Acknowledgments

Robin Leonard gratefully acknowledges the following people:

Joan and Bob Leonard. Mom and Dad let me live in their house for nearly a month, 3,000 miles from my own home, away from telephone calls, meetings, and the stress of day-to-day work life so I could actually write this book.

Mary Randolph, senior legal editor at Nolo. Mary is the perfect editor. Her ability to take a good, but disorganized, submission and turn it into a great and easy-to-use guide made writing the second, third, and fourth drafts pleasurable.

Steve Elias would like to thank:

Lisa Guerin for her unparalleled editing skills.

The Nolo production and marketing staff for their creative skills and hard work in producing and distributing this book.

Get Outside Help to Design a Repayment Plan	14

Chances are good that you've picked up this book because your debts have become overwhelming. Maybe you are facing foreclosure on your home, repossession of your car, or constant letters and phone calls from debt collectors. Or perhaps, you've realized that your debts have grown far beyond your ability to repay them, and you're wondering if there's anything you can do to get back in control of your finances.

Chapter 13 bankruptcy could be the best way to resolve your debt problems. When you file for Chapter 13, you agree to repay all or a portion of your debts over time, under the supervision of the bankruptcy court. Chapter 13 allows you to keep your property while using your income to repay some or all of your debts. In contrast, Chapter 7 bankruptcy allows you to immediately wipe out many debts, but in exchange, you must give up any property you own that isn't protected by state or federal exemption laws. (You'll find more information on Chapter 7, including how to decide whether Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 bankruptcy is the better remedy for your debt problems, in "Is Chapter 13 Right for You?" below.)

This book explains every step in the Chapter 13 process, including who can use Chapter 13, how to file the necessary papers, and how to come up with a workable repayment plan. To help you get started, this chapter provides an overview of Chapter 13 bankruptcy—how it works and what it will do for you. It also explains other types of bankruptcy relief and options for dealing with your debts outside of bankruptcy.

An Overview of Chapter 13 Bankruptcy

Chapter 13 can be a good solution for people who need time to pay off certain debts and who have enough income to meet the Chapter 13 requirements. In Chapter 13, you get to keep all of your property, regardless of its value. However, you will have to pay your unsecured debtors (those to whom you owe credit card debts, medical debts, and most court judgments, for example) the value of the property you would lose if you filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy.

If you are facing foreclosure on your home, Chapter 13 provides a powerful remedy. You can keep your home by proposing a feasible repayment plan that includes your missed payments, as long as you stay current on your mortgage.

Here is a brief overview of the Chapter 13 bankruptcy process, from start to finish.

Costs

Like everyone who files for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, you have to pay the filing fee of $274, due either when you file your initial bankruptcy paperwork or in four equal installments (with the court's permission). You'll also have to pay a fee—typically about $100 total—to the credit counseling agency where you receive your mandatory prefiling credit counseling and postfiling budget counseling. If you decide to hire a lawyer to help you with your case, you can expect to pay an additional $3,000 or more. You won't have to come up with the entire lawyer's fee all at once, but you will probably have to make a sizable initial payment (maybe $1,500) and pay the rest off over the course of your plan.

If you decide to handle your own case, you most likely will need to pay for some assistance or information. This will typically consist of one or more of the following:

- one or more self-help law books on Chapter 13 bankruptcy, including this one (roughly $30–$50 a pop)
- a consultation with a lawyer (roughly $100–$200 an hour), and
- clerical assistance (help completing your forms) from a bankruptcy petition preparer (roughly $125–$250).

Filing Your Papers

To begin a Chapter 13 bankruptcy, you fill out a packet of forms in which you disclose your property, debts, and economic transactions during the several years before you file. If you are familiar with Chapter 7 bankruptcy, the official forms for Chapter 13 are pretty much the same.

In addition, you must prepare or produce:

- a form (Form 22C: Chapter 13 Statement of Current Monthly Income and Calculation of Commitment Period and Disposable Income) that determines whether your income is more or less than the median income in your state. This calculation determines how long your repayment plan must last. If your income is more than the median, your plan must last five years; if your income is less, you can propose a three-year plan. If your income is more than the median, you must also use this form to calculate how much disposable income you will have available to commit to your plan over the five-year period.
- your Chapter 13 repayment plan, showing how you propose to pay your mandatory debts (child support, tax arrearages, and so on) and, if you have sufficient income, at least a portion of your other debts over the three- to five-year period. (See Ch. 8 for help creating a repayment plan that the court will approve.)
- a certificate showing you have participated in a credit counseling program during the 180-day period before filing for bankruptcy (this requirement is explained in Ch. 9). If the credit counseling agency comes up with a proposed repayment plan that would allow you to pay your debts outside of bankruptcy, you must submit this as well.
- a certificate regarding child support obligations and your residence.
- pay stubs from the 60-day period before you file, along with a cover sheet.
- proof that you've filed your federal and state income tax returns for the previous four years.
- a copy of your most recent IRS income tax return (or a transcript of that return).

Chs. 7 through 9 take you through the form preparation and filing process, step by step.

The Repayment Plan

The repayment plan you submit with your other bankruptcy papers shows the judge how—and to what extent—you will pay off your debts.

Reducing Your Secured Debts

Chapter 13 allows you to reduce the amount you owe on certain secured debts to the value of the collateral. For instance, if you owe $20,000 on a car that is worth only $15,000, you can reduce the debt to $15,000 and pay off that amount in equal installments over the life of your Chapter 13 repayment plan. This remedy, called a “cram-down,” makes it easier to keep some kinds of collateral and still propose a plan that the judge will confirm.

Currently, you can't use Chapter 13 to cram down mortgages or other liens on your home. Congress has considered legislation to change this law and authorize bankruptcy judges to apply cramdown rules to mortgages, but those efforts have not been successful.

Even under the current law, you can sometimes get rid of liens on your home using Chapter 13. This might be an option if the current value of your home is less than or equal to what you owe on your first mortgage, leaving no equity to secure second or third mortgages. In this situation, you can use Chapter 13 to “strip off” the other mortgages and reclassify these obligations as unsecured debts that need not be paid off in full in your Chapter 13 bankruptcy. For more information on cramdowns, see Ch. 7 (disclosing liens in your bankruptcy forms) and Ch. 8 (reclassifying a debt or a portion of it as unsecured).

Which Debts Must Be Repaid

Chapter 13 requires you to pay some of your debts in full—and as much of your remaining debts as you can—from the income you have available. Generally, you will have to be able to show, at the beginning of your case, that you are likely to have enough income to remain current on debts that secure collateral you want to keep (for example, a mortgage or car note) while fully paying off your back taxes, back child support owed to a child or an ex-spouse, and any mortgage and secured debt arrearages you owe. And, as explained in Ch. 3, your plan also has to allow for total payments to your unsecured creditors that are at least as much as they would have received had you filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy. In other words, these payments must be at least equal to the value of your nonexempt property, less the costs and fees that would have to be paid in order to sell that property.

Of course, if you are willing to sell your home or give back your car, you can minimize the amount of debt you have to repay—and you don't have to pay back all of the back child support you owe during your Chapter 13 repayment period if the support is owed to a government agency rather than your ex-spouse or child.

EXAMPLE: Ken owes $27,000 in back child support. His ex-wife assigned this debt to the local government agency that enforces child support orders when she went on public assistance. Ken doesn't earn much income, and he would not be able to propose a confirmable Chapter 13 plan if he had to pay back the entire child support debt. Because he now owes the debt to a government agency rather than to his ex, however, he doesn't have to repay it all over the life of his plan. The remainder of the debt won't be discharged when his Chapter 13 case is over; he will continue to owe whatever he can't pay back after his bankruptcy case ends.

Length of the Repayment Period

You must propose a repayment plan that lasts for either three or five years, depending on your income. As you'll learn in Ch. 4, the bankruptcy law now imposes a number of requirements on filers whose average gross monthly income in the six months before they file for bankruptcy is more than the median income in their state. Among other things, these filers must propose a five-year repayment plan.

Filers whose average gross monthly income for the six-month period is less than the median generally have the choice of filing for either Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 bankruptcy. If they use Chapter 13, these filers may propose a three-year repayment plan and may use their actual expenses to calculate how much income they will have to devote to that plan.

Filers whose income is more than the median must propose a five-year repayment plan and must use certain standard expense amounts set by the IRS—rather than their actual expenses—to calculate their plan payments. As a result, higher-income filers may have to devote more of their money, for a longer period of time, to repaying their debts.

To learn more about how to calculate your income, find out whether your income is above or below your state's median, and figure out which expenses to use in calculating your plan payments, see Ch. 4.

Coming Up With a Plan the Judge Will Approve

You can't proceed with a Chapter 13 bankruptcy unless a bankruptcy judge approves (confirms) your plan. As mentioned, some creditors are entitled to receive 100% of what you owe them, while others may receive a much smaller percentage or even nothing at all if you won't have any disposable income left over after the mandatory debts are paid. For example, a Chapter 13 plan must propose that any child support you owe to a spouse or child (as opposed to a government agency) will be paid in full over the life of your plan; otherwise, the judge will not confirm it. On the other hand, the judge can confirm a plan that doesn't repay any portion of your credit card debts if you won't have any disposable income left after paying your child support obligations, whether you owe them to your former spouse or to the government.

TIP

You may have more—or less—disposable income than you think. Chapter 13 requires you to commit your “projected disposable income” to repaying your debts over the life of your plan. Some courts calculate your projected disposable income by subtracting your allowable expenses from your average income during the six months before you filed for bankruptcy, which may not give an accurate picture of your current income and expenses. Other courts look at your current income and expenses at the time you file, if those figures more accurately reflect your finances going forward. For more information on calculating your disposable income, see Ch. 5.

The Automatic Stay

When you file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, the bankruptcy court automatically issues an order preventing most creditors from taking action to collect a debt against you or your property. So, for example, if a foreclosure sale of your home or a vehicle repossession is in the works, the stay stops the sale or repossession dead in its tracks. (However, the automatic stay doesn't apply if you've had two previous bankruptcy cases dismissed in the past year.) The automatic stay is discussed in more detail in Ch. 2.

The Meeting of Creditors

Once you file your bankruptcy papers, the court will schedule a meeting of creditors within 20 to 40 days after your filing date—and send notice of this meeting to you and the creditors listed in your bankruptcy papers. You (and your spouse if you have filed jointly) are required to attend. You'll each need to bring two forms of identification—a picture ID and proof of your Social Security number.

The creditors' meeting is conducted by the Chapter 13 bankruptcy trustee for your court. No judge is present, and the meeting is held outside of court, often in the nearest federal building. Although the bankruptcy trustee is not a judge, you still have a duty to cooperate with the trustee.

A typical creditors' meeting lasts less than 15 minutes. The trustee will briefly go over any questions raised by the information you entered in the forms. The trustee is likely to be most interested in the fairness and legality of your proposed repayment plan and your ability to make the payments you have proposed. (See Ch. 8 for more on Chapter 13 plans.) The trustee has a vested interest in helping you successfully navigate the Chapter 13 process because the trustee gets paid a percentage of all payments doled out under your plan.

The trustee will also require proof that you have filed your tax returns for the previous four years. If you can't show that you filed returns, the trustee will continue the meeting to give you a chance to file these returns. Ultimately, you will not be allowed to proceed with a Chapter 13 bankruptcy unless and until you bring your tax filings up to date.

When the trustee is finished asking questions, any creditors who show up will have a chance to question you. Secured creditors will likely attend, especially if they have any objections to the plan you have proposed as part of your Chapter 13 filing. They may claim, for example, that your plan isn't feasible, that you're giving yourself too much time to pay your arrears on your car note or mortgage (if any), or that your plan proposes to pay less on a secured debt than the replacement value of the collateral.

An unsecured creditor who is scheduled to receive very little under your plan might show up, too, if that creditor thinks you should cut your living expenses and thereby increase your disposable income (the amount from which unsecured creditors are paid). This is more likely to happen if you are using your actual expenses to compute your disposable income (as filers whose income is less than the state median are allowed to do) instead of standard expense figures set by the IRS.

Come to the meeting prepared to negotiate with disgruntled creditors. If you agree to make changes to accommodate their objections, you must submit a modified plan. While the trustee won't use the creditors' meeting to rule on any objections raised by the creditors, the trustee may raise these objections on behalf of the creditors later, at your confirmation hearing before the judge.

The Confirmation Hearing

Chapter 13 bankruptcy requires at least one appearance before a bankruptcy judge. (In some districts, the judge comes into the courtroom only if the trustee or a creditor objects to your plan, and you want the judge to rule on the objection.) At this "confirmation hearing," which will be held shortly after the creditors' meeting, the judge either confirms (approves of) your proposed plan or sends you back to the drawing board for various reasons—usually because your plan doesn't meet Chapter 13 requirements. (For example, a judge might reject your plan because you don't have enough income to pay off your priority creditors in full while staying current on your secured debts, such as a car note or mortgage.)

You are entitled to amend your proposed plan until you get it right or the judge decides that it's hopeless. Each amendment requires a new confirmation hearing and appropriate written notice to your creditors. (For more information on the confirmation hearing and how to amend your plan and serve your creditors, see Ch. 10.) Once your plan is confirmed, it will govern your payments for the three- to five-year repayment period.

Possible Additional Court Appearances

If your plan is drafted correctly from the beginning, your confirmation hearing will probably be the only time you have to appear before the bankruptcy judge. However, you may need to make one or more additional appearances in court to:

- confirm your repayment plan if you later amend it
- value an asset, if your plan proposes to pay less for a car or other property than the creditor thinks it's worth (this might happen if you try to cram down the debt to the item's current value)
- respond to requests by a creditor or the trustee to dismiss your case or amend your plan
- respond to a creditor who opposes your right to discharge a particular debt (perhaps claiming that you incurred the debt through fraud)
- discharge a type of debt that can be discharged only if the judge decides that it should be (for example, to discharge a student loan because of undue hardship)
- eliminate a lien on your property that will survive your Chapter 13 bankruptcy unless the judge removes it, or
- reaffirm a debt that would otherwise not survive your bankruptcy.

Many of these procedures are covered in Ch. 11.

SEE AN EXPERT

You'll need to talk to a lawyer. For the best possible outcome, you should hire an attorney if any of these court appearances are required. While some judges and trustees may be helpful, we're sorry to say that many will make every attempt to make your life difficult—and bully you into hiring a lawyer—if you try to go it alone. See Ch. 15 for information on finding and working with a bankruptcy lawyer.

Making Your Payments Under the Plan

You are required to make your first payment under your proposed repayment plan within 30 days after you file for bankruptcy. If the bankruptcy court ultimately confirms your plan, your payment will be distributed to your creditors in accordance with the plan's terms. If your Chapter 13 bankruptcy never gets off the ground, the trustee will return the money to you, less administrative expenses.

Once your plan is confirmed, you will make payments, usually monthly, to the bankruptcy trustee, an official appointed by the bankruptcy court to oversee your case. The trustee will usually require you to agree to an order that takes the payments directly out of your bank account or paycheck. The trustee uses your monthly payments to pay the creditors in accordance with the payment order contained in your plan. The trustee also collects a statutory fee (roughly 8% to 10% of the amount you will pay under your plan).

If you can show that you have a history of regular income spread out in uneven payments over the year—for example, quarterly royalty payments or predictable seasonal income fluctuations (for instance, if you do construction work in a location that has severe winters)—your plan may provide for payments when you typically earn income, rather than every month.

If Something Goes Wrong

Three to five years is a long time. What happens if you can't make a payment or it becomes apparent—perhaps because of a change in your income or life circumstances—that you won't be able to complete your plan? If you miss only a payment or two, you can usually arrange with the trustee to make up the difference. If you lose your income stream, however, and you definitely won't be able to complete the plan, you can convert your bankruptcy to Chapter 7 (if that makes sense) or perhaps obtain a “hardship” Chapter 13 discharge from the court. In many cases, Chapter 13 bankruptcies that don't work out are dismissed entirely.

If your case is dismissed, you'll owe your creditors the balances on your debts from before you filed your Chapter 13 case, less the payments you made, plus the interest that accrued while your Chapter 13 case was open. See Ch. 13 for more on what happens if you are unable to complete your plan.

Personal Financial Management Counseling

Before you make your last plan payment, you'll have to complete a personal financial management counseling course (called budget counseling)—and file an official form certifying that you did so—in order to get your discharge. This counseling covers basic budgeting, managing your money, and using credit responsibly. See Ch. 10 for more on this requirement.

After You Complete Your Plan

Once you complete your plan, certify that you've remained current on your child support or alimony obligations, and file proof that you've completed your personal financial management counseling, your remaining debts will be discharged, if they are the type of debts that can be discharged in Chapter 13. (See "Which Debts Are Discharged in Chapter 13 Bankruptcy," below, for more information.) For instance, if you have $40,000 in credit card debt, and you pay off $10,000 through your repayment plan, the remaining $30,000 will be discharged once you complete the plan. However, you will still owe whatever is left of the debts that you can't, by law, discharge in Chapter 13. Debts that you can't discharge include domestic support obligations and student loans (unless you can show that repaying the loan would cause undue hardship); most types of debts—including credit card debts—are discharged.

EXAMPLE: Karen owes $60,000 in credit card debts, $60,000 in student loans, and $2,000 in alimony. Karen pays off the alimony in full (as required by law) and 10% of her credit card debts and student loans. The remainder of the credit card debts will be discharged, but she will still owe the rest of her student loan debt ($54,000) unless she can convince the judge to order it discharged because of undue hardship (typically, a very hard sell).

Which Debts Are Discharged in Chapter 13 Bankruptcy

Not all debts are discharged in Chapter 13 bankruptcy. Of course, if you will repay all of your unsecured debts in full over the life of your plan, no discharge is necessary. But if your plan provides for less than full repayment of your unsecured debts, whatever you still owe may or may not be discharged.

Debts That Are Discharged

As a general rule, whatever you still owe on most credit card debts, medical bills, and lawyer bills is discharged, as are most court judgments and loans. Also, under the new bankruptcy law, debts you owe to an ex-spouse arising from a divorce or separation agreement that are not for support are discharged in Chapter 13 (but not in Chapter 7), as are debts incurred for the purpose of paying taxes.

Debts That Are Not Discharged

Debts that survive a Chapter 13 bankruptcy (unless you pay them in full during the life of your plan) include:

- debts that you don't list in your bankruptcy forms
- court-imposed fines and restitution
- back child support and alimony
- student loans (with rare exceptions)
- recent back taxes
- taxes for years in which you did not file a return, and
- debts you owe because of a civil judgment arising out of your willful or malicious acts, or for personal injuries or death caused by your drunk driving.

Debts That Are Not Discharged If the Creditor Successfully Objects

Some types of debts will survive your bankruptcy only if the creditor files a motion in court to prove that the debt shouldn't be discharged. For example, if a creditor successfully objects to a debt arising from your fraudulent actions or recent credit card charges for luxuries, those debts will be waiting for you after your bankruptcy, unless you managed to pay them all off during your repayment plan.

Is Chapter 13 Right for You?

Some of you won't have a choice between Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 bankruptcy—if you want to file for bankruptcy, you will have to use Chapter 13 and repay some of your debt. (See Ch. 4 to find out whether you'll be limited to Chapter 13.) Likewise, if you don't have a steady income, your only bankruptcy choice is Chapter 7. Many people who have a choice decide to file under Chapter 7, but there are some situations when Chapter 13 will be the better option.

Upper-Income Filers Must Use Chapter 13

If your average monthly income during the six months before you file for bankruptcy is higher than the median income for your state, you may not be able to use Chapter 7. If your average income is more than the median, you cannot file for Chapter 7 bankruptcy if your disposable income would allow you to pay your unsecured creditors at least $11,725 over a five-year period (about $195 a month). (See Ch. 4 for more on this “means” test.)

Reasons to Choose Chapter 7

Most people who have a choice traditionally have opted to file for Chapter 7 bankruptcy because it is relatively fast, effective, easy to file, and doesn’t require payments over time. It also doesn’t require you to be current in your income tax filings. In the typical situation, a case is opened and closed within three to four months, and the filer emerges debt free except for a mortgage, car payments, and certain types of debts that survive bankruptcy (such as student loans, recent taxes, and back child support).

If you have any secured debts, such as a mortgage or car note, Chapter 7 allows you to keep the collateral as long as you are current on your payments. However, if your equity in the collateral substantially exceeds the exemption available to you for that type of property, the trustee can sell the property, pay off the loan, pay you your exemption (if any), and pay the rest to your unsecured creditor. If you are behind on your payments, the creditor can come into the bankruptcy court and ask the judge for permission to repossess the car (or other personal property) or foreclose on your mortgage. As a general rule, however, most Chapter 7 filers are able to keep all their property, either because they don’t own much to begin with or because any equity they own is protected by an exemption.

Recent changes in the bankruptcy law have put a few obstacles in the way of Chapter 7 filers. Nevertheless, assuming you qualify, you likely will find it easier—and more effective—to file for Chapter 7 than to keep up with a long-term payment plan under Chapter 13. And if you do file for Chapter 13 and don’t keep up with your repayment plan, you will likely get no benefit from having engaged in the Chapter 13 process if you later convert to a Chapter 7 (unless the court lets you off the hook early for hardship reasons).

EXAMPLE: Frank files for Chapter 13 bankruptcy. His five-year plan includes current payments on his mortgage, repayment of part of his $50,000 credit card debt, and payment in full of a $2,000 back child support debt. Frank remains current on his plan for three years and then loses his job. In that three-year period, Frank, through the Chapter 13 trustee, paid off $12,000 worth of the credit card debt as well as the child support debt.

If Frank converts his case to Chapter 7, he can discharge all of the remaining credit card debt. But had Frank filed Chapter 7 from the beginning, he could also have discharged the $12,000 that he already paid to the credit card companies under his Chapter 13 plan. If Frank decides to skip Chapter 7 and negotiate a repayment schedule for the remaining $38,000, he will at least have made a $12,000 dent in the original $50,000 debt by filing for Chapter 13.

The moral of the story is that you should file for Chapter 7 in the first place if:

- You are eligible to use Chapter 7.
- You have significant doubts about your ability to complete a Chapter 13 repayment plan.
- None of the pressing reasons to use Chapter 13 are present in your case (see below).

For many people, the overriding reason to choose Chapter 7 is that they can do it themselves for little or no money (other than the filing fee), and they don’t feel that they can handle their own Chapter 13 case—and they can’t afford to pay $3,000 or more in attorney fees.

Reasons to Choose Chapter 13

Although Chapter 7 is easier and doesn’t require repayment, there are many good reasons why people who qualify for both types of bankruptcy choose Chapter 13 instead. Generally, Chapter 13 bankruptcy might make sense if you will have adequate, steady income to fund your plan for the appropriate period of time, and are in any of the following situations:

- You are facing foreclosure on your home or your car is being repossessed, and you want to keep your property. Using Chapter 13, you can make up the missed payments over time and reinstate the original agreement. You generally cannot do this in Chapter 7 bankruptcy—instead, you'll ultimately lose the property.
- You owe more on real estate that you own as a vacation or investment property than that property is worth, and you can have your mortgage reduced to the value of the property. (This is possible only if you are not using the real estate as your primary residence.)
- You have more than one mortgage and are facing foreclosure because you can't make all the payments. If your home's value is less than or equal to what you owe on your first mortgage, you can use Chapter 13 to change the additional mortgages into unsecured debts—which don't have to be repaid in full—and lower the amount of your monthly payments.
- Your car is reliable and you want to keep it, but it's worth far less than you owe. You can take advantage of Chapter 13 bankruptcy's cramdown option (for cars purchased more than 2½ years before filing for bankruptcy) to keep the car by repaying its replacement value in equal payments over the life of your plan, rather than the full amount you owe on the contract (see Ch. 8).
- You have a codebtor who will be protected under your Chapter 13 plan but who would not be protected if you used Chapter 7 (see Ch. 2).
- You have a tax obligation, student loan, or other debt that cannot be discharged in bankruptcy, but can be paid off over time in a Chapter 13 plan.
- You owe debts that can be discharged in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy but not in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy. For instance, debts incurred to pay taxes can't be discharged in Chapter 7 but can be discharged in Chapter 13.
- You want to use the Chapter 13 forum to sue one or more harassing creditors for violating state and federal antiharassment laws. For more information on these laws, see Solve Your Money Troubles, by Robin Leonard and Margaret Reiter (Nolo).
- You have a retail business that you would have to close down in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy but can continue to operate in Chapter 13.
- You have valuable personal property that you would lose in a Chapter 7 case, but could keep if you file for Chapter 13.
- You have a sincere desire to repay your debts, but you need the protection of the bankruptcy court to do so.

Alternatives to Bankruptcy

By now, you should have a pretty good idea of what filing a Chapter 13 bankruptcy will involve—and what you can hope to get out of it. Before you decide whether a Chapter 13—or Chapter 7—bankruptcy is the right solution for your debt problems, however, you should consider some basic options outside of the bankruptcy system. Although bankruptcy is the only sensible remedy for some people with debt problems, an alternative course of action makes better sense for others. This section explores some of your other options.

Do Nothing

Surprisingly, the best approach for some people who are deeply in debt is to take no action at all. You can't be thrown in jail for not paying your debts (with the exception of child support), and your creditors can't collect money from you that you just don't have.

Creditors Must Sue to Collect

Except for taxing agencies and student loan creditors, creditors must sue you in court and get a money judgment before they can go after your income and property. The big exception to this general rule is that a creditor can take collateral—repossess a car or furniture, for example—when you default on a debt that's secured by that collateral.

Under the typical security agreement (a contract involving collateral), the creditor can repossess the property without first going to court. But the creditor will not be able to go after your other property and income for any “deficiency” (the difference between what you owe and what the repossessed property fetches at auction) without first going to court for a money judgment.

To secure a money judgment, a creditor must have you personally served with a summons and complaint. In most states, you will have 30 days to file a response in the court where you are being sued. If you don't respond, the creditor can obtain a default judgment and seek to collect it from your income and property. If you do respond—and you are entitled to do so even if you think you owe the debt—the process will typically be set back several months until the court can schedule a trial where you can be heard. In most courts, you respond by filing a single document in which you deny everything in the creditor's complaint (or, in some courts, admit or deny each of the allegations in the complaint).

Much of Your Property Is Protected

Even if creditors get money judgments against you, they can't take away such essentials as:

- basic clothing
- ordinary household furnishings
- personal effects
- food
- Social Security or SSI payments necessary for your support
- unemployment benefits
- public assistance
- bank accounts with direct deposits from government benefit programs, and
- 75% of your wages (but more can be taken to pay child support judgments).

The state exemptions described in Ch. 4 (and listed in Appendix A) apply whether or not you file for bankruptcy. Even creditors who get a money judgment against you can't take these protected items. (However, neither the federal bankruptcy exemptions nor the California System 2 exemptions apply if a creditor sues you: Those are bankruptcy-only exemptions.)

When You Are Judgment Proof

A judgment is good only if the person who has it—the judgment creditor—can seize income or property from the debtor. If there is nothing to collect, the debtor is said to be “judgment proof.” For example, if your only income is from Social Security (which can be seized only by the IRS) and all your property is exempt under your state's exemption laws, your judgment creditor can't take your income. Your life will continue as before, although one or more of your creditors may get pushy from time to time. While money judgments last a long time and can be renewed, this won't make any difference unless your fortunes change for the better. If that happens, you might reconsider bankruptcy at that time.

If your creditors know that their chances of collecting judgments from you any time soon are slim, they probably won't sue you in the first place. Instead, they'll simply write off your debts and treat them as deductible business losses for income tax purposes. After some years have passed (usually between four and ten), the debt will become legally uncollectible, under state laws known as statutes of limitation.

These statutes of limitation won't help you if the creditor sues or renews its judgment within the time limit, but most won't. Lawsuits typically cost thousands of dollars in legal fees. If a creditor decides, on the basis of your economic profile, not to go to court at the present time, it is unlikely to seek a judgment down the line to extend its claims. In short, because creditors are reluctant to throw good money after bad, your poor economic circumstances might shield you from trouble.

CAUTION

Don't restart the clock. The statute of limitations can be renewed if you revive an old debt by, for example, admitting that you owe it or making a payment. As soon as you acknowledge a debt, the clock starts all over again. Savvy creditors are aware of this loophole and may try to trick you into admitting the debt so they can sue to collect it. Sometimes, it might be a good idea to try to repay a debt, particularly one to a local merchant with whom you wish to continue doing business. But unless you are planning to make good on the debt or try to negotiate a new payment schedule, you should avoid any admissions.

Stopping Bill Collector Harassment

Many people file for bankruptcy to stop their creditors from making harassing telephone calls and writing threatening letters. As explained above and in Ch. 2, the automatic stay stops most collection efforts as soon as you file for bankruptcy. However, you don't have to start a bankruptcy case to get annoying creditors off your back. Federal law forbids collection agencies from threatening you, lying about what they can do to you, or invading your privacy. And many state laws prevent original creditors from taking similar actions.

Under federal law, you can legally force collection agencies to stop phoning or writing you by simply demanding that they stop, even if you owe them a bundle and can't pay a cent. (This law is the federal Fair Debt Collections Practices Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1692 and following.) For more information, see Solve Your Money Troubles, by Robin Leonard and Margaret Reiter (Nolo). Here's a sample letter asking a creditor to stop contacting the debtor.

Re: Lee Anne Ito
Account No. 88-90-92

Dear Mr. Mist:

For the past three months, I have received several phone calls and letters from you concerning an overdue Rich's Department Store account.

This is my formal notice to you under 15 U.S.C. § 1692c(c) to cease all further communications with me except for the reasons specifically set forth in the federal law.

This letter is not meant in any way to be an acknowledgment that I owe this money.

Very truly yours,

Your debt collector may be putting money in your pocket. The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act places a number of restrictions on debt collector activity. The remedies provided by the act include damages and attorneys' fees. More and more attorneys are interested in using these remedies, because they can earn some money without taking it out of a client's recovery. If you are suffering debt collection abuses, consider consulting with a bankruptcy attorney to find out if this type of lawsuit might be worth your while. For more information on the Act and its remedies, see Solve Your Money Troubles, by Robin Leonard and Margaret Reiter (Nolo).

Negotiate With Your Creditors

If you have some income, or you have assets you're willing to sell, you may be a lot better off negotiating with your creditors than filing for bankruptcy. Negotiation may buy you some time to get back on your feet, or you and your creditors may agree to settle your debts for less than what you owe.

Creditors hate it when debtors don't pay their debts. They don't like the hassle of instituting collection proceedings, or the fact that these proceedings tend to turn debt-owing customers into former customers. To avoid the collection process and keep customers, creditors sometimes will reduce the debtor's expected payments, extend the time to pay, drop their demands for late fees, and make similar adjustments. They're most likely to be lenient if they believe you are making an honest effort to deal with your debt problems.

TIP

More lenders are offering foreclosure "workouts."

As the number of foreclosures has skyrocketed, lenders are increasingly willing to help homeowners keep their homes. These processes, called foreclosure workouts, might include:

- renegotiating the terms of the mortgage so that the arrearage is paid at the end of the mortgage term, either over additional time or as a balloon payment
- renegotiating the interest rate to lower the payments or keep them at the same level (if the interest rate is adjustable and will soon go up), or

- using a deed in lieu of foreclosure, where the debtor gives back the house in return for the lender's agreement not to foreclose and not to go after any additional money the debtor owes on the mortgage.

As soon as you realize that you're going to have trouble paying a bill, write to the creditor. Explain the problem—whether it's an accident, job layoff, divorce, emergency expense for your child, unexpected tax bill, or something else. Mention any developments that point to an improving financial condition, such as job prospects. Also, consider sending a token payment every month (the more the better, of course). This tells the creditor that you are serious about making good on the debt but just can't afford to pay it off right now.

Token payments make a big difference, especially to local creditors. And if you want to keep that credit or business relationship, paying even a small amount might help. On the other hand, if it's been a long time since you've made any payments, you might want to hold off on your token payment until you've checked on the statute of limitations for that debt (the state time limit after which the debt goes away if no court action has been filed to collect it). Your payment might have the unfortunate effect of starting up a new limitations period.

Your success in getting creditors to give you time to pay will depend on the types of debts you have, how far behind you are, and the creditors' policies toward debts that are in arrears.

If you are not yet behind on your bills, be aware that a number of creditors have a ridiculous policy that requires you to default—and in some cases, become at least 90 days past due—before they will negotiate better repayment terms. If any creditor makes this a condition of negotiating, find out from the creditor how you can keep the default out of your credit report.

In addition, increasing numbers of creditors simply refuse to negotiate with debtors. Despite the fact that creditors get at least something when they negotiate settlements, many ignore debtors' pleas for help, continue to make telephone calls demanding payment (unless you assert your right under federal law to not receive the calls—see “Stopping Bill Collector Harassment,” above), and leave debtors with few options other than to file for bankruptcy. Historically, nearly one third of the people who filed for bankruptcy stated that the final straw was the unreasonableness of their creditors or the collection agencies hired by their creditors.

You might be wondering whether you should tell your creditors that you are thinking about filing for bankruptcy. After all, shouldn't they be willing to negotiate for a lesser amount—that you can pay—if you can get rid of the debt entirely? Unfortunately, experience shows that this tactic often backfires. Some creditors will call you every day demanding to know who your attorney is. When you tell them you don't have an attorney, they may well take the opportunity to berate you for not paying your debts and warn you to call them when you do get an attorney. In short, mentioning the “B” word is more likely to cause you grief than it is to produce a good result.

Get Outside Help to Design a Repayment Plan

Prior to the new bankruptcy law, the combination of high consumer debt and easy access to information (especially on the Internet) led to an explosion in the number of credit and debt counseling agencies. Some provided limited services, such as budgeting and debt repayment, while others offered a range of services, from debt counseling to financial planning. Now, however, the advent of new requirements for credit counseling agencies under the new bankruptcy law, coupled with an aggressive auditing policy adopted by the IRS toward “nonprofit” counseling agencies, has significantly changed the credit counseling landscape.

Credit and Debt Counseling

Before you choose a credit counselor or debt management plan off the Web, be aware that while some of these agencies are legitimate, others are not. How can you tell the difference? The key will be whether the agency has been approved by the Office of the U.S. Trustee to provide credit counseling to bankruptcy filers.

Prior to the new law, Money Management International and its family of Consumer Credit Counseling Services agencies had a good track record of providing consumers nationwide with financial education and credit counseling. Counseling is available by telephone (888-845-5669), on the Internet (www.moneymanagement.org), and in person at one of its more than 130 local branch offices. In addition to the U.S. Trustee requirements, guidelines for these credit counseling services are provided by the National Foundation for Credit Counseling (NFCC)TM (at www.nfcc.org), the trade organization that created the Consumer Credit Counseling Services (CCCS) network.

Credit Counseling Under the 2005 Bankruptcy Law

The 2005 bankruptcy law requires debtors to complete a credit counseling course before filing for bankruptcy. To implement this law, Congress has set out a number of requirements for credit counseling agencies and has designated the Office of the U.S. Trustee to approve and supervise credit counseling agencies. It's much safer to choose an agency that has been approved by the Office of the U.S. Trustee than an unapproved agency. You can find a list of approved agencies at the U.S. Trustee's website, www.justice.gov/ust.

How Debt Management Works

To use a credit counseling agency to help you pay your debts, you must have some steady income. A counselor will contact your creditors to let them know that you've sought assistance and need more time to pay. Based on your income and debts, the counselor, with your creditors, will decide how much you must pay and for how long. You must then make one payment each month to the counseling agency, which, in turn, will pay your creditors. The agency will ask the creditors to return a small percentage of the money received to the agency office, in order to fund its work. This arrangement is generally referred to as a "debt management program."

Some creditors will make overtures to help you when you're participating in a debt management program, such as offering reduced interest, waiving minimum payments, and forgiving late charges. But many creditors will not make interest concessions, such as waiving a portion of the accumulated interest to help you repay the principal portion of the debt. More likely, you'll get the late fees dropped and the opportunity to reinstate your credit if you successfully complete the program.

Pros and Cons of Debt Management

Participating in a credit counseling agency's debt management program is a little bit like filing for Chapter 13 bankruptcy. But working with a credit or debt counseling agency has one big advantage: No bankruptcy will appear on your credit record.

On the other hand, a debt management program has two disadvantages when compared to Chapter 13 bankruptcy. First, if you miss a plan payment, Chapter 13 will often provide a way for you to make it up and continue to protect you from creditors who would otherwise start collection actions. A debt management program has no such protection, so any one creditor can pull the plug on your plan. Also, a debt management program plan usually requires you to pay your unsecured debts in full, over time. In Chapter 13, you often are required to pay only a small fraction of your nonpriority unsecured debts (such as credit card and medical debts).

Critics of credit counseling agencies point out that the counselors tilt toward signing people up for a repayment plan who would be better off filing for bankruptcy. This way, the agency gets a commission from the creditors that isn't available in cases that end up in bankruptcy. Under the 2005 bankruptcy law, credit counseling agencies approved by the Office of the U.S. Trustee must meet a number of requirements intended to inform you of your rights and protect against undue influence by creditors. These new rules should prevent you from being ripped off. (See the U.S. Trustee's website at www.justice.gov/ust for more on these requirements.)

One of the most powerful features of bankruptcy is the automatic stay: a court order that goes into effect as soon as you file, protecting you from certain actions by your creditors. The automatic stay stops most debt collectors dead in their tracks and keeps them at bay for the rest of your case. Once you file, all collection activity (with some exceptions, explained below) must go through the bankruptcy court—and most creditors cannot take any further collection actions against you while the bankruptcy is pending.

This chapter explains how the automatic stay applies to typical debt collection efforts, including a couple of situations in which you might not get the protection of the automatic stay. It also explains how the automatic stay protects your codebtors from collection activities. And, it covers how the automatic stay works in eviction proceedings—vital information for any renter who files for bankruptcy.

TIP

You don't need bankruptcy to stop your creditors from harassing you. Many people begin thinking about bankruptcy when their creditors start phoning them at home and on the job. Federal law prohibits debt collectors from doing this once you tell the creditors, in writing, that you don't want to be called. And if you orally tell debt collectors that you refuse to pay, it is illegal for them to contact you except to send one last letter making a final demand for payment before filing a lawsuit. While just telling a creditor to stop usually works, you may have to send a written follow-up letter. (You can find a sample letter in Ch. 1.)

How Long the Stay Lasts

The automatic stay is “automatic” because you don't have to ask the court to issue it, and the court doesn't have to take any special action to make it effective: Once you file, the stay is in place, automatically, by operation of law. The stay prohibits creditors and collection agencies from taking any action to collect most kinds of debts you owe them—unless the law or the bankruptcy court says they can. In some circumstances, the creditor can file an action in court to have the stay lifted (called a “Motion to Lift Stay”). In others, the creditor can simply begin collection proceedings without seeking advance permission from the court.

Unless it is lifted by the bankruptcy court, the stay will remain in effect until one of the following:

- The court confirms your Chapter 13 plan (see Ch. 10).
- Your case is dismissed.

The stay ends when the court confirms your Chapter 13 plan because it is no longer necessary. Once the plan is confirmed, it governs all creditor and debtor behavior as to the debts included in the plan. The confirmation is a federal court order (just like the automatic stay), and any attempt by a creditor to collect a debt covered by the plan is a violation of that order.

How the Stay Affects Common Collection Actions

Most common types of creditor collection actions are stopped dead by the stay—including harassing calls by debt collectors, reporting debts to credit reporting bureaus, threatening letters by attorneys, and lawsuits to collect payment for credit card and health care bills.

Home Foreclosures

Many people file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy to prevent their homes from being taken in foreclosure. While the automatic stay will temporarily prevent a foreclosure no matter which type of bankruptcy is filed, in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, the creditor may be able to have the stay lifted and proceed with the foreclosure. However, the forfeiture can be permanently stopped in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy.

EXAMPLE: Angel owns his home. He has been faithfully making his monthly mortgage payment of $900 for eight years and has incurred $50,000 worth of credit card debt. In May 2007, Angel's job at a local telecommunications company is outsourced as part of a monster layoff. He obtains another job at a much lower salary and slowly but surely falls two months behind on his mortgage payments. His lender sends him a three-month notice of intent to foreclose on the mortgage.

Angel visits a bankruptcy lawyer, who explains that he can file for Chapter 7 bankruptcy to wipe out the credit card debt, but unless he can get current on his mortgage, the lender may be able to get permission from the bankruptcy court to proceed with the foreclosure. On the other hand, if Angel files for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, he can not only stop the foreclosure from proceeding, but also buy some time to pay off the arrearage as part of his Chapter 13 plan.

As is true of just about everything related to bankruptcy, there is an exception to this wonderful remedy. The automatic stay won't stop a foreclosure in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy if you filed another bankruptcy case within the previous two years and the court, in that proceeding, lifted the stay and allowed the lender to proceed with the foreclosure. In other words, the law won't allow you to prevent a foreclosure by filing serial bankruptcies.

EXAMPLE: Julie falls three months behind on her mortgage and receives a notice of intent to foreclose from her lender. Julie stops making any further payments and tries to sell her home to recover her remaining equity, but the market has slowed, and she can't find a buyer. Julie files for Chapter 7 bankruptcy to prevent her home from being sold at auction (the procedure used in about half the states). The auction is postponed because of the automatic stay, but the creditor moves to have the stay lifted. The judge grants the motion two months after Julie filed for bankruptcy. The lender sets a new date for the auction.

Julie now files for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, intending to keep her home by paying the arrearage over the life of the plan. Because Julie filed her Chapter 7 bankruptcy within the previous two years, and the stay was lifted in that case, however, the stay will not apply in her Chapter 13 case. The lender will be allowed to proceed with the rescheduled auction.

Even if you are in Julie's position, you may still be able to keep your home. As mentioned, the automatic stay in Chapter 13 cases lasts only until the court confirms the plan filed by the debtor. Once the plan is confirmed, it governs the behavior of debtor and creditor alike. For example, if Julie continues with her Chapter 13 case, and the court confirms a plan that provides for repayment of the arrearage, the lender will have to abide by the plan and allow her to catch up on her payments.

If your home is sold or auctioned off before your plan is confirmed or the stay ends, you won't be able to get it back. Courts generally will not undo this type of transaction because it would be unfair to the buyer.

Challenging Foreclosures in Automatic Stay Motion Hearings

Until the housing bubble burst, bankruptcy judges routinely granted a lender's motion to lift the stay and proceed with a foreclosure. However, in some recent cases, bankruptcy courts have taken a closer look at these motions and discovered that the institutions filing them aren't necessarily entitled to ask the court to lift the stay. Only the holder of a promissory note is a "party in interest" with the right to request that the stay be lifted. Because of the way mortgages have been divided, bought, and sold lately, the institution asking to lift the stay often cannot produce a valid copy of the promissory note or otherwise prove that it is the legal holder of the note. (See In re Kang Jin Hwang, 396 B.R. 757 (Bkrcty C.D. Cal. 2008) for more on this argument.) Judges are increasingly likely to deny motions to lift the stay unless this type of proof is presented.

Vehicle Repossessions

Vehicle repossessions work in much the same way as foreclosures except that there is typically no advance repossession notice. If you fall behind on your car note and really don't want your car repossessed, you can file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy and schedule to repay your arrearage as part of your plan. If you file your bankruptcy petition before the repossession, the automatic stay will protect your car up until the time the judge confirms a plan that proposes to pay the arrearage. You'll have to include "adequate protection" payments in your proposed plan to cover the depreciation that occurs between the date you file for bankruptcy and the date your plan is finally confirmed. Typically, this means paying the same amount that you would otherwise pay monthly on your car loan.

Even if your car is repossessed before you file, if the judge confirms a repayment plan that provides for payment of the arrearage and the amount you owe monthly on the note, you will be able to get your car back.

Often, a car is worth much less than the debtor owes on it. If you're in this situation, it may not be a bad idea to let the repossession go forward, especially if you bought the car fairly recently.

However, if you bought the car at least 2½ years ago, Chapter 13 gives you an alternative: You can reduce the amount you owe to the replacement value of the car (taking its age and condition into account), plus interest at a relatively low rate. This is called a cramdown. Even if you can't make your payments under your current car note, your monthly bill might be much more affordable once the loan has been crammed down.

Credit Card Debts, Medical Debts, and Attorneys' Fees

Anyone trying to collect credit card debts, medical debts, attorneys' fees, debts arising from breach of contract, or legal judgments against you (other than child support and alimony) must cease all collection activities after you file your bankruptcy case. They cannot:

- file a lawsuit or proceed with a pending lawsuit against you
- record liens against your property
- report the debt to a credit reporting bureau, or
- seize your property or income, such as money in a bank account or your paycheck.

Public Benefits

Government entities that are seeking to collect overpayments of public benefits, such as SSI, Medicaid, or Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (welfare), cannot reduce or terminate your benefits to get that money back while your bankruptcy is pending. If, however, you become ineligible for benefits, including Medicare benefits, bankruptcy doesn't prevent the agency from denying or terminating your benefits on that ground.

Criminal Proceedings

If a case against you can be broken down into criminal and debt components, only the criminal component will be allowed to continue; the debt component will be put on hold while your bankruptcy is pending. For example, if you were convicted of writing a bad check and have been sentenced to community service and ordered to pay a fine, your obligation to do community service will not be stopped by the automatic stay (but your obligation to pay the fine will).

IRS Liens and Levies

As explained in "When the Stay Doesn't Apply," below, certain tax proceedings are not affected by the automatic stay. The automatic stay does, however, stop the IRS from issuing a lien or seizing (levying against) any of your property or income.

Utilities

Companies providing you with utilities (such as gas, heating oil, electricity, telephone service, and water) may not discontinue service because you file for bankruptcy. However, they can shut off your service 20 days after you file if you don't provide them with a deposit or other means to assure future payment.

How the Stay Affects Actions Against Codebtors

Many people file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy to protect their codebtors from liability. For example, if your parent cosigns a loan and you file for bankruptcy, you certainly don't want the creditor to enforce the debt against your parent. With rare exceptions, the automatic stay also protects your codebtors unless the court lifts the stay. The court will lift the stay only in the following cases:

- Your codebtor received the item or services for which the debt was taken (for instance, the car obtained by the loan in question).
- Your repayment plan will not pay the debt.
- The creditor's interest would be irreparably harmed if the stay were allowed to continue.
- The debt is a tax debt.

If your Chapter 13 case is closed, dismissed, or converted to Chapter 7 or 11, your codebtor loses the protection of the automatic stay. Also, the stay does not protect a codebtor whose liability for the debt arose in the ordinary course of the codebtor's business.

When the Stay Doesn't Apply

The stay doesn't put a stop to every type of collection action, nor does it apply in every situation. Congress has determined that certain debts or proceedings are sufficiently important to "trump" the automatic stay. In these situations, collection actions can continue just as if you had never filed for bankruptcy. And even in circumstances when the stay would otherwise apply, you can lose the protection of the stay through your own actions.

Actions Not Stopped by the Stay

The automatic stay does not prohibit the following types of actions from proceeding.

Divorce and Child Support

Almost all proceedings related to divorce or parenting continue as before: They are not affected by the automatic stay. These include actions to:

- set and collect current child support and alimony
- collect back child support and alimony from property that is not in the bankruptcy estate (for instance, postfiling income that isn't included in your plan)
- determine child custody and visitation
- establish paternity in a lawsuit
- modify child support and alimony
- protect a spouse or child from domestic violence
- withhold income to collect child support
- report overdue support to credit bureaus
- intercept tax refunds to pay back child support, and
- withhold, suspend, or restrict drivers' and professional licenses as leverage to collect child support.

Tax Proceedings

The IRS can continue certain actions, such as conducting a tax audit, issuing a tax deficiency notice, demanding a tax return, issuing a tax assessment, demanding payment of an assessment, or pursuing a codebtor for taxes owed.

Pension Loans

The stay doesn't prevent withholding from a debtor's income to repay a loan from an ERISA-qualified pension (this includes most job-related pensions and individual retirement plans).

How You Can Lose the Protection of the Stay

Even if the stay would otherwise apply, you can lose its protection through your own actions. The stay may not protect you from collection efforts if you had one or more bankruptcy cases pending but dismissed within a year of your current bankruptcy filing.

The automatic stay will last only 30 days if you had one prior bankruptcy case pending but dismissed within the year before you file. You can ask the court to extend the stay, but you have to file a motion. And if you had two cases pending but dismissed within the last year, the automatic stay will never kick in at all (unless the court orders it). There are two lessons here for debtors:

- Don't let your case be dismissed (a dismissed case counts as a pending case).
- If your case is dismissed and you want to file again within the year, you should definitely talk to an attorney before you file.

If the automatic stay terminates because of one or more prior pending cases, the property of the bankruptcy estate—in your current bankruptcy filing—is still protected. (Your bankruptcy estate includes most types of property that you own or are entitled to receive when you file your bankruptcy papers, but does not include money earned or most property received after filing.) For example, a creditor would not be entitled to seize money that was in your bank account on the date you filed, but it could levy on income you earned after filing, which is not part of the bankruptcy estate.

One Dismissal in the Past Year

With a couple of exceptions, if you had a bankruptcy case dismissed during the previous year for any reason, voluntarily or involuntarily, the court will presume that your new filing is in bad faith, and the stay will terminate 30 days after your new case is filed. You, the trustee, the U.S. Trustee, or the creditor can ask the court to continue the stay beyond the 30-day period, but the court will do this only if you (or whoever else makes the request) can show that your current case was not filed in bad faith.

The motion to extend the stay must be scheduled for hearing within the 30-day period after you file for bankruptcy and must give creditors adequate notice under local motion rules of why the stay should be extended. As a practical matter, this means the motion must:

- be filed within several days after you file for bankruptcy (unless you obtain an “Order Shortening Time” from the judge, a simple procedure)
- be served on all creditors to whom you want the stay to apply, and
- provide specific reasons why your filing was not in bad faith and the stay should be extended.

When deciding whether to extend the stay beyond 30 days, the court will look at a number of factors to decide whether your current filing is in good faith. Here are some of the factors that will work against you:

- More than one prior bankruptcy case was filed by (or against) you in the past year.
- Your prior case was dismissed because you failed to file required documents on time (for instance, you didn’t give the trustee your most recent tax return at least seven days before the first meeting of creditors) or amend the petition on a timely basis when required to do so. If you failed to file these documents inadvertently or because of a careless error, that won’t help you with the judge—unless you used an attorney in the prior case. Judges are more willing to give debtors the benefit of the doubt here if their attorneys were responsible for the mistakes.
- The prior case was dismissed while a creditor’s request for relief from the stay was pending.
- Your circumstances haven’t changed since your previous case was dismissed.

Two Dismissals in the Past Year

If you had more than two cases dismissed during the previous year, no stay will apply in your current case unless you convince the court, within 30 days of your filing, that your current case was not filed in bad faith and that a stay should therefore be granted. The court will look at the factors outlined above to decide whether you have overcome the presumption of bad faith.

Evictions

In the past, many people filed for bankruptcy to stop the sheriff from enforcing a judgment for possession (an eviction order). While a landlord could come into court and ask the judge to lift the automatic stay and let the eviction proceed, many landlords didn’t know they had this right—and many others didn’t have the wherewithal to hire attorneys (or the confidence to handle their own cases). In other words, filing for bankruptcy often stopped court-ordered evictions dead in their tracks for the duration of the bankruptcies.

Today, things are a bit different. The 2005 bankruptcy law gives landlords the right to evict a tenant, despite the automatic stay, if:

- The landlord obtained a judgment for possession before the tenant filed for bankruptcy. (If the judgment was for failing to pay rent, there is a possible exception to this rule—see below.)
- The landlord is evicting the tenant for endangering the property or the illegal use of controlled substances on the property.

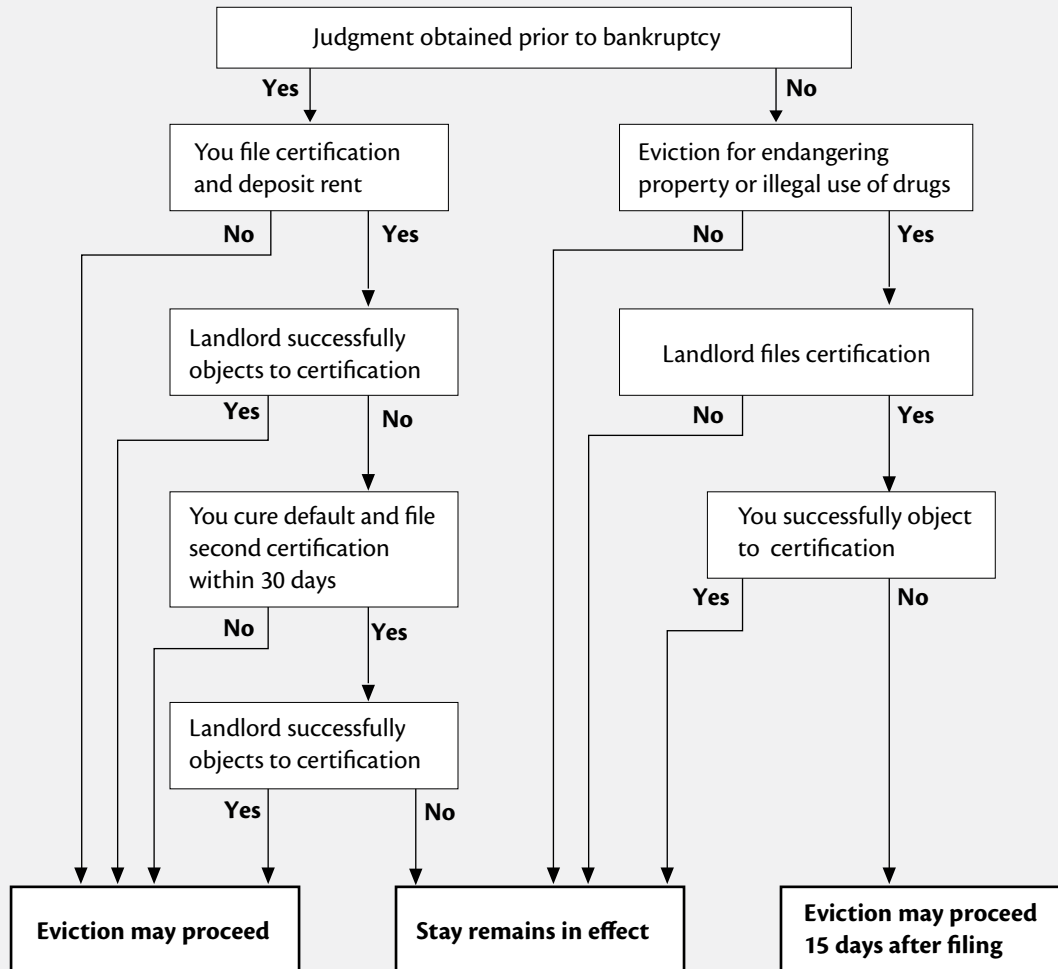

If the landlord does not already have a judgment when you file, and he or she wants to evict you for reasons other than endangering the property or using controlled substances (for example, the eviction is based on your failure to pay rent or violation of another lease provision), the automatic stay prevents the landlord from beginning or continuing with eviction proceedings. However, the landlord can always ask the judge to lift the stay—and courts tend to grant these requests.

TIP

Different rules apply to evictions of an owner following foreclosure. The law that allows evictions to proceed despite the automatic stay doesn’t apply to evictions of the former owner of the home following a foreclosure sale. If a court has ordered you to leave your home following foreclosure and the sheriff is trying to evict you, filing for bankruptcy will legally postpone the eviction until you receive a bankruptcy discharge or until the judge lifts the automatic stay, whichever happens first.

If the Landlord Already Has a Judgment

If your landlord already has a judgment of possession against you when you file for bankruptcy, the automatic stay won't help you (with the possible exception described just below). The landlord may proceed with the eviction just as if you never filed for bankruptcy.

If the eviction order is based on your failure to pay rent, you may be able to have the automatic stay reinstated. However, this exception applies only if your state's law allows you to stay in your rental unit and "cure" (pay back) the rent delinquency after the landlord has a judgment for possession. Here's what you'll have to do to take advantage of this exception:

Step 1: As part of your bankruptcy petition, you must file a certification (a statement under oath) that your state's laws allow you to cure the rent delinquency after the judgment is obtained and to continue living in your rental unit. Very few states allow this. To find out whether yours is one of them, ask the sheriff or someone at legal aid (if you have legal aid in your area). In addition, when you file your bankruptcy petition, you must deposit with the court clerk the amount of rent that will become due during the 30-day period after you file.

Once you have filed your petition containing the certification and deposited the rent, you are protected from eviction for 30 days unless the landlord successfully objects to your initial certification before the 30-day period ends. If the landlord objects to your certification, the court must hold a hearing on the objection within ten days, so theoretically you could have less than 30 days of protection if the landlord files and serves the objection immediately.

Step 2: To keep the stay in effect longer, you must, before the 30-day period runs out, file and serve a second certification showing that you have fully cured the default in the manner provided by your state's law. However, if the landlord successfully objects to this second certification, the stay will no longer be in effect and the landlord may proceed with the eviction. As in Step 1, the court must hold a hearing within ten days if the landlord objects.

SEE AN EXPERT

If you really want to keep your apartment, talk to a lawyer. As you can see, these new rules are somewhat complicated. If you don't interpret your state's law properly, file the necessary paperwork on time, and successfully argue your side if the landlord objects, you could find yourself put out of your home. A good lawyer can tell you whether it's worth fighting an eviction—and, if so, what tactics to use.

Endangering the Property or Using Controlled Substances

Under the new bankruptcy law, an eviction action will not be stayed by your bankruptcy filing if your landlord wants you out because you endangered the property or engaged in the “illegal use of controlled substances” on the property. And your landlord doesn't have to have a judgment in hand when you file for bankruptcy: The landlord may start an eviction action against you or continue with a pending eviction action even after your filing date if the eviction is based on property endangerment or drug use.

To evict you on these grounds after you have filed for bankruptcy, your landlord must file and serve on you a certification showing that:

- The landlord has filed an eviction action against you based on property endangerment or illegal drug use on the property.
- You have endangered the property or engaged in illegal drug use on the property during the 30-day period prior to the landlord's certification.

If your landlord files this certification, he or she can proceed with the eviction 15 days later unless, within that time, you file and serve on the landlord an objection to the truth of the statements in the landlord's certification. If you do that, the court must hold a hearing on your objection within ten days. If you prove that the statements in the certification aren't true or have been remedied, you will be protected from the eviction while your bankruptcy is pending. If the court denies your objection, the eviction may proceed immediately.

As a practical matter, you will have a very difficult time proving a negative—that is, that you weren't endangering the property or using drugs. Similarly, once allegations of property endangerment or drug use are made, it's hard to see how they would be “remedied.”

Landlords can always ask the court to lift the automatic stay to begin or continue an eviction on any grounds. Although the automatic stay will kick in unless one of these exceptions applies, the judge can lift the stay upon the landlord's request. You can certainly argue that you need to keep your tenancy in order to make the payments required by your Chapter 13 plan. As a general rule, however, bankruptcy judges are more likely to lift the stay and allow landlords to exercise their property rights, figuring you will find another place to live.

Before you can decide whether you should file for Chapter 13, you need to figure out whether you are legally eligible to do so. Not everyone can use Chapter 13: To qualify, you must meet certain eligibility requirements, and you must be able to propose a legally confirmable repayment plan. This chapter explains these requirements.

Prior Bankruptcy Discharges May Preclude a Chapter 13 Discharge

You can't get a Chapter 13 discharge if you received a discharge in a previous Chapter 13 case in the last two years or a discharge in a Chapter 7 case filed within the last four years. You aren't barred from filing for Chapter 13 bankruptcy in these circumstances, but you can't get a discharge. For instance, you can file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy the moment you receive a Chapter 7 discharge (to handle liens that survived your Chapter 7 case or debts that weren't discharged in that case), but you won't be able to discharge any debts that remain once you complete your Chapter 13 repayment plan. (Filing for Chapter 13 after filing for Chapter 7 is known colloquially as a "Chapter 20 bankruptcy.")

Business Entities Can't File for Chapter 13 Bankruptcy

To file a Chapter 13 bankruptcy case, you must be an individual (or a husband and wife filing jointly). If you own your own business as a sole proprietor or partner, you can include all business debts on which you have personal liability. You have to file your case in your name, however, not in the name of the business, because a business entity cannot file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy. On your bankruptcy papers, you will need to list all fictitious business names or dba ("doing business as") names that you've used as a sole proprietor or partnership.

If you operate your business as a sole proprietorship or as a partnership with your spouse or someone else, you, or you and your partner, are personally liable for the debts of the business. For bankruptcy purposes, you and your business (or your share of a partnership) are one and the same. You can include all of the business debts in your Chapter 13 bankruptcy case.

There is one exception: Stockbrokers and commodity brokers cannot file a Chapter 13 bankruptcy case, even for personal (nonbusiness) debts.

You cannot file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy on behalf of a corporation, limited liability company (LLC), or partnership as such. If you want to file a reorganization bankruptcy in that situation, you must file a business Chapter 11 bankruptcy, which is beyond the scope of this book.

Your Debts Must Not Be Too High

You do not qualify for Chapter 13 bankruptcy if your secured debts exceed $1,081,400 or your unsecured debts are more than $360,475. For example, if you owe two million dollars on your home, you can't file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy. The same would be true if you owed $100,000 on a student loan (unsecured), $100,000 on credit card debt (unsecured), and $200,000 on a court judgment due to injuries resulting from your negligent driving (unsecured). If you need help figuring out which of your debts are secured and which are unsecured, see "Classifying Your Debts" in Ch. 4.

You have to include only debts that are both liquidated and uncontingent. A debt is liquidated if you know the exact dollar amount you owe; a debt is uncontingent if you owe it regardless of what happens in the future. For example, you don't have to include a debt that someone says you owe because you caused them property damage or personal injury, unless you have already settled the claim (or lost a lawsuit) for a set amount of money. Until that happens, you don't know how much you owe—and, if the person decides not to sue you, you might not owe anything at all.

You Must Stay Current on Your Income Tax Filings

Within several months after you file for bankruptcy, you will have to prove that you filed federal and state income tax returns for the four prior tax years. You can prove this by submitting the returns themselves or transcripts of the returns obtained from the IRS. You have to give the returns or transcripts to the trustee (the court official handling your case on behalf of the court) no later than the date set for your first meeting of creditors (about a month after you file). The trustee can keep the creditors' meeting open for up to 120 days to give you time to file the returns, and the court can give you an additional 30 days. Ultimately, if you don't produce your returns or transcripts of the returns for those four preceding years, the trustee will ask the court to dismiss your Chapter 13 case.

In addition to getting current on your tax returns, you have to produce your most recent federal tax return for the trustee no later than seven days before the first date set for the meeting of creditors. You can obtain a transcript of your returns from the IRS within two weeks. To arrange for this, call 800-829-1040 or submit IRS Form 4506T, Request for Transcript of Tax Return (you can find a copy at www.irs.gov).

During the course of your plan, you must remain current on your tax filings and must provide the trustee—and any creditor who requests it—with copies of your returns. Failure to do so can result in your bankruptcy case being dismissed.

You Must Keep Making Your Child Support and Alimony Payments

Even if you owe back child support or alimony, you must meet your current support obligations during the course of your plan. If you don't keep up with your payments, your bankruptcy can be dismissed.

You Must File Annual Income and Expense Reports

You are required to file annual income and expense reports in order to keep your Chapter 13 case alive. Failure to file these reports can result in your case being dismissed.

Your Proposed Repayment Plan Must Pay All Required Debts

Certain debts must be paid in full in a Chapter 13 plan. If your current monthly income, less reasonable living expenses, won't allow you to pay off those debts within the required plan period (three years for people whose incomes are less than the state median and five years for people whose incomes are more), then the court will not confirm your plan. Ch. 5 explains the process you must use to determine whether you can propose a confirmable Chapter 13 plan over the appropriate time period.

In addition to your required debts, you must also pay a commission to the trustee, equal to about 10% of the total payments you make under your plan. For example, if you owe $50,000 in back taxes that would have to be paid in your Chapter 13 plan, you must have enough income to pay at least $10,000 a year for five years, plus interest, toward that debt. You would also have to come up with another $1,000 each year for the trustee. And, you would have to be able to show that you could pay your living expenses while making these payments. If the judge doesn't think you'll have enough income to cover all of your obligations, your plan won't be approved.

This section gives a very quick overview of the debts that have to be paid in full in Chapter 13, as this requirement often disqualifies would-be Chapter 13 filers.

Debts That Must Be Paid in Chapter 13

Here are the types of debts that must be paid in full over the course of your Chapter 13 plan. Even if you qualify for a three-year plan (because your income is less than your state's median), you may wish to ask the court to allow a five-year plan if you will need that much time to pay your mandatory debts.

Priority Debts

Priority debts are unsecured debts (that is, debts for which you haven't pledged collateral and for which the creditor has not filed a lien against you) that are considered sufficiently important to jump to the head of the bankruptcy repayment line. The general rule is that priority debts must be paid in full over the course of a Chapter 13 case. The most common priority debts that knock people out of Chapter 13 are back taxes and child support arrearages. (However, child support arrearages don't have to be paid in full during your repayment period if you owe the debt to a government agency rather than to your child or former spouse.) See "Classifying Your Debts" in Ch. 4 for a full list of priority debts.

What Is Exempt Property?

Each state has laws that determine which items of property are exempt from creditors and in what amounts. These items cannot be seized to repay a debt or taken and sold by the bankruptcy trustee in a Chapter 7 case. Property that is not exempt may be taken by creditors or by the trustee in Chapter 7. If you file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, the trustee won't take your nonexempt property, but your repayment plan must provide that your creditors will be paid at least what they would have received from the sale of that property over the course of your plan.

Each state's exemptions are different, and the exemptions that apply to you depend on how long you have lived in the state where you currently reside. Many states exempt "personal effects" (things such as electric shavers, hair dryers, and toothbrushes), ordinary household furniture, clothing, and health aids without regard to their value.

Other kinds of property are often exempt only up to a limit. For example, in many states, furniture or a car is exempt to several thousand dollars. Any equity that exceeds the limit isn't exempt. (Equity is the market value of the property minus what you still owe on it, if anything.)

Typically, the following items are exempt:

- part of the equity in motor vehicles (the amount varies from state to state)
- reasonably necessary clothing (no fur coats)
- reasonably necessary household goods and furnishings
- household appliances
- jewelry, to a few hundred dollars
- personal effects
- life insurance (cash or loan value or proceeds, in an amount that varies from state to state)
- part of the equity in a residence (the amount varies from state to state)
- pensions
- public benefits
- tools of a trade or profession, to a certain value, and
- unpaid earned wages.

For detailed information on exemptions, see Ch. 5.

Secured Debts That Will Outlive Your Plan

Your plan must provide that you will keep current on secured debts that will last longer than your repayment plan (such as mortgages). You must also pay off any arrearages you owe during the life of the plan, unless you are willing to surrender the collateral.

Other Secured Debts

All other secured debts must be paid in full under the plan. Typical of such debts are tax liens on your property, promissory notes securing personal property collateral, and judgment liens that can't be removed for one reason or another.

Quick Calculation: Can You Repay Required Debts in Chapter 13?

To determine whether you could pay these mandatory debts during your repayment period, you must find out whether you will have enough income left over each month after paying your reasonable living expenses. (Remember, even though your income may be low enough to make you eligible for a three-year plan, you may propose a five-year plan if it will take you that long to pay off your mandatory debts.) Here's a quick way to figure out whether you can make these required payments:

- Step 1: Compute your household's gross income over the past six months, divide it by six, and then multiply it by the number of months in your repayment period (60 for a five-year plan). (For help calculating your average monthly income, see Ch. 1.)
- Step 2: Compute your actual monthly living expenses, including monthly installment payments on your car and other property necessary for your family's welfare, and multiply by the number of months in your repayment plan.
- Step 3: Deduct your expenses computed in Step 2 from your income computed in Step 1.
- Step 4: Add up all of your priority debts, secured debt arrearages for property you plan to keep, and secured debts, as described in "Debts That Must Be Paid in Chapter 13," above.

Step 5: Subtract your total mandatory debts, as calculated in Step 4, from the total amount of income you will have left over after paying expenses, as calculated in Step 3.

If this amount is a positive number, it means you may have enough income to pay your mandatory debts. If the amount is negative, you may have to make some adjustments, such as giving up property on which you are making payments or lowering your expenses, to propose a confirmable Chapter 13 plan. Remember, however, that your expenses must appear to be reasonable to the court. If your expenses look too low, the court may reject your plan as unreasonable.

RELATED TOPIC

See Ch. 5 for detailed instructions on calculating income, expenses, and repayment obligations. This quick test is intended to give you a rough idea of which debts have to be paid in full and whether you might be able to pay them, but the actual math is much more complicated (especially if your income exceeds the median income in your state for a household of your size). Ch. 5 takes you step by step through the required income and expense computations and helps you figure out whether you can propose a confirmable Chapter 13 plan.

Your Unsecured Creditors Must Get at Least as Much as They Would Have Received in a Chapter 7 Bankruptcy

You may be tempted to choose Chapter 13 rather than Chapter 7 because you want to hang on to some or all of your nonexempt property—that is, property you would have to surrender to the trustee so it could be sold for the benefit of your creditors if you filed for Chapter 7.

For example, you may want to use Chapter 13 because you have a vacation home or valuable family heirlooms that you would lose if you filed for Chapter 7.

Although using Chapter 13 allows you to keep your property, it does not allow you to deprive these creditors of the money they would have received if you had used Chapter 7. Your plan must propose payments to your nonpriority, unsecured creditors (those to whom you owe credit card debts, medical bills, lawsuit judgments, and so on) that are at least equal to what they would have received in a Chapter 7 case. In other words, your plan must show that they will be paid at least the value of your nonexempt property, less what it would cost to take that property and sell it (and less the trustee's fee for doing so). Ch. 5 provides detailed information on how to run these numbers and come up with the amount you'll need to include in your Chapter 13 repayment plan.

You Must Participate in an Approved Personal Financial Management Course

Although you don't have to take a personal financial management course prior to filing for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, you must complete such a program before the court will discharge your debts. The agencies providing this service must be approved by the Office of the U.S. Trustee, which imposes specific curriculum requirements that are intended to require about two hours of your time. Typically, the agency where you get your prefiling credit counseling will also offer this personal financial management course. For more information about the requirements for these agencies and how to find one, visit the Office of the U.S. Trustee's website at www.justice.gov/ust (select "Credit Counseling & Debtor Education" from the home page).

Forced Conversion to Chapter 13	44

In October 2005, a massive change took place in the bankruptcy field. Believing that too many people were taking advantage of Chapter 7 bankruptcy to wipe out their debts, Congress passed the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2005 (BAPCPA). The stated purpose of this law is to force people who can afford to repay some of their debt to file for bankruptcy under Chapter 13 instead of under Chapter 7. To further this purpose, the BAPCPA makes it harder and more expensive to file under Chapter 7.

Because of the changes wrought by the BAPCPA, some debtors no longer have the option to use Chapter 7: If they want to file for bankruptcy, they have to use Chapter 13. However, most people will still have a choice. This chapter will help you figure out whether you have to use Chapter 13 or whether Chapter 7 is still an option for you.

CAUTION

Don't skip this chapter, even if you know you will use Chapter 13. Even if you have already decided to file for Chapter 13, make sure to read the instructions for Parts I, II, and III under "The Means Test," below. This information will help you compute your current monthly income and compare that figure to your state's median income. You will need these numbers to figure out the requirements of your repayment plan in Ch. 5.

Can You Pass the Means Test?

There are two income tests that determine whether you are eligible for Chapter 7 bankruptcy:

- The means test. Debtors whose average household income over the previous six months exceeds the median income in their state for a family of their size must take this test. These debtors must answer a series of questions about their income and expenses to determine whether they have enough extra income to fund a Chapter 13 plan. If they do, their Chapter 7 filing will be labeled a presumed "abuse" and they will be forced out of Chapter 7.
- The "abuse under all the circumstances" test. This test compares your actual income to your actual expenses to determine whether you have enough money coming in to repay some of your debts. Even if you pass the means test, you can be forced out of Chapter 7 if, under this test, you appear to be able to fund a Chapter 13 repayment plan.

If you fail the means test, you are presumed to be abusing the bankruptcy laws and will be forced into a Chapter 13 bankruptcy unless you can prove that the law shouldn't apply to you for some reason. If you fail the "abuse under all the circumstances" test, the Office of the U.S. Trustee—the government agency responsible for policing the bankruptcy system—has the burden of proving your ineligibility for Chapter 7. The only way to know for certain whether your income is too high under either of these tests is to complete a form that all Chapter 7 debtors must complete as part of their bankruptcy, Form 22A: Chapter 7 Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means-Test Calculation.

What Is Abuse Under All the Circumstances?

A number of bankruptcy judges have had to decide whether the facts of a particular case add up to abuse under all the circumstances. Generally, there are two situations in which the court is most likely to find an abuse: if it looks like your income will be higher, or your expenses should be lower, than the figures you used in the means test.

For example, the court might find an abuse under all the circumstances if it looks like you will have significant extra income in the future that didn't show up in the means test. (Remember, the means test looks only at your income in the six months before you file for bankruptcy.) If your spouse just landed a high-paying job in the last month, for instance, the court might push you into Chapter 13 if you now appear to have enough extra income to pay a significant portion of your unsecured, nonpriority debt over the next five years.

The court might also find an abuse if your expenses look extravagant or it appears that you could spend less for the same necessities. For example, if you are making large payments on a home or a luxury car, the court might decide that some of that money should be going toward debt repayment.

In the first part of the form, you determine whether your average gross income (for the previous six months) is more or less than the median income for your state for your household size.

If your income is less than your state's median income.

If your income (not including Social Security) is less than your state's median, you pass the means test and won't be presumed ineligible to use Chapter 7. But, as mentioned above, you might face another hurdle if you file under Chapter 7. If the U.S. Trustee believes that your actual income less your actual expenses leaves you with enough money to repay a reasonable portion of your debt over five years, it will ask the court to find that allowing you to use Chapter 7 would be an abuse. If the court agrees, you'll have to use Chapter 13.

Whether you choose or are required to use Chapter 13, you will have two advantages if your income is less than the state median: You may propose a three-year (rather than a five-year) repayment plan, and you may use your actual expenses—not amounts approved by the IRS—to calculate how much disposable income you will have left to devote to your plan.

If your income is more than your state's median income.

If your income is more than the state median, you must take the rest of the means test—by completing the rest of Form 22A—to find out whether you'll have the option of using Chapter 7 or will have to use Chapter 13. The purpose of this part of the form is to find out whether you would have enough income left over, after subtracting certain expenses and deductions, to pay a portion of your unsecured debts (credit card debts, medical bills, and the like) over a five-year period.

TIP

Business debtors can skip the means test. If your debts are primarily due to your business, you may choose between a Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 bankruptcy, regardless of the outcome of the means test. You are considered a business debtor if more than half of the total value of your debts comes from your business.

The Means Test

SKIP AHEAD

Those who initially filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy can skip ahead. If you are using Chapter 13 because you initially filed under Chapter 7 and have already taken and flunked the means test, or if the Court has converted your case to Chapter 13, skip to “Forced Conversion to Chapter 13,” below.

Remove Form 22A from Appendix B and fill it in, following the instructions below. If you later decide to file under Chapter 13, you can use a lot of the work you do here to complete a similar form (Form 22C: Statement of Current Monthly Income and Calculation of Commitment Period and Disposable Income) that you must file with your Chapter 13 documents.

RESOURCE

Prefer to let your computer crunch the numbers?

Rather than completing the means test form by hand, you can use an online calculator to run the numbers for you. You'll find an excellent online calculator—as well as many other bankruptcy resources—at www.legalconsumer.com. The calculator automatically enters IRS expense figures so you don't have to look them up. Just enter your zip code, click the means test link, and away you go.

Part I. Military and Non-Consumer Debtors

Line 1A. If all of the facts in the “Declaration of Disabled Veteran” are true of your situation, you can choose between Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 bankruptcy. If you know that you want to file for Chapter 13, however, you still have to calculate your “current monthly income” and compare it to your state's median income. This comparison will determine how long your Chapter 13 plan must last and how much income you will have to commit to your plan.

To qualify for the veterans' exclusion, you must have a disability rating of at least 30%, and more than half of your debt must have been incurred while you were either on active duty or performing homeland defense activity.

Line 1B. If the majority of your debts comes from running a business, check the box. Those who have primarily nonconsumer (business) debts don't have to take the means test and are free to choose between Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 bankruptcy. If the majority of your debts are personal, you must continue the means test to see whether you will have a choice of bankruptcy chapters.

Line 1C. The law provides a temporary exclusion from taking the means test for reservists or National Guard members who were called to active duty or were performing homeland defense activities after September 11, 2001, for at least 90 days. The exclusion period lasts for 540 days after the 90-day period of active duty. If you fit this category, you may be eligible for a temporary exclusion from the means test requirement.

TIP

If you are converting to Chapter 7, you may be able to skip the means test. A few bankruptcy judges have ruled that debtors don't have to take the means test if they initially filed for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, in good faith, and now want to convert to Chapter 7. (See, for example, In re Dudley, 405 B.R. 790 (W.D. Va. 2009)). These decisions are based on the plain language of the statute, which requires the means test only for cases "filed under this chapter" (that is, Chapter 7). Because cases that are converted were originally filed under Chapter 13, these judges believe the rule doesn't apply. However, these cases won't help you unless your Chapter 13 filing was in good faith: If you filed under Chapter 13 just to avoid having to take the means test, you're probably out of luck.

Part II. Calculation of Monthly Income for § 707(b)(7) Exclusion

Line 2a. If you are unmarried, check this box and follow the instructions (complete only Lines 3 through 11 in column A).

Line 2b. If you are married but filing separately because you have separate households, check this box and complete only Lines 3 through 11 in Column A. If you check this box, you are declaring, under penalty of perjury, that you are legally separated under the laws of your state or that you are living separately for reasons other than just to qualify for Chapter 7 bankruptcy.

Line 2c. If you are married but filing separately for reasons other than those stated on Line 2b, check this box and complete Lines 3 through 11 in Columns A and B.

Line 2d. If you are married and filing jointly, check this box and complete Lines 3 through 11 in Columns A and B.

CAUTION

Use monthly figures. All figures you enter in Lines 3 through 11 must be monthly averages of your actual income during the six months before you file for bankruptcy. The six-month period ends on the last day of the month before the month in which you file your bankruptcy. For instance, if you file on September 9, the six-month period ends on August 31. If your income is the same for each of those six months (for example, because you've held the same job and worked the same hours during that period), then use your monthly income. If your earnings vary, add them up for the six-month period, then divide the total by six to get a monthly average. You should include all income you actually received during the six-month period, even if you earned it or became entitled to receive it before the six-month period began. (In re Burrell, 399 B.R. 620 (Bkrcty. C.D. Ill. 2008).)

Line 3. Enter your average monthly earnings over the last six months for gross wages, salary, tips, bonuses, overtime, and commissions. ("Gross" means before any taxes, Social Security, or other amounts are withheld.)

Line 4. If you operate a business, profession, or farm, you'll need to compute your necessary and ordinary business expenses for the six-month period and subtract them from your business receipts for that period. The lowest figure you can enter is zero—in other words, you can't enter a loss.

Courts disagree on how to calculate business income. In the context of reviewing Form 22C (in which this same item appears; see Ch. 5), a few courts have found that the form should not allow you to deduct business expenses here. These courts have held that only your gross receipts should go here, while your business expenses should be subtracted later, as part of the means test. (See, for example, In re Wiegand, 386

B.R. 238 (9th Cir. BAP 2008).) This interpretation means your average monthly income is likely to be higher, and you are more likely to have to take the means test. Whether courts will apply this interpretation to Form 22A (and which courts will follow along) remains to be seen. For more information on this issue, go to www.legalconsumer.com/bankruptcy/CH13, scroll down to the information for Ch. 4 of this book, and look for the appropriate link.

Line 5. Enter your average monthly rental income for the six-month period (if you have any), and deduct ordinary and necessary operating expenses for that same period. (Don't deduct mortgage payments.)

Line 6. Enter your average monthly income from interest, dividends, and royalties over the last six months.

Line 7. Here's where you include your average monthly pension and retirement income. Don't include Social Security retirement benefits.

Line 8. Enter the monthly average of any amounts another person contributes regularly to your household expenses. If you are filing separately but your spouse's income is included in Column B, don't include any contributions that your spouse makes to your household—his or her income is already being taken into account.

Line 9. Your average monthly unemployment compensation goes here. Some courts have found that unemployment benefits should not be included in your monthly income figures, because they are payments received pursuant to the Social Security Act, which are excluded from the means test. (See In re Munger, 370 B.R. 21 (D. Mass. 2007) and In re Sorrell, 359 B.R. 167 (S.D. Ohio 2007).) However, the great majority of courts have ruled that unemployment benefits must be included in your income. Even if you plan to argue that they should be excluded, you must enter the amounts you receive in the boxes.

Line 10. Insert the average monthly amount you received from any other source. Do not include money or benefits received under the SSI, SSA, or TANF programs. These benefits are excluded from your current monthly income computation.

Line 11. Compute the subtotals for Columns A and B (if used). Remember, these subtotals should reflect an average monthly figure for all of the items you entered in Lines 3 through 10.

Line 12. Add the subtotals for Lines A and B together. This is what the 2005 bankruptcy law calls your "current monthly income." Because it's a six-month average, it might not match your actual monthly income at the time you file, especially if you've had a job loss or become unable to work in the last six months.

Courts have interpreted a number of other grey areas regarding income, such as:

- Should you count income you have earned but did not receive within the six-month period?
- Do loans from a retirement plan count as income?
- What other items that aren't included on the form might count as income?

Citations to court opinions on these income issues can be found at www.legalconsumer.com/bankruptcy/CH13; scroll down to the information for Ch. 4 of this book and look for the appropriate link.

Part III. Application of § 707(b)(7) Exclusion

This is where the rubber meets the road: In this part, you must compare the current monthly income figure you calculated in Part II with the median family income for your state. If your income is more than the median, you'll have to continue filling in the form to figure out whether you are barred from using Chapter 7. If your income is equal to or less than the median, you can skip the rest of the form and file for Chapter 7, if you wish.

Line 13. Convert your monthly figure on Line 12 to an annual figure by multiplying it by 12. This is your current annual income.

Line 14. Enter the median income for your state and household size. Note that your household might be larger than your actual family. For instance, you may have a relative or friend who is living with you as part of your household; if so, include the friend as a household member. The basic test for a household member is whether his or her income and expenses are intermingled with yours; he or she does not have to be your dependent for tax or other government purposes. (See In re Ellinger, 370 B.R. 905 (D. Minn. 2007).) (Citations to court opinions on who counts as a household member can be found at www.legalconsumer.com/bankruptcy/CH13; scroll down to the information for Ch. 4 of this book and look for the appropriate link.) The most recent state median income figures as of the date this book is published are in Appendix C. To make sure that you are using the most current figures, however, you should visit the U.S. Trustee's website, www.justice.gov/ust, and click "Means Testing Information." Scroll down a bit for the link to the state median income figures.

Line 15. Do the math. If your "current monthly income" exceeds the state median, check the bottom box on Line 15 and continue to Part IV to find out whether you can choose between Chapter 7 and Chapter 13.

If your income is equal to or less than the median, check the top box on Line 15. This means that you aren't banned from using Chapter 7. You don't need to proceed with the form any further. If you decide to proceed under Chapter 13, having an income that doesn't exceed the state median income offers you two big advantages: You can propose a three-year (rather than a five-year) plan, and you can calculate the income you must commit to the plan using your actual expenses rather than expense figures set by the IRS, which are often lower.

TIP

Consider postponing your filing if you want to qualify for Chapter 7. If you conclude, on the basis of your "current monthly income," that you'll have to complete the rest of Form 22A, think about whether your income will decrease in the next few months. If you recently lost a high-paying job or had a sudden decrease in commissions or royalties, for example, your average income over the past six months might look pretty substantial. But in a few months, when you average in your lower earnings, it will come down quite a bit—perhaps to even to less than the state median. If so, and if Chapter 7 would provide you a better remedy than Chapter 13, you might want to delay your bankruptcy filing.

Part IV. Calculation of Current Monthly Income for § 707(b)(2)

Much of the work you do here can be used to complete Form 22C (described in Ch. 5) if you decide to proceed under Chapter 13.

With a couple of exceptions, the values you will be entering in the form are fairly straightforward. The purpose of the means test is to find out whether you have enough income to pay some of your unsecured, non-priority debts over a five-year period. (See "Classifying Your Debts," below, for help figuring out which debts fall into this category.)

Line 16. Enter the total from Line 12.

Line 17. If you checked the box on Line 2c (married, not filing jointly, and not making the declaration in Line 2b), you can subtract the amount of your spouse's income (as listed in Line 11, Column B) that was not regularly contributed to your household expenses or those of your dependents. For example, if Line 11, Column B shows that your nonfiling spouse has a monthly income of $2,000, but your spouse contributes only $400 a month to your household, you can enter $1,600 here. Other examples of a nonfiling spouse's income that might not be contributed to the filing spouse's household are mortgage payments on a separately owned house, payments on a separately owned car, life insurance payments, payments into a retirement plan, and payments on credit cards or other revolving debt owned solely by the nonfiling spouse.

Line 18. Subtract the amount on Line 17 from the amount on Line 16. Enter the total here.

SKIP AHEAD

If you know you will use Chapter 13. If you have already decided to file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, you can skip the rest of this chapter and continue on to Ch. 5. If you still want to know whether you have a choice between a Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 bankruptcy, continue completing this form.

Part V. Calculation of Deductions From Income

In this part, you will figure out which expenses you can deduct from your current monthly income. After you subtract all allowed expenses, you will be left with your monthly disposable income—the amount you would have left over, in theory, to pay into a Chapter 13 plan for the benefit of your nonpriority, unsecured creditors.

Subpart A: Deductions under Standards of the Internal Revenue Service (IRS)

If you have to complete this part of the form—that is, if your current monthly income exceeds the state median income—you are not allowed to subtract all of your actual expenses. Instead, you must calculate some of your expenses according to standards set by the IRS. (The IRS uses these standards to decide how much a delinquent taxpayer should have to give the agency each month to repay back taxes on an installment plan.)

If you eventually decide to file under Chapter 13, you will have to use these same expenses to determine the amount of disposable income you must devote to your plan. (See Ch. 5 for more information.)

Line 19A. Enter the total IRS National Standards for Food, Clothing and Other Items for your family size and income level. This is the amount the IRS believes you should get to spend for food, clothing, household supplies, personal care, and miscellaneous other items. You can get these figures from www.justice.gov/ust. Click “Means Testing Information,” then scroll down to find the right link. You also can get these figures from your court clerk.

Line 19B. Enter the amount you are allowed to claim for health expenses from the IRS National Standards for Out-of-Pocket Health Care. You can find these figures at www.justice.gov/ust. Click “Means Testing Information,” then scroll down to the appropriate link. As you’ll see, you can claim more for household members who are at least 65 years old, which is reflected on the form. You’ll also see that the total amount you can claim is quite small; if you spend more than you’re allowed to claim here, you can claim it on Line 31.

Line 20A. Enter the amount of the IRS Housing and Utilities Standards, nonmortgage expenses for your county and family size. Get these figures from www.justice.gov/ust. Click “Means Testing Information,” then scroll down to the local Housing and Utilities Expense Standards section and enter your state in the drop-down menu. Find the figures for your county and family size, then enter the figure that appears under the heading “Non-Mortgage.”

Line 20B. On Line a, enter the amount of the IRS Housing and Utilities Standards, Mortgage/Rent expenses for your county and family size. These figures appear on the U.S. Trustee’s website, on the same chart as nonmortgage expenses; follow the instructions for Line 20A, above.

On Line b, enter the average monthly payment for any debts secured by your home, including a mortgage, home equity loan, taxes, and insurance. The average monthly payment is the total of all amounts contractually due to each secured creditor in the five years after you file for bankruptcy, divided by 60.

On Line c, subtract Line b from Line a. This may turn out to be a negative figure—if so, enter a zero in the right-hand column. Later in the means test, you’ll be able to add your average monthly payment back in as a deduction. Most courts allow you to take the IRS expense even if your actual expenses are less; for more information on this issue, go to www.legalconsumer.com/bankruptcy/CH13, scroll down to the information for Ch. 4, and look for the appropriate link.

Line 21. If your actual rental or mortgage expense is higher than that allowed by the IRS, you can claim an adjustment here. For instance, if the IRS mortgage/rental expense for a family of two is $550, you pay an actual rent of $900, and that amount is average for the area in which you live, enter the additional $350 here and explain why you should be able to subtract it (that you couldn’t possibly find housing in your area for less, for example).

Line 22A. You are entitled to claim an expense here whether or not you actually have a car. First, indicate the number of cars for which you pay operating expenses or for which somebody else contributes the operating expenses as part of the amount entered on Line 8. If you don’t have a car, enter the amount listed under “Public Transportation” from the IRS Local Standards: Transportation. You can find these at www.justice.gov/ust; click “Means Testing Information,” then scroll down to the appropriate link and choose your region. If you indicated that you have one or two cars, enter the amount listed for your region (and sometimes, your city) under “Operating Costs” in the same chart.

Line 22B. If you have a car and also use public transportation, you may claim a public transportation expense here. You can find the correct amount by following the instructions for Line 22A, above.

Line 23. These are your expenses for owning or leasing a car.

CAUTION

If you aren’t making payments, you will likely face a challenge. If you include this ownership expense and you aren’t making payments on a car note or lease, the court may not allow the expense. A majority of courts have ruled that you can't use this expense if you own your car outright. (For a listing of cases on this issue, go to www.legalconsumer.com/bankruptcy/CH13, scroll down to the information for Ch. 4, and look for the appropriate link.) As is true of other disputed items in the means test, the best approach if you own your car outright is to include this expense only if you absolutely need it to pass the means test.

On Line 23a, enter the IRS Local Standards: Transportation for ownership of a first car. This amount is actually a national figure; currently, it is $489. To make sure you are using the most up-to-date numbers, check the website of the U.S. Trustee, www.justice.gov/ust. Click "Means Testing Information," then scroll down to the Local Transportation Expense Standards drop-down menu and choose your region. The ownership figure is near the bottom of the page.

On Line 23b, enter your average monthly payment (over the next five years) for all debts secured by your first car. For example, assume you have three years left to pay on the car and the monthly payment is $350. The total amount you will owe in the next five years is $12,600 (36 months times $350). If you spread that amount over the next five years—by dividing the total by 60, the number of months in five years—you'll see that your average monthly payment is $210.

On Line 23c, subtract Line b from Line a and enter the result in the column on the right. Later on, if necessary, you will be able to deduct your car payments to figure out whether you have enough disposable income to fund a Chapter 13 plan.

Line 24. Complete this only if you have a second car (and you checked the "2 or more" box in Line 23). Follow the instructions for Line 23 to enter the required figures for your second car.

Line 25. Enter the total average monthly expense that you actually incur for all taxes other than property or sales taxes. Examples of taxes that you should enter here are income taxes, self-employment taxes, Social Security taxes, and Medicare taxes. In some cases, these taxes will show up on your wage stub. You'll need to convert the period covered by your wage stub to a monthly figure. Once you have figured out how much you pay each month for each type of tax, add them all together and enter them in the column on the right.

Converting Taxes to a Monthly Figure

If you are paid weekly, biweekly, or twice a month, you will have to convert the tax amounts on your pay stubs to a monthly amount. And, if you pay quarterly taxes (estimated income taxes, for example), you'll need to convert that figure as well. Here's how to do it:

- Weekly taxes: Multiply by 4.3 to get a monthly amount.
- Biweekly taxes: Divide by 2 to get a weekly amount, then multiply by 4.3.
- Bimonthly taxes: Divide by 2.
- Quarterly taxes: Divide by 3.

Line 26. Enter all of your mandatory payroll deductions here, other than those entered in Line 25. Use the conversion rules set out above to arrive at average monthly deductions. Make sure you deduct only mandatory deductions (such as required retirement contributions, union dues, and uniform costs). Contributions to a 401(k) should not be included, for example, because they are voluntary.

Line 27. Enter any monthly payments you make for term life insurance. Do not enter payments for any other type of insurance, such as credit insurance, car insurance, renters' insurance, insurance on the lives of your dependents, or whole life insurance on your own life. (Whole life insurance is the type that allows you to borrow against the policy.)

Line 28. Enter the amount of any payments you make pursuant to a court order. Child support and alimony are the most common examples, but you may also have to pay to satisfy a court money judgment or a criminal fine. Do not include court-ordered payments toward a child support or alimony arrearage; only the payments you need to make to stay current should be entered here.

Line 29. Enter the total monthly amount that you pay for education required by your employer to keep your job and the total monthly amount you pay for the education of a physically or mentally challenged dependent child for whom no public education providing similar services is available. Included in this amount would be the actual costs of after-school enrichment educational services for a physically or mentally challenged child and the actual educational expenses you are paying in support of an individual educational plan (IEP).

Line 30. Enter the average monthly cost of child care. If your employment (and therefore, your need for child care) is seasonal, add up your child care costs for the year and divide the total by 12. Do not equate education with child care. For instance, child care for a child who is of public education school age should cover only the hours before and after school.

Line 31. Enter the average monthly amount you pay for out-of-pocket health care expenses, but only to the extent it exceeds the amount you were allowed to claim on Line 19B. Do not include health care expenses that are reimbursed by insurance or provided by an HMO or by Medicaid. Also, don't include premiums you pay for health insurance; you claim these on Line 34.

Line 32. Enter the average monthly expenses you pay for any communication devices that are necessary for the health and welfare of you or your dependents. Examples provided by the form are cell phones, pagers, call waiting, caller identification, and special long distance or Internet services. Virtually all of these devices arguably are necessary for the health and welfare of your family. However, some expenses might not be allowed (for example, a smartphone, cell phone you use for your business, or broadband Internet service). When in doubt, list the expense.

Line 33. Add the expenses you entered in Lines 19 through 32 and put the total in the column at the right.

Note: If your average monthly income, as calculated on Line 18, less the expenses totaled on Line 33, is less than $110, you can file for Chapter 7 if you desire. Remember, however, that you can still be forced out of Chapter 7 if the U.S. Trustee successfully argues that your actual income, less your actual expenses, would produce enough disposable income to pay off a significant portion of your unsecured debts over a five-year period. Just what percentage of your unsecured debts would have to be paid off to warrant pushing you into Chapter 13 varies from court to court, but 20% is a pretty good working minimum.

Subpart B: Additional Living Expense Deductions

The expenses in this subpart are allowed by the Bankruptcy Code, in addition to the IRS expenses. However, you can't list an expense twice; if you already claimed it in Subpart A or on Lines 4 or 5 in Section II (business expenses), don't list it again here.

Line 34. Here, list your reasonably necessary monthly expenses for health insurance, disability insurance, and health savings accounts (HSAs) on the lines provided. The form was revised in 2008 to clarify that you can list a "reasonable" expense here whether you actually pay that amount each month or not. If, however, you pay less than the reasonable amount you list, you must indicate how much you actually spend each month on the additional line provided. If the U.S. Trustee or one of your creditors later wants to challenge your expense claims—for example, to argue that you really have more disposable income than the form indicates—they can use this information.

Line 35. Anything you spend to care for a member of your household or immediate family because of his or her age, illness, or disability can be deducted here. If your contributions are episodic—a wheelchair here, a vacation with a companion there—estimate your average monthly expense and enter it here.

CAUTION

Your response here could affect eligibility for government benefits. Expenses you list here could render the person you are assisting ineligible for Social Security or other government benefits. For example, if you state that you are spending $500 a month for the care of a relative, and that relative is receiving SSI, your relative might receive a lower benefit amount each month, to reflect your contribution. On the other hand, if you are making such expenditures, you are required to disclose them here. If you find yourself in this predicament, talk to a lawyer.

Line 36. The average monthly expense of security systems and any other method of protecting your family should be entered here.

Line 37. If your actual home energy costs exceed the figure you entered on Line 20A, enter the extra money you spend here. As the form indicates, you may need to prove this extra expense to the trustee. Whether you need to prove this extra expense will depend on the results of the means test. If the amount you enter here is the deciding factor in determining that you don't have enough disposable income to fund a Chapter 13 plan, proof will definitely be required.

Line 38. This item is for money you spend on your children's education. If your average monthly expense is $147.92 or more, put $147.92 in this blank; that's the maximum you can deduct. Remember not to list an amount twice; if you already listed an expense on Line 29 or 30, for example, don't repeat it here. Education expenses for children with special needs may be deductible later as a "special circumstance," as (perhaps) can expenses required by individual education plans (IEPs). (Special circumstance claims are explained in Ch. 5.)

Line 39. Here, you can list the amount by which your actual expenses for food and clothing exceed the IRS allowance for these items as entered in Line 19. However, you cannot list more than 5% over the IRS allowance.

Line 40. If you have been making charitable contributions to an organization before your bankruptcy filing date, you can enter them here as long as the group is organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes; to foster national or international amateur sports competition (but only if no part of its activities involve the provision of athletic facilities or equipment); or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals. You can't take this deduction if the organization has been disqualified from tax exemption status because of its political activities.

Line 41. Enter the total of Lines 34 through 40 in the column on the right.

Note: If you subtract the amounts on Line 41 and 33 from the amount on Line 18 and the total is less than $110, you won't be prohibited from using Chapter 7 on the basis of the means test. Remember, however, that the U.S. Trustee can still challenge your Chapter 7 filing if your actual income less your actual expenses would give you enough disposable income to fund a Chapter 13 plan.

Subpart C: Deductions for Debt Payment

Here, you deduct average monthly payments you will have to make over the next five years. Once you've completed this section, you can put all the numbers together to figure out whether you pass the means test.

Line 42. List the average monthly payment you will have to make over the next five years to creditors that hold a secured interest in your property (for example, the mortgage holder on your house or the creditor that holds your car note). As explained in the instructions for Line 23, you can calculate this amount by figuring out the total amount you will owe over the next five years, then dividing that total by 60. Courts are divided as to whether you can include this deduction if you aren't making the payments and plan to surrender the property to the creditor. Some courts have found that allowing debtors to deduct payments they aren't making is contrary to the purpose of the means test; other courts have ruled that these "phantom" payments should be deducted because the purpose of the means test is to provide a snapshot of your financial situation. For a listing of the cases that have ruled on this issue, go to www.legalconsumer.com/bankruptcy/CH13, scroll down to the information for Ch. 4, and look for the appropriate link.

Line 43. Here, list the average monthly payment you would have to make to pay off any past amounts due to creditors on property that you must keep for your support or support of your dependents. That would typically include a car, your home, and any property you need for your employment. (Come up with the monthly figure by dividing the total amount you would have to pay by 60.)

Line 44. List the average monthly amount you will have to pay for priority claims over the next five years. (See "Classifying Your Debts," below, for a list of priority claims.) Typical priority claims include back taxes and back child and spousal support. Divide the total of all priority claims by 60 to arrive at the monthly average. Don't include payments you've already listed on the form, such as current child support obligations. This line is only for debts you owe at the time of filing.

Line 45. Here, you must calculate the fee that the trustee would charge if you ended up in Chapter 13 bankruptcy. The fee depends on how much you would be paying, through the trustee, to your secured and unsecured creditors. It's impossible to come up with a figure at this point in the form, so leave it blank for now. If you don't pass the means test with this line left blank, come back here when you've completed Part VI and follow these instructions to come up with a figure:

- Add Lines 42, 43, and 44.
- Divide the total on Line 54 by 60 (to calculate the average monthly payment you would have to make to pay down 25% of your unsecured debt over five years).

- Add this number to the total of Lines 42, 43, and 44, and put the result on Line 45a. This is the average amount you would have to pay into a Chapter 13 plan to cover your secured debts, arrearages on those debts, priority debts, and 25% of your unsecured debts.
- On Line 45b, enter the multiplier percentage from the U.S. Trustee's website for your state and district. Go to www.justice.gov/ust, click "Means Testing Information," scroll down to the section called "Administrative Expenses Multipliers" and click "Schedules," then select your state and district to get the percentage.
- Multiply Line 45a by Line 45b and enter the result in the column on the right.

Line 46. Add Lines 42 through 45, and enter the total in the column on the right.

Subpart D: Total Deductions from Income

Line 47. Enter the total of Lines 33, 41, and 46 in the column at the right. This is the total amount you can subtract from your current monthly expenses to arrive at your disposable income.

Part VI. Determination of § 707(b)(2) Presumption

This is where you find out whether you received a passing grade on the means test.

Line 48. Enter the amount from Line 18 in the column on the right.

Line 49. Enter the amount from Line 47 in the column on the right

Line 50. Subtract Line 49 from Line 48 and enter the result in the column on the right.

Line 51. Multiply the total from Line 50 by 60 (to find out how much disposable income you will have over the next five years, according to these figures). Enter the result in the column at the right.

Line 52. Here you must check one of three boxes. If the amount on Line 51 is less than $7,025, check the top box. This means that you don't have enough money left over to make a Chapter 13 plan feasible, so you have the choice of filing for Chapter 7. If the total on Line 51 is more than $11,725, you have enough income to make a Chapter 13 plan feasible, and you probably won't be allowed to use Chapter 7. If your total is at least $7,025 but no more than $11,725, you will have to do a few more calculations to figure out where you fall. Proceed to Line 53.

Line 53. Enter the total of your nonpriority, unsecured debts. See "Classifying Your Debts," below, for help figuring out which of your debts qualify.

Line 54. Multiply the amount on Line 53 by 0.25 and enter the result in the box on the right. This amount represents 25% of your total nonpriority, unsecured debt.

Line 55. Here, you determine whether the income you have left over (listed on Line 51) is sufficient to pay 25% of your unsecured, nonpriority debt (listed on Line 54). If Line 51 is less than Line 54, you have passed the means test and may choose to file for Chapter 7 bankruptcy. (Remember, however, that you might still face a challenge if your actual income less your actual expenses would leave you with enough money to fund a Chapter 13 repayment plan.)

If Line 51 is greater than Line 54, you have failed the means test. If you fail the means test, you can complete Part VII, in which you list additional expenses that were somehow not included in the earlier parts of the form. Those expenses would be taken into account by the U.S. Trustee if you file a Chapter 7 case, as long as they don't duplicate expenses you already listed and are reasonably necessary for the support of you and your family.

TIP

Make sure not to understate your expenses. If you want to use Chapter 7 but have failed the means test, go back over the form and carefully examine the expenses you listed for categories that aren't mandated by the IRS. People often underestimate their actual expenses. If you underestimated one or more expenses or left an expense out that is provided for in the form, make the adjustments and see whether you can get a passing grade. Because this form is so complex, we recommend that you go through it at least twice before arriving at your final figures.

Classifying Your Debts

To complete the means test, you need to know how to categorize each of your debts. As explained above, you have to calculate what you owe on your priority debts and your secured debts for the next five years, and you have to add up all of your nonpriority, unsecured debts to figure out what portion of them you could repay in a Chapter 13 plan. This section will help you determine which debts are which. The classifications you make here will also help you draft your repayment plan and complete your bankruptcy forms.

Secured Debts

A debt is “secured” if you stand to lose a particular piece of property when you don’t make your payments to the creditor. Most secured debts are created when you sign loan papers giving a creditor a security interest in your property—such as a home loan or car loan. But a debt might also be secured if a creditor has filed a lien (a legal claim against your property that must be paid before the property can be sold). Here is a list of common secured debts and liens:

- Mortgages. Called deeds of trust in some states, these are loans to buy or refinance houses or other real estate. If you fail to pay, the lender can foreclose on your house.
- Home equity loans (second mortgages). If you fail to pay, the lender (typically a bank or finance company) can foreclose on your house.
- Loans for cars, boats, tractors, motorcycles, or RVs. If you fail to pay, the lender can repossess the vehicle.
- Store charges with a security agreement. Almost all store purchases on credit cards are unsecured. Some stores, notably Sears and J.C. Penney, however, claim to retain a security interest in all hard goods (durable goods) purchased, or they make customers sign security agreements when they use their store charge card.
- Personal loans from banks, credit unions, or finance companies. Often, you must pledge valuable personal property, such as a paid-off motor vehicle, as collateral for these loans. The property can be repossessed if you don’t make the payments.
- Judicial liens. A judicial lien can be imposed on your property only after somebody sues you and wins a money judgment against you. In most states, the judgment creditor then must record (file) the judgment with the county or state.

The recorded judgment creates a lien on your real estate and, in some states, on some of your personal property as well.

- Statutory liens. Some liens are automatic, by law. For example, in most states, when you hire someone to work on your house, the worker and the supplier of materials automatically gets a mechanic’s lien (sometimes called a materialman’s or contractor’s lien) on the house if you don’t pay.
- Tax liens. If you owe money to the IRS or another taxing authority, the debt is secured if the agency has recorded a lien against your property. (See “Tax Debts,” below, for more information.)

Priority Debts

Priority debts are unsecured debts that are considered sufficiently important to jump to the head of the bankruptcy repayment line. Priority debts that may come up in consumer bankruptcies include:

- wages, salaries, and commissions owed by an employer
- contributions to employee benefit plans
- money owed to certain farmers and fishermen
- up to $2,425 in deposits made for the purchase, lease, or rental of property or services for personal, family, or household use that were not delivered or provided
- alimony, maintenance, or support
- claim for death or personal injury the debtor caused while intoxicated
- nondischargeable taxes (see “Tax Debts,” below), and
- customs, duties, and penalties you owe to the federal, state, or local government.

Nonpriority, Unsecured Debts

Not surprisingly, nonpriority, unsecured debts are all debts that are neither secured nor priority. Debts in this category include:

- credit and charge card purchases and cash advances
- department store credit card purchases, unless the store retains a security interest in the items you buy or requires you to sign a security agreement
- gasoline company credit card purchases

- back rent
- medical bills
- certain tax debts (see “Tax Debts,” below)
- student loans
- utility bills
- loans from friends or relatives, unless you signed a promissory note secured by some property you own
- money judgments for breach of contract or negligence
- health club dues

- lawyers’ bills (unless there’s a lien on your property to secure payment)
- church or synagogue dues, and
- union dues.

Tax Debts

A tax debt can be secured, priority, or unsecured. If a taxing agency has placed a lien on your property, the debt is secured. If the tax debt is not dischargeable in bankruptcy, the debt is priority. And if the tax debt can be discharged, it is unsecured. The chart below will

Forced Conversion to Chapter 13

If you already filed for Chapter 7 and flunked the means test, the U.S. Trustee, the trustee, or a creditor will have filed a motion under 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2) to have the court declare your filing “abusive.” If the court agrees, it will give you the choice of having your case dismissed or converted to Chapter 13. If you consent to the conversion, the court will order it.

To remain in Chapter 13, you will have to file a confirmable plan within 15 days of the conversion, start making payments on the plan within 15 days after that, and otherwise comply with the eligibility requirements unique to Chapter 13 (see Ch. 3 for more on these requirements).

CAUTION

You may not be eligible for either type of bankruptcy. It’s entirely possible to be kicked out of Chapter 7 because your income is too high, then be unable to come up with a Chapter 13 repayment plan that’s acceptable to the judge. In other words, there may be no bankruptcy remedy for you. For instance, you may get tossed out of Chapter 7 because your current monthly income was too high when you filed. If, however, you don’t have a steady income by the time you convert to Chapter 13, your plan won’t be confirmed. If you find yourself in this situation, talk to a lawyer right away.

Before you are allowed to proceed with your Chapter 13 bankruptcy, the judge must approve your repayment plan. As explained briefly in Ch. 3, your plan will be approved only if it shows that you will have enough steady income to:

- pay certain types of debts in full over the life of your plan, and
- pay your nonpriority, unsecured creditors at least what they would have received if you had filed under Chapter 7.

The plan must also show that all of your “disposable income” (as defined by the bankruptcy laws) will go toward paying your remaining debts for the duration of your plan.

How long your plan must last and how much money you must devote to it depends on whether your current monthly income, which you calculated in Ch. 4, is more or less than your state’s median income. If your current monthly income is less than the median income for your state, you can propose a three-year plan, and you may use your actual expenses to calculate your disposable income.

If your current monthly income is more than the median income for your state, your plan must last five years, and you must use expense amounts set by the IRS (which might differ from your actual expenses) to calculate your disposable income. In essence, this means that you will probably have to devote more money to your plan for a longer period of time.

RELATED TOPIC

If you haven’t calculated your current monthly income, go back to Ch. 4. Ch. 4 explains how to come up with this figure and compare it to your state’s median. You’ll need to know your current monthly income—and whether it is more or less than your state’s median—to figure out whether you can come up with a confirmable repayment plan.

This chapter will help you decide whether you can propose a repayment plan that meets the legal requirements. If you decide to go ahead with a Chapter 13 bankruptcy, you can use your rough calculations from this chapter when you actually draft your repayment plan in Ch. 8.

SEE AN EXPERT

Talk to a lawyer if you can’t make the numbers work. This chapter will help you determine whether you can come up with a plan the judge will approve if you decide to file for Chapter 13. If you can’t, there is no reason to do the work required to actually draft a plan unless you first consult with a bankruptcy attorney. An attorney may be able to provide a different slant on the numbers you provide in the form and the choices you make when completing this chapter.

If Your Current Monthly Income Is Less Than Your State’s Median Income

If your current monthly income is less than your state’s median income, you can propose a plan that lasts for three years or less. However, the court can authorize a plan lasting up to five years, if necessary. Because certain debts must be paid off in full in a Chapter 13 plan, debtors often need a longer plan period so they can afford the monthly payments. For example, if you owe a $20,000 arrearage on your mortgage, a three-year plan would require monthly payments of at least $555. If you stretched out those payments over five years, you would owe only $333 each month.

SKIP AHEAD

This section is only for those whose current monthly income is less than their state’s median income. If your income—as calculated in Ch. 4—is equal to or more than the state median, skip ahead to “If Your Current Monthly Income Is More Than Your State’s Median Income,” below.

Step 1: Calculate Your Base Income

Your base income is the amount you will use to determine whether you have sufficient income to fund a Chapter 13 plan. Your base income is simply your current monthly income (your average gross income over the six-month period before you filed for bankruptcy, as calculated in Ch. 4) less any child support payments, foster care payments, or disability payments you receive for a dependent child, as long as those amounts are necessary for the child’s care.

Current Monthly Income (from Ch. 4): _____
 Child Support, Foster Care, or Disability Payments: – _____
 Base Income: = _____

If Your Base Income Looks Nothing Like Your Actual Income

Because the base income figure you use in this section describes your income for the last six months, it may not accurately reflect your current income. Especially in these hard economic times, with pay cuts, layoffs, and business failures soaring, your past income may bear little resemblance to what you're earning now (or expect to earn in the future). That's why a number of courts have ruled that your base income may be disregarded if your actual current income would more accurately reflect your ability to meet your Chapter 13 plan requirements. Other courts always use the base income figure, regardless of recent changes in your financial situation. The issue is set to be decided by the U.S. Supreme Court (in a case called In re Lanning) in 2010, when we'll have a definitive answer of which figures to use. For purposes of this section, we assume that your base income is the correct number to use in making these calculations.

Step 2: Subtract Your Expenses

When determining your disposable income, you can subtract only those expenses that are reasonably necessary for you and your dependents and any child support or alimony obligation that first arose after you filed your bankruptcy petition.

The best way to calculate these expenses is to use one of the official bankruptcy forms—Schedule J: Current Expenditures of Individual Debtor(s)— as a starting point, then add certain other expenses allowed by the bankruptcy code. The work you do here will be useful if you continue on to file for bankruptcy, because you will have to file a Schedule J with the court. (A sample Schedule J appears in Ch. 7.)

What's a Reasonable Expense?

When it comes to expenses, what is considered reasonable varies from debtor to debtor, court to court, and even region to region. In general, expenses for luxury items or services (such as a gardener) will not be allowed. If an expense seems particularly high, the court will look to see whether you can achieve the same goal by spending less; the court will let you live adequately, but not high on the hog. For example, if you are making payments of $550 per month on a Cadillac, the court may allow only $300 per month toward a less expensive car, freeing up another $250 per month of disposable income. Courts also tend not to allow any voluntary payments to retirement plans, unless the debtor is approaching retirement age or is financially challenged. (See In re Behlke, 358 F.3d 429 (6th Cir. Ohio 2004).)

Your best approach when completing Schedule J is to enter your actual expenses. If you want to know whether your expenses will later be considered reasonable, compare them with the cost of living schedules published by the federal government and collected for your convenience by the U.S. Trustee's Office at www.justice.gov/ust. These are the same expenses you used in Ch. 4 if you completed the means test there. If you didn't, click the "Means Testing" link on the right side of the U.S. Trustee's website and check out the following categories:

- National Standards: Food, Clothing & Other Items
- Local Housing and Utilities Expense Standards
- Local Transportation Expense Standards

You can also find out the applicable IRS standards for your area by taking the free, online means test at www.legalconsumer.com.

Use Schedule J to Determine Reasonably Necessary Expenses

Tear out the blank version of Schedule J from Appendix B. If you and your spouse have separated but are filing jointly, you can each complete a separate Schedule J and combine your expenses at the end of this procedure.

For each listed item, fill in your monthly expenses for you and any dependents. Remember to include payments you make for your dependents' expenses in your figures only if those expenses are reasonable and necessary for the dependents' support.

If you make some payments biweekly, quarterly, semiannually, or annually, prorate them to show your monthly payment.

1. Rent or home mortgage payment. If your rent or mortgage payment is unusually high for your area, the court might suggest that you move in order to bring this expense down, if alternate housing is easily available. If you are facing foreclosure and will be surrendering your home in your Chapter 13 bankruptcy, what amount should you list for your rent or home mortgage payment? You can either hunt around the neighborhood where you plan to live and use an average rental amount or you can use the IRS figure for average rentals in your area. (You can find them at www.justice.gov/ust; click "Means Testing Information," then scroll down to "Local Housing and Utilities Expense Standards" and choose your state.) At the bottom of your expense form, indicate that you are using an artificial expense standard for your rent.

2. Utilities. List your monthly utility expenses. Be sure to take a monthly average of gas, heating fuel, and electricity if your bills vary month to month. Also under the utility category, put expenses for satellite TV, cellular telephone, pager, caller identification, and special long distance and Internet subscriptions necessary for the welfare of you or your dependents (use an attachment if necessary to list all your utility expenses). Some courts might refuse high phone bills (for example, if you call a parent or child in a distant city every day). A court might also question the expense of full-service cable or satellite TV, so you may have to adjust your plan to keep the basic service but drop the premium channels.

3. Home maintenance. If your estimates of maintenance and upkeep are high, you may have to provide the court with documentation for past years' expenses. Obviously, the court will want you to maintain your home's condition, but in a reasonably inexpensive manner.

4. Food. To determine whether or not your figure is reasonable, the court will most likely compare it to the federal cost of living figure for your area. (See "What's a Reasonable Expense?" above.) If your expenses are higher than average, be ready to explain them—for example, because a family member needs a special diet. If the expenses are high because you eat out a lot, be prepared to explain why.

5. Clothing. You are not expected to wear only second-hand clothing, especially if your employment requires a high-end dress standard. But extravagant or frequent purchases may not be allowed. A court might also suggest that you buy used clothing for your still-growing children. To get an idea of how much you spend now, total up the clothing purchases for which you have receipts, credit card statements, or an entry in your checkbook, and arrive at a monthly average.

6. Laundry and dry cleaning. Enter your expenses here. Especially if you have to dress up for work, the court will allow you to spend some money on dry cleaning every month.

7. Medical and dental expenses. The court will want you to maintain your medical insurance coverage, so it will allow medical insurance for you and your dependents as an expense. Don't list payments you're making on bills from medical providers and hospitals for services that you've already received. The court will probably want you to pay those through your Chapter 13 plan. The court might let you include 100% of the bill as part of your monthly expenses if you need ongoing medical care and the provider won't continue to provide it unless you pay your bill in full. If you are in this situation, include the expense on this worksheet. The court may also reject expenses for mental health therapy and instead suggest that you visit a free or low-cost county mental health facility, if you qualify.

8. Transportation. The court will let you pay a reasonable amount to get to and from work and provide necessary transportation for your children. The court will allow expenses for vehicle insurance, maintenance, and registration. The IRS figures for a reasonable operating and public transportation expense vary from $200 to $400, depending on where you live and whether you have one or two cars. As mentioned on the form, you shouldn't put your car payments on this line: They come later.

9. Recreation, clubs and entertainment, newspapers, magazines, etc. Many debtors are tempted to leave this line blank because they think it will look bad for them to incur expenses for recreation. For now, don't worry what it will look like. Just list your actual expenses. Later on, if you lack adequate disposable income, you might need to tighten your belt, and recreation may be one category where you can cut back.

10. Charitable contributions. You can include donations to charity, in an amount up to 15% of your income for the year in which you make them. You can subtract charitable contributions even if you are paying your nonpriority, unsecured creditors only 1% of what you owe them. (In re Tony and Martha Petty, Case No. 4:05-BK-26362 (E.D. Ark. 2006).)

11. Insurance. The court generally will let you maintain your disability or life insurance, especially if your health is compromised and you may need to use the disability insurance, or if you have young children or other dependents who would need the life insurance money if you died. If you have a whole life insurance policy, you may be told to convert it to a term policy, which has much lower premiums.

12. Taxes. List the monthly average of all taxes that are deducted from your wages or that you pay as a self-employed person or an independent contractor.

13. Installment payments. Don't list your installment payments here—you will include them elsewhere in your repayment plan.

14. Alimony, maintenance, and support paid to others. List your current support obligations only. Don't list any back support you owe.

15. Payments for support of additional dependents not living at your home. Your expenses listed so far have included expenses for your dependents living at home. You also are permitted to claim expenses for the support of other dependents not living at home, including your children. These expenses include child care, clothes, books, an occasional movie, and the like.

16. Regular expenses from operation of business, profession, or farm. If you run a business, enter all ordinary and necessary expenses paid for the continuation, preservation, and operation of the business. This would include monthly payments on business assets as well as any expenses you would include on your IRS Schedule C. You can include expenses only if you own the business as a sole proprietor or as a partner with your spouse. If you file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, you will have to attach a detailed statement of your expenses anyway, so you might as well do it here. Anyone with a financial background, such as a banker, accountant, bookkeeper, or tax preparer, can help you draft an expense statement.

17. Other. List any additional expenses here, except payments you are making on back income taxes and on unsecured installment debts, such as student loans, credit card accounts, and personal loans: These debts must be paid out of your disposable income through your Chapter 13 plan. Be ready to explain why the expenses you list here are reasonable. Other expenses not already listed might include:

- Educational expenses for your children. Courts are reluctant to let you send your children to private school if it means your creditors won't be paid. You may be able to convince the court of the need for private school, however, if the public schools in your area are quite bad or dangerous, you want your children to receive religious education, or your child has special educational needs. If your child is in college, a court may not let you deduct tuition at an expensive private university, but may let you count the payments for a state college.
- Your or your spouse's educational expenses. If either you or your spouse is currently in school, list your expenses here. The court may reject a portion of these expenses if you or your spouse could be working and increasing the family's income.
- Miscellaneous personal expenses. Often, these are the expenses that your creditors, the trustee, and the court scrutinize the most. Some courts do not think you should be allowed to spend anything for entertainment, to participate in any hobbies that cost money, or to buy gifts for friends or relatives. As with all expenses, the key to getting these expenses approved is their reasonableness. You can't include in your budget money to see Broadway shows, go sailing once a week, keep a subscription to an expensive journal, or renew your country club membership. You can probably budget to rent movies, go bowling, get a daily newspaper, keep your membership at the local Y, and take care of your pet.

Once you have completed the form, add up all of the expenses you have listed. Subtract these expenses from your base income, as calculated above.

Schedule J Expenses: – _____
Total: = _____

If you still have a positive number—that is, if it looks like you will have some money left over after paying the expenses listed on Schedule J—you may be able to propose a confirmable Chapter 13 plan. If the number is negative, you won't have anything left to put toward a repayment plan. If you find yourself in this situation, revisit your expenses. Some of them may not be reasonable.

Step 3: Subtract Your Installment Payments

Here is where you figure out the monthly average of any installment payments you are making on property that is collateral for a secured debt. These are typically mortgage, car, and home furniture payments, but you may also be making payments on other valuable items, such as jewelry and electronic equipment.

Add up all of the installment payments you are contractually obligated to make each month, then subtract that amount from what you had left at the end of Step 2.

Base Income Less Expenses
(from Step 2): _____

Installment Payments: – _____

Total: = _____

If you still have money left over after subtracting your expenses and your installment payments from your base income, you may be able to propose a confirmable Chapter 13 plan. If your total is zero (or less), revisit your installment payments. If you are paying $600 a month for a Corvette and you could get by with a more economical car or with no car at all, make the adjustment here so that you will have some income left over. (Incidentally, the IRS national standard for a reasonable monthly car payment is $489.)

Reducing Your Secured Debt Payments

In your Chapter 13 case, you might be able to reduce the amount you owe on a debt securing personal property—such as a car note—and thereby reduce the amount of your monthly installment payments. This strategy is called a “cramdown,” and you may be able to use it to reduce the amount you owe to the value of the property.

You may cram down only certain types of secured debt. You may not cram down mortgages on your primary residence. Although Congress has considered allowing cramdowns on residential mortgages, it hasn't yet been willing to make this amendment to the bankruptcy law. You also may not cram down debts for cars incurred within the previous 30 months (unless the vehicle was purchased for your business, in which case the 30-month restriction doesn't apply). And, you can't cram down debts for other property you bought within a year before filing.

Although you can't cram down mortgages on your primary residence, you may still be able to reduce your debt payments. If your home is worth no more than you owe on your first mortgage, that means your second mortgage (and your third, if you have one) are no longer secured by your home. In this situation, you may be able to “strip off” the second mortgage and treat it as unsecured debt in your Chapter 13 plan. This procedure allows you to greatly reduce the amount you have to pay each month to stay current on your home.

For example, assume you pay $1,500 on your first mortgage, $750 on your second mortgage, and $400 on a third mortgage (such as a home equity loan). If your home is worth $200,000 and you still owe that much on your first mortgage, you can strip off the second and third mortgages. This would reduce your monthly payment from $2,650 to $1,500.

Step 4: Subtract Your Priority Debts

As mentioned in Ch. 3, you must pay certain debts in full over the life of your plan—three years, unless the court authorizes a longer time. Among the debts that have to be paid in full are priority debts. (You can find a list of priority debts in Ch. 4, “Classifying Your Debts.”)

If you owe any priority debts, divide the total amount you owe by 36 to determine how much you would have to pay each month in order to pay off these debts in three years. Subtract this amount from what’s left of your base income after subtracting expenses and installment payments, in Step 3, above.

Monthly Priority Debt Payments:	– _____
Total:	= _____

If you have a positive number, move on to the next section. If the number is negative, you still might propose a confirmable plan under the following conditions:

- If one of the priority debts was child support or alimony that was assigned to a government agency (rather than money you owe directly to your child or ex-spouse), you don’t have to pay the full amount in your plan. However, you do have to include the debt in your plan and commit all of your disposable income to a plan for five years rather than three years, unless it won’t take you that long to pay the child support debt in full.
- As mentioned, if you could pay off all of your priority debts over a five-year period rather than a three-year period, you can ask the court to allow a five-year plan as part of your confirmation hearing.

Step 5: Subtract Secured Debt Arrearages

One of the main reasons people file Chapter 13 is to deal with arrearages—amounts past due—on their home or car note, to prevent a foreclosure or repossession. Chapter 13 allows you to keep your home or car while paying off the arrearages under your plan. If you owe an arrearage and your plan shows that you are keeping the collateral (your home, car, or the like), you’ll have to pay 100% of the arrearage and stay current on the main debt.

Add up all arrearages on debts securing collateral you want to keep. If you will be proposing a three-year plan, divide the total by 36 to get the amount you would have to pay each month. For a five-year plan, divide the total by 60 to arrive at a monthly amount. Subtract this total monthly payment from your remaining income, from Step 4, above.

Monthly Secured Debt Arrearage Payments:	– _____
Total:	= _____

If the number is positive, proceed to Step 5 below. If the number is negative, even over a five-year repayment period, you won’t be able to present a confirmable plan.

TIP

Giving up the property might help. If you surrender the collateral to the lender (and therefore, don’t have to pay the full past due amount), you might have some income left over. This means you may be able to come up with a confirmable plan yet.

Step 6: Subtract Debts Secured by Liens

In most cases, if you have a lien on your property other than a purchase money lien (such as a car note or mortgage), you’ll have to pay the lien off in full in your plan. For example, if the IRS has recorded a lien against your property for back taxes, or a contractor has placed a mechanic’s lien on your property for work that you didn’t pay for, your plan will not be confirmed unless it provides for payment of these liens in full.

TIP

Different rules apply to judgment liens. If there is a lien on your property because you lost a lawsuit and owe someone money as a result, you might be able to remove the lien in a separate proceeding called “lien avoidance.” If you use lien avoidance to remove a lien, you won’t have to pay it under your plan. See Ch. 11 for information on lien avoidance.

Add up all liens on your property (other than judgment liens and liens created when you obtained loans to purchase the property). Divide the total by 36 for a three-year plan (or by 60 if you are proposing a five-year plan) to obtain the monthly amount you will have to pay. Then, subtract this total from your remaining income from Step 5, above.

Remaining Income
(from Step 5): _____
Monthly Lien Payment: – _____
Total Disposable Income: = _____

If you still have money left over, you can move on to Step 7. If your total disposable income is zero or less, your plan won't be confirmed.

Your Chapter 13 Trustee Will Get a Cut

Your Chapter 13 trustee is entitled to roughly 10% of all payments you make under the plan, as a fee. It's hard to compute what that figure will be at this point; the total trustee's cut may depend on whether your mortgage (if you have one) and other secured debts will be paid under the plan or directly to the creditor. For example, assume your mortgage payment is $2,000 a month, and you want to use Chapter 13 to cure an arrearage of $5,000. If you make your mortgage payment directly to the creditor, you will owe the trustee only $500 (10% of the arrearage). However, if you also make your mortgage payment to the trustee as part of the plan, the trustee will be entitled to another $7,200 over the life of a three-year plan. Although some courts permit debtors to make mortgage payments directly to a creditor (see In re Lopez, 372 B.R. 40 (9th Cir. B.A.P. 2007)), others require debtors to make these payments through the plan, so the trustee gets paid more (see In re Breeding, 366 B.R. 21 (E.D. Ark. 2007)).

To get a rough figure, multiply the amount you came up with in Step 6 by 0.1 (10%), then subtract that amount from your total disposable income. If the 10% knocks you out of contention, don't give up. You can take a closer look at some of your other expenses to get yourself back in the running.

Step 7: Compare Your Disposable Income to What Your Creditors Would Get If You Used Chapter 7

As explained briefly in Ch. 3, if you own nonexempt property, you will have to pay your nonpriority, unsecured creditors at least what they would have received if you had filed for Chapter 7: the value of your nonexempt property, less what it would cost for the trustee to take and sell that property, less the trustee's commission. To find out whether you have nonexempt property, skip to "Understanding Property Exemptions," below, for information on which exemptions you can use and how to apply them to your possessions.

If you find that all of your property is exempt, you don't have to worry about this step. As long as you came up with a positive number in Step 6, you should be able to propose a confirmable plan. If you do have nonexempt property, however, you will have to perform what's called a "liquidation analysis" to determine how much your unsecured creditors would actually receive if you used Chapter 7 (and therefore, how much they are entitled to receive under your Chapter 13 plan).

Start with the value of your equity in the property (see "Value Your Property," below, for tips on coming up with an estimated value). If a portion of the property is exempt, subtract the exempt amount. For example, many states exempt up to a certain amount of equity in a car. If you own a car outright that's worth $10,000, and the exemptions you are using allow you to exempt $4,000 of equity in a car, your total nonexempt amount is $6,000.

Next, subtract the trustee's commission. This amount represents what the trustee would get to keep if your property were taken and sold in a Chapter 7 case. Because this amount would not be distributed to your creditors, you can subtract it from the amount you have to pay them in a Chapter 13 case.

For each item of property sold, the trustee gets 25% of the first $5,000, 10% of the next $50,000, and 5% of the rest up to one million dollars. So, if you have a nonexempt bank account containing $25,000, the trustee gets to keep $1,250 (25% of $5,000) plus $2,000 (10% of the remaining $20,000) for a total of $3,250.

Put another way, your creditors would receive $21,750 instead of $25,000.

In addition to the trustee's commission, you can also subtract the costs of taking the property and selling it. For certain types of property, there are few (if any) costs of sale. Cash on hand, bank accounts, and investments that can easily be converted to cash fit within this category of property. However, other types of property—such as a home, a car, or furniture—have significant resale costs. Because your unsecured creditors wouldn't get any of this money in a Chapter 7 case, they also aren't entitled to it in your Chapter 13 case. And, because personal property (a piano or furnishings, for example) often sells at auction for significantly less than its replacement value, you might be able to argue for an even lower total.

EXAMPLE 1: Jane has a savings account containing $50,000, and none of it is exempt. She can subtract the trustee's commission: 25% of $5,000 ($1,250) plus 10% of the remaining $45,000 ($4,500) for a total of $5,750. If Jane were to file for Chapter 13, her unsecured creditors would be entitled to at least $44,250.

EXAMPLE 2: John owns his home, appraised at $100,000, free and clear. The exemption system he is using allows him to exempt $50,000 worth of equity, so his nonexempt equity is worth $50,000. From this amount, he can subtract the commission the trustee in a Chapter 7 case would earn from selling the property: 25% of $5,000 ($1,250) plus 10% of the remaining $45,000 of his equity ($4,500), or a total of $5,750. He can also subtract the costs of selling his house. Typically, sales costs come to about 8% of the sales price. If John's home sold for $100,000, he could subtract $8,000 in sales costs. So if John were to file for Chapter 13, his unsecured creditors would be entitled to at least $36,250: his nonexempt equity of $50,000, minus the trustee's commission of $5,750, minus $8,000 in sales costs.

EXAMPLE 3: Juan owns a car worth $10,000 free and clear. He can exempt $3,000 of his equity, so the value of his nonexempt amount is $7,000. From this amount, he can subtract the trustee's commission of $1,450 (25% of $5,000 plus 10% of $2,000), for a nonexempt total of $5,550. Then he can subtract the costs of sale, including the cost of picking up the car, storing it, and holding an auction at which the car will likely sell for well less than its replacement value. If Juan wants to play it safe, he could use the out-of-pocket expense rate typically agreed to by trustees, which is 5% of the car's value, or $500. This means his unsecured creditors in a Chapter 13 case would be entitled to $5,050. If Juan is willing to argue with the trustee, he could advocate for a higher expense rate, to account for the lower price the car is likely to fetch at auction.

Once you come up with the total amount your unsecured creditors would actually receive if you filed for Chapter 7, convert it to a monthly figure. For example, if you find that your unsecured creditors are entitled to $7,200 and you are proposing a three-year repayment plan, divide $7,200 by 36 months to come up with the monthly amount you would have to pay: $200. Subtract this monthly total from the disposable income you calculated in Step 6.

Monthly Amount for Unsecured Creditors	– _____
Total:	= _____

As long as your total is a positive number, you may be able to propose a confirmable plan. If your total is zero, this means you will have exactly enough money to meet your plan obligations, not a penny more or less.

If all of your property is exempt, and the disposable income you calculated in Step 6 was zero, your unsecured creditors won't get paid a cent. This is called a "zero-percent" plan. Before the bankruptcy law changed in 2005, many courts wouldn't confirm a plan that paid unsecured creditors less than a particular percentage (anywhere from 20% to 80%, depending on the court). Under the revised law, however, there is no legal reason why a zero-percent plan should not be confirmed, as long as your expenses are reasonable (that is, the court can find any money you are paying for expenses that should go to your creditors instead).

If Your Current Monthly Income Is More Than Your State's Median Income

If your current monthly income is more than your state's median income, you are required to use Form 22C, Chapter 13 Statement of Current Monthly Income and Calculation of Commitment Period and Disposable Income, to compute your disposable income. You'll find instructions for completing that form below, including a completed sample. If you later decide to file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, you will have to complete this form, and use the information to draft your plan in Ch. 8, so your work here won't go to waste.

Step 1: Use Form 22C to Calculate Your Disposable Income

In Ch. 4, you may have completed Form 22A to find out whether you are required to use Chapter 13 or whether you have a choice between Chapter 13 and Chapter 7. If you completed that form, be aware that Lines 19 through 47 of Form 22A are the same as Lines 24 through 52 of Form 22C. If you completed Form 22A, you can start Form 22C by transferring the amount you entered in Line 47 of Form 22A to Line 52 of Form 22C, then starting with our instructions below for Line 53.

Otherwise, start computing your disposable income with Line 24. You'll find a completed sample Form 22C at the end of this section; a blank copy is in Appendix B.

Line 24A. Enter the total IRS National Standards: Food, Clothing, and Other Items for your family size and income level. This is the amount the IRS believes you should get to spend for food, clothes, household supplies, personal care, and miscellaneous other items. You can get these figures from www.justice.gov/ust. Click "Means Testing Information," then scroll down to find the right link.

Line 24B. Enter the amount you are allowed to claim for health expenses from the IRS National Standards: Out-of-Pocket Health Care Expenses. You can find these figures at www.justice.gov/ust. Click "Means Testing Information," then scroll down to the appropriate link. As you'll see, you can claim more for household members who are at least 65 years old, which is reflected on the form. You'll also see that the total amount you can claim is quite small; if you spend more than you're allowed to claim here, you can claim it on Line 36.

Line 25A. Enter the amount of the IRS Local Housing and Utilities Expense Standards, nonmortgage expenses for your county and family size. Get these figures from www.justice.gov/ust. Click "Means Testing Information," then scroll down to the Local Housing and Utilities Expense Standards section and enter your state in the drop-down menu. Find the figures for your county and family size, then enter the figure that appears under the heading "Non-Mortgage."

Line 25B. On Line a, enter the amount of the IRS Housing and Utility Expense Standards, Mortgage/Rent expenses for your county and family size. These figures appear on the U.S. Trustee's website, on the same chart as nonmortgage expenses—follow the instructions for Line 20A, above.

On Line b, enter the average monthly payment for any debts secured by your home, including a mortgage, home equity loan, taxes, and insurance. The average monthly payment is the total of all amounts contractually due to each secured creditor in the five years after you file for bankruptcy, divided by 60. Even if you are planning to move or have stopped making your payments, you should still enter your contractual mortgage payment here. If your mortgage payment is higher than the IRS allowance for housing in the area where you live, the court might calculate your disposable income using the IRS allowance. (See In re Meek, 370 B.R. 294 (D. Idaho 2007).)

On Line c, subtract Line b from Line a. This may turn out to be a negative figure; if so, enter a zero in the right-hand column. Later in the means test, you'll be able to add your average monthly payment back in as an expense.

Line 26. If your actual rental or mortgage expense is higher than that allowed by the IRS, you can claim an adjustment here. For instance if the IRS mortgage/rental expense for a family of two is $550, you pay an actual rent of $900, and that amount is average for the area in which you live, enter the additional $350 here and explain why you should be able to subtract it (that you couldn't possibly find housing in your area for less, for example).

Line 27A. You are entitled to claim an expense here whether or not you actually have a car. First, indicate the number of cars for which you pay operating expenses or for which somebody else contributes the operating expenses as part of the amount entered on Line 7. If you don't have a car, enter the amount listed under "Public Transportation" from the IRS Local Transportation Expense Standards. You can find these at www.justice.gov/ust; click "Means Testing Information," then scroll down to the appropriate link and choose your region. If you indicated that you have one or two cars, enter the amount listed for your region (and sometimes, your city) under "Operating Costs" in the same chart.

Line 27B. If you have a car and also use public transportation, you may claim a public transportation expense here. You can find the correct amount by following the instructions for Line 27A, above.

Line 28. These are your expenses for owning or leasing a car.

CAUTION

If you aren't making payments, you might face a challenge. A dispute exists over whether you can claim this expense if you aren't paying for or leasing a car. Some courts allow the expense, while others do not. For a list of cases on this issue, go to www.legalconsumer.com/bankruptcy/CH13, select the information for Ch. 5, and find the appropriate link. If you aren't making payments on a car and you claim this expense, be aware that the trustee in your case may challenge your right to claim the expense, which means your disposable income (and required plan payments) would increase if the trustee's challenge is successful.

On Line 28a, enter the IRS Local Transportation Standards for ownership of a first car. This amount is actually a national figure; currently, it is $489. To make sure you are using the most up-to-date numbers, check the website of the U.S. Trustee, www.justice.gov/ust. Click "Means Testing Information," then scroll down to the Local Transportation Expense Standards drop-down menu and choose your region. The ownership figure is near the bottom of the page.

On Line 28b, enter your average monthly payment (over the next five years) for all debts secured by your first car. For example, assume you have three years left to pay on the car and the monthly payment is $350. The total amount you will owe in the next five years is $12,600 (36 months times $350). If you spread that amount over the next five years—by dividing the total by 60, the number of months in five years—you'll see that your average monthly payment is $210.

On Line 28c, subtract Line b from Line a and enter the result in the column on the right. Later on, if necessary, you will be able to deduct your car payments to figure out whether you have enough disposable income to fund a Chapter 13 plan.

Line 29. Complete this only if you have a second car (and you checked the 2 or more box in Line 28). Follow the instructions for Line 28 to enter the required figures for your second car.

Line 30. Enter the total average monthly expense that you actually incur for all taxes other than property or sales taxes. Examples of taxes that you should enter here are income taxes, self-employment taxes, Social Security taxes, and Medicare taxes. In some cases, these taxes will show up on your wage stub. You'll need to convert the period covered by your wage stub to a monthly figure. Once you have figured out how much you pay each month for each type of tax, add them all together and enter them in the column on the right.

Converting Taxes to a Monthly Figure

If you are paid weekly, biweekly, or twice a month, you will have to convert the tax amounts on your pay stubs to a monthly amount. And, if you pay quarterly taxes (estimated income taxes, for example), you'll need to convert that figure as well. Here's how to do it:

- Weekly taxes: Multiply by 4.3 to get a monthly amount.
- Biweekly taxes: Divide by 2 to get a weekly amount, then multiply by 4.3.
- Bimonthly taxes: Divide by 2.
- Quarterly taxes: Divide by 3.

Line 31. Enter all of your mandatory payroll deductions here, other than those entered in Line 25. Use the conversion rules set out above to arrive at average monthly deductions. Make sure you deduct only mandatory deductions (such as required retirement contributions, union dues, and uniform costs). Contributions to a 401(k) should not be included here, for example, because they are voluntary. (You may deduct contributions to a retirement plan, including loan repayment, on Line 55.)

Line 32. Enter any monthly payments you make for term life insurance. Do not enter payments for any other type of insurance, such as credit insurance, car insurance, renters' insurance, insurance on the lives of your dependents, or whole life insurance on your own life. (Whole life insurance is the type that allows you to borrow against the policy.)

Line 33. Enter the amount of any payments you make pursuant to a court order. Child support and alimony are the most common examples, but you may also have to pay to satisfy a court money judgment or a criminal fine. Do not include court-ordered payments toward a child support or alimony arrearage; only the payments you need to make to stay current should be entered here.

Line 34. Enter the total monthly amount that you pay for education required by your employer to keep your job and the total monthly amount you pay for the education of a physically or mentally challenged dependent child for whom no public education providing similar services is available. Included in this amount would be the actual costs of after-school enrichment educational services for a physically or mentally challenged child, and the actual educational expenses you are paying in support of an individual educational plan.

Line 35. Enter the average monthly cost of child care. If your employment (and therefore, your need for child care) is seasonal, add up your child care costs for the year and divide the total by 12. Do not equate education with child care. For instance, child care for a child who is of public education school age should cover only the hours before and after school.

Line 36. Enter the average monthly amount you pay for out-of-pocket health care expenses, but only to the extent it exceeds the amount you were allowed to claim on Line 24B. Do not include health care expenses that are reimbursed by insurance or provided by an HMO or Medicaid. Also, don't include premiums you pay for health insurance; you can claim these on Line 39.

Line 37. Enter the average monthly expenses you pay for any communication devices that are necessary for the health and welfare of you or your dependents. Examples provided by the form are cell phones, pagers, call waiting, caller identification, and special long distance or Internet services. Virtually all of these devices arguably are necessary for the health and welfare of your family. However, some expenses might not be allowed (for example, a smartphone, cell phone you use for your business, or broadband Internet service). When in doubt, list the expense.

Line 38. Add the expenses you entered in Lines 24 through 37 and put the total in the column at the right.

Subpart B: Additional Living Expense Deductions

The expenses in this subpart are allowed by the Bankruptcy Code, in addition to the IRS expenses. However, you can't list an expense twice; if you already claimed it in Subpart A, don't list it again here.

Line 39. Here, list your reasonably necessary monthly expenses for health insurance, disability insurance, and health savings accounts (HSAs) on the lines provided. The form was revised in 2008 to clarify that you can list a "reasonable" expense here whether you actually pay that amount each month or not. If, however, you pay less than the reasonable amount you list, you must indicate how much you actually spend each month on the additional line provided. If the U.S. Trustee or one of your creditors later wants to challenge your expense claims—for example, to argue that you really have more disposable income than the form indicates—they can use this information.

Line 40. Anything you spend to care for a member of your household or immediate family because of his or her age, illness, or disability can be deducted here. If your contributions are episodic—a wheelchair here, a vacation with a companion there—estimate your average monthly expense and enter it here.

CAUTION

Your response here could affect eligibility for government benefits. Expenses you list here could render the person you are assisting ineligible for Social Security or other government benefits. For example, if you state that you are spending $500 a month for the care of a relative, and that relative is receiving SSI, your relative might receive a lower benefit amount each month, to reflect your contribution. On the other hand, if you are making such expenditures, you are required to disclose them here. If you find yourself in this predicament, talk to a lawyer.

Line 41. The average monthly expense of security systems and any other method of protecting your family should be entered here.

Line 42. If your actual home energy costs exceed the figure you entered on Line 25A, enter the extra money you spend here. As the form indicates, you may need to prove this extra expense to the trustee.

Line 43. This item is for money you spend on your children's education. If your average monthly expense is $147.92 or more, put $147.92 in this blank; that's the maximum you can deduct. Remember not to list an amount twice; if you already listed an expense on Line 34 or 35, for example, don't repeat it here.

Line 44. Here, you can list the amount by which your actual expenses for food and clothing exceed the IRS allowance for these items as entered in Line 24. However, you cannot list more than 5% over the IRS allowance.

Line 45. You can claim the charitable contributions you ordinarily take, but you can't suddenly decide to make them and then deduct them here. See the discussion of Line 40 on Form 22A in Ch. 4 for information on what types of organizations qualify for charitable deductions.

Line 46. Enter the total of Lines 39 through 45 in the column on the right.

Subpart C: Deductions for Debt Payment

Here, you deduct average contractually due monthly payments you will have to make over the next five years.

Line 47. List the average monthly payment you will have to make over the next five years to creditors that hold a secured interest in your property (for example, the mortgage holder on your house or the creditor that holds your car note). Calculate this amount by figuring out the total amount you will owe over the next five years, then dividing that total by 60. You can list the full amount of your contractual payment even if you are planning to cram it down as part of your plan. If you have stopped making your mortgage payments or are planning to move, some courts will allow you to take this deduction anyway; other courts will not. To find out how courts have ruled on these issues, go to www.legalconsumer.com/bankruptcy/CH13, select the information for Ch. 5, and find the appropriate link. If your mortgage payment is higher than the IRS allowance for housing in the area where you live, the court might calculate your disposable income using the IRS allowance. (See In re Meek, 370 B.R. 294 (D. Idaho 2007).)

Line 48. Here, list the average monthly payment you would have to make to pay off any back amounts due to creditors on property that you must keep for your support or support of your dependents. That would typically include a car, your home, and any property you need for your employment. (Come up with the monthly figure by dividing the total amount you would have to pay by 60.)

Line 49. List the average monthly amount you will have to pay for priority claims over the next five years. (See "Classifying Your Debts," in Ch. 4, for a list of priority claims.) Typical priority claims include back taxes and back child and spousal support. Divide the total by 60 to arrive at the monthly average. Don't include payments you've already listed on the form, such as current child support obligations. This line is only for debts you owe at the time of filing.

Line 50. Calculate the fee the trustee will charge if you file Chapter 13 bankruptcy. That fee will depend on how much you would be paying, through the trustee, to your secured and unsecured creditors. It's impossible to come up with a figure at this point in the form, so leave it blank for now. (Ch. 8 explains how to come up with a rough figure.)

Line 51. Add Lines 47 through 50, and enter the total.

Subpart D: Total Deductions from Income

Line 52: Enter the total of items 38, 46, and 51 in the column at the right. This is the total amount you can subtract from your current monthly income to arrive at your disposable income.

Part V: Determination of Disposable Income Under § 1325(b)(2)

Here is where you subtract your expenses from your income to arrive at your total disposable income.

Line 53. Enter your current monthly income, as calculated in Ch. 4.

Line 54. Enter the monthly average of any child support payments, foster care payments, or disability payments for a dependent child, that:

- are necessary to spend on the child, and
- you included in Line 7 when computing your current monthly income, in Ch. 4.

Line 55. Enter the monthly average of:

- all contributions or wage deductions made to qualified retirement plans, as specified in Section 541(b)(7) (these include virtually all defined-benefit pension plans arising from employment), and

- all repayments of loans from retirements plans, as specified in Section 362(b)(19) (employment pension plans and 401(k)s).

Line 56. Bring down the total expenses from Line 52.

Line 57. Special circumstances are situations that give rise to unexpected expenses that don't qualify as "additional expense claims" on Line 60. The law lists a serious medical condition (such as cancer, Alzheimer's disease, or Parkinson's disease) or a call to active duty in the armed forces as examples of special circumstances. It's not enough just to show that special circumstances exist: You must also show that they justify additional expenses or adjustments to your current monthly income "for which there is no reasonable alternative." And, you must be able to document the expenses. If you believe that something in your life—that is not already provided for in this form—will eat up part of your disposable income, list the expense here and line up your documentation.

Cases on Special Circumstances

Here are some cases in which the court has allowed a particular special circumstance claim, but remember that courts in your area may see the issue differently:

- unusually high transportation expenses (In re Batzkiel, 349 B.R. 581 (Bkrtcy N.D. Iowa 2006); In re Turner, 376 B.R. 370 (Bkrtcy D. N.H. 2007))
- mandatory repayment of 401(k) loan (In re Lenton, 358 B.R. 651 (Bkrtcy E.D. Pa. 2006))
- reduction in income (In re Martin, 371 B.R. 347 (Bkrtcy C.D. Ill. 2007) (diminished future availability of overtime hours); In re Tamez, No. 07-60047 (Bkrtcy W.D. Tex. 2007) (reduction in income due to voluntary job changes))
- wife's pregnancy in a joint case (In re Martin, 371 B.R. 347 (Bkrtcy C.D. Ill. 2007))
- joint debtors who have two separate households (In re Graham, 363 B.R. 844 (Bkrtcy S.D. Ohio 2007); In re Armstrong, No. 06-31414 (Bkrtcy N.D. Ohio 2007))
- unusually high rent expenses (In re Scarafioti, 375 B.R. 618 (Bkrtcy D. Colorado 2007)), and
- court-ordered child support payments (In re Littman, 370 B.R. 820 (Bkrtcy D. Idaho 2007)).

Line 58. Add Lines 54, 55, 56, and 57, and enter the total.

Actual or Projected Income?

The disposable income figure you come up with after completing Form 22C may not reflect your actual ability to fund a confirmable Chapter 13 plan. That's because your projected disposable income is based on your average income over the six months before you file, rather than your actual income when you file. And, the extensive deductions that Form 22C allows might make it look like you'll have nothing left to pay into your plan, even though you might not spend that much in the real world.

So what happens when your projected disposable income and your actual disposable income are different? So far, bankruptcy courts have handled this in a variety of ways. For example, courts have held that:

- It doesn't matter what your actual disposable income is; your projected disposable income, as calculated on Form 22C, is all that matters in determining your ability to fund a Chapter 13 plan and how much you must pay into it. (See In re Puetz, 370 B.R. 386 (D. Kan. 2006); In re Guzman, 345 B.R. 640 (E.D. Wis. 2006).)
- Courts can consider your actual income and expenses—not just your projected disposable income—in deciding whether you can propose a confirmable Chapter 13 plan. (See In re Jass, 340 B.R. 411 (D. Utah 2006); In re Meek, 370 B.R. 294 (D. Idaho).)
- Only your actual income, as shown in Schedules I and J, determines your ability to fund a Chapter 13 plan, not your projected disposable income. (See In re Purdy, 373 B.R. 142 (N.D. Fla. 2007).)
- You may claim the IRS allowed expense amounts in calculating your disposable income on Form 22C, even if you actually spend less. (See In re Barrett, 371 B.R. 855 (S.D. Ill. 2007).)

Fortunately, the U.S. Supreme Court has agreed to decide this issue in the case of In re Lanning, which should be decided by June 2010. Check our website, www.nolo.com, for updates to this book once the Court issues an opinion.

Future payments on secured claims. For each of your debts that is secured by an interest in property that you own, list the name of creditor, identify the property securing the debt, state the Average Monthly Payment, and check whether the payment includes taxes or insurance. If necessary, list additional entries on a separate page. Enter the total of the Average Monthly Payments on Line 47.

Line 59. Subtract Line 57 from Line 53 and enter the result. This is your first calculation of disposable income, but you're not through yet. Now return to Line 50 and enter the amount on Line 58 on Line 50a. On Line 50b, multiply the amount on Line 50a by the correct multiplier, which can be found on the U.S. Trustee's website (www.justice.gov/ust). Enter the result on Line 50c. Then, subtract Line 50c from Line 58.

Line 60. If you have additional expenses that you couldn't include anywhere else on the form, you can enter them here, provided they really are necessary for the health and welfare of you and your family. The court will look at these expenses with special scrutiny. If you include additional expenses here, subtract them from the total on Line 58, less the amount on Line 50c, for a final disposable income figure.

To find out whether you have enough disposable income to get a Chapter 13 plan confirmed, divide the total of any secured debts that weren't included in Line 47 by 60, to figure out how much you'd have to pay each month to pay off these liens in five years. Subtract the result from your disposable income. If this results in a negative figure, then you can't propose a confirmable plan, given your current expenses and property holdings. If your disposable income is zero or more, then you can propose a confirmable plan, as long as the total is at least equal to the value of your nonexempt property (see below).

Step 2: Determine What Your Creditors Would Get If You Used Chapter 7

As explained in Step 7, above (for those whose incomes are less than the state median), your plan must pay your unsecured creditors at least what they would have received if you had filed under Chapter 7: the value of your nonexempt property, less what it would cost to take and sell it, less the trustee's commission for doing so. See Step 7, above, for information on how to make this calculation.

Once you come up with the total amount your unsecured creditors would actually receive if you filed for Chapter 7, convert it to a monthly figure. For example, if you find that your unsecured creditors are entitled to $7,200 and you are proposing a three-year repayment plan, divide $7,200 by 36 months to come up with the monthly amount you would have to pay:

$200. Subtract this monthly total from the disposable income you calculated in Step 1.

Disposable Income (from Step 1):	_____
Monthly Amount for Unsecured Creditors:	– _____
Total:	= _____

As long as your total is a positive number, you may be able to propose a confirmable plan. If your total is zero, this means you will have exactly enough money to meet your plan obligations, not a penny more or less.

If all of your property is exempt, and the disposable income you calculated in Step 1 was zero, your unsecured creditors won't get paid a cent. This is called a "zero-percent" plan. Before the bankruptcy law changed in 2005, many courts wouldn't confirm a plan that paid unsecured creditors less than a particular percentage (anywhere from 20% to 80%, depending on the court). Under the revised law, however, there is no legal reason why a zero-percent plan should not be confirmed, as long as your expenses are reasonable (that is, the court can find any money you are paying for expenses that should go to your creditors instead).

Understanding Property Exemptions

This section covers exemptions—the rules that determine how much, if any, your Chapter 13 plan will have to pay to your nonpriority, unsecured creditors.

Your Bankruptcy Estate

Your bankruptcy estate refers to all of your property that is part of your bankruptcy case. Not all property is in your bankruptcy estate; for example, most property you acquire after you file for bankruptcy is not part of the estate, and you need not account to the trustee about what you do with it. If property falls outside of your bankruptcy estate, you don't need to worry about whether or not it's exempt, because the court can't touch it or ask you to pay its value to your creditors.

Several broad categories of property make up your bankruptcy estate:

- Property you own and possess. Everything in your possession that you own, whether or not you owe money on it—for example, a car, real estate, clothing, books, television, stereo system, furniture, tools, boat, artworks, or stock certificates—is included in your bankruptcy estate. Property that you have in your possession but that belongs to someone else (such as the car your friend stores in your garage or the television you borrowed from your sister) is not part of your bankruptcy estate, because you don't have the right to sell it or give it away.

- Property you own but don't possess. You can own something even if you don't have physical possession of it. For instance, you may own a car that someone else is using. Other examples include a deposit held by a stockbroker, a security deposit held by your landlord or a utility company, or a business in which you've invested money.
- Property you are entitled to receive. Property that you have a legal right to receive but haven't gotten yet when you file for bankruptcy is included in your bankruptcy estate. Common examples include:
 - wages, royalties, or commissions you have earned but have not yet been paid
 - a tax refund legally due you
 - vacation or termination pay you've earned
 - property you've inherited but not yet received from someone who has died
 - proceeds of an insurance policy, if the death, injury, or other event that gives rise to payment has already occurred, and
 - money owed you for goods or services you've provided (often called "accounts receivable").
- Community property. If you live in a community property state, all property and income either spouse acquires during the marriage is ordinarily considered "community property," owned jointly by both spouses. (The community property states are Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas, Washington, and Wisconsin, and—if you have a written community property agreement or trust—Alaska.) Gifts and inheritances to only one spouse are the most common exceptions; these are the separate property of the spouse who receives them. If you're married and file jointly for bankruptcy, all the community property you and your spouse own, as well as all of both of your separate property, is considered part of your bankruptcy estate. If your spouse doesn't file, then your bankruptcy estate consists of all of the community property and all of your separate property—your spouse's separate property isn't included.

- Marital property in a common law property state.

If you are married and filing jointly, your bankruptcy estate includes all the property you and your spouse own, together and separately. If you are filing alone for bankruptcy in a common law property state (all states other than the community property states listed above), your bankruptcy estate includes:

- your separate property (property that has only your name on a title certificate or that was purchased, received as a gift, or inherited by you alone), and
 - half of the property that is jointly owned by you and your spouse, unless you own the property as tenants by the entirety. If you own property as tenants by the entirety, and both spouses file for bankruptcy, then the property is part of your bankruptcy estate. If only one spouse files, however, it's likely that none of the property is part of the bankruptcy estate. The rules that determine whether you own property as tenants by the entirety differ from state to state. Also, some states allow only real estate to be owned as tenants by the entirety, while other states also allow personal property to be owned this way. If you think you own property as tenants by the entirety, check with a lawyer before you file.
- Certain property you receive within 180 days after filing for bankruptcy. Most property you acquire or become entitled to after you file for bankruptcy isn't included in your bankruptcy estate. But there are a few exceptions. If you acquire or become entitled to the following items within 180 days after you file, you must notify the trustee:
 - an inheritance (but not money "inherited" through a living trust or beneficiary designation form; see In re Szuyd, 370 B.R. 882 (1st Cir. B.A.P. 2007) and In re Kester, 493 F.3d 1208 (10th Cir. 2007).)

- property you receive or have a right to receive from a marital settlement agreement or divorce decree, and
- death benefits or life insurance policy proceeds.
- Property (revenue) generated by estate property. This type of property typically consists of the proceeds of contracts—such as those providing for rent, royalties, and commissions—that were in effect at the time of the bankruptcy filing, but which produced earnings after that date. For example, if you are a composer or an author and receive royalties each year for a composition or a book that was written before you filed for bankruptcy, the trustee may collect those royalties as property of your estate. Proceeds from work you do after your filing date belong to you.
- Property transferred within the previous two years. If you transferred personal or real property to anyone within the last two years for less than it's worth, the trustee may decide to treat the property as part of your bankruptcy estate and initiate legal action to recover the property for the benefit of your creditors.

Property That's Not Part of Your Bankruptcy Estate

Property that is not in your bankruptcy estate is not subject to the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction, which means that you don't have to worry about whether or not it's exempt.

The most common examples of property that doesn't fall within your bankruptcy estate are:

- property you buy or receive after your filing date (with the few exceptions described above)
- pensions subject to the federal law known as ERISA (commonly, defined benefit pensions, 401(k)s, and Keogh plans)
- property owned as tenants by the entirety when only one spouse files
- property pledged as collateral for a loan where a licensed lender (pawnbroker) retains possession of the collateral
- property in your possession that belongs to someone else (for instance, property you are storing for someone), and
- wages that are withheld and employer contributions that are made for employee benefit and health insurance plans.

Under the new bankruptcy law, funds placed in a qualified tuition program or Coverdell education savings account are also not part of your bankruptcy estate under certain conditions.

Value Your Property

As you'll see below, many exemptions apply only up to a certain dollar value. This means that you need to know what your property is worth in order to figure out whether it's exempt. Under the 2005 bankruptcy law, you must use the property's replacement value: what it would cost to buy that specific property from a retail merchant, considering its age and condition.

It's easy to enter a dollar amount for cash and most investments.

If you own a car, start with the middle Kelley Blue Book price. If the car needs repair, reduce the value by what it would cost you to fix the car. You can find the Kelley Blue Book at a public library or online at www.kbb.com. Or, use the NADA guide at www.nada.org.

Online, visit eBay (www.ebay.com) to get a fix on the going price for just about anything. Or briefly describe the item in Google (or your search engine of choice) and see what turns up. As long as your valuations are based on the going retail price for the item in question, you should generally use the lowest value you can find. That means it is more likely to be exempt and not require payments to your nonpriority, unsecured creditors. On the other hand, low-ball valuations might provoke arguments with the trustee or your creditors about what the property is really worth. As long as the exemptions available to you cover the value you use, pricing your property more reasonably can help you avoid unnecessary hassles.

If you are filing separately and own something jointly with someone (other than a spouse with whom you would file for bankruptcy), reduce the value of the item to reflect only the portion you own. For example, you and your brother jointly bought a music synthesizer worth $10,000. If your ownership share is 40% and your brother's is 60%, the value of your portion is $4,000.

If you are married and filing separately in a community property state, include the total value of all the community property as well as the value of your separate property.

If you are married, you own the property with your spouse as tenants by the entirety, and you are filing separately, your ownership interest may not be 50% for purposes of computing your exemption. (Talk to a lawyer to find out what percentage of your tenancy by the entirety property you can claim as exempt.)

Applying Exemptions

Bankruptcy is intended to give debtors a fresh start—not to leave them utterly destitute. Exempt property can literally range from “the shirt on your back” to a million-dollar estate, depending on which state’s exemptions you use.

State and Federal Exemption Systems

Every state has its own fairly lengthy list of exempt property. (You can find these lists in Appendix A.) In addition, some states offer bankruptcy filers an alternative choice of exemptions—a list of exempt property found in the federal Bankruptcy Code. States that offer this choice are: Arkansas, Connecticut, Hawaii, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Texas, Vermont, Washington, and Wisconsin. In these states, you must choose between the state exemption system and the federal exemption system; you can’t mix and match.

California Note: Although California doesn’t make the federal Bankruptcy Code exemptions available, it has two separate exemption systems—both created by state law. Debtors who use the California exemptions must choose between System 1 (the regular exemptions available to debtors in and out of bankruptcy) and System 2 (available only in bankruptcy and very similar to the federal exemptions).

How Exemptions Work

Under both the federal and state exemption systems, some types of property are exempt regardless of value. For example, in some states, home furnishings, wedding rings, or clothing are exempt without regard to value. In Florida and Texas, homes are exempt regardless of their value or the value of the bankruptcy filer’s ownership (equity) in the home.

Other kinds of property are exempt up to a limited value. For instance, cars are often exempt up to a certain amount—typically $2,500 to $3,000. The home equity exemption ranges from thousands of dollars to hundreds of thousands, depending on the state. When there is a dollar limit on an exemption, any equity above the limit is considered nonexempt. (Your equity is the amount you would get to keep if you sold the property.)

Many states offer a “wildcard” exemption—a dollar amount that you can apply to any property, in order to make it (or more of it) exempt. This type of exemption typically runs from a few hundred to several thousand dollars (but more than $22,000 in California’s System 2 exemptions).

EXAMPLE: Fred and Susan are married and live in Virginia. They rent rather than own their home. Under the Virginia exemptions, equity in an automobile is limited to $2,000 ($4,000 for couples). Fred and Susan own $12,000 of equity in their cars. Fortunately for Fred and Susan, Virginia allows debtors to use the Virginia homestead exemption as a wildcard for their personal property, if they don’t use it for a home. Because Fred and Susan rent, they can use this wildcard for their cars. The homestead exemption is $10,000 for couples. So, by adding $8,000 of the wildcard to their $4,000 car exemption, Fred and Susan can exempt all of their equity in their cars. They can apply the other $2,000 of the wildcard exemption to property that isn’t otherwise protected by the Virginia exemptions.

Property Typically Not Exempt

The kinds of property listed below are typically not exempt unless you use a wildcard exemption:

- interests in real estate other than your home
- substantial equity in a newer-model motor vehicle
- expensive musical instruments unrelated to your job or business

- stamp, coin, and other collections
- cash, deposit accounts, stocks, bonds, and other investments
- business assets (except property that qualifies as tools of your trade, which you can typically exempt up to several thousand dollars)
- valuable artwork
- expensive clothing and jewelry, or
- antiques.

Domicile Requirements for Exemption Claims

In 2005, Congress passed domicile requirements that filers have to meet before claiming a state's exemptions. Your domicile is where you are living and plan to continue living for the indefinite future. For most people, their domicile is where they are living, period. But for some people, such as those in the armed forces, their domicile may be in one state and their residence in another (such as when they live on an army base in North Carolina but maintain a home in Tennessee). Here are the domicile rules:

- If you have been living (been domiciled) in your current state for at least two years, you must use that state's exemptions (or the federal exemptions, if they are available).
- If you have been living (been domiciled) in your current state for less than two years, you must use the exemptions of the state where you were domiciled for the better part of the 180-day period immediately prior to the two-year period preceding your filing—unless that state allows only current residents to use its exemptions. In that case, you can use the federal exemptions.
- If you have been domiciled in your current state for fewer than 91 days, you'll need to wait until you have lived there for 91 days to file in that state (and then use whatever exemptions are available to you according to the rules set out above).
- If the state you are filing in makes the federal exemptions available, you can use that exemption list regardless of how long you've been living in the state.
- If these rules deprive you of the right to use any state's exemptions, you can use the federal exemptions (even if your state doesn't make them available). For example, if you were living in another country during the 180-day period prior to the two years before you filed for bankruptcy, you can use the federal exemptions.

A longer domicile requirement applies to homestead exemptions: If you acquired a home in your current state less than 40 months before your filing date, your homestead exemption may be subject to a $146,450 cap regardless of which state's exemption system you use. People convicted of felonies and certain securities violations are also subject to this cap.

Using the Exemptions Appendix

You can find the exemptions for all 50 states in Appendix A. If you are considering filing for bankruptcy in one of the states listed below, you'll also want to look at the federal exemptions, which are listed in that appendix right after Wyoming.

States That Offer the Federal Exemptions

Arkansas	Minnesota	Rhode Island
Connecticut	New Hampshire	Texas
Hawaii	New Jersey	Vermont
Massachusetts	New Mexico	Washington
Michigan	Pennsylvania	Wisconsin

Use Appendix A to find the applicable exemptions for your property, using the domicile rules set out above. Compare the type and value of your property, and the amount of equity you have in the property, with the exemptions.

Remember, if you are filing in a state that offers the federal bankruptcy exemptions, you should also check the federal exemption chart. Items that aren't exempt under the state exemptions available to you may be exempt under the federal system, and vice versa. However, you must pick one system or the other, you can't mix and match.

If you are married and filing jointly, you can double your exemptions unless the chart says that you can't. This will be indicated either at the top of the chart or next to a particular exemption.

If you have been domiciled in California for more than two years when you file, you may choose System 1 (the regular state exemptions) or System 2, a state list that is derived from the federal exemptions but differs in important particulars. If you file in California but haven't been domiciled there for two years, you can't use either California system—you'll have to use the domicile rules set out above to figure out which exemptions you can use.

Federal Nonbankruptcy Exemptions

If you are using the exemptions of a particular state rather than the federal exemptions, you may also exempt property listed in Appendix A under Federal Nonbankruptcy Exemptions. Don't confuse those with the federal bankruptcy exemptions, which may be used only if a state allows it and only as an alternative to the state exemptions.

Making the Decision

Now you have all of the information you need to decide whether you can—and should—file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy. To help you sort through this information, weigh the pros and cons, and reach a decision, this chapter provides a transcript of a consultation between a debtor and a lawyer.

As you'll see, the debtor, Georgia Cox, is trying to figure out whether to file for bankruptcy under Chapter 7 or Chapter 13. She has decided to consult with a bankruptcy lawyer to help her with her decision. The questions the lawyer asks will help remind you of factors you should consider as you evaluate your own situation.

Lawyer: Good morning. What's your name?

Debtor: Georgia Cox.

Lawyer: Hi, Georgia. How can I help you today?

Debtor: Well, I've run up quite a bit of debt, and I've decided to file for bankruptcy. I know there are different types of bankruptcy, but I think I need to learn more about them. I need some help figuring out what my options are.

Lawyer: Okay, I can help you with that. The two basic types of bankruptcy for individuals are Chapter 7 bankruptcy and Chapter 13 bankruptcy. There are a couple of major differences between them. In a Chapter 13 bankruptcy, you pay down some or all of your debts over a three- to five-year period and discharge (cancel) whatever is left over at the completion of your plan. In a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, you don't pay down any of your debt, and the entire process takes between three and four months. But you may have to give up property you own so it can be sold and the proceeds distributed to your creditors.

In either type of bankruptcy, some types of debts aren't discharged, but will survive your bankruptcy. For instance, overdue child support must be paid in full as part of a Chapter 13 bankruptcy. Also, some debts that can be discharged in Chapter 13 will survive a Chapter 7 bankruptcy. But we'll get to that later. Are you with me so far?

Debtor: Yes. I kind of already knew most of what you just told me by reading some articles on the Nolo website. Right now, I'm leaning toward Chapter 7 since it's over a lot sooner and seems like it's a lot simpler. But I wouldn't want to choose Chapter 7 if Chapter 13 would be the better choice for me.

Lawyer: Okay. Well, let's start by figuring out whether you even have a choice. Some people aren't eligible to file for Chapter 7 bankruptcy. If both options are available to you, then we can talk about which one makes more sense.

Debtor: Okay.

Lawyer: What state do you live in?

Debtor: New Hampshire.

Lawyer: Who lives with you as part of your household? That includes not only relatives and dependents, but anyone else whose income and expenses are combined with yours to maintain your home.

Debtor: Just me and my two children. One is eight and the other just turned 12.

Lawyer: Okay. And do you operate a business?

Debtor: Actually, I do. What difference does that make?

Lawyer: Well, business debts are treated differently than consumer debts when it comes to deciding your eligibility for filing Chapter 7.

Debtor: Okay. I run my own business, repairing used electronic equipment.

Lawyer: Have you incorporated your business or is it a partnership?

Debtor: No, just me, a sole proprietor.

Lawyer: And do you have other work? In other words, do you have a regular job and operate your business on the side?

Debtor: No, just the business.

Lawyer: Is your income pretty steady?

Debtor: It was until recently. Near the end of 2008, my business began dropping off and I'll be lucky to bring in half of what I was earning not too long ago. Also, I receive alimony and child support, which helps stabilize my income, but my ex told me just last week that his company is starting to lay people off and he may be next.

Lawyer: Looking at your debts as a whole, were more of them due to your business or more due to your personal needs?

Debtor: Why?

Lawyer: If your debts were primarily incurred for your business, you wouldn't have to worry about something we call the means test—essentially a questionnaire that determines whether you can afford to pay back some of your debts in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy.

Debtor: I would say about 40% were from my business and 60% were personal.

Lawyer: Okay, too bad. That makes you a consumer debtor rather than a business debtor and we'll have to see whether you need to take the means test. For starters, how much did you earn in the last six months? That's gross earnings less your reasonable business expenses.

Debtor: About $3,000 a month after expenses for the last six months.

Lawyer: You mentioned that you receive child support and alimony. How much, and do you have any other income?

Debtor: About $1,000 a month in alimony and $800 a month for child support, and that's it.

Lawyer: Have those amounts been steady over the last six months?

Debtor: Yes, there haven't been any changes.

Lawyer: So, it looks like your average monthly earnings over the past six months are $3,000 from your business, $1,000 in alimony, and $800 for child support, for a total of $4,800. Does that sound right?

Debtor: Yes.

Lawyer: Under the bankruptcy law, if your income is less than the median annual income for a family of your size in your state, you are presumed to be eligible to file for Chapter 7 bankruptcy. You don't have to fill out a lengthy form comparing your income to your expenses and your deductions for contractual obligations such as a car note and mortgage. Does any of this sound familiar to you?

Debtor: Yes, I remember reading a few years ago that higher-income people won't be able to file for Chapter 7 anymore. Is that what you are talking about?

Lawyer: Yes, that's it. Also, if your income is less than the median for your state and you decide to file a Chapter 13 bankruptcy anyway, your repayment plan has to last for only three years. If, on the other hand, your income is more than the median, your plan would have to last for five years.

Debtor: I didn't know that.

Lawyer: So, let's see how these numbers work out. Your annual income based on your gross income for the last six months is $57,600. The New Hampshire median income for a household of three people is $79,668. So, you're under the median income and don't have to take the means test to prove your eligibility for Chapter 7 bankruptcy. And if you decide to use Chapter 13, you can repay your debts over three years, instead of five.

Debtor: I guess that's good news, but when it comes right down to it, I wish I earned more, even if that meant I had to take the means test and have a Chapter 13 case last longer. Of course, if I had more money, I guess I wouldn't be talking to you about filing for bankruptcy in the first place.

Lawyer: Even though you qualify for Chapter 7 bankruptcy on the basis of your average income over the past six months, you can still be disqualified if, going forward, your actual monthly net income is substantially more than your actual monthly expenses, leaving you with some extra income every month to pay down your debt under a three-year Chapter 13 repayment plan.

Debtor: Oh dear, I wish I did have some income. When I recently compared my net income to my expenses, I definitely have very little, if any, money left over. Of course there are probably ways I could reduce my expenses if I had to.

Lawyer: Well, as long as your basic living expenses are more or less equal to your net income, and because your income is below the state median income, you have the option of filing for Chapter 7 bankruptcy.

Let's turn now to your residence. How long have you lived in New Hampshire?

Debtor: About three years.

Lawyer: Have you lived there continuously for the last three years, or did you live or maintain a residence somewhere else?

Debtor: I've lived here the whole time. I moved here from Vermont because of a job, but I didn't keep a home in Vermont. I vote and get my mail here.

Lawyer: Great. Because you've been living in New Hampshire for more than two years, we'll use our state's property exemptions. These will determine what property you can keep if you file a Chapter 7, and the minimum amount you'll have to pay your unsecured creditors if you file a Chapter 13 bankruptcy.

Debtor: Why do the exemptions matter in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy? I thought I could keep all of my property if I use Chapter 13.

Lawyer: Yes, you're right about that. But the law doesn't want your creditors to be worse off because you use Chapter 13. So a Chapter 13 repayment plan has to give your unsecured, nonpriority creditors at least what they would have received if you had filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy. So, if you have some nonexempt property, your plan will need to provide your unsecured, nonpriority creditors with at least the value of that property, less the trustee's commission and the costs of taking and selling the property.

Debtor: Okay, I guess that's fair, but I'm not sure who my nonpriority creditors are.

Lawyer: Oh, priority creditors are those who hold claims that have to be paid 100% in Chapter 13 cases, like back taxes, child support and alimony, and wages owed to employees. Nonpriority creditors are the rest of your creditors, typically credit card issuers, banks, doctors and lawyers, and holders of money judgments for repossessed and foreclosed property. For example, in your case, if you owed your employees wages or you owed contributions to a retirement plan, these would be priority debts and those creditors would be paid first in a Chapter 7 case if you have nonexempt assets. In a Chapter 13 case, priority debts must be paid in full over the life of your plan.

Debtor: Thanks for explaining that.

Lawyer: You're welcome. Now, let's figure out which of your property items is exempt. Do you own your home?

Debtor: Yes.

Lawyer: Are you making payments on a mortgage?

Debtor: Yes.

Lawyer: What's your monthly payment?

Debtor: $1,200.

Lawyer: Are you current on your payments?

Debtor: Yes.

Lawyer: What's your home worth?

Debtor: $150,000. It used to be worth $ 200,000 just last year.

Lawyer: And how much do you owe on it?

Debtor: About $100,000.

Lawyer: That's a total?

Debtor: Yes.

Lawyer: Okay. Under the New Hampshire homestead exemption, you are entitled to protect $100,000 of equity in your home. You have $50,000 of equity, so all of your equity is protected.

Debtor: What's a homestead exemption?

Lawyer: That's an exemption for your home. You are entitled to keep that much equity in your home, even if you file for Chapter 7 bankruptcy. If your equity exceeded the exemption, you might lose the extra equity if you filed for Chapter 7. The trustee could sell your home, pay off the mortgage, pay you your exemption, and still have money left over to distribute among your creditors. But because your equity is protected by the exemption, there wouldn't be anything left for your creditors after you got your exemption amount and the mortgage was paid. That's how exemptions work.

We already discussed how exemptions work in Chapter 13. If you have property that isn't exempt, your repayment plan has to pay your unsecured, nonpriority creditors at least what they would have gotten from the sale of that property if you had used Chapter 7.

Debtor: I remember reading back in 2005 that the new bankruptcy law makes it harder for people to keep their homes. Will that affect me?

Lawyer: Nope. The new law puts a cap of about $146,000 on the exemption amount for people who bought their home within the 40 months before they filed for bankruptcy. So it affects only people who bought a home more recently, and then only if their state would otherwise allow them to take a higher exemption. For example, even if you bought your home in New Hampshire within the previous 40 months, the New Hampshire homestead is only $100,000, so the cap wouldn't make any difference.

Debtor: So, I don't have to worry about that.

Lawyer: Right. Oh, your exemption might be affected if you used nonexempt property in the last ten years to buy your home in order to cheat your creditors. I guess I should ask how you got the money to pay for your home.

Debtor: I borrowed money from my parents.

Lawyer: Great. Your home equity is covered by your state's homestead exemption and you can keep it if you file for Chapter 7 bankruptcy.

Debtor: What happens to my home if I file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy?

Lawyer: As long as you keep making your mortgage payments and the other payments required by your Chapter 13 plan, there won't be a problem. However, if you fall behind on your payments, your lender could foreclose, just as if you hadn't filed for bankruptcy.

Debtor: So I have to keep my mortgage payments current, no matter which type of bankruptcy I file?

Lawyer: That's right. What other debts do you owe?

Debtor: Mainly credit card debts. And one SBA bank loan for my business.

Lawyer: Is the SBA loan secured by any of your property?

Debtor: No, it's just a bank loan.

Lawyer: How much are you paying on that loan?

Debtor: About $300 a month.

Lawyer: And how much credit card debt do you owe?

Debtor: About $20,000.

Lawyer: What were the credit card debts for?

Debtor: About $14,000 for personal expenses and $6,000 for paying off back taxes.

Lawyer: Oh yeah? What period did you owe the taxes for?

Debtor: The last couple of years.

Lawyer: That's interesting. I'll come back to this later. Bankruptcy law allows you to discharge credit card charges used to pay off taxes in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy but not in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy. So, if there is no other reason to choose one type of bankruptcy over the other, you would be wise to choose Chapter 13.

So, having paid those taxes, are you now current on your taxes for the past four years?

Debtor: Yes.

Lawyer: That's good. You can't file for Chapter 13 unless you have filed your state and federal taxes for the previous four years. How much was the bank loan for?

Debtor: $40,000

Lawyer: Did anybody cosign on that loan?

Debtor: As matter of fact, my mother cosigned that loan.

Lawyer: Hmm. Even if you could get rid of that debt in bankruptcy, your mother would still be on the hook to repay it if you filed under Chapter 7. Even though you wouldn't be responsible for the debt any more, she would be.

But if you file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, your mother won't have to repay it while your plan is in place, as long as your plan provides for payment of some or all of that debt. So, assuming your plan lasts for three years, your mother won't be on the hook for that period. However, she will still be responsible for any amount you haven't paid when your plan ends. So, again, if there is no other reason to choose one type of bankruptcy instead of the other, it looks like Chapter 13 might be a good choice.

Do you have any other debts?

Debtor: Nothing significant, maybe a total of $2,000 in miscellaneous bills. And, oh, does child support count?

Lawyer: I thought you were receiving child support.

Debtor: I am, but I also owe child support, for a child from a previous marriage. I never paid because my ex never asked, but now he's seeking current support as well as $5,000 in back support.

Lawyer: How much will you owe?

Debtor: Under the court order, $300 a month.

Lawyer: Have you started paying the support?

Debtor: No. I have to start paying it next month.

Lawyer: If you decide to file for Chapter 13, you will have to remain current on your child support payments throughout the life of your plan. If you don't, your case will be dismissed or converted to a Chapter 7 bankruptcy.

Debtor: I understand.

Lawyer: Let's talk later about the back support you owe. When were you divorced?

Debtor: A couple of years ago.

Lawyer: Did you assume any of the debts in the course of your divorce?

Debtor: Yes, I assumed the credit card charges for personal expenses in exchange for my ex-husband's share of our home.

Lawyer: Okay. How much were these charges?

Debtor: About $3,000.

Lawyer: Hmmm, in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, you can discharge this debt as regards the creditor, but your ex can come after you for this debt if he is sued by the creditor. In Chapter 13 bankruptcy, the debt would be fully discharged, both in respect to the creditor, and your ex.

Debtor: It sounds like I should probably file for Chapter 13.

Lawyer: Maybe, but we're not through yet. Let's talk about your other property. And this is where exemptions will become important. Other than your home, do you have any other property you would want to keep in your bankruptcy?

Debtor: Oh, yes. I have a concert piano and some copyright interests in several songs I wrote. Also, I have a car I want to hold on to and the tools I use in my business.

Lawyer: How much are the tools worth?

Debtor: About $3,000.

Lawyer: Great. New Hampshire allows you to keep up to $5,000 worth of tools for your occupation, so those are covered. How much is the car worth?

Debtor: About $4,000 according to Kelley Blue Book.

Lawyer: Are you making payments on it?

Debtor: Yes.

Lawyer: How much is left on your note?

Debtor: About $8,000.

Lawyer: When did you buy it?

Debtor: Three years ago.

Lawyer: If you file for Chapter 13, you can pay off the value of the car rather than what you still owe on the note. This is called a cramdown, and it's another great reason to file for Chapter 13. And it's a good thing you didn't buy your car more recently: You couldn't use this cramdown procedure if you had bought the car within 2½ years of your bankruptcy filing date.

Now let's take a look at the New Hampshire exemptions, to see whether your other property is covered. Remember, exemptions like the homestead exemption and the tools of your occupation exemption are laws that determine what property you can keep in your bankruptcy. As I read them, the car is covered because you owe more than it's worth, so your creditors wouldn't get anything if it were sold. Because you don't have any equity in the car, you don't need to protect it with an exemption. As for the piano and your copyright interests, there are no state exemptions that specifically cover those items.

Debtor: Does that mean I'll lose my piano?

Lawyer: Not necessarily. Remember, if you file for Chapter 13, you don't lose any property—you just have to make sure you pay your creditors at least what they would have received in a Chapter 7 case. This would be a lot less than the value of the piano, because of the trustee's commission and the costs of taking the piano, storing it, and selling it at auction. And even though New Hampshire doesn't specifically exempt pianos, it has a $3,500 exemption for all your furniture. So depending on your piano's value, it might be covered by the furniture exemption.

Debtor: I think my piano would sell for about $12,000 and I guess my copyrights are pretty much worthless.

Lawyer: Why do you say your copyright interests are worthless?

Debtor: Well, they belong to three songs I wrote, but I've never had the songs published, so there is no one to sell them to.

Lawyer: Okay, let's forget about the songs. We're only talking about the piano. Looking at the New Hampshire exemptions, in addition to the portion of the piano's value arguably covered by the furniture exemption—$3,500—there are also some wildcard exemptions. This type of exemption can be used to protect any property you choose. New Hampshire's wildcard exemptions will provide an additional $8,000 that you can put toward the piano: That takes into account a $1,000 straight wildcard, plus a $7,000 wildcard that you can use if you don't fully take advantage of certain other exemptions. If you use these wildcards for your piano, only about $500 of its value is not exempt. Because of the trustee's commission and the costs of selling the piano, your creditors probably wouldn't have gotten any of the proceeds if you used Chapter 7. So the non-exempt portion of your piano's value will add little or nothing to the cost of your Chapter 13 plan.

Debtor: Okay.

Lawyer: Here is a copy of the New Hampshire exemptions. Other than the piano, do you have any property that exceeds the exemption limit or that isn't listed in the exemption list?

Debtor: No, the piano is the only problem. But if I use the furniture exemption for my piano, my furniture won't be exempt. It's old furniture I bought at the Goodwill. I have nothing that would be of any value.

Lawyer: Well, that's up to the trustee. If you choose to use the entire furniture exemption for your piano, you might have to place some value on your furniture equal to what it would cost you to replace it.

Debtor: That would probably be about $1,000.

Lawyer: Okay, so you would have about $1,500 worth of nonexempt property, total. That's under the New Hampshire state exemptions. If a state allows it, a person may choose to use a different set of exemptions set out in the Bankruptcy Code termed the "federal exemptions." As it turns out, New Hampshire does allow use of the federal exemptions. You can choose from the federal exemption list or from the New Hampshire state list, but you can't mix or match.

Let's take a look and see if the federal exemptions would do you any good. The federal exemptions protect only $21,625 in your home equity. You have $50,000 equity to protect, so you wouldn't want to choose the federal exemptions.

So, we know you can file for Chapter 7 bankruptcy if you wish. You could keep your home and probably your piano, even though it isn't completely exempt. The cost of collecting and storing the piano, then selling it at auction, would probably be more than $500—the nonexempt portion—which means there wouldn't be anything left after selling it to pay to your unsecured creditors. If you had to use part of the furniture exemption for other pieces of furniture, however, $1,500 of the value of your piano would be nonexempt. If that were the case, the trustee might decide to take it and sell it, giving you the exempt amount and paying the rest to your unsecured creditors. Or, you could keep the piano if the trustee were willing to sell it to you for a negotiated price. Because the trustee would probably have to pay about $1,000 to sell it, you might be able to keep it by paying the trustee $500. But that's all in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy.

Debtor: It's still sounding to me like Chapter 13 is a good idea. But you said I have to make sure I'm eligible. What are the requirements?

Lawyer: Before we get to that, I have a couple more questions.

Debtor: Okay.

Lawyer: During the previous year, have you made payments on any loans you owe to relatives?

Debtor: Nope.

Lawyer: Good. If you had, the trustee might require the relative to return the money so it could be added to the amount your creditors would get.

Debtor: I wouldn't want that to happen.

Lawyer: Have you given away or sold any property to anyone within the past two years?

Debtor: No.

Lawyer: That also simplifies things. If you had given away some property, or you had sold some property for less than what it was worth, the difference in value would be considered nonexempt property. You'd have to add that to the amount you have to pay under your Chapter 13 plan. But you didn't sell any property, so this rule doesn't affect you.

Debtor: Wow, there's a lot to consider here. Are we done—isn't it clear that Chapter 13 is the right route for me?

Lawyer: Bear with me, just a few more issues to consider. Chapter 13 has some limitations on how much debt you can owe. Let's see, you owe a total of $70,000 of unsecured debt—a $40,000 bank loan, $23,000 in credit card debts, $5,000 in child support arrearage, and $2,000 other debts. You owe a total of $108,000 secured debt (your home and car). This means you fall within the eligibility guidelines, which are $1,081,400 for secured debts and $360,475 for unsecured debts.

Debtor: That's good.

Lawyer: Now let's see what debts you would have to pay in your Chapter 13 bankruptcy. Some debts have to be paid in full while others could be paid in part, depending on your income. The only debt that would have to be paid in full over the life of your plan would be the $5,000 arrearage for your child support. Plus, you'd have to pay roughly $1,500 for your nonexempt property, so your total payment would be $6,500 over the life of your plan.

Debtor: So how much would that be a month?

Lawyer: People whose average gross income for the preceding six months is less than the state median income—which is your situation—can propose a three-year repayment plan. If your income were higher than the median, you'd have to propose a five-year program.

So, when spreading out $6,500 over three years, you would have to pay at least $180 a month, plus the monthly payment on your car as modified downwards to reflect its value ($111), your current mortgage payment, and other expenses related to Chapter 13 bankruptcy, such as the trustee's fee and your attorney's fee if you use an attorney. If you don't have enough income to pay that after you subtract your living expenses, you won't qualify for a three-year Chapter 13 plan.

Debtor: How can I tell whether I have enough income to meet the Chapter 13 requirements?

Lawyer: If you decide to file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, you have to fill out some forms to determine your income and your expenses. These forms will basically show whether you can afford a Chapter 13 bankruptcy. If you don't have enough income to pay all necessary debts in three years, you can ask the judge to let you propose a five-year plan, so you can pay less each month. If you still won't have enough left, after paying your expenses, to make your payments, you probably won't be able to use Chapter 13.

Debtor: So, do you suggest that I file for Chapter 7? Or should I use Chapter 13?

Lawyer: Well, before I answer that, I've saved the best for last. Let's talk about attorney fees. I charge $3,500 for a Chapter 13 and $1,000 for a Chapter 7. So, by filing a Chapter 7, you'll save at least $2,500 in legal fees. But in Chapter 13 cases, I charge only $2,000 up front; the additional $1,500 can be paid through your plan. I think you'll find that my rates are competitive. Overall, it will cost less up front for you to file a Chapter 7 bankruptcy. Also, in your case, I see no reason why you couldn't handle your own Chapter 7 bankruptcy with the help of the ABC Bankruptcy Petition Preparation Service down the street. They have the same computer program as I use, but all they do is help you complete your paperwork. They can't give you legal advice. If you are up to handling your own case, which I think you are from this conversation, you should explore the self-help option.

If you do decide to do it yourself, I would be happy to consult with you for a flat rate of $150. Under my consultation agreement you could ask me as many questions as you want, over the telephone. Unless you use my service or a good self-help book, you might miss important information that you need to have a good result in your bankruptcy.

Debtor: I want you to handle my case. I don't think I'm up for self-representation.

Lawyer: Okay, now I'm ready to answer your basic question. As long as you have enough income left over in your budget to use Chapter 13, that would be an excellent choice for you because:

- It will protect your codebtor—your mother—for the life of the plan.

- It will allow you to keep your car and pay it off at market value rather than reaffirming the current note, which is twice what it's worth.
- Unlike Chapter 7, it fully discharges the credit card debts you assumed in your divorce.
- Unlike Chapter 7, it will allow you to discharge the credit card debts you incurred to pay off your taxes.
- It will allow you to pay off your child support arrearage—that is, the back child support you owe—over the life of your plan, without worrying about wage garnishments and bank levies.

So, assuming you have enough income to propose a confirmable Chapter 13 plan and pay my fees, I recommend Chapter 13. If you can't propose a confirmable Chapter 13 plan, even over a five-year period, or you can't afford my fees, I suggest you hold off on bankruptcy for awhile, given the fact that you might lose your piano in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy unless you can come up with enough money to buy it back from the trustee.

This chapter shows you how to complete the Chapter 13 bankruptcy petition as well as all of the schedules and other forms you need for your Chapter 13 case (except for your repayment plan, which is covered in Ch. 8). Once you've completed these forms and drafted your plan, you can file for bankruptcy, using the instructions in Ch. 9.

As you'll see, you have to complete quite a few forms to file for bankruptcy, and some of them request a lot of information. For the most part, however, the process is fairly straightforward. Just take your time and follow the instructions provided below, and you'll do just fine.

TIP

If you need help with the paperwork, consider a bankruptcy petition preparer. Many nonlawyer paralegals do the paperwork for people filing their own Chapter 7 bankruptcies. Called "bankruptcy petition preparers" (BPPs), these nonlawyers usually won't prepare the paperwork for Chapter 13 bankruptcies. Preparing the repayment plan that must be submitted in a Chapter 13 case is considered practicing law, something that nonlawyers aren't legally allowed to do. If, however, you are going to prepare your own plan with the help of this book, you may be able to talk a BPP into preparing your basic Chapter 13 paperwork, which is almost identical to Chapter 7 paperwork except for the plan.

Get Some Information From the Court

Although bankruptcy courts operate similarly throughout the country, every bankruptcy court has its own picky requirements for filing bankruptcy papers. If your papers don't meet these local requirements, the court clerk may reject them. So, before you begin preparing your papers, contact your bankruptcy court to find out its rules.

In urban areas especially, you may get no response to a letter or phone call. You may need to visit the court and get the information in person. Or, the information may be available on the Internet. Almost all bankruptcy courts have websites with this sort of information. To find your court's website, visit www.justice.gov/courtlinks. Many court sites have special self-help areas for people handling their own bankruptcies. While these are intended primarily for Chapter 7 filers, you may be able to pick up some valuable information for your Chapter 13 case, including the fees, local forms, local rules, and court locations.

Here are some of the things you should find out before preparing and filing your papers.

Fees

The total fee to file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy is $274. Fees change, however, so make sure to check with the court. This fee is due upon filing, unless you qualify for a waiver of the fees or obtain court permission to pay in installments. (To make these requests, you must complete Form 3A or 3B, as explained below.)

Local Forms

In addition to the official forms that every bankruptcy court uses, your local bankruptcy court may require you to file one or two additional forms that it has developed. For example, different courts have different forms that you must file along with your wage stubs. You can get all local forms from your local bankruptcy court or a local stationery store, or you can download them from your court's website. (Go to www.justice.gov/courtlinks for a list of links to local courts.)

Of course, we can't include all local forms in this book or tell you how to fill them out. Most, however, are self-explanatory. If you need help in obtaining or understanding them, see a local bankruptcy lawyer or visit a bankruptcy petition preparer. (See Ch. 15 for information on petition preparers.)

Follow Your Court's Local Rules

Most bankruptcy courts publish local rules that govern the court's procedures. These rules mainly govern hearings conducted by the bankruptcy judge and aren't relevant in routine Chapter 13 bankruptcy cases, which usually involve only filing papers and appearing at a creditors' meeting and confirmation hearing. Still, on occasion, a rule does affect a Chapter 13 bankruptcy. You can get your local rules from the bankruptcy court—in person or on its website—but be prepared to comb through reams of material to find the one or two rules that might apply in your case.

Finding the Right Court

Because bankruptcy is a creature of federal, not state, law, you must file for bankruptcy in a special federal court. There are federal bankruptcy courts all over the country.

The federal court system divides the country into judicial districts. Every state has at least one judicial district; most have more. You can file in either:

- the district where you have been living for the greater part of the 180-day period before you file, or
- the district where you are domiciled—that is, where you maintain your home, even if you have been living elsewhere (such as on a military base) temporarily.

Most readers will be using the first option—and many will probably file in the large city closest to their home. To find a bankruptcy court in your state, check the government listings in your white pages (under “United States, Courts”), call directory assistance, ask your local law librarian, or go to www.legalconsumer.com and enter your zip code.

If you live in a state with more than one district, call the court in the closest city and ask whether that district includes your county or zip code.

EXAMPLE: For the past two months, you’ve lived in San Luis Obispo, which is in California’s central judicial district. Before that you lived in Santa Rosa, in California’s northern judicial district. Because you spent more of the past six months in the northern district than in the central, you should file in the bankruptcy court in the northern district. If it’s too inconvenient to file there, you could wait another month, when you would qualify to file in the central district court.

Required Forms

Bankruptcy uses official forms prescribed by the federal office of the courts. This section provides a list of forms you’ll have to file, as well as information on how to find them.

Required Bankruptcy Forms

These are the standard forms that must be filed in every Chapter 13 bankruptcy:

- ☐ Form 1—Voluntary Petition
- ☐ Form 3A (only if you are paying your filing fee in installments)
- ☐ Form 6, which consists of:
 - ☐ Schedule A—Real Property
 - ☐ Schedule B—Personal Property
 - ☐ Schedule C—Property Claimed as Exempt
 - ☐ Schedule D—Creditors Holding Secured Claims
 - ☐ Schedule E—Creditors Holding Unsecured Priority Claims
 - ☐ Schedule F—Creditors Holding Unsecured Nonpriority Claims
 - ☐ Schedule G—Executory Contracts and Unexpired Leases
 - ☐ Schedule H—Codebtors
 - ☐ Schedule I—Current Income
 - ☐ Schedule J—Current Expenditures
 - ☐ Summary of Schedules A through J
 - ☐ Declaration Concerning Debtor’s Schedules
- ☐ Form 7—Statement of Financial Affairs
- ☐ Form 21—Statement of Social Security Number
- ☐ Form 22C—Chapter 13 Statement of Current Monthly Income and Calculation of Commitment Period and Disposable Income
- ☐ Form 201A—Notice to Individual Consumer Debtor Under § 342 of the Bankruptcy Code
- ☐ Mailing Matrix
- ☐ Chapter 13 repayment plan (covered in Ch. 8)
- ☐ required local forms, if any.

With the exception of Form 22C, which requires you to do a fair bit of math, the forms addressed in this chapter are very straightforward and easy to complete, as long as you take them one at a time. Also, you probably won’t have to spend time on each form, even though all of them are part of your filing package. For instance, if you don’t own real estate, you can simply check the “None” box on Schedule A and proceed to Schedule B.

All together, these forms usually are referred to as your “bankruptcy petition,” although technically your petition is only Form 1. (In case you’re wondering, Forms 2, 4, and 5 aren’t used in voluntary Chapter 13 bankruptcy filings.)

Where to Get the Official Forms

Appendix B of this book includes tear-out copies of all of the required bankruptcy forms—other than the Chapter 13 repayment plan (see Ch. 8). You can type the necessary information in the blanks or complete the forms by hand.

You can also find free copies of the bankruptcy forms online. For example, the website of the United States Courts offers a complete PDF set of official forms at www.uscourts.gov/bkforms/index.html, which you can fill in electronically and print. However, you can't save your entries on your computer.

Tips for Completing the Forms

Here are some tips that will make filling in your forms easier and the whole bankruptcy process smoother. A sample, completed form accompanies each form's instructions. Refer to it while you fill in your bankruptcy papers.

Make several copies of each form. That way, you can make a draft, changing things as you go until the form is complete and correct. Prepare final forms to file with the court only after you've double-checked your drafts. If you use PDF, fill-in-the-blanks forms, remember that you can't save the information in the forms. It's easiest to do a draft by hand, then complete the form and print it all at once.

Type your final forms. If you are using the Nolo forms or the PDF forms, you could write in your information by hand. However, it's best if they are typewritten. If you don't own a typewriter, many libraries have typewriters available to the public (for a small rental fee), or you can hire a bankruptcy form preparation service to prepare your forms using the information you provide. (See Ch. 15 for more on these services.)

Be ridiculously thorough. Always err on the side of giving too much information rather than too little. If you leave information out, the bankruptcy trustee may become suspicious of your motives. If you leave creditors off the forms, the debts you owe these creditors won't be discharged—hardly the result you would want. If you intentionally or carelessly fail to list all your property and debts, or fail to accurately describe your recent property transactions, the court, upon a request by the trustee, may rule that you acted with fraudulent intent. It may deny your bankruptcy discharge altogether.

Respond to every question. Even if you think the question is unnecessary, respond to it. For instance, when you are asked to describe your clothing, respond to the question in full even if your clothing is worth little or nothing. Most of the forms have a box to check when your answer is “none.” If a question doesn't have a “none” box and the question doesn't apply to you, type in “N/A” for “not applicable.” This will let the trustee know that you didn't overlook the question. Occasionally, a question that doesn't apply to you will have a number of blanks. Put “N/A” in only the first blank if it is obvious that this applies to the other blanks as well. If it's not clear, put “N/A” in every blank.

Don't worry about repetition. Sometimes different forms—or different questions on the same form—may ask for the same or overlapping information. Don't worry about providing the same information multiple times—too much information is never a sin in bankruptcy.

Explain uncertainties. If you can't figure out which category on a form to use for a debt or an item of property, list the debt or item in what you think is the appropriate place and briefly note next to your entry that you're uncertain. The important thing is to disclose the information somewhere. The bankruptcy trustee will sort it out, if necessary.

Be scrupulously honest. As part of your official bankruptcy paperwork, you must complete declarations, under penalty of perjury, swearing that you've been truthful. It's important to realize that you could be prosecuted for perjury if it's evident that you deliberately lied.

Use continuation pages if you run out of room. The space for entering information is sometimes skimpy, especially if you're filing jointly with a spouse. Most of the forms come with preformatted continuation pages that you can use if you need more room. If there is no continuation form, prepare one yourself, using a piece of regular white 8½" by 11" paper. Write “see continuation page” next to the question you're working on and enter the additional information on the continuation page. Label the continuation pages with your name and the form name, and indicate “Continuation Page 1,” “Continuation Page 2,” and so on. Be sure to attach all continuation pages to their appropriate forms when you file your bankruptcy papers.

Get help if necessary. If your situation is complicated, you're unsure about how to complete a form, or you run into trouble when you go to file your papers, consult a bankruptcy attorney or do some legal research before proceeding. (See Ch. 15.)

Refer to—but don't copy—the sample forms. This chapter includes completed sample Chapter 13 forms for Carrie Anne Edwards, who lives in California. These forms are intended as examples, so you can see what a completed form should look like. However, everyone's bankruptcy situation is different—and obviously, you will owe different debts, own different property, have different bank accounts and Social Security numbers, and otherwise be utterly dissimilar from this fictional gal. DO NOT COPY THESE EXAMPLES, even if you live in California, because they won't fit your precise situation.

For Married Filers

If you are married, you and your spouse will have to decide whether one of you should file alone or whether you should file jointly. To make this decision, you'll first have to make sure that you're married in the eyes of the federal law (a trickier issue than you might think), then consider how filing together or separately will affect your debts and property.

Are You Married?

If you are married to a partner of the opposite sex, and you were married with a valid state license, you are married for purposes of filing a joint petition—and you can skip down to “Should You File Jointly?” below. However, if you were not married with a license and ceremony, or if you are married to a same-sex partner, read on.

Common Law Marriage

Some states allow heterosexual couples to establish “common law” marriages, which the states will recognize as valid marriages even though the couples do not have a state marriage license or certificate.

Contrary to popular belief, a common law marriage is not created when two people simply live together for a certain number of years. In order to have a valid common law marriage, the couple must do all of the following:

- live together for a significant period of time (not defined in any state)
- hold themselves out as a married couple—typically this means using the same last name, referring to the other as “my husband” or “my wife,” and filing a joint tax return, and
- intend to be married.

Alabama, Colorado, the District of Columbia, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Montana, New Hampshire (but only for inheritance purposes), Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas, and Utah recognize some form of common law marriage, but the rules for what constitutes a marriage differ from state to state. And, several of these states will only recognize common law marriages that were created before a certain date.

If you live in one of these states and you meet your state's requirements for a common law marriage, you have the option to file jointly, if you wish.

Same-Sex Marriage

If you married your same-sex partner in a state, country, or province that recognizes same-sex marriage, the prevailing opinion among bankruptcy lawyers and judges is that the federal Defense of Marriage Act or DOMA (1 U.S.C. § 7 and 28 U.S.C. § 1738C) prohibits federal courts from recognizing your marriage for bankruptcy purposes. In other words, you have to file separately.

At least one court has refused to allow a lesbian couple who had married in Canada to file a joint bankruptcy petition based on the DOMA, which defines marriage as a union between a man and a woman. If you choose to file jointly with your same-sex spouse anyway, you may well face opposition on these grounds from the trustee or the U.S. Trustee. Consider consulting with a bankruptcy attorney who has some experience with issues facing same-sex couples before you decide how to proceed.

Should You File Jointly?

Unfortunately, there is no simple formula that will tell you whether it's better to file alone or with your spouse. In the end, it will depend on which option allows you to discharge more of your debts and keep more of your property. Here are some of the factors you should consider:

- If you are living in a community property state and most of your debts were incurred, and your property acquired, during marriage, you should probably file jointly. Even if only one spouse files, all community property is considered part of the bankruptcy estate—and any of the property that is nonexempt will determine the amount that nonpriority unsecured creditors will be paid (see Ch. 5 for more information). The same is generally true for debts—that is, all community debts are listed and most will be dealt with in the plan even though only one spouse files.
- If you have recently married, you haven't acquired any valuable assets as a married couple, and one of you has all the debts, it may make sense for that spouse to file for bankruptcy alone (especially if the nonfiling spouse has good credit to protect).
- You may want to file alone if you and your spouse own property as tenants by the entirety, most of the debts are in your own name, and you live in a state that excludes such property from the bankruptcy estate when one spouse files. This is a particularly important consideration if your home would be nonexempt property if both spouses filed—that could push the level of payment to your nonpriority unsecured creditors past the point that you could afford to pay in your repayment plan.
- If the exemption system you are using allows married spouses to double their exemptions, filing jointly may reduce the amount you would have to pay to your nonpriority unsecured creditors.
- If you are still married but separated, you may have to file alone if your spouse won't cooperate. Still, if your debts and property are joint rather than separate, a joint filing would probably be to your best advantage.

SEE AN EXPERT

If you are uncertain about how to file, see a lawyer. Deciding whether to file jointly or alone can have significant consequences. Because the best choice will depend on your unique situation, we advise you to talk to a bankruptcy lawyer if you are unsure whether or not to file jointly.

Form 1—Voluntary Petition

A completed sample Voluntary Petition and line-by-line instructions follow.

First Page

Court Name. At the top of the first page, fill in the name of the judicial district you're filing in, such as the "Central District of California." If your state has only one district, fill in your state's name. If your state divides its districts into divisions, enter the division after the state name."

Name of Debtor. Enter your full name (last name first), as used on your checks, driver's license, and other formal documents. If you are married and filing jointly (see above), put one of your names as the debtor (on the left) and the other formal "Name of Joint Debtor (Spouse)," on the right. If you are married but filing separately, enter "N/A" in the second blank.

All Other Names. The purpose of this box is to make sure that your creditors will know who you are when they receive notice of your bankruptcy filing. If you have been known by any other name in the last eight years, list it here. If you've operated a business as a sole proprietor during the previous eight years, include your trade name (fictitious or assumed business name) preceded by "dba" for "doing business as." But don't include minor variations in spelling or form. For instance, if your name is John Lewis Odegard, you don't have to put down that you're sometimes known as J.L. But if you've used the pseudonym J.L. Smith, you should list it. If you're uncertain, list any name that you think you may have used with a creditor. Do the same for your spouse (in the box to the right) if you are filing jointly. If you're filing alone, type "N/A" anywhere in the box to the right (and the remaining joint debtor boxes on the form).

Last four digits of Soc. Sec. or Individual-Taxpayer I.D. (ITIN)/Complete EIN. Enter only the last four digits of your Social Security number or taxpayer's I.D. number. Do the same for your spouse (in the box to the right) if you are filing jointly.

Street Address of Debtor. Enter your current street address. Even if you get all of your mail at a post office box, list the address of your personal residence.

Street Address of Joint Debtor. Enter your spouse's current street address (even if it's the same as yours) if you are filing jointly—again, no post office boxes.

County of Residence or of the Principal Place of Business. Enter the county in which you live. Do the same for your spouse if you're filing jointly. Or type "N/A" in the right-hand box. If you are doing business, enter the county where your (or your spouse's) business assets are located, if it's different than your mailing address.

Mailing Address of Debtor. Enter your mailing address if it is different from your street address. If it isn't, put "N/A." Do the same for your spouse (in the box to the right) if you are filing jointly.

Location of Principal Assets of Business Debtor. Leave this blank. This item applies only when corporations and other business entities are filing.

Type of Debtor. Check the first box—"Individual"—even if you have been self-employed or operated a sole proprietorship during the previous six years. If you are filing bankruptcy for a corporation, partnership, or other type of business entity, you shouldn't be filing a Chapter 13 bankruptcy—which is only for individuals.

Nature of Business. See a bankruptcy lawyer if any of these business descriptions apply to you or your spouse. For instance, if you or your spouse own an assisted living facility (11 U.S.C. § 101 (27A)), you would need a lawyer's services, because the law has gotten quite complicated regarding how health care businesses are treated in bankruptcy.

Tax-Exempt Entity. Leave this blank. This box is for nonprofits only.

Chapter of Bankruptcy Code Under Which the Petition is Filed. Check "Chapter 13."

Nature of Debts. Check the box for consumer debts if the majority of your debts were incurred for consumer rather than for business purposes. Mortgages on personal residences are considered consumer debts, which means most homeowners will be checking the consumer debts box. On the other hand, tax debts are considered business debts, so if you owe a lot of back taxes and don't have a mortgage, you may be checking the business debts box. If your debts are primarily for business purposes, you don't have to take the means test, so this classification can be very important.

Filing Fee. If you will attach the entire fee, check the first box. If you plan to ask the court for permission to pay in installments, check the second box.

Chapter 11 Debtors. Leave this section blank.

Statistical/Administrative Information. Here are a number of boxes. The first set of boxes tells the trustee whether you have nonexempt property. If you did your homework in Ch. 5, you will have a good idea of whether all of your assets can be claimed as exempt, or whether you will have to pay your nonpriority unsecured creditors what they would have gotten from the sale of your nonexempt assets. Check the top or bottom box accordingly. If you haven't a clue yet about your property and exemptions, come back to this question after you've completed Schedules A, B, and C later in this chapter.

Similarly, if you can provide pretty good estimates of the other information requested (estimated number of creditors, assets, and debts), fill in the appropriate boxes on the form. If not, come back to these questions when you've completed more of your paperwork.

Second Page

Name of Debtor(s). Enter your name and your spouse's, if you are filing jointly.

All Prior Bankruptcy Cases Filed Within Last 8 Years. If you haven't filed a bankruptcy case within the previous eight years, type "None" in the first box. If you—or your spouse, if you're filing jointly—have, enter the requested information. A previous Chapter 7 bankruptcy discharge bars you from getting a Chapter 13 discharge until four years have passed since you filed in the previous case. A previous Chapter 13 filing bars you from getting Chapter 13 discharge for two years after receiving a discharge in the previous case.

Pending Bankruptcy Case Filed by any Spouse, Partner, or Affiliate of this Debtor. "Affiliate" refers to a related business under a corporate structure. "Partner" refers to a business partnership. Again, you shouldn't use this book if you're filing as a corporation, partnership, or other type of business entity. If your spouse has a bankruptcy case pending anywhere in the country, enter the requested information. Otherwise, type "None" in the first box.

Exhibit A. This is solely for people who are filing for Chapter 11 bankruptcy. Leave it blank.

Exhibit B. This is solely for people who are represented by an attorney. If you are representing yourself or using a bankruptcy petition preparer, leave this section blank.

Exhibit C. If you own or have in your possession any property that might cause "imminent and identifiable" harm to public health or safety (for example, real estate that is polluted with toxic substances or explosive devices, such as hand grenades or dynamite), check the "Yes" box, fill in Exhibit C (see Appendix B), and attach Exhibit C to this petition. If you are unsure about whether a particular piece of property fits the bill, err on the side of inclusion.

Exhibit D. With rare exceptions, debtors filing for Chapter 13 bankruptcy are required to participate in debt counseling sessions within 180 days of their bankruptcy filing (see Ch. 9 for more details). Exhibit D tells the court whether you've met this requirement. Instructions for completing Exhibit D are set out below. Check the top box in this part of the petition if you are filing individually and have completed Exhibit D; if you are filing jointly and your spouse has completed Exhibit D, check the bottom box.

Information Regarding the Debtor—Venue. Most filers will check the top box. Check the middle box if it is appropriate (it won't be for most users of this book, which is intended for individuals and sole proprietors). Leave the bottom box blank. If it applies to you, see a lawyer.

Certification by a Debtor Who Resides as a Tenant of Residential Property. As explained in Ch. 2, certain evictions are allowed to proceed after you file for bankruptcy, despite the automatic stay. The questions in this section of the petition are intended to figure out whether your landlord has already gotten a judgment for possession (eviction order) and whether you might be able to postpone the eviction. See Ch. 2 for the information you need to complete these boxes, if they apply.

Third Page

Signature(s) of Debtor(s) (Individual/Joint). You—and your spouse, if you are filing jointly—must sign where indicated. Include your telephone number and the date. You—and your spouse, if you are filing jointly—declare that you are aware that you may file under other sections of the Bankruptcy Code, and that you still choose to file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy. If you think you want to pursue one of those options, put your Chapter 13 petition aside and either consult a lawyer or find a book that explains your proposed alternative in more detail. For example, check out The New Bankruptcy: Will It Work for You?, by Stephen Elias (Nolo).

Signature of Attorney. If you are representing yourself, type "Debtor not represented by attorney" in the space for the attorney's signature. If you are represented by a lawyer, fill in the blanks accordingly.

Signature of Non-Attorney Bankruptcy Petition Preparer. If a bankruptcy petition preparer typed your forms, have that person complete this section. Otherwise, type "N/A" on the first line.

Exhibit D

At the top of the page, fill in the court name, your name(s) as debtor(s), the Chapter (13) and the case number (if you have it).

The warning (in bold letters) explains that you have to check one of the five statements regarding credit counseling listed in Exhibit D.

Most people will check Box 1, which means you obtained the certificate of completion from the credit counseling agency and can attach the certificate (and any debt repayment plan developed through the agency) to your petition.

If you have received counseling but haven't got your certificate yet, check Box 2. To remain in bankruptcy, you'll need to obtain and file your certificate (and debt repayment plan if any) within 15 days after your bankruptcy filing date.

Checking Box 3 indicates that you have requested credit counseling but were unable to obtain the services within five days after your request, and have not yet received counseling. If you check this box, you'll have to explain why you couldn't complete the credit

EXHIBIT D - INDIVIDUAL DEBTOR'S STATEMENT OF COMPLIANCE WITH CREDIT COUNSELING REQUIREMENT

Warning: You must be able to check truthfully one of the five statements regarding credit counseling listed below. If you cannot do so, you are not eligible to file a bankruptcy case, and the court can dismiss any case you do file. If that happens, you will lose whatever filing fee you paid, and your creditors will be able to resume collection activities against you. If your case is dismissed and you file another bankruptcy case later, you may be required to pay a second filing fee and you may have to take extra steps to stop creditors' collection activities.

Every individual debtor must file this Exhibit D. If a joint petition is filed, each spouse must complete and file a separate Exhibit D. Check one of the five statements below and attach any documents as directed.

☐ 1. Within the 180 days before the filing of my bankruptcy case, I received a briefing from a credit counseling agency approved by the United States trustee or bankruptcy administrator that outlined the opportunities for available credit counseling and assisted me in performing a related budget analysis, and I have a certificate from the agency describing the services provided to me. Attach a copy of the certificate and a copy of any debt repayment plan developed through the agency.

☒ 2. Within the 180 days before the filing of my bankruptcy case, I received a briefing from a credit counseling agency approved by the United States trustee or bankruptcy administrator that outlined the opportunities for available credit counseling and assisted me in performing a related budget analysis, but I do not have a certificate from the agency describing the services provided to me. You must file a copy of a certificate from the agency describing the services provided to you and a copy of any debt repayment plan developed through the agency no later than 14 days after your bankruptcy case is filed.

☐ 3. I certify that I requested credit counseling services from an approved agency but was unable to obtain the services during the seven days from the time I made my request, and the following exigent circumstances merit a temporary waiver of the credit counseling requirement so I can file my bankruptcy case now. [Summarize exigent circumstances here.] _____

If your certification is satisfactory to the court, you must still obtain the credit counseling briefing within the first 30 days after you file your bankruptcy petition and promptly file a certificate from the agency that provided the counseling, together with a copy of any debt management plan developed through the agency. Failure to fulfill these requirements may result in dismissal of your case. Any extension of the 30-day deadline can be granted only for cause and is limited to a maximum of 15 days. Your case may also be dismissed if the court is not satisfied with your reasons for filing your bankruptcy case without first receiving a credit counseling briefing.

☐ 4. I am not required to receive a credit counseling briefing because of: [Check the applicable statement.] [Must be accompanied by a motion for determination by the court.]

☐ Incapacity. (Defined in 11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(4) as impaired by reason of mental illness or mental deficiency so as to be incapable of realizing and making rational decisions with respect to financial responsibilities.);

☐ Disability. (Defined in 11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(4) as physically impaired to the extent of being unable, after reasonable effort, to participate in a credit counseling briefing in person, by telephone, or through the Internet.);

☐ Active military duty in a military combat zone.

☐ 5. The United States trustee or bankruptcy administrator has determined that the credit counseling requirement of 11 U.S.C. § 109(h) does not apply in this district.

I certify under penalty of perjury that the information provided above is true and correct.

Box 5 only applies if the credit counseling requirement doesn't apply in your district. This exception is very rare.

Sign and date this document under penalty of perjury and file it with your petition.

Form 6—Schedules

"Form 6" refers to a series of schedules that provides the trustee and court with a picture of your current financial situation.

CAUTION

Use the correct address for your creditors.

Many of these schedules ask you to provide addresses for the creditors you list. For creditors who have dunned you with written requests or demands for payment, you should provide the address that the creditor listed as a contact address on at least two written communications you received from the creditor within the 90-day period prior to your anticipated filing date. If the creditor has not contacted you within that 90-day period, provide the contact address that the creditor gave in the last two communications it sent to you. If you no longer have the address of your original creditor, use the contact address of the most recent creditors—for instance a collection agency or an attorney's office. If a creditor is a minor child, simply put "minor child" and the appropriate address. Don't list the child's name.

Schedule A—Real Property

Here you list all the real estate you own as of the date you'll file the petition. Don't worry about whether a particular piece of property is exempt; you don't have to deal with exemptions until you get to Schedule C.

A completed sample of Schedule A and line-by-line instructions follow. Even if you don't own any real estate, you still must complete the top of this form.

In re. (This means "In the matter of.") Type your name and the name of your spouse, if you're filing jointly. "In re [your name(s)]" will be the name of your bankruptcy case.

Case No. If you made an emergency filing, fill in the case number assigned by the court. Otherwise, leave this blank.

SKIP AHEAD

If you don't own real estate, type "N/A" anywhere in the first column, type "0" for the Total at the bottom of the page, and move on to Schedule B.

Description and Location of Property. For each piece of real property you own, list the type of property—for example, house, farm, or undeveloped lot—and street address. You don't need to include the legal description of the property (the description on the deed).

Real Property Defined

Real property—land and things permanently attached to land—includes more than just a house. It can also include unimproved land, vacation cabins, condominiums, duplexes, rental property, business property, mobile home park spaces, agricultural land, airplane hangars, and any other buildings permanently attached to land.

You may own real estate even if you can't walk on it, live on it, or get income from it. This might be true, for example, if:

- You own real estate solely because you are married to a spouse who owns real estate and you live in a community property state.
- Someone else lives on property that you are entitled to receive in the future under a trust agreement.

There's a separate schedule for leases and time-shares.

If you hold a time-share lease in a vacation cabin or property, lease a boat dock, lease underground portions of real estate for mineral or oil exploration, or otherwise lease or rent real estate of any description, don't list it on Schedule A. All leases and time-shares should be listed on Schedule G. (See the instructions for that schedule below.)

SCHEDULE A - REAL PROPERTY

Except as directed below, list all real property in which the debtor has any legal, equitable, or future interest, including all property owned as a cotenant, community property, or in which the debtor has a life estate. Include any property in which the debtor holds rights and powers exercisable for the debtor's own benefit. If the debtor is married, state whether husband, wife, both, or the marital community own the property by placing an "H," "W," "J," or "C" in the column labeled "Husband, Wife, Joint, or Community." If the debtor holds no interest in real property, write "None" under "Description and Location of Property."

Do not include interests in executory contracts and unexpired leases on this schedule. List them in Schedule G - Executory Contracts and Unexpired Leases.

If an entity claims to have a lien or hold a secured interest in any property, state the amount of the secured claim. See Schedule D. If no entity claims to hold a secured interest in the property, write "None" in the column labeled "Amount of Secured Claim." If the debtor is an individual or if a joint petition is filed, state the amount of any exemption claimed in the property only in Schedule C - Property Claimed as Exempt.

Nature of Debtor's Interest in Property. In this column, you need to provide the legal definition for the interest you (or you and your spouse) have in the real estate. The most common type of interest—outright ownership—is called “fee simple.” Even if you still owe money on your mortgage, as long as you have the right to sell the house, leave it to your heirs, and make alterations, your ownership is fee simple. A fee simple interest may be owned by one person or by several people jointly. Normally, when people are listed on a deed as the owners—even if they own the property as joint tenants, tenants in common, or tenants by the entirety—the ownership interest is in fee simple. Other types of real property interests include:

- Life estate. This is the right to possess and use property only during your lifetime. You can't sell the property, give it away, or leave it to someone when you die. Instead, when you die, the property passes to whomever was named in the instrument (trust, deed, or will) that created your life estate. This type of ownership is usually created when the sole owner of a piece of real estate wants a surviving spouse to live on the property for the rest of his or her life, but then have the property pass to the owner's children. In this situation, the surviving spouse has a life estate. Surviving spouses who are beneficiaries of AB, spousal, or marital bypass trusts have life estates.
- Future interest. This is your right to own property sometime in the future. A common future interest is owned by a person who—under the terms of a deed or irrevocable trust—will inherit the property when its current possessor dies. Simply being named in a will or living trust doesn't create a future interest, because the person who signed the deed or trust can amend the document to cut you out.
- Contingent interest. This ownership interest doesn't come into existence unless one or more conditions are fulfilled. Wills sometimes leave property to people under certain conditions. If the conditions aren't met, the property passes to someone else. For instance, Emma's will leaves her house to John provided that he takes care of her until her death. If John doesn't care for Emma, the house passes to Emma's daughter Jane. Both John and Jane have contingent interests in Emma's home.

- Lienholder. If you are the holder of a mortgage, deed of trust, judgment lien, or mechanic's lien on real estate, you have an ownership interest in the real estate.
- Easement holder. If you are the holder of a right to travel on or otherwise use property owned by someone else, you have an easement.
- Power of appointment. If you have a legal right, given to you in a will or transfer of property, to sell a specified piece of someone's property, that's called a power of appointment and should be listed.
- Beneficial ownership under a real estate contract. This is the right to own property by virtue of having signed a binding real estate contract. Even though the buyer doesn't yet own the property, the buyer does have a “beneficial interest”—that is, the right to own the property once the formalities are completed. For example, property buyers have a beneficial ownership interest in property while the escrow is pending.

If you have trouble figuring out which of these definitions best fits your type of ownership interest, leave the column blank and let the trustee help you sort it out.

Husband, Wife, Joint, or Community. If you're not married, put “N/A.” If you are married, indicate whether the real estate is owned:

- by the husband (H)
- by the wife (W)
- jointly by husband and wife as joint tenants, tenants in common, or tenants by the entirety (J), or
- jointly by husband and wife as community property (C).

Current Value of Debtor's Interest in Property, Without Deducting any Secured Claim or Exemption. Enter the actual value of your real estate ownership interest.

To value your property, compare it to similar real estate parcels in your neighborhood that have recently sold (comparables). For a modest fee, you can get details on comparables—including neighborhood information, sales history, address, number of bedrooms and baths, square footage, and property tax information—from SmartHomeBuy at www.smarthomebuy.com. Less detailed information (purchase price, sales date, and address) is available free from sites such as www.homevalues.com, www.zillow.com, www.domania.com, www.homeradar.com, and <http://list.realestate.yahoo.com/re/homevalues>. Simply enter the home's address or zip code.

Don't figure in homestead exemptions or any mortgages or other liens on the property. Just put the actual current value as best you can calculate it. However, you can deduct the costs of sale from the actual value and enter the difference, as long as you explain what you did on the schedule.

If you own the property with someone else who is not joining you in your bankruptcy, list only your ownership share in this column. For example, if you and your brother own a home as joint tenants (each owns 50%), split the property's current market value in half and list that amount here.

If your interest is intangible—for example, you are a beneficiary of real estate held in trust that won't be distributed for many years—enter an estimate provided by a real estate appraiser or put “don't know” and explain why you can't be more precise.

Mobile Home Note

If you own a mobile home in a park, use the value of the mobile home in its current location. Many parks are located in desirable areas, and the park itself adds value to the mobile home even though you may not have any ownership interest in the park itself. A mobile home that may not be worth much on its own could be worth quite a bit if it's sitting in a fancy park.

Total. Add the amounts in the fourth column and enter the total at the bottom of the page. The form reminds you that you should also enter this total on the Summary of Schedules (see the instructions for completing the summary, below).

Amount of Secured Claim. List mortgages and other debts secured by the property. If there is no secured claim of any type on the real estate, enter “None.” If there is, enter separately the amount of each outstanding mortgage, deed of trust, home equity loan, or lien (judgment lien, mechanic's lien, materialman's lien, tax lien, or the like) that is claimed against the property. If you don't know the balance on your mortgage, deed of trust, or home equity loan, call the lender. To find out the existence and values of liens, visit the land records office in your county and look up the parcel in the records; the clerk can show you how. Or, you can order a title search through a real estate attorney or title insurance company. If you own several pieces of real estate and there is one lien on file against all the real estate, list the full amount of the lien for each separate property item. Don't worry if, taken together, the value of the liens is higher than the value of the property; it's quite common.

How you itemize liens in this schedule won't affect how your property or the liens will be treated in bankruptcy. The idea here is to notify the trustee of all possible liens that may affect your equity in your real estate.

TIP

You might be able to get rid of liens. If you have liens on your property that aren't secured by it, you may be able to strip them off and reduce the amount of your current mortgage expense. For example, if your property is worth $250,000, and you owe $250,000 on your first mortgage, any other liens listed here can be “stripped off” in your Chapter 13 bankruptcy and reclassified as unsecured debt. If your total mortgage payment is $2,500, and $1,750 of that is attributable to your first mortgage, you can reduce your mortgage payment by the remaining $750, which will make a Chapter 13 plan more feasible. This is why it's important to be accurate here about liens arising from second and third mortgages.

If you are simply unable to obtain this information, and you can't afford the help of a lawyer or title insurance company, put “unknown.” This will be okay for the purpose of filing your papers, but you may need to get the information later. For example, a question might come up as to whether the equity in your home is protected by your exemption. Suppose your exemption is $10,000 and your equity is $30,000. You would probably have to pay your nonpriority unsecured creditors roughly $20,000 in your plan, less what it would cost to sell your house. But if there were an unknown lien on the property for $20,000, then you wouldn't have to pay your nonpriority unsecured creditors anything in your plan—as a result of this item of real estate, anyway. So it's to your benefit to get this information any way you can.

CAUTION

Only “perfected” liens count. Every state has a law specifying the procedures that must be followed to make a mortgage or other secured agreement or lien valid (called perfecting the lien). If a lien is not properly recorded, or the document creating the lien is defective (because of a faulty notarization on a deed of trust, for instance), it won't count as a lien in bankruptcy. And liens that have not been perfected won't reduce your equity in your home. So, if you are counting on a lien to bring your equity within the exemption amount for your state, make sure the lien has been perfected through recording and proper notarization.

Schedule B—Personal Property

Here you must list and evaluate all of your personal property, including property that is security for a debt and property that is exempt.

CAUTION

Be honest and thorough. When listing all of your stuff on a public document like Schedule B, you might feel tempted to cheat a little. Don't give in to the temptation to “forget” any of your assets. Bankruptcy law doesn't give you the right to decide that an asset isn't worth mentioning. Even if, for example, you've decided that your CD collection is worthless given the advent of the iPod, you still have to list it. You can explain on the form why you think it's worthless. If you omit something and get caught, your case can be dismissed—or your discharge revoked—leaving you with no bankruptcy relief for your current debts.

A completed sample of Schedule B and line-by-line instructions follow. If you need more room, use an attached continuation page, or create a continuation page yourself.

In re and Case No. Follow the instructions for Schedule A.

Type of Property. The form lists general categories of personal property. Leave this column as is.

None. If you own no property that fits in a category listed in the first column, enter an “X” in the “None” column. But make sure that you really don't own anything in this category.

Description and Location of Property. List specific items that fall in each general category.

CAUTION

Use the property's replacement value. The 2005 bankruptcy law requires you to use the property's replacement value—what it would cost to purchase the property from a retail vendor, given its age and condition—when estimating what it's worth.

Separately list all items worth $50 or more. Combine small items into larger categories whenever reasonable. For example, you don't need to list every spatula, colander, garlic press, and ice cream scoop; instead, put “kitchen cookware” (unless one of these items is worth more than $50). If you list numerous items in one category (as is likely for household goods and furnishings), you may need to attach a continuation sheet.

For each category of property listed, you must describe where it is located. If your personal property is at your residence, just enter “Residence” or your home address. If someone else holds property for you (for example, you loaned your aunt your color TV), put that person's name and address in this column. The idea is to tell the trustee where all your property is located.

Here are further instructions for filling in some of the blanks.

Items 1 and 2: Explain the source of any cash on hand or money in financial accounts—for example, from wages, Social Security payments, or child support. This will help you (and the trustee) decide later whether any of this money qualifies as exempt property.

Item 11: Although an education IRA and a qualified state tuition plan may technically not be part of the bankruptcy estate, list them here anyway. Also, you are required to file any records you have of these interests as an attachment to Schedule B.

Item 12: Although ERISA-qualified pension plans, IRAs, and 401(k)s may not be part of your bankruptcy estate, list them here anyway and describe each plan in detail. In the Current Value column, enter the value of the pension, if known.

Item 13: Include stock options.

SCHEDULE B - PERSONAL PROPERTY

Except as directed below, list all personal property of the debtor of whatever kind. If the debtor has no property in one or more of the categories, place an "x" in the appropriate position in the column labeled "None." If additional space is needed in any category, attach a separate sheet properly identified with the case name, case number, and the number of the category. If the debtor is married, state whether husband, wife, both, or the marital community own the property by placing an "H," "W," "J," or "C" in the column labeled "Husband, Wife, Joint, or Community." If the debtor is an individual or a joint petition is filed, state the amount of any exemptions claimed only in Schedule C - Property Claimed as Exempt.

Do not list interests in executory contracts and unexpired leases on this schedule. List them in Schedule G - Executory Contracts and Unexpired Leases.

If the property is being held for the debtor by someone else, state that person's name and address under "Description and Location of Property." If the property is being held for a minor child, simply state the child's initials and the name and address of the child's parent or guardian, such as "A.B., a minor child, by John Doe, guardian." Sheet 3 of 3 continuation sheets attached to the Schedule of Personal Property

(Report also on Summary of Schedules)

Item 16: If you are a sole proprietor or an independent contractor, you likely will be owed money by one or more of your customers. Specify each such debt by customer name, the reason for the debt, and the date the debt was incurred. These debts belong to your bankruptcy estate and may be used by the trustee to compute payments to your nonpriority, unsecured creditors under your plan unless you are able to claim them as exempt.

Item 17: List all child support or alimony arrears—that is, money that should have been paid to you but hasn't been. Specify the dates the payments were due and missed, such as “$250 monthly child support payments for June, July, August, and September 20xx.” Also list any debts owed you from a property settlement incurred in a divorce or dissolution.

Item 18: List all money owed to you and not yet paid, other than child support, alimony, and property settlements. If you've obtained a judgment against someone but haven't been paid, list it here. State the defendant's name, the date of the judgment, the court that issued the judgment, the amount of the judgment, and the kind of case (such as a car accident).

Item 19: An “equitable or future interest” means that sooner or later you will get property that is currently owned by someone else. Your expectation is legally recognized and valuable. For instance, if your parents' trust gives them the right to live in the family home, that's a “life estate.” If the trust gives you the home when they die, you have an “equitable interest” in the home while they're alive. “Powers exercisable for the benefit of the debtor” means that a person has been given the power to route property your way, but it hasn't happened by the time you file your bankruptcy petition. In sum, if it looks like property is coming your way eventually, and that property hasn't been listed in Schedule A, list it here.

Item 20: You have a contingent interest in property if, for example, you are named the remainder beneficiary of an irrevocable trust (a trust that can't be undone by the person who created it). It's contingent because you may or may not get anything from the trust—it all depends on whether there's anything left by the time it gets to you. A noncontingent interest means you will get the property sooner or later, for example, under the terms of an insurance policy. Also list here any wills or revocable living trusts that name you as a beneficiary.

Even though you don't have an absolute right to inherit under these documents (they can be changed at any time prior to the person's death), the trustee wants to know this information. An inheritance becomes part of your bankruptcy estate if the person dies within the six-month period following your bankruptcy filing date—and can result in your plan being modified to increase payments to your nonpriority unsecured creditors.

Item 21: List all claims that you have against others that might end up in a lawsuit. For instance, if you were recently rear-ended in an automobile accident and are struggling with whiplash, you may have a cause of action against the other driver (and that driver's insurer). If you fail to list this type of claim here, you might not be allowed to pursue it after bankruptcy.

Item 22: This question asks about assets commonly known as intellectual property. State what the patent, copyright, trademark, or the like is for. Give the number assigned by the issuing agency and length of time the patent, copyright, trademark, or other right will last. Keep in mind that both copyright and trademark rights may exist without going through a government agency. If you claim trademark rights through usage, or copyright through the fact that you created the item and reduced it to tangible form, describe them here.

Item 23: List all licenses and franchises, what they cover, the length of time remaining, who they are with, and whether you can transfer them to someone else.

Item 24: Describe customer lists or other compilations containing personally identifiable information that you obtained from people as part of providing them with consumer goods or services.

Items 25 through 27: Include the make, model, and year of each item.

Item 32: For your crops, list whether they've been harvested, whether they've been sold (and, if so, to whom and for how much), whether you've taken out any loan against them, and whether they are insured.

Husband, Wife, Joint, or Community. If you're not married, put “N/A” at the top of the column.

If you are married and live in a community property state, then property acquired during the marriage is community property and you should put “C” in this column. Gifts and inheritances received by one spouse are separate property, as is property a spouse owned prior to marriage or after separation. Identify this property with an “H” (for husband) or “W” (for wife), as appropriate.

If you live in any state that is not a community property state, write “J” if you own the property jointly with a spouse and “H” or “W” if a spouse owns that property as an individual.

Current Value of Debtor’s Interest in Property, Without Deducting any Secured Claim or Exemption. List the replacement value of the property, without regard to any secured interests or exemptions. For example, if you own a car with a replacement value of $6,000, you still owe $4,000 on the car note, and your state’s motor vehicle exemption is $1,200, put down $6,000 for the value of the car.

Total. Add the amounts in this column and put the total in the box at the bottom of the last page. If you used any continuation pages in addition to the preprinted form, remember to attach those pages and include the amounts from those pages in this total.

Schedule C—Property Claimed as Exempt

On this form, you claim all property you think is legally exempt. In most bankruptcies filed by individuals, all—or virtually all—of the debtor’s property is exempt. If, however, you have any property that is not exempt, you will have to pay your nonpriority, unsecured creditors at least what they would have received from the sale of this property if you had used Chapter 7 (see Ch. 5 for more information).

When you work on this form, you’ll need to refer frequently to several other documents. Have in front of you:

- your drafts of Schedules A and B
- the list of state or federal bankruptcy exemptions you’ll be using, provided in Appendix A, and
- if you’re using a state’s exemptions, the additional nonbankruptcy federal exemptions, provided in Appendix A.

Set out below is a sample completed Schedule C and line-by-line instructions.

Looking at the sample Schedule C exemptions, you might notice that a particular exemption can apply to more than one category of personal property from Schedule B. That’s because the exemption categories on Schedule B are set up by each state, but the property categories are determined by the feds, who also wrote Schedule B. As a result, the property and exemption categories don’t necessarily match up neatly. For example, the California “tools of the trade” exemption (see Appendix A) could apply to a number of the federal property categories on Schedule B, including Category 28 (Office equipment, furnishings, and supplies), Category 33 (Farming equipment and implements), Category 25 (Automobiles, trucks, trailers and other vehicles and accessories), and Category 5 (Books, and so on.).

Give Yourself the Benefit of the Doubt

When you claim exemptions, give yourself the benefit of the doubt—if an exemption seems to cover an item of property, claim it. You may find that you’re legally entitled to exempt much of the property you’re deeply attached to, such as your home, car, and family heirlooms.

When determining whether your proposed payments to your nonpriority unsecured creditors are sufficient, your trustee and possibly a creditor or two will examine your exemption claims. In close cases, bankruptcy laws require the trustee (and creditors) to honor rather than dishonor your exemption claims. In other words, you’re entitled to the benefit of the doubt.

If the trustee or a creditor successfully objects to an exemption claim, you’ve lost nothing by trying (except that you’ll have to modify your plan to increase your payments to your nonpriority unsecured creditors). See Ch. 11 for more on objections to claimed exemptions.

In re and Case No. Follow the instructions for Schedule A.

Debtor claims the exemptions to which debtor is entitled under. If you’re using the federal exemptions, check the top box. Everybody else, check the second box. See Ch. 5 for information on residency requirements for using a state’s exemptions and tips on how to choose between the federal and state exemption systems. As explained in Ch. 5, if you are living in a state that offers the federal exemption system, but you haven’t been there long enough to meet the two-year residency requirement for the state exemptions, you can choose the federal system (and check the top box on Schedule C).

SEE AN EXPERT

Property out of state. You'll generally choose the exemptions of the state you live in when you file as long as you've lived there for at least two years. If you want to protect your equity in property in a state other than the one you file in, see a lawyer.

Check if debtor claims a homestead exemption that exceeds $146,450. Check this box if:

- The exemptions of the state you are using allow a homestead of more than $146,450.
- You have more than $146,450 equity in your home.
- You acquired your home at least 40 months prior to your bankruptcy filing date.

If you didn't acquire your home at least 40 months before filing, and you didn't purchase it from the proceeds of selling a home in the same state, your homestead exemption may be capped at $146,450 regardless of the exemption available in the state where your home is located. See Ch. 5 for detailed information on the homestead exemption cap.

The following instructions cover one column at a time. But rather than listing all your exempt property in the first column and then completing the second column before moving on to the third column, you might find it easier to list one exempt item and complete all columns for that item before moving on to the next exempt item.

Description of Property. To describe the property you claim as exempt, take these steps:

- Step 1: Turn to Ch. 5 to find out which exemptions are available to you and which property to claim as exempt
- Step 2: Decide which of the real estate you listed on Schedule A, if any, you want to claim as exempt. Remember that state homestead allowances usually apply only to property you are living in when you file, but you can use a wildcard exemption for any type of property. Use the same description you used in the Description and Location of Property column of Schedule A.

Step 3: Decide which of the personal property you listed on Schedule B you want to claim as exempt. For each item identified, list both the category of property (preprinted in the Types of Property column) and the specific item, from the Description and Location of Property column. Do not include the location of the property. If the exemptions you are using apply to an entire category, such as clothing, simply list "clothing" as the item you are exempting.

Specify Law Providing Each Exemption. You'll find citations to the specific laws that create exemptions in the state and federal exemption lists in Appendix A. Remember to use the rules for choosing your exemptions explained in detail in Ch. 5.

You can simplify this process by entering the name of the statutes you are using at the top of the form. The name is noted at the top of the exemption list you use in Appendix A. For example, you might type "All law references are to the Florida Statutes Annotated unless otherwise noted."

For each item of property you are claiming as exempt, enter the citation (number) of the specific law that creates the exemption, as set out on the exemption list. If you are combining part or all of a wildcard exemption with a regular exemption, list both citations. If the wildcard and the regular exemption have the same citation, list the citation twice and put "wildcard" next to one of the citations. If you use any reference other than one found in the state statutes you are using, such as a federal nonbankruptcy exemption or a court case, list the entire reference for the exempt item.

Value of Claimed Exemption. Claim the full exemption amount allowed, up to the value of the item. The amount allowed is listed in Appendix A.

Bankruptcy law allows married couples to double all exemptions unless the state expressly prohibits it. That means that each of you can claim the entire amount of each exemption, if you are both filing. If your state's chart in Appendix A doesn't say your state forbids doubling, go ahead and double. You are entitled to double all federal exemptions, if you use them.

If you are using part or all of a wildcard exemption in addition to a regular exemption, list both amounts. For example, if the regular exemption for an item of furniture is $200, and you plan to exempt it to $500 using $300 from your state's wildcard exemption, list $200 across from the citation you listed for the regular exemption and $300 across from the citation you listed for the wildcard exemption (or across from the term "wildcard").

CAUTION

Don't claim more than you need for any particular item. For instance, if you're allowed household furniture up to a total amount of $2,000, don't inflate the value of each item of furniture simply to get to $2,000. Use the values as you stated them on Schedule B.

Current Value of Property Without Deducting Exemption.

Enter the current (replacement) value of the item you are claiming as exempt. For most items, this information is listed on Schedules A and B. However, if you listed the item as part of a group in Schedule B, list it separately here and assign it a separate replacement value.

Schedule D—Creditors Holding Secured Claims

In this schedule, you list all creditors who hold claims secured by your property. This includes:

- holders of a mortgage or deed of trust on your real estate
- creditors who have won lawsuits against you and recorded judgment liens against your property
- doctors or lawyers to whom you have granted a security interest in the outcome of a lawsuit, so that the collection of their fees would be postponed (the expected court judgment is the collateral)
- contractors who have filed mechanic's or materialman's liens on your real estate
- taxing authorities, such as the IRS, that have obtained tax liens against your property

- creditors with either a purchase-money or nonpurchase-money security agreement (see "Nature of Lien" below), and
- all parties who are trying to collect a secured debt, such as collection agencies and attorneys.

Credit Card Debts

Most credit card debts, including cards issued by a bank, gasoline company, or department store, are unsecured and should be listed on Schedule F. Some department stores, however, claim to retain a security interest in all durable goods, such as furniture, appliances, electronics equipment, and jewelry, bought using the store credit card. Also, if you were issued a bank or store credit card as part of a plan to restore your credit, you may have had to post property or cash as collateral for debts incurred on the card. If either of these exceptions apply to you, list the credit card debt on Schedule D.

Line-by-line instructions and a completed sample of Schedule D follow.

In re and Case No. Follow the instructions for Schedule A.

☐ Check this box if debtor has no creditors holding secured claims to report on this Schedule D. Check the box at the bottom of the schedule's instructions if you have no secured creditors, then skip ahead to Schedule E. Everyone else, keep reading.

Creditor's Name and Mailing Address Including Zip Code, and an Account Number. List all secured creditors, preferably in alphabetical order. For each, fill in the last four digits of the account number, if you know it; the creditor's name; and the complete mailing address, including zip code. As mentioned earlier, the mailing address should be the contact address shown on at least two written communications you received from the creditor during the previous 90 days. Call the creditor to get this information if you don't have it.

If you have more than one secured creditor for a given debt, list the original creditor first, followed by the other creditors. For example, if you've been sued or hounded by a collection agency, list the information for the collection agency after the original creditor.

If, after typing up your final papers, you discover that you've missed a few creditors, don't retype your papers to preserve perfect alphabetical order. Simply add the creditors at the end. Make as many copies of the preprinted continuation page as you need to list them all.

If the creditor is a child, list the child's initials and the name and address of the child's parent or guardian. For example, "A.B., a minor child, by John Doe, Guardian, 1111 Alabama Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94732." Don't state the child's name.

Codebtor. Someone who owes money with you probably isn't the first person you think of as your creditor. But if someone else agreed to cosign your loan, lease, or purchase, then creditors can still go after your codebtor, who will then look to you to cough up the money. As long as your Chapter 13 case is pending, however, no creditor may proceed in court against a codebtor—except in the circumstances explained in Ch. 2. If someone else (other than a spouse with whom you are filing jointly) could be legally forced to pay your debt to a listed secured creditor (outside of bankruptcy), enter an "X" in this column and list the codebtor in the creditor column of this schedule. You'll also need to list the codebtor as a creditor in Schedules F and H (explained below).

The most common codebtors are:

- cosigners
- guarantors (people who guarantee payment of a loan)
- ex-spouses with whom you jointly incurred debts before divorcing
- joint owners of real estate or other property
- coparties in a lawsuit
- nonfiling spouses in a community property state (most debts incurred in a community property state by a nonfiling spouse during marriage are considered community debts, making that spouse equally liable with the filing spouse for the debts), and
- nonfiling spouses in states other than community property states, for debts incurred by the filing spouse for basic living necessities such as food, shelter, clothing, and utilities.

Husband, Wife, Joint, or Community. Follow the instructions for Schedule A.

Date Claim Was Incurred, Nature of Lien, and Description and Value of Property Subject to Lien. This column calls for a lot of information for each secured debt. If you list two or more creditors on the same secured claim (such as the lender and a collection agency), simply put ditto marks (") in this column for the second creditor. Let's take these one at a time.

Date Claim Was Incurred. For most claims, the date the claim was incurred is the date you signed the security agreement. If you didn't sign a security agreement with the creditor, the date is most likely the date a contractor or judgment creditor recorded a lien against your property or the date a taxing authority notified you of a tax liability or an assessment of taxes due.

Nature of Lien. What kind of property interest does your secured creditor have? Here are the possible answers:

- First mortgage. You took out a loan to buy your house. (This is a specific kind of purchase-money security interest.)
- Purchase-money security interest. You took out a loan to purchase the property that secures the loan—for example, a car note. The creditor must have perfected the security interest by filing or recording it with the appropriate agency within 20 days. (Fidelity Financial Services, Inc. v. Fink, 522 U.S. 211 (1998).) Otherwise, the creditor has no lien and you should list the debt on Schedule F (unsecured debt) instead.
- Nonpossessory, nonpurchase-money security interest. You borrowed money for a purpose other than buying the collateral. This includes refinanced home loans, home equity loans, or loans from finance companies.
- Possessory, nonpurchase-money security interest. This is what a pawnshop owner has when you pawn your property.
- Judgment lien. This means someone sued you, won a court judgment, and recorded a lien against your property.
- Tax lien. This means a federal, state, or local government agency recorded a lien against your property for unpaid taxes.
- Child support lien. This means that another parent or government agency has recorded a lien against your property for unpaid child support.

State the name, mailing address, including zip code, and last four digits of any account number of all entities holding claims secured by property of the debtor as of the date of filing of the petition. The complete account number of any account the debtor has with the creditor is useful to the trustee and the creditor and may be provided if the debtor chooses to do so. List creditors holding all types of secured interests such as judgment liens, garnishments, statutory liens, mortgages, deeds of trust, and other security interests.

List creditors in alphabetical order to the extent practicable. If a minor child is a creditor, the child's initials and the name and address of the child's parent or guardian, such as "A.B., a minor child, by John Doe, guardian." Do not disclose the child's name. See, 11 U.S.C. §112 and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(m). If all secured creditors will not fit on this page, use the continuation sheet provided.

If any entity other than a spouse in a joint case may be jointly liable on a claim, place an "X" in the column labeled "Codebtor" include the entity on the appropriate schedule of creditors, and complete Schedule H - Codebtors. If a joint petition is filed, state whether the husband, wife, both of them, or the marital community may be liable on each claim by placing an "H", "W", "J", or "C" in the column labeled "Husband, Wife, Joint, or Community".

If the claim is contingent, place an "X" in the column labeled "Contingent". If the claim is unliquidated, place an "X" in the column labeled "Unliquidated". If the claim is disputed, place an "X" in the column labeled "Disputed". (You may need to place an "X" in more than one of these three columns.)

Total the columns labeled "Amount of Claim Without Deducting Value of Collateral" and "Unsecured Portion, if Any" in the boxes labeled "Total(s)" on the last sheet of the completed schedule. Report the total from the column labeled "Amount of Claim" also on the Summary of Schedules and, if the debtor is an individual with primarily consumer debts, report the total from the column labeled "Unsecured Portion" on the Statistical Summary of Certain Liabilities and Related Data.

☐ Check this box if debtor has no creditors holding secured claims to report on this Schedule D.

- Mechanic's or materialman's lien. This means someone performed work on your real property or personal property (for example, a car) but didn't get paid, and recorded a lien on that property. Such liens can be an unpleasant surprise if you paid for the work, but your contractor didn't pay a subcontractor who got a lien against your property.
- Unknown. If you don't know what kind of lien you are dealing with, put "Don't know nature of lien" after the date. The bankruptcy trustee can help you figure it out later.

Description of Property. Describe each item of real estate and personal property that is collateral for the secured debt listed in the first column. Use the same description you used on Schedule A for real property, or Schedule B for personal property. If a creditor's lien covers several items of property, list all items affected by the lien.

Value of Property. The amount you put here must be consistent with what you put on Schedule A or B. If you put only the total value of a group of items on Schedule B, you must now get more specific. For instance, if a department store has a secured claim against your washing machine, and you listed your "washer/dryer set" on Schedule B, now you must provide the washer's specific replacement value. You may have already done this on the Property Exemption Worksheet. If not, see the instructions for "Current Value" on Schedule B.

Contingent, Unliquidated, Disputed. Indicate whether the creditor's secured claim is contingent, unliquidated, or disputed. Check all categories that apply. If you're uncertain of which to choose, check the one that seems closest. If none apply, leave them blank. Briefly, these terms mean:

- Contingent. The claim depends on some event that hasn't yet occurred and may never occur. For example, if you cosigned a secured loan, you won't be liable unless the principal debtor defaults. Your liability as cosigner is contingent upon the default.
- Unliquidated. This means that a debt may exist, but the exact amount hasn't been determined. For example, say you've sued someone for injuries you suffered in an auto accident, but the case isn't over. Your lawyer has taken the case under a contingency fee agreement—he'll get a third of the recovery if you win, and nothing if you lose—and has a security interest in the final recovery amount. The debt to the lawyer is unliquidated because you don't know how much, if anything, you'll win.

- Disputed. A claim is disputed if you and the creditor do not agree about the existence or amount of the debt. For instance, suppose the IRS says you owe $10,000 and has put a lien on your property, and you say you owe $500. List the full amount of the lien, not the amount you think you owe.

TIP

You're not admitting you owe the debt. You may think you don't really owe a contingent, unliquidated, or disputed debt, or you may not want to "admit" that you owe the debt. By listing a debt here, however, you aren't admitting anything. Instead, you are making sure that, if you owe the debt after all, it will be discharged in your bankruptcy (if it is dischargeable).

Amount of Claim Without Deducting Value of Collateral.

For each secured creditor, list the amount it would take to pay off the secured claim, regardless of what the property is worth. The lender can give you this figure. In some cases, the amount of the secured claim may be more than the property's value.

EXAMPLE: Your original loan was for $13,000, plus $7,000 in interest (for $20,000 total). You've made enough payments so that $15,000 will cancel the debt. You would put $15,000 in this column.

If you have more than one creditor for a given secured claim (for example, the lender and a collection agency), list the debt only for the lender and put ditto marks (") for each subsequent creditor.

Subtotal/Total. Total the amounts in the Amount of Claim column for each page. Do not include the amounts represented by the ditto marks if you listed multiple creditors for a single debt. On the final page of Schedule D, which may be the first page or a pre-printed continuation page, enter the total of all secured claims.

Unsecured Portion, If Any. If the replacement value of the collateral is equal to or greater than the amount of the claim, enter “0,” meaning that the creditor’s claim is fully secured. If the replacement value of the collateral is less than the amount of the claim(s) listed, enter the difference here.

EXAMPLE: If the current value of your car is $5,000 but you still owe $6,000 on your car loan, enter $1,000 in this column ($6,000 – $5,000). This is the amount of the loan that is unsecured by the collateral (your car).

If you list an amount in this column for a creditor, do not list this amount again on Schedule F (where you will list all other creditors with unsecured claims). Otherwise, this unsecured amount will be listed twice.

Schedule E—Creditors Holding Unsecured Priority Claims

Schedule E identifies certain creditors who—with the exception of child support claims assigned to a government agency—are entitled to be paid in full in your Chapter 13 case.

Set out below are a sample completed Schedule E and line-by-line instructions.

In re and Case No. Follow the instructions for Schedule A.

☐ Check this box if debtor has no creditors holding unsecured priority claims to report on this Schedule E. Except for child support claims owed to a government agency, priority claims must be paid in full in your Chapter 13 plan. The most common examples are unsecured nondischargeable income tax debts and past due alimony or child support owed to an ex-spouse or child. There are several other categories of priority debts, however. Read further to figure out whether or not you can check this box.

Types of Priority Claims. These are the categories of priority debts, as listed on Schedule E. Check the appropriate box on the form if you owe a debt in that category.

☐ Domestic support obligations. Check this box for claims for domestic support that you owe to, or that are recoverable by, a spouse, former spouse, or child; the parent, legal guardian, or responsible relative of such a child; or a governmental unit to whom such a domestic support claim has been assigned.

☐ Extensions of credit in an involuntary case. Don’t check this box. You are filing a voluntary, not an involuntary, case.

☐ Wages, salaries, and commissions. If you own a business and owe a current or former employee wages, vacation pay, or sick leave that was earned within 180 days before you file your petition or within 180 days of the date you ceased your business, check this box. If you owe money to an independent contractor who did work for you, and the money was earned within 180 days before you file your petition or within 180 days of the date you ceased your business, check this box only if, in the 12 months before you file for bankruptcy, this independent contractor earned at least 75% of his or her total independent contractor receipts from you. Only the first $11,725 owed per employee or independent contractor is a priority debt.

☐ Contributions to employee benefit plans. Check this box if you own a business and you owe contributions to an employee benefit fund for services rendered by an employee within 180 days before you file your petition, or within 180 days of the date you ceased your business.

☐ Certain farmers and fishermen. Check this box only if you operate or operated a grain storage facility and owe a grain producer, or you operate or operated a fish produce or storage facility and owe a U.S. fisherman for fish or fish products. Only the first $5,775 owed per person is a priority debt.

☐ Deposits by individuals. If you took money from people who planned to purchase, lease, or rent goods or services from you that you never delivered, you may owe a priority debt. For the debt to qualify as a priority, the goods or services had to have been planned for personal, family, or household use. Only the first $2,600 owed (per person) is a priority debt.

☐ Taxes and certain other debts owed to governmental units. Check this box if you owe unsecured back taxes or if you owe any other debts to the government, such as fines imposed for driving under the influence of drugs or alcohol. Not all tax debts are unsecured priority claims. For example, if the IRS has recorded a lien against your real property, and the equity in your property fully covers the amount of your tax debt, your debt is a secured debt. It should be on Schedule D, not on this schedule. And if the debt is dischargeable, it should be listed on Schedule F.

☐ Commitments to maintain the capital of an insured depository institution. Don't check this box. It is for business bankruptcies.

☐ Claims for death or personal injury while debtor was intoxicated. Check this box if there are claims against you for death or personal injury resulting from your operation of a motor vehicle or vessel while intoxicated from using alcohol, a drug, or another substance. This priority doesn't apply to property damage—only to personal injury or death.

If you didn't check any of the priority debt boxes, go back and check the first box, showing you have no unsecured priority claims to report. Then go on to Schedule F.

If you checked any of the priority debt boxes, make as many photocopies of the continuation page as the number of priority debt boxes you checked. You will need to complete a separate sheet for each type of priority debt, as follows:

In re and Case No. Follow the instructions for Schedule A.

Type of Priority. Insert the category for one of the boxes you checked (for example, "Domestic Support Obligations").

Creditor's Name, and Mailing Address Including Zip Code, and Account Number. List the name and complete mailing address (including zip code) of each priority creditor, as well as the account number, if you know it. The address should be the one provided by the creditor in two written communications you have received from the creditor within the past 90 days, if possible. You may have more than one priority creditor for a given debt. For example, if you've been sued or hounded by a collection agency, list the collection agency in addition to the original creditor.

If the creditor is a child, list the child's initials and the name and address of the child's parent or guardian. For example, "A.B., a minor child, by John Doe, Guardian, 1111 Alabama Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94732." Don't state the child's name.

Codebtor. If someone else can be legally forced to pay your debt to a priority creditor, enter an "X" in this column and list the codebtor in the creditor column of this schedule. You'll also need to list the codebtor as a creditor in Schedule F and Schedule H. Common codebtors are listed in the instructions for Schedule D.

Husband, Wife, Joint, or Community. Follow the instructions for Schedule A.

Date Claim Was Incurred and Consideration for Claim.

State the date you incurred the debt—this may be a specific date or a period of time. Also briefly state what the debt is for. For example, "goods purchased," "hours worked for me," or "deposit for my services."

Contingent, Unliquidated, Disputed. Follow the instructions for Schedule D.

Amount of Claim. For each priority debt other than taxes, list the amount it would take to pay off the debt in full, even if it's more than the priority limit. For taxes, list only the amount that is unsecured and non-dischargeable (and therefore a priority). You should list the secured amount on Schedule D. If the amount isn't determined, write "not yet determined" in this column. If you owe some back child support to a child or an ex-spouse and other support to a government agency, state the amounts separately. As mentioned, your plan will have to propose 100% payment of the amount you owe to a child or an ex-spouse, but can propose less than 100% payment of support owed to a government agency.

Subtotal/Total. Total the amounts in the Amount of Claim column on each page. If you use continuation pages for additional priority debts, enter the total of all priority debts on the final page.

Amount Entitled to Priority. If the priority claim is larger than the maximum indicated on the first two pages of Schedule E (for example, $11,725 of wages owed to each employee), put the maximum here. If the claim is less than the maximum, put the amount you entered in the Total Amount of Priority column here.

Amount Not Entitled to Priority, If Any. If you owe more than the maximum for any of the priority debts listed on the first two pages of Schedule E, list the excess amount here. For example, the maximum for wages owed to employees is $11,725. If you owe former employees $12,000, you should list $275—the amount by which your debt exceeds the maximum—here.

 Schedule of Creditors Holding Unsecured Priority Claims

Schedule F—Creditors Holding Unsecured Nonpriority Claims

In this schedule, list all creditors you haven't listed in Schedules D or E. You should include even debts that are or may be nondischargeable, such as a student loan. Even if you believe that you don't owe the debt or you owe only a small amount and intend to pay it off, you must include it here. It's essential that you list every creditor to whom you owe, or possibly owe, money. The only way you can legitimately leave off a creditor is if your balance owed is $0.

EXAMPLE: Peter owes his favorite aunt $8,000. Peter files for bankruptcy and lists the debt, which will be discharged when Peter's bankruptcy is over. Peter didn't want to list the debt but he's required to list all of his creditors, even relatives. Although Peter would like to repay his aunt after he files for bankruptcy, he probably won't have enough money because his plan must devote all of his disposable income to repaying his unsecured, nonpriority creditors. Even if Peter gets a raise, the trustee will likely request a modification requiring the extra money to be paid into the plan. In other words until Peter's Chapter 13 bankruptcy plan is completed, he probably won't be able to repay the debt.

Inadvertent errors or omissions on this schedule can come back to haunt you. If you don't list a debt you owe to a creditor, it won't be discharged in your Chapter 13 bankruptcy. Also, leaving a creditor off the schedule might raise suspicions that you deliberately concealed information, perhaps to give that creditor preferential treatment in violation of bankruptcy rules.

Below are a sample completed Schedule F and line-by-line instructions. Use as many preprinted continuation pages as you need.

In re and Case No. Follow the instructions for Schedule A.

☐ Check this box if debtor has no creditors holding unsecured claims to report on this Schedule F. Check this box if you have no unsecured nonpriority debts. This would be very rare.

Creditor's Name, Mailing Address Including Zip Code, and Account Number. List, preferably in alphabetical order, the name and complete mailing address of each unsecured creditor, as well as the account number (if you know it). If you have more than one unsecured creditor for a given debt, list the original creditor first, followed by the other creditors. For example, for a particular debt, you might have the name, address, and account number for the original creditor, a collection agency run by the original creditor, an independent collection agency, an attorney debt collector, and an attorney who has sued you.

It's best to list all the creditors, because it never hurts to be thorough. But you could omit the intermediate collectors and just list the original creditor and the latest collector or attorney. Or, if you no longer have contact information for the original creditor, listing the latest collector will do.

When you are typing your final papers, if you get to the end and discover that you left a creditor off, don't start all over again in search of perfect alphabetical order. Just add the creditor to the end of the list.

Creditors That Are Often Overlooked

One debt may involve several different creditors.

Remember to include:

- your ex-spouse, if you are still obligated under a divorce decree or settlement agreement to pay joint debts, turn any property over to your ex, or make payments as part of your property division
- anyone who has cosigned a promissory note or loan application you signed
- any holder of a loan or promissory note that you cosigned for someone else
- the original creditor, anybody to whom the debt has been assigned or sold, and any other person (such as a bill collector or attorney) trying to collect the debt, and
- anyone who might sue you in the future because of a car accident, business dispute, or the like.

Codebtor. If someone else can be legally forced to pay your debt to a listed unsecured creditor, enter an "X" in this column and list the codebtor as a creditor in this schedule. Also list the codebtor in Schedule H. The instructions for Schedule D list common codebtors.

Husband, Wife, Joint, or Community. Follow the instructions for Schedule A.

SCHEDULE F - CREDITORS HOLDING UNSECURED NONPRIORITY CLAIMS

State the name, mailing address, including zip code, and last four digits of any account number, of all entities holding unsecured claims without priority against the debtor or the property of the debtor, as of the date of filing of the petition. The complete account number of any account the debtor has with the creditor is useful to the trustee and the creditor and may be provided if the debtor chooses to do so. If a minor child is a creditor, state the child's initials and the name and address of the child's parent or guardian, such as "A.B., a minor child, by John Doe, guardian." Do not disclose the child's name. See, 11 U.S.C. §112 and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(m). Do not include claims listed in Schedules D and E. If all creditors will not fit on this page, use the continuation sheet provided.

If any entity other than a spouse in a joint case may be jointly liable on a claim, place an "X" in the column labeled "Codebtor," include the entity on the appropriate schedule of creditors, and complete Schedule H - Codebtors. If a joint petition is filed, state whether the husband, wife, both of them, or the marital community may be liable on each claim by placing an "H," "W," "J," or "C" in the column labeled "Husband, Wife, Joint, or Community."

If the claim is contingent, place an "X" in the column labeled "Contingent." If the claim is unliquidated, place an "X" in the column labeled "Unliquidated." If the claim is disputed, place an "X" in the column labeled "Disputed." (You may need to place an "X" in more than one of these three columns.)

Report the total of all claims listed on this schedule in the box labeled "Total" on the last sheet of the completed schedule. Sheet no. 2 of 2 sheets attached to Schedule of Creditors Holding Unsecured Nonpriority Claims

Date Claim Was Incurred and Consideration for Claim.

If Claim Is Subject to Setoff, So State. State when the debt was incurred. It may be one date or a period of time. With credit card debts, put the approximate time over which you ran up the charges, unless the unpaid charges were made on one or two specific dates. Then state what the debt was for. You can be general (“clothes” or “household furnishings”) or specific (“refrigerator” or “teeth capping”).

If you are entitled to a setoff against the debt—that is, the creditor owes you some money, too—list the amount and why you think you are entitled to the setoff. If there is more than one creditor for a single debt, put ditto marks (") in this column for the subsequent creditors.

Contingent, Unliquidated, Disputed. Follow the instructions for Schedule D.

Amount of Claim. List the amount of the debt claimed by the creditor, even if you dispute the amount. That way, it will all be wiped out if it's dischargeable. If there's more than one creditor for a single debt, put the debt amount across from the original creditor and put ditto marks (") across from each subsequent creditor you have listed. Be as precise as possible when stating the amount. If you must approximate, write “approx.” after the amount.

Subtotal/Total. Total the amounts in the last column for this page. Do not include the amounts represented by the ditto marks if you listed multiple creditors for a single debt. On the final page (which may be the first page or a preprinted continuation page), enter the total of all unsecured, nonpriority claims. On the first page in the bottom left-hand corner, note the number of continuation pages you are attaching.

Schedule G—Executory Contracts and Unexpired Leases

In this form, you list every executory contract or unexpired lease to which you're a party. “Executory” means the contract is still in force—that is, both parties are still obligated to perform important acts under it. Similarly, “unexpired” means that the contract or lease period hasn't run out—that is, it is still in effect. Common examples of executory contracts and unexpired leases are:

- car leases
- residential leases or rental agreements
- business leases or rental agreements
- service contracts
- business contracts
- time-share contracts or leases
- contracts of sale for real estate
- personal property leases, such as equipment used in a beauty salon
- copyright and patent license agreements
- leases of real estate (surface and underground) for the purpose of harvesting timber, minerals, or oil
- future homeowners' association fee requirements
- agreements for boat docking privileges, and
- insurance contracts.

CAUTION

If you're behind in your payments. If you are not current on payments that were due under a lease or executory contract, the delinquency should also be listed as a debt on Schedule D, E, or F. The sole purpose of this schedule is to identify existing contractual obligations that you still owe or that someone owes you.

Below are a sample completed Schedule G and line-by-line instructions.

☐ Check this box if debtor has no executory contracts or unexpired leases. Check this box if it applies; otherwise, complete the form.

Name and Mailing Address, Including Zip Code, of Other Parties to Lease or Contract. Provide the name and full address (including zip code) of each party—other than yourself—to each lease or contract. These parties are either people who signed agreements or the companies for whom these people work. If you're unsure about whom to list, include the person who signed an agreement, any company whose name appears on the agreement, and anybody who might have an interest in having the contract or lease enforced. If you still aren't sure, put “don't know.”

Description of Contract or Lease and Nature of Debtor's Interest. For each lease or contract, give:

SCHEDULE G - EXECUTORY CONTRACTS AND UNEXPIRED LEASES

Describe all executory contracts of any nature and all unexpired leases of real or personal property. Include any timeshare interests. State nature of debtor's interest in contract, i.e., "Purchaser", "Agent", etc. State whether debtor is the lessor or lessee of a lease. Provide the names and complete mailing addresses of all other parties to each lease or contract described. If a minor child is a party to one of the leases or contracts, state the child's initials and the name and address of the child's parent or guardian, such as "A.B., a minor child, by John Doe, guardian." Do not disclose the child's name. See, 11 U.S.C. §112 and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(m).

- a description of the basic type (for instance, residential lease, commercial lease, car lease, business obligation, or copyright license)
- the date the contract or lease was signed
- the date the contract is to expire (if any)
- a summary of each party's rights and obligations under the lease or contract, and
- the contract number, if the contract is with any government body.

What Happens to Executory Contracts and Unexpired Leases in Chapter 13 Bankruptcy

The trustee has until the confirmation hearing on your plan (see Ch. 10) to decide whether an executory contract or unexpired lease should be assumed (continued in force) as property of the estate or terminated (rejected). As a general matter, most leases and contracts are liabilities and are rejected by the trustee.

If the trustee rejects the contract or lease, you can assume or reject the contract or lease in your Chapter 13 plan. If your plan rejects the lease or contract, you and the other parties to the agreement are cut loose from any obligations, and any money you owe the creditor will be treated as an unsecured debt in your plan, even if the debt arose after your filing date. For example, say you are leasing a car when you file for bankruptcy. You want out of the lease. The car dealer cannot repossess the car until the trustee rejects the lease, or you reject the lease in your plan. During that period, you can use the car without paying for it (although you will have to make “adequate protection” payments equal to your monthly payments, unless you have sufficient equity in the car to cover the value it will lose in depreciation while you’re using it; see In re Singer, 368 B.R. 435 (E.D. Pa. 2007)). The payments you don’t make during this period will be treated as an unsecured debt just as if they were incurred prior to your bankruptcy.

Bankruptcy law has special rules for executory contracts related to intellectual property (copyrights, patents, trademarks, or trade secrets), real estate, and time-share leases. If you are involved in one of these situations, see a lawyer.

Schedule H—Codebtors

In Schedules D, E, and F, you identified those debts for which you have codebtors—usually, a cosigner, guarantor, an ex-spouse, a nonfiling spouse in a community property state, nonfiling spouse for a debt for necessities, nonmarital partner, or joint contractor. You must also list those codebtors here. In addition, you must list the name and address of any spouse or former spouse who lived with you in Puerto Rico or in a community property state during the eight-year period immediately preceding your bankruptcy filing. (To remind you, the community property states are Alaska, Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas, Washington, and Wisconsin.) If you are married but filing separately, include all names used by your spouse during the eight-year period.

In Chapter 13 bankruptcy, your codebtors will be responsible for whatever portion of the debts are left after you complete your plan. For instance if the debt they cosigned on is $2,000, and you pay 50% of the debt in your Chapter 13 bankruptcy, they will be responsible for the remaining $1,000.

Below are a sample completed Schedule H and line-by-line instructions.

In re and Case No. Follow the instructions for Schedule A.

☐ Check this box if debtor has no codebtors. Check this box if it applies; otherwise, complete the form.

Name and Address of Codebtor. List the name and complete address (including zip code) of each codebtor. If the codebtor is a nonfiling, current spouse, put all names by which that person was known during the previous eight years.

If the creditor is a child, list the child’s initials and the name and address of the child’s parent or guardian. For example, “A.B., a minor child, by John Doe, Guardian, 1111 Alabama Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94732.” Don’t state the child’s name.

Name and Address of Creditor. List the name and address of each creditor (as listed on Schedule D, E, or F) to which each codebtor is indebted.

SCHEDULE H - CODEBTORS

Provide the information requested concerning any person or entity, other than a spouse in a joint case, that is also liable on any debts listed by debtor in the schedules of creditors. Include all guarantors and co-signers. If the debtor resides or resided in a community property state, commonwealth, or territory (including Alaska, Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Puerto Rico, Texas, Washington, or Wisconsin) within the eight year period immediately preceding the commencement of the case, identify the name of the debtor's spouse and of any former spouse who resides or resided with the debtor in the community property state, commonwealth, or territory. Include all names used by the nondebtor spouse during the eight years immediately preceding the commencement of this case. If a minor child is a codebtor or a creditor, state the child's initials and the name and address of the child's parent or guardian, such as "A.B., a minor child, by John Doe, guardian." Do not disclose the child's name. See, 11 U.S.C. §112 and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(m).

☐ Check this box if debtor has no codebtors.

first column, Mabel lists Tom Martin as a codebtor. In the second, Mabel lists each of the three banks.

MARRIED FILERS

If you are married and filing alone. If you live in a community property state, your spouse may be a codebtor for most of the debts you listed in Schedules D, E, and F. This is because, in these states, most debts incurred by one spouse are owed by both spouses. In this event, don't relist all the creditors in the second column. Simply write "all creditors listed in Schedules D, E, and F, except:" and then list any creditors whom you owe alone.

If you lived with a former spouse in a community property state or Puerto Rico in the eight-year period prior to filing, list his or her name and address.

Schedule I—Current Income of Individual Debtor(s)

In this schedule, you calculate your actual current income (not your average monthly income in the six months before you file, which you calculated in Form 22C in Ch. 4).

Directly below are a sample completed Schedule I and line-by-line instructions. If you're married, you must fill in information for both spouses even if you are filing alone. If you are separated, however, you can leave the "Spouse" column blank.

In re and Case No. Follow the instructions for Schedule A.

Debtor's Marital Status. Enter your marital status. Your choices are single, married, separated (you aren't living with your spouse and plan never to again), widowed, or divorced. You are divorced only if you have received a final judgment of divorce from a court.

Dependents of Debtor and Spouse. List all people, according to their relationship with you (son, daughter, and so on), for whom you and your spouse provide at least 50% of support. There is no need to list their names. This list may include your children, your spouse's children, your parents, other relatives, and domestic partners. It does not include your spouse.

Employment. Provide the requested employment information. If you have more than one employer, enter "See continuation sheet" just below the box containing the employment information, then complete a continuation sheet. If you are retired, unemployed, or disabled, enter that in the blank for "occupation."

Income. Enter your estimated monthly gross income from your current employment, before any payroll deductions are taken. In the second blank, put your estimated monthly overtime pay. Add them together and enter the subtotal in the third blank.

Three Different Income Figures

The bankruptcy law that went into effect in October 2005 produces a number of strange results. One of these is that you will report three different income figures—the "current monthly income" figure in Form 22C, the actual income you report here, and the annual income figures you report in your Statement of Financial Affairs (see below).

Schedule I explicitly states that the income you report there will likely be different from what you report as your current monthly income on Form 22C (see Ch. 5). That's because the income you report on Form 22C is your average gross income for the six months before you file, but the income you report here is the actual net income you expect to be receiving every month going forward. If, for example, you lost your job a couple of months ago and are now working for a far lesser wage, your income will be less than it was on Form 22C.

Courts are divided on whether to use the income you report on Schedule I or on Form 22C to determine how much you have to pay into your Chapter 13 plan. The law seems to say that a filer whose income exceeds the state median must use the figures from Form 22C, but some judges think that it makes no sense to base your plan on income that you might not have anymore, especially because you already have to provide up-to-date figures on Schedule I. The U.S. Supreme Court is scheduled to decide this issue in 2010, in a case called In re Lanning. Stay tuned.

17. Describe any increase or decrease in income reasonably anticipated to occur within the year following the filing of this document:

Wages are being reduced and I will probably be making $100 a month less than is currently the case.

CAUTION

Make sure the numbers add up. As you juggle these income and deduction numbers, remember that you need to use a monthly amount. This means you may need to convert the numbers on your pay stub or other documents if you're paid weekly, every two weeks, or twice a month:

- If you are paid weekly, multiply the weekly figure by 4.3.
- If you are paid every two weeks, divide the payment by 2 and multiply by 4.3.
- If you are paid twice a month, multiply the payment by 2.

Item 4: Less Payroll Deductions. In the four blanks, enter the deductions taken from your gross salary. The deductions listed are the most common ones, but you may have others to report. Other possible deductions are state disability taxes, wages withheld or garnished for child support, credit union payments, or perhaps payments on a student loan or a car.

Item 5: Subtotal of Payroll Deductions. Add your payroll deductions and enter the subtotal.

Item 6: Total Net Monthly Take Home Pay. Subtract your payroll deductions subtotal from your income subtotal.

Item 7: Regular income from operation of business or profession or farm. If you are self-employed or operate a sole proprietorship, enter your monthly gross receipts from that source here. If it's been fairly steady for at least one calendar year, divide the amount you entered on your most recent tax return (IRS Schedule C: Profit or Loss From Business) by 12 for a monthly amount. If your income hasn't been steady for at least one calendar year, enter the average monthly gross receipts from your business or profession over the past three months. In either case, you must attach a detailed statement of your income and expenses (you can use your IRS Schedule C).

Item 8: Income from real property. Enter your net monthly income from real estate rentals, leases, or licenses (such as mineral exploration, oil, and the like).

Item 9: Interest and dividends. Enter the average estimated monthly interest you receive from bank or security deposits and other investments, such as stocks.

Item 10: Alimony, maintenance or support payments payable to the debtor for the debtor's use or that of dependents listed above. Enter the average monthly amount you receive for your support (alimony, spousal support, or maintenance) or for your children (child support).

Item 11: Social Security or government assistance. Enter the total monthly amount you receive in Social Security, SSI, public assistance, disability payments, veterans' benefits, unemployment compensation, workers' compensation, or any other government benefit. If you receive food stamps, include their monthly value. Specify the source of the benefits. Although you don't have to report Social Security benefits on Form 22C, you do have to include it here—and some courts may consider it in determining how much you have to pay into your Chapter 13 plan every month.

Item 12: Pension or retirement income. Enter the total monthly amount of all pension, annuity, IRA, 401(k), or other retirement benefits you currently receive.

Item 13: Other monthly income. Specify any other income (such as royalty payments or payments from a trust) you receive on a regular basis, and enter the monthly amount here. You may have to divide by three, six, or 12 if you receive the payments quarterly, semiannually, or annually.

Item 14: Subtotal of Lines 7 through 13. Add up your additional income (Items 7 through 13).

Item 15: Average Monthly Income. Combine Items 6 and 14.

Item 16: Combined Average Monthly Income. If you are filing jointly, add your total income to your spouse's total income and enter the result here.

Item 17: Describe any increase or decrease in income reasonably anticipated to occur within the year following the filing of this document. As we have emphasized, courts are currently split on whether the income figures on this form or on Form 22C will determine your Chapter 13 plan payment. If it appears that your income will increase in the next year, your plan payment might be larger than it would be if it were based on Form 22C (which calculates your income for the previous six months). Once the Supreme Court decides this issue, we'll post an update at www.nolo.com.

Schedule J—Current Expenditures of Individual Debtor(s)

You already completed a modified Schedule J in Ch. 5 if your current monthly income is below your state's median income. However, if your current monthly income is above your state's median income, you completed a different form in Ch. 5—Form 22C. Be consistent on your forms. Bankruptcy thrives on consistency. If you list certain expenses in Form 22C and list different amounts for the same items in your Schedule J, the bankruptcy trustee will likely want an explanation of the discrepancies. For instance, if you list $500 for charitable contributions in Form 22C and $1,000 for charitable contributions on your Schedule J, the trustee will want to know which one is correct—and might also take a closer look at your other entries. Before you sign your bankruptcy papers, make sure your entries are consistent—and, needless to say, correct.

Name of Schedule. This lists the schedules. Don't add anything.

Attached (Yes/No). You should have completed all of the schedules, so type "Yes" in this column for each schedule, even if you added no information.

No. of Sheets. Enter the number of pages you completed for each schedule. Remember to count continuation pages. Enter the total at the bottom of the column.

Amounts Scheduled. For each column—Assets, Liabilities, and Other—copy the totals from Schedules A, B, D, E, F, I, and J and enter them where indicated. Add up the amounts in the Assets and Liabilities columns and enter their totals at the bottom. (Once you've completed this form, you can go back and fill in the "Statistical/Administrative Information" section on Form 1—Voluntary Petition.)

Statistical Summary of Certain Liabilities. The second page of the summary sheet asks you to list the amounts of particular types of debts, including child support, student loans, and loans from a pension plan. Fill in the requested amounts.

Declaration Concerning Debtor's Schedules

In this form, you are required to swear that everything you have said on your schedules is true and correct.

Deliberate lying is a major sin in bankruptcy and could cost you your bankruptcy discharge, a fine of up to $500,000, and up to five years in prison.

In re, Case No. and Chapter. Follow the instructions for Schedule A.

Declaration Under Penalty of Perjury by Individual Debtor. Enter the total number of pages in your schedules (the number on the Summary plus one). Enter the date and sign the form. Be sure that your spouse signs and dates the form if you are filing jointly.

Certification and Signature of Non-Attorney Bankruptcy Petition Preparer. If a BPP typed your forms, have that person complete this section. Otherwise, type "N/A" anywhere in the box.

Declaration Under Penalty of Perjury on Behalf of Corporation or Partnership. Enter "N/A" anywhere in this blank.

Form 7—Statement of Financial Affairs

This form gives information about your recent financial transactions, such as payments to creditors, sales, or other transfers of property and gifts. Under certain circumstances, the trustee may be entitled to take back property that you transferred to others prior to filing for bankruptcy and sell it for the benefit of your unsecured creditors. This rarely happens in Chapter 13 cases, however, unless your plan proposes to pay your nonpriority, unsecured creditors only a small percentage of what you owe them.

The questions on the form are, for the most part, self-explanatory. Spouses filing jointly combine their answers and complete only one form.

If you have no information for a particular item, check the "None" box. If you fail to answer a question and don't check "None," you will have to amend your papers—that is, file a corrected form—after you file. Add continuation sheets, if necessary.

CAUTION

Be honest and complete. Don't give in to the temptation to leave out a transfer or two, assuming that the trustee won't find or go after the property. You must sign this form under penalty of perjury. And, if the trustee or a creditor discovers that you left information out, your bankruptcy will probably be dismissed and you may be prosecuted.

18 U.S.C. §§ 152 and 3571.

A completed Statement of Financial Affairs and instructions follows.

Court Name. Copy this information from Form 1—Voluntary Petition.

In re, Case No. and Chapter. Follow the instructions for Schedule A.

1. Income from employment or operation of business.

Enter your gross income for this year and for the previous two years. This means the total income before taxes and other payroll deductions or business expenses are removed.

2. Income other than from employment or operation of business. Include interest, dividends, royalties, workers' compensation, other government benefits, and all other money you have received from sources other than your job or business during the last two years. Provide the source of each amount, the dates received, and the reason you received the money so that the trustee can verify it if he or she desires.

Make sure the amounts provided here are consistent with the income disclosed on the tax return you provided to the trustee. For example, if you claim $25,000 gross income for the previous year on this form, your tax return for that year should list the same figure.

3. Payments to creditors. Here you list payments you've recently made to creditors. There are two kinds of creditors: regular creditors and insiders. An insider—defined on the first page of the Statement of Financial Affairs—is essentially a relative or close business associate. All other creditors are regular creditors.

a. Individual or joint debtor(s) with primarily consumer debts. List payments made to a regular creditor that total more than $600, if a payment was made:

- to repay a loan, installment purchase, or other debt
- during the 90 days before you file your bankruptcy petition.

If you have made payments exceeding $600 during that 90-day period to satisfy a domestic support obligation (child support or alimony), identify that payment with an asterisk. Include payments as part of a creditor repayment plan negotiated by an approved budget and credit counseling agency.

b. Debtor whose debts are not primarily consumer debts.

If your debts are primarily business debts, list all payments or other transfers made to a creditor within 90 days of filing regarding property that is worth $5,850 or more.

c. All debtors. List all payments or other transfers made to an insider creditor, if the payments or transfers were made within one year before you file your bankruptcy petition. Include alimony and child support payments.

The purpose of these questions is to find out whether you have preferred any creditor over others. If you have paid a regular creditor during the 90 days before you file, or an insider during the year before you file, the value of the payment will be part of your bankruptcy estate and will not be considered exempt. Rather, you will have to pay your unsecured creditors at least the value of the amount you paid to these creditors before you filed for bankruptcy. Exceptions to this rule are payments you made toward a domestic support obligation (child support or alimony) or payments you made under an alternative repayment schedule arranged by an approved nonprofit budget and credit counseling agency.

4. Suits and administrative proceedings, executions, garnishments and attachments.

a. Include all court actions that you are currently involved in or that you were involved in during the year before filing. Court actions include personal injury cases, small claims actions, contract disputes, divorces, paternity actions, support or custody modification actions, and the like. Include:

- Caption of the suit and case number. The caption is the case title (such as Molly Maytag v. Ginny Jones). The case number is assigned by the court clerk and appears on the first page of any court-filed paper.
- Nature of proceeding. A phrase, or even a one-word description, is sufficient. For example, "suit by debtor for compensation for damages to debtor's car caused by accident," or "divorce."
- Court or agency and location. This information is on any summons you received or prepared.
- Status or disposition. State whether the case is awaiting trial, is pending a decision, is on appeal, or has ended.

- b. If, at any time during the year before you file for bankruptcy, your wages, real estate, or personal property was taken from you under the authority of a court order to pay a debt, enter the requested information. If you don't know the exact date, put "on or about" the approximate date.

5. Repossessions, foreclosures and returns. If, at any time during the year before you file for bankruptcy, a creditor repossessed or foreclosed on property you had bought and were making payments on, or had pledged as collateral for a loan, give the requested information. For instance, if your car, boat, or video equipment was repossessed because you defaulted on your payments, describe it here. Also, if you voluntarily returned property to a creditor because you couldn't keep up the payments, enter that here.

6. Assignments and receiverships.

- a. If, at any time during the 120 days (four months) before you file for bankruptcy, you assigned (legally transferred) your right to receive benefits or property to a creditor to pay a debt, list it here. Examples include assigning a percentage of your wages to a creditor for several months or assigning a portion of a personal injury award to an attorney. The assignee is the person to whom the assignment was made, such as the creditor or attorney. The terms of the assignment should be given briefly—for example, "wages assigned to Snorkle's Store to satisfy debt of $500."
- b. Identify all of your property that has been in the hands of a court-appointed receiver, custodian, or other official during the year before you file for bankruptcy. If you've made child support payments directly to a court, and the court in turn paid your child's other parent, list those payments here.

7. Gifts. Provide the requested information about gifts you've made in the past year. The bankruptcy court and trustee want this information to make sure you haven't improperly unloaded any property before filing for bankruptcy. List all charitable donations of more than $100 and gifts to family members of more than $200.

You don't have to list gifts to family members that are "ordinary and usual," but there is no easy way to identify such gifts. The best test is whether someone outside of the family might think the gift was unusual under the circumstances. If so, list it. Forgiving a loan is also a gift, as is charging interest substantially below the market rate. Other gifts include giving a car or prepaid trip to a business associate.

8. Losses. Provide the requested information. If the loss was for an exempt item, most states also exempt the proceeds, up to the exemption limit for the item. (See Appendix A.) If the item was not exempt, the trustee is entitled to the proceeds. In either case, list any proceeds you've received or expect to receive. If you experience a loss after you file, you should promptly amend your papers, as this question applies to losses both before you file and afterwards.

9. Payments related to debt counseling or bankruptcy.

If you paid an improperly high fee to an attorney, bankruptcy petition preparer, debt consultant, or debt consolidator, the trustee may try to get some of it back to distribute to your creditors. Be sure to list all payments someone else made on your behalf, as well as payments you made directly.

10. Other transfers.

- a. List all real and personal property that you've sold or given to someone else during the two years before you file for bankruptcy. Some examples are selling or abandoning (junking) a car, pledging your house as security (collateral) for a loan, granting an easement on real estate, or trading property. Also, describe any transfer within the past two years to your ex-spouse as part of a marital settlement agreement. If you are filing alone, describe gifts to your current spouse made during that same period.

Don't include any gifts you listed in Item 7. Also, don't list property you've parted with as a regular part of your business or financial affairs. For example, if you operate a mail-order book business, don't list the books you sold during the past year. Similarly, don't put down payments for regular goods and services, such as your phone bill, utilities, or rent. The idea is to disclose transfers of property that might legally belong in your bankruptcy estate.

EXAMPLE 1: Three years before filing for bankruptcy, Jack sold some personal electronic mixing equipment to a friend for a modest sum. This sale wasn't made within the previous two years, so Jack needn't list it here.

Penalty for making a false statement: Fine of up to $500,000 or imprisonment for up to 5 years, or both. 18 U.S.C. §§ 152 and 3571

EXAMPLE 2: John has accumulated a collection of junked classic cars to resell to restoration hobbyists. Within the past year, John has sold three of the cars for a total of $20,000. Because this is part of John's regular business, he needn't report the sales here. However, as a sole proprietor, John will be completing Questions 18 through 20.

EXAMPLE 3: A year and a half before filing for bankruptcy, Louise, a nurse, sold a vintage Jaguar E-Type for $17,000. Because this isn't part of her business, Louise should list this sale here.

- b. List all transfers of your own property you have made in the previous ten years to an irrevocable trust that lists you as a beneficiary. These types of trusts—referred to as self-settled trusts—are commonly used by wealthy people to shield their assets from creditors and by disabled people to preserve their right to receive government benefits. In bankruptcy, however, assets placed in a self-settled trust will be considered nonexempt, which means you will have to pay your unsecured creditors at least the value of those assets. There is an exception that applies to assets placed in certain special needs trusts. (In re Schultz, 368 B.R. 832 (D. Minn. 2007).) If you are the beneficiary of a self-settled trust, see an attorney before filing for bankruptcy.

11. Closed financial accounts. Provide information for each account in your name or for your benefit that was closed or transferred to someone else during the past year.

12. Safe deposit boxes. Provide information for each safe deposit box you've had within the past year.

13. Setoffs. A setoff is when a creditor, often a bank, uses money in a customer's account to pay a debt owed to the creditor by that customer. Here, list any setoffs your creditors have made during the last 90 days.

14. Property held for another person. Describe all the property you've borrowed from, are storing for, or hold in trust for someone else. Examples include funds in an irrevocable trust held for someone else as beneficiary but controlled by you as trustee and property you're holding as executor or administrator of an estate. This type of property is not part of your bankruptcy estate. However, you must disclose it so the trustee is aware of it and can ask for more details. (Some people dishonestly describe all of their property as being in trust or otherwise belonging to someone else, hoping to avoid having to give it to the trustee. Disclosures in this part of the Statement of Financial Affairs allow the trustee to explore this possibility.)

A trustee who becomes interested in property you describe here may invoke several court procedures designed to get more information. However, it is unlikely that the trustee will invade your house to seize the property. If you can establish that the property truly belongs to someone else—by producing the trust document, for example—you needn't worry about losing it in your bankruptcy case.

EXAMPLE: You are renting an unfurnished apartment owned by a friend. The friend has left a valuable baby grand piano in your care. If and when you decide to move, you have agreed to place the piano in storage for your friend. Because you don't own the piano but rather are taking care of it for your friend, you would describe it here.

15. Prior address of debtor. If you have moved within the three years before you file for bankruptcy, list all of your residences within those three years.

16. Spouses and Former Spouses. If you lived in a community property state (or Puerto Rico) within eight years prior to filing for bankruptcy, list the name of your spouse and of any former spouses who lived with you in the community property state. To remind you, community property states are Alaska, Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas, Washington, and Wisconsin.

17. Environmental Information. Few individuals will have much to say here. It's intended primarily for businesses that do business on polluted premises. Still, read the questions carefully and provide the requested information, if applicable.

18. Nature, location and name of business. Provide all of the information requested on Line a if you are in business or have been in business for the previous six years. Note that the definition of business is very broad: It includes not only sole proprietors but anyone self-employed in a trade, profession, or other activity either full or part time or a business in which the debtor owned 5% or more of the voting or equity securities within the six-year period. It is very important that you answer this question completely so that the trustee will have a good idea of how you earned your money over the past six years and what you did with your business interests (if you are no longer in business).

SKIP AHEAD

If you don't own a business. Only business debtors have to provide responses on Lines 18 through 25. If you aren't one, skip to the declaration at the end of the form.

If the majority of your business income for any one business comes from renting, leasing, or otherwise operating a single piece of real property (other than an apartment building with fewer than four units), include your business name and the address of the property on Line b.

19. Books, records and financial statements.

- a. Identify every person other than yourself—usually a bookkeeper or an accountant—who was involved in the accounting of your business during the previous two years. If you were the only person involved in your business's accounting, check "None."
- b. If your books weren't audited during the past two years, check "None." Otherwise, fill in the requested information.
- c. Usually, you, your bookkeeper, your accountant, an ex-business associate, or possibly an ex-mate will have business records. If any are missing, explain (you'll be better off if the loss of your records was beyond your control).
- d. You may have prepared a financial statement if you applied to a bank for a loan or line of credit for your business or in your own name. If you're self-employed and applied for a personal loan to purchase a car or house, you probably submitted a financial statement as evidence of your ability to repay. Such statements include:
 - balance sheets (these compare assets with liabilities)
 - profit and loss statements (these compare income with expenses), and
 - financial statements (these provide an overall financial description of a business).

20. Inventories. If your business doesn't have an inventory because it's a service business, check "None." If your business deals in products, but you were primarily the middle person or original manufacturer, put "no inventory required" or "materials purchased for each order as needed." If you have an inventory, fill in the information requested in Items a and b.

21 through 25. These items are intended for filers who are part of a business entity such as a partnership, corporation, or limited liability company. Our book is designed for individuals only, so you should be able to check "None" for each of these items. If you are part of a business entity, consult with a bankruptcy lawyer before filing.

Form 21—Statement of Social Security Number

This schedule requires you to list your full Social Security number. It will be available to your creditors and the trustee but, to protect your privacy, will not be part of your regular bankruptcy case file.

Form 22C—Chapter 13 Statement of Current Monthly Income and Calculation of Commitment Period and Disposable Income

In Ch. 4, you calculated your current monthly income and compared it with your state's median income. If your current monthly income was more than your state's median income, you completed a form labeled 22C (in Ch. 5) to find out whether you could propose a plan that the court would likely confirm. You will file that completed form along with your other paperwork completed in this chapter.

If your income was less than your state's median income, you skipped Form 22C and instead completed a modified Schedule J and deducted those expenses from your current monthly income to see whether you had enough disposable income to propose a confirmable Chapter 13 plan. Now, however, you will need to go back to Ch. 5 and complete the rest of Form 22C in order to file the completed form with your other paperwork. You will find that most of the work you did to complete a modified Schedule J will work with the expenses asked for in 22C. Either way, in Ch. 5, you completed all or most of the necessary work on this form.

Form 201A—Notice to Individual Consumer Debtor Under § 342(b) of the Bankruptcy Code

This form, required by the new bankruptcy law, gives you some information about credit counseling and the various types of bankruptcy available. It also warns you sternly of the consequences of lying on your bankruptcy papers, concealing assets, and failing to file the required forms on time.

You can find a blank copy of the form in Appendix B. Sign and date it in the space provided. If a bankruptcy petition preparer assisted you with your paperwork, have that person fill in the requested information.

Mailing Matrix

As part of your bankruptcy filing, you are required to submit a list of all of your creditors so the court can give them official notice of your bankruptcy. Called the mailing “matrix,” this list must be prepared in a specific format prescribed by your local bankruptcy court. Your court may also require you to submit a declaration, or “verification,” stating that your list is correct (as ever, be sure to check your court's local rules). In a few courts, the form consists of boxes on a page in which you enter the names and addresses of your creditors. This is an artifact from the time when the trustee used the form to prepare mailing labels.

Now, most courts ask you to submit the list on a computer disk in a particular word processing format, or at least submit a computer printout of the names so that they may be scanned. You should check with the bankruptcy court clerk or the court's local rules to learn the precise format.

Once you understand the format, make a list of all of your creditors, in alphabetical order. You can copy them from Schedules D, E, F, and H. Be sure to include cosigners and joint debtors. If you and your spouse jointly incurred a debt and are filing jointly, however, don't include your spouse. Also include collection agencies, sheriffs, and attorneys who either have sued you or are trying to collect the debt. And, if you're seeking to discharge marital debts you assumed during a divorce, include both your ex-spouse and the creditors. Finally, if you have two or more debts owed to the same creditor at the same address, you can just list one.

CAUTION

It is very important to be complete when preparing the matrix. If you leave a creditor off the matrix, that debt may survive your bankruptcy—and you will have to pay it down the line.

Income Deduction Order

Your bankruptcy court might require you to draft and submit an income deduction order with the rest of your Chapter 13 bankruptcy papers. (You can ask the court clerk if you must prepare one when you send your letter requesting local forms and information.)

An income deduction order is an order the bankruptcy court sends to your employer. It requires the employer to automatically deduct your monthly repayment plan amount from your wages and send it to the bankruptcy court.

Below is a sample income deduction order. To complete your own, type up the sample, filling in the information requested in italics. Some courts have their own forms; if yours does, use it. Leave blank any information you don't yet know.

Your Chapter 13 plan is the cornerstone of your bankruptcy case. The plan tells the court and your creditors how you intend to repay your debts, including the total amount you will pay each month, how much each creditor will receive under your plan, and how long your plan will last. As we've discussed in earlier chapters, you will pay some of your creditors in full and others only a portion of what you owe them. Some creditors are entitled to be paid before other creditors. All of these details will be in your plan, along with some automatic conditions required by law (commonly termed "boilerplate").

Your repayment plan will control your financial life while your bankruptcy is pending. With a few exceptions, once the court confirms your plan, both you and your creditors are bound by its terms.

This chapter explains how to put together your plan, using the work you did in earlier chapters. For example, the income calculations you did in Ch. 4 determine what expense amounts you can use and how long your plan must last. And the preliminary figures from Ch. 5, in which you calculated your disposable income, determine how much you must pay into your plan.

As you'll see, putting together a Chapter 13 plan can get a bit tricky, mostly because you have to calculate the proper interest rates for your secured and priority debts and how quickly various types of debts will be repaid under your plan. The order in which some debts will be paid can also be difficult to figure out. The best approach is to do your best and be willing to negotiate with objecting creditors and the trustee and to amend your plan to accommodate these negotiations. Even skilled Chapter 13 lawyers often find it necessary to amend an original plan several times in the course of a Chapter 13 bankruptcy.

SEE AN EXPERT

A lawyer can help you draft an optimal plan.

Trying to learn everything there is to know about Chapter 13 repayment plans can be tough, if not impossible for a person stepping up to the plate for the first time. This chapter provides the basic information you need to represent yourself. But especially in the case of repayment plans, you may need the services of an attorney to guarantee the best possible outcome. Keep in mind that attorneys can collect their fee under your plan and may not require a high retainer to enter your case for this limited purpose. See Ch. 15 for more on bankruptcy attorneys.

Chapter 13 Plan Formats

Although the general rules for drafting a repayment plan are the same everywhere, many of the details are determined by individual bankruptcy districts and courts—and these requirements may differ significantly from place to place. Many bankruptcy courts require you to use a particular form or format for your plan. Some of these forms are only a couple of pages long; others run to seven or eight pages. Perhaps oddly, the longer forms tend to be easier to complete. The longer the form is, the more likely it is to include headings and guidance for debtors; the shorter forms tend to assume (sometimes mistakenly) that debtors know what they're doing.

Regardless of your court's requirements, all plans have to include the same basic information. If the trustee opposes your plan because it doesn't comply with every one of your court's rules, the trustee should give you feedback on what you have to do to get your plan confirmed. Then, you'll have some time to file an amended plan. If you are hopelessly in over your head, it's time to hunt for an attorney to help you draft a plan.

Most courts that require a particular format post it on their website for downloading. You can also usually get a copy of the form from the court clerk. You can find links to all court websites at www.uscourts.gov; click "Court Links" at the top of the page. You'll usually find repayment plans under the "forms" link on your court's Web page.

This book can't provide specific instructions for every plan from every court. However, this chapter uses a format based on several model plans used by courts throughout the country. If your court has no required or suggested plan format, you will probably be safe following our sample format.

What You Must Pay

To propose a plan that the judge will confirm, you must show that you will have sufficient income, after deducting allowed expenses, to pay certain debts in full over the life of your plan. Some of these debts must be paid through your Chapter 13 plan—that is, you must pay the trustee, who will then pay the creditor. (after collecting a fee). Others may be paid outside of your plan.

RELATED TOPIC

If you have not read Chs. 1 through 5, do so now.

Before you can draft your plan, you need to know the rules for calculating your income and expenses. You also need to know how to classify your debts, which debts you have to repay in Chapter 13, and how to figure out how long your plan will have to last. All of this information is explained in detail in Chs. 1 through 5. To draft your plan, you will have to complete the calculations in those chapters, particularly Ch. 5.

What You Must Pay Through Your Plan

At a minimum, you must pay all of the following debts through your Chapter 13 plan:

- all priority debts other than child support owed to a government agency
- all secured debts that are contractually due to end within the life of your plan (such as a home equity loan). If the debt is no longer secured when you file, you can strip off the lien and classify the debt as unsecured, then treat it just like your other unsecured debts
- all other secured debts that aren't contractually due within the life of your plan (for example, a government tax lien on your property)
- any arrearage necessary to keep your home, car, or other secured property
- an amount equal to what your unsecured, nonpriority creditors would have received if you had used Chapter 7
- all administrative expenses, including trustee and lawyer fees, and
- all of your remaining income (called your “disposable” income).

If your income is more than the median for your state and household size, your plan must last for five years. If your income is less than the median, your plan may last for only three years. If you are a lower-income filer and you don't have enough income to pay all mandatory debts within the three-year period, you can ask the court to extend your repayment time to five years. If you don't have enough income to pay your mandatory debts within five years, you can't propose a feasible Chapter 13 plan.

The first six categories of debts that must be repaid through your plan are pretty easy to calculate because they are all set values. You know—or can easily find out—how much you owe on priority and secured debts, as well as any arrearages you owe on secured debts. In Ch. 5, you determine what creditors would have received from the sale of your nonexempt property. You also know how much you're paying a lawyer (if you are using one) and that the trustee is entitled to 10%.

The last category of debt—your disposable income—can be tougher to value. Here are the rules:

- If your current monthly income (as calculated in Ch. 5) is less than your state's median income, calculate your disposable income by subtracting the expenses listed on Schedule J from either your current monthly income shown on Form 22C or the monthly income figure shown on Schedule I.
- If your current monthly income is more than your state's median income, calculate your disposable income by completing Form 22C. The amount shown on Line 58 is your disposable income.

As explained earlier, however, not all courts hew strictly to this last rule. While all courts use the Line 58 total as a starting point for calculating disposable income, many vary from this amount if the income shown on Schedule I is significantly different. And some courts go even further by looking ahead to see whether the debtor's income might increase or decrease enough to warrant a different calculation. Fortunately, we will soon have some guidance from the U.S. Supreme Court, which is scheduled to decide this issue in 2010.

The best practice if you are a higher-income filer is to use the figure you come up with on Line 58 of Form 22C as your disposable income unless your court follows a different practice—or unless you need to use your actual disposable income to propose a feasible plan.

What You Must Pay Either Through or Outside of Your Plan

In addition to making payments through your plan, you will have to make other payments either inside or outside of the plan. For instance, even if you pay your arrearage on a mortgage through the plan, you'll have to continue making your regular monthly mortgage payments. You'll also have to pay your other current expenses.

If you make these payments through your Chapter 13 plan, you will have to pay significantly more over the life of your plan to cover the trustee's fee. The trustee gets 10% on all payments made through the plan, but gets nothing on payments made outside of the plan. If your current monthly mortgage payment is $2,000, the trustee would get 10% of your monthly payment, or $200 a month, if you paid through your plan. This amount is added to what you're already paying into the plan. Over the life of a five-year plan, paying your mortgage this way would require you to pay an extra $120,000! The lesson here is that it makes a huge difference whether you pay through or outside of the plan.

Obviously, you should try to pay outside of the plan if at all possible. Unfortunately, courts are split on whether mortgages must be paid through the plan. One case (In re Breeding, 366 B.R. 21 (E.D. Ark. 2007)) has ruled that judges can require debtors to make their regular mortgage payments through the plan. However, a Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals case has authorized mortgage payments outside of the plan. (In re Lopez, 372 B.R. 40 (9th Cir. B.A.P. 2007).)

If you are paying an arrearage on a car note through the plan, you may also have to make the current payment through the plan. The same is true of other secured property for which you are using Chapter 13 to make up an arrearage. On the other hand, current payments for rent, utilities, Internet services, telephone, child support, taxes, and the like can—and should—be made outside of the plan.

Repayment of Unsecured Debts: Allowed Claims

Payments of unsecured debts under your Chapter 13 plan will be based on “allowed claims” filed by your creditors. After receiving notice of your bankruptcy, unsecured creditors that want a share of the payments you make under your plan must file a Proof of Claim. Once the creditor files a Proof of Claim, you or the trustee can object to the claim; you can argue that you don't really owe the claim or that you owe less than the creditor says, for example. (Objections to creditors' claims are covered briefly in Ch. 11.) The court will then decide which claims are allowed; creditors with allowed claims are entitled to share in the money you pay into your plan.

Which Creditors Must File Proofs of Claim

All unsecured creditors—whether you owe them priority or nonpriority debts—must file Proofs of Claim in order to be paid by the trustee. Only a secured creditor does not have to file a Proof of Claim.

The deadline for filing a Proof of Claim is 90 days after the date set for the first meeting of creditors (Rule 3002). However, the confirmation hearing—at which the judge either confirms your repayment plan or sends you back to the drawing board to make changes—must be held between 20 and 45 days after the first meeting of creditors (or earlier, if the court approves). This means that a creditor could well file a Proof of Claim after your plan is confirmed. Because of this scheduling oddity, you can't assume that your plan must include only those claims for which proofs have been filed.

EXAMPLE: Peter files for Chapter 13 bankruptcy on July 1, 2010. He files his plan at the same time. The confirmation hearing in his case is held 60 days later. By then, some Proofs of Claim have been filed, but others have not. Peter amends his plan to include only the claims that have been filed at that point. If more claims are filed before the deadline, Peter will have to amend his plan again, and another confirmation hearing will be required.

Dealing With Unfiled Claims

If a creditor doesn't file a Proof of Claim within the deadline and you want that creditor to be paid in your plan, you'll have 30 days after the deadline to file a claim for the creditor. You might want to do this if, for example, the debt cannot be discharged in bankruptcy: By filing a Proof of Claim, you can make sure that at least part of the debt is paid off through your plan, so you won't owe as much when your bankruptcy case is over. Ch. 11 covers filing Proofs of Claim on behalf of a creditor.

Probably the best approach when drafting your plan is to assume that all of your creditors will file Proofs of Claim in a timely manner. This means your plan should include:

- payment in full to all secured creditors listed in Schedule D (except those with debts contractually lasting longer than your plan, such as a mortgage)
- payment in full to all priority creditors listed in Schedule E (except child support owed to a government agency), and
- payment in whole or in part to all the unsecured, nonpriority creditors you listed in Schedule F. Of course, the amounts these creditors receive depend on your disposable income; they each get a share of the amount of your payment that doesn't go to secured debt arrearages, priority debts, the trustee's fee, and so on. However, you have to list your unsecured creditors in your plan, and we advise that you list all of them, whether or not they have filed Proofs of Claim by the time you submit your plan.

If you intend to object to (that is, claim that you don't owe) any of the debts listed on Schedules D, E, or F, you should indicate that in your plan. If one or more of those creditors don't file timely Proofs of Claim, you can either file Proofs of Claim on the creditors' behalf (see Ch. 11) or amend your plan to take those defaults into account.

EXAMPLE: Tony's Schedule E shows that he owes $7,500 in child support, which he must pay in full (because it is a priority debt) if an allowed claim is filed by the deadline. Tony assumes that the creditor will file a Proof of Claim, so his plan provides for payment of the child support debt. If the creditor doesn't file a Proof of Claim, this debt won't be paid under Tony's plan unless he files a Proof of Claim on the creditor's behalf. Because back child support is a nondischargeable debt, Tony will probably want to file the Proof of Claim on the creditor's behalf and take care of the child support through his plan. But if he doesn't file the Proof of Claim, he will amend his plan to route the child support money to his other creditors.

Discharging Student Loans in Your Plan

Generally, student loans cannot be discharged in bankruptcy unless there is a separate hearing at which the debtor convinces the judge that repayment would constitute an undue hardship (typically, a difficult thing to prove). However, in some Chapter 13 cases, student loans have been discharged if they are included in a plan that proposes repayment in whole or in part, without a showing of undue hardship. The U.S. Supreme Court has agreed to decide whether a student loan can be discharged in a Chapter 13 plan without a showing of undue hardship or whether there must always be a court hearing on the undue hardship issue, regardless of what the plan provides. (The case is called Espinosa v. United Student Aid Funds, Inc., and a decision is expected in 2010.)

A Model Plan Format

At the end of this chapter, you will find a complete model plan form. The instructions below explain each section of that plan. This will help you figure out which information to include in each part of the plan, and how to put that information together for the court.

CAUTION

Remember to use your court's form. As explained above, many bankruptcy districts and courts have their own repayment plan forms. If your court has its own form, by all means use it. You should be able to transfer the information and instructions from our model form to your court's form without too much trouble.

Notice

The first section is a notice to creditors explaining what happens in Chapter 13 bankruptcy. You don't have to add any information here.

Although it's not required by the bankruptcy code, the notice gives creditors some basic information on Chapter 13 bankruptcy and what they can do to preserve their rights. It prevents your creditors from later complaining that they didn't understand what they were supposed to do. The downside of providing this notice is that you may be better off if your creditors aren't alerted to their possible remedies. For that reason, if your court doesn't require a notice of this type, you may wish to eliminate it.

Notice

This plan is proposed by the above debtor under penalty of perjury. Any creditor can object to this plan being confirmed by written notice filed with the court and served upon the debtor, the trustee, and other parties in interest not less than 8 days before the date set for the meeting of creditors. Absent a timely objection, the court may confirm this plan as drafted. The plan, and payments under the plan, will be subject to all relevant Bankruptcy Code provisions.

With certain exceptions, a confirmed plan holds the debtor and creditors to the treatment provided in the plan—even if the plan modifies rights and duties held by the debtor and creditor. The exceptions are:

- a. Each creditor will retain its lien until the earlier of payment of the underlying debt determined under nonbankruptcy law or discharge under Section 1328. If the case under this chapter is dismissed or converted without completion of the plan, the holder of such lien shall retain it to the extent recognized by applicable nonbankruptcy law.
- b. Defaults will be cured using the interest rate set forth below in the plan. Any ongoing obligation will be paid according to the terms of the plan.
- c. Holders of secured claims and Class 1 claimants will be paid according to the plan after confirmation unless the secured creditor or Class 1 claimant files a Proof of Claim in a different amount than that provided in the plan.
- d. If a secured creditor files a Proof of Claim, that creditor will be paid according to that creditor's Proof of Claim, unless the court orders otherwise. Holders of all other claims must timely file Proofs of Claims, if the code so requires, or they will not be paid any amount. A debtor who confirms a Chapter 13 plan may be eligible thereafter to receive a discharge of debts to the extent specified in 11 U.S.C. Section 1328.

Section a explains that any modifications of liens in the Chapter 13 case will survive the bankruptcy unless the underlying debt is paid off in full or a discharge is granted. Section b is self-explanatory. Section c explains that creditors with secured claims and priority claims will be paid according to the plan unless they file different Proofs of Claim. Section d explains that secured debtors can file claims at any time and receive payment regardless of the plan, unless the court orders otherwise. All other creditors must file timely claims if they wish to be paid anything.

Plan Payments

Here, you indicate how much you will pay each month and what that money will be used for. We've divided this section into parts, as you'll see below.

Plan Payments

The debtor proposes the following Chapter 13 plan and makes the following declarations:

Monthly Amounts Paid to Trustee Under the Plan

The debtor submits the following to the supervision and control of the trustee:

Section A. You won't be able to complete the first blank in Section A until you have completed the rest of your plan and added up all of the amounts you are required to pay. Remember to come back and complete this provision. This section also requires you to make your first monthly plan payment to the trustee within 30 days after you file your petition. Failure to make this payment can get your Chapter 13 case dismissed.

In the second blank, indicate how long your plan will last. Remember, if your income is more than your state's median income, your plan must last for 60 months (five years) unless you can pay 100% of your debt in a shorter period. If your income is less than your state's median income, your plan must last for 36 months (three years) unless you can pay 100% of your debt in a shorter time or you need a longer period to pay off your secured and/or priority debts. (For more information, review Chs. 4 and 5.)

A. Payments by debtor of $_____ per month for _____ months. The monthly payment will begin within 30 days of the date the petition was filed.

Section B. The base plan dollar amount is your disposable income, as calculated in Ch. 5. Because you calculated your disposable income as a monthly amount, you'll have to multiply it by the number of months your plan will last to obtain the base plan amount. Enter this in the first blank.

To complete the second blank, add up all of your unsecured, nonpriority debts. These are the debts you listed on Schedule F (see Ch. 7). Once you have a total, divide it by your base plan amount (your disposable income) to figure out what percentage of these debts will be repaid over the life of your plan. For example, if your total disposable income is $500 a month for three years, or $18,000 total, and your debts in Schedule F total $100,000, the percent of the allowed nonpriority unsecured claims will be 18%.

B. The base plan amount is $_____, which will pay _____% of the allowed claims of nonpriority unsecured creditors. If that percentage is less than 100%, the debtor will pay the plan payment stated in this plan for the full term of the plan.

Section C. This section authorizes the trustee to secure any amount of your future property or income necessary to pay certain claims that arise after you file—principally tax claims, but also debts you incur in order to successfully complete your Chapter 13 plan, such as payments to an attorney. Because you can't know whether you will have these types of claims or how much you will have to pay, this section doesn't ask you to give a dollar amount.

C. Amounts necessary for the payment of postpetition claims allowed under 11 U.S.C. Section 1305.

Section D. The trustee will get your tax refunds, to add to the other payments you make under the plan, unless your plan provides for payment of 100% of your nonpriority, unsecured claims. Again, you don't have to provide an amount here; you won't know how much your tax refunds will be, or perhaps even that you will be entitled to receive any, at this point.

D. If the plan provides for less than 100% payment of nonpriority unsecured claims, all postpetition tax refunds received by the debtor during the plan term.

Section E. Because a long time can elapse between your bankruptcy filing and your plan confirmation, secured creditors may demand a premium (called adequate protection payments) to protect their property interests before the plan is confirmed. The trustee typically pays these amounts out of your first plan payment. (See Ch. 10 for more information.)

E. Preconfirmation adequate protection payments for any creditor who holds an allowed claim secured by personal property: $_____.

Section F. The "Other property" blank refers to additional property that the trustee may require control over. This might include unexpected receipts of an ongoing business or royalties that have not been included as part of your current monthly income.

F. Other property: _____.

Classification and Treatment of Claims

In this section, you list all of your debts according to category and calculate how much you will pay on each during your plan. We have divided our discussion into classes of claims.

Class 1. List each of your priority claims (from Schedule E) here, in the appropriate category. Leave the "Trustee's Fee" blank for now. Fill in the columns as follows:

- In Column 1, list the total amount due.
- List the interest rate on the loan in Column 2. Typically, you won't have to pay interest on a priority debt. However, you may have to add interest to your payment—if, for example, you signed a contract that requires interest.

- To calculate your monthly payment of loan plus interest, either use your own calculator or go to www.bankrate.com (or another online calculator site). Select a calculator that allows you to calculate interest on an annual basis. Enter the amount of the claim, the interest rate, and the length of the claim, then click the “calculate” button. The result will be your monthly payment.
- In Column 4, indicate how long your plan will last.
- Multiply the monthly payment in Column 3 by the number of months in Column 4, and place the total in Column 5.

Class 2. In the first section, choose whether you will make the mortgage payment directly to the creditor or whether the trustee will make the mortgage payment out of the plan. As explained above, most debtors choose to pay the lender directly, if they have a choice. If you owe an arrearage on your mortgage, you will have to pay it to the trustee, however.

In the second section, list any arrearages you owe on debts secured by your home. Complete this section as follows:

- In Column 1, list the lender's name.
- In Column 2, list the last four digits of the loan number.
- In Column 3, list the total amount of the arrearage.
- In Column 4, if your mortgage was written before 1994, you don't have to pay interest on the arrearage; the interest on the mortgage is included in the mortgage. Otherwise, enter the contract interest rate.
- In Column 5, list your monthly payment. Assuming your mortgage was written before 1994, you can divide the total amount in Column 3 by how many months your plan will last. Otherwise, calculate your monthly payment using the instructions for Class 1 claims.
- In Column 6, enter the number of months your plan will last.
- Multiply the amount in Column 5 by the amount in Column 6, and list the total in Column 7.

Class 3. In the first set of boxes, enter all secured claims that must be paid in full under the plan. These are tax liens, mechanic's liens, judicial liens that can't be avoided, and secured claims that are to be paid in full under a contract that expires during the plan period. For example, if you owe $20,000 on a claim for a secured debt under a contract that will expire in three years, and you are drafting a five-year plan, the claim must be paid in full unless it qualifies for a cramdown. (See Class 4, below.)

You don't have to list secured claims that will outlive your plan—you can pay these on your own, to keep the trustee's fee down.

Complete this section as follows:

- In Column 1, enter the name of the creditor.
- In Column 2, enter the last four digits of the account number for the debt.
- In Column 3, enter the total claim.
- In Column 4, enter the interest rate you must pay on the claim. (See "Determining Interest Rates for Secured Debts in Chapter 13 Plans," below.)
- In Column 5, calculate your monthly payment, using the instructions for Class 1 claims.
- In Column 6, enter the number of months in your plan.
- In Column 7, multiply the monthly payment by the number of months in your plan.

Class 2: Claims secured solely by real property that is the debtor's principal residence

- ☐ 1. The postconfirmation monthly mortgage payment will be made by the trustee from the plan payment to: _____.
- ☐ 1.2. The postconfirmation monthly mortgage payment will be made by the debtor directly to: _____.

The debtor will cure all prepetition arrearages for the primary residence through the plan payment as set forth below. If the debtor pays the cure amount while timely making all required postpetition payments, the mortgage will be reinstated according to its original terms, extinguishing any right of the mortgagee to recover any amount alleged to have arisen prior to the filing of the petition.

1. Name of Creditor	2. Last Four Digits of Loan #	3. Amount of Arrearage	4. Interest Rate	5. Monthly Payment	6. Number of Months	7. Total Payment

Class 3: Secured claims to be paid in full through the plan

1. Name of Creditor	2. Last Four Digits of Loan #	3. Amount of Claim	4. Interest Rate	5. Monthly Payment	6. Number of Months	7. Total Payment

The debtor will cure all prepetition arrearages on these claims through the plan payment as set forth below:

1. Name of Creditor	2. Last Four Digits of Loan #	3. Amount of Arrearage	4. Interest Rate	5. Monthly Payment	6. Number of Months	7. Total Payment

Determining Interest Rates for Secured Debts in Chapter 13 Plans

Until recently, the question of how to set an interest rate for secured claims other than mortgages was hotly debated, with various bankruptcy courts issuing inconsistent rulings. In 2004, however, the U.S. Supreme Court settled the matter and announced a formula to be used in Chapter 13 cases. (Till v. SCS Credit Corporation, 541 U.S 465 (2004).) The Court said the rate should be the national prime rate, adjusted upward slightly for the additional risk of lending to a bankruptcy debtor. In that case, the risk was deemed to be 1.5% over prime. Lower courts have generally approved adjustments in the range of 1% to 3% over prime. The 2005 bankruptcy law did not address the Till case, so its holding still stands.

The bankruptcy court in your district may already have a rate stated on its standard Chapter 13 plan form. If your court has not set an interest rate, you and your creditor will have to negotiate a rate or ask the court to decide, using the formula announced by the Supreme Court.

The second section is for arrearages on secured debts. If your secured debt is contractual and secures collateral you are keeping, you can pay any arrearage on the debt under your plan. For example, if you have fallen behind on your car payments, you can use your plan to pay the arrearage off in equal monthly payments over the life of your plan.

Complete these boxes following the instructions for Class 2 claims, above.

Class 4. This class of claims is for secured debts on which you owe more than the value of the collateral. For example, you might owe $10,000 on a car that is worth only $6,000. In some cases, you can modify the claim so that the secured portion is reduced to the value of the property ($6,000 in this case). The rest of the claim ($4,000 in this example) is treated as an unsecured, nonpriority claim. This is called a cramdown.

As a general rule, you can't cram down your mortgage, but there are exceptions. (See "Modifying Mortgages," below.) If you don't qualify for a cramdown of a debt that secures collateral, include the debt in Class 3 above or Class 5 below (if the contract extends beyond the length of the plan).

Class 4: Secured claims to be bifurcated under the plan

1. Name of Creditor	2. Last Four Digits of Loan #	3. Claim Total	4. Secured Claim	5. Unsecured Claim	6. Interest Rate	7. Equal Monthly Payments	8. Number of Months	9. Total Payment	10. Purchase for Debtor's Personal Use?	11. Date of Purchase	12. Purchase Money Loan?
									Y <input type="checkbox"/> N <input type="checkbox"/>		Y <input type="checkbox"/> N <input type="checkbox"/>

The debtor will cure all prepetition arrearages on these claims through the plan payment as set forth below:

1. Name of Creditor	2. Last Four Digits of Loan #	3. Amount of Arrearage	4. Interest Rate	5. Monthly Payment	6. Number of Months	7. Total Payment

Modifying Mortgages

You can modify your mortgage to the actual value of your home if any of the following is true:

- Your loan was for the purchase of a multiunit building.
- Your loan was for other buildings or an adjacent lot that is not likely to be considered part of your residence, such as farmland.
- Your loan was for a mobile home you live in that is considered personal property.
- The mortgage loan is not secured solely by your residence.

If you do modify your mortgage, you will have to pay it off completely in your plan. For instance, if the contract value of your mortgage is $150,000 and you modify it to $110,000 (the value of your home), you'll have to pay the entire $110,000 off as part of your plan. This fact alone prevents most mortgages from being crammed down, even if they meet one of the criteria above.

You can also reclassify secured debts as unsecured debts if you owe more than your property is worth when you file your bankruptcy petition. For example, assume you have a first mortgage on your home for $200,000. Several years ago, when your home was worth $300,000, you incurred a second mortgage for $45,000. When you file for bankruptcy, however, your home's value has declined to $200,000. Because the second mortgage is no longer secured by your property, you can classify the debt as unsecured and pay it off along with your other unsecured debts in Class 6. This reclassification means that you most likely won't have to pay off the second mortgage in full, but can instead pay whatever percentage your plan devotes to unsecured creditors.

Fill out the first set of boxes as follows:

- In Column 1, enter the name of the creditor.
- In Column 2, enter the last four digits of the account number for the debt.
- In Column 3, enter the total amount due.
- In Column 4, enter the amount of the debt that is secured—in other words, the value of the property. You are supposed to use the property's replacement value—what a retail merchant would get for the property given its age and condition. If you use the Kelley Blue Book middle value for a car and secondhand stores or eBay for other types of property, you should be okay. But again, if the creditor argues with your amount, you are free to negotiate or even have the judge decide the issue.

- In Column 5, enter the amount you will treat as an unsecured claim. This is the total amount due minus the value of the property.
- In Column 6, enter an interest rate based on the national prime rate, in accordance with the formula described in “Determining Interest Rates for Secured Debts in Chapter 13 Plans,” above.
- In Column 7, calculate your monthly payment based on the amount of the secured claim and the interest rate, using the instructions for Class 1 claims.
- In Column 8, enter the number of months your plan will last.
- Multiply the monthly amount in Column 7 by the number of months in Column 8, and list the total in Column 9.
- In Column 10, check the appropriate box to indicate whether the property was intended for your personal use when you bought it. If it wasn't acquired for your personal use (for example, it was intended to be used in your business or by another member of your household as evidenced on the title agreement), you can cram down the debt no matter when you bought it.
- In Column 11, enter the date of purchase. Subject to Column 10, you may cram down debts for all property (other than cars) only if you incurred them at least a year before you filed for bankruptcy. For cars, you must have incurred the debt at least 910 days before you filed for bankruptcy in order to cram down the debt. Most courts have held that you still owe the unsecured part of a loan when you bifurcate it into secured and unsecured portions—that is, when you cram it down. (See, for example, In re Rodriguez, 375 B.R. 535 (9th Cir. B.A.P. 2007).) If, on the other hand, you don't qualify for a cramdown and you simply give your car back to the lender, your debt may be cancelled. (See, for example, In re Ezell, 338 B.R. 330 (E.D. Tenn. 2006).) However, most courts have ruled that you will still owe any deficiency that results from the surrender (the difference between what the property is worth and what you owe on it), and that you must include this debt with your other unsecured, nonpriority debt in your plan.

- In Column 12, check the appropriate box. If you used the loan to purchase the property that secures the debt, it's a purchase money loan. You can cram down a debt only if it is not a purchase money loan—that is, if you secured the debt with property you already owned, not property you bought with the loan.

The second set of boxes allows you to pay off arrearages on loans you intend to cram down. Complete the boxes as follows:

- In Column 1, enter the name of the creditor.
- In Column 2, enter the last four digits of the account number for the debt.
- In Column 3, enter the total arrearage.
- In Column 4, enter the interest rate you must pay on the claim. As mentioned earlier, this is an area ripe for negotiation.
- In Column 5, list your monthly payment, following the instructions for Class 1 claims.
- In Column 6, enter the number of months in your plan.
- In Column 7, multiply the monthly payment by the number of months in your plan.

Class 5. These debts are typically arrearages on leases or licenses, six- or seven-year car notes, and long-term secured and unsecured promissory notes that last beyond five years. If your mortgage is being paid through the plan, enter the mortgage terms here. The trustee will pay this amount unless you check the second box.

The boxes allow you to pay off arrearages on these amounts. Complete the boxes as follows:

- In Column 1, enter the name of the creditor.
- In Column 2, enter the last four digits of the account number for the debt.
- In Column 3, enter the total claim.

- In Column 4, enter the interest rate you must pay on the claim. As mentioned earlier, this is an area ripe for negotiation.
- In Column 5, list your monthly payment including interest, calculated according to the instructions for Class 1 claims.
- In Column 6, enter the number of months in your plan.
- In Column 7, multiply the monthly payment by the number of months in your plan.

Class 6. In the first space, enter the total of the debts you listed on Schedule F, plus the unsecured portion of any bifurcated secured claim (listed in Class 4, above).

If you don't have a cosigner for any of your debts, and all of your debts in this category are dischargeable, you are probably safe in checking the first box and not breaking this class into subclasses. If you have nonpriority, unsecured debts that you want to treat differently than others, check the second box and prepare an exhibit to accompany the plan. You might want to create subclasses to:

- separately classify debts that have cosigners, so you can pay those debts in full and take your cosigners off the hook
- separately classify certain debts you've incurred after you filed your petition, because those debts must be paid off in full with interest
- separately classify certain business debts so that you can continue your business
- separately classify debts based on how much you owe (for example, you might want to pay 100% of debts for less than $1,000 and a lesser percentage of larger debts), or
- separately classify certain nondischargeable debts so you can pay them in full (for example, a student loan or child support owed to a government entity).

Comparison With Chapter 7

Here, you must enter two values: the total amount your unsecured, nonpriority creditors would receive from the sale of your nonexempt property in a Chapter 7 case (see Ch. 4) and what percentage of your total allowed unsecured, nonpriority debt (the debts listed in Schedule F) that amount would pay off over the course of your plan.

Class 5: Secured or unsecured claims other than residential mortgages on which the last payment is due after date on which final payment under the plan is due

- ☐ 3. The postconfirmation monthly payment pursuant to the promissory note will be made by the trustee from the plan payment to: _____.
- ☐ 3.4. The postconfirmation monthly payment pursuant to the promissory note will be made by the debtor directly to: _____.

The debtor will cure all prepetition arrearages on these claims through the plan payment as set forth below:

1. Name of Creditor	2. Last Four Digits of Loan #	3. Amount of Arrearage	4. Interest Rate	5. Monthly Payment	6. Number of Months	7. Total Payment

Class 6: Nonpriority unsecured claims

The debtor estimates that allowed nonpriority unsecured claims will be the sum of $_____.

Class 6 claims will be paid as follows (check one box only):

- ☐ Class 6 claims (including the unsecured claims in Class 4) are of one class and will be paid pro rata.
- ☐ Class 6 claims will be divided into subclasses as shown below and the creditors in each class will be paid pro rata.

Claim	Reason for Subclass	Amount

Comparison With Chapter 7

The value as of the effective date of the plan of property to be distributed under the plan on account of each allowed claim is not less than the amount that would be paid on such claim if the estate of the debtor were liquidated under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code on such date. The amount distributed to nonpriority unsecured creditors in Chapter 7 would be $_____, which is estimated to pay _____% of the scheduled nonpriority debt. The plan proposes to pay _____% of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured debt.

This section summarizes your payments for each class of debts. Enter the amounts in each class that will be paid under the plan. Payments you will make directly to the creditor, such as your car note or mortgage, should not be included here. Order of Payment

This section tells the trustee how to prioritize the creditors to be paid under your plan. Much of it is self-explanatory. In the third item, if you have any administrative expenses other than the trustee's fees, you must enter the percentage of each plan payment that will be paid to that creditor. Other administrative expenses typically include attorney fees. The percentage is typically somewhere around 10% or 11%, but may be less in your district.

The fourth item should be included only if the trustee will make your payments on secured debts, such as a car note or mortgage. If you will make these payments yourself, delete this paragraph and renumber the remaining items.

Order of Payment

Except as otherwise provided in the plan or by court order, the Chapter 13 trustee shall disburse all available funds for the payment of claims in the following order:

First: The Chapter 13 trustee's fee up to but not more than the amount accrued on payments made to date.

Second: Any domestic support orders.

Third: Administrative expenses (including, but not limited to, attorneys' fees) in an amount up to but not more than 10% of each plan payment until paid in full.

Fourth: Ongoing payments on secured debts that are to be made by the trustee from the plan payment.

Fifth: Pro rata to all other claims except as otherwise provided in the plan.

Sixth: No payment shall be made on general unsecured claims until all secured and priority claims have been paid in full.

Other Plan Provisions

There are a number of provisions that are standard in repayment plans. You may not need to use all of the following language. Read the instructions carefully to figure out whether the provision applies to you.

Section A. This clause provides you the opportunity to get out of any contracts and leases still in effect that you described in Schedule G. If you have collateral that you are leasing (such as a car), you will have to return it to the creditor as provided in Section D, below.

Other Plan Provisions

A. The debtor rejects the following executory contracts and unexpired leases: _____ .

Section B. This clause provides you the opportunity to assume live contracts or leases, which means they will continue in effect. If you have arrearages under the contract or lease, you can make them up as part of your plan. All ongoing payments should be made directly to the lessor; arrearages must be paid through your plan.

B. The debtor assumes the executory contracts or unexpired leases set forth in this section. The debtor has a leasehold interest in personal property and will make all postpetition payments directly to the lessor(s): _____ .

Section C. This clause allows you to specify that you will make direct payments to any creditor not listed in Class 2 and Class 5 above.

C. In addition to the payments specified in Class _____ and Class _____, the debtor will make regular payments directly to the following: _____ .

Section D. This clause allows you to surrender any personal property and real property that you don't want to continue making payments on in your Chapter 13 plan. According to one court (In re Ezell, E.D. Tenn. 2006), if the property surrendered is a car purchased within 910 days or other property purchased within one year of your bankruptcy filing, giving it back to the lender extinguishes the debt. If the property can be crammed down, giving the property back extinguishes the portion of the debt that is secured by the property. The amount of debt that exceeds the property's actual value will be treated as an unsecured debt, payable in the same way as your other unsecured debts.

D. The debtor hereby surrenders the following personal or real property (identify property and creditor to which it is surrendered):

Property	Creditor

Section E. In the table, insert the creditor's name and the amount required by the creditor for adequate assurance. The last paragraph explains how preconfirmation adequate protection plan payments shall be disbursed to the creditor and how the trustee shall be paid.

E. Preconfirmation adequate protection payments will be paid to the trustee for the following creditor(s) in the following amounts:

Creditor Name	Amount

Each adequate protection payment will commence on the 30th day from the date of filing of the case. The trustee shall deduct the foregoing adequate protection payment(s) from the debtor's plan payment and disburse the adequate protection payment to the secured creditor(s) at the next available disbursement or as soon as practicable after the payment is received and posted to the trustee's account. The trustee will take his or her statutory fee on all disbursements made for preconfirmation adequate protection payments.

Section F. This clause limits the amount of credit you can incur during the life of your plan. The Central District of California plan limits credit to $250, for example. However, that seems low. Different courts will have different limits. If your court has no limit, don't include this provision in your plan.

F. The debtor shall incur no debt greater than $_____ unless the debt is incurred in the ordinary course of business pursuant to 11 U.S.C. Section 1304(b) or for medical emergencies.

Section G. This clause implements a provision of the 2005 bankruptcy law, which requires Chapter 13 debtors to remain current on their taxes.

G. The debtor will pay timely all postconfirmation tax liabilities directly to the appropriate taxing authorities as they come due.

Section H. This clause authorizes the trustee to disburse funds as provided in your plan.

H. The trustee is authorized to disburse funds after the date of confirmation in open court.

Section I. This clause implements the 2005 law requiring Chapter 13 debtors to remain current on their support orders.

I. The debtor will pay all amounts required to be paid under a domestic support obligation that first became payable after the date of the filing of the petition.

Revestment of Property. This clause sorts out legal relationships between you, the trustee, and your creditors after plan confirmation and discharge.

Revestment of Property

Property of the estate shall not revert in the debtor until such time as a discharge is granted or the case is dismissed or closed without discharge. Revestment shall be subject to all liens and encumbrances in existence when the case was filed, except those liens avoided by court order extinguished by operation of law. In the event the case is converted to a case under Chapter 7, 11, or 12 of the Bankruptcy Code, the property of the estate shall vest in accordance with applicable law. After confirmation of the plan, the Chapter 13 trustee shall have no further authority or fiduciary duty regarding use, sale, or refinancing of property of the estate except to respond to any motion for proposed use, sale, or refinancing as required by the local bankruptcy rules. Prior to any discharge or dismissal, the debtor must seek approval of the court to purchase, sell, or refinance real property.

Sample Plan

Here is a sample Chapter 13 repayment plan. The debtor is Carrie Ann Edwards, divorced mother of two children who lives in Lakeport, California. The numbers in her plan are based on the information in the sample bankruptcy forms, especially Form 22C, which you'll find in Ch. 5. Carrie was forced into Chapter 13 by the new bankruptcy rules. Also, she was faced with possible foreclosure on her mortgage because of an arrearage—which can be paid off over time in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy.

Chapter 13 Repayment Plan

Notice

This plan is proposed by the above debtor under penalty of perjury. Any creditor can object to this plan being confirmed by written notice filed with the court and served upon the debtor, the trustee, and other parties in interest not less than eight days before the date set for the meeting of creditors. Absent a timely objection, the court may confirm this plan as drafted. The plan, and payments under the plan, will be subject to all relevant Bankruptcy Code provisions.

With certain exceptions, a confirmed plan holds the debtor and creditors to the treatment provided in the plan—even if the plan modifies rights and duties held by the debtor and creditor. The exceptions are:

- a. Each creditor will retain its lien until the earlier of payment of the underlying debt determined under nonbankruptcy law or discharge under Section 1328. If the case under this chapter is dismissed or converted without completion of the plan, the holder of such lien shall retain it to the extent recognized by applicable nonbankruptcy law.
- b. Defaults will be cured using the interest rate set forth below in the plan. Any ongoing obligation will be paid according to the terms of the plan.
- c. Holders of secured claims and Class 1 claimants will be paid according to the plan after confirmation unless the secured creditor or Class 1 claimant files a Proof of Claim in a different amount than that provided in the plan.
- d. If a secured creditor files a Proof of Claim, that creditor will be paid according to that creditor's Proof of Claim, unless the court orders otherwise. Holders of all other claims must timely file Proofs of Claim, if the code so requires, or they will not be paid any amount. A debtor who confirms a Chapter 13 plan may be eligible thereafter to receive a discharge of debts to the extent specified in 11 U.S.C. Section 1328.

Plan Payments

The debtor proposes the following Chapter 13 plan and makes the following declarations:

Monthly Amounts Paid to Trustee Under the Plan

The debtor submits the following to the supervision and control of the trustee:

A. Payments by debtor of $ 1,226 per month for sixty (60) months. The monthly payment will begin within 30 days of the date the petition was filed.

B. The base plan amount is $ 42,660 (disposable income x 60), which will pay 27 % of the allowed claims of nonpriority unsecured creditors. If that percentage is less than 100%, the debtor will pay the plan payment stated in this plan for the full term of the plan.

C. Amounts necessary for the payment of postpetition claims allowed under 11 U.S.C. Section 1305.

D. If the plan provides for less than 100% payment of nonpriority unsecured claims, all postpetition tax refunds received by the debtor during the plan term.

E. Preconfirmation adequate protection payments for any creditor who holds an allowed claim secured by personal property:

F. Other property: _____

Classification and Treatment of Claims

The debtor will cure all prepetition arrearages for the primary residence through the plan payment as set forth below. If the debtor pays the cure amount while timely making all required postpetition payments, the mortgage will be reinstated according to its original terms, extinguishing any right of the mortgagee to recover any amount alleged to have arisen prior to the filing of the petition.

- ☐ Class 6 claims will be divided into subclasses as shown below and the creditors in each class will be paid pro rata.

Claim	Reason for Subclass	Amount

Comparison With Chapter 7

The value as of the effective date of the plan of property to be distributed under the plan on account of each allowed claim is not less than the amount that would be paid on such claim if the estate of the debtor were liquidated under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code on such date. The amount distributed to nonpriority unsecured creditors in Chapter 7 would be $ 9,246 , which is estimated to pay 6 % of the scheduled nonpriority debt. The plan proposes to pay 27 % of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured debt.

Plan Analysis

Total Payments Provided for Under the Plan
Class 1 (Priority Claims)	$8,916
Class 2 (Residence, current and arrearage)	6,000 (arrearage only)

Revestment shall be subject to all liens and encumbrances in existence when the case was filed, except those liens avoided by court order extinguished by operation of law. In the event the case is converted to a case under Chapter 7, 11, or 12 of the Bankruptcy Code, the property of the estate shall vest in accordance with applicable law. After confirmation of the plan, the Chapter 13 trustee shall have no further authority or fiduciary duty regarding use, sale, or refinance of property of the estate except to respond to any motion for proposed use, sale, or refinance as required by the local bankruptcy rules. Now that you've prepared all the necessary forms and drafted your repayment plan, it's time to file your case. Filing your papers with the court should be simple. This chapter explains how to gather the documents and information you'll need and file your case.

Gather the Necessary Documents

In addition to a sizable stack of official bankruptcy forms and your repayment plan, you must also submit a number of other papers. Along with your bankruptcy forms you will have to file:

- Exhibit D to your Petition, explaining your credit counseling status (see Ch. 7)
- your most recent tax return or a transcript of the return, and
- your wage stubs for the last 60 days, if you were working.

Credit Counseling

As explained in Ch. 1, almost everyone who files a consumer bankruptcy must first attend credit counseling. This credit counseling must be provided by an agency approved by the United States Trustee's Office within the 180-day period before you file for bankruptcy. The counseling can be done by phone, on the Internet, or in person. You can obtain a list of approved counselors by visiting the U.S. Trustee's Office website at www.justice.gov/ust (click "Credit Counseling & Debtor Education"). The agencies are listed by state, but you can use any agency in any state or region that is on the list.

Repayment Plans

The purpose of this counseling is to get you to sign up for a debt repayment plan instead of filing for bankruptcy. Indeed, if the plan makes sense and you believe you can faithfully make the payments required to complete it, you might reasonably consider signing up for it. However, keep in mind that even if you make the required payments on the plan month after month, the creditors can pull out of the plan if you later fall behind—and they can go after you for the remaining debt. If you then decide to file for bankruptcy protection, you will have paid back all that money for no good reason. This is why most bankruptcy professionals—including the authors of this book—discourage their clients from signing up for a debt repayment plan.

Counseling Fees

Most of these credit counseling agencies charge a modest sum ($50 to $100 is common) for the counseling, creating a repayment plan (if it gets that far), and the certificate of completion that you'll need to file with your other bankruptcy papers.

Agencies are legally required to offer their services without regard to your ability to pay. (11 U.S.C. § 111(c)(2)(B).) If an agency wants to charge more than you can afford, inform the agency of this legal requirement. If the agency doesn't back down, make notes of your conversations (including whom you talked to, what was said, and the date when you talked), and then inform the agency that you are going to report it to the U.S. Trustee's office for failing to take your poverty into account. If that doesn't bring down the price, go ahead and report the agency. You'll be doing others in your same situation a great favor.

Exceptions to the Counseling Requirement

You don't have to get counseling if the U.S. Trustee certifies that there is no appropriate agency available to you in the district where you will be filing. However, counseling can be provided by telephone or online if the U.S. Trustee approves, so it is unlikely that approved debt counseling will ever be "unavailable."

You can also avoid the requirement if you move the court to grant an exception and prove to the court's satisfaction that "exigent circumstances" prevented you from meeting the counseling requirement. This means both that:

- You had to file for bankruptcy immediately.
- You were unable to obtain counseling within five days after requesting it.

Many of the agencies on the U.S. Trustee's list will counsel you the same day you ask for it, so it will be tough to show that you couldn't get counseling when you requested it. In other words, once you decide to file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, you should immediately seek credit counseling and don't rely on the exigent circumstances exception.

A foreclosure may not be “exigent” enough. Some courts have found that a debtor who waits until the last minute to seek credit counseling might not qualify for an exception to the counseling requirement. For example, one court found that no exigent circumstances existed when a debtor filed for bankruptcy on the day of a scheduled foreclosure sale. In that case, the debtor claimed to have learned that he could file for bankruptcy—and that he would have to complete credit counseling—on the night before he filed.

If you can prove that you didn't receive credit counseling for this reason, you must file a certification with the court explaining your situation, then complete the counseling within 30 days after you file (you can ask the court to extend this deadline by 15 days).

You may also escape the credit counseling requirement if, after notice and hearing, the bankruptcy court determines that you couldn't participate because of:

- a physical disability that prevents you from attending counseling (this exception probably won't apply if the counseling is available on the Internet or over the phone)
- mental incapacity (you are unable to understand and benefit from the counseling), or
- your active duty in a military combat zone.

CAUTION

“Same-day” counseling might not count. Some courts have ruled that getting credit counseling on the same day you file for bankruptcy does not satisfy the requirement that the counseling take place “within 180 days prior to your filing date.” Other courts have allowed same-day counseling. To be safe, get your counseling no later than the day before you file.

Your Tax Return or Transcript

Under the new bankruptcy law, you are supposed to give the trustee your most recent IRS tax return no later than seven days before your creditors' meeting.

(11 U.S.C. § 521(e)(2).) You also have to provide the return to any creditor who asks for it. To protect your privacy, you can redact (black out) your date of birth and Social Security number. If you don't provide your tax return on time, your case will likely be dismissed.

If you can't find a copy of your most recent tax return, you can ask the IRS to give you a transcript of the basic information in your return—and you can use the transcript as a substitute for your return. Because it can take some time to receive the transcript (the IRS says two weeks), you should make your request as soon as you can. Of course, if you already have a copy of your most recent return, you needn't worry.

CAUTION

Your taxes must be current for the last four years.

Before you file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, you must be able to show that you have filed tax returns for the previous four years. If you are behind on your tax filings, contact an accountant, enrolled tax agent, or a tax preparation service right away.

Wage Stubs

If you are employed, you receive stubs or “advisements” with your paycheck. You are required to produce these stubs for the 60-day period before you file. If you have already tossed your stubs, you have three options: Ask your employer for copies; wait 60 days (and keep your stubs) before filing; or go ahead and file, hand over the stubs you have, and explain why you don't have 60 days' worth.

If you do not have an employer—for instance you are self-employed or operate a business as a sole proprietor—you won't have to produce wage stubs. However, most courts have a local form requiring you to declare the reason you aren't submitting wage stubs. Make sure to check for this local form before filing.

Get Filing Information From the Court

Every bankruptcy court has its own requirements for filing bankruptcy papers. If your papers don't meet these local requirements, the court clerk may reject them.

Follow These Rules to Stay Out of Trouble

If you keep these golden rules in mind, you'll save yourself a lot of time and trouble:

- Don't file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy unless you are sure it is the right choice (Ch. 1 explains how to decide whether bankruptcy makes sense and, if so, which type of bankruptcy will best suit your situation; also see Ch. 6).
- Don't file until you have completed all of your forms, prepared your repayment plan, and gathered your documents.
- Don't file until you have a certificate showing that you have completed your credit counseling.
- If you can, pay your filing fee in full rather than in installments, so you don't have to worry about your case being dismissed if you miss a payment.
- Be absolutely complete and honest in filling out your paperwork.
- File all of your documents at the same time (unless you have to file an emergency petition to stop an impending foreclosure, wage garnishment, or repossession, and you can't get all the paperwork done in time).
- If possible, don't file your case until you have your most recent federal tax return (or a transcript) in your hands, as well as proof that you have filed returns for the previous four years. If you haven't filed in the previous four years, contact an accountant, enrolled tax agent, or tax preparation service. You can still file if you are delinquent for these years, but you will have to prove currency by the date scheduled for your creditors' meeting, or, if the meeting is continued, no later than 120 days after you file. (11 U.S.C. § 1308.)
- Serve your most recent tax return (or transcript) on the trustee and any creditors who request it as soon after you file as possible. If you don't serve it on the trustee at least seven days before the creditors' meeting, your case could be dismissed.
- Immediately amend your paperwork if the trustee asks you to.
- Don't forget your personal financial management counseling. You won't receive a discharge until you get a certificate showing that you have completed this counseling, which you must file before the last payment is due under your Chapter 13 plan.

Number of Copies

Before filing your papers, find out how many copies your court requires. Most ask for an original and one copy. The original will be scanned into the court's database, and your copy will be "conformed" for your records. (A conformed copy is either stamped or receives a computer-generated label, with information showing that you filed, the date of your filing, your case number, and the tentative date of your creditors' meeting.) A few courts still require you to provide an original and four copies.

Order of Papers and Other Details

Every court has a preferred order in which it wants to receive the forms in the package you submit for filing. Most courts also have rules indicating whether the forms should be hole punched or stapled and other details. If you mess up, most clerks will put your forms in the correct order or punch and staple your papers in the right way. Some, however, will make you do it yourself. This can be a major pain if you are filing by mail. Every court has an exhibit of the standard Chapter 13 filing with the forms arranged correctly. If you want to get it right the first time, visit the court and carefully examine the court's sample filing, taking notes of which forms fall in which order.

How to File Your Papers

Gather up all of your forms and documents (make sure you have everything by checking your stack against the Bankruptcy Forms Checklist and Bankruptcy Documents Checklist, below). Then follow the instructions in this section to get everything properly filed.

CAUTION

Using a bankruptcy petition preparer increases the paperwork. If you use a petition preparer, there will be several additional forms to file.

Basic Filing Procedures

Step 1: Put all your bankruptcy forms in the proper order.

Step 2: Check that you, and your spouse if you're filing a joint petition, have signed and dated each form where required.

Step 3: Make the required number of copies, plus one additional copy for you to keep.

Step 4: Unless the court clerk will hole punch your papers when you file them, use a standard two-hole punch (copy centers have them) to punch the top center of your original set of bankruptcy papers. Don't staple any forms together.

Step 5: If you plan to mail your documents to the court, address a 9" x 12" envelope to yourself and affix adequate postage to handle one copy of all the paperwork. Although many people prefer to file by mail, we recommend that you personally take your papers to the bankruptcy court clerk if at all possible. Going to the court will give you a chance to correct minor mistakes on the spot.

Step 6: If you can pay the entire fee when you file, clip or staple a money order (courts don't accept checks), payable to "U.S. Bankruptcy Court," to your original set of papers. If you want to pay in installments, attach a completed Application and Order to Pay Filing Fee in Installments, plus any additional papers required by local rules. (See “Paying in Installments,” below.) Be aware that many courts will require you to appear in court and justify your request to file in installments. If at all possible, it’s a lot easier to pay the filing fee in full at the time of filing.

Step 7: Take or mail the original and copies of all forms to the correct bankruptcy court. (See Ch. 7 for more on finding the right court.)

Paying in Installments

You can pay in up to four installments over 120 days. You can ask the judge to give you extra time for a particular installment, but your entire fee must be paid within 180 days after you file. Some courts will require you to appear at a separate hearing a couple of weeks after you file to make your case for installment payments before the bankruptcy judge. If the judge refuses your request, you will be given some time to come up with the fees (probably ten days, perhaps longer). Because of this “appearance before the judge” requirement, many debtors prefer to raise the whole fee before filing and avoid the judge altogether.

If you are applying to pay in installments, you must file a completed Official Form 3A (Application and Order to Pay Filing Fee in Installments) when you file your petition. You can find a blank copy of this form in Appendix B.

CAUTION

If you are paying in installments, you can’t pay for the services of an attorney or bankruptcy petition preparer until you’ve completed your payments. This means you won’t be able to pay an attorney to help you with your plan when you need it most. This is another reason why it is better to pay your filing fee all at once if possible.

The Application is easy to fill out. At the top, fill in the name of the court (this is on Form 1—Voluntary Petition), your name (and your spouse’s name if you’re filing jointly), and “13” following the blank “Chapter.” Leave the Case No. space blank. Then enter:

- the total filing fee you must pay: $274 (Item 1)
- the amount you propose to pay when you file the petition (Item 4, first blank), and

- the amount and date you propose for each installment payment (Item 4, second, third, and fourth blanks).

You (and your spouse, if you’re filing jointly) must sign and date the Application. Leave the rest blank. As mentioned, the judge may require you to appear for a hearing at which the judge will decide whether to approve or modify your Application.

Emergency Filing

If you want to file for bankruptcy in a hurry—typically, to get the protection of the automatic stay—you can accomplish that (in most places) by filing your bankruptcy Petition, mailing matrix and cover sheet (if required by local rules), Form 21 (Statement of Social Security Number), and your credit counseling certificate. Some courts also require you to file a cover sheet and an order dismissing your Chapter 13 case, which will be processed if you don’t file the rest of your papers within 15 days. If the bankruptcy court for your district requires this form, you can get it from the court (possibly on its website), a local bankruptcy attorney, or a bankruptcy petition preparer.

If you don’t follow up by filing the additional documents within 15 days, your bankruptcy case will be dismissed. You can file again, if necessary. However, if your case was dismissed when you opposed a creditor’s request to lift the stay, you’ll have to wait 180 days to refile. And even if you don’t have to wait to file, you’ll have to ask the court to keep the automatic stay in effect once 30 days have passed after you file. (See Ch. 2.)

For an emergency filing, follow these steps:

Step 1: Check with the court to find out which local forms you must submit for an emergency filing.

Step 2: Fill in Form 1—Voluntary Petition (as directed in Ch. 7).

Step 3: On a mailing matrix (or whatever other form is required by your court), list all your creditors, as well as collection agencies, sheriffs, attorneys, and others who are seeking to collect debts from you. (See Ch. 7 for more information.)

Step 4: Fill in Form 21—Statement of Social Security Number.

Step 5: Make copies of your certificate of credit counseling.

Step 6: File the originals and the required number of copies, accompanied by your fee (or an application for payment of fee in installments) and a self-addressed envelope with the bankruptcy court. Keep copies of everything for your records.

Step 7: File all other required forms within 15 days. If you don't, your case will be dismissed.

CAUTION

Don't miss your deadline for the rest of your paperwork. Debtors who file under the emergency provisions often have their cases dismissed because they fail to get all of their paperwork filed within the 15-day deadline. If you file an emergency petition, calendar your filing deadline and make sure you get your papers in on time.

After You File

Filing a bankruptcy petition has a dramatic effect on your creditors and your property.

The Automatic Stay

The instant you file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, your creditors are subject to the automatic stay, as described in detail in Ch. 2. If you haven't read that chapter, now is the time to do it.

Property Ownership

When you file your bankruptcy papers, the trustee becomes the owner of all the property in your bankruptcy estate as of that date. However, the trustee won't actually take physical control of the property; it will return to your legal possession after your plan is confirmed. Until your plan is confirmed, do not throw out, give away, sell, or otherwise dispose of property you owned as of your filing date, unless and until the bankruptcy trustee says otherwise. If you have any questions about dealing with property after you file, ask the trustee or the trustee's staff.

If you are a sole proprietor with business inventory, the trustee takes legal control of your inventory, although you still keep physical control of it. Ask the trustee if you can continue running your business. Usually you can, but you must be prepared to account for any inventory you sell before your Chapter 13 plan is confirmed. If your business is a corporation or other entity, you will need to consult an attorney.

In a Chapter 13 case, with a few exceptions, the trustee has no claim to property you acquire or income you earn after you file. You are free to spend it as you please. The exceptions are: property from an insurance settlement, a marital settlement agreement, or an inheritance that you become entitled to receive within 180 days after your filing date. (See "Understanding Property Exemptions," in Ch. 5, for more information.) To the extent that this property is not exempt, it could increase the amount you have to pay your nonpriority, unsecured creditors in your plan.

You Can Pay Creditors After You File

You may be tempted to leave some creditors (like your doctor, dentist, or favorite electrician) off of your bankruptcy schedules, in order to stay in their good graces. That's not a good idea. You must list all of your creditors. But there is nothing to prevent you from paying a dischargeable debt after you file—as long as you don't do so with money from your bankruptcy estate.

If you plan to pay certain creditors despite your bankruptcy, let them know. This will lessen the sting from the notice of filing that they'll receive from the bankruptcy court. Although your promise is unenforceable, creditors will gladly accept your money.

Once you have filed all of your Chapter 13 bankruptcy papers, including your repayment plan, the bankruptcy trustee and the court take over. They will examine your papers and schedule court hearings. Your creditors also get into the act; it's time for them to file their claims, so they can get paid by the trustee once you start making plan payments. They may also object to your plan if they think they are getting shortchanged.

This chapter tells you how to move your bankruptcy case along once you file. You will probably have to make two or three brief court appearances and do some negotiating with creditors.

CAUTION

Emergency filing reminder. If you have not filed all your bankruptcy papers, you must do so within 15 days of when you filed your petition. (Bankruptcy Rules 1007(c), 3015(b).) If you do not, the bankruptcy court will dismiss your case and might even fine you.

The Automatic Stay

When you file your bankruptcy papers, the automatic stay will go into effect. (See Ch. 2 for detailed information on how the automatic stay works.) Creditors won't know about your case until they receive notice of your bankruptcy filing from the court, however. It might take several days—or weeks—for this notice to reach your creditors. If you want quicker results (particularly if you are facing aggressive collection efforts), you can send out your own notice. A sample letter is shown below.

The court almost always lifts (removes) the stay at the end of the confirmation hearing, because your creditors are now bound by your plan. This means they cannot sue you or take other action to get paid. Their only means of being paid is through the terms of the confirmed plan.

Notice to Creditor of Filing for Bankruptcy

Lynn Adams

East Lansing, MI 48823

June 15, 20xx

Cottons Clothing Store
745 Main Street
Lansing, MI 48915

Dear Cottons Clothing:

On June 14, 20xx, I filed a Voluntary Petition under Chapter 13 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code in the Bankruptcy Court for the Eastern District of Michigan.

The case number is 123-456-7890. No attorney is representing me. Under 11 U.S.C. § 362(a), you may not:

- take any action against me or my property to collect any debt
- file or pursue any lawsuit against me
- place a lien on my real or personal property
- take any property to satisfy an already recorded lien
- repossess any property in my possession
- discontinue any service or benefit currently being provided to me, or
- take any action to evict me from where I live.

A violation of these prohibitions may be considered contempt of court and punished accordingly.

Very truly yours,

Lynn Adams

Dealing With the Trustee

Within a few days after you file your bankruptcy petition, the bankruptcy court assigns a Chapter 13 trustee to oversee your case. You will receive a Notice of Appointment of Trustee from the court, giving the name, address, and phone number of the trustee. It may also include a list of any financial documents the trustee wants copies of, such as bank statements, canceled checks, and tax returns, and the date by which the trustee wants them.

Within a few days after the trustee is appointed, the court will send you and your creditors a Notice of Chapter 13 Bankruptcy Case. This notice usually contains:

- a summary of your Chapter 13 plan (if you filed it with your petition)
- an explanation of the automatic stay
- the date, time, and place of the meeting of creditors (see below)
- the date, time, and place of the confirmation hearing (see below), and
- the date by which creditors must file their claims (see below).

You may also receive a letter of introduction from the trustee explaining how this trustee runs a Chapter 13 case. For example, many trustees require you to make your payments by cashier's check or money order and don't accept personal checks or cash. The letter will probably remind you to make your first payment within 30 days of when you filed your petition.

Many Chapter 13 trustees play a fairly active role in the cases they administer. This is especially true in small suburban or rural judicial districts or districts with a lot of Chapter 13 bankruptcy cases. For example, a trustee may:

- give you financial advice and assistance, such as helping you create a realistic budget (the trustee cannot, however, give you legal advice)
- actively participate in modifying your plan at the meeting of the creditors, and
- participate at any hearing on the value of an item of secured property, possibly even hiring an appraiser.

For more information on the role of the Chapter 13 trustee, see Ch. 1.

Hold on to Property You Owned Before Filing

Once you file your bankruptcy papers, the property you owned before filing is under the supervision of the bankruptcy court. Don't throw out, give away, sell, or otherwise dispose of any property unless and until the bankruptcy trustee says otherwise.

Report Certain Property You Receive After Filing

Despite the trustee's great interest in your finances, your financial relationship with the trustee is not as stifling as it may sound. In general, you still have complete control over money and property you acquire after filing—as long as you make the payments called for under your repayment plan and you make all regular payments on your secured debts. If you don't make those payments, your creditors may object at the confirmation hearing or even file a motion to dismiss your case.

You can use income you earn after filing that's not going toward your plan payments to purchase everyday items such as groceries, personal effects, and clothing. If you have any questions about using your postfiling income, ask the Chapter 13 bankruptcy trustee.

If you receive certain kinds of property (or become entitled to receive it) within 180 days after filing for bankruptcy, you must report it to the bankruptcy trustee. Here's the list:

- property you inherit or become entitled to inherit
- property from a marital settlement agreement or divorce decree, or
- death benefits or life insurance policy proceeds.

If any of this property is nonexempt, you might have to modify your plan to make sure your unsecured creditors are still getting paid at least as much as they would have gotten if you had filed under Chapter 7. (Ch. 5 explains how to calculate how much your unsecured creditors are entitled to receive.)

Provide the Trustee With Proof of Insurance

If you are behind on payments on a secured debt, such as a car loan, and you plan to make up the payments and get back on track during your Chapter 13 case, you may have to give the trustee proof that you have adequate insurance on the collateral. This requirement is meant to protect the creditor if the collateral is destroyed or damaged.

Make Adequate Protection Payments

Within 30 days after you file for bankruptcy, you will have to start making payments (called adequate assurance payments or adequate protection payments) to secured creditors to cover the period between the date you file and the date your plan is confirmed. Usually, you will have to pay the same amount you were obligated to pay before you filed for bankruptcy. These payments are intended to protect the creditor's rights: The creditor cannot repossess the property or go after you for payment because of the automatic stay, so these payments protect the creditor's interest in the property before your repayment plan kicks in.

Make Your First Payment

Within 30 days after you file your petition, you must make the first payment proposed in your Chapter 13 repayment plan. This deadline usually comes up before the meeting of creditors, and always before your confirmation hearing. The reason you must make the payment so early is to show that you can, in fact, make the payments.

It's crucial to meet this first deadline. So that you don't forget, count out 30 days from the date you filed your petition and mark the deadline on a calendar. It might be better, though, to make the payment a little earlier—for example, the day after you get paid, so you'll be sure to have the funds. If your wages are currently subject to wage attachments, garnishments, or voluntary payroll deductions, call the trustee and ask for help in getting those removed so that you have the money to make your Chapter 13 payments.

If you do not make your first payment on time, the bankruptcy court can convert your case to a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, dismiss your case, or deny confirmation of your plan. A few courts consider the failure to make the first payment evidence that the plan was not submitted in good faith and is an abuse of the Chapter 13 bankruptcy system. In that case, the court would lift the automatic stay and allow your creditors to continue their collection efforts. If the court felt you were egregiously abusing the system—for example, this is the fourth Chapter 13 bankruptcy case you've filed without making payments in any of them—the court would likely dismiss your case and possibly fine you and bar you from ever filing for Chapter 13 bankruptcy again.

How a Typical Chapter 13 Bankruptcy Proceeds

Step	When It Happens
1. You file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy.
2. The automatic stay takes effect. It bars your creditors, once they learn of your filing, from taking any actions to collect what you owe.	When you file the bankruptcy petition
3. The court appoints a trustee to oversee your case. You will receive a Notice of Appointment of Trustee from the court.	Within a few days after you file the bankruptcy petition
4. The court sends you and your creditors a Notice of Chapter 13 Case , which usually contains: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • general information about Chapter 13 bankruptcy • a summary of your Chapter 13 plan • the date of the meeting of creditors • the date of the confirmation hearing, and • the deadline by which creditors must file their claims. 	Within a few days after you file your Chapter 13 plan
5. Creditors file written objections to your plan, if they wish.	At least 25 days before the confirmation hearing
6. You provide your most recent tax return to the trustee. You may black out certain personal information, such as your Social Security number.	At least seven days before the scheduled date of the first meeting of creditors

Step	When It Happens
7. You begin making payments under your repayment plan. (If your plan is never approved, the trustee will return your money, less administrative costs.)	Within 30 days after you file the bankruptcy petition
8. You attend the meeting of the creditors, where the trustee and any creditors who show up can ask you about information in your papers. A creditor may raise objections to your plan with the hope of getting you to modify it before the confirmation hearing. You must bring any documents the trustee requests and proof that you've filed tax returns for the last four years.	Within 40 days after you file the bankruptcy petition
9. You file a modified plan, if you wish.	Anytime before the confirmation hearing. You must send a copy of the modified plan to all creditors, who are entitled to 20 days' notice before the confirmation hearing. If you don't give 20 days' notice, you will have to schedule a new hearing date.
10. You attend the confirmation hearing, where the court addresses any objections raised by creditors or the trustee and approves your repayment plan.	The hearing must be held between 20 and 45 days after the creditors' meeting, unless the court wants to hold it earlier and there is no objection to the earlier date.
11. Creditors file their Proofs of Claim , specifying how much they are owed. You may also have to file Proofs of Claim for creditors.	Within 90 days after the creditor's meeting (180 days for creditors that are government agencies). If you have to file Proofs of Claim on behalf of creditors, you must do so within 30 days after the 90-day or 180-day limit.
12. You or the trustee files written objections to creditors' claims, if you have a reason to object.	As soon as possible after the creditors file their claims. You must notify your creditors at least 30 days in advance of the hearing on your objections.
13. The trustee sends you periodic statements showing: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • who has filed claims and for how much • how much money has been paid to each creditor, and • the balance due each creditor. 	Commonly, twice a year
14. You give the trustee annual income and expense statements.	Every year while your Chapter 13 plan is in effect, if requested by the court, trustee, U.S. Trustee, or a creditor
15. You file a Certificate (Form 23) showing that you completed a course in personal financial management.	Before you make your last plan payment
16. The court grants your discharge. The court may schedule a brief final court appearance called a "discharge hearing." If there's no discharge hearing, you'll be mailed formal notice of your discharge.	36 to 60 months after you file if you complete your plan payments; sooner if you seek and obtain a hardship discharge

If You Operate a Business

If you operate a business, by all means keep running it after you file your Chapter 13 papers. If your business has employees, don't forget to make all required payroll tax and withholding deposits with the IRS and your state taxing authority.

The trustee can require the following from you:

- an inventory of your business property, and
- a report on the recent operation of the business, including a statement of receipts and disbursements, if you didn't include one in your bankruptcy papers (you may have attached one to Schedule I—Current Income of Individual Debtor(s) or Form 7—Statement of Financial Affairs). (11 U.S.C. § 1304; Bankruptcy Rule 2015(c).)

As in a regular Chapter 13 case, you must file an income and expense statement every year through the life of your plan. If your net business income increases while the plan is in effect, the trustee may require you to amend the plan to reflect your higher income.

The trustee may also direct you to send notice of your bankruptcy case to all entities who hold money or property that belongs to you. This includes financial institutions where you have accounts, landlords and utility companies who hold security deposits, and insurance companies where you have business insurance with a cash surrender value. If the balance of the money or value of the property is significant and your plan provides little or no payment to your unsecured creditors, the trustee might try to take this money or property for them.

The Meeting of Creditors

Your first court appearance is a fairly informal one; the bankruptcy judge isn't even present. The purpose of the creditors' meeting is to allow the trustee and your creditors to ask you about the information in your bankruptcy papers, including your repayment plan. The trustee will want to be sure that you can make the payments you've proposed in your plan.

You (and your spouse, if you are filing jointly) must attend. If you don't, you may be fined $100 or so by the judge. Even worse, your case may be dismissed. If you know in advance that you can't attend the creditors' meeting, call the trustee and try to reschedule it.

Prepare for the Meeting

Before the meeting, call the trustee. Explain that you're proceeding without a lawyer and ask what records you're required to bring. Some courts require you to bring at least the following documents:

- file-stamped copies of all the papers you've filed with the bankruptcy court
- copies of all documents that describe your debts and property, such as bills, deeds, contracts, and licenses, and
- financial records, such as recent tax returns, checkbooks, and bank statements.

Bring proof of your state and federal tax filings for the previous four years to the creditors' meeting. Also be prepared for the trustee to ask you to hand over all of your major credit cards. (Not all trustees require this.) You should be able to hold on to your debit cards that have the Visa or MasterCard logo on them. This will give you a card to use for your online accounts and rental cars.

If you lack the necessary documents at the creditors' meeting, the trustee will postpone the meeting to a later date when you can produce them. Often, if you get the documents to the trustee before the rescheduled meeting, you won't have to appear again; the trustee will simply review your documents, then close the meeting.

If you are feeling anxious about the meeting of creditors, ask the trustee when and where the next scheduled meeting will occur. Then, attend the meeting. That way, you can observe the proceedings and get comfortable with the process before you have to attend your own meeting.

The night before the creditors' meeting, thoroughly review the papers you filed with the bankruptcy court. If you discover mistakes, make careful note of them. You'll probably have to correct your papers after the meeting, an easy process. (Instructions are below.)

If your papers are internally consistent and there are no problem areas, the trustee is likely to ask you very few questions, perhaps nothing more than whether you have provided complete and accurate information.

But sometimes the trustee may delve into a particular subject in more detail. For instance, the trustee may be interested in how you put a value on property such as real estate or a business. Or, if you recently sold some property, the trustee may want to know the details of the transaction and what you did with the proceeds. Or, if one part of your bankruptcy papers shows that you owe a debt but that debt hasn't been identified on the appropriate schedule, the trustee will want to know why. And finally, the trustee may want a better understanding of how your plan will pay your creditors.

Clearly, there are an infinite number of situations where the trustee may want to go deeper into the facts. So how can you prepare for this? The single best way is to do a complete and accurate job of preparing your bankruptcy papers in the first place. Then, as mentioned, carefully review your papers before the meeting to make sure you understand all the information they contain and how you arrived at particular estimates and appraisals. Even if you had your papers prepared by someone else, you and you alone are responsible for what goes in them.

Getting to the Meeting

Most creditors' meetings take place in a room in or near the bankruptcy courthouse or federal courthouse. The date and time of the meeting are commonly stated on the notice sent out by the court; if they are not, call the trustee to find out. Give yourself at least an extra 30 minutes to find the right place, park, find the right building, go through security, and find the right room.

CAUTION

You'll have to prove your identity. To show that you are really who you say you are, you'll need to produce a picture ID and official proof of your Social Security number, such as a Social Security card, wage stubs, or a passport. Failure to produce such documents will result in your meeting being reset for a later date. Also, you'll need your picture ID to gain entrance to the federal building where the meeting is being held.

When you get to the right room, look for the trustee. The trustee will probably be sitting at a table; lawyers may be milling around, waiting to ask questions. Ask the trustee if you have to "check in"—that is, give your name so the trustee knows you are present. Then just sit down and wait your turn.

Tight Court Security

On your way to any court hearing, you will probably spend some time getting through security. Like airports, federal buildings have metal detectors, but set to an even higher sensitivity. If you set the detector off, you'll have to empty your pockets, take off any offending articles, such as a jacket or belt, and go through again. If you set it off again, the security guard may scan your body with a hand-held metal detector. In addition, items you're carrying—such as a purse, briefcase, or knapsack—must go through an X-ray scanner. The security guard may confiscate objects such as pocket knives; you can reclaim them after your hearing.

What Happens at the Meeting

Most bankruptcy trustees set aside one or two days a month to hold Chapter 13 bankruptcy creditors' meetings. This means that when you show up for your meeting, many other people who have filed for bankruptcy will be there, too. And commonly, everyone is told to come at the same time. That means that 25 to 30 cases may all be scheduled for 9:00 a.m.

To get a rough idea of when your name will be called, check the schedule that should be posted outside the door. If your name is near the top of the list, you may not have too long to wait. If you're toward the bottom, you may be sitting there for quite some time. This time doesn't have to be wasted. The opportunity to observe other people at their meetings can be to your advantage; you'll quickly find out what to expect, where to stand, and maybe even what to say. And if you're nervous, watching other cases will probably help you calm down.

Your creditors' meeting, if it's typical, will last less than 15 minutes. When your name is called, you'll be asked to sit at a table near the front of the room. The trustee will swear you in and ask your name, address, and other identifying information. The trustee will also ask to see your photo ID and proof of Social Security number.

The trustee will briefly go over your forms with you, probably asking at least a few questions. Your answers should be both truthful and consistent with your bankruptcy papers. The trustee is likely to be most interested in the fairness of your plan (that is, that it treats all similarly situated creditors the same) and your ability to make the payments you have proposed.

If you have valued some of your property at or near the exemption limit, the trustee may question you more closely on how you came up with your valuation figures. For example, if you estimate that your home is worth $100,000, and your state's homestead exemption protects $100,000 worth of equity, the trustee may dig a little to see whether your property might be worth more. Depending on home price trends in your area when you file, the trustee might even initiate an independent appraisal in the hopes that the value of your property exceeds the homestead protection enough to add significantly to your nonexempt property—and, therefore, require an increase in plan payments to your unsecured creditors. The trustee will be motivated to take steps like these because of the commission fee structure: The more you pay into your plan, the more the trustee collects as a fee.

When the trustee is finished, any creditors who showed up will have a chance to question you. Often, secured creditors come, especially if they have any objections to the plan—for example, that the interest rate you propose is too low, the schedule takes too long to pay your arrearage, or the value you assigned the collateral is wrong (if you are proposing a cramdown). An unsecured creditor who is receiving very little under your plan might show up too, if that creditor thinks you can cut your expenses and increase your disposable income. Creditors may also challenge your exemption claims or the value assigned to property.

At the end of the meeting, be ready to negotiate. If you agree to make changes to accommodate a creditor's objections, you must submit a modified plan.

Modifying Your Plan Before the Confirmation Hearing

You have an absolute right to file a modified plan with the bankruptcy court any time before the confirmation hearing, and most Chapter 13 debtors modify their plan at least once. You must file the new plan with the bankruptcy court clerk, give a copy to the trustee, and send notice of the new plan to all of your creditors. The new plan replaces the old one.

Here are some common reasons to modify a plan:

- to correct errors—such as to add overlooked creditors or debts
- to reflect financial changes—such as a new job, a raise, an inheritance or insurance settlement, reduction in income, or destruction of property secured by a debt
- to reduce your proposed payments—for example, if you just lost your job or had your income reduced
- to respond to creditors' objections (for instance, that you undervalued property) or include terms you negotiated with a creditor at the end of the meeting of the creditors, or
- to add debts you incurred after filing. In general, you should not incur debts after you file, other than day-to-day expenses. (In fact, the trustee will probably make you hand over your credit cards.) You can modify your plan, however, to add any debts that are necessary for you to keep following your plan (such as a medical bill) or unanticipated debts (such as a tax bill). (This is covered in Ch. 12.)

Your creditors have a right to be notified about your proposed modifications—and your notice must be fairly specific. At a minimum, the notice must:

- identify the debtor (you)
- identify each creditor whose claim is affected by your modification
- describe your proposed modification with particularity (for instance, if you're proposing to reduce your payment to a creditor, your notice has to make that clear), and
- if secured property is involved, state (or restate) whether you plan to keep making payments or surrender the collateral.

(See In re Friday, 304 B.R. 537 (N.D. Ga. 2003).)

Rules for Providing Notice

Your notice to creditors must contain the last four digits of your Social Security number and of the creditor's account number (if any). You must send the notice to the contact address the creditor listed in its communications with the bankruptcy court. Alternatively, you may send it to the address listed on at least two written communications received from the creditor within the 90 days before you filed for bankruptcy. If you have not received any communications from the creditor during the 90-day period before you filed (because, for example, you asserted your right to prohibit the creditor from contacting you), you may send the notice to the address listed on the two most recent written communications from the creditor.

You'll find a blank "Notice of Plan Amendment" form in Appendix B, which you can use to notify creditors of your intent to amend the plan, and the date and time of the new confirmation hearing.

The Confirmation Hearing

A judge must approve your Chapter 13 plan for it to be valid. This is done at a confirmation hearing, where the judge addresses any objections raised by creditors or the trustee. If you are representing yourself, you (and your spouse, if you are filing jointly) must attend. In a few courts, a confirmation hearing is held only if a creditor has filed a formal motion objecting to the plan. If no hearing is scheduled, it means your plan is approved as filed.

The confirmation hearing must be held no sooner than 20 or later than 45 days after the creditors' meeting, unless the court wants to hold it earlier and no one objects. However, the deadline for filing proofs of claims—which creditors must file to get paid through your plan—is 90 days after the date set for the first creditors' meeting. Assuming that the creditors' meeting is actually held on the scheduled date (it usually is), creditors might not have to file their Proofs of Claim until 45 to 70 days after the confirmation hearing. This means that plans up for confirmation often have to estimate which debts will be paid, and in what amounts. If creditors file claims after the court approves your plan, you may need to pay more into the plan than you expected. Later, we explain how to handle claims that are filed late and when you should file a claim on a creditor's behalf.

Dealing With Disputed Debts

If you want to dispute whether you actually owe a particular debt, you'll need to file your objection with the court. The court will issue a ruling on whether you owe the debt. Similarly, you may need to ask the court to rule on whether a nondischargeable debt is dischargeable in your particular circumstances.

Ideally, you want the court to rule on your objection before your plan is confirmed. Otherwise you'll have to modify your plan if the court ultimately agrees with your objection. And until you get the court's ruling, you'll also have to start paying off the debt if these payments come due under your Chapter 13 plan. Unfortunately, many courts hold confirmation hearings early in the case—even as early as the creditors' meeting—so it may be difficult if not impossible to get a ruling prior to confirmation.

Prepare for the Confirmation Hearing

A few days before the confirmation hearing, review your plan and the objections raised by your creditors or trustee. If you're confident that you can make the payments under your plan and your plan is fair to your creditors, gather the documents that support your plan—such as pay stubs you filed with the court. You're ready to go.

If you think the objections might have some merit, you'll probably need to hit the law library. There, you can do a little legal research to see how bankruptcy appeals and federal appeals courts for your district have ruled in similar disputes. Ch. 15 suggests some excellent resources to help you do your bankruptcy research.

If you find cases that support your position, photocopy them and bring them to court. If you find material that supports the objection, be ready to modify your plan.

What Happens at the Confirmation Hearing

Most bankruptcy districts set aside one or two days a month to hold Chapter 13 bankruptcy confirmation hearings—and in many courts, confirmation hearings are scheduled at the same time as other hearings, such as hearings on motions to dismiss, motions to convert to Chapter 7, and motions to establish the value of property. The courtroom will probably be filled with people who have all been told to come at the same time.

Watch the cases before yours so you know where to go when your name is called. If your case is called first, just ask the judge, clerk, or trustee—whoever is calling the cases—where you should stand. The judge or court clerk will ask you to state your name.

Unlike a creditors' meeting, the confirmation hearing usually is run by a bankruptcy judge. Judges like to get easy cases in and out of their courtrooms as quickly as possible. This means that all uncontested matters will be heard first. Next will be cases where the outcome is fairly obvious—often motions to dismiss in cases where the plans were approved but the debtors have missed several payments. If the trustee or a creditor has filed an objection in your case, your confirmation hearing will probably be toward the end. Bring a big book with you.

The judge is most interested in your ability to make the payments under your plan and will question you about that or about plan provisions that are unclear.

After these questions, the judge will ask you whether any objections raised by the trustee or creditors have been resolved. If they haven't, the judge may ask the trustee or creditors to elaborate on their objections, ask you for any response, and then make a ruling. If the trustee doesn't think your plan is feasible, the trustee will raise that issue now. If the judge still has a lot of cases to get through, the judge may reschedule the rest of your hearing to a less busy day.

If the judge agrees with an objection, you will probably be allowed to submit a modified plan. (See "Modifying Your Plan After the Confirmation Hearing," below.) But if it's obvious that Chapter 13 bankruptcy just isn't realistic for you—for example, you earn very little money to pay into a plan—the judge will order that your case be dismissed or converted to Chapter 7 bankruptcy.

TIP

If you were already forced out of Chapter 7. If you had to file for Chapter 13 because you couldn't pass the means test (see Ch. 4), you may also be unable to propose a confirmable Chapter 13 repayment plan. If your income has declined since the six-month period before you filed, however, you may now find yourself eligible to use Chapter 7. (Remember, the means test is based on your average monthly income in the six months before you file.) Some lawyers believe that you can voluntarily convert to Chapter 7 regardless of your income, because the new law that creates the means test seems to apply only to those who file for Chapter 7 in the first place—not to people who convert from Chapter 13 to Chapter 7. (See, for example, In re Fox, 370 B.R. 639 (D. N.J. 2007).)

Income Deduction Orders

If you have a regular job with regular income, the bankruptcy judge may order, at the confirmation hearing, that your monthly plan payments be automatically deducted from your wages and sent to the bankruptcy court. (11 U.S.C. § 1325(c).) This is called an income deduction order. Income deduction orders work if you are regularly paid a salary or wages. They are almost impossible to use, however, if you are:

- self-employed
- funding your plan with public benefits, such as Social Security (the Social Security Act prohibits the Social Security Administration from complying with an income deduction order), or
- funding your plan with pension benefits—many pension plans prohibit the administrator from paying proceeds to anyone other than the beneficiary (you), which means that the administrator will ignore the income deduction order.

In many districts, the bankruptcy court automatically issues an income deduction order at the confirmation hearing—and possibly even earlier. In some districts, the bankruptcy court leaves it up to the debtor whether or not to issue an order. And in a few districts, the court doesn't issue the order unless you miss a payment in your plan.

You may not like the idea of the order, but the court is likely to deny your plan for lack of feasibility if you refuse to comply with it. And you should realize that the order will probably make it easier for you to complete your plan. The success rate of Chapter 13 cases is higher for debtors with income deduction orders than for debtors who pay the trustee themselves.

One benefit of an income deduction order is that it usually forbids your employer from making other deductions from your paycheck. This means that all wage attachments, garnishments, and voluntary payroll deductions will end (if they haven't already) when the order takes effect.

If the court does issue an income deduction order, you will have to find out from the court clerk or trustee who is responsible for preparing and giving your employer the order—the clerk, the trustee, or you. You might inform the payroll department at your job that you've filed for Chapter 13 bankruptcy and to expect an income deduction order from the bankruptcy court.

Once the income deduction order takes effect, you will need to tell the trustee if you change jobs. You can just call, or write a letter if you'd prefer.

Your Employer Can't Fire You for Filing for Bankruptcy

Don't be worried that your employer, who will learn of your bankruptcy when the income deduction order arrives, will fire you because you filed for bankruptcy. Employers rarely care. If your employer does punish you for having filed for bankruptcy, let someone in charge know that the Bankruptcy Act prohibits all private and public employers from terminating you or otherwise discriminating against you solely because you filed for bankruptcy. (See Ch. 14 for more on the laws against this kind of discrimination.)

The Judge's Order Confirming Your Plan

A court order granting confirmation of your repayment plan is binding on your creditors; they must accept the payments the trustee will make to them under the terms of your plan. This includes creditors who do not file claims by the deadline and creditors who objected to your plan. (11 U.S.C. § 1327(a).)

What Happens to Student Loans?

To discharge a student loan, a debtor must prove that repaying the loan would constitute an undue hardship (typically, a tough argument to win). To get around this requirement, some debtors try to get student loans discharged by including them in their Chapter 13 repayment plans as unsecured debts, without holding separate hearings. Most courts have rejected this strategy. The U.S. Supreme Court has agreed to decide whether a student loan can be discharged in a Chapter 13 plan without a showing of undue hardship or whether there must always be a court hearing on the undue hardship issue, regardless of what the plan provides. (The case is called Espinosa v. United Student Aid Funds, Inc., and a decision is expected in 2010.)

When the court approves your plan, you usually have to file an Order Confirming Chapter 13 Plan with the bankruptcy court clerk and send notice that your plan was confirmed to all your creditors. If the judge doesn't say anything, ask the judge if you must prepare the Order and send notice.

Below are a sample Order and sample notice form. To complete your own, type up the samples—filling in the information requested in italics. Attach a copy of your confirmed plan to the Order, and then file the Order and notice with the bankruptcy court clerk. After you've filed the papers, you must send a copy of the notice to each of your creditors.

Modifying Your Plan After the Confirmation Hearing

If your plan isn't confirmed at the hearing, the court will usually give you a certain amount of time in which to try again. If you don't submit a modified plan by the deadline (or if the court found that you acted in bad faith or that Chapter 13 is not a feasible option for you), the court will dismiss your case or convert it to a Chapter 7 bankruptcy case. In that situation, the trustee must return your payments to you, less administrative expenses.

NOTICE OF ENTRY OF ORDER CONFIRMING CHAPTER 13 PLAN TO ALL INTERESTED PARTIES AND THEIR ATTORNEYS OF RECORD

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN pursuant to Bankruptcy Rule 3020(c) of the Order Confirming Chapter 13 Plan entered on [date judge signed order] .

Debtor in Propria Persona

If you want to submit a modified plan, call the trustee and ask for an appointment. Then, if you don't already know, find out from the trustee what it will take to get your plan confirmed. If you do know, ask the trustee if the ideas you have to modify your plan are likely to be approved by the judge.

In most cases, you'll need to do one or more of the following to get your modified plan confirmed:

- extend your plan (if it's for less than five years)
- arrange to pay off your secured debt arrears faster
- change an interest rate on secured debt arrears
- increase the secured portion of a debt that is partially secured and partially unsecured
- create or eliminate a class of unsecured creditors, or
- increase the amount a particular class of creditors receives.

After you type up your modified plan, call the court and ask how many copies you need to submit when filing a modified Chapter 13 plan. (You may need to submit more than you did when you filed the original.) Next, call the trustee and ask who sends the modified plan to your creditors—you or the court. (If it's you, ask the trustee what procedure you should follow.) As with modifications before confirmation, it's very important that you give your creditors exact notice of your intended modifications. (See In re Friday, 304 B.R. 537 (N.D. Ga. 2003).) Otherwise, your modification may not be binding on any creditor who didn't get adequate notice.

When you file the modified plan, you will also need to schedule a new confirmation hearing. The hearing must be at least 25 days after you file the plan, so your creditors will have an opportunity to object. Call the court clerk to find out which dates are available for a hearing. Include the date and time of the hearing in your notice. (You'll find a blank Notice of Plan Amendment form in Appendix B, which you can use to notify creditors of the new hearing date and time.)

Amending Your Bankruptcy Forms

You have a right to amend the bankruptcy forms you have filed at any time before your final discharge. (You can also modify your plan after it's confirmed if the judge consents.) This means that if you made a mistake on your schedules, you can correct it easily. Also, you must amend your papers if you receive certain property within 180 days after filing. (These are described in "Dealing With the Trustee," above.) Some courts have local forms you must use for this purpose. Otherwise, all you do is file a corrected document, labeling it, for example, "Amended Schedule B."

SEE AN EXPERT

If the judge says "no." Bankruptcy rules state clearly that you have a right to amend any time before your case is closed. (Bankruptcy Rule 1009.) But judges sometimes balk. For instance, some courts may not let you amend your exemption schedule if it's too late for creditors to object to the exemptions you claimed. If you run into this problem, consult a bankruptcy attorney.

If your mistake means that notice of your bankruptcy filing must be sent to additional creditors (for instance, if you inadvertently left off a creditor who must be notified), you'll have to pay a fee to file the amendment. If your mistake doesn't require new notice (for example, you just add information about property you owned when you filed), you may not have to pay an additional filing fee. If you amend your schedules to add creditors before the meeting of creditors, you'll usually be required to provide the newly listed creditors with notice of the meeting as well as notice of your amendment.

If you become aware of debts or property that you should have included in your papers, amending your papers will help you avoid any suspicion that you're trying to conceal things from the trustee. If you fail to amend your papers in this situation and someone else discovers your error, the judge may dismiss your bankruptcy petition or rule that one or more of your debts is nondischargeable.

Common Amendments

Here are some of the more common reasons for amendments and the forms that you may need to amend.

CAUTION

Amend all relevant forms. Even a simple change in one form may require changes in several other forms. Exactly what forms you'll have to change depends on your court's rules.

Add or Delete Exempt Property on Schedule C

If you want to add or delete property from your list of exemptions, you must file an amended Schedule C. You may also need to change:

- Schedule A, if the property is real estate and not listed there
- Schedule B, if the property is personal property and not listed there
- Schedule D, if the property is collateral for a secured debt and isn't already listed
- Form 7—The Statement of Financial Affairs, if any transactions regarding the property weren't described on that form, or
- the mailing matrix (if your court requires one), if the exempt item is tied to a particular creditor who isn't listed.

Add or Delete Property on Schedules A or B

If you forgot to list some of your property on your schedules or you receive certain property within six months after filing (see “Dealing With the Trustee,” above), you may need to file amendments to:

- Schedule A, if the property is real estate
- Schedule B, if the property is personal property
- Schedule C, if the property was claimed as exempt or you want to claim it as exempt
- Schedule D, if the property is collateral for a secured debt
- Form 7—The Statement of Financial Affairs, if any transactions regarding the property haven't been described as required by that form, or
- the mailing matrix (if your court requires one), if the item is tied to a particular creditor who isn't listed.

Correct Your List of Creditors

To correct your list of creditors, you may need to amend:

- Schedule C, if the debt is secured and you plan to claim the collateral as exempt
- Schedule D, if the debt is a secured debt
- Schedule E, if the debt is a priority debt
- Schedule F, if the debt is unsecured
- Form 7—The Statement of Financial Affairs, if any transactions regarding the creditor haven't been described on that form, or

- the mailing matrix (if your court uses it), which contains the names and addresses of all your creditors.

How to File an Amendment

To make an amendment, take these steps:

- Step 1: Fill out the Amendment Cover Sheet in Appendix B, if no local form is required. Otherwise, use the local form.
- Step 2: Make copies of the blank forms you need to amend.
- Step 3: Check your local court rules or ask the court clerk whether you must retype the whole form to make the correction, or if you can just type the new information on another blank form. If you can't find the answer, ask a local bankruptcy lawyer or bankruptcy petition preparer. If it's acceptable to just type the new information, precede the information you're typing with “ADD:,” “CHANGE:,” or “DELETE:” as appropriate. At the bottom of the form, type “AMENDED” in capital letters.
- Step 4: Call or visit the court and ask what order you should put the papers in and how many copies it requires for amendments.
- Step 5: Make the required number of copies, plus one copy for yourself, one for the trustee, and one for each creditor affected by your amendment.
- Step 6: Have a friend or relative mail, first class, a copy of your amended papers to the bankruptcy trustee and to each creditor affected by your amendment.
- Step 7: Enter the name and complete address of every new creditor affected by your amendment on the Proof of Service by Mail (a copy is in Appendix B). Also enter the name and address of the bankruptcy trustee. Then have the person who mailed the amendments sign and date the Proof of Service.
- Step 8: Mail or take the original amendment and Proof of Service and copies to the bankruptcy court. Enclose or take a money order for the filing fee, if required. If you use the mail, enclose a self-addressed envelope so the clerk can return a file-stamped set of papers to you.

Filing a Change of Address

If you move while your bankruptcy case is still open, you must give the court, the trustee, and your creditors your new address. Here's how to do it:

- Step 1: Make one or two photocopies of the blank Notice of Change of Address and Proof of Service forms in Appendix B.
- Step 2: Fill in the Change of Address form.
- Step 3: Make one photocopy for the trustee, one for your records, and one for each creditor listed in Schedules D, E, and F or the mailing matrix.
- Step 4: Have a friend or relative mail a copy of the Notice of Change of Address to the trustee and to each creditor.
- Step 5: Complete the Proof of Service by Mail form, listing the bankruptcy trustee and the names and addresses of all creditors the Notice was mailed to. Have the person who did the mailing sign it.
- Step 6: File the original Notice of Change of Address and original Proof of Service with the bankruptcy court.

Filing Tax Returns

The court, a creditor, the trustee, or the U.S. Trustee may request that you file copies of your federal tax returns (or transcripts) with the bankruptcy court when you file those returns with the IRS, while your case is pending. This rule applies to returns for current years and for the three years before you file your bankruptcy petition. Because this rule is new, it's too soon to know whether these requests will be common or rare. But this much is clear: If you don't comply with a request to file your returns, your case will be dismissed.

Before you provide your returns to the court or a creditor, you can redact (black out) information that identifies you personally. The following information may be redacted:

- Social Security number. You may redact all but the last four digits of any Social Security number that appears in the documents.
- Names of minor children. You may redact the names and use only initials.
- Dates of birth. You may redact the day and month of birth and use only the year.

- Financial account numbers. If any account numbers are included, you may redact all but the last four digits.

Filing Annual Income and Expense Statements

The court, a creditor, the trustee, or the U.S. Trustee may request that you file an annual income and expense statement. This statement must include your income and expenditures during the most recently concluded tax year, and it must show how you calculated your income (both monthly and annually) and your expenses.

You must file the first statement 90 days after the end of the last tax year or one year after the date you filed your case (whichever is later), if your plan has not yet been confirmed by the later date. Once your plan is confirmed, you must file an annual statement at least 45 days before the anniversary of the date your plan is confirmed. It's hard to imagine that anyone will be paying close attention to these dates, as long as you are proceeding in good faith. Still, you should mark these dates on your calendar, just in case someone makes the request.

The income and expense statement must identify the amount and sources of your income, any person who contributed money to your household, and the amount that person contributed. Unless the trustee tells you otherwise, the best way to prepare this statement is to use blank copies of Schedules I and J to compute your annual and monthly income and your expenses.

Personal Financial Management Counseling

Before your last plan payment is due, you must complete a two-hour course in financial management and file a certificate of completion with the court. If you don't complete the course and file the certificate, the court can close your case without granting you a discharge. Although it isn't terribly difficult to reopen your case and file the certificate, it's better to avoid that extra step. When you file the certificate, you must also file Form 23; you'll find a sample copy below (Appendix B contains a blank copy).

DEBTOR'S CERTIFICATION OF COMPLETION OF POSTPETITION INSTRUCTIONAL COURSE CONCERNING PERSONAL FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT

Every individual debtor in a chapter 7, chapter 11 in which § 1141(d)(3) applies, or chapter 13 case must file this certification. If a joint petition is filed, each spouse must complete and file a separate certification. Complete one of the following statements and file by the deadline stated below:

■ I, Carrie Anne Edwards, the debtor in the above-styled case, hereby certify that on XX/XX/XXXX, I completed an instructional course in personal financial management provided by Consumer Credit Counseling Service, an approved personal financial management provider.

Certificate No. (if any): 4565433.

□ I, _____, the debtor in the above-styled case, hereby certify that no personal financial management course is required because of [Check the appropriate box.]:

□ Incapacity or disability, as defined in 11 U.S.C. § 109(h);

□ Active military duty in a military combat zone; or □ Residence in a district in which the United States trustee (or bankruptcy administrator) has determined that the approved instructional courses are not adequate at this time to serve the additional individuals who would otherwise be required to complete such courses.

Instructions: Use this form only to certify whether you completed a course in personal financial management. (Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(b)(7).) Do NOT use this form to file the certificate given to you by your prepetition credit counseling provider and do NOT include with the petition when filing your case.

Filing Deadlines: In a chapter 7 case, file within 45 days of the first date set for the meeting of creditors under § 341 of the Bankruptcy Code. In a chapter 11 or 13 case, file no later than the last payment made by the debtor as required by the plan or the filing of a motion for a discharge under § 1141(d)(5)(B) or § 1328(b) of the Code. (See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 1007(c).)

You must use an agency that's been approved by the U.S. Trustee's office. You can find a list of approved providers at the U.S. Trustee's website, www.justice.gov/ust. If you were satisfied with the agency that provided you with credit counseling before you filed your case, you can probably use it again—typically, the same agencies are approved to provide both types of counseling.

You might think that requiring you to complete this course is overkill. After all, to complete your repayment plan, you have had to live on a pretty strict budget for three to five years. Nevertheless, the court will require proof that you've completed this counseling before it will grant your discharge.

Form 283—Domestic Support and Homestead Exemption

Before you get your discharge, you must file a form certifying that you have paid any required domestic support obligations (child support and alimony). On the same form, you must provide information on your use of a homestead exemption, if applicable. This information is used to determine whether your homestead exemption should be limited because you were convicted of a felony or securities violation. Hopefully, this won't be an issue for most filers. You can find a blank copy of Form 283 in Appendix B.

Hopefully, your bankruptcy case will go smoothly, without any challenges or unexpected complications. In some situations, however, you might have to make an extra court appearance or two. This might happen if you need to ask the court to rule in your favor on an issue—for example, to eliminate a lien from your property. You might also have to defend against a creditor’s objections to your plan or object to a creditor’s claim for repayment. This chapter explains how to handle these types of contingencies.

Filing Motions

While your bankruptcy case is pending, you may learn that you need the judge to rule on a particular point. For example, you may have to modify your repayment plan (see Ch. 10) or have your debts discharged on the basis of hardship because you can’t complete your plan (see Ch. 13). Requests for the court to intervene in your case—to make a decision or take some action, for example—are called motions.

This chapter includes detailed instructions on filing motions to eliminate liens (see “Asking the Court to Eliminate Liens,” below), and much of that information applies no matter what type of motion you have to file. In this section, we briefly review the general requirements that apply to all motions brought in bankruptcy court.

There are two basic types of motions:

- ex parte motions, which are typically decided by the judge on the application of one party, without a hearing, and
- noticed motions, which give the other side enough time to come into court and oppose your request.

Ex Parte Motions

Ex parte motions are typically used when you are clearly entitled to the action you are asking the court to take. For example, let’s say you want to file a noticed motion to modify your repayment plan, but you can only give the creditor 20 days’ notice, rather than the 25 days generally required for a noticed motion. In this situation, you could file an ex parte motion seeking an “order shortening time.” With your motion, you also include an order for the judge to sign and a declaration—a statement you sign under penalty of perjury—explaining that you have contacted or tried to contact the other side and let them know what you are doing.

Ex parte motions can also be used to dismiss your Chapter 13 bankruptcy case, because you have an absolute right to do so.

Noticed Motions

Noticed motions are much more common. There are two basic types of notice:

- notice of the date and time of the hearing, and
- notice that the other side must schedule a hearing if it wants to contest your motion.

If you will schedule the hearing yourself, you will need to complete these papers:

- the notice of motion (you can use Form 20A—an official bankruptcy court form that we’ve included in Appendix B—as a template for your notice). Typically, you have to give the other side at least 25 days’ notice; if you don’t provide enough time, you’ll have to reschedule the hearing.
- the motion itself, which explains what you want the court to do and why
- one or more declarations, which are statements of facts written by a person with firsthand knowledge. the declaration must be signed under penalty of perjury
- a memorandum of points and authorities that briefly sets out the applicable law and explains why the motion should be granted, and
- a proof of service, which shows that someone (other than you) mailed the notice and motion to the other side.

To present a motion for which the other side has to schedule a hearing, you must file similar papers, but your notice won’t include the time and date of the hearing. Instead, it will tell the other side what to do if it wants to oppose your request. If the other side doesn’t respond within the 25-day notice period, you can file a request for default, asking the court to grant your motion. If you don’t file this request for default, nothing will happen to your motion. It will just sit there. (You'll find a sample notice and motion, as well as a sample request for default in "Asking the Court to Eliminate Liens," below.)

The party you bring the motion against can file a written opposition to the motion if it wishes, but it must do so at least five days before any hearing that has been scheduled. At the hearing, the judge will listen to you and the other side argue your points. Then, the judge will either announce a decision or take the matter under submission (think about it for a while). The judge typically files a written memorandum explaining the decision. The judge will also ask the party that won the motion to prepare a formal order.

Dealing With Creditors' Motions

In most Chapter 13 cases, you'll be able to work out any minor glitches as they arise. On rare occasions, however, a creditor throws a monkey wrench into the works by filing a motion that, if successful, could mean a major disruption or even a dismissal of your case.

If you are faced with a creditor motion, take heart: Even when creditors file motions to challenge your right to file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy or discharge a particular debt, few Chapter 13 trustees want to deal with them. Most trustees handle thousands of cases a year. They do not want to get involved in drawn-out court battles unless the result is likely to have an impact on many other debtors in your district. In most cases, the trustee will encourage you and the creditor to work things out without a hearing. Some trustees even discourage creditors from filing a lot of motions (and creditors need to stay on trustee's good side).

If you receive a motion from a creditor, you will have a certain period of time to file a written response. If you don't respond, you will mostly likely lose the motion. You will probably need to consult with a bankruptcy lawyer to help you prepare the response. You should also appear at the hearing. This is your opportunity to explain your position to the judge.

Here are a few common types of motions a creditor might file.

Objections to Your Eligibility to Use Chapter 13

A creditor might file a motion claiming that your debts exceed the Chapter 13 bankruptcy limits; as explained in Ch. 3, these limits are $360,475 for unsecured debts and $1,081,400 for secured debts. A creditor may raise this kind of objection if your liability for a debt is relatively certain (even though it hasn't yet been determined), and the creditor is afraid you'll wipe it out in bankruptcy.

EXAMPLE: A few years ago, you and a partner started a business. It failed, you both lost a lot of money, and your former partner blames you for the whole mess, with some justification. He has been threatening to sue you for the money he claims you are responsible for causing him to lose. During your business's lean times, you missed several house payments, didn't pay your personal income taxes, and charged up your credit cards. You have filed for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, and your plan proposes to pay only 10% of your unsecured debts. Your ex-partner objects, claiming that you owe him at least $400,000, which puts you over the limit for unsecured debts.

Motion for Adequate Protection

Your secured creditors will probably insist that you agree to protect the property securing their debts against loss, damage, or general depreciation. This is called providing adequate protection. (See Ch. 10 for more information.) The protection you provide could take the form of money, additional liens, or proof of insurance. If you refuse to provide adequate protection, the creditor may file a motion asking the court to order you to do so. If this happens, you might as well comply: Because the creditor has a right to protect its interest in the property, you have no chance of winning this type of motion.

Motion for Relief From the Automatic Stay

When you file for bankruptcy, the automatic stay prohibits most creditors from taking any action to collect the debts you owe them, unless and until the court says otherwise. If you have had two or more dismissals entered in bankruptcy cases within the past year, you are not protected by the automatic stay and will need a court order to protect you against actions by a specific creditor. If you have one dismissal entered in the past year, the automatic stay only lasts for 30 days, absent a court order. (For more on the automatic stay, see Ch. 2.)

In a Chapter 13 bankruptcy, the automatic stay bars creditors from going after the property and wages you acquire after you file your petition and before your confirmation hearing. The court almost always removes (lifts) the stay after the confirmation hearing, because your creditors are bound by your plan at that point. If the confirmation hearing is delayed, however, your creditors may file a motion asking the judge to lift the stay early. The court is likely to grant such a motion if any of the following are true:

- You refuse to provide adequate protection to a secured creditor. (See “Motion for Adequate Protection,” above.)
- Your filing is obviously in bad faith, or your plan is completely unfeasible.
- You have no equity in an item of secured property, and the creditor (who wants to repossess it) claims that you don’t need the item to carry out your Chapter 13 plan. You may be able to get around a motion that makes this argument if:
 - Your plan includes payments on the secured item.
 - You can show that you need the property to generate income. For example, you could argue that you need to keep a car because you have to drive to work and have no adequate alternative means of transportation.
 - The property is your family home. Many courts rule that the family home is always necessary. Some courts rule otherwise, however, if the creditor can show that comparable housing is available to you for less money. You would have to emphasize your children’s ties to their school and neighborhood, your proximity to work, and/or the cost of finding new housing and moving.

Motion to Lift Stay to Proceed With Foreclosure or Evictions

If your mortgage lender initiated foreclosure proceedings before you filed for bankruptcy, and the notice period required by your state law has passed (for example, three months in California), the lender will likely ask the court to lift the automatic stay so the lender can sell your property. Probably your only defense is to challenge the lender’s paper trail. For instance, because ownership of the mortgage may have been established by various electronic transactions, the lender may not now be able to prove ownership by presenting your original promissory note and security agreement or the necessary assignments to link itself to those original documents. If there isn’t a proper paper trail, the court may reject the motion to lift the stay because the house could not be sold. Because it will probably take the creditor some time to get the proper paperwork in order, this will give you extra time in your home.

The same basic rules apply to evictions: The bankruptcy court is likely to lift the automatic stay and allow the landlord to proceed with an eviction. And, in some cases, that might not even be necessary. If the landlord already has a judgment of possession when you file for bankruptcy, or the landlord wants to evict you for endangering the property or illegally using controlled substances on the premises, the automatic stay generally won’t apply to stop the eviction, except in the limited circumstances described in Ch. 2.

Motions to Dismiss by the Trustee and Others

Under the new bankruptcy law, creditors and trustees can file a variety of motions to dismiss your case. Typically, these motions argue that the filer failed to comply with procedural bankruptcy rules. For example, you might face:

- a motion by the trustee to dismiss your case because you failed to provide your most recent tax return at least seven days before the creditors’ meeting
- a motion by the trustee to dismiss or convert your case (to Chapter 7) if you fail to prove that you filed your tax returns for the previous four years

- a motion by the trustee, the U.S. Trustee, or a creditor to dismiss your case because you failed to provide them, on their request, with the income tax returns you filed while your case was pending
- A motion by the trustee to dismiss your case because you didn't stay current on your income tax filings, or
- a motion by an ex-spouse or the trustee to dismiss your case because you didn't stay current on your child support or alimony payments while your case was pending.

If the person bringing this type of motion is right—that is, you really didn't file your tax returns or stay current on your child support payments—your only defense is that the failure was beyond your control. If you can show, for example, that a natural disaster prevented you from filing your tax return on time, you might have a shot at success.

If an Unsecured Creditor Objects to Your Plan

It might seem odd to you that an unsecured creditor would object to your Chapter 13 plan. After all, in a Chapter 13 case, the creditor might get some money. By contrast, if you ignored the creditor or filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy, the creditor probably wouldn't get anything.

A creditor who objects to your plan isn't trying to derail your bankruptcy, however: Instead, the creditor wants you to modify your plan to ensure that you will be able to make the payments it requires. Because so many Chapter 13 filers eventually dismiss their cases or convert to Chapter 7, your creditors have good reason to doubt that you'll be able to follow through. A creditor objects to a plan precisely because the creditor wants it to succeed.

A creditor who objects to your plan will probably attend the creditors' meeting and try to convince you to modify your plan before the confirmation hearing, which typically takes place from 20 to 40 days after the creditors' meeting. For example, the mortgage holder on your home might want you to add attorneys' fees to the arrearage you'll pay—perhaps $50 more per month.

The creditor will probably also file formal papers, either a motion or an objection, with the bankruptcy court, asking the judge not to modify or confirm your plan as written. That way, in case you and the creditor can't reach an informal agreement, the judge will decide the issue. If the creditor doesn't file a motion or objection, the creditor can't raise the objection at your confirmation hearing.

CAUTION

If a creditor requests a deposition. It's rare, but a creditor who thinks you are hiding assets and could pay more into your plan might try to gather evidence about your finances through a formal legal process called "discovery." The discovery technique the creditor is most likely to use is a deposition (also called a "Rule 2004" examination in bankruptcy)—a proceeding in which you answer questions posed by the creditor's attorney orally, under oath, before a court reporter. If a creditor sends you a discovery request, the court will postpone the confirmation hearing to give the creditor time to gather evidence. If the creditor decides to take your deposition, pick up a copy of Nolo's Deposition Handbook, by Paul Bergman and Albert Moore.

This section describes the four most common objections creditors raise to Chapter 13 plans.

The Plan Is Not Submitted in Good Faith

Probably the most common objection creditors raise is that a Chapter 13 plan was not proposed in good faith. The bankruptcy rules don't define good faith, but bankruptcy courts will take this type of objection seriously if you have proposed a plan that appears to be impossible for you to carry through. If you filed your papers with the honest intention of getting back on your feet and making all payments required in a Chapter 13 case by the bankruptcy code (11 U.S.C. §§ 1322 and 1325), you should be able to overcome this objection.

Occasionally, creditors make a good-faith objection as a negotiating ploy. They want you to change your plan to satisfy them rather than argue the issue to the judge. If you think this is going on, you may need the help of a bankruptcy lawyer to figure out whether you have anything to worry about—that is, whether there are any valid, good-faith objections to your plan.

When a creditor makes a good-faith objection, most bankruptcy courts look at these factors:

- How often you have filed for bankruptcy. Filing multiple bankruptcies in and of itself does not show bad faith. If, however, you've filed and dismissed two or more other bankruptcy cases within a year, the court may find that you lack good faith if your papers are inconsistent or you can't show that your circumstances have changed since the previous dismissal. Changed circumstances sufficient to support a refiling might include:
 - an increase in your income
 - a reduction of your debt
 - a new job that will permit use of an income deduction order
 - your spouse's decision to file jointly with you, or
 - the end of a condition that required your previous dismissal, such as illness or unemployment.

The court might also find a lack of good faith if you file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy within four years after filing a case in which you received a Chapter 7 discharge, and you propose to pay your unsecured creditors substantially less than what you owe them. In this situation, the court may well find that you are using Chapter 13 to circumvent Chapter 7's prohibition on filing a second Chapter 7 case within eight years of receiving a prior discharge.

- The accuracy of your bankruptcy papers and statements. The court is likely to find a lack of good faith if you misrepresent your income, debts, expenses, or assets or you lie at the creditors' meeting or a deposition. Creditors will look for discrepancies by comparing your written and oral statements with credit applications and financial data you submitted to them—such as tax returns and bank statements. Even if your mistakes were purely accidental, the appearance of sloppiness (such as failing to mention property or minor debts, providing the wrong Social Security number, listing insufficient or incorrect information about creditors, or incorrectly valuing your property) will lead some courts to dismiss your case on the ground that you failed to meet your obligations as a debtor. If you discover any inaccuracy in your papers after you file them, be sure to point it out to the trustee at the creditors' meeting and promptly make the appropriate amendments.

- Your motive for filing for Chapter 13 bankruptcy. If you want to cure your mortgage default and get back on track with your house payments, pay off a tax debt, or get some breathing room to pay off your creditors, you have nothing to worry about. If the courts finds that you have either of the following motives, however, it might also find a lack of good faith:
 - You filed for bankruptcy solely to reject a lease or contract, such as a time-share or car lease.
 - You filed for bankruptcy to handle only one debt, other than mortgage arrears or back taxes. The court is particularly likely to find lack of good faith if you file only to pay a nondischargeable debt, such as a student loan or criminal fine.
- Your efforts to repay your debts. If you will pay your nonpriority, unsecured creditors less than the full amount you owe, you will have to show the court that you are stretching your budget as much as you can. The court will want to see that the expenses you deduct from your income when calculating your disposable income are reasonably necessary to support yourself and your dependents. You'll have few problems if you can show that you've eliminated payments on luxury items, depleted your investments, canceled your country club membership, brought down your living expenses, and increased your hours at work.
- The cause of your financial trouble. Bankruptcy courts are reluctant to find bad faith if your financial problems are due to events beyond your control, such as exceptional medical expenses or an accident, job loss, or death in the family.

The Plan Is Not Feasible

The second most likely objection is that your plan is not feasible—that is, that you won't be able to make required payments or comply with the other terms of the plan.

There are two arguments a creditor might make:

- Your Form 22C (along with Schedules I and J) do not show that you have enough income to pay all required debts. For instance, if you owe $35,000 in priority taxes but your current monthly income won't allow you to pay $583 a month ($34,980) for the next five years, you can't propose a feasible plan.

- Your income as shown in Schedule I (your actual current income) does not exceed your expenses as listed in Schedule J by enough to pay all required debts. If, on the other hand, your Schedule I income, when compared to your Schedule J expenses, is sufficient to pay all your mandatory debts, you may be able to propose a feasible plan even if you have nothing left over to pay your unsecured creditors. This will depend on whether or not your bankruptcy court lets you use your Schedules I and J to propose a feasible plan or whether you are forced to use the figures listed on Form 22C. (See Ch. 5 for more information.)

To contest a feasibility objection, you should assemble the documents that support your calculations. Bring your worksheets and any other documents (such as pay stubs, monthly bills, and so on) that show your income and expenses.

Your creditors might also question your job stability, the likelihood that you'll incur extraordinary expenses, and whether you have any outside sources of money. The court will likely find that your plan is not feasible—and refuse to confirm it—if any of the following is true:

- Your business has been failing, but you have predicted a rebound (on a wing and a prayer) and intend to use the proceeds to make your plan payments.
- You propose making plan payments from the proceeds of the sale of certain property, but a sale isn't imminent. For example, if your house has been on the market for a long time and you haven't received any offers, the court probably won't confirm a plan that depends on your house selling.
- Your plan includes a balloon payment, but you haven't identified a source of money you'll use to make the payment.
- You owe back child support or alimony and have been held in contempt of court for failing to pay.
- You've been convicted of a crime and face a likely jail sentence.

The Plan Is Not in the Best Interests of the Creditors

When you file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, you must pay your unsecured creditors at least as much as they would have received if you had filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy—in other words, you must pay them at least the value of your nonexempt property less the trustee's fee and costs of sale. (See Ch. 5 for more information on this requirement). This is called the “best interests of the creditors” test.

If a creditor raises this objection, review the material on this topic in Ch. 5 carefully, then prepare a written “liquidation analysis” that provides the value of the property (including how you came up with that value), the exemption you are claiming, the trustee's statutory commission, and the costs of sale, if any. The final result—the value of the property, less your exempt amount, the trustee's commission, and the costs of sale—is the proper value to use when determining whether your plan satisfies the best interests of the creditors. Bring documentation to the confirmation hearing that supports the value you've assigned to the property and the amount of any encumbrances against the property (which reduce your equity). You may be called on to negotiate one or more numbers in your liquidation analysis, but the burden will be on the creditor to prove why your numbers are wrong.

If you lose on this point, you'll need to raise the amount of your monthly payments to your nonpriority, unsecured creditors or extend the life of your plan (if it doesn't already last for five years).

The Plan Unfairly Discriminates

In your plan, you must specify which unsecured creditors will be paid in full and which, if any, will get less. To do that, you can create classes of unsecured creditors, specifying how much (or what percentage of your payments) each class will receive, as long as you do not unfairly discriminate against any particular creditor. (Classes of creditors are explained in Ch. 8.)

If a creditor objects to classes you've created, you can either fight it out in court at the confirmation hearing or amend your plan to eliminate the class. If you decide to fight, you'll need to research how courts in your bankruptcy district have ruled in similar cases. (See Ch. 15 for more on legal research.)

Handling Creditor Claims

After you file for bankruptcy, the trustee sends a notice of your bankruptcy filing to all the creditors you listed in your papers. In general, creditors who want to be paid must file a claim within 90 days after the meeting of creditors is first scheduled to be held. If the meeting is rescheduled, the deadline is still 90 days from the originally scheduled date.

Sometimes, a creditor you want to pay through your Chapter 13 plan forgets to file a claim. If this happens, you may have to file a Proof of Claim on behalf of the creditor. For example, if you want the trustee to pay the creditor under your plan and the trustee won't make the payment without a Proof of Claim, you will have to file one for the creditor. The time limit for filing a Proof of Claim on a creditor's behalf is short—you have only 30 days after the deadline the creditor missed to file your papers. (Bankruptcy Rule 3004.)

Filing a Proof of Claim on Behalf of a Creditor

Most claims are filed on an official court form. Most bankruptcy courts will also accept an informal document or letter, as long as it shows that the creditor intends to assert a claim.

A blank Proof of Claim form is in Appendix B. You must attach to the form evidence of your debt, such as your mortgage agreement, and any notice of default. Ask the trustee whether you should file it with the court clerk or directly with the trustee.

How the claim procedure works depends on whether the creditor is classified as secured, priority, or unsecured.

Secured creditors. The bankruptcy code does not expressly require secured creditors to file claims in order to be paid, but few trustees will pay secured creditors unless there's a claim on file. (Even if a secured creditor doesn't file a claim, however, the creditor's lien stays on the property.)

CAUTION

To pay arrearages on a secured debt, you must file a proof of claim. If you want to make up missed payments on a secured debt in your Chapter 13 case and the secured creditor doesn't file a claim, you will have to file it on the creditor's behalf. For example, if you have missed three house payments, but the lender doesn't file a claim, the trustee won't pay your arrearages through your plan unless you file the claim yourself. If you don't, the lender would probably ask the court for permission to proceed with a foreclosure.

Priority creditors. Priority creditors must file a claim to be paid. Most priority creditors must file the claim within 90 days after the date set for the first meeting of creditors. Government agencies must file a Proof of Claim within 180 days after the date you filed your case. The government can get an extension if it formally requests one before the 180 days expire. (Bankruptcy Rule 3002(c)(1).) The IRS is notoriously late at filing claims, but it is usually granted extensions.

Nonpriority, unsecured creditors. Nonpriority, unsecured creditors must file a claim to be paid. If a nonpriority, unsecured creditor does not, that creditor's debt will be discharged when you complete your plan, unless the debt is nondischargeable.

If you want to pay a nondischargeable unsecured debt through your Chapter 13 plan (to avoid having the debt remain after your case ends) and the creditor doesn't file a claim, you will have to file it on the creditor's behalf.

Objecting to a Creditor's Claim

Unless you file a written objection to a creditor's claim, the trustee will pay the claim. (In bankruptcy legalese, claims the trustee pays are called "allowed" claims.) You can file an objection at any time, but the sooner the better. You'll have to give notice and schedule a court hearing, at which the creditor must prove you owe the claim. This is where you get to contest the validity of a disputed debt, such as a tax debt.

Use Form 20A to give notice of your objection; you'll find a blank copy in Appendix B.

Possible reasons for objecting to a creditor's claim include:

- You owe less than the creditor claims you do.
- A secured creditor has overstated the value of the collateral.
- The creditor has characterized the debt as secured (meaning you'll have to pay it in full), and you think it's unsecured.

- The claim was filed late. Most courts disallow late claims. Some, however, allow late claims if the creditor shows “excusable neglect” or another good reason for the failure to file on time.
- The creditor hasn’t provided a paper trail proving that it owns the lien—for example, the creditor can’t come up with a copy of your original promissory note and security agreement or can’t produce assignments linking itself to those original documents.

Objecting to a Proof of Claim for a Credit Card Debt

The court will presume that a Proof of Claim submitted on a credit card debt (most likely by your credit card company) is valid if it is accompanied by a summary statement that:

- identifies the debtor’s (your) name and account number
- states the amount of the debt before the bankruptcy filing date
- is presented in the form of a business record or other reliable format, and
- breaks down any added charges, such as interest, late fees, and attorneys’ fees.

If the Proof of Claim includes this information, then you have the burden of refuting the claim as part of your objection. If the Proof of Claim doesn’t include this information, the creditor must prove the claim. Finally, if the holder of the claim is not the original creditor, the creditor must provide documentation that ownership of the claim has been transferred, in addition to providing the other information. (See In re Armstrong, 320 B.R. 97 (N.D. Tex. 2005).)

If you are proposing to pay a very small percentage of your nonpriority, unsecured debt, it may not be worth your time to object to a credit card claim. Even if you win, that just means you will have to pay your other nonpriority, unsecured creditors a little more. Remember, the amount you have to pay to these creditors is based on your disposable income. You shouldn’t spend time worrying about which creditors get what. Or, as the old saying goes, “Don’t sweat the small stuff.”

Asking the Court to Eliminate Liens

During your Chapter 13 case, you may be able to get the court to reduce or eliminate liens on your property. If you succeed, you’ll still owe the debt, but it will be unsecured. The creditor then shares in what you are paying your other unsecured creditors and you keep the property. Even if you’re paying your other unsecured creditors 100%, avoiding the lien is still worthwhile, because you get to keep your property with clear title. (See In re Lane, 280 F.3d 663 (6th Cir. 2002).)

Which Liens Can Be Avoided

Lien avoidance is a procedure by which you ask the bankruptcy court to allow you to “avoid” (eliminate or reduce) certain liens. If your Chapter 13 repayment plan proposes to pay nothing or very little on your unsecured debts, lien avoidance makes a lot of sense. As long as there’s a lien, you have to pay it in full to keep your secured property.

Lien avoidance is available only in very limited circumstances, and only for certain types of liens.

Security Interest Liens

A security interest is a secured debt you take on voluntarily, by pledging property as collateral for the debt. The creditor’s interest in the collateral is secured by a lien. Common security interests include mortgages, home equity loans, car loans, store charges that contain a security agreement, and bank loans for which you pledge collateral.

You can avoid a security interest lien only if it meets these criteria:

1. You obtained the loan by pledging property you already own (not property you purchased with the loan). This is called a nonpossessory, nonpurchase-money security interest. It sounds complicated, but it’s easier to understand when you break it down:
 - Nonpossessory means the creditor does not physically keep the property you pledge as collateral—you do. (In contrast, if you leave your property at a pawn shop to get a loan, that would be a possessory security interest, for which lien avoidance is not available.)

- Nonpurchase money means you didn't use the money from the loan to buy the collateral.
- Security interest means the lien was created by agreement between you and the creditor.

2. The property you pledged is exempt. Exemptions are explained in Ch. 5.

3. The collateral you pledged fits into certain categories of property. These categories are:

- household furnishings, household goods, clothing, appliances, books, musical instruments, or jewelry that is primarily for your personal, family, or household use
- health aids professionally prescribed for you or a dependent
- animals or crops held primarily for your personal, family, or household use (but only the first $5,000 of the lien can be avoided), or
- implements, professional books, or tools used in a trade (yours or a dependent's), but only the first $5,000 of the lien can be avoided.

These rules prevent you from eliminating liens on real estate or on motor vehicles, unless the vehicle is a tool of your trade. Generally, a vehicle is not considered a tool of the trade unless it is an integral part of your business—for example, you are a door-to-door salesperson or make deliveries. If you just use your vehicle to get to and from work, it isn't considered a tool of the trade, even if you have no other way to commute.

Stripping Liens From Your Home

If you have a second lien on your home that is no longer secured by your home's value, you can file a motion to strip the lien from the home. For instance, assume your first mortgage is for $250,000, your second mortgage is for $50,000, and your home is worth $225,000. Because your home's value is less than the amount of the first mortgage, there is no value in the home that secures the second mortgage. By stripping this lien, your second mortgage will be converted from a secured debt to an unsecured debt (which it is, at least at the time you file), and your plan will pay off the second mortgage only to the extent you are paying the rest of your unsecured, nonpriority debt (most likely, pennies on the dollar).

Nonconsensual Liens

A nonconsensual lien—a secured debt that you didn't agree to—can be avoided only if:

- It's a judicial lien.
- You can claim the property as exempt.
- The lien, if honored, would deprive you of your full exemption.

You can remove judicial liens from any exempt property, including real estate and cars.

Tax Liens

If your federal tax debt is secured, you may have a basis for challenging the lien. Quite often, the IRS makes mistakes when it records a notice of federal tax lien.

SEE AN EXPERT

Talk to a lawyer. You will need the help of a tax or bankruptcy attorney—preferably one who has experience in both areas—to challenge a tax lien.

Here are some possible grounds for asking the court to remove a tax lien:

- The notice of federal tax lien was never recorded, though the IRS claims it was.
- The notice of federal tax lien was recorded after the automatic stay took effect.
- The notice of federal tax lien was recorded in the wrong county—it must be recorded where you own real estate for it to attach to the real estate in that county.
- The notice of federal tax lien was recorded against the wrong assets, such as your child's house, not yours.

Even if the notice of federal tax lien was recorded correctly, you still may have a basis to fight it if:

- The lien expired (liens last only ten years).
- The lien is based on an invalid tax assessment by the IRS.

Making a Motion to Avoid a Lien

You request lien avoidance by typing and filing a motion. It is quite simple and can be done without a lawyer. In most courts, you must file your motion with the court within 30 days after you file for bankruptcy. But some courts require you to file these motions before the creditors' meeting. Check your local rules.

You will need to fill out one complete set of forms for each affected creditor—generally, each creditor holding a lien on that property. Sample forms are shown below. Some courts have their own forms; if yours does, use them and adapt these instructions to fit.

Most courts consider a motion to avoid a lien as a matter that can be settled by default—in other words, if the creditor doesn't bother to respond, the judge can rule in your favor. The law is very clear about when a lien can be avoided. If your papers indicate that you meet these requirements, the creditor will most likely see no point in opposing ("contesting") the matter. This means that your first set of papers should notify the creditor that if he or she hasn't filed a response to your motion within a particular period of time—usually 25 days—the court will rule in your favor. Your notice should also explain that if the creditor wants to contest your motion, it's the creditor's job to arrange a hearing on the matter.

Although we provide sample motions to avoid liens below, you'll also need to check the local rules issued by your district's bankruptcy court. Local rules can get into some picayune details, from the exact wording of the notice you must send the creditor to the procedures for setting up a hearing if the creditor contests your motion. In some areas the rules require you to set a hearing, on the assumption that the creditor will want to contest your motion. Local rules also govern such mundane matters as whether numbered papers must be used and how to attach any exhibits that accompany the papers.

If the creditor requests a hearing, the local rules will explain what actions you should take, if any. In addition to procedural actions, such as filing a response to the creditor's request, you'll be required to prove, at a minimum, that the lien would impair your exemption on the property if you were required to pay it.

If the creditor doesn't request a hearing, you'll be required to file a proposed order and a request to enter a default. Your local rules will also govern this procedure.

The sample papers provided below assume that you are in a district where motions to avoid liens may proceed without the creditor's reply ("by default").

The language in the sample notice is based on Local Rule 9014-1 for the Northern District of California bankruptcy court.

In Chapter 13 cases, the most common type of motion to avoid a lien involves a lien that a creditor has placed on a house as a result of a court judgment. This motion is titled Motion to Avoid Judicial Lien on Real Estate, so our samples are based on this scenario. Other types of motions to avoid liens will normally follow the same procedures, although the exact wording of the motions will differ.

- Step 1: If your court publishes local rules, refer to them for time limits, format of papers, and other details of a motion proceeding.
- Step 2: Type the top half of the pleading form (where you list your name, the court, case number, and so on), following the examples shown below. This part of the form is known as the caption. It is the same for all pleadings.
- Step 3: If you're using a computer to prepare the forms, save the caption portion and reuse it for other pleadings. If you're using a typewriter to prepare the forms, stop when you've typed the caption, and photocopy the page you've made so far, so you can reuse it for other pleadings.
- Step 4: Using one of the copies that you just made, start typing again just below the caption and prepare a Notice of Motion and Motion to Avoid Judicial Lien on Real Estate as shown in the sample.
- Step 5: Prepare a separate proof of service as shown in the example. Note that the proof of service must include the trustee and the U.S. Trustee as well as the creditor. If the creditor is a corporation, the proof of service must identify a specific person as the object of the service. This involves calling the corporation and asking the name and title of the person who accepts service for it. If the corporation holding the lien is no longer active—for instance it has merged with another corporation—ask the current corporation who should be served for the defunct corporation. You can also often get the name of the person who should be served by contacting the agency responsible for corporate filings in your state (usually the secretary of state). They will usually be able to give you the appropriate person to be served.

- Step 6: Make at least three extra copies of all forms.
- Step 7: Keep the proofs of service. Have a friend mail one copy of the motion, notice of motion, and proposed order to each affected creditor and the trustee.
- Step 8: File (in person or by mail) the original (signed) notice of motion, motion, and proof of service with the bankruptcy court. There should be no fee.
- Step 9: Wait the required period of time for a response from the creditor (usually 20–25 calendar days). If no response arrives, prepare a Request for Entry of Order by Default, a proposed order, and a proof of service, as shown in the samples. If you receive a response, the response will, in most districts, provide you with notice of a hearing that has been scheduled by the creditor. Under most local rules, the creditor's response will also contain a memorandum of points and authorities as to why your motion should be denied. However, your local rules may instead require you to set the hearing and to provide points and authorities as to why your motion should be granted.
- Step 10: If you receive no response to your motion, serve the Request for Entry of Default and proposed order on the creditor, trustee, and U.S. Trustee.
- Step 11: File the Request for Entry of Default and proposed order with the court, including the proof of service as shown in the sample.
- Step 12: The court should sign your proposed order and mail it back to you.

Step 13: Obtain a certified copy of the order from the court clerk. Ask the clerk what the fees are for this service.

Step 14: Even though the court's order requires the creditor to remove the lien from your records, you should independently record the certified copy of the order with the land records office where your real estate is recorded. This will operate to remove the lien from the official records.

Scheduling a Hearing

To schedule a hearing, call the court clerk and give your name and case number. Say that you'd like to file a motion to avoid a lien and need to find out when and where the judge will hear arguments on your motion. In some districts, the court hears certain matters on certain days, and you will be able to choose the available day and time when you want your motion heard. In other districts, the local rules require the clerk to set a hearing date for you. In either case, ask for a date at least 31 days in the future, because you'll have to mail notice of your motion to the creditor at least 30 days in advance of the hearing—in order to ensure the 25-day notice—unless your local rules require something different. Write down the information the clerk gives you.

If the clerk won't permit you to take care of these matters by phone, go to the court with a copy of your motion filled out. File the form and schedule the hearing. Write down the information about when and where your motion will be heard by the judge and then serve the papers by mail.

Once the court has approved your repayment plan, you should be in for smooth sailing as long as you make your monthly payments. If an unforeseen problem arises, and you think you're going to have trouble making a payment, notify the trustee as quickly as you can. The trustee wants you to succeed and will help you over the rough spots.

You may be wondering why the trustee cares whether you are successful with your Chapter 13 plan. The answer, of course, is money. Remember, the trustee gets a cut of everything paid to creditors under your plan. If you have to convert to Chapter 7 or your case is dismissed, the trustee's income from your case will be cut off.

Making Plan Payments

By the time your plan is confirmed, you will have made at least one plan payment, and probably more. The hardest part of Chapter 13 bankruptcy is making those payments.

Prepare for Postconfirmation Creditor Claims

You probably feel like you are stretching as far as you can to make your plan payments every month and still have enough to take care of your day-to-day needs. But sometimes, it's a good idea to reach even a little deeper into your pocket and come up with a few extra dollars to add to each payment. Here's why.

Creditors often file claims with the bankruptcy court after the judge approves your repayment plan at the confirmation hearing. Unless you regularly ask the trustee for a list of claims filed by creditors, you won't know who has filed claims.

Claims filed after your plan is confirmed can cause problems, for a number of reasons:

- If you forgot about a creditor (didn't list the creditor in your papers), but the creditor somehow hears about your bankruptcy and files a claim, the trustee will probably pay that creditor.
- If a creditor files a claim for more than the amount you think you owe, the trustee could end up paying out more than you had anticipated, especially if your plan pays each creditor a percentage of their claim, not a set dollar amount.

- If a creditor files a claim for payment of a secured debt (meaning you'll have to pay it in full) and you mistakenly thought it was unsecured, the trustee will probably pay that creditor more than you planned. This is often the situation with Sears—someone charges items on a Sears card and assumes the debt is unsecured. Sears's paperwork states, however, that Sears takes a security interest in all items paid for using its card, so those debts are secured.

To avoid underpaying your creditors in your Chapter 13 plan, it's a good idea to include an extra few dollars ($5, $10, $25—whatever you can afford) in each payment. Keep this up until the time for making claims has passed. If you're paying the trustee directly, tell the trustee why you're adding a few dollars. If the court has issued an income deduction order, send the trustee a few extra dollars yourself each month.

If no creditor files a claim you hadn't anticipated, you will simply complete your plan early. On the other hand, if you don't add the money and creditors you hadn't thought of do file claims, you will probably still owe some money at the end of your Chapter 13 case. You will have to either pay a lump sum to make up what you still owe or ask the court to extend your plan (but only if it lasted less than five years; plans may not last longer than that).

To keep track of the new claims, you can monitor your case file at the bankruptcy court during the 90 days following the meeting of the creditors (the deadline for creditors other than governmental agencies to file Proofs of Claim). If you disagree with any of the claims filed, you will have to file a motion objecting to the claim. (See Ch. 11 for more information on objecting to a claim.)

If Your Income Increases

There are a couple of ways for the trustee to keep track of your income as your case proceeds. You may be asked to submit an annual income and expense statement to the trustee (and to any creditor who requests one). In addition, you must remain current on your tax returns throughout your case and provide a copy of your tax return to the trustee (and to any creditor who makes a request). (For more information on these requirements, see Ch. 10.) From these documents, the trustee can determine whether your income has increased.

If your financial condition improves sufficiently to allow you to pay more to your unsecured creditors (assuming your plan doesn't provide for them to be paid in full), the trustee or an unsecured creditor may file a motion with the bankruptcy court to amend your plan. The motion will request that the court order you to increase each payment, pay a lump sum amount (especially if you've inherited valuable property or won the lottery), or extend your plan (unless it already lasts for five years). The bankruptcy court will most likely grant the motion.

If You Get a Windfall

If you win the lottery, get a substantial raise, or receive an inheritance, or if your house goes way up in value, you may be able to dismiss your case and pay off your debts outside of bankruptcy. But keep in mind that the interest (and sometimes the penalties) on your debts that stopped accruing while you were in bankruptcy can be added back when you dismiss your case. And, don't assume you can use the equity in your home to apply for and obtain a loan. Don't dismiss your case and then apply for the loan. If you are rejected, you'll just have to refile for bankruptcy.

Selling Property

Certain property remains under the control of the bankruptcy court even after your plan is approved. (See Ch. 10 for more information.) If you want to sell any of this property, the court (or in some cases, the trustee) will have to approve the sale. And your unsecured creditors might object if you'd pocket any cash left over after paying off any liens on the property, rather than use it to pay their claims.

Modifying Your Plan When Problems Come Up

Chapter 13 bankruptcy isn't easy. You must live under a strict budget for three to five years. Problems are bound to arise. Fortunately, the Chapter 13 bankruptcy system has built-in procedures designed to handle the disruptions. Any time after your plan is confirmed, you, the trustee, or an unsecured creditor who filed a claim can file a motion with the court, asking permission to modify the plan.

This section discusses five common situations in which you might need to modify your plan. If you think you want to modify your plan, call the trustee and ask for help in filing your motion and scheduling your hearing before the judge. Your creditors will have to be sent notice of your motion at least 20 days before the hearing date. (Bankruptcy Rule 2002(a)(6).) Ask the trustee whether you or the trustee will send the notice.

The court hearing on modification of the plan is just like the original confirmation hearing. The rules and procedures are discussed in Ch. 10.

Your modified plan cannot last more than five years after the date your plan originally began.

You Miss a Payment

If the trustee doesn't receive a plan payment, expect a phone call. Sometimes, the problem will be easy to solve—the payment got lost in the mail, your employer forgot to send it (if there is an income deduction order), or you changed jobs and forgot to change the income deduction order.

If you missed the payment because you are struggling to make ends meet, resolving the problem may be more complicated. But don't lose heart. If the problem looks temporary, and you are several months or years into your plan, the trustee may suggest that you modify your plan to do any of the following:

- skip a few payments altogether, meaning your unsecured creditors would receive less than you originally proposed
- skip a few payments now and extend your plan to make them up, assuming your plan is not already scheduled to last five years
- make a lump sum payment to make up the payments you've missed, or
- increase several payments to cover the payments you missed.

If the problem looks likely to continue, or it happens very early in your Chapter 13 case, the trustee is less likely to support a modification of your plan. Instead, the trustee (or a creditor) is likely to file a motion to have your case dismissed or require you to convert to Chapter 7.

If you file a motion to modify your plan because you've missed some payments, a creditor may ask that the modified plan contain what is called a drop dead clause. Such a clause provides that if you miss another payment, your case will automatically convert to Chapter 7 bankruptcy or be dismissed by the court. Many courts include drop dead clauses in modified plans.

Your plan payment isn't the only payment you might miss. If the court approved your request to make direct payments to certain creditors (such as a mortgage lender) and you miss a payment, the creditor will run to the court. Most likely, the creditor will file a motion to have the automatic stay lifted, which would let the creditor go after any property you've acquired since filing for bankruptcy. Alternatively, the creditor may ask the court to dismiss your case or convert it to Chapter 7. If it's early in your plan and you haven't missed any other payments, ask the court for permission to modify your plan to pay the new arrears immediately.

Your Disposable Income Decreases

You wouldn't have filed for Chapter 13 bankruptcy if you hadn't had debt problems in your past—perhaps because of job losses or reduced work hours. Filing for bankruptcy doesn't make those kinds of problems go away.

If your income goes down, you or your spouse suffers a serious illness or goes on maternity leave, or you incur an extraordinary expense, call the trustee. The trustee is likely to suggest that you suspend payments for a month or two. You can make up the difference by modifying your plan to:

- make a lump sum payment when your income goes back up
- extend your plan, if it is scheduled to last less than five years, or
- decrease the amount or percentage that a certain class of creditor receives—for example, you might have originally proposed to pay your general unsecured creditors 75% of what you owe but will now file a modified plan that calls for them to get only 45%.

Creditors rarely object to a short suspension in payments, and bankruptcy courts routinely grant those modifications. If you propose a longer-term suspension, however, your secured creditors may object, especially if the collateral is decreasing in value. You may have to continue your payments on secured debts and suspend only the unsecured portion for a while.

You Need to Replace Your Car

A lot can go wrong with a car during the three to five years you're paying into your Chapter 13 plan—especially if you bought a used car before you filed to minimize your expenses. Chapter 13 trustees often hear from debtors whose cars have died or are on their last legs. This situation raises several issues in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy case.

Taking out a new loan. Let's say your car dies, you need another one, and you want to take out a loan to pay for it. You file a motion to modify your plan to include payments for the new loan. Will the court confirm the new plan? The court is likely to say "yes" if you must have the car to complete your plan—for example, you're a salesperson. If, however, the car is just a convenience, the payments will significantly increase your monthly expenses, and you've had trouble making your plan payments, the court will probably turn you down.

For most people, the need for a car isn't all or nothing. In that case, the court will probably allow you to take out the loan if the effect is to lower your bills (for example, you were still making payments on your previous car and the loan will reduce your payments) or to increase your income (for instance, it would take two hours each way to get to work by public transit and only 30 minutes by car, so with a car you can get paid for three more hours' work a day).

Giving back a wrecked car. Now let's assume that after your plan is confirmed, your car is wrecked or won't run. You want to give the car back to the lender and modify your plan to treat the balance due (called a deficiency) as an unsecured claim. Several courts have allowed this. (In re Hernandez, 282 B.R. 200 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. 2002); In re Knappen, 281 B.R. 714 (Bankr. D. N.M. 2002); In re Townley, 256 B.R. 697 (Bankr. D. N.J. 2000); In re Rincon, 133 B.R. 594 (N.D. Tex. 1991).)

Other courts have ruled that a secured creditor cannot be reclassified into an unsecured creditor after a plan has been confirmed and that the debtor still must pay the full balance owed the lender. (In re Nolan, 232 F.3d 528 (6th Cir. 2000); In re Wilcox, 295 B.R. 155 (Bankr. W.D. Okla. 2003); In re Meeks, 237 B.R. 856 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 1999); In re Coleman, 231 B.R. 397 (Bankr. S.D. Ga. 1999); In re Dunlap, 215 B.R. 867 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 1997); In re Holt, 136 B.R. 260 (Bankr. D. Idaho 1992); and In re Abercrombie, 39 B.R. 178 (N.D. Ga. 1984).)

A court might look at how you got into the situation. If your negligence or recklessness caused the problem, the court may be more inclined to deny modification of your plan.

What happens to insurance proceeds. If your car was all paid off and is damaged in an accident, you may get some insurance money. The court will probably want you to use that money to get the new car you need. If your car wasn't paid off, the insurance money will go to pay off your lender. If the insurance proceeds exceed what you owe the lender under your plan, you get to keep the difference. Remember, once the court determines the amount a secured creditor is entitled to get under the plan, that's all the creditor gets.

You Incur New Debt

If you fail to pay debts you incur after your plan is confirmed, you can amend your plan so these creditors are paid through your plan. You may have anticipated this by creating a class of postpetition creditors in your plan. If so, your plan should specify that these creditors receive 100% of what they are owed, plus interest. If you didn't create such a class, you'll have to handle postpetition debts as they arise.

No matter what your plan provides, your postpetition creditors will need to file a claim with the trustee in order to get paid through your plan.

If Your Plan Includes a Class of Postpetition Creditors

If your plan includes 100% payment of your postpetition debts, your postpetition creditors are unlikely to object to being paid through the trustee.

If, however, the creditor disagrees with the terms of your plan or you miss a plan payment, the creditor might object. If this happens, you will have to modify your plan to handle the creditor's objection. If the creditor is still not satisfied, the creditor might file a motion with the bankruptcy court asking the court to lift the automatic stay. If the court grants the motion, the creditor would be allowed to go after your postpetition property and income for payment.

EXAMPLE: For the first year and a half of your plan, you will be paying your priority tax debt and your mortgage arrears. Not until Month 19 will the trustee pay your unsecured creditors, including a class of postpetition creditors. Three months into your plan, the court lets you incur a medical debt. The doctor objects to being paid through the plan because the first payment won't come for at least 16 months. You will probably have to amend your plan to add the medical debt to the other debts that will be paid off early in the plan.

If Your Plan Does Not Include a Class of Postpetition Creditors

If your plan does not include a class of postpetition creditors, and you want to pay a new creditor through your plan, you will have to modify your plan. Sometimes, a postpetition creditor files a motion to be included in a modified Chapter 13 plan. The motion is likely to be granted.

If you don't modify your plan to include postpetition creditors to whom you default, the creditor may be able to take collection efforts against property you acquired after filing for bankruptcy.

You Buy Health Insurance

In the 2005 bankruptcy law, Congress provided that Chapter 13 debtors can reduce what they pay into their repayment plans by the actual amount they spend to buy health insurance for themselves and their families. This measure is intended to help reduce the number of people who go without health insurance.

To take advantage of this new rule, you have to demonstrate a number of facts, including:

- The insurance is necessary.
- The cost of the insurance is reasonable.
- The cost is not significantly more than the cost of your previous policy or the cost necessary to maintain the lapsed policy (if you were previously insured).

- You have not already claimed the cost as an expense for purposes of determining your disposable income (on Form 22C or Schedule J),
- You actually purchased the policy.

Attempts to Revoke Your Confirmation

If a creditor or the trustee thinks you obtained your confirmation fraudulently—for example, because you used a false name, address, or Social Security number—one of them may file something called an adversary proceeding asking the court to revoke your confirmation. This is extremely rare. An adversary proceeding to revoke a confirmation must be filed within 180 days of the confirmation.

An adversary proceeding is much more formal than a motion. It creates an entirely new lawsuit, separate from your bankruptcy case, and proceeds like any other lawsuit. You will need a lawyer to help you.

The bankruptcy court won't revoke your confirmation because of fraud unless it finds that:

- You made a materially (significant) false statement in your papers, in a deposition, or in court.
- You either knew the statement was false or made the statement with reckless disregard to its truth.
- You intended to induce the court into relying on the statement.
- The court did rely on the statement.

When You Complete Your Plan

It's quite an accomplishment—and something to be proud of—to stick with a Chapter 13 plan to the end. After you have made all of your payments under your plan, filed a certificate showing that you have completed your financial management counseling, and certified that you are current on your domestic support obligations (if any), the court grants a “full payment” discharge. In most courts, the trustee simply files the discharge order on behalf of the court after determining that all payments have been made. In other courts, you must ask the trustee (by phone is fine) to file the discharge order.

TIP

File Form 23 right away. You must complete a financial management counseling course—and file a certification, Form 23, stating that you have done so—before you make your last plan payment. If you don't file Form 23 on time, the court will close your case without granting you a discharge. To get your discharge, you will have to reopen the case and pay fees. To avoid this fate, file Form 23 as soon as you complete your counseling, even if you haven't yet reached your final plan payment.

Debts Covered by the Discharge

Your Chapter 13 discharge wipes out the balance owed on all of your debts, as long as the debt is included in your plan and does not fall into one of these categories:

- long-term obligations for which the last payment is still due—that is, it will be paid after you've made the final payment on your plan
- nondischargeable debts, as described in Ch. 1, or
- debts you incurred after filing your Chapter 13 case, if the creditor was not paid or was only partially paid through the plan.

The Discharge Hearing

After struggling for years to repay your debts, the long-awaited end of your bankruptcy case may be a little anticlimactic. The court may hold a brief hearing, called a discharge hearing, and require you to attend. At the hearing, the judge explains the effects of discharging your debts in bankruptcy and may lecture you about staying clear of debt.

Few courts, however, schedule a discharge hearing in Chapter 13 cases. Whether or not you must attend a discharge hearing, you'll receive a copy of your discharge order from the court within about four weeks after you complete your payments. If you don't, call the trustee. Make several photocopies of the order and keep them in a safe place. If it's necessary, send copies to creditors who attempt to collect their debt after your case is over or to credit bureaus that continue to report that you owe a discharged debt.

Ending the Income Deduction Order

The trustee will probably remember to stop your income deduction order after you've made your last payment. If the trustee forgets, however, you may need to call and raise the issue.

Debtor Rehabilitation Program

A few Chapter 13 bankruptcy courts have created debtor rehabilitation/credit reestablishment programs. The purpose is to reward people who choose Chapter 13 bankruptcy instead of Chapter 7 bankruptcy and who succeed in completing their Chapter 13 cases.

If you have paid off a high percentage of your unsecured debts (often 75% or more), you may apply for credit from certain creditors.

In the typical program, the court staff includes a "credit liaison." This person will help you:

- acquire, review, and correct your credit file—in particular, to get your credit file to show that you completed a Chapter 13 bankruptcy in which you paid back a high percentage of your debts

- set up a budget
- analyze your ability to repay new debts
- understand the different types of credit
- identify possible sources of credit and credit limits
- fill out credit applications
- obtain information to support your application, such as your Chapter 13 payment history and completed plan
- prepare for any in-person interview with a creditor (for a car loan, for example), and
- understand how creditors make their decisions about extending credit.

Ask the trustee whether your court has a rehabilitation program. If it doesn't, find out from the trustee if a nearby bankruptcy court has one in which you might participate. If there's nothing nearby, you'll have to take your own steps to rebuild your credit. (See Ch. 14.)

Despite your best efforts to keep a handle on your finances and make your regular plan payments, you may be unable to complete your plan. If this happens to you, take solace in the fact that you aren't alone—a significant percentage of Chapter 13 debtors eventually find themselves in this position.

If you can't complete your plan, you have three options: Dismiss your case, convert it to a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, or ask the court to grant you a hardship discharge.

Dismiss Your Case

You have the absolute right to dismiss your Chapter 13 bankruptcy case at any time, as long as:

- The court doesn't believe that you filed your bankruptcy case in bad faith (see Ch. 11).
- You didn't start in another type of bankruptcy (typically, Chapter 7) and then convert to Chapter 13 bankruptcy.

To dismiss your case, you have to file a simple ex parte motion with the court (see Ch. 11 for a brief discussion of ex parte motions). The court may have a preprinted dismissal form you can use; if it does not, ask the trustee for help. There won't be any court hearing. Because you have the right to dismiss your case (unless one of the exceptions discussed above applies), the motion will automatically be granted. A creditor or the trustee can also file a noticed motion to have your case dismissed.

If you converted to Chapter 13 from a different type of bankruptcy, you have to file a noticed motion asking the court for permission to dismiss your case. (See Ch. 11 for information on noticed motions.) The court may deny your request—and order you to convert to Chapter 7 bankruptcy—if it feels that you are abusing the bankruptcy system. Or, it may grant your request, but sanction (fine) you or issue an order barring you from filing for bankruptcy again for a certain period of time.

If your case is dismissed, there are several important consequences:

- All liens that you had removed from your property in your Chapter 13 case are reinstated.

- All money you have paid the trustee that has not yet been disbursed to your creditors will be returned to you, less the trustee's expenses.
- The automatic stay ends, which means that your creditors are free to go after you and your assets for payment.
- Interest (and in some cases penalties) that stopped accruing during your bankruptcy will be added on to your debts.
- You cannot refile for bankruptcy—Chapter 13, Chapter 7, or any other kind—within 180 days if you dismissed your case because a creditor filed a motion asking the bankruptcy court to lift the automatic stay.

If you change your mind and decide that you want your case to proceed, you can file a motion with the bankruptcy court within ten days of the dismissal asking that your case be reinstated. Unless you have a history of filing and dismissing, or you've had serious problems making the payments under this plan, the court will probably grant your motion.

Convert Your Case to Chapter 7 Bankruptcy

You have an absolute right to convert your Chapter 13 bankruptcy case to a Chapter 7 bankruptcy case at any time, as long as you haven't received a Chapter 7 discharge within the previous eight years.

You convert your case by filing an ex parte motion with the court. The court may have a preprinted form you can use; if it does not, ask the trustee for help. There won't be a court hearing, and your motion will automatically be granted. A creditor, the trustee, or the U.S. Trustee can also file a motion to have your case converted.

If you want to convert your case to a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, ask the trustee whether you have to notify your creditors. When you convert your case, all money that you have paid the trustee but has not yet been disbursed to your creditors will be returned to you, less the trustee's expenses.

In addition, the bankruptcy forms you filed for your Chapter 13 case will usually become a part of your new case. (These are the forms in Ch. 7 of this book.)

A few bankruptcy courts, however, require you to file an entirely new set of schedules, even if nothing has changed. Within 30 days after you convert, you must file one additional bankruptcy form called the Statement of Intention. It tells the court what you plan to do with your secured debts. You will also have to attend a new meeting of creditors.

Because any debts you incurred after filing your Chapter 13 case can be discharged in your Chapter 7 case (if they are otherwise dischargeable), you must amend the appropriate forms to list these new debts. You might have to amend:

- Schedule D (if you've incurred new secured debts)
- Schedule E (if you've incurred new unsecured priority debts)
- Schedule F (if you've incurred new unsecured nonpriority debts)
- Schedule G (if you entered into any new contracts or leases), and
- Schedule H (if you have new codebtors).

If, in your Chapter 13 case, the court established a value for certain items of property or determined the amount of a secured claim, those values and amounts will not apply in the converted case. (11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(1)(B).)

Some courts determine your exemptions as of the date you filed for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, while other courts determine them as of the date you convert to Chapter 7. In the latter situation, if you've acquired nonexempt property after filing your Chapter 13 case, you will be at risk of losing it in your Chapter 7 case. In addition, if the court determines that your conversion to Chapter 7 bankruptcy is in bad faith, the court can order that the new property be included in your Chapter 7 bankruptcy estate. (11 U.S.C. § 348(f)(2).)

If your creditors have filed Proofs of Claim, those claims carry over to your Chapter 7 case. However, if you dismiss your Chapter 13 case and refile a Chapter 7 case, your creditors will have to file new claims, assuming you have assets to be distributed. People with nonexempt assets sometimes use this strategy (dismissing the Chapter 13 case and refiling under Chapter 7) with the hope that creditors won't file new claims and therefore won't be paid in the Chapter 7 case. Even if you have nonexempt assets to be distributed, however, you would seldom care about who gets paid what, unless your nonexempt assets are so valuable that you might get to keep some of them if a creditor doesn't file a claim. For example, if you have nonexempt assets worth $100,000 and you owe only $80,000 to the creditors who file Proofs of Claim, you could keep the remaining $20,000.

RESOURCE

Resource for Chapter 7 bankruptcy. How to File for Chapter 7 Bankruptcy, by Stephen Elias, Albin Renauer, and Robin Leonard (Nolo), contains detailed information on Chapter 7 bankruptcy. It includes the instructions you will need to file the additional form (the Statement of Intention) and to amend the forms you've already filed.

Seek a Hardship Discharge

If you cannot complete your Chapter 13 repayment plan, you can file a motion with the bankruptcy court asking for a hardship discharge. (11 U.S.C. § 1328(b).) The court will grant your request only if three conditions are met:

- You failed to complete your plan payments due to circumstances “for which you should not justly be held accountable.” Your burden is to show the maximum possible misery and the worst of awfuls—that is, more than just a temporary job loss or temporary physical disability. Proving that your condition is permanent is usually key; you may need to bring medical evidence to court.
- Based on what you have already paid into the plan, your unsecured creditors have received at least what they would have received if you had filed for Chapter 7. (This is typically a hard condition to meet unless you have little or no nonexempt property.)
- Modification of your plan is not practical. To meet this requirement, you do not have to file a motion for modification and lose it; you just have to show the bankruptcy court that you wouldn't be able to make payments even under a modified plan. For example, in the aftermath of the Katrina disaster, a New Orleans debtor in a Chapter 13 plan could easily establish that modification wasn't practical.

Debts That Are Not Discharged

If the court grants your motion for a hardship discharge, only unsecured, nonpriority, dischargeable debts are discharged. The following debts typically are not wiped out in a hardship discharge:

- priority debts
- secured debts
- arrears on secured debts
- debts you didn't list in your bankruptcy papers
- student loans
- most federal, state, and local taxes, as well as any amounts you borrowed or charged on a credit card to pay those taxes
- child support, alimony, and debts resulting from a divorce or separation decree
- fines or restitution imposed in a criminal-type proceeding
- debts for death or personal injury resulting from your intoxicated driving
- debts for dues or special assessments you owe to a condominium or cooperative association
- debts you couldn't discharge in a previous bankruptcy that was dismissed due to fraud or misfeasance, and
- debts you owe to a pension, profit-sharing, stock bonus, or other plan established under various sections of the Internal Revenue Code.

Debts That Are Not Discharged If the Creditor Successfully Objects

Some debts will be discharged in a hardship discharge unless the creditor files a successful objection to the discharge in court. These debts include:

- debts incurred through your fraudulent acts, including using a credit card when you knew you would be unable to pay the bill
- debts from willful and malicious injury you caused to another person or property, and
- debts from embezzlement, larceny, or breach of trust (fiduciary duty).

If you have a debt that falls into one of these categories, your best strategy is to do nothing and hope the creditor does the same. If the creditor objects, the court will examine the circumstances in which you incurred the debt to determine whether or not it can be legally eliminated. If you want the debt to be discharged, you should respond to the creditor's objection. If the debt is large enough to justify the fees, consider hiring a bankruptcy attorney to help you. See Ch. 15 for information on hiring a lawyer or doing your own legal research.

Congratulations! After you receive your final discharge and your case is closed, you can get on with your life and enjoy the fresh start that bankruptcy offers. This chapter explains how you can start to rebuild your credit and how to deal with any problems that come up.

Rebuilding Your Credit

A bankruptcy filing can legally remain on your credit record for ten years after you filed your papers, although most credit bureaus remove a Chapter 13 bankruptcy filing after seven years. (Major creditors, such as banks and department stores, have pressured bureaus to remove the notations after seven years as an incentive to debtors to choose Chapter 13 bankruptcy over Chapter 7 bankruptcy.) Many creditors disregard a Chapter 13 bankruptcy after three or four years.

RESOURCE

Resource for rebuilding credit. For more information on rebuilding your credit—including obtaining a copy of your credit file, requesting that the credit bureau correct mistakes, contacting creditors directly for help in cleaning up your credit, and getting positive information into your credit file—see Credit Repair, by John Lamb and Robin Leonard (Nolo).

In the past, it was generally possible for debtors to rebuild their credit after filing for bankruptcy relatively quickly. Within a couple of years of steady employment and careful use of credit, many filers were able to qualify for a major credit card or loan. These days, however, the consumer credit markets are in great distress, with more foreclosures, bankruptcy filings, and credit card defaults every month. Lenders are less willing than ever to extend credit, and many debtors—even those who haven't filed for bankruptcy—have seen their credit scores plummet.

Given this situation, it's hard to say whether it will be easier to rebuild your credit after bankruptcy or whether credit as we know it is gone for the foreseeable future. No matter how creditors ultimately respond to the current crisis, however, your strategy for rebuilding credit will be the same: Make a budget, pay bills on time, and gradually take on credit, in an amount you can afford to pay off each month.

TIP

Using a check or debit card instead of a credit card. Many people mistakenly believe that they have to have a regular credit card to do simple things like charge a meal in a restaurant, get gas at the pump, or buy a book on the Internet. In fact, simply by maintaining a checking account with your bank, you will usually be issued a check or debit card that doubles as a Visa or MasterCard—except that your ability to charge things on the card is limited by how much you have in your bank account when you use the card. Alas, the check card doesn't work for everything. Some car rental companies require a major credit card and won't accept your check card unless you post a sizable deposit. Also, if you don't keep track of your spending, using a check card can make it easier to overdraw your account, often resulting in steep penalties.

Don't Take on Too Much Debt Too Soon

Habitual overspending can be just as hard to overcome as excessive gambling or drinking. If you think you may be a compulsive spender, one of the worst things you might do is rebuild your credit. Instead, you need to get a handle on your spending habits.

Debtors Anonymous, a 12-step support program similar to Alcoholics Anonymous, has programs nationwide. If a Debtors Anonymous group or a therapist recommends that you stay out of the credit system for a while, follow that advice. Even if you don't feel you're a compulsive spender, paying as you spend may still be the way to go.

To find a Debtors Anonymous meeting close by, go to www.debtorsanonymous.org or call 781-453-2743.

Create a Budget

The first step in rebuilding your credit is to create a budget. Making a budget will help you control impulses to overspend and help you start saving money—an essential part of rebuilding your credit.

Fortunately, the bankruptcy law requires you to participate in budget counseling prior to getting a discharge. You will be able to apply what you learn in your budget counseling class to our suggestions in this chapter.

Before you try to limit how much you spend, take some time to find out exactly how much money you spend now, using a form like the one shown below. Make copies of the form, which is in Appendix B, and fill one out for 30 days. Write down every cent you spend—50¢ for the paper, $4 for your morning coffee and muffin, $8 for lunch, $3 for the bridge or tunnel toll, and so on. If you omit any expenses, your picture of how much you spend, and your budget, will be inaccurate. If you're married or combine your finances with someone, make sure each person fills out a form.

At the end of the 30 days, review your sheets. Are you surprised? Are you impulsively buying things, or do you tend to buy the same types of things consistently? If the latter, you'll have an easier time planning a budget than if your spending varies tremendously from day to day.

Think about the changes you need to make to put away a few dollars at the end of every week. Even if you think there's nothing to spare, try to set a small goal—even $5 a week. It will help. If you spend $4 each day on coffee and a muffin, that adds up to $20 per week and at least $80 per month. Eating breakfast at home might save you most of that amount. If you buy the newspaper at the corner store every day, consider subscribing. A subscription doesn't require the company to extend you credit; if you don't pay, they simply stop delivering.

Once you understand your spending habits and identify the changes you need to make, you're ready to make a budget. At the top of a sheet of paper, write down your monthly net income—that is, the amount you bring home after taxes and other mandatory deductions. At the left, list everything you spend money on in a month, any investments you plan to make (including into a savings or money market account), and any nondischargeable or other debts you make payments on. To the right of each item, write down the amount of money you spend, deposit, or pay each month. Finally, total up the amount. If it exceeds your monthly income, make some changes—eliminate or reduce expenditures for nonnecessities—and start over. Once your budget is final, stick to it.

When you examine your budget, you'll see that some of the things you spend money on are essential—and some are not. Essential items might include your rent or mortgage payments, taxes, utilities, child support, car payments, payments on other collateral (such as furniture or a boat), and medical and auto insurance. If you can, it's a good idea to prepay these essential items—in order of importance—for as long a period as possible. The more essential items you can prepay, the less you have to worry about going over your budget. For example, if you have paid several months of rent in advance, you won't have to worry about coming up with that money for several months.

Of course, the wisdom of prepaying debts depends on the prevailing interest rate, which determines how much you can make by keeping your money rather than spending it to pay off bills early. If the prevailing interest rate is 10%, then you may be losing some significant cash by prepaying your debts instead of keeping that money in the bank. If, on the other hand, the interest rate is 5% or 6% less, you won't lose much by prepaying your debts—and you'll gain plenty of peace of mind.

Keep Your Credit Report Accurate

When you apply for credit, the creditor will contact a credit reporting agency and request a copy of your credit report. The information in the report—and the numerical score the agency computes from that information—is used by creditors to decide whether to grant or deny your credit requests. In addition, some insurance companies, landlords, and employers obtain credit reports when evaluating potential insurance policyholders, tenants, or employees.

To make sure that creditors and others who use your credit report see you in the best light, you should keep incorrect and outdated information out of your credit report and get current positive information into your report.

Start by obtaining a copy of your report from each of the “big three” reporting agencies (Equifax, Experian, and TransUnion). You are entitled to a free copy of your report from each agency every 12 months. To get your copies, go to www.annualcreditreport.com. You can get your reports online, by phone (877-322-8228),

Avoiding Financial Problems

These nine rules, suggested by people who have been through bankruptcy, will help you stay out of financial hot water.

1. Create a realistic budget and stick to it.
2. Don't buy on impulse. When you see something you hadn't planned to purchase, go home and think it over. It's unlikely you'll return to the store and buy it.
3. Avoid sales unless you are looking for something you absolutely need. Buying a $500 item on sale for $400 isn't a $100 savings if you didn't need the item in the first place—it's spending $400 unnecessarily.
4. Get medical insurance. You can't avoid medical emergencies, but living without medical insurance is an invitation to financial ruin.
5. Charge items only if you can pay for them now. Don't charge based on future income; sometimes that income doesn't materialize.
6. Avoid large house payments. Obligate yourself only for what you can now afford and increase your mortgage payments only as your income increases. Again, don't obligate yourself based on future income that you might not have.
7. Think long and hard before agreeing to cosign or guarantee a loan for someone. Your signature obligates you as if you were the primary borrower. You can't be sure that the other person will pay.
8. If possible, avoid joint obligations with people who have questionable spending habits. If you incur a joint debt, you're probably liable for it all if the other person defaults.
9. Avoid high-risk investments, such as speculative real estate, penny stocks, and junk bonds. Invest conservatively in things such as certificates of deposit, money market funds, and government bonds. And never invest more than you can afford to lose.

or by mail. To get reports by mail, you must submit a written request form, which you can download from the website, and send it to Annual Credit Report Request Service, P.O. Box 105281, Atlanta, GA 30348-5281.

In addition to your credit history, your credit report will contain the sources of the information and the names of people who have received your report within the last year, or within the last two years if those people sought your report for employment reasons.

Credit reports can contain negative information for up to seven years, except for bankruptcy filings, which can stay for ten. As mentioned earlier, most credit bureaus report Chapter 13 bankruptcies for only seven years. You will want to challenge outdated, as well as incorrect or incomplete, information. The bureau must investigate the accuracy of anything you challenge within 30 days. Then the bureau must either correct it or, if it can't verify the item, remove it.

If, after the investigation, the bureau keeps information in your file you still believe is wrong, you are entitled to write a brief statement giving your side of the story, to be included in your report. Be sure the statement is tied to a particular item in your report. When the item eventually is removed from your report or corrected, the statement will be taken out. If you write a general "my life was a mess and I got into debt" statement, however, it will stay for a full seven years from the date you place it, even if the negative items come out sooner. An example of a statement is shown below.

Sample Statement to Credit Bureau

Denny Porter
Denny Porter

The agency must give the statement, or a summary of it, to anyone who's given your credit report. In addition, if you request it, the agency must pass on a copy or summary of your statement to any person who received your report within the past year, or two years if it involved employment.

You also want to keep new negative information out of your report. To do this, remain current on your bills. What you owe, as well as how long it takes you to pay, will go in your report.

In addition to information about credit accounts, credit reports also contain information from public records, including criminal records. After receiving your bankruptcy discharge, be sure to modify public records to reflect what occurred in the bankruptcy, so wrong information won't appear in your credit report. For example, if a court case was pending against you at the time you filed for bankruptcy, and, as part of the bankruptcy, the potential judgment against you was discharged, be sure the court case is formally dismissed. You may need the help of an attorney. (See Ch. 15 for information on finding one.)

Avoid Credit Repair Agencies

You've probably seen ads for companies that claim they can fix your credit, qualify you for a loan, and get you a credit card. Stay clear of these companies. Their practices are almost always deceptive and sometimes illegal. Some steal the credit reports or Social Security numbers of people who have died or live in places like Guam or the U.S. Virgin Islands and replace your report with these other reports. Others create new identities for debtors by applying to the IRS for a taxpayer I.D. number and telling debtors to use it in place of their Social Security number (which is illegal).

Even the legitimate companies can't do anything for you that you can't do yourself. If items in your credit report are correct, these companies cannot get them removed. About the only difference between using a legitimate credit repair agency and doing it yourself is the money you save by doing it yourself.

Negotiate With Current Creditors

If you owe any debts that show up as past due on your credit report (perhaps the debt wasn't discharged in your bankruptcy or was incurred after you filed), you can take steps to make them current. Contact the creditor and ask that the item be removed in exchange for full or partial payment. On a revolving account (with a department store, for example), ask the creditor to "re-age" the account so that it is shown as current. For help in negotiating with your creditors, consider contacting a local consumer credit counseling service office.

Stabilize Your Income and Employment

Your credit history and score are not the only thing lenders will consider in deciding whether to give you credit. They also look carefully at the stability of your income and employment. Plus, if you start getting new credit before you're back on your feet financially, you'll end up in the same mess that led you to file for bankruptcy in the first place.

Get a Credit Card

Once you have your budget and some money saved, you can begin to get some positive information in your credit report. One way is to get a secured credit card. In a few years, banks and other large creditors will be more apt to grant you credit if, since your bankruptcy, you've made and paid for purchases on credit.

Some banks will give you a credit card and a line of credit if you deposit money into a savings account. In exchange, you cannot remove the money from your account. If you don't pay your bill, the bank uses the money in your account to cover what you owe. Get such a card if you truly believe you'll control any impulses to overuse it.

A major drawback with these cards is that the interest rate often nears 25%–30%. So use the card only to cash checks, buy inexpensive items you can pay for when the bill arrives, or guarantee a hotel reservation or car rental. Otherwise, you're going to pay a bundle in interest and may end up in financial trouble again.

Be sure to shop around before signing up for a secured credit card. Even though you just filed for bankruptcy, you'll probably still get lots of offers for unsecured cards in the mail. Often, these cards have better terms than do secured cards. If you do choose a secured credit card, be sure it isn't secured by your home.

CAUTION

Avoid look-alike credit cards. Some lesser-known mail-order companies issue cards that look like credit cards, but allow you to make purchases only from their own catalogues. The items in the catalogue tend to be overpriced and of mediocre (if not poor) quality. And your use of the card isn't reported to credit bureaus, so you won't be rebuilding your credit.

Borrow From a Bank

Bank loans provide an excellent way to rebuild credit. A few banks offer something called a passbook savings loan, which is a lot like a secured credit card. You deposit a sum of money into a savings account, and in exchange the bank makes you a loan. You have no access to your savings account while your loan is outstanding. If you don't repay it, the bank will use the money in your savings account. The amount you can borrow depends on how much the bank requires you to deposit.

In most cases, though, you'll have to apply for a standard bank loan. You probably won't qualify unless you bring in a cosigner, offer some property as collateral, or agree to a very high rate of interest.

Banks that offer passbook loans typically give you one to three years to repay the loan. But don't pay the loan back too soon—give it about six to nine months to appear on your credit report. Standard bank loans are paid back on a monthly schedule, usually for a year or two.

Before you take out any loan, be sure you understand the terms:

- Interest rate. The interest rate on the loan is usually between two and six percentage points more than what the bank charges its customers with the best credit.

- Prepayment penalties. Usually, you can pay the loan back as soon as you want without incurring any prepayment penalties. Prepayment penalties are fees banks sometimes charge if you pay back a loan early and the bank doesn't collect as much interest from you as it had expected. The penalty is usually a small percentage of the loan amount.
- Whether the bank reports the loan to a credit bureau. This is key; the whole reason you take out the loan is to rebuild your credit. You may have to make several calls to find a bank that reports the loan.

Work With a Local Merchant

Another step to consider in rebuilding your credit is to approach a local merchant, such as a jewelry or furniture store, about purchasing an item on credit. Many local stores will work with you in setting up a payment schedule, but be prepared to put down a deposit of up to 30%, pay a high rate of interest, or find someone to cosign the loan. This isn't an ideal way to rebuild your credit, but if all other lenders turn you down, it may be your only option.

Attempts to Collect Clearly Discharged Debts

If a debt was discharged in bankruptcy, the law prohibits creditors from filing a lawsuit, sending you collection letters, calling you, withholding credit, or threatening to file or actually filing a criminal complaint against you. (11 U.S.C. § 524.) If a creditor tries to collect a debt that clearly was discharged in your bankruptcy, you should respond at once with a letter like the one shown below.

The court doesn't give you a list of debts that were discharged. But you can assume a debt was discharged if you listed it in your bankruptcy papers, the creditor didn't successfully object to its discharge, and it isn't in one of the nondischargeable categories listed in Ch. 1. Also, if you live in a community property state and your spouse filed alone, you can assume that your share of the community debts was also discharged.

Letter to Creditor

1905 Fifth Road
N. Miami Beach, FL 35466

March 18, 20xx

Bank of Miami
2700 Finances Highway
Miami, FL 36678

To Whom It May Concern:

I've been contacted once by letter and once by phone by Rodney Moore of your bank. Mr. Moore claims that I owe $4,812 on Visa account Number 1234 567 890 123.

As you're well aware, this debt was discharged in bankruptcy (Case number 111-999 in the Western District of Tennessee) on February 1, 20xx. Thus, your collection efforts violate federal law, 11 U.S.C. § 524. If they continue, I won't hesitate to pursue my legal rights, including bringing a lawsuit against you for harassment.

Sincerely,

Dawn Schaffer

Dawn Schaffer

If the collection efforts don't immediately stop, you may want to hire a lawyer to write the creditor again—sometimes, a lawyer's letterhead gets results. If that doesn't work, you can sue the creditor for harassment. You can bring a lawsuit in state court or in the bankruptcy court. The bankruptcy court should be more familiar with the prohibitions against collection and more sympathetic to you.

If the creditor sues you over the debt, you'll want to raise the discharge as a defense and sue the creditor yourself to stop the illegal collection efforts. The court has the power to hold the creditor in contempt of court. The court may also fine the creditor for the humiliation, inconvenience, and anguish caused you and order the creditor to pay your attorneys' fees. For example, a bankruptcy court in North Carolina fined a creditor $900 for attempting to collect a discharged debt. (In re Barbour, 77 B.R. 530 (E.D. N.C. 1987).)

If the creditor sues you (almost certainly in state court), you or your attorney can file papers requesting that the case be transferred ("removed") to the bankruptcy court.

Anticipating Postbankruptcy Debt Collections

Sometimes you can anticipate that a particular creditor will consider a debt to be nondischargeable and go after you for it after your bankruptcy case is closed. In that event, you can file an action in the bankruptcy court while your case is still open to obtain a determination of whether the debt is dischargeable. If the court rules in your favor, the creditor will be prevented from pursuing the debt in state court. How to do this is beyond the scope of this book. However, Represent Yourself in Court, by Paul Bergman and Sara J. Berman (Nolo), has a chapter on litigating in bankruptcy court.

Postbankruptcy Discrimination

Although filing for bankruptcy has serious consequences, it might not be as bad as you think. There are laws that will protect you from postbankruptcy discrimination by the government and by private employers.

Governmental Discrimination

All federal, state, and local governmental units are prohibited from discriminating against you solely because you filed for bankruptcy. (11 U.S.C. § 525(a).) This includes denying, revoking, suspending, or refusing to renew a license, permit, charter, franchise, or other similar grant. This part of the Bankruptcy Code provides important protections, but it does not insulate debtors from all adverse consequences of filing for bankruptcy. Lenders, for example, can consider a debtor's bankruptcy filing when reviewing an application for a government loan or extension of credit. (See, for example, Watts v. Pennsylvania Housing Finance Co., 876 F.2d 1090 (3d Cir. 1989) and Toth v. Michigan State Housing Development Authority, 136 F.3d 477 (6th Cir. 1998).) Still, under this provision of the Bankruptcy Code, the government cannot:

- deny you a job or fire you
- deny you or terminate your public benefits
- evict you from public housing (although if you have a Section 8 voucher, you may not be protected)
- deny you or refuse to renew your state liquor license
- withhold your college transcript
- deny you a driver's license, or
- deny you a contract, such as one for a construction project.

In addition, lenders can't exclude you from participating in a government-guaranteed student loan program. (11 U.S.C. § 525(c).)

In general, once any government-related debt has been discharged, all acts against you that arise out of that debt also must end. If, for example, you lost your driver's license because you didn't pay a court judgment that resulted from a car accident, once the debt is discharged, you must be granted a license. If, however, the judgment wasn't discharged, you can still be denied your license until you pay up.

Keep in mind that only denials based solely on your bankruptcy are prohibited. You may be denied a loan, job, or apartment for reasons unrelated to the bankruptcy or for reasons related to your future creditworthiness—for example, because the government concludes you won't be able to repay a Small Business Administration loan.

Nongovernmental Discrimination

Private employers may not fire you or otherwise discriminate against you solely because you filed for bankruptcy. (11 U.S.C. § 525(b).) While the Bankruptcy Code expressly prohibits employers from firing you, most courts have found that it does not prohibit employers from refusing to hire someone because of a prior bankruptcy.

Other forms of discrimination in the private sector aren't illegal. If you seek to rent an apartment and the landlord does a credit check, sees your bankruptcy, and refuses to rent to you, there's not much you can do other than try to show that you'll pay your rent and be a responsible tenant. Paying several months' rent in advance can work wonders in these situations.

If you suffer illegal discrimination because of your bankruptcy, you can sue in state court or in the bankruptcy court. You'll probably need the assistance of an attorney.

Attempts to Revoke Your Discharge

In extremely rare instances, the trustee or a creditor can ask the bankruptcy court to revoke your discharge. The trustee or creditor must file a complaint within one year of your discharge.

Your discharge can be revoked only if the creditor or trustee proves that you obtained the discharge through fraud, which was discovered after your discharge. If your discharge is revoked, you'll owe your creditors as if you had not filed for bankruptcy. Any payment your creditors received from the trustee, however, will be credited against what you owe.

Although this book covers routine Chapter 13 bankruptcy procedures in some detail, it doesn't come close to covering everything. That would require thousands of pages, most of them irrelevant for nearly all readers. That said, here are some suggestions if you need more information or advice than this book provides.

The major places to go for follow-up help are:

- bankruptcy petition preparers, if you're ready to file for bankruptcy, but need assistance in typing the forms and organizing them for filing in your district
- lawyers, if you want information, advice, or legal representation for some or all of your case, and
- law libraries and the Internet, if you want to do your own research on issues raised in the course of your bankruptcy.

Before we discuss each of these resources in more detail, here's a general piece of advice: Maintain control of your case whenever possible. By getting this book and filing for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, you've taken responsibility for your own legal affairs. If you decide to get help from others, shop around until you find someone who respects your efforts as a self-helper and recognizes your right to participate in the case as a valuable partner.

Debt Relief Agencies

Under the new bankruptcy law, any person, business, or organization that you pay or otherwise compensate for help with your bankruptcy is considered a debt relief agency—and must identify itself as such. The two main types of debt relief agencies are lawyers and bankruptcy petition preparers (BPPs). Credit counseling agencies and budget counseling agencies are not debt relief agencies. Nor are any of the following:

- employers or employees of debt relief agencies (for instance, legal secretaries)
- nonprofit organizations that have federal 501(c)(3) tax-exempt status
- any creditor who works with you to restructure your debt
- banks, credit unions, and other deposit institutions, or

- an author, publisher, distributor, or seller of works subject to copyright protection when acting in that capacity (in other words, Nolo and the stores that sell its books aren't debt relief agencies).

BPPs and lawyers are covered separately below. This section explains what the new bankruptcy law requires of debt relief agencies generally, so you'll know what you can expect for your money.

Mandatory Contract

Within five days after a debt relief agency assists you, it (or he or she) must enter into a contract with you that explains, clearly and conspicuously:

- what services the agency will provide
- what the agency will charge for the services, and
- the terms of payment.

The agency must give you a copy of the completed, signed contract.

Mandatory Disclosures and Notices

Debt relief agencies must inform you, in writing, that:

- All information you are required to provide in your bankruptcy papers must be complete, accurate, and truthful.
- You must completely and accurately disclose your assets and liabilities in the documents you file to begin your case.
- You must undertake a reasonable inquiry to establish the replacement value of any item you plan to keep, before you provide that value on your forms.
- Your current monthly income and your computation of projected disposable income as stated in your bankruptcy papers (if your income is more than the state median), must be based on a reasonable inquiry into their accuracy.
- Your case may be audited, and your failure to cooperate in the audit may result in dismissal of your case or some other sanction, including a possible criminal penalty.

In addition to these stark warnings—which most debt relief agencies would rather not have to give—a debt relief agency must also give you a general notice regarding some basic bankruptcy requirements and your options for help in filing and pursuing your case.

Sample Notice From Debt Relief Agency

IMPORTANT INFORMATION ABOUT BANKRUPTCY ASSISTANCE SERVICES FROM AN ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER.

If you decide to seek bankruptcy relief, you can represent yourself, you can hire an attorney to represent you, or you can get help in some localities from a bankruptcy petition preparer who is not an attorney. THE LAW REQUIRES AN ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER TO GIVE YOU A WRITTEN CONTRACT SPECIFYING WHAT THE ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER WILL DO FOR YOU AND HOW MUCH IT WILL COST. Ask to see the contract before you hire anyone.

The following information helps you understand what must be done in a routine bankruptcy case to help you evaluate how much service you need. Although bankruptcy can be complex, many cases are routine.

Before filing a bankruptcy case, either you or your attorney should analyze your eligibility for different forms of debt relief available under the Bankruptcy Code and which form of relief is most likely to be beneficial for you. Be sure you understand the relief you can obtain and its limitations. To file a bankruptcy case, documents called a Petition, Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs, as well as in some cases a Statement of Intention need to be prepared correctly and filed with the bankruptcy court. You will have to pay a filing fee to the bankruptcy court. Once your case starts, you will have to attend the required first meeting of creditors where you may be questioned by your creditors.

If you choose to file a chapter 7 case, you may be asked by a creditor to reaffirm a debt. You may want help deciding whether to do so. A creditor is not permitted to coerce you into reaffirming your debts.

If you choose to file a chapter 13 case in which you repay your creditors what you can afford over 3 to 5 years, you may also want help with preparing your chapter 13 plan and with the confirmation hearing on your plan which will be before a bankruptcy judge.

If you select another type of relief under the Bankruptcy Code other than chapter 7 or chapter 13, you will want to find out what should be done from someone familiar with that type of relief.

Your bankruptcy case may also involve litigation. You are generally permitted to represent yourself in litigation in bankruptcy court, but only attorneys, not bankruptcy petition preparers, can give you legal advice.

Above is the notice that you can expect to receive from any debt relief agency within three business days after the agency first offers to provide you with services. Failure to give you this notice—in a timely manner—can land the agency in big trouble.

Finally, every debt relief agency has to give you some plain-English written information about the basic tasks associated with most bankruptcies, such as how to deal with secured debts and choose exemptions. Ideally, debt relief agencies would freely distribute this book, which has all of the information required (and much more, of course).

Restrictions on Debt Relief Agencies

Under the new law, a debt relief agency may not:

- fail to perform any service that the agency informed you it would perform in connection with your bankruptcy case
- counsel you to make any statement in a document that is untrue and misleading or that the agency should have known was untrue or misleading, or
- advise you to incur more debt in order to pay for the agency's services (for instance, accepting a credit card or steering you to a cash advance business).

Any contract that doesn't comply with the new requirements on debt relief agencies may not be enforced against you. A debt relief agency is liable to you for costs and fees, including legal fees, if the agency negligently or intentionally:

- fails to comply with the new law's restrictions on debt relief agencies, or
- fails to file a document that results in dismissal of your case or conversion to another bankruptcy chapter.

In sum, debt relief agencies are on the hook if they are negligent in performing the services required by the bankruptcy law or other services they have agreed to provide.

Bankruptcy Petition Preparers

Even though you should be able to handle routine bankruptcy procedures yourself, you may want someone familiar with the bankruptcy forms and courts in your area to use a computer to enter your data in the official forms and print them out for filing with the court. For this level of assistance—routine form preparation and organization—consider using a bankruptcy petition preparer (BPP).

Limits on Bankruptcy Petition Preparers

BPPs are very different from lawyers. BPPs are legally prohibited from giving you legal advice, which includes a lot of the information in this book, such as:

- whether to file a bankruptcy petition or which chapter (7, 11, 12, or 13) is appropriate
- whether your debts will be discharged under a particular chapter
- whether you will be able to hang on to your home or other property if you file under a particular chapter (that is, which exemptions you should choose)
- information about the tax consequences of a case brought under a particular chapter or whether tax claims in your case can be discharged
- whether you should offer to repay or agree to reaffirm a debt
- how to characterize the nature of your interest in property or debts, and
- information about bankruptcy procedures and rights.

Most important, BPPs cannot tell you how to draft your Chapter 13 repayment plan. Even if you hire a BPP to help you with the rest of your paperwork, you may need at least some help from a lawyer to draft your plan.

Fees

All fees charged by debt relief agencies are reviewed by the U.S. Trustee for reasonableness. However, unlike lawyers' fees, which can vary widely according to the circumstances, a BPP's fees are subject to a strict cap, somewhere between $100 and $200, depending on the district. The rationale offered by the U.S. Trustee for this cap—and by the courts that have upheld it—is that BPP fees can be set according to what general typists charge per page in the community. Because BPPs aren't supposed to be doing anything other than “typing” the forms, the argument goes, they shouldn't be able to charge rates for professional services.

Rates allowed for BPPs are far less than lawyers charge. For that reason, BPPs are a good choice for people who want some help getting their basic Chapter 13 forms typed and organized in a way that will please the court clerk.

How Bankruptcy Petition Preparers Are Regulated

Anyone can be a BPP. Yes, anyone. There is nothing in the bankruptcy code that requires BPPs to have any particular level of education, training, or experience. Unlike most other jobs, a prison record is no handicap to becoming a BPP. How, then, are BPPs regulated? Regulation is provided by the U.S. Trustee's office, which reviews all bankruptcy petitions prepared by a BPP. BPPs must provide their name, address, telephone number, and Social Security number on the bankruptcy petition, as well as on every other bankruptcy document they prepare. The U.S. Trustee uses this information to keep tabs on BPPs.

BPPs are also regulated at the creditors' meeting, where the bankruptcy trustee can ask you about the manner in which the BPP conducts his or her business. For instance, if you are representing yourself, the trustee might ask how you got the information necessary to choose your exemptions (see Ch. 3) or decide which bankruptcy chapter to use.

If the BPP provided you with this information, the trustee may refer the case to the U.S. Trustee's office and the BPP will be hauled into court to explain why he or she violated the rules against giving legal advice. The BPP may be forced to return the fee you paid and may even be banned from practicing as a BPP, if it's not the first offense. None of this will have any effect on your case, however, other than the inconvenience of being dragged into court.

BPPs can be fined for certain actions and inactions spelled out in the Bankruptcy Code (11 U.S.C. § 110). These are:

- failing to put their name, address, and Social Security number on your bankruptcy petition
- failing to give you a copy of your bankruptcy documents when you sign them

- using the word "legal" or any similar term in advertisements, or advertising under a category that includes such terms, and
- accepting court filing fees from you; you must pay the filing fee to the court yourself or, in some districts, give the BPP a cashier's check made out to the court.

Finally, under the new law, BPPs must submit a statement under oath with each petition they prepare stating how much you paid them in the previous 12 months and any fees that you owe them but haven't yet paid them. If they charge more than they are permitted, they will be ordered to return the excess fees to you.

If a BPP engages in any fraudulent act in regard to your case or fails to comply with the rules governing their behavior listed above, he or she may be required to return your entire fee as well as pay a $500 fine for each transgression. If they engage in serious fraud, they may be fined up to $2,000 and triple your fee, and even be ordered to cease providing BPP services. Simply put, fraudulent BPPs (those who would take your money without providing promised services or counsel you to play fast and loose with the bankruptcy system) are likely to be weeded out in a hurry.

Can BPPs Give You Written Information?

Under the Bankruptcy Code, BPPs are supposed to prepare your bankruptcy forms under your direction. This means you are supposed to tell the BPP what exemptions to choose, whether to file under Chapter 7 or Chapter 13, what approach to take in respect to your secured debts (car note, mortgage) and what values to place on your property. That's fine in theory, but unless you have the benefit of this book or another source of legal information, there is no way you would have adequate bankruptcy expertise to tell the BPP how to proceed. In an attempt to bridge this gap, many BPPs hand their customers written materials that contain all the information their customers need to direct the case. Unfortunately, providing a customer with written legal information about bankruptcy has itself been held to be the unauthorized practice of law in many states (California is an important exception). Whether these holdings will continue under the new bankruptcy law remains to be seen.

How to Find Bankruptcy Petition Preparers

BPP services are springing up all over the country to help people who don't want or can't afford to hire a lawyer, but you're still more likely to find a BPP if you live on the West Coast. The best way to find a reputable BPP in your area is to get a recommendation from someone who has used a particular BPP and been satisfied with his or her work.

BPPs sometimes advertise in classified sections of local newspapers and in the yellow pages. You may have to look hard to spot their ads, however, because they go by different names in different states. In California, your best bet is to find a legal document assistant (the official name given to independent paralegals in California) who also provide BPP services. Check the website maintained by the California Association of Legal Document Assistants (www.calda.org). In Arizona, hunt for a legal document preparer. In other states, especially Florida, search for paralegals who directly serve the public (often termed independent paralegals or legal technicians). In many states, an independent paralegal franchise called We the People offers BPP services.

Many BPPs Don't Prepare Chapter 13 Paperwork

As a general rule, BPPs don't often work on Chapter 13 cases. Because there are strict limits on the fees a BPP can charge, BPPs are unable to earn a profit from working on Chapter 13 bankruptcies. Also, BPPs are not legally allowed to draft Chapter 13 plans—such work is considered to be practicing law, and therefore reserved only for attorneys—and few of their clients are able to draft a plan on their own. If you are using this book and assure the BPP that you can draft your own plan, the BPP might be willing to prepare the rest of your paperwork, however.

Combining Lawyers and Bankruptcy Petition Preparers

In California and some other parts of the country, it is possible to use a BPP to grind out your paperwork and a lawyer to provide you with all the legal savvy you need to direct your own case. Under this arrangement, you are still representing yourself, but you are combining legal and secretarial resources to get the job done. This is what is known as unbundled legal service, where you hire an attorney for a discrete task (legal advice in this case) rather than for the whole enchilada we know as “legal representation.”

A Bankruptcy Petition Preparer Cannot Represent You

If you decide to use a BPP, remember that you are representing yourself and are responsible for the outcome of your case. This means not only learning about your rights under the bankruptcy law and understanding the proper procedures to be followed, but also accepting responsibility for correctly and accurately filling in the bankruptcy petition and schedules and preparing a confirmable Chapter 13 repayment plan. The point is, unless you hire a lawyer to represent you, you are solely responsible for acquiring the information necessary to competently pursue your case.

Bankruptcy Lawyers

Bankruptcy lawyers (a type of debt relief agency under the law) are regular lawyers who specialize in handling bankruptcy cases. Under the old law, it was usually possible to find an affordable bankruptcy lawyer who would provide at least a minimal level of representation throughout your case. However, for the reasons discussed below, lawyers are charging more to represent clients in bankruptcies filed under the new law.

If you aren't represented by a lawyer but want to file for bankruptcy, you will need to represent yourself. While this will involve a fair amount of work—much more than under the old law—it is certainly possible.

Full-Service Lawyer Representation

In a general sense, you are represented by a lawyer if you contract with the lawyer to handle some or all of your bankruptcy case for you. More specifically, there are two types of representation—the type where you hire a lawyer to assume complete responsibility for your bankruptcy, and the type where you represent yourself but hire a lawyer to handle one particular aspect of your bankruptcy case. We refer to the first type of representation as “full-service representation” and the second type of representation as unbundled services (discussed below).

When providing full-service representation, a bankruptcy lawyer is responsible for making sure that all of your paperwork is filed on time, that the information in your paperwork is accurate, and that you propose a repayment plan the judge will confirm. These duties require the lawyer to review various documents—for instance, your credit report, tax returns, and home value appraisal—both to assure the accuracy of your paperwork and to make sure that you are filing for bankruptcy under the appropriate chapter.

In exchange for their basic fee, full-service bankruptcy lawyers also are typically responsible for appearing on your behalf at the creditors’ meeting and confirmation hearing, representing you if a creditor objects to your plan or opposes the discharge of a debt, and eliminating any liens that the bankruptcy laws allow to be stripped from your property.

Often, it will be very clear from the start that you will be able to draft your own repayment plan (with the help of Ch. 8) and that there are no complications—such as a lien that must be stripped from your property—that require the skills of a lawyer. In this situation, you can get by with the help of this book and, if you wish, other support resources described in this chapter.

In many Chapter 13 cases, however, the opposite is true: Either you cannot put together a confirmable repayment plan in the court’s required format, or you can tell from the very beginning that you—or an attorney representing you—will have to appear before a bankruptcy judge several times to keep your bankruptcy on track and fully assert your rights under the bankruptcy laws. And that can be intimidating. As a general rule, you might also consider hiring a full-service lawyer at the beginning of your case if you know that you will need to prepare custom-made court papers (for which there aren’t any official forms) or to negotiate with creditors in situations where a lot is at stake and you don’t have confidence in your own negotiating skills.

Lawyers Can Amend Your Paperwork

Despite your best efforts to represent yourself, there may come a time when you realize that you are in over your head. If this happens, it is most likely to take place at the Chapter 13 confirmation hearing—the first time you appear before a judge. The judge might make it painfully clear that you are going to need a lawyer’s help if you want to continue with your case.

Fortunately, the bankruptcy rules make it very easy to amend your paperwork—and your repayment plan—if necessary. Don’t be afraid to consult with a lawyer about your case, if you feel like you need help. If you decide to hire the lawyer to take over, he or she can make any necessary amendments. Also, you can pay the lawyer’s fees as part of your repayment plan, rather than having to come up with the whole fee up front.

Sometimes, a case appears to be simple at the beginning but turns out to be complicated later on. In that event, you might start out representing yourself but later decide to hire an attorney to handle a tricky issue that arises. (See “Unbundled Services,” below, for more on hiring a lawyer on a limited basis.)

Because full-service lawyer duties for even a simple bankruptcy case have drastically increased under the 2005 bankruptcy law, typical lawyer fees have gone way up. For this reason, many people who would have used lawyers in the past will now be forced to represent themselves—with or without the help of outside resources. And many readers of this book are likely to find themselves in this boat.

Unbundled Services

As mentioned earlier, the recent changes in bankruptcy law means that many people who would have hired a full-service lawyer in the past will now have to represent themselves. However, this doesn’t mean that they can’t get a lawyer to help out with some aspect of the case. Since the 1990s, lawyers have been increasingly willing to offer their services on a piecemeal basis and provide legal advice over the telephone and Internet to help people who are representing themselves. In bankruptcy cases, lawyers are increasingly willing to step in and handle a particular matter, such as stripping liens from your property or handling a dischargeability action brought by you or a creditor.

When lawyers do specific jobs at a client's request but don't contract for full-service representation in the underlying case, they are said to be providing unbundled services. For example, you may be able to hire an attorney to handle a specific procedure—such as drafting a confirmable repayment plan or defending against a motion for relief from stay—while you handle the main part of the bankruptcy yourself.

Few cases discuss the boundaries of unbundled services. Some courts have held that attorneys can't "ghostwrite" legal documents for nonlawyers—because that would be a type of fraud on the court—but the issue has not been decided by most courts. Also, nothing prevents a lawyer from appearing for you in a limited capacity and putting his or her own name on associated documents.

Lawyers providing unbundled services usually charge an hourly fee. As a general rule, you should bring an attorney into the case for an unbundled service only if the service is necessary for your bankruptcy to succeed (for example, drafting a confirmable repayment plan) or involves something valuable enough to justify the attorney's fees. If a creditor objects to the discharge of a $500 debt and it will cost you $400 to hire an attorney, you may be better off trying to handle the matter yourself, even though this increases the risk that the creditor will win. If, however, the dispute is worth $2,000 and the attorney will cost you $400, hiring the attorney makes better sense.

Unfortunately, some bankruptcy attorneys do not like to appear or do paperwork on a piecemeal basis. Justified or not, these attorneys believe that by doing a little work for you, they might be on the hook if something goes wrong in another part of your case—that is, if they are in for a penny, they are in for a pound. Also, the bar associations of some states frown on unbundled services on ethical grounds. On the other hand, a number of other state bar associations are starting to encourage their attorneys to offer unbundled services simply because so many people—even middle-income people—are unable to afford full representation.

How to Find a Bankruptcy Lawyer

Where there's a bankruptcy court, there are bankruptcy lawyers. They're listed in the yellow pages under "attorneys," and often advertise in newspapers. You should use an experienced bankruptcy lawyer, not a general practitioner, to advise you or handle matters associated with bankruptcy.

There are several ways to find the best bankruptcy lawyer for your job:

- Personal referrals. This is your best approach. If you know someone who was pleased with the services of a bankruptcy lawyer, call that lawyer first.
- Bankruptcy petition preparers. If there's a BPP in your area, he or she may know some bankruptcy attorneys who are both competent and sympathetic to self-helpers. It is here that you are most likely to find a good referral to attorneys who are willing to deliver unbundled services, including advice over the telephone.
- Legal Aid. Legal Aid offices are partially funded by the federal Legal Services Corporation and offer legal assistance in many areas. A few offices may do bankruptcies, although most do not. To qualify for Legal Aid, you must have a very low income.
- Legal clinics. Many law schools sponsor legal clinics and provide free legal advice to consumers. Some legal clinics have the same income requirements as Legal Aid; others offer free services to low- and moderate-income people.
- Group legal plans. If you're a member of a plan that provides free or low-cost legal assistance and the plan covers bankruptcies, make that your first stop in looking for a lawyer.
- Lawyer-referral panels. Most county bar associations will give you the names of bankruptcy attorneys who practice in your area. But bar associations may not provide much screening. Take the time to check out the credentials and experience of the person to whom you're referred.
- Internet directories. Both bar associations and private companies provide lists of bankruptcy lawyers on the Internet, with a lot more information about the lawyer than you're likely to get in a yellow pages ad. One good place to start is Nolo's lawyer directory, at www.nolo.com. Also, check out www.legalconsumer.com, a site that provides a variety of free services and information, including bankruptcy lawyer listings by zip code.

TIP

Look for a member of the National Association of Consumer Bankruptcy Attorneys. Because of the massive changes enacted by the new bankruptcy law, you will want to find an attorney who has a means of keeping up to date and communicating with other bankruptcy lawyers. Membership in the National Association of Consumer Bankruptcy Attorneys (NACBA) is a good sign that your lawyer will be tuned in to the nuances of the new law and the court interpretations of the law that are sure to come.

Fees

For a routine Chapter 13 bankruptcy, a full-service lawyer will likely charge you somewhere between $2,500 and $4,000 (plus the $274 filing fee and the fees you'll have to pay for credit counseling and personal debt management counseling, about $50 each).

Some lawyers allow you to pay the full fee through your repayment plan, without paying anything up front. Other lawyers require an initial payment—for example, $1,000—and let you pay the rest through your plan. A lawyer might decide how you should pay by considering the likelihood that your plan will be confirmed and you will be able to complete it. For example, if you clearly have enough income to cover your mandatory debts and you are filing for Chapter 13 to save your home, the lawyer might charge only a minimal initial fee, because you are likely to complete your plan and finish paying the fee that way. On the other hand, if you barely have enough income to propose a confirmable plan and you don't own a home, the lawyer might be skeptical of your ability to complete the plan—and might demand the entire fee up front.

On your bankruptcy papers, you must state the amount you are paying your bankruptcy lawyer. Because every penny you pay to a bankruptcy lawyer is a penny not available to your creditors (at least in theory), the court has the legal authority to make the attorney justify his or her fee. This rarely happens, however, because attorneys know the range of fees generally allowed by local bankruptcy judges and set their fees accordingly. This means that you probably won't find much variation in the amounts charged by lawyers in your area (although it never hurts to shop around).

Bankruptcy Lawyer Fees Are Not Fixed

Despite what many believe, bankruptcy lawyer fees are not fixed—individual lawyers are free to decide what to charge, based on what services you want and how complicated your case is likely to be. This is why it pays to shop around: You are likely to hear a range of fee quotes and options for payment.

The scope and range of services that the attorney promises you in return for your initial fee will be listed in what's called a Rule 2016 Attorney Fee Disclosure Form. This form is filed as part of your bankruptcy papers. In the typical Chapter 13 case, the attorney's fee will include the routine tasks associated with a bankruptcy filing: counseling, preparing bankruptcy forms, drafting your repayment plan, and attending the creditors' meeting and confirmation hearing. Any task not included in the Rule 2016 disclosure form is subject to a separate fee.

If your case will likely require more attorney time, you may—and probably will—be charged extra, according to the attorney's hourly fee or other criteria he or she uses. A typical bankruptcy attorney charges between $200 and $300 an hour (rural and urban) and would charge a minimum of roughly $400 to $600 for a court appearance. Some attorneys will add these fees to their standard fee and require you to pay it all in advance. For instance, if the attorney's standard fee is $1,400, but the attorney sees extra work down the line, you may be charged $2,000 or even $2,500 in anticipation of the additional hours.

Other attorneys will happily just charge you their standard fee up front and wait until after you file to charge you for the extra work. Because these fees are earned after your bankruptcy filing, they won't be discharged in your bankruptcy and the attorney need not collect them up front; they will be added to your plan payments. However the attorney charges you, you are protected against fee gouging. An attorney must file a supplemental Rule 2016 form to obtain the court's permission for any postfiling fees.

What to Look for in a Lawyer

No matter how you find a lawyer, these three suggestions will help you make sure you have the best possible working relationship.

First, fight any urge you may have to surrender to, or be intimidated by, the lawyer. You should be the one who decides what you feel comfortable doing about your legal and financial affairs. Keep in mind that you're hiring the lawyer to perform a service for you, so shop around if the price or personality isn't right.

Second, make sure you have good "chemistry" with any lawyer you hire. When making an appointment, ask to talk directly to the lawyer. If you can't, this may give you a hint as to how accessible he or she is. Of course, if you're told that a paralegal will be handling the routine aspects of your case under the supervision of a lawyer, you may be satisfied with that arrangement. If you do talk directly, ask some specific questions. Do you get clear, concise answers? If not, try someone else. Also pay attention to how the lawyer responds to your knowledge. If you've read this book, you're already better informed than most clients (and some lawyers are threatened by clients who have done their homework).

Finally, once you find a lawyer you like, make an hour-long appointment to discuss your situation fully. The lawyer or a paralegal in the lawyer's office will tell you what to bring to the meeting, if anything (if not, be sure to ask ahead of time). Some lawyers will want to see a recent credit report and tax return, while others will send you a questionnaire to complete prior to your visit. Depending on the circumstances, you may also be asked to bring your bills and documents pertaining to your home and other real estate you own. Some lawyers prefer not to deal with details during the first visit, and will simply ask you to come as you are.

Your main goal at the initial conference is to find out what the lawyer recommends in your particular case and how much it will cost. Go home and think about the lawyer's suggestions. If they don't make sense or you have other reservations, call someone else.

Legal Research

Legal research can vary from the very simple to the hopelessly complex. In this section, we are staying on the simple side. If you would like to learn more about legal research or if you find that our suggestions come up a bit short in your particular case, we recommend that you obtain a copy of Legal Research: How to Find & Understand the Law, by Stephen Elias and Susan Levinkind (Nolo), which provides a plain-English tutorial on legal research in the law library and on the Internet.

Sources of Bankruptcy Law

Bankruptcy law comes from a variety of sources:

- federal bankruptcy statutes passed by Congress
- federal rules about bankruptcy procedure issued by a federal judicial agency
- local rules issued by individual bankruptcy courts
- federal and bankruptcy court cases applying bankruptcy laws to specific disputes
- laws (statutes) passed by state legislatures that define the property you can keep in bankruptcy, and
- state court cases interpreting state exemption statutes.

Not so long ago, you would have had to visit a law library to find these resources. Now you can find most of them on the Internet. However, if you are able to visit a decent-sized law library, your research will be the better for it. Using actual books allows you to more easily find and read relevant court interpretations of the underlying statutes and rules—which are crucial to getting a clear picture of what the laws and rules really mean.

How to Use Law Libraries

Law libraries that are open to the public are most often found in and around courthouses. Law schools also frequently admit the public at least some of the time (typically not during exam time, over the summer, or during other breaks in the academic year).

If you're using a library as a member of the public, find a way to feel at home, even if it seems that the library is run mostly to serve members of the legal community: law students, judges, lawyers, and paralegals. Almost without exception, law libraries come with law librarians. The law librarians will be helpful as long as you ask them the right questions. For example, the law librarians will help you find specific library resources (for instance, where you can find the federal bankruptcy statutes or rules), but they normally won't teach you the ins and outs of legal research. Nor will they give an opinion about what a law means, how you should deal with the court, or how your particular question should be answered. For instance, if you want to find a state case interpreting a particular exemption, the law librarian will show you where your state code is located on the shelves and may even point out the volumes that contain the exemptions. The librarian won't, however, help you interpret the exemption, apply the exemption to your specific facts, or tell you how to raise the exemption in your bankruptcy case. Nor is the librarian likely to tell you what additional research steps you can or should take. When it comes to legal research in the law library, self help is the order of the day.

There is another important reason to visit the law library. Many have computer terminals that offer access to one or both of the major online legal research libraries: Westlaw and LexisNexis. With proper training, you can find just about anything in these online libraries that you could find in the law library itself. In fact, some libraries have started replacing hardcopy books with online materials, to save money and space. When visiting your local library, ask the librarian whether it has access to Westlaw or Lexis and, if so, for some tips on using the bankruptcy materials the online library carries. For example, Westlaw offers a set of materials under a tab called "Bankruptcy Practitioner," with forms, cases, articles, and treatises, all searchable by key words. Learning how to use these materials will be an enormous timesaver in your research.

Below, we show you how to get to the resources you'll most likely be using, whether you are doing your research on the Internet or in the law library.

Bankruptcy Background Materials: Overviews, Encyclopedias, and Treatises

Before digging into the primary law sources (statutes, rules, cases, and so on) that we discuss below, you may want to do some background reading to get a firm grasp of your issue or question.

The Internet

A number of Internet sites contain large collections of articles written by experts about various aspects of bankruptcy. Good starting places are Nolo's website, at www.nolo.com and www.legalconsumer.com, which offer lots of information and resources.

If you are using Westlaw at your local library, head for the information under the tab "Bankruptcy Practitioner."

The Law Library

Providing you with a good treatise or encyclopedia discussion of bankruptcy is where the law library shines. You can find these materials in hardcopy or on the Westlaw or Lexis online research libraries.

Collier on Bankruptcy

It's a good idea to get an overview of your subject before trying to find a precise answer to a precise question. The best way to do this is to find a general commentary on your subject by a bankruptcy expert. For example, if you want to find out whether a particular debt is nondischargeable, you should start by reading a general discussion about the type of debt you're dealing with. Or, if you don't know whether you're entitled to claim certain property as exempt, a good overview of your state's exemptions would get you started on the right track.

The most complete source of this type of background information is a set of books known as Collier on Bankruptcy, by Lawrence P. King, et al. (Matthew Bender). It's available in virtually all law libraries. Collier is both incredibly thorough and meticulously up to date; semiannual supplements, with all the latest developments, are in the front of each volume. In addition to comments on every aspect of bankruptcy law, Collier contains the bankruptcy statutes, rules, and exemption lists for every state.

Collier is organized according to the bankruptcy statutes. This means that the quickest way to find information in it is to know what statute you're looking for. (See the Bankruptcy Code sections set out below.) If you still can't figure out the governing statute, start with the Collier subject matter index. Be warned, however, that the index can be difficult to use because it contains a lot of bankruptcy jargon you may be unfamiliar with. A legal dictionary will be available in the library.

Bankruptcy (The Rutter Group)

This is a four-volume set of looseleaf binders that covers every aspect of bankruptcy. Although these books are written for lawyers, they aren't too difficult to understand and use. You'll find information on exemptions, Chapter 13 plans, lien stripping, filing and opposing motions, and much more. The books are geared especially for those in California and include numerous forms.

Other Background Resources

For general discussions of bankruptcy issues, there are several other good places to start. An excellent all-around resource is called Consumer Bankruptcy Law and Practice. This volume, published by the National Consumer Law Center, is updated every year. It contains a complete discussion of Chapter 13 bankruptcy procedures, the official bankruptcy forms, and a marvelous bibliography.

Another good treatise is a legal encyclopedia called American Jurisprudence, 2nd Series. Almost all law libraries carry it. The article on bankruptcy has an extensive table of contents, and the entire encyclopedia has an index. Between these two tools, you should be able to zero in on helpful material. Finally, some large and well-stocked law libraries carry a looseleaf publication known as the Commerce Clearing House (CCH) Bankruptcy Law Reporter (BLR). In this publication, you can find all three primary source materials relating to bankruptcy: statutes, rules, and cases.

If you are looking for information on adversary proceedings (such as how to defend against a creditor's challenge to the dischargeability of a debt), turn to Represent Yourself in Court, by Paul Bergman and Sara J. Berman-Barrett (Nolo). It has an entire chapter on representing yourself in adversary proceedings in bankruptcy court. If you need information on court procedures or the local rules of a specific court, consult the Collier Bankruptcy Practice Manual.

Finding Federal Bankruptcy Statutes

Title 11 of the United States Code contains all the statutes that govern your bankruptcy.

The Internet

You can find the complete Bankruptcy Code online, free. One of our favorite legal research resources, the Legal Information Institute of Cornell University Law School, lets you browse laws by subject matter and also offers a keyword search. To find the Bankruptcy Code, go to www.law.cornell.edu, select "U.S. Code" from the menu available under the "Constitutions and Codes" tab, then select Title 11. Use the table below to find the code sections you need.

The Bankruptcy Code is also available at the website of the American Bankruptcy Institute, www.abiworld.org. Find the link to view the code online from ABI's home page or go straight to the wiki: www.abiworld.org/wiki/index.html.

The Law Library

Virtually every law library has at least one complete set of the annotated United States Code ("annotated" means that each statute is followed by citations and summaries of cases interpreting that provision). If you already have a citation to the statute you are seeking, you can use the citation to find the statute. However, if you have no citation—which is frequently the case—you can use either the index to Title 11 (the part of the Code that applies to bankruptcy) or the table we set out below, which matches various issues that are likely to interest you with specific sections of Title 11.

Once you have found and read the statute, you can browse the one-paragraph summaries of written opinions issued by courts that have interpreted that particular statute. You will be looking to see whether a court has addressed your particular issue. If so, you can find and read the entire case in the law library. Reading what a judge has had to say about the statute regarding facts similar to yours is an invaluable guide to understanding how a judge is likely to handle the issue in your case, although when and where the case was decided may be important.

Finding the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure (FRBP)

The Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure govern what happens if an issue is contested in the bankruptcy court. They also apply to certain routine bankruptcy procedures, such as deadlines for filing paperwork. Because most cases sail through the court without any need for the bankruptcy judge's intervention, you may not need to be familiar with these rules. However, certain types of creditor actions in the bankruptcy court must proceed by way of a regular lawsuit conducted under both these rules and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure—for example, complaints to determine dischargeability of a debt. If you are representing yourself in such a lawsuit, you'll want to know these rules and look at the cases interpreting them. Any law library will have these rules. Your bankruptcy court's website will have a link to the rules, as does www.law.cornell.edu.

Finding Local Court Rules

Every bankruptcy court operates under a set of local rules that govern how it does business and what is expected of the parties who use it. Each court also has its own forms that debtors must use, and these forms vary from court to court. Throughout this book, we have cautioned you to read the rules and review the local forms for your particular court so that your dealings with the court will go smoothly—and so you won't end up getting tossed out of court if you become involved in litigation, such as an action to determine the dischargeability of a debt or a creditor's motion to lift the automatic stay.

Your bankruptcy court clerk's office will have the local rules available for you. Most courts also post their local rules and forms on their own websites. To find the website for your court, take these steps:

Step 1: Go to www.uscourts.gov/links.html.

Step 2: Click the number on the map that is closest to where you live.

Step 3: Browse the list until you find your court and click on it.

Step 4: Click on the local rules and forms link.

These court websites usually contain other helpful information as well, including case information, official bankruptcy forms, court guidelines (in addition to the local rules), information for lawyers and BPPs, information about the court and its judges, and the court calendar.

At the law library, the Collier Bankruptcy Practice Manual has the local rules for most (if not all) of the nation's bankruptcy courts.

Finding Federal Court Bankruptcy Cases

Court opinions are vital to understanding how a particular law might apply to your individual case. The following levels of federal courts issue bankruptcy-related opinions:

- the U.S. Supreme Court
- the U.S. Courts of Appeals
- the Bankruptcy Appellate Panels
- the U.S. District Courts, and
- the bankruptcy courts.

Most bankruptcy-related opinions are, not surprisingly, issued by the bankruptcy courts. By comparison, very few bankruptcy opinions come out of the U.S. Supreme Court. The other courts are somewhere in the middle.

The Internet

Depending on the date the case was decided, U.S. Supreme Court decisions and U.S. Court of Appeals decisions are available for free on the Internet. For $13.95 a month you can also subscribe to VersusLaw (at www.versuslaw.com), which provides U.S. Court of Appeals cases for an earlier period than you can get for free—often back to 1950. VersusLaw doesn't require you to sign a long-term contract. So, one payment of $13.95 gets you a month's worth of research. Not too shabby.

VersusLaw also publishes many U.S. District Court cases on its website. Westlaw and Lexis are generally too costly to use from home, unless you do a lot of research. However, you will be able to find either or both of these online megaresources at your local law library.

U.S. Supreme Court. To find a Supreme Court case, go to www.findlaw.com/casecode/supreme.html. Use one of the search options to locate a particular case. If you don't know the case name and you don't have a citation, enter some relevant words relating to your issue and see what you pull up. You can search cases all the way back to 1893.

U.S. Court of Appeals. You can find a U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals case back to roughly 1996. Follow these steps:

Step 1: Go to www.findlaw.com/casecode/index.html.

Step 2: Scroll down to U.S. Courts of Appeals—Opinions and Websites.

Step 3: Click on the link that contains your state's abbreviation.

Step 4: Use one of the search options to find the case.

Again, if you are looking for a case decided prior to 1996, your best bet is to sign up for VersusLaw, described just above.

U.S. District Court and Bankruptcy Court. Cases reported by the bankruptcy courts are generally not available online unless you use Westlaw or Lexis. However, if you know the name of a particular case, a Google search might lead you to a court's website, where some judges post their decisions. You will probably have to take a trip to a law library if you want to know what the judges are doing in these courts—where the legal rubber meets the judicial road.

The Law Library

U.S. Supreme Court cases are published in three different book series:

- Supreme Court Reports
- Supreme Court Reporter, and
- Supreme Court Lawyer's Edition.

Some law libraries carry all three of these publications; others have only one. The cases are the same, but each series has different editorial enhancements.

U.S. Court of Appeals cases are published in the Federal Reporter (abbreviated simply as "F."). Most law libraries, large and small, carry this series.

Many U.S. District Court cases are published in the Federal Supplement (F.Supp.), a series available in most law libraries.

Written opinions of bankruptcy judges, and related appeals, are published in the Bankruptcy Reporter (B.R.), available in most mid- to large-sized libraries. To accurately understand how your bankruptcy court is likely to interpret the laws in your particular case, sooner or later you will need access to the Bankruptcy Reporter.

State Statutes

The secret to understanding what property you can keep frequently lies in the exemptions that your state allows you to claim. These exemptions are found in your state's statutes.

The Internet

Every state has its statutes online, including its exemption statutes. This means that you can read your state's exemption statutes for yourself. Follow these steps:

- Step 1: Go to Appendix A. At the top of your state's exemption table, you'll see a general reference to the collection of state laws for your state that contain the exemption statutes.
- Step 2: Go to www.nolo.com/legal-research/state-law.html.
- Step 3: Click on your state.
- Step 4: Locate the collection of statutes mentioned in Appendix A.
- Step 5: Use the exemption citation to the far right of your state's exemption table to search for the statute.

The Law Library

Your law library will have your state's statutes in book form, usually referred to as your state's code, annotated statutes, or compiled laws. Use Appendix A in this book to find a reference to the exemption statute you want to read, then use that reference to locate the exemption statute in the code. Once you find and read the statute, you can browse the summaries of court opinions interpreting the statute and, if you wish, read the cases in their entirety.

Alternatively, if your library has a copy of Collier on Bankruptcy (see above), you can find the exemptions for your state, accompanied by annotations summarizing state court interpretations.

State Court Cases

State courts are sometimes called on to interpret exemption statutes. If a court has interpreted the statute in which you are interested, you'll definitely want to chase down the relevant case and read it for yourself.

The Internet

All states make their more recent cases available free on the Internet—usually back to about 1996. To find these cases for your state:

- Step 1: Go to www.law.cornell.edu/opinions.html#state.
- Step 2: Click on your state.
- Step 3: Locate the link to the court opinions for your state. This may be one link, or there may be separate links for your state's supreme court and your state's courts of appeal (the lower trial courts seldom publish their opinions, so you probably won't be able to find them).

If you want to go back to an earlier case, consider subscribing to VersusLaw at www.versuslaw.com. As mentioned earlier, you don't have to sign a long-term contract.

The Law Library

Your law library will have a collection of books that contain opinions issued by your state's courts. If you have a citation, you can go right to the case. If you don't have a citation, you'll need to use a digest to find relevant bankruptcy cases. Finding cases by subject matter is a little too advanced for this brief summary. See Legal Research: How to Find & Understand the Law, by Stephen Elias and the Editors of Nolo (Nolo), for more help.

Other Helpful Resources

Probably the most helpful bankruptcy website is maintained by the Office of the United States Trustee, at www.justice.gov/ust. This site provides lists of approved credit and financial management counseling agencies, median income figures for every state, the IRS national, regional, and local expenses you will need to complete the means test, and all of the forms you will need to file, in fill-in-the-blanks, PDF format. You can also download official bankruptcy forms from www.uscourts.gov/bkforms/index.html. However, this site doesn't include required local forms; for those, you'll have to visit your court or its website.

As part of the bankruptcy process, you are required to give the replacement (retail) value for all of the property you list in Schedule A (real property) and Schedule B (personal property). These figures are also the key to figuring out which of your property is exempt. Here are some tips on finding these values:

- Cars: Use the Kelley Blue Book, at www.kbb.com, or the website of the National Auto Dealers Association, www.nada.com.
- Other personal property: Check prices on eBay, www.ebay.com.
- Homes: To value your property, compare it to similar real estate parcels in your neighborhood that have recently sold (comparables). For a modest fee, you can get details on comparables—including neighborhood information, sales history, address, number of bedrooms and baths, square footage, and property tax information—from SmartHomeBuy at www.smarthomebuy.com. Less detailed information (purchase price, sales date, and address) is available free from sites such as www.homevalues.com, www.zillow.com, www.domania.com, www.homeradar.com, and <http://list.realestate.yahoo.com/re/homevalues>.

Our Websites

Nolo's website, www.nolo.com, offers lots of free information on bankruptcy, credit repair, student loans, and much more. (Click the "Property and Money" tab to get started.) You can also view information on the Nolo products mentioned in this book, including links to legal updates highlighting important developments that occurred after this book went to press.

Nolo author Albin Renauer also maintains a website that provides a free means test calculator, helpful information about Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 bankruptcies, and a means test law browser that provides summaries and references to developing case law, at www.legalconsumer.com.

Glossary

341 meeting. See “meeting of creditors.”

341 notice. A notice sent to the debtor and the debtor’s creditors announcing the date, time, and place for the first meeting of creditors. The 341 notice is sent along with the notice of bankruptcy filing and information about important deadlines by which creditors have to take certain actions, such as filing objections.

342 notice. A notice that the court clerk is required to give to debtors pursuant to Section 342 of the Bankruptcy Code, to inform them of their obligations as bankruptcy debtors and the consequences of not being completely honest in their bankruptcy cases.

707(b) action. An action taken by the U.S. Trustee, the regular trustee, or any creditor, under authority of Section 707(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, to dismiss a debtor’s Chapter 7 filing on the ground of abuse.

Abuse. Misuse of the Chapter 7 bankruptcy remedy. This term is typically applied to a Chapter 7 bankruptcy filing that should have been filed under Chapter 13 because the debtor appears to have enough disposable income to fund a Chapter 13 repayment plan.

Accounts receivable. Money or other property that one person or business owes to another for goods or services. Accounts receivable most often refer to the debts owed to a business by its customers.

Administrative expenses. The trustee’s fee, the debtor’s attorneys’ fee, and other costs of bringing a bankruptcy case that a debtor must pay in full in a Chapter 13 repayment plan. Administrative costs are typically 10% of the debtor’s total payments under the plan.

Administrative Office of the United States Courts. The federal government agency that issues court rules and forms to be used by the federal courts, including bankruptcy courts.

Adversary action. Any lawsuit that begins with the filing of a formal complaint and formal service of process on the parties being sued. In a bankruptcy case, adversary actions are often brought to determine the dischargeability of a debt or to recover property transferred by the debtor shortly before filing for bankruptcy.

Affidavit. A written statement of facts, signed under oath in front of a notary public.

Allowed secured claim. A debt that is secured by collateral or a lien against the debtor’s property, for which the creditor has filed a proof of claim with the bankruptcy court. The claim is secured only to the extent of the value of the property—for example, if a debtor owes $5,000 on a note for a car that is worth only $3,000, the remaining $2,000 is an unsecured claim.

Amendment. A document filed by the debtor that changes one or more documents previously filed with the court. A debtor often files an amendment because the trustee requires changes to the debtor’s paperwork based on the testimony at the meeting of creditors.

Animals. An exemption category in many states. Some states specifically exempt pets or livestock and poultry. If your state simply allows you to exempt “animals,” you may include livestock, poultry, or pets. Some states exempt only domestic animals, which are usually considered to be all animals except pets.

Annuity. A type of insurance policy that pays out during the life of the insured, unlike life insurance, which pays out at the insured’s death. Once the insured reaches the age specified in the policy, he or she receives monthly payments until death.

Appliance. A household apparatus or machine, usually operated by electricity, gas, or propane. Examples include refrigerators, stoves, washing machines, dishwashers, vacuum cleaners, air conditioners, and toasters.

Arms and accoutrements. Arms are weapons (such as pistols, rifles, and swords); accoutrements are the furnishings of a soldier's outfit, such as a belt or pack, but not clothes or weapons.

Arms-length creditor. A creditor with whom the debtor deals in the normal course of business, as opposed to an insider (a friend, relative, or business partner).

Articles of adornment. See “jewelry.”

Assessment benefits. See “stipulated insurance.”

Assisted person. Any person contemplating or filing for bankruptcy who receives bankruptcy assistance, whose debts are primarily consumer debts, and whose nonexempt property is valued at less than $150,000. A person or entity that offers help to an assisted person is called a “debt relief agency.”

Automatic stay. An injunction automatically issued by the bankruptcy court when a debtor files for bankruptcy. The automatic stay prohibits most creditor collection activities, such as filing or continuing lawsuits, making written requests for payment, or notifying credit reporting bureaus of an unpaid debt.

Avails. Any amount available to the owner of an insurance policy other than the actual proceeds of the policy. Avails include dividend payments, interest, cash or surrender value (the money you'd get if you sold your policy back to the insurance company), and loan value (the amount of cash you can borrow against the policy).

Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Reform Act of 2005. The formal name of the new bankruptcy law that took effect on October 17, 2005.

Bankruptcy administrator. The official responsible for supervising the administration of bankruptcy cases, estates, and trustees in Alabama and North Carolina, where there is no U.S. Trustee.

Bankruptcy Appellate Panel. A specialized court that hears appeals of bankruptcy court decisions (available only in some regions).

Bankruptcy assistance. Goods or services provided to an “assisted person” for the purpose of providing information, advice, counsel, document preparation or filing, or attendance at a creditors' meeting; appearing in a case or proceeding on behalf of another person; or providing legal representation.

Bankruptcy Code. The federal law that governs the creation and operation of the bankruptcy courts and establishes bankruptcy procedures. (You can find the Bankruptcy Code in Title 11 of the United States Code.)

Bankruptcy estate. All of the property you own when you file for bankruptcy, except for most pensions and educational trusts. The trustee technically takes control of your bankruptcy estate for the duration of your case.

Bankruptcy lawyer. A lawyer who specializes in bankruptcy and is licensed to practice law in the federal courts.

Bankruptcy petition preparer. Any nonlawyer who helps someone with his or her bankruptcy. Bankruptcy petition preparers (BPPs) are a special type of debt relief agency, regulated by the U.S. Trustee. Because they are not lawyers, BPPs can't represent anyone in bankruptcy court or provide legal advice.

Bankruptcy Petition Preparer Fee Declaration. An official form bankruptcy petition preparers must file with the bankruptcy court to disclose their fees.

Bankruptcy Petition Preparer Notice to Debtor. A written notice that bankruptcy petition preparers must provide to debtors who use their services. The notice explains that bankruptcy petition preparers aren't attorneys and that they are permitted to perform only certain acts, such as entering information in the bankruptcy petition and schedules under the direction of their clients.

Benefit or benevolent society benefits. See “fraternal benefit society benefits.”

Building materials. Items, such as lumber, brick, stone, iron, paint, and varnish, that are used to build or improve a structure.

Burial plot. A cemetery plot.

Business bankruptcy. A bankruptcy in which the debts arise primarily from the operation of a business, including bankruptcies filed by corporations, limited liability companies, and partnerships.

Certification. The act of signing a document under penalty of perjury. (The document that is signed is also called a certification.)

Chapter 7 bankruptcy. A liquidation bankruptcy, in which the trustee sells the debtor's nonexempt property and distributes the proceeds to the debtor's creditors. At the end of the case, the debtor receives a discharge of all remaining debts, except those that cannot legally be discharged.

Chapter 9 bankruptcy. A type of bankruptcy restricted to governmental units.

Chapter 11 bankruptcy. A type of bankruptcy intended to help businesses reorganize their debt load in order to remain in business. A Chapter 11 bankruptcy is typically much more expensive than a Chapter 7 or 13 bankruptcy because all of the lawyers must be paid out of the bankruptcy estate.

Chapter 12 bankruptcy. A type of bankruptcy designed to help small farmers reorganize their debts.

Chapter 13 bankruptcy. A type of consumer bankruptcy designed to help individuals reorganize their debts and pay all or a portion of them over three to five years.

Chapter 13 plan. A document filed in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy in which the debtor shows how all of his or her projected disposable income will be used over a three- to five-year period to pay all mandatory debts—for example, back child support, taxes, and mortgage arrearages—as well as some or all unsecured, nonpriority debts, such as medical and credit card bills.

Claim. A creditor's assertion that the bankruptcy filer owes it a debt or obligation.

Clothing. As an exemption category, the everyday clothes you and your family need for work, school, household use, and protection from the elements. In many states, luxury items and furs are not included in the clothing exemption category.

Codebtor. A person who assumes an equal responsibility, along with the debtor, to repay a debt or loan.

Collateral. Property pledged by a borrower as security for a loan.

Common law property states. States that don't use a community property system to classify marital property.

Community property. Certain property owned by married couples in Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, New Mexico, Nevada, Texas, Washington, Wisconsin, and, if both spouses agree, Alaska. Very generally, all property acquired during the marriage is considered community property, belonging equally to both spouses, except for gifts and inheritances by one spouse. Similarly, all debts incurred during the marriage are considered community debts, owed equally by both spouses, with limited exceptions.

Complaint. A formal document that initiates a lawsuit.

Complaint to determine dischargeability. A complaint initiating an adversary action in bankruptcy court that asks the court to decide whether a particular debt should be discharged at the end of the debtor's bankruptcy case.

Condominium. A building or complex in which separate units, such as townhouses or apartments, are owned by individuals, and the common areas (lobby, hallways, stairways, and so on) are jointly owned by the unit owners.

Confirmation. The bankruptcy judge's ruling approving a Chapter 13 plan.

Confirmation hearing. A court hearing conducted by a bankruptcy judge in which the judge decides whether a debtor's proposed Chapter 13 plan appears to be feasible and meets all applicable legal requirements.

Consumer bankruptcy. A bankruptcy in which most of the debt was incurred for personal, family, or household purposes.

Consumer debt. A debt incurred by an individual for personal, family, or household purposes.

Contingent debts. Debts that may be owed if certain events happen or conditions are satisfied.

Under the new bankruptcy law, a debtor must undergo credit counseling with an approved provider before filing for bankruptcy.

Creditor. A person or institution to whom money is owed.

Creditor committee. In a Chapter 11 bankruptcy, a committee that represents the unsecured debtors in reorganization proceedings.

Creditor matrix. A specially formatted list of creditors that a debtor must file with the bankruptcy petition. The matrix helps the court notify creditors of the bankruptcy filing and the date and time set for the first meeting of creditors.

Creditors' meeting. See “meeting of creditors.”

Crops. Products of the soil or earth that are grown and raised annually and gathered in a single season. Thus, oranges (on the tree or harvested) are crops; an orange tree isn't.

Current market value. What property could be sold for. This is how a debtor's property was previously valued for purposes of determining whether the property is protected by an applicable exemption. Under the new bankruptcy law, property must be valued at its “replacement cost.”

Current monthly income. As defined by the new bankruptcy law, a bankruptcy filer's total gross income (whether taxable or not), averaged over the six-month period immediately preceding the month in which the bankruptcy is filed. The current monthly income is used to determine whether the debtor can file for Chapter 7 bankruptcy, among other things.

Debt. An obligation of any type, including a loan, credit, or promise to perform a contract or lease.

Debt relief agency. An umbrella term for any person or agency—including lawyers and bankruptcy petition preparers, but excluding banks, nonprofit and government agencies, and employees of debt relief agencies—that provides “bankruptcy assistance” to an “assisted person.”

A few states do require such a recording, however.

Discharge. A court order, issued at the conclusion of a Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 bankruptcy case, which legally relieves the debtor of personal liability for debts that can be discharged in that type of bankruptcy.

Discharge exceptions. Debts that are not discharged in a bankruptcy case. The debtor continues to owe these debts even after the bankruptcy is concluded.

Discharge hearing. A hearing conducted by a bankruptcy court to explain the discharge, urge the debtor to stay out of debt, and review reaffirmation agreements to make sure they are feasible and fair.

Dischargeability action. An adversary action brought by a party who asks the court to determine whether a particular debt qualifies for discharge.

Dischargeable debt. A debt that is wiped out at the conclusion of a bankruptcy case, unless the judge decides that it should not be.

Dismissal. When the court orders a case to be closed without providing the relief available under the bankruptcy laws. For example, a Chapter 13 case might be dismissed because the debtor fails to propose a feasible plan; a Chapter 7 case might be dismissed for abuse.

Disposable income. The difference between a debtor's "current monthly income" and allowable expenses. This is the amount that the bankruptcy law deems available to pay into a Chapter 13 plan.

Domestic animals. See "animals."

Domestic support obligation. An obligation to pay alimony or child support to a spouse, child, or government entity pursuant to an order by a court or other governmental unit.

Doubling. The ability of married couples to double the amount of certain property exemptions when filing for bankruptcy together. The federal bankruptcy exemptions allow doubling. State laws vary—some permit doubling and some do not.

Education Individual Retirement Account. A type of account to which a person can contribute a certain amount of tax-deferred funds every year for the educational benefit of the debtor or certain relatives. Such an account is not part of the debtor's bankruptcy estate.

Emergency bankruptcy filing. An initial bankruptcy filing that includes only the petition and the creditor matrix, filed right away because the debtor needs the protection of the automatic stay to prevent a creditor from taking certain action, such as a foreclosure. An emergency filing case will be dismissed if the other required documents and forms are not filed in a timely manner.

Endowment insurance. An insurance policy that gives an insured who lives for a specified time (the endowment period) the right to receive the face value of the policy (the amount paid at death). If the insured dies sooner, the beneficiary named in the policy receives the proceeds.

Equity. The amount you get to keep if you sell property—typically the property's market value, less the costs of sale and the value of any liens on the property.

ERISA-qualified benefits. Pensions that meet the requirements of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), a federal law that sets minimum standards for such plans and requires beneficiaries to receive certain notices.

Executory contract. A contract in which one or both parties still have a duty to carry out one or more of the contract's terms.

Exempt property. Property described by state and federal laws (exemptions) that a debtor is entitled to keep in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy. Exempt property cannot be taken and sold by the trustee for the benefit of the debtor's unsecured creditors.

Exemptions. State and federal laws specifying the types of property creditors are not entitled to take to satisfy a debt, and the bankruptcy trustee is not entitled to take and sell for the benefit of the debtor's unsecured creditors.

Farm tools. Tools used by a person whose primary occupation is farming. Some states limit farm tools of the trade to items that can be held in the hand, such as hoes, axes, pitchforks, shovels, scythes, and the like. In other states, farm tools also include plows, harnesses, mowers, reapers, and so on.

Federal exemptions. A list of exemptions contained in the federal Bankruptcy Code. Some states give debtors the option of using the federal exemptions rather than the state exemptions.

Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure. A set of rules issued by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, that govern bankruptcy court procedures.

Filing date. The date a bankruptcy petition in a particular case is filed. With few exceptions, debts incurred after the filing date are not discharged. Similarly, property owned before the filing date is part of the bankruptcy estate, while property acquired after the filing date is not.

Fines, penalties, and restitution. Debts owed to a court or a victim as a result of a sentence in a criminal matter. These debts are generally not dischargeable in bankruptcy.

Foreclosure. The process by which a creditor with a lien on real estate forces a sale of the property in order to collect on the lien. Foreclosure typically occurs when a homeowner defaults on a mortgage.

Fraternal benefit society benefits. Benefits, often group life insurance, paid for by fraternal societies, such as the Elks, Masons, Knights of Columbus, or the Knights of Maccabees, for their members. Also called benefit society, benevolent society, or mutual aid association benefits.

Fraud. Generally, an act that is intended to mislead another for the purpose of financial gain. In a bankruptcy case, fraud is any writing or representation intended to mislead creditors for the purpose of obtaining a loan or credit, or any act intended to mislead the bankruptcy court or the trustee.

Fraudulent transfer. In a bankruptcy case, a transfer of property to another for less than the property's value for the purpose of hiding the property from the bankruptcy trustee—for instance, when a debtor signs a car over to a relative to keep it out of the bankruptcy estate. Fraudulently transferred property can be recovered and sold by the trustee for the benefit of the creditors.

Fraudulently concealed assets. Property that a bankruptcy debtor deliberately fails to disclose as required by the bankruptcy rules.

Furnishings. An exemption category recognized in many states, which includes furniture, fixtures in your home (such as a heating unit, furnace, or built-in lighting), and other items with which a home is furnished, such as carpets and drapes.

Good faith. In a Chapter 13 case, when a debtor files for bankruptcy with the sincere purpose of paying off debts over the period of time required by law rather than for manipulative purposes—such as to prevent a foreclosure that by all rights should be allowed to proceed.

Goods and chattels. See “personal property.”

Group life or group health insurance. A single insurance policy covering individuals in a group (for example, employees) and their dependents.

Head of household. A person who supports and maintains, in one household, one or more people who are closely related to the person by blood, marriage, or adoption. Also referred to as “head of family.”

Homestead. A state or federal exemption applicable to property where the debtor lives when he or she files bankruptcy—usually including boats and mobile homes.

Homestead declaration. See “declaration of homestead.”

Household good. As an exemption category, an item of permanent nature (as opposed to items consumed, like food or cosmetics) used in or about the house. This includes linens, dinnerware, utensils, pots and pans, and small electronic equipment like radios. Many state laws specifically list the types of household goods that fall within this exemption, as do the federal bankruptcy laws.

Householder. A person who supports and maintains a household, with or without other people. Also called a “housekeeper.”

Impairs an exemption. When a lien, in combination with any other liens on the property and the amount the debtor is entitled to claim as exempt, exceeds the value of the property the debtor could claim in the absence of any liens. For example, if property is worth $15,000, there are $5,000 worth of liens on the property, and the debtor is entitled to a $5,000 exemption in the property, another lien that exceeded $5,000 would impair the debtor's exemption. Certain types of liens that impair an exemption may be removed (avoided) by the debtor if the court so orders.

Implement. As an exemption category, an instrument, tool, or utensil used by a person to accomplish his or her job.

In lieu of homestead (or burial) exemption. Designates an exemption that is available only if you don't claim the homestead (or burial) exemption.

Individual Debtor's Statement of Intention. An official bankruptcy form that debtors with secured debts must file to indicate what they want to do with the property that secures the debt. For instance, a debtor with a car note must indicate whether he or she wants to keep the car and continue the debt (reaffirmation), pay off the car note at a reduced price (redemption), or give the car back to the creditor and cancel the debt.

Injunction. A court order prohibiting a person or entity from taking specified actions—for example, the automatic stay (in reality an automatic injunction), which prevents most creditors from trying to collect their debts.

Insider creditor. A creditor with whom the debtor has a personal relationship, such as a relative, friend, or business partner.

Intangible property. Property that cannot be physically touched, such as an ownership share in a corporation or a copyright. Documents—such as a stock certificate—may provide evidence of intangible property.

Involuntary dismissal. When a bankruptcy judge dismisses a case because the debtor fails to carry out his or her duties—such as filing papers in a timely manner and cooperating with the trustee—or because the debtor files the bankruptcy in bad faith or engages in abuse by wrongfully filing for Chapter 7 when he or she should have filed for Chapter 13.

Involuntary lien. A lien that is placed on the debtor's property without the debtor's consent—for instance, when the IRS places a lien on property for back taxes.

IRS expenses. A table of national and regional expense estimates published by the IRS. Debtors whose “current monthly income” is more than their state’s “median family income” must use the IRS expenses to calculate their average net income in a Chapter 7 case or their disposable income in a Chapter 13 case.

Jewelry. Items created for personal adornment; usually includes watches. Also called “articles of adornment.”

Joint debtors. Married people who file for bankruptcy together and pay a single filing fee.

Judgment proof. A description of a person whose income and property are such that a creditor can't (or won't) seize them to enforce a money judgment—for example, a dwelling protected by a homestead exemption or a bank account containing only a few dollars.

Judicial foreclosure. A foreclosure that occurs through a court proceeding, usually when the party seeking the foreclosure files a complaint in court seeking a court order authorizing it.

Judicial lien. A lien created by the recording of a court money judgment against the debtor's property, usually real estate.

Lease. A contract that governs the relationship between an owner of property (such as a car or real estate) and a person who wishes to use the property for a specific period of time.

Lien. A legal claim against property that must be paid before title to the property can be transferred. Liens can also often be collected through repossession (personal property) or foreclosure (real estate), depending on the type of lien.

Lien avoidance. A bankruptcy procedure in which certain types of liens can be removed from certain types of property. Liens that are not avoided survive the bankruptcy even though the underlying debt may be cancelled. For instance, a lien remains on a car even if the debt evidenced by the car note is discharged in the bankruptcy.

Life estate. The right to live in, but not own, a specific home until your death.

Life insurance. A policy that provides for the payment of money to an individual (called the beneficiary) in the event of the death of another (called the insured). The policy matures (becomes payable) only when the insured dies.

Lifting the stay. When a bankruptcy court allows a creditor to continue with debt collection or other activities that are otherwise banned by the automatic stay. For instance, the court might allow a landlord to proceed with an eviction or a lender to repossess a car because the debtor has defaulted on the note.

Liquid assets. Cash or items that are easily convertible into cash, such as a money market account, stock, U.S. Treasury bill, or bank deposit.

Liquidated debt. An existing debt for a specified amount arising out of a contract or court judgment. In contrast, an unliquidated debt is a claim for an as-yet uncertain amount, such as for injuries suffered in a car accident before the case goes to court.

Lost future earnings. The portion of a lawsuit judgment intended to compensate an injured person for the money he or she won't be able to earn in the future because of the injury. Also called lost earnings payments or recoveries.

Marital debts. Debts owed jointly by a married couple.

Marital property. Property owned jointly by a married couple.

property, who pays what marital debts, and who gets custody and pays child support if there are children of the marriage.

Materialmen's and mechanics' liens. Liens imposed by statute on real estate when suppliers of materials, labor, and contracting services used to improve the real estate are not properly compensated.

Matured life insurance benefits. Insurance benefits that are currently payable because the insured person has died.

Means test. A formula that uses predefined income and expense categories to determine whether a debtor whose income is more than the median family income for his or her state should be allowed to file a Chapter 7 bankruptcy.

Median family income. An annual income figure for which there are as many families with incomes below that level as there are above that level. The U.S. Census Bureau publishes median family income figures for each state and for different family sizes. In bankruptcy, the median family income is used as a basis for determining whether a debtor must pass the means test to file Chapter 7 bankruptcy, and whether a debtor filing a Chapter 13 bankruptcy must commit all his or her projected disposable income to a five-year repayment plan.

Meeting of creditors. A meeting that the debtor is required to attend in a bankruptcy case, at which the trustee and creditors may ask the debtor questions about his or her property, information in the documents and forms he or she filed, and his or her debts.

Mortgage. A contract in which a loan to purchase real estate is secured by the real estate as collateral. If the borrower defaults on loan payments, the lender can foreclose on the property.

Motion. A formal legal procedure in which the bankruptcy judge is asked to rule on a dispute in the bankruptcy case. To bring a motion, a party must file a document explaining what relief is requested, the facts of the dispute, and the legal reasons why the court should grant the relief. The party bringing the motion must mail these documents to all affected parties and let them know when the court will hear argument on the motion.

Motion to avoid judicial lien on real estate. A motion brought by a bankruptcy debtor that asks the bankruptcy court to remove a judicial lien on real estate because the lien impairs the debtor's homestead exemption.

Motion to lift stay. A motion in which a creditor asks the court for permission to continue a court action or collection activities in spite of the automatic stay.

Motor vehicle. A self-propelled vehicle suitable for use on a street or road. This includes a car, truck, motorcycle, van, and moped. See also "tools of the trade."

Mutual assessment or mutual life. See "stipulated insurance."

Necessities. Articles needed to sustain life, such as food, clothing, medical care, and shelter.

Newly discovered creditors. Creditors who the debtor discovers after the bankruptcy is filed. If the case is still open, the debtor can amend the list to include the creditor; if the case is closed, it usually can be reopened to accommodate the amendment.

Nonbankruptcy federal exemptions. Federal laws that allow a debtor who has not filed for bankruptcy to keep creditors away from certain property. The debtor can also use these exemptions in bankruptcy if the debtor is using a state exemption system.

Nondischargeable debt. Debt that survives bankruptcy, such as back child support and most student loans.

Nonexempt property. Property in the bankruptcy estate that is unprotected by the exemption system available to the debtor (this is typically—but not always—the exemption system in the state where the debtor files bankruptcy). In a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, the trustee may sell it for the benefit of the debtor's unsecured creditors. In a Chapter 13 bankruptcy, debtors must propose a plan that pays their unsecured creditors at least the value of their unsecured property.

Nonjudicial foreclosure. A foreclosure that occurs outside of court, usually when a trustee of a deed of trust first records a notice of default and then a notice of sale in an auction, typically held on the courthouse steps.

Nonpossessory, nonpurchase-money lien. A lien placed on property that is already owned by the debtor and is used as collateral for the loan without being possessed by the lender. In contrast, a nonpurchase-money, possessory lien exists on collateral that is held by a pawnshop.

Nonpriority debt. A type of debt that is not entitled to be paid first in bankruptcy, as priority debts are. Nonpriority debts do not have to be paid in full in a Chapter 13 case.

Nonpriority, unsecured claim. A claim that is not for a priority debt (such as child support) and is not secured by collateral or other property. Typical examples include credit card debt, medical bills, and student loans. In a Chapter 13 repayment plan, nonpriority, unsecured claims are paid only after all other debts are paid.

Notice of appeal. A form that must be filed with a court when a party wishes to appeal a judgment or order issued by the court. Often, the notice of appeal must be filed within ten days of the date the order or judgment is entered in the court's records.

Objection. A document one party files to oppose a proposed action by another party—for instance, when a creditor or trustee files an objection to a bankruptcy debtor's claim of exemption.

Oversecured debt. A debt that is secured by collateral that is worth more than the amount of the debt.

Pain and suffering damages. The portion of a court judgment intended to compensate for past, present, and future mental and physical pain, suffering, impairment of ability to work, and mental distress caused by an injury.

Party in interest. Any person or entity that has a financial interest in the outcome of a bankruptcy case, including the trustee, the debtor, and all creditors.

Pension. A fund into which payments are made to provide an employee income after retirement. Typically, the beneficiary can't access the account without incurring a significant penalty, usually a tax. There are many types of pensions, including defined benefit pensions provided by many large corporations and individual pensions (such as 401(k) and IRA accounts). In bankruptcy, most pensions are not considered part of the bankruptcy estate and are therefore not affected by a bankruptcy filing.

Personal financial management counseling. Under the new bankruptcy law, a two-hour class intended to teach budget skills. Every consumer bankruptcy filer must attend such a class in order to obtain a discharge in Chapter 7, Chapter 12, or Chapter 13 bankruptcy.

Personal injury cause of action. The right to seek compensation for physical and mental suffering, including injury to body, reputation, or both. For example, someone who is hit and injured by a car might have a personal injury cause of action against the driver.

Personal injury recovery. The portion of a lawsuit judgment or insurance settlement that is intended to compensate someone for physical and mental suffering, including physical injury, injury to reputation, or both. Bankruptcy exemptions usually do not apply to compensation for pain or suffering or punitive damages—in other words, that part of the recovery can be taken by the trustee in a Chapter 7 case.

Personal property. All property not classified as real property, including tangible items, such as cars and jewelry, and intangible property, such as stocks and pensions.

Petition. The document a debtor files to officially begin a bankruptcy case and ask for relief. Other documents and schedules must be filed to support the petition at the time it is filed, or shortly afterwards.

Pets. See "animals."

Preference. A payment made by a debtor to a creditor within a defined period prior to filing for bankruptcy—within three months for arms-length creditors (regular commercial creditors) and one year for insider creditors (friends, family, business associates). Because a preference gives that debtor an edge over other debtors in the bankruptcy case, the trustee can recover the preference and distribute it among all of the creditors.

Prepetition. Any time prior to the moment the bankruptcy petition is filed.

Prepetition counseling. Debt or credit counseling that occurs before the bankruptcy petition is filed—as opposed to personal financial management counseling, which occurs after the petition is filed.

Presumed abuse. In a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, when the debtor has a current monthly income in excess of the family median income for the state where the debtor lives, and has sufficient income to propose a Chapter 13 plan under the “means test.” If abuse is presumed, the debtor has to prove that his or her Chapter 7 filing is not abusive in order to proceed further.

Primarily business debts. When the majority of debt owed by a bankruptcy debtor—in dollar terms—arises from debts incurred to operate a business.

Primarily consumer debts. When the majority of debt owed by a bankruptcy debtor—in dollar terms—arises from debts incurred for personal or family purposes.

Priority claim. See “priority debt.”

Priority creditor. A creditor who has filed a “Proof of Claim” showing that the debtor owes it a priority debt.

Priority debt. A type of debt that is paid first if there are distributions to be made from the bankruptcy estate. Priority debts include alimony and child support, fees owed to the trustee and attorneys in the case, and wages owed to employees. With one exception (back child support obligations assigned to government entities), priority claims must be paid in full in a Chapter 13 bankruptcy.

Proceeds for damaged exempt property. Money received through insurance coverage, arbitration, mediation, settlement, or a lawsuit to pay for exempt property that has been damaged or destroyed. For example, if a debtor had the right to use a $30,000 homestead exemption, but his or her home was destroyed by fire, the debtor can instead exempt $30,000 of the insurance proceeds.

Projected disposable income. The amount of income a debtor will have left over each month, after deducting allowable expenses, payments on mandatory debts, and administrative expenses from his or her current monthly income. This is the amount the debtor must pay toward his or her unsecured nonpriority debts in a Chapter 13 plan.

Proof of Claim. A formal document filed by bankruptcy creditors in a bankruptcy case to assert their right to payments from the bankruptcy estate, if any payments are made.

Proof of service. A document signed under penalty of perjury by the person serving a document showing how the service was made, who made it, and when.

Real property. Real estate (land and buildings on the land, usually including mobile homes attached to a foundation).

Reasonable investigation. A bankruptcy attorney’s obligation, under the new bankruptcy law, to look into the information provided to them by their clients.

Redemption. In a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, when the debtor obtains legal title to collateral for a secured debt by paying the secured creditor the replacement value of the collateral in a lump sum. For example, a debtor may redeem a car note by paying the lender the replacement value of the car (what a retail vendor would charge for the car, considering its age and condition).

Reopen a case. To open a closed bankruptcy case, usually for the purpose of adding an overlooked creditor or filing a motion to avoid an overlooked lien. A debtor must request that the court reopen the case.

Repayment plan. An informal plan to repay creditors most or all of what they are owed outside of bankruptcy. Also refers to the plan proposed by a debtor in a Chapter 13 case.

Replacement cost. What it would cost to replace a particular item by buying it from a retail vendor, considering its age and condition—for instance, when buying a car from a used car dealer, furniture from a used furniture shop, or electronic equipment on eBay.

Repossession. When a secured creditor takes property used as collateral because the debtor has defaulted on the loan secured by the collateral.

Request to lift the stay. A written request filed in bankruptcy court by a creditor, which seeks permission to engage in debt collection activity otherwise prohibited by the automatic stay.

Secured interest. A claim to property used as collateral. For instance, a lender on a car note retains legal title to the car until the loan is paid off.

Secured property. Property that is collateral for a secured debt.

Serial bankruptcy filing. A practice used by some debtors to file and dismiss one bankruptcy after another to obtain the protection of the automatic stay, even though the bankruptcies themselves offer no debt relief—for instance, when a debtor files successive Chapter 13 cases to prevent foreclosure of his or her home even though there are no debts to repay.

Short sale. When a homeowner sells his or her home for less than is owed on the mortgage and turns the proceeds over to the mortgage owner. The homeowner's credit report will be negatively affected just as if the home were lost through foreclosure.

Sickness benefits. See “disability benefits.”

Statement of Affairs. The official bankruptcy form a debtor must file to describe the debtor's legal, economic, and business transactions for the several years prior to filing, including gifts, preferences, income, closing of deposit accounts, lawsuits, and other information that the trustee needs to assess the legitimacy of the bankruptcy and the true extent of the bankruptcy estate.

Statement of Current Monthly Income and Disposable

Income Calculation. The official bankruptcy form a debtor must file in a Chapter 13 case, setting out the debtor's current monthly income and calculating the debtor's projected disposable income that will determine how much will be paid to the debtor's unsecured creditors.

Statement of Current Monthly Income and Means Test

Calculation. The official bankruptcy form a debtor must file in a Chapter 7 filing that shows the debtor's current monthly income, calculates whether the debtor's income is higher than the state's median family income, and, if so, uses the means test to determine whether a Chapter 7 bankruptcy would constitute abuse.

Statement of Intention. The official bankruptcy form a debtor must file in a Chapter 7 case to tell the court and secured creditors how the debtor plans to treat his or her secured debts—that is, reaffirm the debt, redeem the debt, or surrender the property and discharge the debt.

Summary of Schedules. The official bankruptcy form a debtor must file to summarize the property and debt information contained in a debtor's schedules

Surrender value. See “avails.”

Surrendering collateral. In Chapter 7 bankruptcy, the act of returning collateral to a secured lender in order to discharge the underlying debt—for example, returning a car to discharge the car note.

Tangible personal property. See “tangible property” and “personal property.”

Tangible property. Property that may be physically touched. Examples include money, furniture, cars, jewelry, artwork, and houses. Compare “intangible property.”

Tax lien. A statutory lien imposed on property to secure payment of back taxes—typically income and property taxes.

Tenancy by the entirety. A way that married couples can hold title to property in about half of the states. When one spouse dies, the surviving spouse automatically owns 100% of the property. In most cases, this type of property is not part of the bankruptcy estate if only one spouse files.

To ____ acres. A limitation on the size of a homestead that may be exempted.

Tools of the trade. Items needed to perform a line of work that you are currently doing and relying on for support. For a mechanic, plumber, or carpenter, for example, tools of trade are the implements used to repair, build, and install. Traditionally, tools of the trade were limited to items that could be held in the hand. Most states, however, now embrace a broader definition, and a debtor may be able to fit many items under a tools of trade exemption.

Transcript of tax return. A summary of a debtor's tax return provided by the IRS upon the debtor's request, usually acceptable as a substitute for the return in the instances when a return must be filed under the new bankruptcy law.

Trustee. An official appointed by the bankruptcy court to carry out the administrative tasks associated with a bankruptcy and to seize and sell nonexempt property in the bankruptcy estate for the benefit of the debtor's unsecured creditors.

U.S. Trustee. An official employed by Office of the U.S. Trustee (a division of the U.S. Department of Justice) who is responsible for overseeing the bankruptcy trustees, regulating credit and personal financial management counselors, regulating bankruptcy petition preparers, auditing bankruptcy cases, ferreting out fraud, and generally making sure that the bankruptcy laws are obeyed.

Undersecured debt. A debt secured by collateral that is worth less than the debt.

Undue hardship. The conditions under which a debtor may discharge a student loan—for example, when the debtor has no income and little chance of earning enough to repay the loan in the future.

Unexpired lease. A lease that is still in effect.

Unmatured life insurance. A policy that is not yet payable because the insured is still alive.

Unscheduled debt. A debt that is not included in the schedules accompanying a bankruptcy filing, perhaps because it was overlooked or intentionally left out.

Unsecured creditor. A creditor whose debt is not secured by collateral, and who therefore has no right to seize a particular item of the debtor's property if the debtor defaults on the debt.

Unsecured priority claims. Priority claims that aren't secured by collateral, such as back child support or taxes for which no lien has been placed on the debtor's property.

Valuation of property. The act of determining the replacement value of property for the purpose of describing it in the bankruptcy schedules, determining whether it is protected by an applicable exemption, redeeming secured property, or cramming down a lien in Chapter 13 bankruptcy.

Voluntary dismissal. When a bankruptcy debtor dismisses his or her Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 case on his or her own, without coercion by the court.

Voluntary lien. A lien agreed to by the debtor, as when the debtor signs a mortgage, car note, or second deed of trust.

Weekly net earnings. The earnings a debtor has left after mandatory deductions, such as income tax, mandatory union dues, and Social Security contributions, have been subtracted from his or her gross income.

Wildcard exemption. A dollar value that the debtor can apply to any type of property to make it—or more of it—exempt. In some states, filers may use the unused portion of a homestead exemption as a wildcard exemption.

Willful and malicious act. An act done with the intent to cause harm. In a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, a debt arising from the debtor's willful and malicious act is not discharged if the victim proves to the bankruptcy court's satisfaction that the act occurred.

Willful or malicious act resulting in a civil judgment. A bad act that was careless or reckless, but was not necessarily intended to cause harm. In a Chapter 13 case, a debt arising from the debtor's act that was either willful or malicious is not discharged if it is part of a civil judgment.

Wrongful death cause of action. The right to seek compensation for having to live without a deceased person. Usually only the spouse and children of the deceased have a wrongful death cause of action.

Wrongful death recoveries. The portion of a lawsuit judgment intended to compensate a plaintiff for having to live without a deceased person. The compensation is intended to cover the earnings and the emotional comfort and support the deceased would have provided.

The charts in this appendix summarize the laws that determine how much property people can keep when they file for Chapter 7 bankruptcy. When you file for Chapter 13 bankruptcy, your repayment plan must pay at least what your unsecured, nonpriority creditors would have received from the sale of your nonexempt property—the property that you would not get to keep if you had filed under Chapter 7. (See Chs. 3, 4, and 5 for more on this requirement.)

As you will see, the charts are divided into categories of property, such as insurance, personal property, and wages. Following each exemption, we provide the numerical citation to the state statute that includes the exemption.

The states are listed alphabetically, followed by the federal exemptions. We also note which states allow you to choose between the federal and state bankruptcy exemptions.

RELATED TOPIC

Need help understanding a term? Many of the categories, types of property, and other terms used in these charts are defined in the Glossary, which you'll find right before this appendix.

Doubling

When a married couple files for bankruptcy jointly, federal law and the laws of some states allow them each to claim the full amount of an exemption. (11 U.S.C. § 522.) Because a couple gets to claim twice the amount available to those who file alone, this practice is informally known as “doubling.”

Not all states allow doubling, however. And some states allow married filers to double only certain exemptions (for example, they can double personal property exemptions but not the homestead exemption). In the charts that follow, we indicate exemptions that cannot be doubled (and states that don't allow doubling at all). Unless you see a note stating that you cannot double, assume that you can.

CAUTION

These charts provide general information only.

There are exceptions to state exemption laws that are much too detailed to include here. Consider doing further legal research or consulting an attorney about the exemptions you plan to claim, particularly if you anticipate—or are facing—a challenge to your exemption claims.

Residency Requirements for Claiming State Exemptions

Prior to the new bankruptcy law, filers could use the exemptions of the state where they lived when they filed for bankruptcy. Under the new rules, however, some filers will have to use the exemptions of the state where they used to live. These residency requirements are explained in “Understanding Property Exemptions,” in Ch. 5.

Exemptions for Retirement Accounts

Under the 2005 bankruptcy law, virtually all types of tax-exempt retirement accounts are exempt in bankruptcy, whether you use the state or federal exemptions. You can exempt 401(k)s, 403(b)s, profit-sharing and money purchase plans, IRAs (including Roth, SEP, and SIMPLE IRAs), and defined-benefit plans.

These exemptions are unlimited—that is, the entire account is exempt, regardless of how much money is in it—except in the case of traditional and Roth IRAs. For these types of IRAs only, the exemption is limited to a total value of $1,171,650 per person (this figure will be adjusted every three years for inflation). If you have more than one traditional or Roth IRA, you don't get to exempt $1,171,650 per account: Your total exemption, no matter how many accounts you have, is $1,171,650.

If you are using the federal bankruptcy exemptions, you can find this new retirement account provision at 11 U.S.C. § 522(d)(12). If you are using state exemptions, cite 11 U.S.C. § 522(b)(3)(C) as the applicable exemption when you complete your bankruptcy papers.

California—System 1

Federal bankruptcy exemptions not available. California has two systems; you must select one or the other. All law references are to California Code of Civil Procedure unless otherwise noted. Many exemptions do not apply to claims for child support.

Note: California's exemption amounts are no longer updated in the statutes themselves. California Code of Civil Procedure Section 740.150 deputized the California Judicial Council to update the exemption amounts every three years. (The next revision will be in 2013.) As a result, the amounts listed in this chart will not match the amounts that appear in the cited statutes. The current exemption amounts can be found on the California Judicial Council website, www.courtinfo.ca.gov/forms/exemptions.htm.

EXHIBIT D - INDIVIDUAL DEBTOR'S STATEMENT OF COMPLIANCE WITH CREDIT COUNSELING REQUIREMENT

Warning: You must be able to check truthfully one of the five statements regarding credit counseling listed below. If you cannot do so, you are not eligible to file a bankruptcy case, and the court can dismiss any case you do file. If that happens, you will lose whatever filing fee you paid, and your creditors will be able to resume collection activities against you. If your case is dismissed and you file another bankruptcy case later, you may be required to pay a second filing fee and you may have to take extra steps to stop creditors' collection activities.

Every individual debtor must file this Exhibit D. If a joint petition is filed, each spouse must complete and file a separate Exhibit D. Check one of the five statements below and attach any documents as directed.

☐ 1. Within the 180 days before the filing of my bankruptcy case, I received a briefing from a credit counseling agency approved by the United States trustee or bankruptcy administrator that outlined the opportunities for available credit counseling and assisted me in performing a related budget analysis, and I have a certificate from the agency describing the services provided to me. Attach a copy of the certificate and a copy of any debt repayment plan developed through the agency.

☐ 2. Within the 180 days before the filing of my bankruptcy case, I received a briefing from a credit counseling agency approved by the United States trustee or bankruptcy administrator that outlined the opportunities for available credit counseling and assisted me in performing a related budget analysis, but I do not have a certificate from the agency describing the services provided to me. You must file a copy of a certificate from the agency describing the services provided to you and a copy of any debt repayment plan developed through the agency no later than 14 days after your bankruptcy case is filed.

☐ 3. I certify that I requested credit counseling services from an approved agency but was unable to obtain the services during the seven days from the time I made my request, and the following exigent circumstances merit a temporary waiver of the credit counseling requirement so I can file my bankruptcy case now. [Summarize exigent circumstances here.]

If your certification is satisfactory to the court, you must still obtain the credit counseling briefing within the first 30 days after you file your bankruptcy petition and promptly file a certificate from the agency that provided the counseling, together with a copy of any debt management plan developed through the agency. Failure to fulfill these requirements may result in dismissal of your case. Any extension of the 30-day deadline can be granted only for cause and is limited to a maximum of 15 days. Your case may also be dismissed if the court is not satisfied with your reasons for filing your bankruptcy case without first receiving a credit counseling briefing.

☐ 4. I am not required to receive a credit counseling briefing because of: [Check the applicable statement.] [Must be accompanied by a motion for determination by the court.]

☐ Incapacity. (Defined in 11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(4) as impaired by reason of mental illness or mental deficiency so as to be incapable of realizing and making rational decisions with respect to financial responsibilities.);

☐ Disability. (Defined in 11 U.S.C. § 109(h)(4) as physically impaired to the extent of being unable, after reasonable effort, to participate in a credit counseling briefing in person, by telephone, or through the Internet.);

☐ Active military duty in a military combat zone.

☐ 5. The United States trustee or bankruptcy administrator has determined that the credit counseling requirement of 11 U.S.C. § 109(h) does not apply in this district.

I certify under penalty of perjury that the information provided above is true and correct.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR PROOF OF CLAIM FORM

The instructions and definitions below are general explanations of the law. In certain circumstances, such as bankruptcy cases not filed voluntarily by the debtor, there may be exceptions to these general rules.

Items to be completed in Proof of Claim formCourt, Name of Debtor, and Case Number:

Fill in the federal judicial district where the bankruptcy case was filed (for example, Central District of California), the bankruptcy debtor's name, and the bankruptcy case number. If the creditor received a notice of the case from the bankruptcy court, all of this information is located at the top of the notice.

Creditor's Name and Address:

Fill in the name of the person or entity asserting a claim and the name and address of the person who should receive notices issued during the bankruptcy case. A separate space is provided for the payment address if it differs from the notice address. The creditor has a continuing obligation to keep the court informed of its current address. See Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure (FRBP) 2002(g).

1. Amount of Claim as of Date Case Filed:

State the total amount owed to the creditor on the date of the Bankruptcy filing. Follow the instructions concerning whether to complete items 4 and 5. Check the box if interest or other charges are included in the claim.

2. Basis for Claim:

State the type of debt or how it was incurred. Examples include goods sold, money loaned, services performed, personal injury/wrongful death, car loan, mortgage note, and credit card. If the claim is based on the delivery of health care goods or services, limit the disclosure of the goods or services so as to avoid embarrassment or the disclosure of confidential health care information. You may be required to provide additional disclosure if the trustee or another party in interest files an objection to your claim.

3. Last Four Digits of Any Number by Which Creditor Identifies Debtor:

State only the last four digits of the debtor's account or other number used by the creditor to identify the debtor.

3a. Debtor May Have Scheduled Account As:

Use this space to report a change in the creditor's name, a transferred claim, or any other information that clarifies a difference between this proof of claim and the claim as scheduled by the debtor.

4. Secured Claim:

Check the appropriate box and provide the requested information if the claim is fully or partially secured. Skip this section if the claim is entirely unsecured. (See DEFINITIONS, below.) State the type and the value of property that secures the claim, attach copies of lien documentation, and state annual interest rate and the amount past due on the claim as of the date of the bankruptcy filing.

5. Amount of Claim Entitled to Priority Under 11 U.S.C. §507(a).

If any portion of your claim falls in one or more of the listed categories, check the appropriate box(es) and state the amount entitled to priority. (See DEFINITIONS, below.) A claim may be partly priority and partly non-priority. For example, in some of the categories, the law limits the amount entitled to priority.

6. Credits:

An authorized signature on this proof of claim serves as an acknowledgment that when calculating the amount of the claim, the creditor gave the debtor credit for any payments received toward the debt.

7. Documents:

Attach to this proof of claim form redacted copies documenting the existence of the debt and of any lien securing the debt. You may also attach a summary. You must also attach copies of documents that evidence perfection of any security interest. You may also attach a summary. FRBP 3001(c) and (d). If the claim is based on the delivery of health care goods or services, see instruction 2. Do not send original documents, as attachments may be destroyed after scanning.

Date and Signature:

The person filing this proof of claim must sign and date it. FRBP 9011. If the claim is filed electronically, FRBP 5005(a)(2), authorizes courts to establish local rules specifying what constitutes a signature. Print the name and title, if any, of the creditor or other person authorized to file this claim. State the filer's address and telephone number if it differs from the address given on the top of the form for purposes of receiving notices. Attach a complete copy of any power of attorney. Criminal penalties apply for making a false statement on a proof of claim.

DEFINITIONSDebtor

A debtor is the person, corporation, or other entity that has filed a bankruptcy case.

Creditor

A creditor is a person, corporation, or other entity owed a debt by the debtor that arose on or before the date of the bankruptcy filing. See 11 U.S.C. §101 (10)

Claim

A claim is the creditor's right to receive payment on a debt owed by the debtor that arose on the date of the bankruptcy filing. See 11 U.S.C. §101 (5). A claim may be secured or unsecured.

Proof of Claim

A proof of claim is a form used by the creditor to indicate the amount of the debt owed by the debtor on the date of the bankruptcy filing. The creditor must file the form with the clerk of the same bankruptcy court in which the bankruptcy case was filed.

Secured Claim Under 11 U.S.C. §506(a)

A secured claim is one backed by a lien on property of the debtor. The claim is secured so long as the creditor has the right to be paid from the property prior to other creditors. The amount of the secured claim cannot exceed the value of the property. Any amount owed to the creditor in excess of the value of the property is an unsecured claim. Examples of liens on property include a mortgage on real estate or a security interest in a car.

A lien may be voluntarily granted by a debtor or may be obtained through a court proceeding. In some states, a court judgment is a lien. A claim also may be secured if the creditor owes the debtor money (has a right to setoff).

Unsecured Claim

An unsecured claim is one that does not meet the requirements of a secured claim. A claim may be partly unsecured if the amount of the claim exceeds the value of the property on which the creditor has a lien.

Claim Entitled to Priority Under 11 U.S.C. §507(a)

Priority claims are certain categories of unsecured claims that are paid from the available money or property in a bankruptcy case before other unsecured claims.

Redacted

A document has been redacted when the person filing it has masked, edited out, or otherwise deleted, certain information. A creditor should redact and use only the last four digits of any social-security, individual's tax-identification, or financial-account number, all but the initials of a minor's name and only the year of any person's date of birth.

Evidence of Perfection

Evidence of perfection may include a mortgage, lien, certificate of title, financing statement, or other document showing that the lien has been filed or recorded.

INFORMATIONAcknowledgment of Filing of Claim

To receive acknowledgment of your filing, you may either enclose a stamped self-addressed envelope and a copy of this proof of claim or you may access the court's PACER system (www.pacer.psc.uscourts.gov) for a small fee to view your filed proof of claim.

Offers to Purchase a Claim

Certain entities are in the business of purchasing claims for an amount less than the face value of the claims. One or more of these entities may contact the creditor and offer to purchase the claim. Some of the written communications from these entities may easily be confused with official court documentation or communications from the debtor. These entities do not represent the bankruptcy court or the debtor. The creditor has no obligation to sell its claim. However, if the creditor decides to sell its claim, any transfer of such claim is subject to FRBP 3001(e), any applicable provisions of the Bankruptcy Code (11 U.S.C. § 101 et seq.), and any applicable orders of the bankruptcy court.

UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY COURT

NOTICE TO CONSUMER DEBTOR(S) UNDER §342(b) OF THE BANKRUPTCY CODE

In accordance with § 342(b) of the Bankruptcy Code, this notice to individuals with primarily consumer debts: (1) Describes briefly the services available from credit counseling services; (2) Describes briefly the purposes, benefits and costs of the four types of bankruptcy proceedings you may commence; and (3) Informs you about bankruptcy crimes and notifies you that the Attorney General may examine all information you supply in connection with a bankruptcy case.

You are cautioned that bankruptcy law is complicated and not easily described. Thus, you may wish to seek the advice of an attorney to learn of your rights and responsibilities should you decide to file a petition. Court employees cannot give you legal advice.

Notices from the bankruptcy court are sent to the mailing address you list on your bankruptcy petition. In order to ensure that you receive information about events concerning your case, Bankruptcy Rule 4002 requires that you notify the court of any changes in your address. If you are filing a joint case (a single bankruptcy case for two individuals married to each other), and each spouse lists the same mailing address on the bankruptcy petition, you and your spouse will generally receive a single copy of each notice mailed from the bankruptcy court in a jointly-addressed envelope, unless you file a statement with the court requesting that each spouse receive a separate copy of all notices.

1. Services Available from Credit Counseling Agencies

With limited exceptions, § 109(h) of the Bankruptcy Code requires that all individual debtors who file for bankruptcy relief on or after October 17, 2005, receive a briefing that outlines the available opportunities for credit counseling and provides assistance in performing a budget analysis. The briefing must be given within 180 days before the bankruptcy filing. The briefing may be provided individually or in a group (including briefings conducted by telephone or on the Internet) and must be provided by a nonprofit budget and credit counseling agency approved by the United States trustee or bankruptcy administrator. The clerk of the bankruptcy court has a list that you may consult of the approved budget and credit counseling agencies. Each debtor in a joint case must complete the briefing.

In addition, after filing a bankruptcy case, an individual debtor generally must complete a financial management instructional course before he or she can receive a discharge. The clerk also has a list of approved financial management instructional courses. Each debtor in a joint case must complete the course.

2. The Four Chapters of the Bankruptcy Code Available to Individual Consumer Debtors

Chapter 7: Liquidation ($245 filing fee, $39 administrative fee, $15 trustee surcharge: Total fee $299)

Chapter 7 is designed for debtors in financial difficulty who do not have the ability to pay their existing debts. Debtors whose debts are primarily consumer debts are subject to a "means test" designed to determine whether the case should be permitted to proceed under chapter 7. If your income is greater than the median income for your state of residence and family size, in some cases, the United States trustee (or bankruptcy administrator), the trustee, or creditors have the right to file a motion requesting that the court dismiss your case under § 707(b) of the Code. It is up to the court to decide whether the case should be dismissed.

Under chapter 7, you may claim certain of your property as exempt under governing law. A trustee may have the right to take possession of and sell the remaining property that is not exempt and use the sale proceeds to pay your creditors.

The purpose of filing a chapter 7 case is to obtain a discharge of your existing debts. If, however, you are found to have committed certain kinds of improper conduct described in the Bankruptcy Code, the court may deny your discharge and, if it does, the purpose for which you filed the bankruptcy petition will be defeated.

Even if you receive a general discharge, some particular debts are not discharged under the law. Therefore, you may still be responsible for most taxes and student loans; debts incurred to pay nondischargeable taxes; domestic support and property settlement obligations; most fines, penalties, forfeitures, and criminal restitution obligations; certain debts which are not properly listed in your bankruptcy papers; and debts for death or personal injury caused by operating a motor vehicle, vessel, or aircraft while intoxicated from alcohol or drugs. Also, if a creditor can prove that a debt arose from fraud, breach of fiduciary duty, or theft, or from a willful and malicious injury, the bankruptcy court may determine that the debt is not discharged.

Chapter 13: Repayment of All or Part of the Debts of an Individual with Regular Income ($235 filing fee, $39 administrative fee: Total fee $274)

Chapter 13 is designed for individuals with regular income who would like to pay all or part of their debts in installments over a period of time. You are only eligible for chapter 13 if your debts do not exceed certain dollar amounts set forth in the Bankruptcy Code.

Under chapter 13, you must file with the court a plan to repay your creditors all or part of the money that you owe them, using your future earnings. The period allowed by the court to repay your debts may be three years or five years, depending upon your income and other factors. The court must approve your plan before it can take effect.

After completing the payments under your plan, your debts are generally discharged except for domestic support obligations; most student loans; certain taxes; most criminal fines and restitution obligations; certain debts which are not properly listed in your bankruptcy papers; certain debts for acts that caused death or personal injury; and certain long term secured obligations.

Chapter 11: Reorganization ($1000 filing fee, $39 administrative fee: Total fee $1039)

Chapter 11 is designed for the reorganization of a business but is also available to consumer debtors. Its provisions are quite complicated, and any decision by an individual to file a chapter 11 petition should be reviewed with an attorney.

Chapter 12: Family Farmer or Fisherman ($200 filing fee, $39 administrative fee: Total fee $239)

Chapter 12 is designed to permit family farmers and fishermen to repay their debts over a period of time from future earnings and is similar to chapter 13. The eligibility requirements are restrictive, limiting its use to those whose income arises primarily from a family-owned farm or commercial fishing operation.

3. Bankruptcy Crimes and Availability of Bankruptcy Papers to Law Enforcement Officials

A person who knowingly and fraudulently conceals assets or makes a false oath or statement under penalty of perjury, either orally or in writing, in connection with a bankruptcy case is subject to a fine, imprisonment, or both. All information supplied by a debtor in connection with a bankruptcy case is subject to examination by the Attorney General acting through the Office of the United States Trustee, the Office of the United States Attorney, and other components and employees of the Department of Justice.

WARNING: Section 521(a)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code requires that you promptly file detailed information regarding your creditors, assets, liabilities, income, expenses and general financial condition. Your bankruptcy case may be dismissed if this information is not filed with the court within the time deadlines set by the Bankruptcy Code, the Bankruptcy Rules, and the local rules of the court. The documents and the deadlines for filing them are listed on Form B200, which is posted at http://www.uscourts.gov/bkforms/bankruptcy_forms.html#procedure.

Many filing deadlines change on December 1, 2009. Of special note, 12 rules that set 15 days to act are amended to require action within 14 days, including Rule 1007(c), filing the initial case papers; Rule 3015(b), filing a chapter 13 plan; Rule 8009(a), filing appellate briefs; and Rules 1019, 1020, 2015, 2015.1, 2016, 4001, 4002, 6004, and 6007.

Chapter 13 Repayment Plan

Notice

This plan is proposed by the above debtor under penalty of perjury. Any creditor can object to this plan being confirmed by written notice filed with the court and served upon the debtor, the trustee, and other parties in interest not less than eight days before the date set for the meeting of creditors. Absent a timely objection, the court may confirm this plan as drafted. The plan, and payments under the plan, will be subject to all relevant Bankruptcy Code provisions.

With certain exceptions, a confirmed plan holds the debtor and creditors to the treatment provided in the plan—even if the plan modifies rights and duties held by the debtor and creditor. The exceptions are:

- Each creditor will retain its lien until the earlier of payment of the underlying debt determined under nonbankruptcy law or discharge under Section 1328. If the case under this chapter is dismissed or converted without completion of the plan, the holder of such lien shall retain it to the extent recognized by applicable nonbankruptcy law.
- Defaults will be cured using the interest rate set forth below in the plan. Any ongoing obligation will be paid according to the terms of the plan.
- Holders of secured claims and Class 1 claimants will be paid according to the plan after confirmation unless the secured creditor or Class 1 claimant files a Proof of Claim in a different amount than that provided in the plan.
- If a secured creditor files a Proof of Claim, that creditor will be paid according to that creditor's Proof of Claim, unless the court orders otherwise. Holders of all other claims must timely file Proofs of Claim, if the code so requires, or they will not be paid any amount. A debtor who confirms a Chapter 13 plan may be eligible thereafter to receive a discharge of debts to the extent specified in 11 U.S.C. Section 1328.

Plan Payments

The debtor proposes the following Chapter 13 plan and makes the following declarations:

Monthly Amounts Paid to Trustee Under the Plan

The debtor submits the following to the supervision and control of the trustee:

A. Payments by debtor of $_____ per month for sixty (60) months. The monthly payment will begin within 30 days of the date the petition was filed.

B. The base plan amount is $_____, which will pay _____% of the allowed claims of nonpriority unsecured creditors. If that percentage is less than 100%, the debtor will pay the plan payment stated in this plan for the full term of the plan.

C. Amounts necessary for the payment of postpetition claims allowed under 11 U.S.C. Section 1305.

D. If the plan provides for less than 100% payment of nonpriority unsecured claims, all postpetition tax refunds received by the debtor during the plan term.

E. Preconfirmation adequate protection payments for any creditor who holds an allowed claim secured by personal property:

F. Other property: _____.

Classification and Treatment of Claims

Find a Debt & Bankruptcy Attorney

- Qualified lawyers
- In-depth profiles
- A pledge of respectful service

When you want help with debt problems, you don't want just any lawyer—you want an expert in the field, who can give you and your family up-to-the-minute advice. You need a lawyer who has the experience and knowledge to answer your questions about Chapter 7 and Chapter 13 bankruptcy, foreclosure, business bankruptcy, and debt workouts.

All lawyers listed in Nolo's directory are in good standing with their state bar association. Many will review Nolo documents, such as a will or living trust, for a fixed fee.
