (see 2 Summary (10th), Insurance, §14). (8 C.3d 872, footnote 13.)

(d) Second justification: prevention of collusion. The other justification for the Act has been the elimination of the possibility of collusive suits in which the host fraudulently confesses negligence to permit a friend or relative to collect from the insurer. (8 C.3d 864, 873.) This type of rule--eliminating causes of action for an entire class because some members may bring collusive suits--has been rejected in the cases abolishing family immunity (Emery v. Emery (1955) 45 C.2d 421, 289 P.2d 218, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §29, Klein v. Klein (1962) 58 C.2d 692, 26 C.R. 102, 376 P.2d 70, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §27, and Gibson v. Gibson (1971) 3 C.3d 914, 92 C.R. 288, 479 P.2d 648, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §28). (8 C.3d 875.) The guest law classification is even less rational: (1) The paying-nonpaying distinction is "a far grosser indicant of the likelihood of collusion"; e.g., paying passengers are allowed to recover even though they are close friends or relatives sharing expenses in a car pool. (8 C.3d 875.) (2) The collusion rationale assumes that parties are willing to perjure themselves on the negligence issue; but they can escape the statutory bar by colluding on the issue of compensation for the ride. (8 C.3d 875.) "In short, 'compensation' is not a factor that assures dishonesty in its absence, or that guarantees honesty in its presence; in basing its classification scheme on this factor the guest statute fails to accord equal treatment to those who are similarly situated with respect to its goal of the prevention of collusion." (8 C.3d 878.)

(e) Fortuitous statutory exceptions. The final element of irrationality in the statute appears from its loopholes, totally unrelated to either the hospitality or anticollusion themes: (1) the "during the ride" limitation, allowing recovery when the ride is momentarily interrupted; (2) the "in the vehicle" condition, allowing recovery to a guest with one foot on the ground; and (3) the "on the highway" condition, allowing recovery for an accident on a private road. (8 C.3d 879.)

(f) Conclusion. The classifications that "the guest statute creates between those denied and those permitted recovery for negligently inflicted injuries do not bear a substantial and rational relation to the statute's purposes of protecting the hospitality of the host-driver and of preventing collusive lawsuits. We therefore hold that, as applied to a negligently injured guest, the guest statute violates the equal protection guarantees of the California and United States Constitutions." (8 C.3d 882.)

[§ 796] Defamation Action Against Newspaper or Broadcaster.

In Werner v. Southern Calif. Associated Newspapers (1950) 35 C.2d 121, 216 P.2d 825, C.C. 48a, permitting newspapers and radio broadcasters, under certain circumstances, to avoid general damages for libel by publishing a retraction, was upheld as a valid classification.

(a) The Legislature could reasonably conclude that defamation actions against newspapers and radio stations constituted the most conspicuous example of the danger of excessive recoveries. (35 C.2d 132.)

(b) It could consider the fact that a retraction widely circulated by a newspaper or radio station would have greater effectiveness than a retraction by an individual, and could thus stop short of substituting a retraction for general damages in all cases. (35 C.2d 133, 134.)

(c) The classification is further justifiable on the theory that it encourages the dissemination of news by protecting those who inadvertently publish defamatory statements; the Legislature may, either by imposing strict liability or granting broad immunity, protect one of two important conflicting interests. (35 C.2d 134, 136.) (See 13 A.L.R.2d 277 [statutes limiting damages recoverable for defamation].)

16. Veterans.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 797

[§ 797] Veterans.

Unsuccessful challenges have been made to legislative classifications giving preference, such as priority in employment, to veterans. (See Cook v. Mason (1929) 103 C.A. 6, 11, 283 P. 891 [charter provision creating priority on civil service lists for positions as firemen].)

Personnel Administrator of Massachusetts v. Feeney (1979) 442 U.S. 256, 99 S.Ct. 2282, 60 L.Ed.2d 870, involved the Massachusetts "absolute lifetime" preference law for veterans who qualify for state civil service positions. They must be considered for appointment ahead of qualifying nonveterans. Plaintiff woman, not a veteran, passed a number of civil service examinations with high scores, but was outranked by male veterans. She brought this civil rights action (under 42 U.S.C., §1983, infra, §816 et seq.) challenging the statute as an unconstitutional discrimination against women. Held, the statute was not subject to equal protection attack.

(a) Some classifications, such as race and gender, are presumptively invalid. But a neutral law, though it may have a disproportionately adverse effect on a racial minority, will be held unconstitutional only if that impact can be traced to a discriminatory purpose. (99 S.Ct. 2292, 2293, 60 L.Ed.2d 883.)

(b) The statute is neutral as to gender. There are some women veterans and significant numbers of male nonveterans; the distinction made is simply between veterans and nonveterans, not between men and women. (99 S.Ct. 2294, 60 L.Ed.2d 885.)

(c) There was no gender-based discriminatory purpose. The law is not neutral--it overtly prefers veterans, but this legislative choice has been found legitimate. The Legislature was aware of its adverse impact on women, but discriminatory purpose implies more than awareness of consequences; it implies that the Legislature took a particular course of action at least in part "because of," not merely "in spite of," its adverse effects on a group. Nothing in the record shows that the preference for veterans was originally devised or subsequently reenacted because it would accomplish the collateral goal of keeping women in a stereotypic and predefined place in the civil service. (99 S.Ct. 2295, 2296, 60 L.Ed.2d 887, 888.)

Two justices dissented. (See 7 Hastings Const. L. Q. 429.)

17. Sexual Orientation.

[§ 798] Sexual Orientation.

(1) In General. In Romer v. Evans (1996) 517 U.S. 620, 116 S.Ct. 1620, 134 L.Ed.2d 855, Colorado voters adopted a referendum measure, known as Amendment 2, repealing local ordinances to the extent that they prohibit discrimination on the basis of "homosexual, lesbian or bisexual orientation, conduct, practices or relationships," and prohibiting the state, its agencies, or subdivisions from adopting a "statute, regulation, ordinance or policy" protecting homosexual orientation, conduct, practices, or relationships. In an action brought by various individuals and governmental entities, the trial court enjoined enforcement of Amendment 2, and the Colorado Supreme Court affirmed the ruling. Held, affirmed.

(1) As authoritatively construed by the Colorado Supreme Court, the immediate objective of Amendment 2 is to repeal existing statutes, regulations, ordinances, and policies that bar discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, and its ultimate effect is to prohibit the adoption of those measures or policies in the future. (116 S.Ct. 1624, 134 L.Ed.2d 862.) "Homosexuals, by state decree, are put in a solitary class with respect to transactions and relations in both the private and governmental spheres. The amendment withdraws from homosexuals, but no others, specific legal protection from the injuries caused by discrimination, and it forbids reinstatement of these laws and policies." (116 S.Ct. 1625, 134 L.Ed.2d 863.)

(2) The view that the measure does no more than deprive homosexuals of special rights cannot be accepted. "To the contrary, the Amendment imposes a special disability upon those persons alone. Homosexuals are forbidden the safeguards that others enjoy or may seek without constraint. ... This is so no matter how local or discrete the harm, no matter how public and widespread the injury. We find nothing special in the protections Amendment 2 withholds. These are protections taken for granted by most people either because they already have them or do not need them; these are protections against exclusion from an almost limitless number of transactions and endeavors that constitute ordinary civic life in a free society." (116 S.Ct. 1626, 134 L.Ed.2d 865.)

(b) Amendment 2 Violates Equal Protection.

(1) Amendment 2 fails even the conventional rational relationship test. "First, the amendment has the peculiar property of imposing a broad and undifferentiated disability on a single named group, an exceptional and ... invalid form of legislation. Second, its sheer breadth is so discontinuous with the reasons offered for it that the amendment seems inexplicable by anything but animus toward the class that it affects." (116 S.Ct. 1627, 134 L.Ed.2d 865.)

(2) Even when applying the most deferential of standards, there must be some relation between the classification adopted and the objective sought. Amendment 2 "is at once too narrow and too broad. It identifies persons by a single trait and then denies them protection across the board. The resulting disqualification of a class of persons from the right to seek specific protection from the law is unprecedented in our jurisprudence. ... A law declaring that in general it shall be more difficult for one group of citizens than for all others to seek aid from the government is itself a denial of equal protection of the laws in the most literal sense." (116 S.Ct. 1627, 134 L.Ed.2d 866.)

(3) "[L]aws of the kind now before us raise the inevitable inference that the disadvantage imposed is born of animosity toward the class of persons affected." Amendment 2 inflicts on gays and lesbians "immediate, continuing, and real injuries that outrun and belie any legitimate justifications that may be claimed for it." (116 S.Ct. 1628, 134 L.Ed.2d 867.)

(4) The state proffers the freedom of association of other citizens, particularly landlords and employers, and the need to conserve resources to fight discrimination against other groups, as justifications for the amendment. "The breadth of the Amendment is so far removed from these particular justifications that we find it impossible to credit them." (116 S.Ct. 1629, 134 L.Ed.2d 868.)

(5) "Amendment 2 classifies homosexuals not to further a proper legislative end but to make them unequal to everyone else. This Colorado cannot do. A State cannot so deem a class of persons a stranger to its laws." (116 S.Ct. 1629, 134 L.Ed.2d 868.)

A strong dissent joined by three justices argued that Amendment 2 was an attempt "to preserve traditional sexual mores against the efforts of a politically powerful minority to revise those mores," that "the amendment prohibits special treatment of homosexuals, and nothing more," that both the objective and the means chosen were "unimpeachable under any constitutional doctrine hitherto pronounced," and that the Court's holding contradicted Bowers v. Hardwick (1986) 478 U.S. 186, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 92 L.Ed.2d 140, which had upheld a criminal sodomy law as applied to consenting adults. (116 S.Ct. 1629, 134 L.Ed.2d 868.) (See Gay Law Students Assn. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1979) 24 C.3d 458, 156 C.R. 14, 595 P.2d 592, supra, §708 [discrimination against homosexuals by public utility employer]; Lawrence v. Guard (2001) 90 C.A.4th 297, 319, 109 C.R.2d 154 [homosexual discharged from U.S. National Guard because of sexual orientation still has right under California law to serve in state Guard in active duty positions not requiring federal recognition]; 26 *Loyola L.A. [§ 799] Valid Classifications.

Unsuccessful challenges have been made to the following legislative classifications:

(1) Exclusion From Race Tracks. Exclusion of known bookmakers, touts, and persons convicted of illegal wagering from race tracks. (Flores v. Los Angeles Turf Club (1961) 55 C.2d 736, 744, 13 C.R. 201, 361 P.2d 921; see 64 A.L.R.5th 769 [Propriety of Exclusion of Persons From Horseracing Tracks for Reasons Other Than Color or Race].)

(2) Intoxicated Persons. Exclusion of intoxicated persons from nude model studios. (Cristmat v. Los Angeles (1971) 15 C.A.3d 590, 598, 93 C.R. 325.)

(3) Reporters. Exclusion of reporters for weekly newspapers (by denial of press passes) from immediate scenes of crimes and fires, while admitting reporters of daily papers; regular reporting of this kind of news, as distinguished from weekly coverage, is a reasonable basis for classification of persons seeking the privilege of crossing police lines. (Los Angeles Free Press v. Los Angeles (1970) 9 C.A.3d 448, 456, 88 C.R. 605.)

(4) Limitations on Amount of Methadone. Limiting use of methadone in treatment of narcotic addiction to maximum amounts, but allowing unrestricted use in treatment of other diseases; narcotic addiction has effects that make special regulation proper. (Blinder v. Division of Narcotic Enforcement (1972) 25 C.A.3d 174, 185, 101 C.R. 635.)

(5) Exempting Activities From Workers' Compensation Act. Exempting certain specialized activities from Workers' Compensation Act provisions governing employees as defined in the Act. (Mathews v. Work. Comp. App. Bd. (1972) 6 C.3d 719, 739, 100 C.R. 301, 493 P.2d 1165, 2 Summary (10th), Workers' Compensation, §250.)

(6) Terminally Ill People. Distinguishing between terminally ill people who are not on life support and those who are on life support systems, for purposes of ban on assisted suicide. (See Vacco v. Quill (1997) 521 U.S. 793, 117 S.Ct. 2293, 138 L.Ed.2d 834, supra, §572.)

(7) Prohibition on Damages of Uninsured Motorists and Drunk Drivers. Prohibiting uninsured motorists and drunk drivers from collecting noneconomic damages in actions arising out of motor vehicle accidents. (See *Yoshioka v. (8) Bilingual Education. Replacing bilingual education with English immersion education. (See *Valeria G. v. 18. Other Classes of Persons.

b. Invalid Classifications.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 800

[§ 800] Invalid Classifications.

Most of the discriminatory classifications of persons have already been considered. (See supra, §244 [military personnel]; §721 [aliens]; §734 [nonresidents]; §743 et seq. [Blacks]; §762 et seq. [women]; §772 et seq. [men]; §780 et seq. [illegitimate children]; §798 [sexual orientation].) Other discriminatory acts against particular persons have been questioned by commentators and courts. Thus, for example:

(1) Special Regulations Governing American Indians. (See 81 Harv. L. Rev. 1818; 82 Harv. L. Rev. 1343; 82 Harv. L. Rev. 697 [criticizing statute prescribing lighter penalties for rape cases involving Indians only]; 22 Pepperdine L. Rev. 1236 [rape cases involving Indians]; 38 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 759; 39 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 169.)

(2) Undesirable Visitors. In Parr v. Municipal Court (1971) 3 C.3d 861, 92 C.R. 153, 479 P.2d 353, the city of Carmel-by-the-Sea adopted an ordinance making it unlawful for persons to climb trees, walk, stand, or sit on monuments or planted areas, sit on sidewalks or steps, or lie or sit on lawns, etc. The Urgency Clause stated that it was necessary because of the extraordinary influx of "undesirable and unsanitary visitors" ("hippies") who jeopardized the use and enjoyment of public property. Held, the ordinance was invalid; though neutral on its face, its declared purpose and inevitable effect would be to single out for discriminatory treatment "a social group of unsanitary transients" whose presence was deemed undesirable. (3 C.3d 865.) The court observed that "there is an added dimension to equal protection which requires that statutory classifications be related to permissible purposes" (3 C.3d 863), and that "[l]aws are discriminatory if they are expressions of hostility to groups of individuals." (3 C.3d 864.)

(3) Out-of-State Medical Training. The California medical practice statute barred graduates of out-of-state colleges of osteopathy (former B. & P.C. 2310). In D'Amico v. Board of Med. Examiners (1974) 11 C.3d 1, 112 C.R. 786, 520 P.2d 10, the court held that there was no rational relationship between the protection of public health and the exclusionary provision. The record showed that (a) osteopathy, like allopathy, is a complete school of medicine and surgery whose practitioners successfully engage in the full range of activities of medical science; and (b) there are examining boards with technical capacity to screen osteopathic applicants. (11 C.3d 23.)

(4) Appointment of Attorney Without Compensation. (See Cunningham v. Superior Court (1986) 177 C.A.3d 336, 351, 222 C.R. 854, 1 Cal. Proc. (4th), Attorneys, §79 [forced pro bono representation was denial of equal protection].)

XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS

B. Illustrations of Valid and Invalid Classifications.

19. Public Employment.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 801

[§ 801] Public Employment.

(1) In General. Loyalty and security tests for public employees have generally been upheld. (See supra, §479 et seq.) And local governmental agencies and those in charge of the administration of governmental civil service may make reasonable regulations for the purpose of securing qualified persons. (See Acton v. Henderson (1957) 150 C.A.2d 1, 20, 309 P.2d 481.) But arbitrary rules of convenience, which discriminate against qualified applicants, constitute a denial of equal protection. (Terry v. Civil Service Com. (1952) 108 C.A.2d 861, 868, 240 P.2d 691 [rule limiting accreditation to certain educational institutions and excluding graduates of others equally qualified].) (On preference for veterans, see supra, §797.)

A questionable result, inconsistent with the modern approach, was reached in Kotch v. Board of River Port Pilot Commrs. for Port of New Orleans (1947) 330 U.S. 552, 67 S.Ct. 910, 91 L.Ed. 1093. A Louisiana statute provided that seagoing vessels moving between New Orleans and foreign ports had to be navigated to the port of New Orleans by pilots who were state officers. As a prerequisite to appointment, an applicant was required to serve a 6-month apprenticeship under an incumbent pilot. Appellants, otherwise qualified, could not become apprentices because incumbent pilots almost invariably selected their relatives and friends. Held, the statute as administered did not deny equal protection.

The Court reasoned that the history of pilotage reveals that it is a unique and highly personalized calling; young men in certain communities have the ambition to follow in the traditions of their fathers, relatives, and neighbors; it has long been recognized in the state that competition for appointment adversely affected the public interest in efficient work, and the practice of confining the opportunity to families and friends could be justified as a means of obtaining friendly supervision and training of new pilots. The opinion stressed the power of the state to select its own agents and officers, pointed out that there is no decision requiring a state executive to select public servants by competitive tests or other particular methods, and found no general prohibition or policy against the practice of nepotism in appointing public servants. (67 S.Ct. 913, 91 L.Ed. 1097.) But the question whether this method of selection could be validly applied to other businesses or professions regulated by the state was left open. (67 S.Ct. 916, 91 L.Ed. 1101.)

Four justices dissented, attacking the classification as turning finally "on consanguinity," and contending that whether the occupation is regarded as that of a public officer or a highly regulated private calling, the Legislature could not establish this criterion. (67 S.Ct. 916, 91 L.Ed. 1101.) (See Brown v. Merlo (1973) 8 C.3d 855, 865, footnote 7, 106

C.R. 388, 506 P.2d 212, supra, §795 [referring to the "excessively artificial analysis" in applying traditional test, and pointing out that later U.S. Supreme Court decisions do not support reasoning of Kotch.]

(2) Academic Employees. Separate classification of academic public employees from other state employees, for employment and compensation, is valid. (California State Employees' Assn. v. Flournoy (1973) 32 C.A.3d 219, 238, 108 C.R. 251.)

(3) Public Safety Officers vs. Other Public Employees. In Long Beach City Employees Assn. v. Long Beach (1986) 41 C.3d 937, 227 C.R. 90, 719 P.2d 660, legislation requiring a polygraph examination as a condition of employment was applicable only to public employees who were not "public safety officers" (see supra, §591, on the invasion of privacy challenge). Held, the statutory classification was a denial of equal protection. "We find no compelling state interest that justifies the unequal treatment of 'public safety officers,' as currently defined, and all other public employees in a manner that intrudes on the latter group's constitutional right of privacy. Nor do we find a compelling state interest that justifies the unequal treatment of private employees and the broad class of public employees who remain subject to involuntary polygraph testing. Moreover, the distinctions currently drawn are not necessary to further any compelling governmental interest in the provision of critical public health and safety services. Neither classification serves a compelling governmental interest and therefore both deny unprotected employees equal protection of the law." (41 C.3d 956.) (See Burrell v. Los Angeles (1989) 209 C.A.3d 568, 585, 586, 257 C.R. 427, supra, §666 [distinction between police and firefighters and other civil service employees in procedures for review of discipline was valid].)

(4) Property Ownership Requirement for Appointment to Public Board. Quinn v. Millsap (1989) 491 U.S. 95, 109 S.Ct. 2324, 105 L.Ed.2d 74, involved a property qualification for members of a board of freeholders organized to consider reorganization of the governmental structures of the City of St. Louis and St. Louis County. Held, the land ownership requirement violated the Equal Protection Clause.

(a) The Missouri Supreme Court, relying on cases upholding land ownership requirements for water district elections (see supra, §305), concluded that the Equal Protection Clause had no relevance because the board does not exercise general governmental powers. However, those cases did apply equal protection analysis to uphold the voting qualifications. (109 S.Ct. 2330, 105 L.Ed.2d 87.)

(b) Turner v. Fouche (1970) 396 U.S. 346, 90 S.Ct. 532, 24 L.Ed.2d 567, and Chappelle v. Greater Baton Rouge Airport Dist. (1977) 431 U.S. 159, 97 S.Ct. 2162, 52 L.Ed.2d 223, both struck down property ownership requirements for membership on local government bodies. (109 S.Ct. 2330, 105 L.Ed.2d 87.) Here, membership on the board of freeholders is a form of public service, and appellants have the right to be considered for appointment without invidiously discriminatory qualifications. (109 S.Ct. 2331, 105 L.Ed.2d 88.) The board, although it does not enact laws, does have a broad mandate to recommend governmental reorganization, and this will affect all citizens regardless of land ownership. (109 S.Ct. 2332, 2333, 105 L.Ed.2d 89, 90.)

20. Mandatory Retirement.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 802

[§ 802] Mandatory Retirement.

In Townsend v. Los Angeles (1975) 49 C.A.3d 263, 122 C.R. 500, the court sustained the constitutionality of former Govt.C. 31671.01, authorizing counties to provide for mandatory retirement of employees at age 65 if an increased and accelerated pension program is adopted. The statute was challenged by a deputy public defender claiming a vested right in the pursuit of his calling. Held, the fundamental right to pursue a lawful occupation did not embrace the right to continue in a particular employment; and a mandatory retirement age for public employees is neither arbitrary nor discriminatory. (49 C.A.3d 268, 270.) (See American Federation of Teachers College Guild v. Board of Trustees (1976) 63 C.A.3d 800, 134 C.R. 111 [following Townsend]; Miller v. California (1977) 18 C.3d 808, 813, 135 C.R. 386, 557 P.2d 970; 81 A.L.R.3d 811 [mandatory retirement of public officer or employee based on age].)

Massachusetts Bd. of Retirement v. Murgia (1976) 427 U.S. 307, 96 S.Ct. 2562, 49 L.Ed.2d 520, upheld a Massachusetts statute providing that uniformed state police officers must be retired at age 50. (a) The strict scrutiny test (see supra, §704) was not proper, because the right of governmental employment is not fundamental and the class was not suspect. (96 S.Ct. 2566, 49 L.Ed.2d 525.) (b) Applying the rational basis test: "Through mandatory retirement at age 50, the legislature seeks to protect the public by assuring physical preparedness of its uniformed police. Since physical ability generally declines with age, mandatory retirement at 50 serves to remove from police service those whose fitness for uniformed work presumptively has diminished with age. This clearly is rationally related to the State's objective." (96 S.Ct. 2567, 49 L.Ed.2d 525.) (See Vance v. Bradley (1979) 440 U.S. 93, 99 S.Ct. 939, 59 L.Ed.2d 171 [upholding mandatory retirement at age 60 of federal employees under Foreign Service Act]; Kubik v. Scripps College (1981) 118 C.A.3d 544, 552, 173 C.R. 539 [following Townsend and Murgia; upholding former Govt.C. 12942(a), similar to provisions of Federal Age Discrimination Act, infra, §873, exempting employees of institutions of higher education from prohibition against mandatory retirement]; 90 Harv. L. Rev. 384 [Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967]; 48 Hastings L. J. 511 [age and pension discrimination through downsizing]; 4 Pepperdine L. Rev. 369 [Murgia].) (On statutory prohibition against mandatory retirement, see 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §343.)

The provision of the California Judges' Retirement Law, using age as a classification by providing reduced retirement benefits to judges retiring after age 70 (see 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Courts, §18), is constitutional under the rational basis test. (Rittenband v. Cory (1984) 159 C.A.3d 410, 417, 421, 423, 424, 205 C.R. 576.) (On age discrimination violating federal and state civil rights laws, see infra, §§873 et seq., 932 et seq.)

Statutes that have the effect of denying rights to indigents, or otherwise discriminating against persons of limited financial ability, are suspect, either on due process or equal protection grounds. (On due process, see Boddie v. Connecticut (1971) 401 U.S. 371, 91 S.Ct. 780, 28 L.Ed.2d 113, supra, §648 [unconstitutional denial of access to court for dissolution of marriage where party is unable to pay filing fees or costs of service]; 20 Stanf. L. Rev. 766 [effect of bond and fee requirements on access of poor to courts].)

It is unnecessary to show purposeful or intentional discrimination; classifications that had a heavier impact on the poor than the well-to-do have been held unconstitutional despite the absence of discriminatory motivation. (See Serrano v. Priest (1971) 5 C.3d 584, 602, 96 C.R. 601, 487 P.2d 1241, infra, §805; 82 *Harv. L. The following are illustrative:

(1) Indigent defendants in criminal cases. They are entitled to appointed counsel at trial, to free transcripts on appeal, to appellate counsel, and to exemption from filing fees. (See supra, §§220, 790.)

(2) Imprisonment of a convicted indigent defendant because of his or her inability to pay a fine. (In re Antazo (1970) 3 C.3d 100, 115, 89 C.R. 255, 473 P.2d 999; see Williams v. Short (1971) 401 U.S. 395, 91 S.Ct. 668, 28 L.Ed.2d 130 [following Williams].)

(3) A poll tax on the right to vote. (See supra, §243.)

(4) An unreasonably large filing fee for candidates for public office. (See supra, §261.)

Taxing systems that indirectly discriminate against the poor in the quality of education have been the subject of conflicting decisions of the California Supreme Court and the U.S. Supreme Court. (See infra, §§805, 806.)

The Public Utilities Commission approved the rule. Held, there was no denial of equal protection; the Commission could determine that it was preferable to reduce bad debt losses by credit rules rather than by increased rates. (4 C.3d 295.) (See 53 A.L.R.3d 1027 [claim of racial discrimination in security deposits and termination of service for delinquency].)

(2) Bankruptcy Fees. In United States v. Kras (1973) 409 U.S. 434, 93 S.Ct. 631, 34 L.Ed.2d 626, an indigent, invoking Boddie v. Connecticut (1971) 401 U.S. 371, 91 S.Ct. 780, 28 L.Ed.2d 113, supra, §648, sought a discharge in bankruptcy without payment of $ 50 in fees. Held, the fee requirement was valid.

(a) Boddie dealt with fundamental rights involved in the marital relationship; bankruptcy is not a constitutional right. (93 S.Ct. 638, 34 L.Ed.2d 635.)

(b) Bankruptcy legislation is in the area of economics and social welfare, and the applicable standard is not the strict one for suspect classifications but rather that of "rational justification." (93 S.Ct. 638, 34 L.Ed.2d 636.)

(c) The rational basis for the fee requirement is clear; it makes the system self-sustaining. The bankrupt suffers no undue hardship. He or she may seek immediate relief without prepayment of the fee, and may pay it in installments over a period of months. (93 S.Ct. 640, 34 L.Ed.2d 637.) (Four dissenting justices thought Boddie controlling and two thought there was invidious discrimination.) (See 87 Harv. L. Rev. 57.)

(3) Court Fees for Judicial Review of Administrative Denial of Welfare Aid. After a recipient of welfare aid has had an administrative hearing on termination, there is no denial of due process or equal protection in requiring payment of the usual filing fees for court proceedings attacking the administrative decision. Agnos* (1990) 222 C.A.3d 996, 1001, 272 C.R. 216, the court held that an ordinance prohibiting the use of motor homes for human habitation at specified places and times did not discriminate between poor and nonpoor and hence, did not infringe on equal protection guarantees. 8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 805

[§ 805] In General.

(1) California Decision. In Serrano v. Priest (1971) 5 C.3d 584, 96 C.R. 601, 487 P.2d 1241, plaintiffs, school children and parents in Los Angeles County, brought a class action against defendant state school officials and others, challenging the financing of the public school system by local property taxes as a denial of equal protection. Held, the complaint stated a cause of action; the system is unconstitutional.

(a) The classification is improperly based on wealth. Nearly all of the funds for schools come from local district taxes, and the revenue, dependent on the tax base, differs widely in poor and wealthy districts. Thus, as a practical matter, the public school system classification is on the basis of district wealth (5 C.3d 591, 598), which is as bad as the classification of individuals by wealth. (5 C.3d 601.) This is not a mere de facto discrimination; governmental action is involved in drawing school district lines and in establishing the school funding system. (5 C.3d 603.)

(b) Education is a fundamental interest, "the lifeline of both the individual and society." (5 C.3d 605.) Thus, it is entitled to the same protection against improper wealth classifications as the right to vote. (5 C.3d 607.)

(c) The traditional financing system is not necessary to accomplish a compelling state interest: (1) Decisionmaking can still be left in local districts no matter how the state decides to finance the system. (5 C.3d 610.) (2) The asserted policy interest of allowing a local district to choose how much it wishes to spend on education of its children is illusory. So long as assessed valuation is a major determinant, a poor district cannot freely choose to tax itself into an excellence that its tax rolls cannot provide. (5 C.3d 611.)

(d) The California public school financing system, because "it deals intimately with education, obviously touches upon a fundamental interest." It "conditions the full entitlement to such interest on wealth, classifies its recipients on the basis of their collective affluence and makes the quality of a child's education depend upon the resources of his school district and ultimately upon the pocketbook of his parents." It "is not necessary to the attainment of any compelling state interest. Since it does not withstand the requisite 'strict scrutiny,' it denies to the plaintiffs and others similarly situated the equal protection of the laws. If the allegations of the complaint are sustained, the financial system must fall and the statutes comprising it must be found unconstitutional." (5 C.3d 614.) (See 85 Harv. L. Rev. 1049; 60 Cal. L. Rev. 720; 8

(2) U.S. Supreme Court Decision. The U.S. Supreme Court came to the opposite conclusion in San Antonio Independent School Dist. v. Rodriguez (1973) 411 U.S. 1, 93 S.Ct. 1278, 36 L.Ed.2d 16. Texas public schools are financed by a combination of state and local funding, with almost 50% from the state to provide an educational floor. But local district supplementation by ad valorem taxes results in disparities because of differences in the value of assessable property. Held, the system did not deny equal protection.

(a) No suspect classification. (1) There is no clearly defined class of "poor." The class cannot be identified in traditional terms, whether it is defined as those who fall below a specified income level, as those relatively poorer than others, or as those residing in poorer districts. (93 S.Ct. 1289, 1292, 36 L.Ed.2d 34, 38.) (2) No one is absolutely barred from an education, as distinguished from prior situations in which indigents were totally deprived of a benefit. (93 S.Ct. 1290, 1291, 36 L.Ed.2d 37.) (3) Viewed as district discrimination, "the class is not saddled with such disabilities, or subjected to such a history of purposeful unequal treatment, or relegated to such a position of political powerlessness as to command extraordinary protection from the majoritarian political process." (93 S.Ct. 1294, 36 L.Ed.2d 40.)

(b) Strict test is inapplicable. There is no right to education explicitly or implicitly guaranteed by the federal Constitution; the fact that it is important to the exercise of the constitutional rights of speech and the franchise does not make it a fundamental right. Hence, the strict scrutiny test of equal protection should not be employed. (93 S.Ct. 1298, 1299, 36 L.Ed.2d 44, 47.)

(c) Traditional rationality test is met. State and local taxation are areas in which the court defers to the states, and a court has no expertise on the questions of fiscal and educational policy involved. The Texas system is designed to provide a basic minimum program with the maximum degree of local participation and control; and Texas could reasonably conclude that greater equality in financing through the state would defeat local control. Hence, the means of funding chosen is not invidiously discriminatory. (93 S.Ct. 1308, 36 L.Ed.2d 55.)

(d) Judicial and legislative functions. The problems are complex, the effect of a massive change in the financing and control of public education is unpredictable, and there is no clear consensus on the desirability of the innovation. These practical considerations "serve to highlight the wisdom of the traditional limitations" on the Supreme Court's function. Fundamental reforms in state taxation and education "are matters reserved for the legislative processes of the various States." (93 S.Ct. 1309, 36 L.Ed.2d 56.)

Three dissenting opinions argue that the right is fundamental, that the Texas system is irrational, and that the majority's test of equal protection is unsound. (See 87 Harv. L. Rev. 105; 20 Santa Clara L. Rev. 75; 9 Southwestern U. L. Rev. 217; 8 U.S.F. L. Rev. 90 [alternatives open to state courts in light of Rodriguez].)

[§ 806] California Law.

After the reversal of Serrano v. Priest (1971) 5 C.3d 584, 96 C.R. 601, 487 P.2d 1241, supra, §805 (Serrano I), the case was tried in Serrano v. Priest (1976) 18 C.3d 728, 135 C.R. 345, 557 P.2d 929 (Serrano II). The trial court made voluminous findings of fact and conclusions of law (18 C.3d 744 et seq.), and rendered judgment for plaintiffs on the merits (18 C.3d 748). Held, affirmed.

(a) Legislative changes during pendency of trial. The Legislature, in response to Serrano I, made a number of changes in the financing system. By stipulation, these were considered in reaching the decision at the trial and on appeal. (18 C.3d 736.) The changes, however, did not alter the basic concept (the "foundation approach"). (18 C.3d 741 et seq.)

(b) Decision is based on California Constitution. San Antonio Independent School Dist. v. Rodriguez (1973) 411 U.S. 1, 93 S.Ct. 1278, 36 L.Ed.2d 16, supra, §695, eliminated the federal Equal Protection Clause as the basis for the decision, and the trial court rested its judgment on the equal protection provisions of the California Constitution (Cal. Const., Art. IV, §16, and Art. I, §7; see supra, §705 et seq.). (18 C.3d 748.) This was proper, for Serrano I also cited these provisions. (18 C.3d 762.) "[O]ur state equal protection provisions, while 'substantially the equivalent of' the guarantees contained in the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, are possessed of an independent vitality which, in a given case, may demand an analysis different from that which would obtain if only the federal standard were applicable." (18 C.3d 764.) "The constraints of federalism, so necessary to the proper functioning of our unique system of national government, are not applicable to this court in its determination of whether our own state's public school financing system runs afoul of state constitutional provisions." (18 C.3d 766.)

(c) Strict scrutiny is necessary. "For these reasons then, we now adhere to our determinations, made in Serrano I, that for the reasons there stated and for purposes of assessing our state public school financing system in light of our state constitutional provisions guaranteeing equal protection of the laws (1) discrimination in educational opportunity on the basis of district wealth involves a suspect classification, and (2) education is a fundamental interest. Because the school financing system here in question has been shown by substantial and convincing evidence produced at trial to involve a suspect classification (insofar as this system, like the former one, draws distinctions on the basis of district wealth), and because that classification affects the fundamental interest of the students of this state in education, we have no difficulty in concluding today, as we concluded in Serrano I, that the school financing system before us must be examined under our state constitutional provisions with that strict and searching scrutiny appropriate to such a case." (18 C.3d 765.) Under this approach, the state failed to bear the burden of establishing that the classification is necessary to achieve a compelling state interest. The interest advanced--local control of fiscal and educational matters--was properly found by the trial court "to be chimerical from the standpoint of those districts which are less favored in terms of taxable wealth per pupil." (18 C.3d 768.)

(d) Other California constitutional provisions are not controlling. Defendants contended that Cal. Const., Art. XIII, §21, and its predecessor, authorizing county levies for school district taxes, operated "to insulate distinctions based on district wealth disparities from state equal protection requirements." (18 C.3d 770.) This is unsound. "Nothing in the constitutional provision establishing that power, however, indicates that its exercise is to be freed from the general constitutional limitations applicable to all legislation. Accordingly the Legislature, in its exercise of the subject power in conjunction with other powers possessed by it, was obliged to act in a manner consistent with such limitations. This it has not done. Instead it has undertaken to create a school financing system which, by making the quality of educational opportunity available to a student dependent upon the wealth of the district in which he lives, is manifestly inconsistent with fundamental constitutional provisions guaranteeing the equal protection of the laws to all citizens of this state. That system, we hold today, can no longer endure." (18 C.3d 774.)

Three justices dissented in two opinions. (18 C.3d 777, 785.) (See 90 Harv. L. Rev. 1528 [State Constitutional Restrictions on School Finance Reform]; 104 Harv. L. 3. State's Duty To Insure Funds.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 807

[§ 807] State's Duty To Insure Funds.

In Butt v. California (1992) 4 C.4th 668, 15 C.R.2d 480, 842 P.2d 1240, the Richmond Unified School District of Contra Costa County proposed to close its doors on May 1, 1991, for lack of funds to complete the final 6 weeks of its 1990-1991 school term. The superior court issued a preliminary injunction directing the state, the Controller, and the Superintendent of Public Instruction (SPI), to ensure that the district's students would receive a full school term or its equivalent. The court approved the Superintendent's plan for an emergency state loan, and for appointment of an administrator to take temporary charge of the district's operation. Defendant state appealed to the Court of Appeal, and the Supreme Court transferred the appeal to itself to decide an important issue of first impression: "Whether the State has a constitutional duty, aside from the equal allocation of educational funds, to prevent the budgetary problems of a particular school district from depriving its students of 'basic' educational equality." (4 C.4th 674.)

The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's determination that this duty exists, and that the circumstances demanded immediate state intervention. However, the trial court exceeded its judicial powers in approving the diversion of emergency loan funds from appropriations clearly intended by the Legislature for other purposes.

(a) Merits of plaintiffs' claims.

(1) "Public education is an obligation which the State assumed by the adoption of the Constitution. ... The system of public schools, although administered through local districts created by the Legislature, is 'one' system ... applicable to all the common schools. ... In view of the importance of education to society and to the individual child, the opportunity to receive the schooling furnished by the state must be made available to all on an equal basis. ... Local districts are the State's agents for local operation of the common school system ... , and the State's ultimate responsibility for public education cannot be delegated to any other entity." (4 C.4th 680.)

(2) "[T]he existence of this local-district system has not prevented recognition that the State itself has broad responsibility to ensure basic educational equality under the California Constitution. Because access to a public education is a uniquely fundamental personal interest in California, our courts have consistently found that the State charter accords broader rights against State-maintained educational discrimination than does federal law. Despite contrary federal authority, California constitutional principles require State assistance to correct basic 'interdistrict' disparities in the system of common schools, even when the discriminatory effect was not produced by the purposeful conduct of the State or its agents." (4 C.4th 681.)

(3) Under Serrano v. Priest (1971) 5 C.3d 584, 96 C.R. 601, 487 P.2d 1241, supra, §§805, 806, and subsequent decisions (4 C.4th 683, 684), it "appears well settled that the California Constitution makes public education uniquely a fundamental concern of the State and prohibits maintenance and operation of the common public school system in a way which denies basic educational equality to the students of particular districts. The State itself bears the ultimate authority and responsibility to ensure that the district-based system of common schools provides basic equality of educational opportunity." (4 C.4th 685.)

(4) Plaintiffs' showing supported the trial court's conclusion that the proposed closure would have a real and appreciable impact on the affected students' fundamental California right to basic educational equality. (4 C.4th 687, 688.) "And denials of basic educational equality on the basis of district residence are subject to strict scrutiny." (4 C.4th 692.)

(b) Separation of powers.

(1) Principles of comity and separation of powers place significant restraints on courts' authority to order or ratify acts normally committed to the discretion of other branches or officials; and a judicial remedy must be tailored to the harm at issue. (4 C.4th 695.)

(2) The trial court's remedial order fell within proper boundaries. "Given the emergency circumstances, and under the extreme and aggravated conditions disclosed by the evidence, the court below could properly conclude that orderly completion of the District's 1990-1991 school term, and the sound financing essential to achieve that end, required temporary displacement of the sitting Board and the operation of the District by the SPI's designee for the purpose of stabilizing its financial affairs. We conclude that the order approving temporary takeover of the District by the SPI was within the court's inherent equitable power to remedy the constitutional crisis." (4 C.4th 697.)

(c) Source of loan funds. Mandel v. Myers (1981) 29 C.3d 531, 174 C.R. 841, 629 P.2d 935, supra, §141, established the principle that the Legislature may not impose specific restrictions that are unconstitutionally discriminatory, or that constitute an impermissible legislative attempt to readjudicate the merits of a final court judgment. (4 C.4th 699.) But the trial court misapplied Mandel when it authorized the diversion of appropriated funds from the specific purposes and programs for which the Legislature had validly earmarked them. (4 C.4th 700.) "When it makes an appropriation to a specific district, under specific conditions addressed to the problems of that district, the Legislature clearly intends and contemplates that the appropriation will only be used for that purpose, and under those conditions. Hence, the appropriation is not reasonably available for court-ordered diversion to another district under different conditions." (4 C.4th 701.)

(d) Conclusion. "The trial court thus properly ordered the State and its officials to protect the students' rights. The court also acted within its remedial powers by authorizing the SPI to assume control of the District's affairs, relieve the Board of its duties, and supervise the District's financial recovery. However, the court invaded the exclusive legislative power of appropriation by approving the diversion of appropriations for" other purposes "to an emergency loan for the District." (4 C.4th 704.)

Four justices joined in the majority opinion. Three separate concurring and dissenting opinions were filed. (4 C.4th 704, 705, 706.) (See 15 J. Juvenile Law 343; 21 Pepperdine L. Rev. 277.)

23. Welfare Regulations.
a. Valid Regulations.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 809

[§ 809] Valid Regulations.

(1) Limit on Amount of Assistance. Under the program of Federal Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC, 42 U.S.C., §601 et seq.), the states, which participate in financing, follow different methods of providing aid. In Dandridge v. Williams (1970) 397 U.S. 471, 90 S.Ct. 1153, 25 L.Ed.2d 491, Maryland, pursuant to authorization in the statute, imposed a maximum limit ($ 250 per month in Baltimore, $ 240 elsewhere). Plaintiffs, whose large families had needs substantially in excess of the maximum, challenged the regulation. Held, it was valid. The argument that the regulation was too broad in its application to eligibles is one that may properly be made to First Amendment rights; but it has no place in the economic and social field. "It is enough that a solid foundation for the regulation can be found in the State's legitimate interest in encouraging employment and in avoiding discrimination between welfare families and the families of the working poor. By combining a limit on the recipient's grant with permission to retain money earned, without reduction in the amount of the grant, Maryland provides an incentive to seek gainful employment. And by keying the maximum family AFDC grants to the minimum wage a steadily employed head of a household receives, the State maintains some semblance of an equitable balance between families on welfare and those supported by an employed breadwinner." (90 S.Ct. 1162, 25 L.Ed.2d 502.) (See Mitchell v. Swoap (1973) 35 C.A.3d 879, 886, 113 C.R. 75 [upholding California regulation on Dandridge approach]; Sneed v. Saenz (2004) 120 C.A.4th 1220, 1250, 16 C.R.3d 563 [statute denying increased cash aid for children born to family that has been on welfare for previous 10 months and excluding child support income from grant calculation is rationally related to state purpose of encouraging families to participate in work force, thereby ending cycle of welfare dependence]; 84 Harv. L. Rev. 60 [Dandridge]; 84 Harv. L. Rev. 1856 [Dandridge and problem of coercion for population control]; 58 Cal. L. Rev. 555 [Dandridge and Judicial Retrenchment in Welfare Adjudication].)

(2) Reduction of Benefits. In Jefferson v. Hackney (1972) 406 U.S. 535, 92 S.Ct. 1724, 32 L.Ed.2d 285, Texas, without sufficient funds to meet all welfare needs, adopted a system of percentage reductions for four categories of eligible persons: (a) The aged still received 100% of their needs, and the disabled and blind 95%; but (b) AFDC recipients received only 75%. AFDC recipients challenged the system as racial discrimination, on a showing that there were more members of minority groups in the AFDC program than in the other categories. Held, the system was constitutional. There was no evidence of discriminatory motive, and the state could reasonably conclude that the aged and infirm are less able to bear the hardships of an inadequate grant. (92 S.Ct. 1731, 1733, 32 L.Ed.2d 295, 297.)

In Richardson v. Belcher (1971) 404 U.S. 78, 92 S.Ct. 254, 30 L.Ed.2d 231, the Court upheld the "offset" provision of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C., §424a). Under this section, state workers' compensation payments for industrial injuries are deducted from federal Social Security benefits, and there is a rational basis for the regulation. "The original purpose of state workmen's compensation laws was to satisfy a need inadequately met by private insurance or tort claim awards. Congress could rationally conclude that this need should continue to be met primarily by the States, and that a federal program that began to duplicate the efforts of the States might lead to the gradual weakening or atrophy of the state programs." (92 S.Ct. 258, 30 L.Ed.2d 236.)

(3) Duration of Relationship Requirement. The Social Security Act, in providing benefits for widows and children, excludes surviving wives and stepchildren who had their relationships to the deceased wage earner for less than 9 months prior to his death. In Weinberger v. Salfi (1975) 422 U.S. 749, 95 S.Ct. 2457, 45 L.Ed.2d 522, plaintiff widow, who had been married to the deceased wage earner less than 6 months, challenged the statute in this class action. Held, the statute was valid.

(a) The object of the provision--to prevent exploitation of the fund by persons who married solely to enjoy its benefits--was entirely proper. The method used--fixed rules to protect against abuses--was similar to that used by private insurers in limiting the scope of coverage. (95 S.Ct. 2472, 45 L.Ed.2d 546.) Individualized determinations would involve delays and uncertainties in meeting the valid claims of large numbers of persons who satisfy the conditions of the rule, and might also be ineffective in filtering out sham arrangements. (95 S.Ct. 2475, 45 L.Ed.2d 549.)

(b) The "administrative difficulties of individual eligibility determinations are without doubt matters which Congress may consider when determining whether to rely on rules which sweep more broadly than the evils with which they seek to deal. In this sense, the duration-of-relationship requirement represents not merely a substantive policy determination that benefits should be awarded only on the basis of genuine marital relationships, but also a substantive policy determination that limited resources would not be well spent in making individual determinations. It is an expression of Congress' policy choice that the Social Security system, and its millions of beneficiaries, would be best served by a prophylactic rule which bars claims arising from the bulk of sham marriages which are actually entered, which discourages such marriages from ever taking place, and which is also objective and easily administered." (95 S.Ct. 2476, 45 L.Ed.2d 550.)

(4) Married and Divorced Women With Dependent Children. The Social Security Act deals with two situations arising on a man's retirement or disability: (a) A married woman whose husband retires, and who has a minor or dependent child in her care, is entitled to benefits. (b) A divorced woman whose former husband retires or becomes disabled and who has such a child is not entitled to benefits if the former husband is under 62 years of age. In Mathews v. De Castro (1976) 429 U.S. 181, 97 S.Ct. 431, 50 L.Ed.2d 389, the Court held the classification proper in carrying out the legislative purpose--to provide workers and their families with protection. (97 S.Ct. 434, 50 L.Ed.2d 394.) "Congress could have rationally assumed that divorced husbands and wives depend less on each other for financial and other support than do couples who stay married." (97 S.Ct. 436, 50 L.Ed.2d 396.)

(5) Limited Aid to Foster Children Living With Relatives. In King v. McMahon (1986) 186 C.A.3d 648, 230 C.R. 911, the Department of Social Services, pursuant to Welf.C. 11402(a), denied state foster care benefits to foster children living with relatives, but granted benefits to foster children living with nonrelatives. Held, the classification was reasonable. "A rationale that justifies this legislative treatment involves the judgments that more children in this state are in need of foster care than are now receiving it; that persons having a family tie to a child in need of foster care will often provide such assistance without any financial incentive to do so; that persons having no family tie to such a child ordinarily will not provide foster care unless financially induced to do so; and that if the savings resulting from the denial of benefits to related foster parents were instead used to increase the benefits to unrelated foster parents, more foster care would be provided to all children in need thereof." (186 C.A.3d 665.)

(6) Funding of County Mental Health Programs. In San Diego v. Brown (1993) 19 C.A.4th 1054, 23 C.R.2d 819, the court held that the state's allocation of mental health funds and state hospital beds among the counties did not violate equal protection guaranties. Past allocation methods had created inequities that the state was properly attempting to remedy through allocation of new funds as they became available. (19 C.A.4th 1085.)

(7) Calculation of Support Obligation Where Child Is Receiving Aid. The rational basis test was used to uphold the constitutionality of a former statute that prohibited a hardship deduction if public aid payments were being made. (See San Francisco v. Garnett (1999) 70 C.A.4th 845, 851, 82 C.R.2d 924 [following King v. McMahon]; Moreno v. Draper (1999) 70 C.A.4th 886, 896, 83 C.R.2d 82; on hardship deductions, see 10 Summary (10th), Parent and Child, §404 et seq.)

[§ 810] Invalid Regulations.

In Vincent v. California (1971) 22 C.A.3d 566, 99 C.R. 410, a regulation made allowances for attendant services under the aid to the blind (AB) and old age security (OAS) programs even though the services were rendered by a responsible relative with whom the recipient was living, e.g., a spouse. The regulation was challenged by recipients of aid to the needy disabled (ATD), who originally received these allowances but lost them by a new regulation in 1970. They alleged that their wives gave up outside employment to serve as attendants for their husbands, and that termination of the payments was a denial of equal protection. Held, the challenge was good; the ATD recipients and OAS and AB recipients were similarly situated and could not be differently treated. (22 C.A.3d 572.)

In United States Dept. of Agriculture v. Moreno (1973) 413 U.S. 528, 93 S.Ct. 2821, 37 L.Ed.2d 782, an amendment to the federal Food Stamp Act was adopted, excluding a household with "an individual who is unrelated to any other member of the household." Held, the classification, apparently aimed at "hippie communes," was without any rational basis. (93 S.Ct. 2827, 37 L.Ed.2d 790.)

Hypolite v. Carleson (1973) 32 C.A.3d 979, 108 C.R. 751, involved a statutory provision giving aid to families with related children in need because of "continued absence" of a parent. The regulation defined the term to exclude the situation where both parents maintain a home but the child lives elsewhere. Held, the regulation "has arbitrarily and unreasonably created a dissimilar classification of children who are similarly situated with other children to whom aid has been extended. The children in the present case share with the eligible class the necessary relevant characteristics, i.e., deprivation of parental support and care by reason of the absence of the parents." (32 C.A.3d 987.)

24. Preference in Favor of Prior Activity ("Grandfather Clause").

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 811

[§ 811] Preference in Favor of Prior Activity ("Grandfather Clause").

Comprehensive zoning laws exclude certain businesses and structures from specified districts. To avoid hardship and possible objections on grounds of due process, it has been customary to permit existing structures to remain, at least for a reasonable period of time, and merely to prevent repair or rebuilding. This exemption of "existing nonconforming uses" has been upheld as a reasonable classification. (See Jones v. Los Angeles (1930) 211 C. 304, 309, 295 P. 14; Forest Lawn Memorial Park Assn. v. State Bd. of Embalmers & Funeral Directors (1933) 134 C.A. 73, 79, 24 P.2d 887; Rehfeld v. San Francisco (1933) 218 C. 83, 85, 21 P.2d 419; infra, §1041.)

Likewise, in imposing new regulations on business or professional activities, it may be proper to give preferences to, or continue licenses of, those previously engaged in the work. (See People v. Western Fruit Growers (1943) 22 C.2d 494, 508, 140 P.2d 13; Hunter v. Justice's Court (1950) 36 C.2d 315, 320, 223 P.2d 465 [oil well spacing law exempting fields previously in production]; 4 A.L.R.2d 667 [construction of "grandfather clause" regulating or licensing business or occupation]; infra, §1098.)

In re Norwalk Call (1964) 62 C.2d 185, 41 C.R. 666, 397 P.2d 426, presented a close issue of validity of a "grandfather clause." Prior to 1923, a newspaper seeking a decree of "general circulation" could qualify as "printed and published" in a city even though not physically printed there. Legislation in 1923 required at least 50% of typesetting and presswork to be done there. Petitioner, unable to qualify under the new law, relied on an exemption in Govt.C. 6006 for an established newspaper of general circulation. Held, citing the text, the exemption was valid. Three justices dissented on the ground that both the petitioner and contestant were established businesses, and that the exemption "would not preserve a distinction between established and new newspapers but would create an inequity by favoring one established newspaper over another." (62 C.2d 192.)

A "grandfather clause" was upheld in New Orleans v. Dukes (1976) 427 U.S. 297, 96 S.Ct. 2513, 49 L.Ed.2d 511. The New Orleans charter gives the city council power to enact ordinances designed to preserve the character of the "French Quarter," the heart of its tourist industry. The council adopted ordinances prohibiting pushcart food vendors from operating in the area, but exempting vendors who had operated for 8 years. The Court of Appeals, relying on Morey v. Doud (1957) 354 U.S. 457, 77 S.Ct. 1344, 1 L.Ed.2d 1485, decided that the exemption was a violation of the Equal Protection Clause in its creation of a monopoly for the favored class member. Held, the ordinances met the rational basis test of validity. "[R]ather than proceeding by the immediate and absolute abolition of all pushcart food vendors, the city could rationally choose initially to eliminate vendors of more recent vintage. This gradual approach to the problem is not constitutionally impermissible." (96 S.Ct. 2517, 49 L.Ed.2d 518.) "Morey was the only case in the last half century to invalidate a wholly economic regulation solely on equal protection grounds, and ... it should be, and it is, overruled." (96 S.Ct. 2518, 49 L.Ed.2d 518.) (See 90 Harv. L. Rev. 132.)

The preferred treatment of existing businesses must, however, have some reasonable basis. In Accounting Corp. of America v. State Bd. of Accountancy (1949) 34 C.2d 186, 208 P.2d 984, changes were made in the statute regulating the practice of "public accountancy" by persons not certified public accountants. Under the new act, corporations were forbidden to practice public accounting, except that corporations engaged in the business for 3 years prior to the act were allowed to continue. Held, the statute was unconstitutional. (a) The work of an accountant, like that of members of the learned professions, requires a high degree of skill and integrity, and the Legislature might therefore have excluded corporations entirely from the practice. (b) Allowing some corporations to continue in the practice solely because they had been so engaged for 3 prior years would accomplish no legitimate purpose; the skill and other qualifications of those who may be employed by the corporation to do the work does not depend in any way on the period of time the corporation has been in the field. "Where a statute discriminates against individuals or corporations solely because they are new to the field and such discrimination does not appear to have any relation to the public interest" it is invalid. (34 C.2d 190.) The judgment was that the 3-year proviso was void and a corporation engaged in the practice at the effective date of the statute could continue, but the rest of the act was valid prospectively, so that no corporation thereafter could enter the field. (34 C.2d 192.)

XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS
C. Unconstitutional Conditions.
1. Theory and Development of Doctrine.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 812

[§ 812] Theory and Development of Doctrine.

The doctrine of unconstitutional conditions developed as a result of legislative discrimination against foreign corporations. A state has power to exclude foreign corporations altogether, and it follows that it may admit them subject to conditions. On this theory, statutes were passed in various states providing that, if a foreign corporation attempted to sue a citizen in the federal courts or removed a suit to the federal courts, its license would be revoked. It was eventually held that because the right to resort to the federal courts is guaranteed by the federal Constitution, a statute cannot require the waiver of this specific constitutional right as a condition to doing business in the state. (Terral v. Burke Const. Co. (1922) 257 U.S. 529, 42 S.Ct. 188, 66 L.Ed. 352.)

The doctrine was subsequently extended to afford certain protection to foreign corporations or other persons, not only against interference with specific federal rights, but generally from conditions that violate the Due Process or Equal Protection Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. Thus, a venue statute permitting actions against foreign corporations to be brought in any county, but those against domestic corporations only in the county of the place of business, is invalid. (Power Mfg. Co. v. Saunders (1927) 274 U.S. 490, 47 S.Ct. 678, 71 L.Ed. 1165; see Bohn v. Better Biscuits (1938) 26 C.A.2d 61, 67, 78 P.2d 1177; *Burlington Northern R. Co. v. In Wheeling Steel Corp. v. Glander (1949) 337 U.S. 562, 69 S.Ct. 1291, 1296, 93 L.Ed. 1544, 1551, 9 Summary (10th), Taxation, §44, the Court restated the doctrine as follows: "The State may arbitrarily exclude them or may license them upon any terms it sees fit, apart from exacting surrender of rights derived from the Constitution of the United States. ... After a state has chosen to domesticate foreign corporations, the adopted corporations are entitled to equal protection with the state's own corporate progeny, at least to the extent that their property is entitled to an equally favorable ad valorem tax basis." (Cf. Watson v. Employers Liab. Assur. Corp. (1954) 348 U.S. 66, 75 S.Ct. 166, 173, 99 L.Ed. 74, 83 [concurring opinion].)

XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS

C. Unconstitutional Conditions.

2. Application Outside Field of Foreign Corporations.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 813

[§ 813] Application Outside Field of Foreign Corporations.

The underlying principle of the doctrine of unconstitutional conditions is not confined to the regulation of activities of foreign corporations, but applies to other situations in which the state seeks to deny a constitutional right. Thus, while a state has control over its highways, it may not compel a private carrier to become a common carrier as a condition to use of the highways. (Frost & Frost Trucking Co. v. Railroad Com. of Calif. (1926) 271 U.S. 583, 46 S.Ct. 605, 70 L.Ed. 1101, infra, §1097.)

In Danskin v. San Diego Unified School Dist. (1946) 28 C.2d 536, 171 P.2d 885, a statute requiring denial of the use of school buildings for meetings of subversive organizations was held unconstitutional. The court reasoned that: (a) The state need not make school buildings or other public property available for public meetings. (b) If it elects to do so, however, it cannot make the privilege of holding these meetings dependent on conditions depriving any members of the public of constitutional rights. (c) Because "the state cannot compel 'subversive elements' directly to renounce their convictions and affiliations, it cannot make such a renunciation a condition of receiving the privilege of free assembly in a school building." (28 C.2d 546.) The "convictions or affiliations of one who requests the use of a school building as a forum are of no more concern to the school administrators than to a superintendent of parks or streets if the forum is the green or the market place." (28 C.2d 547.) (See supra, §394.)

The doctrine has been restated as follows: "There are rights of constitutional stature whose exercise a State may not condition by the exaction of a price. Engaging in interstate commerce is one. ... Resort to the federal courts in diversity of citizenship cases is another. ... Assertion of a First Amendment freedom is still another. ... The imposition of a burden on the exercise of a Twenty-Fourth Amendment right is also banned. ... We now hold the protection of the individual under the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits use in subsequent criminal proceedings of confessions obtained under threat of removal from office, and that it extends to all, whether they are policemen or other members of our body politic." (Garrity v. New Jersey (1967) 385 U.S. 493, 87 S.Ct. 616, 620, 17 L.Ed.2d 562, 567, 2 Cal. Evidence (4th), Witnesses §361; see Gomillion v. Lightfoot (1960) 364 U.S. 339, 81 S.Ct. 125, 130, 5 L.Ed.2d 110, 117, supra, §238; Syrek v. Unemp. Ins. App. Bd. (1960) 54 C.2d 519, 532, 7 C.R. 97, 354 P.2d 625, 3 Summary (10th), Agency and Employment, §523; Bagley v. Washington Township Hosp. Dist. (1966) 65 C.2d 499, 503, 55 C.R. 401, 421 P.2d 409, supra, §255; Parrish v. Civil Service Com. of Alameda County (1967) 66 C.2d 260, 271, 57 C.R. 623, 425 P.2d 223; Committee To Defend Reproductive Rights v. Myers (1981) 29 C.3d 252, 293, 172 C.R. 866, 625 P.2d 779, supra, §578; Planned Parenthood v. Santa Maria (1993) 16 C.A.4th 685, 693, 20 C.R.2d 391 [city may not condition grant of public funds on waiver of privacy right guaranteed by California Constitution; hence, city could not lawfully approve grant for construction of clinic on condition that no abortions be performed there]; 60 So. Cal. Rev. 1369 [Unconstitutional Conditions: The Crossroads of Substantive Rights and Equal Protection]; 43 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 371 [Unconstitutional Conditions and Greater Powers: A Separability Approach].)

In Binet-Montessori v. San Francisco Unified School Dist. (1979) 98 C.A.3d 991, 160 C.R. 38, defendant school district's board of education adopted a resolution prohibiting leasing surplus school district property to private educational agencies. Held, the resolution was unconstitutional, and petitioner, a private school for young children, was entitled to bid on a proposed lease of a vacant elementary school.

(a) The constitutional right to send children to private schools (see infra, §1071) includes the right of a private school to operate. (98 C.A.3d 996.)

(b) The public entity may not condition acceptance of a benefit on waiver of a fundamental right, unless it shows a proper justification for the restriction. (98 C.A.3d 995.) The argument that leasing to private schools would tend to decrease public school enrollment with resulting loss of state revenues is patently insufficient; private schools are a beneficial competitive force. (98 C.A.3d 996.) The argument that this leasing would jeopardize the district's desegregation plans is likewise untenable. The district could achieve integration objectives by alternative means, e.g., setting guidelines for private school bidders to insure that the leases would have no adverse impact on desegregation. (98 C.A.3d 997.)

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 814

[§ 814] In General.

(1) Constitutional Provisions. The Thirteenth Amendment, §2, and the Fourteenth Amendment, §5, authorize Congress to enact legislation to enforce their protections. The basic distinction between the two provisions was enunciated in an early case: "Under the 13th Amendment, the legislation, so far as necessary or proper to eradicate all forms and incidents of slavery and involuntary servitude, may be direct and primary, operating upon the acts of individuals, whether sanctioned by state legislation or not; under the 14th, ... it must necessarily be and can only be corrective in its character, addressed to counteract and afford relief against state regulations or proceedings." (Civil Rights Cases (1883) 109 U.S. 3, 3 S.Ct. 18, 27 L.Ed. 835; 47 Stanf. L. Rev. 161 [historical review of African American lawyers and their importance in shaping civil rights law].)

(2) Legislation. Exercising this newly granted authority, Congress enacted five Civil Rights Acts in the aftermath of the Civil War. (See 4 Rotunda, §19.1; 15 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Civil Rights §26 et seq.; on statute permitting removal of civil or criminal case from state to federal court where civil rights cannot be enforced in state (28 U.S.C., §1443), see Georgia v. Rachel (1966) 384 U.S. 780, 86 S.Ct. 1783, 16 L.Ed.2d 925; Greenwood v. Peacock (1966) 384 U.S. 808, 86 S.Ct. 1800, 16 L.Ed.2d 944; Johnson v. Mississippi (1975) 421 U.S. 213, 95 S.Ct. 1591, 44 L.Ed.2d 121.)

Under 42 U.S.C., §1981, "[a]ll persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses, and exactions of every kind, and to no other." (See Runyon v. McCrary (1976) 427 U.S. 160, 96 S.Ct. 2586, 49 L.Ed.2d 415, infra, §879; *Goodman v. Rights §27 et seq.; on amendment of 42 U.S.C., §1981 by Civil Rights Act of 1991, see infra, §849.)

Under 42 U.S.C., §1982, "[a]ll citizens of the United States shall have the same right, in every State and Territory, as is enjoyed by white citizens thereof to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property." (See Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Co. (1968) 392 U.S. 409, 88 S.Ct. 2186, 20 L.Ed.2d 1189, infra, §851; 4 Rotunda, §19.8; 15 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Civil Rights §43 et seq.)

These original Acts were almost entirely neglected until the 1960s, when by reason of judicial decisions and additional legislation, federal enforcement took on a new significance. (See 4 Rotunda, §19.1 et seq.; 48 Hastings L. J. 197 [federal civil rights practice in the 1990s]; 22 San Diego L. Rev. 453; 25 *San Diego L. To state a claim under the statute, a plaintiff must have rights under an existing or proposed contract that he or she wishes "to make or enforce." The plaintiff must identify an injury flowing from a racially motivated breach of his or her own contractual relationship, not that of someone else. (*Domino's Pizza v. (18 U.S.C., §242; see United States v. Classic (1941) 313 U.S. 299, 61 S.Ct. 1031, 85 L.Ed. 1368; Screws v. United States (1945) 325 U.S. 91, 65 S.Ct. 1031, 89 L.Ed. 1495; *United States v. Under 18 U.S.C., §241, it is a crime for two or more persons to conspire "to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States." The statute covers conspiracies to violate Fourteenth Amendment rights, but the requirement of state action (see supra, §§619, 697 et seq.) must be satisfied. (See *United States v. 8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 816

[§ 816] Civil Liability.

(1) The Statute. "Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress." (42 U.S.C., §1983; see Monroe v. Pape (1961) 365 U.S. 167, 81 S.Ct. 473, 5 L.Ed.2d 492, infra, §828; Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co. (1970) 398 U.S. 144, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 26 L.Ed.2d 142; Pulliam v. Allen (1984) 466 U.S. 522, 104 S.Ct. 1970, 1980, 80 L.Ed.2d 565, 578; Wilson v. Garcia (1985) 471 U.S. 261, 105 S.Ct. 1938, 1947, 85 L.Ed.2d 254, 266, infra, §841; Oklahoma City v. Tuttle (1985) 471 U.S. 808, 105 S.Ct. 2427, 2432, 85 L.Ed.2d 791, 799, infra, §831; on defense of reliance in good faith on unconstitutional statute, see Pierson v. Ray (1967) 386 U.S. 547, 87 S.Ct. 1213, 1218, 18 L.Ed.2d 288, 296; on color of state law, see infra, §828.)

(2) State or Territory. District of Columbia v. Carter (1973) 409 U.S. 418, 93 S.Ct. 602, 609, 34 L.Ed.2d 613, 623, held that the District of Columbia was not a "State or Territory" within the meaning of 42 U.S.C., §1983. The decision was nullified by a 1979 amendment to the statute specifically making it applicable to statutes, etc., of the District of Columbia. The 1979 amendment also provided that "any Act of Congress applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia shall be considered to be a statute of the District of Columbia."

"Whether Puerto Rico is now considered a territory or a state" makes little difference "because each is included" within 42 U.S.C., §1983. (Examining Bd. of Engineers, Architects & Surveyors v. Flores De Otero (1976) 426 U.S. 572, 96 S.Ct. 2264, 2279, 49 L.Ed.2d 65, 82.) However, "neither the Territory of Guam nor its officers acting in their official capacities are 'persons' under §1983." (Ngiraingas v. Sanchez (1990) 495 U.S. 182, 110 S.Ct. 1737, 1743, 109 L.Ed.2d 163, 174.)

(3) Indian Tribe. An Indian tribe, like a state, is not a "person" who may sue under 42 U.S.C., §1983. (Inyo v. Paiute-Shoshone Indians of the Bishop Community of the Bishop Colony (2003) 538 U.S. 701, 123 S.Ct. 1887, 1892, 155 L.Ed.2d 933, 941.)

(4) Texts and Commentary. The statute has been the subject of extensive commentary. (See 4 Rotunda, §19.13 et seq.; 82 Harv. L. Rev. 1134; 90 Harv. L. Rev. 1133; 99 *Harv. L. CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS D. Federal Civil Rights Legislation. 1. Original Civil Rights Acts. a. Constitutional and Statutory Framework. 4. Damages for Conspiracy.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 817

[§ 817] Damages for Conspiracy.

Under 42 U.S.C., §1985, persons injured by an overt act in furtherance of a conspiracy to interfere with their civil rights have an action for damages against any of the conspirators. The first two subdivisions of the section cover conspiracies (a) to prevent federal officers from performing their duties (42 U.S.C., §1985(1)), and (b) to intimidate a party, witness, or juror in a federal court or obstruct justice in a state court (42 U.S.C., §1985(2)). (See Kush v. Rutledge (1983) 460 U.S. 719, 103 S.Ct. 1483, 1487, 75 L.Ed.2d 413, 419 [first part of 42 U.S.C., §1985(2) involving intimidation of witnesses does not require racial or class-based invidious discriminatory state of mind, but second part on obstruction of justice in state courts specifically requires intent to deny citizens equal protection]; 15 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Civil Rights §183 et seq.)

However, most of the cases and commentary have involved 42 U.S.C., §1985(3), which covers conspiracies to deprive a "person or class of persons" of equal privileges and immunities under the law, or to hinder the authorities from giving these persons equal protection of the laws, or to prevent support or advocacy in an election of federal officers. (See Stefanelli v. Minard (1951) 342 U.S. 117, 72 S.Ct. 118, 96 L.Ed. 138; Taylor v. Mitzel (1978) 82 C.A.3d 665, 673, 147 C.R. 323; Graham v. Biggs (1979) 96 C.A.3d 250, 253, 157 C.R. 761; Bray v. Alexandria Women's Health Clinic (1993) 506 U.S. 263, 113 S.Ct. 753, 122 L.Ed.2d 34 [protesters blockading abortion clinics]; Haddle v. Garrison (1998) 525 U.S. 121, 119 S.Ct. 489, 492, 142 L.Ed.2d 502, 508 [petitioner stated claim for damages by alleging that conspiracy proscribed by 42 U.S.C., §1985(2) induced employer to terminate at-will employment; that employment at will is not "property" under Due Process Clause does not mean that its loss may not injure petitioner in his person or property under statute]; 4 Rotunda, §19.9; 107 Harv. L. Rev. 332 [Bray]; 20 Hastings Const. L. Q. 905 [same]; 15 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Civil Rights §§186, 187; 169 A.L.R. Fed 141 [Actions Brought Under 42 U.S.C.A. §§1983 and 1985 for Sex Discrimination--Supreme Court Cases].)

In Collins v. Hardyman (1951) 341 U.S. 651, 71 S.Ct. 937, 95 L.Ed. 1253, the Court held that the statute reached only conspiracies under color of state law. This interpretation was repudiated in Griffin v. Breckenridge (1971) 403 U.S. 88, 91 S.Ct. 1790, 29 L.Ed.2d 338. The section covers private conspiracies. (91 S.Ct. 1798, 29 L.Ed.2d 348.) As so construed, it is supported by both the Thirteenth Amendment and the power of Congress to protect the right of interstate travel against private as well as governmental interference. (91 S.Ct. 1800, 29 L.Ed.2d 350.) (See 85 Harv. L. Rev. 95.)

In United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners of America, Local 610, AFL-CIO v. Scott (1983) 463 U.S. 825, 103 S.Ct. 3352, 77 L.Ed.2d 1049, an action under 42 U.S.C., §1985(3) involving a private conspiracy to infringe the First Amendment rights of nonunion employees, the Court limited the scope of the statute as follows:

(a) The holding in Griffin v. Breckenridge, supra, applies only to conspiracies to interfere with rights constitutionally protected against both private and official encroachment. (103 S.Ct. 3358, 77 L.Ed.2d 1057.) For rights protected only against state encroachment, such as First Amendment rights, a cause of action under 42 U.S.C., §1985(3) is not stated "unless it is proved that the state is involved in the conspiracy or that the aim of the conspiracy is to influence the activity of the state." (103 S.Ct. 3357, 77 L.Ed.2d 1055.)

(b) Regardless of whether 42 U.S.C., §1985(3) applies to discrimination against groups other than Blacks and those supporting their cause (a question not decided), the statute was not intended "to reach conspiracies motivated by bias towards others [than Blacks] on account of their economic views, status, or activities." (103 S.Ct. 3360, 77 L.Ed.2d 1060.)

In Great Amer. Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. v. Novotny (1979) 442 U.S. 366, 99 S.Ct. 2345, 60 L.Ed.2d 957, plaintiff alleged a conspiracy to deprive him of a right created by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (see infra, §855). Held, the suit could not be maintained; it would avoid most of the detailed provisions of Title VII and completely bypass the important administrative process. (99 S.Ct. 2351, 60 L.Ed.2d 966.) Three justices dissented. (See 9 Hastings Const. L. Q. 579.)

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law
XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS
D. Federal Civil Rights Legislation.
1. Original Civil Rights Acts.
b. Federal and State Court Jurisdiction.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 818

[§ 818] Federal and State Court Jurisdiction.

(1) Federal Courts. Federal courts have original jurisdiction over actions to (a) redress the deprivation, under color of state law, etc., of rights, etc., "secured by the Constitution ... or by any act of Congress providing for equal rights," and (b) recover damages, etc., "under any act of Congress providing for the protection of civil rights." (28 U.S.C., §1343(3), (4).)

28 U.S.C., §1343 does not confer jurisdiction over all claims under 42 U.S.C., §1983. In Chapman v. Houston Welfare Rights Organization (1979) 441 U.S. 600, 99 S.Ct. 1905, 60 L.Ed.2d 508, the Court held that federal courts lacked jurisdiction over a claim that a state welfare regulation was invalid because it conflicted with the Social Security Act, because that Act provided neither for "equal rights" under 28 U.S.C., §1343(3) nor "civil rights" under 28 U.S.C., §1343(4). (99 S.Ct. 1917, 60 L.Ed.2d 523.)

Jurisdiction could not be based on 28 U.S.C., §1331, the general federal-question statute, because the amount in controversy did not exceed $ 10,000. (99 S.Ct. 1910, 60 L.Ed.2d 515.) However, this obstacle to assuming jurisdiction over claims under 42 U.S.C., §1983 was removed by the 1980 amendment deleting from 28 U.S.C., §1331 the requirement of a monetary value on the amount in controversy. (See 4 Rotunda, §19.15; 2 Cal. Proc. (4th), Jurisdiction, §66.)

In Lynch v. Household Finance Corp. (1972) 405 U.S. 538, 92 S.Ct. 1113, 31 L.Ed.2d 424, plaintiff brought a class action in federal district court to enjoin Connecticut sheriffs from levying prejudgment garnishments. The district court did not reach the constitutional issue, holding that federal court jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C., §1343(3) extends only to personal rights. Held, this is a mistaken assumption; the "dichotomy between personal liberties and property rights is a false one." Rights in property are basic civil rights, and the district court had jurisdiction. (92 S.Ct. 1122, 31 L.Ed.2d 434.) (See 86 Harv. L. Rev. 201; 24 Stanf. L. Rev. 1134.)

(2) State Courts. State courts have concurrent jurisdiction with federal courts over actions under 42 U.S.C., §1983. (See Martinez v. California (1980) 444 U.S. 277, 100 S.Ct. 553, 558, 62 L.Ed.2d 481, 488, footnote 7; Maine v. Thiboutot (1980) 448 U.S. 1, 100 S.Ct. 2502, 2507, 65 L.Ed.2d 555, 558, footnote 1; Tafflin v. Levitt (1990) 493 U.S. 455, 110 S.Ct. 792, 107 L.Ed.2d 887; Yellow Freight System v. Donnelly (1990) 494 U.S. 820, 110 S.Ct. 1566, 108

CHAPTER X - Constitutional Law

Witkin Summary of California Law
XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS
D. Federal Civil Rights Legislation.
1. Original Civil Rights Acts.
c. Persons Liable.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 819

[§ 819] Persons Liable.

In Will v. Michigan Dept. of State Police (1989) 491 U.S. 58, 109 S.Ct. 2304, 105 L.Ed.2d 45, the Court held that a state official acting in his or her official capacity is not a "person" and therefore is not subject to liability under 42 U.S.C., §1983. (See Baughman v. California (1995) 38 C.A.4th 182, 187, 45 C.R.2d 82 [citing Will; campus police acting in their official capacity were not "persons" within meaning of 42 U.S.C., §1983]; on employee immunities under statute, see infra, §834 et seq.)

Will was distinguished in Hafer v. Melo (1991) 502 U.S. 21, 112 S.Ct. 358, 116 L.Ed.2d 301, holding that state officials sued in their individual capacities are "persons." H, elected Auditor General of Pennsylvania, dismissed employees on the basis that they had "bought" their jobs. M and other terminated employees sued H in district court, seeking damages and reinstatement. The district court dismissed the claims on the ground that H could not be held liable for employment decisions made in her official capacity as Auditor General. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that, while H's power to hire and fire derived from her official position, a suit for damages based on the exercise of this power could be brought against her in her personal capacity. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

(a) In Kentucky v. Graham (1985) 473 U.S. 159, 105 S.Ct. 3099, 87 L.Ed.2d 114, the Court "sought to eliminate lingering confusion about the distinction between personal--and official--capacity suits." (112 S.Ct. 361, 116 L.Ed.2d 309.)

(1) Official-capacity suits represent another way of pleading an action against an entity of which an officer is an agent. A suit against a state official in his or her official capacity therefore should be treated as a suit against the state; and the only immunities available to the defendant are those that the governmental entity possesses. (112 S.Ct. 361, 116 L.Ed.2d 309.)

(2) "Personal-capacity suits, on the other hand, seek to impose individual liability upon a governmental officer for actions taken under color of state law." (112 S.Ct. 362, 116 L.Ed.2d 309.) Officials sued in their personal capacities, unlike those sued in their official capacities, may assert personal immunity defenses such as an objectively reasonable reliance on existing law. (112 S.Ct. 362, 116 L.Ed.2d 309.)

(b) Will turned in part on these differences. Will makes clear that the distinction between official-capacity suits and personal-capacity suits is more than a mere pleading device. "State officers sued for damages in their official capacity are not 'persons' for purposes of the suit because they assume the identity of the government that employs them. ... By contrast, officers sued in their personal capacity come to court as individuals." (112 S.Ct. 362, 116 L.Ed.2d 310.)

(c) H contends that imposing personal liability on officeholders may infringe on state sovereignty, and that the Eleventh Amendment forbids personal-capacity suits against state officials in federal court. This view was rejected in Scheuer v. Rhodes (1974) 416 U.S. 232, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 40 L.Ed.2d 90 (see supra, §52). (112 S.Ct. 364, 116 L.Ed.2d 312.) Although imposing personal liability on state officers may hamper their performance of public duties, these "concerns are properly addressed within the framework of our personal immunity jurisprudence." (112 S.Ct. 364, 116 L.Ed.2d 313.)

(d) Thus, "state officials, sued in their individual capacities, are 'persons' within the meaning of §1983. The Eleventh Amendment does not bar these suits, nor are state officers absolutely immune from personal liability under §1983 solely by virtue of the 'official' nature of their acts." (112 S.Ct. 365, 116 L.Ed.2d 313.)

In Pitts v. Kern (1998) 17 C.4th 340, 70 C.R.2d 823, 949 P.2d 920, the issue was whether, for purposes of local government liability under 42 U.S.C., §1983, a district attorney acts for the state or the county when prosecuting criminal violations of state law, and when establishing policy and training personnel in criminal prosecution. If the district attorney represents the county, the court would need to consider whether the district attorney's absolute immunity under 42 U.S.C., §1983 also immunizes the county. If the district attorney acts for the state, he or she may not be held liable under 42 U.S.C., §1983, and the court's inquiry is over. Held, the district attorney represents the state and is not a policymaker for the county. (17 C.4th 345.)

(a) A county is a "person" within the meaning of 42 U.S.C., §1983, and is subject to liability for damages under this section. However, neither a state nor state officials sued in their official capacity are persons subject to liability under the statute. (17 C.4th 344.)

(b) In McMillian v. Monroe County, Alabama (1997) 520 U.S. 781, 117 S.Ct. 1734, 138 L.Ed.2d 1, the U.S. Supreme Court "provided an analytical framework for resolving the question of which entity a governmental official represents when performing a certain function. In particular, the court considered whether Alabama sheriffs represent the county or the state for purposes of §1983 when they act in a law enforcement capacity." (17 C.4th 353.) "The essential thrust of McMillian is that a court must discern which entity a government official represents 'in a particular area, or on a particular issue' by examining how the official's functions are defined by state law." (17 C.4th 356.)

(c) In California, each county district attorney is supervised by the Attorney General. (17 C.4th 356.) The Attorney General is authorized by Govt.C. 12524 to "conference" with district attorneys "to discuss their duties 'with the view of uniform and adequate enforcement' of state law." (17 C.4th 358.) District attorneys have complete authority to enforce state criminal law in their counties. (17 C.4th 358.) When prosecuting state criminal law violations, a district attorney acts in the name of the people of the state. (17 C.4th 359.) On the other hand, a district attorney is elected by county voters, is included in the list of county officers, and must be a registered voter in the county where his or her duties are to be performed. "These characteristics are ... consistent with an understanding of [district attorneys] as state officials who have been locally placed throughout the State, with an element of control granted to the officials and residents of the county which receives the [district attorney's] services." (17 C.4th 361, quoting McMillian.)

(d) No meaningful analytical distinction can be made between preparing to prosecute and prosecuting criminal violations on the one hand, and training and developing policy regarding prosecutions on the other hand. (17 C.4th 362.) Cal. Const., Art. V, §13, provides that the Attorney General has "direct supervision over every district attorney ... in all matters pertaining to the duties of their ... office." (17 C.4th 363.) This includes oversight of policies and training in connection with the district attorney's prosecution of crimes. "Our conclusion as to which entity the district attorney represents might differ were plaintiffs challenging a district attorney's alleged action or inaction related to hiring or firing an employee, workplace safety conditions, procuring office equipment, or some other administrative function arguably unrelated to the prosecution of state criminal law violations." (17 C.4th 363.)

Two justices dissented, believing that when a district attorney engages in training, supervision, and other managerial tasks, he or she is acting as a local policymaker. (17 C.4th 366.) (See Los Angeles v. Superior Court (Peters) (1998) 68 C.A.4th 1166, 1174, 80 C.R.2d 860 [following McMillian and Pitts; in establishing policies for release of persons from county jail, sheriff acts as state official, and not as policymaker for county]; Kirchmann v. Lake Elsinore Unified School Dist. (2000) 83 C.A.4th 1098, 1105, 100 C.R.2d 289 [case of first impression; in view of California's extensive control over school districts' fiscal affairs and political status, districts are instrumentalities of state, exempt from suit under 42 U.S.C., §1983]; Hernandez v. San Bernardino (2004) 117 C.A.4th 1055, 1060, 12 C.R.3d 452 [relying on McMillian, Pitts, and Peters; trial court erred in granting defendant family support division's motion for judgment on pleadings where it could not be conclusively determined whether defendant's asserted civil rights violation was state action; defendant acted under auspices of county district attorney in reporting misidentified plaintiff to Franchise Tax Board, but was not engaged in prosecuting crimes or enforcing criminal law]; 33 U.C. Davis L. Rev. 677 [McMillian].)

In Venegas v. Los Angeles (2004) 32 C.4th 820, 11 C.R.3d 692, 87 P.3d 1, the court relied on Pitts and Peters in holding that a sheriff engaged in a criminal investigation is a state officer and hence not a "person" for purposes of 42 U.S.C., §1983. (32 C.4th 830.) However, sheriff's deputies are not shielded by the sheriff's immunity, and are "persons" who may be held liable for damages under the statute, unless they are entitled to qualified immunity. (32 C.4th 839; on qualified immunity, see infra, §837.)

Parrish* (2005) 132 C.A.4th 838, 858, 34 C.R.3d 55 [state Mining Board and its members, who performed inspections under county authorization, were state actors not subject to suit under 42 U.S.C., §1983; board took back regulatory powers when local government failed to administer state policy, and board at all times enforced state, not local, policy]; Bougere v. Los Angeles (2006) 141 C.A.4th 237, 241, 45 C.R.3d 711 [following Venegas v. Los Angeles (2004) 32 C.4th 820, 11 C.R.3d 692, 87 P.3d 1, text, p. 238; sheriff was immune from liability for failing to move inmate to another facility after repeated threats from other inmates; policies and procedures governing placement of inmates at county jail is law enforcement function performed on behalf of state]; Macias v. Los Angeles (2006) 144 C.A.4th 313, 322, 50 C.R.3d 364 [summary judgment was properly granted to officers who, though participating in search of plaintiff's premises, were not integral part of conduct leading to violation of plaintiff's Fourth Amendment rights]; CACI, No. 3013 [supervisor liability].

aa. Constitutional Rights.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 820

[§ 820] Constitutional Rights.

The language in 42 U.S.C., §1983 (deprivation of "rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws"; see supra, §816) covers deprivations of Fourteenth Amendment rights. In Monroe v. Pape (1961) 365 U.S. 167, 81 S.Ct. 473, 5 L.Ed.2d 492, infra, §828, the Court noted that similar language in 18 U.S.C., §241 (see supra, §815) had been interpreted as covering only those rights that a person has by reason of his or her relation to the federal Government, not to state governments. (81 S.Ct. 475, 5 L.Ed.2d 496, citing United States v. Williams (1951) 341 U.S. 70, 71 S.Ct. 581, 95 L.Ed. 758.) However, a similarly narrow interpretation of 42 U.S.C., §1983 is precluded by its legislative history, which establishes enforcement of Fourteenth Amendment rights as its primary objective. (81 S.Ct. 475, 5 L.Ed.2d 496.)

A number of other decisions address the scope of the statutory language. (See Zuniga v. Housing Authority of Los Angeles (1995) 41 C.A.4th 82, 104, 48 C.R.2d 353, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §267 [defendants, a city and its housing authority, could be held liable under 42 U.S.C., §1983 for failure to protect plaintiffs from retaliation by drug dealers who congregated in front of plaintiffs' apartment and about whom plaintiffs had complained; by acting in callous disregard of plaintiffs' security, defendants deprived them of liberty interest]; Sacramento County Deputy Sheriffs' Assn. v. Sacramento (1996) 51 C.A.4th 1468, 1482, 59 C.R.2d 834 [videotaping of deputy sheriffs working in release office of jail did not violate their Fourth Amendment rights where they had no reasonable expectation of privacy while in release office]; Breneric Associates v. Del Mar (1998) 69 C.A.4th 166, 182, 81 C.R.2d 324 [denial of discretionary land use permit does not infringe constitutionally protected property interest for purposes of 42 U.S.C., §1983]; Conn v. Gabbert (1999) 526 U.S. 286, 119 S.Ct. 1292, 1296, 143 L.Ed.2d 399, 407 ["Fourteenth Amendment right to practice one's calling is not violated by execution of a search warrant, whether calculated to annoy or even to prevent [attorney's] consultation with a grand jury witness"]; Zelig v. Los Angeles (2002) 27 C.4th 1112, 1147, 119 C.R.2d 709, 45 P.3d 1171 [criticizing Zuniga; action for deprivation of civil rights cannot be based on failure of county to provide protection from private violation; fact that shooting took place in courthouse while victim was pursuing litigation does not change result]; 32 Loyola L.A. L. Rev. 907 [Conn v. Gabbert]; 4 Rotunda, §19.19; 15 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Civil Rights §68 et seq.)

In Dennis v. Higgins (1991) 498 U.S. 439, 111 S.Ct. 865, 112 L.Ed.2d 969, petitioner, doing business as a motor carrier in Ohio, filed a class action suit in Nebraska against the State of Nebraska, challenging the constitutionality of retaliatory taxes and fees imposed on motor carriers with vehicles registered in other states and operated in Nebraska. He sought declaratory and injunctive relief, and also a claim under 42 U.S.C., §1983 based on the unlawful burden on interstate commerce. Held, a suit for violation of the Commerce Clause may be brought under §1983.

(a) The Court has repeatedly held that the coverage of 42 U.S.C., §1983 must be broadly construed. (111 S.Ct. 868, 112 L.Ed.2d 975, citing Golden State Transit Corp. v. Los Angeles (1989) 493 U.S. 103, 110 S.Ct. 444, 107 L.Ed.2d 420.) Respondents argued that the Commerce Clause merely allocates power between the federal and state Governments, and does not confer "rights." But the clause is also a self-executing substantive restriction on permissible state regulation of interstate commerce (see infra, §1300) giving injured individuals the right to sue for injunctive and declaratory relief. "This combined restriction on state power and entitlement to relief ... amounts to a 'right, privilege, or immunity' under the ordinary meaning of those terms." (111 S.Ct. 871, 112 L.Ed.2d 980.)

(b) The attempt to analogize the Commerce Clause to the Supremacy Clause is unsound. The Supremacy Clause is not a source of federal rights; it secures federal rights by according them priority when they come into conflict with state law. "By contrast, the Commerce Clause of its own force imposes limitations on state regulation of commerce, and is the source of a right of action in those injured by regulations that exceed such limitations." (111 S.Ct. 872, 112 L.Ed.2d 978.)

Two justices joined in a dissent, asserting that 42 U.S.C., §1983 "now becomes simply one more weapon in the litigant's arsenal, to be considered whenever the defendant is a state actor and its use is advantageous to the plaintiff." (111 S.Ct. 880, 112 L.Ed.2d 990.)

In Galland v. Clovis (2001) 24 C.4th 1003, 103 C.R.2d 711, 16 P.3d 130, 12 Summary (10th), Real Property, §§595, 596, plaintiff landowners sought damages for costs incurred as a result of defendant city's arbitrary and unreasonable rent adjustment hearings. The court set forth the appropriate standard for determining "when the actions of an administrative body charged with implementing the law are arbitrary and conscience-shocking in a constitutional sense." (24 C.4th 1034.)

(a) To prevail in an action for damages for a substantive due process violation under 42 U.S.C., §1983, "a plaintiff must at least show that state officials are guilty of grave unfairness in the discharge of their legal responsibilities. Only a substantial infringement of state law prompted by personal or group animus, or a deliberate flouting of the law that trammels significant personal or property rights, qualifies for relief under § 1983. ... Inadvertent errors, honest mistakes, agency confusion, even negligence in the performance of official duties, do not warrant redress under this statute." (24 C.4th 1034, quoting federal appellate case.)

(b) Here, "a deliberate flouting of the law may be said to have occurred if the city's demands for information and other procedural demands were so excessive and irrelevant to the regulatory task at hand as to lead a court to conclude that such demands were imposed not in order to obtain more information or increase the reliability of the eventual decision, but rather to obstruct or discourage landlords from either requesting or obtaining reasonable rent increases to which they are constitutionally entitled." (24 C.4th 1036.)

Barr* (2006) 142 C.A.4th 1260, 1279, 1282, 48 C.R.3d 715 [substantial evidence supported plaintiff's claim that CHP officers wrongfully retaliated against him after he exercised free speech rights by making complaint about officer's improper conduct; plaintiff was not required to prove lack of probable cause for repeated traffic and equipment stops and citations]; *Benn v. 8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 821

[§ 821] Federal Statutory Rights.

(1) In General. The phrase "and laws" in 42 U.S.C., §1983 is not limited to civil rights or equal protection laws; the statute creates a cause of action for deprivation of any federal statutory right. (Maine v. Thiboutot (1980) 448 U.S. 1, 100 S.Ct. 2502, 2506, 65 L.Ed.2d 555, 561; see Wright v. Roanoke Redevelopment & Housing Authority (1987) 479 U.S. 418, 107 S.Ct. 766, 93 L.Ed.2d 781 [low-income tenants charged higher rent than allowable under Brooke Amendment to Housing Act of 1937 were entitled to bring §1983 action]; 94 Harv. L. Rev. 223 [Maine v. Thiboutot]; 92 Cal. L. Rev. 1119 [arguing that No Child Left Behind Act should be enforceable under 42 U.S.C., §1983]; 9 Hastings Const. L. Q. 487 [same]; 4 Rotunda, §19.20; 15 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Civil Rights §70.) Despite the broad language in Maine v. Thiboutot, supra, the Supreme Court has recognized two exceptions to the applicability of 42 U.S.C., §1983 to statutory violations.

(2) Exception: Comprehensive Enforcement Provided by Other Statute. Middlesex County Sewerage Authority v. National Sea Clammers Assn. (1981) 453 U.S. 1, 101 S.Ct. 2615, 69 L.Ed.2d 435, involved alleged violations of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C., §1251 et seq.) and the Marine Protection, Research, and Sanctuaries Act of 1972 (33 U.S.C., §1401 et seq.): "[W]hen 'a state official is alleged to have violated a federal statute which provides its own comprehensive enforcement scheme, the requirements of that enforcement procedure may not be bypassed by bringing suit directly under §1983.' " (101 S.Ct. 2626, 69 L.Ed.2d 4560.) (See Smith v. Robinson (1984) 468 U.S. 992, 104 S.Ct. 3457, 3470, 82 L.Ed.2d 746, 766 [Education of the Handicapped Act was sole remedy for handicapped child asserting right to free appropriate education under either Act itself or Equal Protection Clause]; cf. White v. California (1987) 195 C.A.3d 452, 463, 240 C.R. 732 [Act contains no class action provision; hence, plaintiff could bring §1983 class action based on systematic exclusion of his class from Act entitlements].)

(3) Exception: No Enforceable Right. An exception occurs when the statute in question does not create enforceable "rights" under 42 U.S.C., §1983. In Pennhurst State School & Hosp. v. Halderman (1981) 451 U.S. 1, 101 S.Ct. 1531, 67 L.Ed.2d 694, the main issue was whether there was a private right of action to enforce the provisions of the Developmentally Disabled Assistance and Bill of Rights Act of 1975 (former 42 U.S.C., §6000 et seq.), a federal-state grant program providing federal funds for treatment of the disabled to states complying with the conditions of the Act.

"[R]espondents here, unlike the plaintiff in Thiboutot who alleged that state law prevented him from receiving federal funds to which he was entitled, can only claim that the state plan has not provided adequate 'assurances' to the Secretary. It is at least an open question whether an individual's interest in having a State provide those 'assurances' is a 'right secured' by the laws of the United States within the meaning of §1983." (101 S.Ct. 1545, 67 L.Ed.2d 714.) (See Jett v. Dallas Independent School Dist. (1989) 491 U.S. 701, 109 S.Ct. 2702, 2722, 105 L.Ed.2d 598, 627 [action under 42 U.S.C., §1983 is exclusive federal damages remedy for violation of 42 U.S.C., §1981 (supra, §814) by state actor]; Golden State Transit Corp. v. Los Angeles (1989) 493 U.S. 103, 110 S.Ct. 444, 452, 107 L.Ed.2d 420, 432 [National Labor Relations Act grants rights enforceable under 42 U.S.C., §1983]; Wilder v. Virginia Hosp. Assn. (1990) 496 U.S. 498, 110 S.Ct. 2510, 110 L.Ed.2d 455 [Boren Amendment, imposing binding obligation on states participating in Medicaid program to adopt reasonable and adequate rates, is enforceable under 42 U.S.C., §1983 by health care providers]; Blessing v. Freestone (1997) 520 U.S. 329, 117 S.Ct. 1353, 1361, 137 L.Ed.2d 569, 584 [state agency compliance with Title IV-D of Social Security Act is not federal right enforceable by private individual under 42 U.S.C., §1983]; 103 Harv. L. Rev. 320 [Jett]; 104 Harv. L. Rev. 339 [Golden State Transit Corp.].)

In Suter v. Artist M. (1992) 503 U.S. 347, 112 S.Ct. 1360, 118 L.Ed.2d 1, the Court held that the Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act of 1980 did not create a right of private individuals to enforce its provisions by an action under the Act or under 42 U.S.C., §1983.

In Soldal v. Cook County, Illinois (1992) 506 U.S. 56, 113 S.Ct. 538, 121 L.Ed.2d 450, plaintiff mobilehome owners sued deputy sheriffs and the owner and manager of a trailer park for disconnecting their trailer and towing it off the park premises. The Court of Appeals held that the Fourth Amendment protection against search and seizures applies only where privacy and liberty interests are infringed, and that the action would not lie where only possessory interests were involved. Held, the language of the Fourth Amendment, and the case law, make it clear that the Amendment protects property as well as privacy. (113 S.Ct. 544, 549, 121 L.Ed.2d 459, 465.)

In Gonzaga University v. Doe (2002) 536 U.S. 273, 122 S.Ct. 2268, 153 L.Ed.2d 309, the Court held that the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), which prohibits federal funding of educational institutions that release educational records to unauthorized persons, is a funding provision that does not provide a basis for private enforcement under 42 U.S.C., §1983. That section may be used only to assert violations of federal rights, and not merely violations of federal law. (122 S.Ct. 2275, 153 L.Ed.2d 321.) FERPA lacks the "rights creating" language necessary to show requisite congressional intent to create new rights. The focus of the statute is on the direction to the Secretary of Education to withhold funds and not on the individual entitlements of students and parents. (122 S.Ct. 2277, 153 L.Ed.2d 323.) (See 116 Harv. L. Rev. 372 [Gonzaga].)

(2) Exception: Comprehensive Enforcement Provided by Other Statute. The availability of a private judicial remedy does not conclusively establish congressional intent to preclude relief under 42 U.S.C., §1983. (Rancho Palos Verdes, Calif. v. Abrams (2005) 544 U.S. 113, 125 S.Ct. 1453, 1459, 161 L.Ed.2d 316, 327 [because Telecommunications Act provides comprehensive scheme to enforce its limitations on local zoning authority, private person had no right of enforcement under §1983].)

Los Angeles* (2007) 150 C.A.4th 478, 494, 58 C.R.3d 563 [federal Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act did not create enforceable private rights in nonprofit agency that contracted with county to provide family and foster services to dependent minors].

[§ 822] High-Speed Police Pursuit.

In Sacramento v. Lewis (1998) 523 U.S. 833, 118 S.Ct. 1708, 140 L.Ed.2d 1043, the question was whether, in a high-speed police pursuit case, the legal standard of conduct necessary to establish a police officer's violation of substantive due process under the Fourteenth Amendment is "shocks the conscience," "deliberate indifference," or "reckless disregard." Held, the proper standard is "shocks the conscience." "[H]igh-speed chases with no intent to harm suspects physically or to worsen their legal plight do not give rise to liability under the Fourteenth Amendment, redressible by an action under 42 U.S.C., §1983." (118 S.Ct. 1720, 140 L.Ed.2d 1062.)

(a) There is no Fourth Amendment seizure where a pursuing police car seeks to stop a suspect. Thus, liability in this case does not turn on an application of the reasonableness standard governing searches and seizures. Instead, the due process standard of liability for constitutionally arbitrary executive action applies. (118 S.Ct. 1715, 140 L.Ed.2d 1056.)

(b) Due process rules are not subject to mechanical application. Deliberate indifference that shocks the conscience in one environment, such as in ignoring the medical needs of a prisoner, may not be so patently egregious in another, such as in a prison riot, "and our concern with preserving the constitutional proportions of substantive due process demands an exact analysis of circumstances before any abuse of power is condemned as conscience-shocking." (118 S.Ct. 1718, 140 L.Ed.2d 1060.) It is a police officer's duty to restore and maintain lawful order. An officer must act decisively and show restraint at the same time. Often his decisions must be made in haste and under pressure, without time to deliberate. (118 S.Ct. 1720, 140 L.Ed.2d 1061.) "[W]hen unforeseen circumstances demand an officer's instant judgment, even precipitate recklessness fails to inch close enough to harmful purpose" to shock the conscience. (118 S.Ct. 1720, 140 L.Ed.2d 1062.)

Four justices concurred in three separate opinions (118 S.Ct. 1721, 1722, 140 L.Ed.2d 1063, 1065), and three justices concurred in the judgment in two separate opinions (118 S.Ct. 1723, 140 L.Ed.2d 1065, 1066). California* (1998) 63 C.A.4th 188, 204, 209, 73 C.R.2d 571 [police maneuver used to stop fleeing car was "seizure" within meaning of Fourth Amendment, but there could be no liability under 42 U.S.C., §1983 where seizure was reasonable]; 112 Harv. 8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 823

[§ 823] Voluntary Commitment.

In Zinerman v. Burch (1990) 494 U.S. 113, 110 S.Ct. 975, 108 L.Ed.2d 100, plaintiff Burch, under medication, requested admission to and treatment at a Florida state mental hospital. After his release, he filed a claim against doctors, administrators, and staff members at the hospital, alleging that defendants had violated state law by admitting him as a voluntary patient when they knew or should have known that he was incapable of giving an informed consent, and that their failure to give him a hearing to challenge his admission and treatment was a denial of due process. Held, the complaint was sufficient to state a cause of action.

Defendant petitioners relied on Parratt v. Taylor (1981) 451 U.S. 527, 101 S.Ct. 1908, 68 L.Ed.2d 420, and Hudson v. Palmer (1984) 468 U.S. 517, 104 S.Ct. 3194, 82 L.Ed.2d 393, infra, §825, holding that a deprivation of a constitutionally protected property interest by random unauthorized conduct does not give rise to a claim under 42 U.S.C., §1983 unless the state fails to provide a postdeprivation remedy. (110 S.Ct. 985, 108 L.Ed.2d 116.) These cases were not controlling:

"[P]etitioners cannot escape §1983 liability by characterizing their conduct as a 'random, unauthorized' violation of Florida law which the state was not in a position to predict or avert, so that all the process Burch could possibly be due is a postdeprivation damages remedy. Burch, according to the allegations of his complaint, was deprived of a substantial liberty interest without either valid consent or an involuntary placement hearing, by the very state officials charged with the power to deprive mental patients of their liberty and the duty to implement procedural safeguards. Such a deprivation is foreseeable, due to the nature of mental illness, and will occur, if at all, at a predictable point in the admission process. Unlike Parratt and Hudson, this case does not represent the special instance of the Mathews due process analysis where postdeprivation process is all that is due because no deprivation safeguards would be of use in preventing the kind of deprivation alleged." (110 S.Ct. 990, 108 L.Ed.2d 122.) Four justices joined in a dissent. (On Mathews v. Eldridge (1976) 424 U.S. 319, 96 S.Ct. 893, 47 L.Ed.2d 18, see supra, §402.)

XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS

D. Federal Civil Rights Legislation.

1. Original Civil Rights Acts.

d. Elements of Cause of Action.

1. Deprivation of Rights.

ee. Distinction: Ordinary Tort.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 824

[§ 824] Distinction: Ordinary Tort.

(1) Defamation. In Paul v. Davis (1976) 424 U.S. 693, 96 S.Ct. 1155, 47 L.Ed.2d 405, the chiefs of police of two Kentucky counties, in a combined effort to alert merchants to shoplifters during the Christmas season, distributed a flyer to 800 merchants in the Louisville metropolitan area. The flyer warned of "active shoplifters," and contained the photographs and names of persons arrested during 1971 and 1972, including respondent Davis. Davis had been arrested, had pleaded not guilty, and had never been brought to trial; the charge was dismissed shortly after circulation of the flyer. When the flyer was brought to the attention of Davis' employer, he was warned about becoming involved in a similar situation in the future. Thus, Davis had a tort cause of action for defamation; but instead of suing in tort in state court, he brought an action against the two police chiefs under the federal Civil Rights Act (42 U.S.C., §1983). Held, he had no cause of action.

(a) Davis' theory was that use of the phrase "Active Shoplifters" by officers of the county government, together with his name and picture, deprived him of liberty protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. This construction of the Civil Rights statute "would seem almost necessarily to result in every legally cognizable injury which may have been inflicted by a state official acting under 'color of law' establishing a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment." (96 S.Ct. 1159, 47 L.Ed.2d 412.)

(b) The plurality opinion in Screws v. United States (1945) 325 U.S. 91, 65 S.Ct. 1031, 89 L.Ed. 1495, dealing with the criminal counterpart of 42 U.S.C., §1983 (see supra, §815), pointed out that Congress did not make all torts of state officials federal crimes; it brought within the statute only those acts that deprived a person of some rights secured by the U.S. Constitution or laws. Monroe v. Pape (1961) 365 U.S. 167, 81 S.Ct. 473, 5 L.Ed.2d 492, infra, §828, is to the same effect. (96 S.Ct. 1160, 47 L.Ed.2d 413.)

(c) Defamation calls for no exception. "[T]he weight of our decisions establishes no constitutional doctrine converting every defamation by a public official into a deprivation of liberty within the meaning of the Due Process Clause." (96 S.Ct. 1161, 47 L.Ed.2d 414.) In cases where state action altered or extinguished a right or status previously recognized by state law, the procedural guarantees of the Due Process Clause were properly invoked. But the interest in reputation is quite different from the "liberty" or "property" recognized in these decisions. It is simply one of a number that the state may protect by virtue of its tort law, providing a forum for vindication of those interests by means of damage actions. (96 S.Ct. 1166, 47 L.Ed.2d 419.) (See Ellenberger v. Espinosa (1994) 30 C.A.4th 943, 949, 36 C.R.2d 360 [under Paul v. Davis and Siebert v. Gilley (1991) 500 U.S. 226, 111 S.Ct. 1789, 114 L.Ed.2d 277, publication of defamatory statements, even if accompanied by loss of business or other property interests, does not violate federal Constitution]; Higginbotham v. King (1997) 54 C.A.4th 1040, 1046, 63 C.R.2d 114 [same]; 90 Harv. L. Rev. 86 [Paul v. Davis]; 17 Santa Clara L. Rev. 959 [same]; 30 Stanf. L. Rev. 191 [same].)

(2) False Imprisonment. In Baker v. McCollan (1979) 443 U.S. 137, 99 S.Ct. 2689, 61 L.Ed.2d 433, the police, under a valid warrant, arrested the wrong man, and detained him 3 days over a holiday weekend until information establishing his identity was received. He alleged that defendant sheriff had negligently failed to establish identification procedures that would have revealed his innocence. Held, no cause of action was stated. There may have been a cause of action under state tort law, but 42 U.S.C., §1983 imposes liability only for violations of rights protected by the Constitution. Just as in Estelle v. Gamble (1976) 429 U.S. 97, 97 S.Ct. 285, 50 L.Ed.2d 251, infra, §826, in which it was said that medical malpractice does not become a constitutional violation merely because the victim is a prisoner, "false imprisonment does not become a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment merely because the defendant is a state official." (99 S.Ct. 2696, 61 L.Ed.2d 443.) The Court observed, however, that indefinite detention in the face of repeated protests of innocence might in effect deny the accused a speedy trial and therefore amount to a deprivation of liberty without due process of law. (99 S.Ct. 2694, 2695, 61 L.Ed.2d 441, 442.) (See 11 A.L.R.4th 228 [civil liability for attempting to deprogram adult member of religious sect].)

(3) Other Torts. In Garcia v. Superior Court (1990) 50 C.3d 728, 739, 268 C.R. 779, 789 P.2d 960, 5 Summary (10th), Torts, §821, the court held that the state's failure to prevent a parolee who had previously been convicted of murdering his wife, from murdering his estranged lover, did not give rise to a cause of action under 42 U.S.C., §1983. (See Collins v. Harker Heights, Texas (1992) 503 U.S. 115, 112 S.Ct. 1061, 117 L.Ed.2d 261, infra, §832 [no action against city under 42 U.S.C., §1983 for alleged failure to train or warn employees of known hazards in workplace].)

[§ 825] Fourth Amendment.

(1) In General. In Hudson v. Palmer (1984) 468 U.S. 517, 104 S.Ct. 3194, 82 L.Ed.2d 393, plaintiff's claim was based on a shakedown search of his cell for the purpose of harassing him, and the seizure and destruction of noncontraband property. Held, there was no violation of plaintiff's Fourth Amendment rights, and hence, no cause of action under 42 U.S.C., §1983.

(a) "[W]e hold that society is not prepared to recognize as legitimate any subjective expectation of privacy that a prisoner might have in his prison cell and, accordingly, the Fourth Amendment proscription against unreasonable searches does not apply within the confines of the prison cell. The recognition of privacy rights for prisoners in their individual cells simply cannot be reconciled with the concept of incarceration and the needs and objectives of penal institutions." (104 S.Ct. 3200, 82 L.Ed.2d 402.)

(b) The Fourth Amendment's proscription against unreasonable seizures is also inapplicable in a prison cell. "Prison officials must be free to seize from cells any articles which, in their view, disserve legitimate institutional interests." (104 S.Ct. 3201, 82 L.Ed.2d 404, footnote 8.) (See Albright v. Oliver (1994) 510 U.S. 266, 114 S.Ct. 807, 127 L.Ed.2d 114 [action under 42 U.S.C., §1983 claiming infringement of right to be free from prosecution should be judged under Fourth Amendment]; 92 Harv. L. Rev. 610 [prisoner's suits]; 19 Loyola L. Rev. 551 [Hudson v. Palmer]; 64 Am.Jur. Trials 425 [Asserting Claims of Unconstitutional Prison Conditions Under 42 U.S.C., §1983].)

(2) Applicable Standard. The validity of a claim under 42 U.S.C., §1983 must be judged by the standard that governs the particular constitutional right involved, not by a generic "substantive due process" standard. In Graham v. Connor (1989) 490 U.S. 386, 109 S.Ct. 1865, 1870, 104 L.Ed.2d 443, 453, 454, petitioner claimed that police officers used excessive force in the course of an investigative stop and detention. The district court, using a generalized "excessive force" test, granted respondents' motion for a directed verdict, and the Court of Appeals affirmed. Held, the Fourth Amendment's "objective reasonableness" standard should have been applied. 42 U.S.C., §1983 is not a source of substantive rights; it provides a method for vindicating rights conferred elsewhere. Hence, analysis of an excessive force claim begins by identifying the specific constitutional right involved. The claim is then judged by the standard that governs that right. (109 S.Ct. 1870, 104 L.Ed.2d 453, 454.) A claim that arises in the context of an arrest, investigatory stop, or other seizure of a person invokes the Fourth Amendment and is analyzed under its objective reasonableness test, not under a substantive due process approach. (109 S.Ct. 1871, 1872, 104 L.Ed.2d 454, 456.) (See 22 Pacific L. J. 157.)

[§ 826] Eighth Amendment.

In Estelle v. Gamble (1976) 429 U.S. 97, 97 S.Ct. 285, 50 L.Ed.2d 251, respondent, an inmate of a Texas prison, brought an action under 42 U.S.C., §1983 against prison officials and doctors, alleging violation of the Eighth Amendment by failure to give him proper medical care for an injury suffered while performing a work assignment. Held: (a) The deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of prisoners is an "unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain" proscribed by the Eighth Amendment, whether the indifference is manifested by doctors in their response to the prisoner's needs, or by guards denying or delaying access to medical care or intentionally interfering with treatment prescribed. (97 S.Ct. 291, 50 L.Ed.2d 260.) (b) However, the inadvertent or negligent failure to diagnose or treat a medical condition does not support a claim under the Amendment. "Medical malpractice does not become a constitutional violation merely because the victim is a prisoner." (97 S.Ct. 292, 50 L.Ed.2d 261.) (See Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 C.3d 159, 177, 216 C.R. 661, 703 P.2d 1, 6 Summary (10th), Torts, §1013 ["woefully inadequate" medical treatment may be basis for action under 42 U.S.C., §1983]; West v. Superior Court (1993) 5 C.4th 725, 746, 21 C.R.2d 357, 855 P.2d 375 [distinguishing Estelle v. Gamble].)

In Hudson v. McMillian (1992) 503 U.S. 1, 112 S.Ct. 995, 998, 999, 117 L.Ed.2d 156, 165, 166, the Court, using the approach of Whitley v. Albers (1986) 475 U.S. 312, 106 S.Ct. 1078, 89 L.Ed.2d 251, held that the use of excessive physical force against a prisoner may constitute cruel and unusual punishment even though the inmate does not suffer serious injury. The Court distinguished Wilson v. Seiter (1991) 501 U.S. 294, 111 S.Ct. 2321, 115 L.Ed.2d 271. (112 S.Ct. 999, 117 L.Ed.2d 166.) Two justices dissented.

Helling v. McKinney (1993) 509 U.S. 25, 113 S.Ct. 2475, 125 L.Ed.2d 22, held that a prisoner stated a cause of action by alleging that prison authorities had, with deliberate indifference, exposed him to levels of environmental tobacco smoke that posed an unreasonable risk of serious damage to his future health. Two justices dissented.

In Farmer v. Brennan (1994) 511 U.S. 825, 114 S.Ct. 1970, 128 L.Ed.2d 811, an action by a preoperative transsexual who claimed to have been raped and beaten while incarcerated with other males in a federal prison, the Court for the first time defined the "deliberate indifference" standard it had applied in Estelle v. Gamble and Helling v. McKinney. The test is not an objective one. "[A] prison official cannot be found liable under the Eighth Amendment for denying an inmate humane conditions of confinement unless the official knows of and disregards an excessive risk to inmate health or safety; the official must both be aware of facts from which the inference could be drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm exists, and he must also draw the inference." (114 S.Ct. 1979, 128 L.Ed.2d 825.) (See 66 A.L.R.5th 111 [Prisoner's Right To Die or Refuse Medical Treatment]; 64 Am.Jur. 1. Original Civil Rights Acts.

d. Elements of Cause of Action.
2. Rights of Prisoners.
cc. Fourteenth Amendment.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 827

[§ 827] Fourteenth Amendment.

In Daniels v. Williams (1986) 474 U.S. 327, 106 S.Ct. 662, 88 L.Ed.2d 662, plaintiff prisoner, who fell over a pillow that had been negligently left on a stairway by a correctional officer, claimed that he had been deprived of his liberty interest in freedom from bodily harm without due process of law. Held, there was no cause of action under 42 U.S.C., §1983. Prior decisions support the "traditional and commonsense notion that the Due Process Clause, like its forebear in the Magna Carta, ... was 'intended to secure the individual from the arbitrary exercise of the powers of government.'" (106 S.Ct. 665, 88 L.Ed.2d 668.) Hence, "[t]he Due Process Clause is simply not implicated by a negligent act of an official causing unintended loss of or injury to life, liberty, or property." (106 S.Ct. 663, 665, 88 L.Ed.2d 666, repudiating contrary statement in Parratt v. Taylor (1981) 451 U.S. 527, 101 S.Ct. 1908, 68 L.Ed.2d 420.) (See Davidson v. Cannon (1986) 474 U.S. 344, 106 S.Ct. 668, 670, 88 L.Ed.2d 677, 682 [Daniels' reasoning applied to prison officials' negligent failure to protect plaintiff from assault by fellow prisoner].)

The holdings in Daniels and Davidson were based on the absence of a "deprivation" within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. In Hudson v. Palmer (1984) 468 U.S. 517, 104 S.Ct. 3194, 82 L.Ed.2d 393, supra, §825, the Court assumed that the intentional destruction of the prisoner's noncontraband property was a "deprivation," but held that it was not "without due process of law."

(a) "[W]hen deprivations of property are effected through random and unauthorized conduct of a state employee, predeprivation procedures are simply 'impracticable' since the state cannot know when such deprivations will occur." (104 S.Ct. 3203, 82 L.Ed.2d 407.)

(b) "[A]n unauthorized intentional deprivation of property by a state employee does not constitute a violation of the procedural requirements of the Due Process Clause ... if a meaningful postdeprivation remedy for the loss is available." (104 S.Ct. 3204, 82 L.Ed.2d 407.) There are several common law remedies available under Virginia law by which plaintiff can obtain adequate compensation for his loss. (104 S.Ct. 3204, 82 L.Ed.2d 408.)

In Irwin v. Hemet (1994) 22 C.A.4th 507, 27 C.R.2d 433, the parents and children of a city jail inmate who committed suicide while in jail brought a wrongful death action against the city, the jail's watch commander, and three officers, and included a claim for deprivation of federal constitutional rights under 42 U.S.C., §1983. Held, plaintiffs could not state a claim against the individual defendants under 42 U.S.C., §1983. While the section contains no state-of-mind requirement, the underlying constitutional violation still needs to be proved and a particular mental state may therefore need to be established. (22 C.A.4th 519, citing Daniels v. Williams.) Plaintiffs alleged deprivation of their liberty interest in the continuation of the companionship and society between a parent and child. Deliberate indifference by defendants was the minimum required mental state, and this could not be established because the individual defendants presented un rebutted evidence that they neither knew nor should have known that the decedent was likely to kill himself. (22 C.A.4th 523, 525.) (See Lucas v. Los Angeles (1996) 47 C.A.4th 277, 287, footnote 4, 54 C.R.2d 655 [Irwin appears to have been decided before Farmer v. Brennan (1994) 511 U.S. 825, 114 S.Ct. 1970, 128 L.Ed.2d 811, supra, §826, because Irwin applies objective, rather than subjective, test for deliberate indifference]; Kentucky Dept. of Corrections v. Thompson (1989) 490 U.S. 454, 109 S.Ct. 1904, 104 L.Ed.2d 506 [regulations containing nonexhaustive list of categories of excludable prison visitors did not give prisoners liberty interest protected by Due Process Clause]; 66 A.L.R.5th 237 [Validity, Construction, and Application of Restrictions on Use or Possession of Tobacco Products in Correctional Facilities].)

XI. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS

D. Federal Civil Rights Legislation.

1. Original Civil Rights Acts.

d. Elements of Cause of Action.

3. Color of State Law.

aa. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions.

8 Witkin Sum. Cal. Law Const Law § 828

[§ 828] Constitutional and Statutory Provisions.

In Monroe v. Pape (1961) 365 U.S. 167, 81 S.Ct. 473, 5 L.Ed.2d 492, plaintiffs, a black family, alleged that 13 Chicago police officers broke into their home without a warrant or search warrant, physically mishandled them, ransacked their home, held the father for 10 hours without charge, without bringing him before a magistrate, and without permitting him to call his family or attorney, and finally released him without any charge. Held, the complaint stated a cause of action against the officers, but not the city of Chicago.

On the crucial question of the meaning of "under color of" state law, the Court explained that it encompassed both action, i.e., misuse of power, and inaction, i.e., failure to enforce laws. (a) The definition formulated in United States v. Classic (1941) 313 U.S. 299, 61 S.Ct. 1031, 85 L.Ed. 1368, and Screws v. United States (1945) 325 U.S. 91, 65 S.Ct. 1031, 89 L.Ed. 1495, with respect to 18 U.S.C., §242 (supra, §815) is applicable to 42 U.S.C., §1983: " 'Misuse of power, possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of state law, is action taken 'under color of' state law.' " (81 S.Ct. 482, 5 L.Ed.2d 503.) (b) "It is abundantly clear that one reason the legislation was passed was to afford a federal right in federal courts because, by reason of prejudice, passion, neglect, intolerance or otherwise, state laws might not be enforced and the claims of citizens to the enjoyment of rights, privileges, and immunities guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment might be denied by the state agencies." (81 S.Ct. 480, 5 L.Ed.2d 501.) (For decisions overruling Monroe's denial of right of action against municipalities, see infra, §830.)

The issue was involved in several later cases. (See Polk County v. Dodson (1981) 454 U.S. 312, 102 S.Ct. 445, 453, 70 L.Ed.2d 509, 516 [in representing indigents, public defender exercises private function, i.e., giving undivided loyalty to client's interests, and hence does not act under color of state law]; Rendell-Baker v. Kohn (1982) 457 U.S. 830, 102 S.Ct. 2764, 2771, 73 L.Ed.2d 418, 425 [although private school had fiscal and regulatory relationship with public authorities, its decisions concerning discharge of employees were not influenced by state regulation and hence, were not made under color of state law]; Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co. (1982) 457 U.S. 922, 102 S.Ct. 2744, 73 L.Ed.2d 482 [corporate creditor acted under color of state law in using attachment procedure requiring participation by state officials]; Tower v. Glover (1984) 467 U.S. 914, 104 S.Ct. 2820, 2824, 81 L.Ed.2d 758, 764 [public defenders who conspired with state officials to secure their client's conviction acted under color of state law]; 4 Rotunda, §19.17; 96 Harv. L. Rev. 241 [Lugar]; 21 Hastings Const. L. Q. 405 [argument for considering attorneys for SLAPP plaintiffs as state actors subject to liability under 42 U.S.C., §1983]; 15 Am.Jur.2d (2000 ed.), Civil Rights §72 et seq.)

In West v. Atkins (1988) 487 U.S. 42, 108 S.Ct. 2250, 101 L.Ed.2d 40, the question presented was "whether a physician who is under contract with the State to provide medical services to inmates at a state-prison hospital on a part-time basis" acts under color of state law in treating an inmate. In holding that he did, the court distinguished Polk County v. Dodson, supra, and followed Estelle v. Gamble (1976) 429 U.S. 97, 97 S.Ct. 285, 50 L.Ed.2d 251, supra, §826.

(a) "We now make explicit what was implicit in our holding in Estelle: Respondent, as a physician employed by North Carolina to provide medical services to state prison inmates, acted under color of state law for purposes of §1983 when undertaking his duties in treating petitioner's injury. Such conduct is fairly attributable to the State." (108 S.Ct. 2258, 101 L.Ed.2d 53.)

(b) The only medical care petitioner could receive for his injury was that provided by the state; and if the doctor misused his power by demonstrating deliberate indifference to petitioner's serious medical needs, "the resultant deprivation was caused, in the sense relevant for state-action inquiry, by the State's exercise of its right to punish West by incarceration and to deny him a venue independent of the State to obtain needed medical care." (108 S.Ct. 2259, 101 L.Ed.2d 53.)

(c) The fact that the state employed the doctor under a contractual arrangement does not alter the analysis. "Whether a physician is on the state payroll or is paid by contract, the dispositive issue concerns the relationship among the State, the physician, and the prisoner. Contracting out prison medical care does not relieve the State of its constitutional duty to provide adequate medical treatment to those in its custody, and it does not deprive the State's prisoners of the means to vindicate their Eighth Amendment rights. The State bore an affirmative obligation to provide adequate medical care to West; the State delegated that function to respondent Atkins; and respondent voluntarily assumed that obligation by contract." (108 S.Ct. 2259, 101 L.Ed.2d 54.)

(d) The fact that the employment was part-time is likewise immaterial. "It is the physician's function while working for the State, not the amount of time he spends in performance of those duties or the fact that he may be employed by others to perform similar duties, that determines whether he is acting under color of state law." (108 S.Ct. 2259, 101 L.Ed.2d 54.)

[§ 829] Custom With Force of Law.

In Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co. (1970) 398 U.S. 144, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 26 L.Ed.2d 142, petitioner, a white schoolteacher from New York, went to defendant's Hattiesburg restaurant with six black children who were students in her Mississippi Freedom School. The children were offered service, but petitioner was refused service and was arrested and charged with vagrancy. In her suit for damages, under 42 U.S.C., §1983, verdict and judgment were given for defendant. Held, reversed.

(a) Plaintiff must prove deprivation of a right "under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage." "Custom," as used in the statute, requires state involvement, not simply a long-standing social practice of people in the locality; i.e., the custom "must have the force of law by virtue of the persistent practice of state officials." (90 S.Ct. 1613, 26 L.Ed.2d 159.)
